I thought I ought not to leave out any thing in this Discourse; for every thing in it seemed to me to be of some use for some or other. I'll add one Observation; which is, that so many Persons ought not to be suffered to have the Boldness to Defame the greatest Names. I know several who groan under the Impunity of this Licentiousness. It would be more tolerable, if those Satyrical Authors were sure of what they Publish; but for the most part they have no certainty of it, and sometimes they know they Lie, and they would obstinately refuse to Retract, if their Calumnies were made Evident. They would not imitate the act of an Honest Man, which is Published in the Mercure Politique, for the Month of December 1695. Let us Copy the Passage. Here are the words of the Author of that Work: "(b) Since I am upon the "Subject of the late Arch-Bishop of Paris, I find "my self obliged to say, That I am sorry I have related, (1) what the Author of L'Esprit de Mr. Arnaud, has said of the Dutchess de la Meilleraye. "The Author of that Satyr, who has advanced Indiscreetly, so many Facts that are found to be False, "has put her in the number of some Ladies, with "whom 'tis pretended that this Arch-Bishop had "Criminal Galantries; and yet 'tis certain "that Dutchess never in her life spoke with "that Prelate, as all Paris Evidence. I am convinced that Madam de la Meilleraye was little concerned at the report of this Chimerical Commerce upon the Credit of an Author, who will "never be accounted Canonical. I am very willing, notwithstanding, for my own Interest, to "disown what I have said, tho' in truth I believed "nothing of it, as I insinuated enough".

(B) Lewis XIII. had a great kindness for her, and she suffered a Disgrace.] One may see at large this Amour, in the Intrigues Galantes de la Cour de France. Cardinal de Richelieu, as we are told, was much allarmed at this Passion of the King, tho' Mademoiselle de Hautefort had not the (c) same Penetration, nor a Wit so capable of Intrigues as the first Mistress (d); he was allarmed, I say, after he discovered that she was governed by the Counsels of Mademoiselle de (e) Chennerault. He and St. Mars (f) pressed the King so much, that he sent Orders to those two Ladies to be gone presently from the Court, and they entered forthwith into a Convent at Paris: But the Cardinal would not let them stay long there; he obliged them to retire; Mademoiselle de Chennerault into Poictou, and Mademoiselle de Hautefort to one of her Country Seats, Forty Leagues from the Court. This Passion of the King was mixt with a deal of Respect, and great Jealousy. (g) He durst not take the least Liberty with that Lady, as may be judged by what I am going to say. One day the Queen having received a Billet, of which she was willing to make a Mystery, pinn'd it to the Tapestry of her Chamber, that she might not forget to make an Answer to it: The King coming a little while after, the Queen not being willing the King should see it, Commanded Madam de Hautefort, who was her Lady of Honour, to take it and keep it, which she did. The King would needs take it from her, and struggled in a pleasant Humour with her: She not being able to defend her self any longer, put the Billet in her Bosom, which proved a Sanctuary to it, for the King durst not seek for it there, and had no more the least Curiosity of seeing it. That's a Proof of his Respect; here is another of his Jealousy. The Marquiss de Gevres was Killed, while all things were making ready for his Marriage with Mademoiselle de Hautefort. The King "(h) entring some Days after into her "Chamber, found her Praying, and saying the "Office for the Dead. He fancied it was for "the Marquiss Gevres, and conceived so strong a "Jealousy, that he would not for six Weeks "hear of her, tho' he himself had proposed the "Match; which may be attributed to the usual "Caprices of Love, which often looks upon, "as an Evil, the things that it has earnestly desired". I desire to be looked upon here, only as a Copyer; for I will not warrant that this Author is exact, as to the bottom of this Affair, and much less, that he has not made Transpositions of Times and Places. I have some Scruple about this Story, in the continuation of the Menagiana. (i) Madam de Schomberg de Hautefort, was one of the Ladies, that Lewis XIII. used to see; but she was disgusted with the Court, and retired to the Magdelonnettes. The Abbot de la Victoire going thither to see her, told her, Madam, is it then to Honour the King that you are retired hither? I make upon this Three Observations. 1. This Lady could never be called Mademoiselle de Schomberg; for the latter Name came only by her Marriage with the Marshal de Schomberg. 2. Her retreat from the Court was against her Will. 3. 'Tis very odd, that among so many sorts of Convents, she should chuse the Magdelonnettes, a place in some manner designed for Publick Pennance. This made me doubt of her retiring thither; but I know from good Hands that she was there.

She was again out of Favour under the Regency of Anne of Austria. See the Stanza's that Benserade made upon that Subject (k).

(A) He Composed some Works proper for that Design.] That which is called Thesaurus Ciceronianus, is a Methodical Abridgment of Robert Stephens, and of the Observations of Nizolius. His Phrases linguæ Latinæ, ratioque observandorum eorum in authoribus legendis quæ præcipuam ac singularem vim aut usum habent, were Printed (l) at Basil in 1550. and afterwards Re-printed (m) a great many times. There proper for that Design. A Comedy, which he made (B) his Scholars act at Heidelberg, where he taught Humane Learning, was the cause that he was forced to Fly. He Died at Lausanne, † in the Year 1551.

---

* It is different from that of the Marshals, the Schomberg, mention'd in the foregoing Articles. See Seckendorf, Histor. Lutheran. l. 3. p. 91. litera b, where he shews that their Seat was upon the Rhine, in the Diocese of Triers. Theodoric de Schomberg, de quo supra, was of this Family, if we believe the State of France, tom. 2. pag. 166. edit. 1680.

(g) Intrig. galantes ibid. pag. 184.

(h) Ibid. pag. 185.

(i) Suite du Menagiana, pag. 379. Dutch. Edit.

(k) They are in the 5th Volume of the Collection of the best Pieces of the French Poets, Printed in 1692. pag. 187. of the Dutch Edition.

(l) Epitome bibl. Gesneri pag. 67.

(m) I make use of the Cologne Edition 1595. in 8.

(b) ...cure histo... & politique, December 169... pag. ...1, 662.

(1) 'Tis in the XIX. ... for August ... 189.

... Intri... ...es ga... ...tes de ... Cour ... France, ...m. 2. ... 183. ...it. 1695.

...) Mrs. ... la ...yette, ...om the ...dinal ...remo... ...d from ...Court.

...e) I ...k it ...uld be ...heme...ult.

...f) In...ig. ga... ...tes ib. ... 186.

SCHOT or SCOT (REGINALD) an English Gentleman, Composed a Book, whereof all the Copies that could be found were Burnt *. He endeavoured to shew, that all the accounts of Magicians and Witches are Chimerical. The first part of this Work was Translated into Dutch, and Printed in 1609, and made a great Impression upon the Readers. (Z) Voetius complains much of it.

SCIOPPIUS ‡ (GASPAR) one of the most Famous Writers of the XVII. Century, was a German. His Enemies have Published many shameful Things (A) concerning his Family. He Studied at Amberg, and then at Heidelberg, and afterwards at Altdorf, at the Charges of the Elector Palatine. Having made a considerable stay at Ingolstad, he return'd to Altdorf, and Publish'd some Critical Books, which made him very Proud: He could not forbear admiring himself, because † Id. ib. & [illegible] in epitom. [illegible] Gerhard [illegible]

* Voet. ubi infra pag. 544.

‡ Voet. Disputat. Theol. tom. 3. pag. 573.

‡ His true Name was Schoppe, but he changed it into Scioppius, to bring it to the Italian Pronunciation.

There was Printed at Strasburg (a) in 1549. his Two Books de ratione discendæ docendæque Latinæ & Græcæ Linguæ.

(B) A Comedy was the cause he was obliged to Fly.] This Comedy was only Acted in his own House, in the presence of few People: Nevertheless the Emperor had notice of it, who gave Orders that this Crime should not go Unpunished. The Elector Palatin, Frederick II. having read the Emperor's Letter to him about it, was much troubled; he knew nothing of the matter; but he quickly informed himself of it. Schorus made his escape; some of his Scholars were Imprisoned by the Rector of the University. Here is the ground of the Complaint. This Comedy introduced Religion, desiring to be lodged with great Men; they shut the Doors against her; then she Addressed her self to Poor People, who gave her a Lodging. What will People think of the Great ones, said the Emperour, if it be once permitted to decry them upon the Stage as the Persecutors of Religion? You'll find this Relation in the Thirteenth Book of the Annals of Hubert Leodius. A Modern Author (b) has cited this, to shew that Comedies may be permitted; and he observes that in England and the Low-Countries, the liberty of the Actors was very serviceable to the Introduction of the Reformation: (c) Sæpe actores quam artificiose perstringunt vitia inveterata publiceque grassantia, quod alii certe vix tanta cum παῤῥησίᾳ auderent. Nec absque fructu: prout contigit circa Reformationis initia in Anglia, uti observavit vir pietate atque doctrina conspicuus Johannes Foxus in Historia Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ. Similiter in Belgio comœdiæ, a viris doctis scriptæ, cum exhiberent quam graphice in Theatro Babylonis turpitudinem, haut parum sub initium Reformationis quam plurimos commoverunt, nec minus cum fructu spectatorum prostituerunt Antichristianam doctrinam, quam Orthodoxam veritatem eidem oppositam asseruerunt. I must needs say here that in 1558, there was Acted at Rochelle, before the King (d) and Queen of Navarre, a Comedy, which represented the Abuses of Popery, and the Remedy that might be brought to it out of Scripture. (e) The Ecclesiasticks made their Complaint to the King of Navarre himself. Mr. Vincent, Minister of Rochelle, adds to the recital of this Adventure a Solid Reflection. "I do not think, says he (f),
"That under pretence of the Historical Account
"I have given, it will be imputed to me, that "I pretend to Authorise this manner of treating "things that belong to Religion.—— (g) If it be "true, as it was loudly said at Rochelle, that all this "came from Joan d'Albret, Queen of Navarre, who "would, (h) in her turn, (i) make use of the Li"berty of the Stage, to make it tell Truths, which "the Doctors of the Church of Rome justly de"served to be told; we cannot at all (k) give
"our Approbation to it. We know that Religi"on is too Grave and too Holy to be brought
"upon the Stage upon any pretence whatsoever,
"and that she is too much an Enemy of the World
"and its Vanities to beg Aid of its Ministers.
"Nevertheless, as God is Admirable in all his "ways, and knows how to draw Good out of Evil
"when he pleases; and as, to correct a Prophet that "was gone Astray, he made an Ass speak (1): He "permitted here one of the Stages of the World "to speak, since the Pulpits were silent; he per"mitted, I say, to the Shame of the Doctors of "that time, that some Comedians, whose pro"fession it is to represent Fables, should at that time
"be Doctors of Truth, since the Pastors, whose "business it was to Preach Truth, taught only Fa"bles.

(Z) Voetius complains much of it.] The Passage I am about to cite, will serve both for a Proof and a Comment upon this Article. (l) Reginaldus Scot (†) nobilis Anglus magiæ crimen aperte negavit, & ex professo oppugnavit, omnes ejus mirabiles effectus aut ad melancholiam, aliosque naturales morbos, aut ad artem, industriam, & agilitatem hominum figmentis & præstigiis suis illudentium, aut ad stolidas imaginationes, dictorum magorum, aut ad vanas nugas & fictiones eorundem magorum referens. Ejus liber tit. Discovery of Witchcraft in Anglia combustus est; quem nominatim etiam perstringit Sereniss. Magnæ Britanniæ Rex Jacobus in Dæmonologia, cumque tangit diffusissima eruditione Theologus Johannes Raynoldus, in cens. lib. Apocryph. tom. 2. prælect. 169 (‖). In eundem, sed innominatum calamum strinxit eximius & subacti judicii Theologus, Gulielm. Perkinsius in tractatu de Bascanologia. Pars libri istius Reginaldi Scot elenctica (nam reliqua in editione Anglicana conjurationes continebat) in Belgicum idioma translata est, ante annos aliquot Lugd. Batav. per Thomam Basson: ex illius libri lectione, seu fonte perenni, non pauci ab illo tempore docti & indocti in Belgio fluctuare, & in Magia σκεπτικίζειν ac λιβερτινίζειν, (ut Libertinis & Semilibertinis infesta est patria nostra) quin ex ignorantiæ sæpe prolabi, ut non inique illis applicari potuerit, quod Sereniss. Rex Jacobus in Dæmonologia subdito suo Reginaldo Scot: esse quasi novos Sadducæos: cum omnes diabolorum operationes, & apparitiones suaviter exibilant, tanquam aniculorum, aut superstitionis meticulosæ phantasmata ac fabellas.

(A) Many shameful things concerning his Family.] They Published (m) that he was Born in a Village, where his Father was Grave-Maker, hoc vespillone atque æditua in pago quodam non ignoto, natus est Gaspar Schoppius; That his Father one day made a Grave too little, and being unwilling to make it longer, he cut off the Feet of the Dead Body. (n) Hiberno quodam tempore, terra firmiter gelu constricta, sepeliendum acceperat cadaver, cui jam sepulchrum effoderat, sed mensura breviore quam pro mole: ibi vir fortissimus, ne tanto in frigore terra deducenda esset, pedibus cadaver mutilat, & in fossam quam sepulchrum verius recondit. That having got some Money he went into Poland, where he served a Printer; that afterwards he was a Pedlar, and went from Village to Village, as the Savoyards do, to sell Small-Wares; that he left off that Trade, and Listed himself a Soldier: that he came back into the Palatinate after the Death of Frederick III. and obtained there a small Employment (o); that he sold Corn, and gained something by it; that he obtained the Judicature of a small Place, and at the end of the Year Listed himself for the Expedition of Cologne, and was made Provost of the Army; that after the Death of the Elector Lewis, he return'd to his first Post, and made himself a good Miller; that he was sent to a Town that Mutinied, and Commanded the Soldiers there; that he was a Brewer there; that he was there with his Wife and his Daughter, but would not let them see any Body. His Wife, say they, was a Hessian, and had followed into Hungary, a Man that kept

(a) Id. epit. ib.

(b) Martinus Schoock, exercit. 27. pag. 507, 508.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 507.

(d) Antony de Bourbon & Joan d'Albret.

(e) Vincent, Recherches sur les commencemens & les premiers progrés de la reformation en la Rochelle pag. 40.

(f) Id. ib. p. 40, 41.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 43.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 42.

(i) To understand this, the Reader ought to know that the Author had been speaking of a Dramatick Piece acted at Paris, in the College of Navarre, against Margaret de Valois Mother to Joan d'Albret.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 43.

(1) Numb. 22. 28.

Becauſe he was a very (B) Young Author. 'Tis ſaid that one of the early Productions of his Pen, was a Commentary upon the Priapeia, for which he was very much hiſſed, * eſpecially, becauſe he Envied the Condition of Sparrows. He made a Journey into Italy, and after he had been ſometime at Verona, he return'd into Germany, from whence he went again into Italy, and Publiſh'd at Ferrara a * Panegyrick upon the King of Spain, and Clement VIII. He endeavoured to raiſe himſelf with her. The Day after he was killed, ſhe lay with Rompier, who afterwards deſpiſed her ſo much, that he made her work like a Servant, without either ſeeing or ſpeaking to her. On the contrary, (*) he made his Maid eat at his Table, and Lay with her. The Daughter, a faithful Companion of her Mother in this Retired ſtate, Married a Rogue, who would have been Executed for the Crime of Beſtiality, if he had not made his Eſcape. In his abſence, his Wife proſtituted her ſelf to another Man, who got her with Child. She was Impriſoned, and if ſhe had not made her eſcape, ſhe had been publickly Puniſhed for her Adultery. (†) Hæc ne ſeriò indigna eſſet, ſcelerato nupſit homini, qui (honor ſit verecundis auribus) conſtante matrimonio abſ... : cum vacca enim conſueviſſe convictus eſt, & effugiendi cauſa ſupplicii uxore deſerta ſe ſubduxit, qua ſuperſtite ſcelerato illo ac fugitivo, alteri cuidam ſui copiam fecit, ac mox prægnans facta eſt. Ob id flagitium, cum in carcerem conjecta, ſupplicium vix evaſura eſſet, vinculis perfractis in Auſtriam pergit, relicta adulterina apud patrem ſobole. In Palatinatu ſine ditione, deprehenſa ſi fuerit, publicam animadverſionem non evadet. To conclude, 'tis ſaid that Scioppius bragged he was the Baſtard of a Gentleman of Franconia, called Munſter, and that he went by that Name; but that a Lady of that Noble Family, convicted him of being an Impoſtor, and threatned him for uſing this Quality. (a) Quoties ſymbolum amicitiæ in adoleſcentum philothecas, quæ mos hodie obtinet, referre ſolebat, totidem literis nomen conſignabat: G. S. a Munſter, etiam ad Scaligeri exemplum, FUIMUS TROES. Donec Ingolſtadii a nobiliſſima ejus gentis matrona convictus eſt; cujus tamen minis nondum abſterreri potuit, quin Italis, ad quos poſtea profectus eſt, gentilem hominem, ut Longobardi vocant, ſe Germanum eſſe perſuaderet.

* [illegible]

'Tis certain that Scioppius Styled himſelf a Gentleman all his life, and that having got Intelligence of the Calumnies, that the Friends of Scaliger had publiſhed, he appeared (b) before the Civil Judges of the Apoſtolical Chamber, to be admitted to prove his Nobility, and his good Conduct; and that the Witneſſes which he brought, having been juridically Interrogated, an Act ſealed by the Apoſtolical Chamber was delivered to him, by which it appeared that the Witneſſes depoſed that he was Born a Gentleman, and in Lawful Wedlock. (c) Sibi ex publica fama & multorum, qui id ſciri potuerint, teſtimoniis conſtare, Scioppium legitime natum & ex nobili familia oriundum eſſe, tametſi majorum nobilitatem paupertatis injuria prope jam extinctam ejus demum pater virtute ſua geſtiſque honoratiſſimis muneribus & officiis rurſus excitarit. He dedicated to his Father one of (d) his Books, wherein he ſays (e) nothing elſe of his Anceſtors, but that his great Grand-Father lived 112 Years, and his great Grand-Mother 105. He made a Journey into the Palatinate in 1608, to take poſſeſſion of his Father's Eſtate, or rather to obtain a Replyed; for 'tis ſaid the Magiſtrates had ſeal'ed on it, becauſe of the miſdemeanor of the Deceaſed in relation to the Taxes of the Prince upon Beer, and to ſuch like Impoſitions. (f) Patre mortuo ad matrem adeundæ hæreditatis cauſa veniſſe dicitur, quæ à Magiſtratu eam ob cauſam ſequeſtrata putatur, quod pater ——— publicum vectigal quod de bonis ac cerviſia inferri ærario ſolet, fraudarit, cujuſmodi ibi fures, aut ſaltem Norimbergæ, ſeveriſſime plectuntur. He denied that he was guilty of ſuch an Imbezelment, and alledged ſome other Reaſons why he could not enjoy his Patrimony (g).

(B) Becauſe he was a very Young Author.] Mr. Baillet, who places him with great Reaſon in the Catalogue of Famous Children, ſpeaks of him thus. " (h) We may conſider the Love he expreſs'd for " Learning, and his indefatigable Labour, which " God did moſt times reward with a good ſucceſs, " as an example that deſerves to be propoſed to " Young People. (i) Ottavio Ferrari a Milaneſe, and " a Famous Profeſſor at Padua, ſeems to affirm that " he was a very good Scholar in his Younger Years; " and he adds, that being but ſixteen Years of Age " he publiſh'd ſome Books, which deſerved to be " admired by Old Men". Here are the Words of Ottavio Ferrari. (i) Ab ineunte ætate ita totus literis affixus fuit, ut ſexto decimo anno libros vulgaret quos ſenes admirarentur. In another Speech he beſtows this Encomium upon him: (k) Adoleſcentem ac pene puerum id ingenii, atque eruditionis ſpecimen dediſſe, ut vix tribus luſtris expletis non unum opus publici juris faceret, quod exactæ ætatis judicium, totiuſque antiquitatis ſolidam cognitionem præ ſe ferret. But it will be better to judge of Scioppius by what he ſays of himſelf. It appears from the following Words, that he was about ſeventeen Years of Age, when he publiſh'd his firſt Book, viz. Some Latin Verſes. Extant typis Heidelbergenſibus impreſſa complura Scioppii carmina anno 1593. cum haud etiam ſeptimum decimum ætatis annum compleſſet, antiquaria illa plus ſatis, ſic tamen ut variam eruditionem accurata probatiſſimorum auctorum lectione comparatam paſſim præferant: quo ipſo tempore etiam Dialectica & Rhetorica æquales & convictores ſuos, illuſtres nobileſque adoleſcentes, cum eos a Magiſtris ſuis negligi doleret, docere, auſus eſt (l). To know how many Books he publiſh'd before he was 24 Years of Age, we need only read the following Liſt. Let us remember that in 1593. he was in his 17 Year, as we have juſt now ſeen. (m) Veriſimilium libri quatuor. Editi Noribergæ in 8°. apud Paulum Kaufmannum Anno 1595. Diſputatio de Injuriis apud eundem in 4°. Anno 1597. Suſpectarum Lectionum libri quinque. Apud eundem in 8°. Anno 1597. Commentarius de Arte Critica, Noribergæ in 8°. apud Valentinum Furmannum Anno 1597. Notationes Criticæ in Phædrum cum Rittershuſii in eundem ſcriptorem Commentario editæ Lugduni Batavor. in 8°. apud Fr. Raphelengium Anno 1597. Libellus de ſua (n) ad Catholicos migratione, deque auctoritate Eccleſiæ in ſacra ſcriptura interpretanda. Editus Romæ apud Zannetum in 8°. 1599. Epiſtola de variis fidei controverſiis ad primarium quendam Germaniæ Juriſconſultum. Ingolſtadii in 4°. apud Angermarium Anno 1599.

'Tis ſaid that he publiſh'd alſo a Commentary upon the Priapeia, whereof the Epiſtle Dedicatory is dated from Ingolſtad in the Year 1595, and that the Author did not think fit to mention it in the Catalogue of his Works, becauſe his Enemies cried him down for having Commented upon ſuch an obſcene Collection of Verſes. He (o) denied the thing, and maintain'd that this Commentary was a Work of Goldaſtus, who by an Egregious Trick had publiſh'd it as a Work of Scioppius: However he alledged in his Vindication that Scaliger had made ſome Commentaries upon the Priapeia and upon Catullus, and that Douza had made one upon Petronius. But he changed the State of the Queſtion; for the true ground of the Accuſation was not that he had Commented upon obſcene Verſes, but that he had (p) ſtuff'd his Commentary with abundance of filthy Things. Beſides he complain'd in that Book, that Men have not received from Nature the ſame ſtrength as Sparrows. His Enemies took him up for it, and he was laugh'd at to ſome purpoſe in the Satyr Intituled, (q) Hercules tuam fidem. He did certainly deſerve it. Here is the paſſage. (r) Cum

Uuu Ingolſtadii

(i) Proluſion. p. ...

(i) Octavius Ferrarius, in proluſione cui titulus Quo pretio viri principes literas ac literatos habuerint.

(k) Id. in proluſione cui titulus Literatorum ſinus.

(l) Oporinus Grubinius ubi ſupra. p. 39.

(m) Theſe Titles are taken from the Indiculus of Scioppius's Works prefixed to the Amphotides Scioppianæ.

(n) Freherus is therefore miſtaken pag. 775. of his Theatrum, where he ſays that Scioppius turn'd Papiſt in the Year 1601.

(o) See the Amphotides Scioppianæ pag. 102. & ſeq and his letter ad Saulum Mercerum at the end of the Scaliger hypobolimæus.

(p) Luſus diverſorum in Priapum poetarum libero commentario illuſtravit, quo poſt hominum memoriam, nihil fœdius ab ullo cinædo aut libidini omnium proſtituto in lucem editum fuiſſe, omnes fatentur. Vita & parentes Gaſp. Schoppii p. 142.

(q) Pag. 59. See alſo Merici Caſauboni pietas pag. 21.

(r) Scioppius, commentar. in Priapeia carm. 25. pag. 35, edit. 1664. in 8.

himself at the Court of Rome, and used all his Industry towards it, nevertheless his Fortune was but mean, and he was not well Pleased with it †, notwithstanding the Lofty (C) Titles he bestowed upon himself. Before he Travell'd into Italy the first time, he plaid a Trick to Gifanius, which I have mention'd in another ‖ place. He turn'd Catholick about the Year 1599. I don't know the Reason why he was so Angry with the Jesuits; but 'tis certain he was their great Enemy, and wrote many (D) sharp Libels against 'em under Suppositious Names. On the other side he Inveighed with the greatest Fury against the Ingolstadii operam, ubi è regione Musæi mei passerem coitum vicies repetentem, & inde ad languorem datum, ut evolaturus in terram decideret. En sortem iniquam. Hoc passeribus datum; negatum hominibus? Ne qui facinus hujusmodi imitari ausit, fictim ut Picos qui aureos montes colunt, divitiis ille solus superet, Pea militie Plutonis omnes eum [illegible] fœminæ scilicet.

TAKE notice of these two things. 1. Those who took his part, denied that he was the Author of that Commentary on the Priapeia. 2. His reflection about the pretended Happiness of Sparrows was inlarged upon, and made worse than it was. To prove the first Head, I shall set down the words of the Author of a small Book, Intituled de tribus capellis: He was a Jesuit, as I have said in (a) another place. De Commentario si tibi, Josephe, Scioppius hoc dicat: (b) Scripsi fateor, commentarium in Priapeia: Sed septenum denum annorum puer, sed in hæreticorum scholis institutus, sed exemplo tuo invitatus. Atque nollem id factum. Et si fas dicere (sed fas) cum illa scribebam, Optarem nullas tunc habuisse manus. Quid hoc autem, Burdo, dic, tua fide, ad rem attinet? Num tu idcirco Scaligerum te esse evinces, quia Scioppius nescio quid ineptiarum per ludum atque jocum puer verius, quam adolescens olim chartis illevit, quod nunc ævi consiliique maturior, vero vultu damnat & opus——— Hoc igitur tibi si dicat ille, non te elinguem proximus, & Burdonem efficiat? Quid si autem dicat hic Scioppius tibi quod dixit jam alius prius, Non scripsi. Scripsit ea vero, inquit: certe vulgavit quidem quem dicere nolo, quia tu illum ignorare non potes. One would think there are some Obliquities in those Words, that look like an acknowledgment of his Fault; but at the bottom they contain a plain denial of his being guilty of it. Note, that Scioppius set so great a value on the tres capellæ, that he inserted that piece in (c) one of his Books. As to the second head, I need only quote the Author of the Censure de la doctrine curieuse; these are his Words: (d) Pag. 705. Garasse says, that a small Book came out without the Author's Name, written by one of the new Dogmatists, who considering the indefatigable heat of Pigeons and Sparrows in their fits of Love, made a Vow to renounce Heaven, if God would be pleased to change him into a Pigeon or into a Sparrow. Garasse needs not Trouble himself with the Name of this new Dogmatist: 'Tis his good friend Scioppius, that wonderful good Man, that great Wit, who makes this Fine and Pious Wish in Priap. pag. 63. It is certain that these Words of (e) Mr. Ogier contain a Calumny against Scioppius; for this Vow of renouncing Heaven is not to be found in the place quoted by him.

I think I may say, that if one of Scioppius's Books gave occasion to have an ill Opinion of his Morals, all his Books in general shewed that he was not a Debauched Man; for if he had lost his time in making Love and Drinking, he could not have produced so many Books. They were the Fruit of a great Labour, and required a continual and strong Application to Study and the Conversation of Learned Men. Accordingly we find that he (f) call's the Professors of Altdorf and Ingolstad to Witness, that the Life he had led was quite different from that of the Youth whom they Instructed. He mentions a Poem that he publish'd to exhort the Rector Wesenbecius to suppress the Debaucheries of the Scholars. (g) Cum Petrus Wesenbecius Jurisconsultus Academiæ Rector creatus fuisset, longum Scioppius carmen Noribergæ imprimendum dedit, quo corruptos juventutis mores acerbe describit, ipsumque Rectorem cohortatur, ut disciplinam restituere, frena nimis laxata contrahere, nominatim vero cristatorum pileorum usu & nocturnis commessabundæ juventutis concursationibus interdicere Academicis velit, in contumaces vero & refractatorios severe animadvertat. He alledges in Epistle Dedicatory, wherein he declared why he had so few Friends, and why the Scholars look'd upon him as a Misanthrope: The Reason of it was because he shun'd their Collations, their Walks and their Drinking bouts, and kept in his Study all day long. (h) Frequentes istas adolescentibus compotationes ut fugiam suadere mihi potest vel valetudinis ratio, quam diligenter cordi habeo, vel consilium quod à meis præceptoribus neglectus, & ceteroquin ingenio non nimis docili præditus jam olim cepi de studiis plidum diem ab usque mane ad vesperam sine ullo potu & cibo naviter persequendis, vel cura denique quam in majoribus meis imitandis ponere decrevi &c. Aliis itaque pro divinitate & facilitate ingenii sui, ad quæ ego impenso labore meo & indefesso studio adspiro nihil agendo vel commessando consequuntur, per me quidem potare, plurimosque sibi hac comitate sua amicos parare licet: dum mihi vicissim hoc non ægre largiantur, ut quam illi ex cauponis ego ex laboribus voluptatem capiam, & laudem continentiæ, ut ego voco, ut illi, Morositatis, à majoribus meis acceptam & in me transmissam, studiose conservem &c. He was rightly accounted an ill Man; but his Faults, like those of many other Proud, Satyrical and passionate Learned Men, proceeded from his Mind and not from his Body.

(C) The Lofty Titles he bestowed upon himself.] He was made Patrice of Rome, Knight of St. Peter, Counsellor to the Emperor, Counsellor to the King of Spain, Counsellor to the Arch-Duke, (i) Count Palatin; and lastly, he took the Title of Count de Clara Valle.

(D) Wrote many sharp Libels against the Jesuits under supposititious Names] 'Tis said in the Book (k) I have quoted several times, that before he changed his Religion, he publish'd some Verses, wherein he called their Society, Iberam parricidalem cohortem, and that afterwards he fell violently upon them in a Piece that was seen at Rome by several People: Quos petulantissimo postea scripto quod Romæ plurimi viderunt, & è quo nonnulla hic adferri poterant, petivit. Mention is made of a Fragment of a Letter, importing, that he said long after his Apostacy, that there were (l) few Learned Persons, and very few Honest Men in that Order. He answers (m) as to the Poem, that he spoke of the Jesuits according to the Notions Gifanius had given him of 'em; but he denies that those Verses had been made publick. He also denies (n) the Fragment of the Letter, and only confesses that he does not approve the Conduct of the Jesuits in every thing, and cannot (o) resolve to Court 'em, tho' he acknowledges that God is the Author of their Order, and that it is not only of great use to Christians, but also very necessary; so that he is sure that if they carefully observe their Statutes, Heresy will be quickly destroyed. (p) Tamen Societatis Jesu institutum ab ipso Deo auctore profectum, totique reipublicæ Christianæ non modo summopere utile, sed omnino etiam necessarium esse credit, cui si convenienter vivant, qui religioso Sacramento ei se obstrinxerunt, propediem fore confidit, ut ad tibicines mittatur, Hæresique lessus fiat, neque cuiquam sine scelere aliter videri posse, persuasum habet. In order to know whether he altered his Opinion, we need only read these words of Father le Tellier. (q) He (r) must not pretend to be the first, who undertook to Convert the Jesuits. The Glory of it is due to his worthy predecessor the Famous Gaspar Scioppius, who writ so much upon that matter, making it the Subject of many Libels. 'Tis no wonder that those, who have inherited his implacable Hatred against the Jesuits, should be likewise acted by the Odd and Hypocritical Zeal of that Writer, the most furious Calumniator that ever was, as every Body confesses, and that they should tread in his

Steps

† Taken from a Book intituled, Vita & parentes Gasp. Schoppii à Germano quodam contubernali ejus conscripta, Printed at Leyden with Confutatio fabulæ Burdonum.

(a) In the Article Martinan.

(b) Cornelius Denius Brugensis, in capellis p. m. 320, 321.

(c) In the Amphotidæ Scioppianæ which he publish'd in 1611. I make use of that Edition.

(d) Censure de la doctr. curieuse pag. 190.

(e) He is the Author of the censure de la doctrine curieuse de Garasse.

(f) See the Amphotides pag. 40. & sequent.

(g) Ib. pag. 40, 41.

the Protestants, and exhorted the Catholick Princes to extirpate them by the (E) most Bloody means. He was not contented to vent his Rage against Scaliger, † Casaubon, du (F) Plessis Mornay, &c. but he attackt the King Steps to this very day. M. Arnauld, at whom these words were levell'd, inferr'd many things: I shall transcribe some of 'em. "(a) Are you Searchers of Hearts but (?) to decide, that it was thro' an implacable hatred against the Jesuits, that Scioppius gave an ill Character of your Society in several Books, and that if he shew'd any Zeal for the Church, it was only an hypocritical Zeal. If this be allowed, may not any Virtue be cried down as a piece of Hypocrisy? ——— (b) I am not concern'd in the least for Scioppius's Reputation. But since those, who abuse him most, acknowledge that he was a Man of great parts, and a very Learned Critick and Philologer, he deserves I should say something of him, and observe that whereas you do now furiously Inveigh against him, you did formerly bestow great Encomiums upon him. Scioppius had three sorts of Enemies, who cried him down as being too Satyrical and Passionate. The first were the Protestants, whom he forsook to turn Catholick, and particularly Joseph Scaliger, and his Friends, who look'd upon that pretended Prince of Verona as the Hero of their Sect. They were particularly Offended because he wounded their Scaliger in the most sensible part, by shewing that his pretended descent from the Princes of Verona, was an idle Story; and the most judicious Persons are now agreed that he was in the right. His Second Enemies were the Men of Letters; he fell under their Indignation by his too great Fondness for the purity of the Latin Tongue. Perhaps, no Man since the Age of Augustus knew better than he the niceties of that Language. But he was so Critical that he could not endure any word should be taken in a different Sence, from what it had in the best times, and that any other Construction should be put upon it; hence it was that he found Barbarisms and Solecisms in most Authors of that time, who pretended to write good Latin. He would have been serviceable to the Common-Wealth of Learning, had he been contented to observe those Faults in a Civil manner. But he did it too sharply, so far as to say that the taking of a certain word in a certain sense deserved (c) Naticidium. It was doubtless a silly thing, and a piece of Pedantry; but it was no sufficient Reason to give him so many hard Words, and to call him the most Cruel of all Wild Beasts. For those, who took so much Pride, as well as he, in speaking good Latin, might have despised those mean things, and made a good use of his Criticisms. But 'tis well known that Philologers are a sort of Angry People, that are very apt to fall into a Passion for meer Trifles; and that they are as much nettled when accused of being guilty of a Solecism, as if an Honest Man was accused of having betrayed his Friend: And because they know how to give hard Words in a very fine Style, they Inspire many People with their Passions. This is the chief Reason why Scioppius was so much cried down. His free and sharp Criticisms, upon many Authors most esteem'd for their Style, made the greatest part of the Latinists rise up against him. Fathers, you have been his third and last Enemies. But I must observe, that whilst he wrote only against the Protestants, the Scaligers and the Philologers, you heaped up Praises upon him. Nay, you forgave him, tho' he blamed your Method of Teaching Humane Learning; and you did not take it ill that he should be Praised and Esteem'd by Popes, Kings and Emperors. He publish'd a small piece in 1636. wherein to vindicate himself against those who reviled him, he mentions a brief of Urban VIII. to the most Christian King, which is very Glorious to him, and some other Letters of the Emperor Ferdinand II. the Catholick King Philip IV. the Dukes of Florence and Mantua, and some Advantageous Testimonies of Cardinal Bellarmin, and many other Jesuits, who Praise him for his Wit, Learning, Eloquence, Zeal, Virtue, Probity, Integrity, Orthodoxy, Prudence, Wisdom, and great Knowledge of the true sense of the Scripture; who profess to admire him as a Man Famous all over the World, and call him the King of Learned Men, Perillustri viro Gaspari Scioppio eruditorum Regi. Do you think, Fathers, you can easily make the World believe that a Man, whom you have so much commended for so long a time, became all of a sudden the most Wicked Man in the World; and that his Zeal for the Church, which you highly extoll'd, became an odd Hypocritical Zeal, because he declared in some of his Books what he blamed in your Conduct, as so many Persons Eminent for their Piety have done before and after him, such as Arias Montanus, Lanusa, Lewis Sotelo, Diego Collado, Dom John de Palafox, and many others? If he has been too Sharp, and too Passionate, if he has mention'd some matters of Fact too Scandalous, I don't pretend to Justify him in that respect. But unless you give seven or eight pregnant Instances of his Falsities, you must not expect to be believed, when you call him the most Furious Calumniator that ever was."

Mr. Baillet (d) says, that Scioppius appeared in Print under many false Names, that he might Attack with Impunity not only private Persons of great note, but particularly the whole Body of the Jesuits, against whom he wrote above thirty Treatises, the very Titles whereof are Abominable. He promises to unmask him in his Treatise of disguised Authors, and to shew that he took the Names of Juniperus Anconitanus, Denius, A Fano Sancti Benedicti, Grosippus, Grubinius, Hay, Krigsoeder, Sotelo, Vargas, and many others. You'll find in Placcius (e) the Titles of a prodigious Number of Books publish'd or made ready for the Press by Scioppius against the Jesuits.

(E) Exhorted the Catholick Princess to extirpate the Protestants by the most Bloody means.] You need only read the Book he publish'd at Pavia in the Year 1619. with this Title, Gasp. Scioppii Consiliarii Regii Classicum belli sacri, sive Heldus redivivus, hoc est ad Carolum V. imperatorem Augustum Suasoria de Christiani Cæsaris erga Principes Ecclesiæ rebelles officio, deque veris compescendorum Hæreticorum Ecclesiæque in pace collocandæ rationibus. A (f) Lutheran of Strasburg answered it, and his answer is worth reading: It is Intituled, Tuba pacis occenta Scioppiano belli sacri classico, Salpiste Theodosio Berenico, Norico, historiarum & patriæ studioso. See also (g) Justus Meyerus's Treatise, Intituled, Juris publici capitalis quæstio, sint ne Protestantes jure Cæsareo heretici & ultimo supplicio afficiendi, contra sanguinarium Casp. Scioppii Classicum. You may see likewise the Book Intituled Cancellaria Hispanica, wherein you'll find some (h) Extracts of that Book of Scioppius. Note, that he boasts of having been the chief promoter of the Catholick League, which proved so prejudicial to the Protestants in Germany. Having publish'd a List of his Exploits, to inform the Publick how he has exerted the (i) Talents he had received from God, he reckons in the 7th place, (k) Fœdus Catholicum in Germania, cujus primum auctorem & actorem fuisse Scioppium, literis ipsius Cæsaris manu conscriptis, & Trevirensis Electoris testimonio doceri potest: sicut etiam Comes Tillius in poculi aurati, quod ei donavit, inscriptione, fœderis illius primum auctorem appellat: qui scyphus apud Benedictinos Weingartenses etiamnum servatur.

(F) Against ——— du Plessis Mornay.] He endeavours to Ridicule (l) him in his (m) Alexipharmacum regium felli draconum & veneno aspidum sub Philippi Mornæi de Plessis nupera Papatus historia abdito oppositum, & Seren. D. Jacobo Magnæ Britanniæ Regi, strenæ Januariæ loco muneri missum, with so great a Fury, that I don't think a sharper Piece can be written against an Author. I could, says he (n), make a pretty large Volume of the Solecisms, Barbarisms, and other Faults, which I have found in the (o) Mystery of Iniquity; but I will spare the Calvinists the Grief of seeing their

(a) Morale pratique, tom. 8. pag. 116.

(b) Ibid. pag. 119.

(c) See the passage quoted hereafter in the Remark F.

(d) Baillet, Jugemens des Savans vol 3. pag. 407.

(e) Placcius, de Anonymis pag. 9. c. 248. n. 67. 68.

(f) Matth. Berneggerus, Professor of History.

(g) Professor of the Civil Law at Strasburg.

(h) Adjecti sunt sub finem Flores Scioppiani ex classico belli sacri.

(i) Talenta Christi Gaspari Scioppio ad negotiandum credita.

(k) See the Book Intituled Gasp. Scioppius de pædia humanarum ac divinarum literarum, pag. 25.

(l) Among other things for exhorting King James to make War against the Pope.

(m) 'Tis a Book in 4. of 79 Pages Printed at Mentz in 1612.

(n) Pag. 32.

(o) That is, in the Latin Edition.

King (G) of England, without any regard; which was the Reaſon why the Ambaſſador of that Prince, at the Court of Spain, made uſe of violent means againſt that Inſolent Writer, who afterwards boaſted (H) of the Wounds 'twas thought he had receiv'd upon that occaſion. Going through Venice in the Year 1607, he had a Conference with Father Paul, and endeavour'd by Promiſes and Threatnings to bring him over to the Pope's Party. Which, and perhaps ſome other Reaſons, occaſion'd his being Impriſon'd for ſome Days. He was (I) reproach'd with it, but the Circumſtances of his Impriſonment were not well repreſented. One of the things he moſt pretended to, was to write a fine Latin Style. He found Hector deſerving not only the correction of Caſaubon, the Head of the Pedants, Alpha Cathedrariorum, but alſo to be whipp'd by the meaneſt School-Maſter, quem quicumque virgator alius virgidemia afficeret, & multiplicem jactura natis expiare culpam cogat.

(G) The King of England, without any Regard.] See among other Books his Eccleſiaſticum auctoritati Sereniſſimi D. Jacobi Magnæ Britanniæ Regis oppoſitum. Printed in the Year 1611. & his Collyrium regium Britanniæ Regi graviter ex oculis laboranti muneri miſſum, Printed the ſame Year. But ſee particularly his (a) Corona Regia; for I maintain ſtill that (b) he is the Author of it. Ferrarius, who praiſed him ſo much, taxes him with a great Fault, viz. with having ſatyriſed all ſorts of People, without ſparing the Supreme Powers, and Crowned Heads. (c) Cum quæ de ejus ingenio, doctrina, immenſiſque in re literaria laboribus inſitiari non poſſet, quæ eſſent totius Orbis teſtimonio comprobata, vertis accuſationem nimiamque ejus ingenii aſperitatem, judiciumque ſubauſterum, omnibuſque infeſtum arguebat. Nam ne ipſis quidem Regibus ſupremiſque poteſtatibus unquam pepercisse, cum nimia, ac pene Cynica detrahendi libidine omnes ordines non ſolum multo ſale defricaret, ſed in omnem verborum etiam prætextatorum amaritudinem effuſus, ipſa literarum capita viroſque ſuperum cultu reverendos totis voluminibus conſcinderet, aſperiſque facetiis jocum ac ludibrium faceret. He was ſo inſolent as to abuſe King Henry IV. in a moſt outrageous manner in his Eccleſiaſticus; which was the main Reaſon why that Book was burnt at Paris. See the Continuator of Thuanus's Hiſtory in the 5th Book, pag. 314. upon the Year 1612.

(H) Boaſted of the Wounds.] I have already quoted the Book, wherein he ſhews how he had exerted his Talents: He ſays in that Book, that the Servants of the Engliſh Ambaſſador ſet upon him at Madrid, in the Year 1614. and that they cryed out, thinking they had killed him, well, well, we have at laſt made away with that great Papiſt. (d) Sicariorum undecim de familia Oratoris Anglici, qui cùm anno 1614. Madriti Scioppium multis vulneribus, ut rebantur, confoſſum pro mortuo relinquerent, ita ſibi per viam rem præclare geſtam gratulantes audiebantur: Euge, jam tandem magnum illum Papiſtam jugulavimus. Qua de re typis deſcripta extat Narratio, quæ Legatus Latro inſcribitur. Mr. Colomiés has Publiſh'd a Letter, wherein Scioppius declares that he has been perſecuted by the Proteſtants, and that they have ſhot him, and given him ſeveral Thruſts, ſo as to believe they had kill'd him; but that, though he had render'd himſelf Odious to the Hereticks, for having ſtoutly maintain'd the Spiritual Authority of the Pope, he ſhould think himſelf to be a more pernicious Heretick than Luther and Calvin, if he ſhould write according to Baronius's Principles, in favour of the pretended Power of the Pope over the Temporalities of Kings. (e) Io per difender l'Apoſtolato del Papa ho ſcritto tanti libri, quanto forſe niſſun altro, e fui perſeguitato da Proteſtanti, che mi tirarono delle archibugiate, e ſtoccate, & mi laſciarono per morto. Ma Dio mi guardi che non mi metta mai a dir una parola ſola in difeſa del Dominato, con che mi farei maggior heretico che Lutero e Calvino, ſi como piu volte con voſtra D. Reverendiſſima mi ſono dichiarato, e ſpero di morir buon Catolico Romano a diſpetto della Corte Romana e di tutti i ſuoi adulatori. It appears from the laſt part of this Paſſage, that Scioppius was not well pleaſed with the Court of Rome. He had been ſaying, (f) that it is neceſſary Baronius ſhould be diſcredited, as an Enemy to Sovereignty, and to acknowledge that the Annals of that Cardinal contain many Falſities, and that a Benedictin Monk had obſerved two thouſand (g). Scioppius ſpoke otherwiſe, when he wrote againſt King James his Eccleſiaſticus, that was burnt at Paris. He glories in the diſgrace of his Book, and ſays that his Effigies was hanged in England, in a Farce that was acted before the King. Nay, he ſays the Proteſtant League declared, that the publick good required Scioppius ſhould be put to death; which was the Reaſon why the Ambaſſador of his Catholick Majeſty ſent him to Milan. Here follows the Sixth Article of the account he gives of his Adminiſtration. (h) Contemtus mortis: cujus ſpecimen eſt Eccleſiæ & Sedis Apoſtolicæ defenſio. 1. Contra Gallos a quibus Eccleſiaſticus ejus publicè crematus fuit, quem tamen librum Cardinalis Bellarminus, aliique magni Theologi ſummis tulerunt laudibus. 2. Contra Regem Angliæ, cujus librum quatuor diverſis libris editis profligavit: qui propterea ſcripto publico remedium et violentum fuit comminatus, ejuſque libros in foro exurendos curavit. In Mimo tandem, ſeu Comœdiæ ludicro coram ſe acto perſonam ejus induci fecit, hancque in ipſum pœnam ſtatui, ut faucibus fune eliſis (i) animam per inferiorem gutturem exploderet: velut in Hæretici Elenchomeni præfatione videre eſt. 3. Contra Principes Proteſtantes fœderis Hallenſis ſocios, qui Rotemburgi in concilio decreverunt, ipſis Scioppio ſublato omnino opus eſſe: quæ oratori Hiſpanico D. Baltaſari Zunicæ cauſa fuit, ut eum Germania relictâ Mediolanum concedere juberet, Inſubriæque Præſidi ſalutem ejus literis accuratiſſime commendaret.

(I) He was reproach'd with it, but the Circumſtances of his Impriſonment were not well repreſented.] We muſt keep to Brother Fulgentius's Narrative. "(k) When thoſe Quarrels, ſays he, were made up at Venice, Gaſpar Scioppius arrived there, a Man well known in the World by his many Books. He came from Rome in his way to Germany, as he ſaid, whither he was going to carry a Book injurious to the Republick, and to get it Printed there, with ſome other Pieces full of impious things, as that of a Dominican Monk, call'd Thomas Campanella—— (l) Whether it was upon that account, or for ſome other unknown Reaſon, 'tis certain, that he fell into Diſgrace, and was Arreſted by a Publick Order three or four days. Before he was Impriſon'd he had a Conference with the Father, in which they diſcourſed a long time about Learning, and particularly about the Doctrine of the Stoicks, which he pretended to retrieve, and to ſet in its due light, together with many other Learned Thoughts of his own; adding to it ſeveral things relating to State-Affairs, and particularly to thoſe of the Proteſtants of Germany. And then taking the Father aſide, he repreſented to him, that the Pope was a powerful Man, being a great Prince, and that therefore ſome Misfortune would certainly happen to him, ſince the Pope thought he had been very much offended by him; and that he would have cauſed him to be kill'd, had he been willing to revenge himſelf in that manner. But that the Pope deſign'd only he ſhould be taken alive, and carried to Rome. Nevertheleſs Scioppius offered to reconcile him to the Pope, with as much Glory and Honour as he cou'd deſire; adding, that he was impowered to treat with ſome Princes of Germany, even about their Converſion. The Father anſwered that he had done nothing at which his Holineſs ſhould be offended (m) —— (n) That he was obliged to him for his good Intention; but that he was reſolv'd to ſtick to the Publick Intereſt, ſince he had undertaken the defenſe of the Common-wealth, being fully perſuaded

(a) See the Article Puteanus, Remark F.

(b) See Forerus in Mantiſſa Anti-anatomiæ Jeſuiticæ pag. 63.

(c) Octavius Ferrarius in literatorum funere.

(d) Gaſp. Scioppius Pædia humanarum ac divinarum literarum pag. 26.

(e) A Letter of Scioppius to Father Fulgentius, Theologer of the Republick of Venice. It is dated from Padua the 9th of June 1636. Mr. Colomies has inſerted it in his Obſervationes ſacræ pag. 6. & ſeq.

(f) So bene che egli per ignoranza ed inadvertenza ſcriſſe molte coſe falſiſſime; di tal maniera che un Padre di San Benedetto, mio allievo, dice di haver raccolto due mila errori di ſuoi Annali, ed jo giudico che importi non poco, che queſt' huomo ſia diſcreditato, come nemico della giuridittione di tutti i Sourani Principi, li quali volſe ancora in temporalibus ſoggettare al Papa, Ibid pag. 8.

(g) [illegible] Nouv. de la Rep. des Lettres, Avr. [illegible]

(h) Scioppius, in Pædia pag. 25.

(i) See Meric Caſaubon pietas, pag. 23.

(k) Vie du Pere Paul pag. 191. Leyden 1661.

(l) Ibid. pag. 192.

(m) The Words which I leave out contain the Paſſage concerning Self-murder, which I have ſet down in the Article Saint Cyran.

(n) Vie du Pere Paul, pag. 193.

found many Barbariſms in the Writings of the Modern Authors, moſt eſteem'd for their Eloquence, and did not ſpare the moſt Eloquent (K) Writers of Ancient Rome. He deſerved, as he was a Grammarian, the † odious Title that was given to Diogenes as a Philoſopher. He had ſo many Enemies, that at laſt he was afraid he ſhould not be ſafe in any place. Tho' he kept himſelf quiet at Padua, and was taken up with (L) Apocalyptical Chimera's, wherewith he troubled Cardinal Mazarin, he was afraid of ſome attempt upon his Life. Which might make one believe that there was ſome ground for what was ſaid, that he intended to

† [illegible]

“ ded of the Juſtice of their Cauſe. What Scioppius ſaid about killing the Father, or carrying him to Rome, ſeem'd very ſtrange, and almoſt incredible; but what happen'd ſoon after, made it appear that he knew what he ſaid, and that ſuch Deſigns had been formed againſt the Father long before. Being ſet out from Venice, he wrote a Satyrical Diſcourſe, wherein mentioning his Conference with the Father, he declared that he knew him to be a Learned and (a) Courageous Man.”

It appears from this account, that the Friends of Scaliger were groſly miſtaken, when they Publiſh'd that Scioppius went to Venice ſoon after the Senate's Proclamation againſt thoſe who had Aſſaſſinated Father Paul; and that Scioppius was Arreſted upon a Suſpicion that he had a Hand in the Aſſaſſination. (b) Venetiam profectus eſt. Promulgata erat paulo ante capitalis ſententia in ſicarios aliquos (aſſaſſinos vocant) qui Paulum illum Servitam, cujus ſcriptum pro aſſertione juris Venetæ Reip. in manibus omnium verſatur, aggreſſi fuerant, & vulnera aliquot, quæ tamen lethalia præter mentem eorum non eſſent, inflixerant. Eo ergo tempore in urbem cum veniret, juſſu magiſtratus in carcerem deductus eſt, quaſi rei hujus conſcius, aut qui alterius eo explorator veniſſet. Such a Falſity muſt needs have been prejudicial to Scaliger's Cauſe; the more, becauſe he and his Friends made it appear upon ſome other Heads, that they were not well informed of what concern'd Scioppius. Had they conſulted Lingelſheim, they might have known that Scioppius was not Arreſted on account of Fra-Paolo's Aſſaſſination; but only becauſe he had raiſed ſome Suſpicions, by reaſon of the haughty and threatning words he had ſpoke in a Converſation with that Servite (c). Scioppius ſays he was Arreſted, upon Information that he was the Author of a Book injurious to the Republick of Venice; and that he was going to Negotiate againſt em in the Pope's Name with ſome Princes of Germany. (d) Fidem habuerunt Julio Adolpho Weiteriſhemio, homini Saxoni, qui ——— clam ad eos detulit Scioppium auctorem eſſe libri cujuſdam pro Pontifice adverſus ipſos ſcripti & Monachii typis impreſſi, hoc titulo, Nicodemi Macri Romani cum Nicolao Craſſo Veneto diſceptatio, &c. (quod quidem opus perpetuo ſale ac facetia diffluens, & eruditionis varietate admirabile, præ quo ivo tuus Villiomarus nec hiſcere auderet, multi docti viri non niſi a Scioppio proficiſci potuiſſe perſuaſum habebant) & tunc quoque Pontificis miſſu ad Principes quoſdam in rempublicam ipſorum inflammandos in Germaniam proficiſci. 'Tis certain that Scioppius writ that Book: Rhodius and Placcius (e) are miſtaken in aſcribing it to a Profeſſor of Bologna call'd Aſcanius Perſius. See the (f) Viſiera alzata of Peter James Villani of the Academy of the Humoriſts, Geniali, & Infecundi.

(K) And did not ſpare the moſt Eloquent Authors of Ancient Rome.] “ (g) The Accuſer of Cicero, ſays Balzac, about whom you deſire to be informed, is the dreadful Scioppius. He has publiſhed a Book at Milan, in which he accuſes Cicero of Improprieties and Barbariſms. There is but one Copy of it in France, and Meſſieurs du Puy lent it me when I was at Paris. This Injuſtice done to Cicero would prove a Conſolation to Scaliger, if he return'd into the World. But I expect that the ſame Scioppius will ſhortly put out another Book, wherein he'll undertake to prove that Cato was a wicked Man, and Julius Cæſar a wretched Soldier.” When he was but Twenty Years of age, he thought that Phædrus ſavoured ſometimes (h) of the Barbarouſneſs of Thrace his Native Country. 'Tis therefore no wonder, that he ſhould accuſe (i) Scaliger, Lipſius, Caſaubon, Thuanus, Poſſevin (k), Voſſius, Strada, &c. of Incongruity of Speech. His Criticiſms are ſometimes well grounded, but not always. See what the (l) Learned Borrichius wrote againſt him in Voſſius's and Strada's Vindication. (m) A Jeſuit of the College of Rome made an Apology for the latter, but I don't know whether it has been Printed. Thoſe who affirm magiſterially that certain Phraſes are meer Barbariſms and Soleciſms, do very much expoſe themſelves; for how often have they been told, that the Words and Expreſſions, which they condemn'd, are to be found in Claſſical Authors! (n) The difficulty of ſuch Diſputes will plainly appear to thoſe, who will be at the pains to examin the Books of John Voſſius, De Latinitate merito aut falſo ſuſpecta; thoſe of Chriſtopher Cellarius, De Latinitate mediæ & infimæ ætatis, & De barbariſmis & idiotiſmis ſermonis Latini; and thoſe which Voſſius, Borrichius, &c. have publiſhed upon that Subject. But to return to Scioppius, I muſt obſerve that he promiſed a Book, intitled, Hercules Coprophorus, wherein he had collected a vaſt number of Barbariſms and Solecisms: there he intended (o) to ſhew the Faults of Julius Cæſar Scaliger's Style. Mind theſe words of Lambecius; they fully repreſent the cavilling Humour of that Critick. (p) Homo, ut notiſſimum eſt, ingenii maligni, & oris maledicentiſſimi, qui propter præſtantiſſimorum & de re literaria optime meritorum virorum invidas ac injurioſas calumniationes, merito Canis Grammaticus appellatur. See the Margin (q).

His Boldneſs in criticizing the Style or the Expreſſions of Cicero, will be leſs ſurprizing, if it be conſider'd, that that Father of Eloquence has been Cenſured by ſuch Men at all times. Their Number is incredible. See the Preface to the Book intitled, Cicero a calumniis vindicatus, written by Andreas Schottus: 'Tis a very curious Tract; the 8th Chapter is an Anſwer to thoſe who pretend that Cicero is guilty of Solecilms.

(L) Apocalyptical Chimera's, wherewith he troubled Cardinal Mazarin.] Here is a Particular not ſo well known as others. Naudé, in order to refute thoſe who complain'd that the Cardinal did not anſwer all the Letters that were written to him, ſays, “ (r) That the Office of Firſt Miniſter in France ——— is like a Net, in which Mad, Melancholy, Hypochondriac and Extravagant Men are catch'd; like a Rock, on which the Ship of Fools (navis illa narragonia ſive Stultifera Brenii) ſplits, and like a Load-ſtone, to attract all the Viſionaries that are in the Kingdom. So that if the firſt Miniſter was obliged to read all the Chimerical Deſigns, all the extravagant Propoſals, and all the ridiculous and impertinent Advices of thoſe Men, he would not have time enough to read and examin them, tho' he ſhould lay aſide his moſt ſerious Affairs to mind none but thoſe. ——— (s) I have known within theſe five (t) Years, three Men of great Virtue, and extraordinary Learning: The Firſt, who is Cattius, a Canon of the City of Arras, maintains, That there is a Mountain of Gold in Paleſtine, which the Holy Scripture promiſes to Chriſtians, when they have conquer'd the Turks; and that God will have a Temple to be built to him at Jeruſalem: He has got the Plan of that Temple engraved, with all the Proofs and Explications of his Opinion, taken from Holy Writ. The Second, is Scioppius, whoſe Name is well known all over Europe. He pretends that no Father or Doctor of the Church did ever underſtand the Holy Scripture, or more certainly know the End of the World, and the Myſteries of St. John's Revelation than he. The Third, call'd Doctor Clombi, is now buſie to get a general Council aſſembled, wherein the Pretenſions of the King of France to Navarre and Franche Comte, may be decided in his favour, and has drawn up all the Decrees and Canons

(a) ...vita & parentes Gasp. Scioppii pag. 115.
(b) Ibid. pag. 150, 151.
(c) Sciop... pium Mo... ...ci jam ...ſe & in... ...tranſitu ...ju civit... ...ſi Venetæ ...ſceptum ...ana ...carceratio... ...ne, cum Paulum Servitam ...inſolentius ...ac minaci... ...ter allocu... ...tus ſuſpe... ...um ſefe... ...ciſſet. Lingelſheim epiſt. 86. ad Bongarſium. It is dated the 7th of November 1607.
(d) Oporinus Grubinius ubi ſupra pag. 162, 163.
(e) See Placcius de Anonymis & Pſeudonymis in appendice pag. 33.
(f) That Book is mention'd in the Acta Eruditor. for June 1695, pag. 263.
(g) Balzac, Let... ...12. to Chapelain ...2. ...ted the ...of A... ...il 1637.
(h) See ...fferus ...the life ...Phædrus.

...Author is miſtaken in the Preface, wherein he calls Scioppius ...rad, inſtead of Gaſpar. (i) See his Scaliger Hypobolimæus, ...the Tract de ſtilo hiſtorico. (k) A Phyſician who wrote a ...of the Houſe of Gonzaga, &c.

(l) In the Appendix of the Book intitl'd, Olai Borrichii cogitationes de variis Latinæ linguæ ætatibus & ſcripto ...Voſſii de vitiis ſermonis, Printed at Copenhagen 1675. in 4to.
(m) Call'd Pierucci. See Borrichius ib. pag. 268.
(n) See the Nouvelles de la Rep. des lettres, for May 1701 pag. 517.
(o) See his Alexipharmacum regium.
(p) Lambecius apud Magirum. eponymolog. Critico pag. m. 742.
(q) Mr. Grævius does very well deſcribe the Satyrical Humour of Scioppius in his Preface to the Works of Daniel l'Ermite, Printed at Utrecht in 1701.
(r) Naudé Dialogue de Maſcurat p. 454.
(s) Ibid. pag. 455.
(t) That Book of Naudé was written in 1649.

to retire into Holland, and expreſs'd a Deſire of returning into the pale of the (M) Proteſtant Church. Authors don't agree about the Year wherein he died; but “Canons, which ought to be made for that purpoſe. I have ſeen part of the Writings which thoſe three Men have ſent to the Cardinal to ſupport their Chimerical Deſigns by his Authority; and I do certainly know that if the Cardinal had been ſo unjudicious as to mind 'em, they would have cut out more Work for him than his beſt Secretary could have diſpatched. And becauſe every body pretends to be a Politician, fooliſh and extravagant Men muſt needs be more numerous among thoſe of that Profeſſion than among others: Which does likewiſe multiply the number of Advices, Counſels, Deſigns, Memoirs, and ſuch like Pieces, which are not leſs impertinent than others, not leſs proper to make a Miniſter loſe his time, if he was ſo ſimple as to mind them. And yet becauſe they don't do it, and their Experience and Knowledge of Affairs enable them to know immediately, quid ſolidum crepet; thoſe Hypochondriac and Melancholy Gentlemen take from thence occaſion to blame them, and to ſay that they don't Anſwer important Letters, for they look upon their Follies as things of great Moment, juxta illud, “Quiſquis amat ranam, ranam putat eſſe Dianam.

“That they neglect great Affairs, and the means of getting Money, making a Peace, and ſaving the Kingdom, to mind trifling things, and to play with Monkeys. And it happens, by reaſon of their many Complaints and Clamours, that a poor Miniſter, whoſe Buſineſs gives him no breathing time, is accuſed of not diſcharging the Duties of his Office, of too much indulging his Pleaſures, of neglecting the Letters and Advices he receives, and of being unworthy of ſuch a Poſt: In ſhort, if they were to be credited, “Collige ſarcinulas dicet libertus & exi,

“Jam gravis es nobis.„

Several Readers will doubtleſs blame me for not leaving out what does not belong to Scioppius in this long paſſage; but I refer them to many other Readers, who will be very well pleaſed with Naudé's Reflections contain'd in it.

Such was the Fate of Scioppius: After he had ſpent many Years in Criticizing, Biting and Defaming every Body, he applied himſelf to the Prophecies of the Holy Scripture; he lookt for the Key of 'em, and (a) flattered himſelf that he had found out St. Peter's Key, which no body had diſcovered till then. Weary of ſo many Engagements, and of the many Blows he had given and receiv'd, he ſhut up himſelf in that Dungeon, he fixed upon that Work, and gave himſelf that Task for his Old Age. A happy Man, if he wholly left off his Satyrical Humour, and had no deſire of exciting People to great Revolutions, by telling them that the Promiſes contain'd in the Apocalypſe would be ſhortly fulfill'd. All thoſe who undertook ſuch a Task, did not ſtay, as he did, 'till they were weary of their Slanders: On the contrary, ſome made their Weapons ſharper by it, and grew more Satyrical; others deſign'd only to excite Paſſions, and to ſtir the People. You'll find a Scheme of Scioppius's Work in a Letter written by him from Padua the 20th of February 1642. It appears from it, that great things were to happen in a ſhort time, and that he brought the Art of Prophecying into a Syſtem. Quatuor libellos, ſays he (b), iſtis indicibus ſeu titulis jam confectos habeo. 1. Fons ſapientiæ intento digito monſtratus, hoc eſt, Ecloga ex Sacra Scriptura & ſanctis Patribus de Sacra Scriptura ſtudio, ejuſque ſtudii neceſſitate, utilitate, adjumentis & temporibus. 2. Clavis ſcientiæ ad aperienda regni cælorum myſteria propediem conſummanda, hoc eſt; ſpecimen Exegeſeos Propheticæ in Pſal. 45. 3. Annunciatio regni Chriſti ac populi Chriſtiani in orbem terræ futurum uſque ad noviſſimum annorum & expeditionem Gog & internecionem ejus. 4. Syſtema artis prophetandi, continens ejus artis finem, officia, materiam ſubjectam & inſtrumenta, exemplo Galeni in ſyſtemate artis Medicæ.

(M) A Deſire of returning into the pale of the Proteſtant Church.] M. Arnauld could not believe it. (c) “There is one thing that would give a very ill Opinion of Scioppius, if it were true: viz. That he had a mind, in his old days, to enter into Articles with the Dutch, about his Religion, and that accordingly he writ to Leyden that he would turn Proteſtant, if they would receive him. But this is ſo unlikely, that the bare Authority of Hornius is not ſufficient to make us believe it. He expreſſes in all his Books ſo great a Zeal for the Catholick Religion, and ſo great an Averſion for Hereticks, that 'tis highly improbable he intended to return to his firſt Religion. Beſides, he was a Man of ſo great parts, not to mention his Noble Birth, that if he had entertain'd ſuch Thoughts, he would have found but too many Proteſtant Princes ready to receive him with open Arms, without being obliged to aſk a Livelihood of the Profeſſors of Leyden, whom he had very much offended by his hard uſage of Joſeph Scaliger, their Hero and their Idol. This is all that I could ſay, not having Hornius's Book by me. But I have juſt now receiv'd the whole paſſage of that Author, which I have inſerted at the bottom of the Page, becauſe the bare reading of it is ſufficient to give no credit to it; it is ſo full of Paſſion and Fury againſt the Catholicks in general, and Scioppius in particular, accuſing the former of a Barbarous Deſign of Murdering all the Proteſtants, and the latter, of being the promoter of that cruel Reſolution„. Here follows the Paſſage that was ſent to M. Arnauld: I take it from the (d) 186 Page of George Hornius's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, continu'd and commented upon by M. Leydecker. Nunquam res Evangelicorum in majori priùs erant diſcrimine, quam poſt illam Bohemiorum calamitatem. Jeſuitæ enim jam quaſi parta de Univerſa Germania, imo omnibus Evangelicis, victoriâ, inſolenter triumphabant, ac nil niſi cædem Proteſtantium ſpirabant, quodam flagitioſiſſimo Grammatico, & ob ſcelera Altorfi Noricorum commiſſa infami, Gaſpare Schoppio, ex Palatinatu ſuperiore Neagora oriundo, ſed indigno, qui tam præſtanti nationi apud poſteros accenſeatur, (ſive, ut ſe apellari Italice malebat, Scioppio) homine in apoſtaſiam prolapſo, claſſicum canente & totale excidium Proteſtantium promittente, ac ſuadente: qui tamen nihil niſi miſerabilis literator fuit, ut opera ejus inepta & maligna oſtendunt, ac extrema ſenecta, ſcriptis Patavio, ubi præ Jeſuitarum, vitæ ejus inſidiantium, metu deliteſcebat, Leidam literis, tranſitionem iterum ad Evangelicos offerebat, ſi in gratiam reciperetur, ſed rejectus Apoſtata contemtuſque ob vanitatem fuit. I have hardly read any Author, who mentions this Deſign of Scioppius, without quoting Hornius for it. Which makes me apt to think that no other Authority can be alledged; and I doubt this is not ſufficient in a Fact of ſuch a nature. I have heard a Learned Lutheran ſay, that Scioppius's Letters upon that Subject have been in Boeclerus's hands. But why then were they not Publiſh'd; for 'tis well known that many People look upon Hornius's Narrative as a meer Fable? 'Tis at leaſt an Indiſcretion, which deſerved to be cenſured by the Academical Senate. One cannot ſay that the moſt Illuſtrious Univerſity of Leyden rejected Scioppius's Offers, without doing them wrong. Such a Conduct would have been contrary to Humane Prudence and Chriſtian Charity. It had been a glorious thing for the Proteſtants to regain ſuch a Man; beſides, muſt not the Church open her Arms at all times to her revolted Children? Muſt ſhe not, like the good Shepherd, fetch all the Sheep that are gone aſtray? Much more would ſhe be guilty, if ſhe ſhut up the Door againſt the Sheep, that are willing to return into the Sheep-fold. Was it an impoſſible thing for Scioppius to repent? Could it be certainly detemnin'd that his Requeſt was a Cheat? However, they might have prevented his doing any Miſchief. Take notice, that he obſerves in his Letter to Voſſius, that the Prophetical Books he deſign'd to Publiſh, contain'd nothing contrary to the Church of Rome. He gives to underſtand, that he acknowledges the Injuſtice and Uſurpation of the Court of Rome, but he ſays nothing whereby it appears that he intended to retire among the Proteſtants. (e) Vix autem ſperare audeo, fore ut quicquam iſtorum in Italia edendi venia mihi detur, non quod quicquam in eis vel decretis Romanæ Eccleſiæ de fide, vel bonis moribus adverſetur, ſed quod mores Curiæ Romanæ omnes Eccleſiæ leges jam olim in poteſtatem ſuam perduxerint, nec but I think his Death ought (N) to be placed in the Year 1649. It cannot be denied that he was a very Learned Man; and had he had as much Moderation and Probity as he had Learning and Wit, he would be justly reckon'd one of the Heroes of the Common-Wealth of Learning. His Application to Study, his (O) Memory, the multitude of his Books, the quickness of his Parts, his Eloquence, and his Ascendant over his Enemies are surprising things: But his Victories cost him dear, for he was (P) strangely Abused; nay, he mistrusted sometimes his dreadful Pen. He

---

(a) Me jam exegeſi ſeu prophetia Scripturæ (quam S. Petrus vocat) plus quingenta folia explevisse, ea ipſa clave ad aperienda ejus myſteria uſum quam idem Apoſtolus nobis reliquit vix tamen à quoquam adhuc intellectam. Scioppius epiſt ad Voſſium. 'Tis the 334 among the Letters written to Voſſius p. m. 225.

(b) Sciopp. epiſt. ad Voſſium pag. 225.

(c) Morale pratique tom. 3. chap. 6. pag. 129, 130.

ne jam cuiquam fas sit quicquam tale dicere aut scribere, quale ipsi Pontifices in D. Bernardo, Brigitta & Catharina Senensi non modo vere recteque dictum esse, sed etiam pro saluberrimo fidelium dogmate religiose observari voluerunt. 'Tis a very Civil Letter, and Scioppius seems to repose a great Confidence in Vossius.

(N) His Death ought to be placed in the (a) Year 1649.] It will appear from the following Words of M. Baillet, that few People know when Scioppius departed this Life. This uncertainty would have vexed him, had he foreseen it, when he made so great a noise all over Europe. " (b) I have not " been able to know hitherto in what Year he died. " Patin (1) the Father says it was in 1649. Lambecius (2) tells us he was writing Books still in " 1652. Others seem to say that he lived beyond the " Year 1660. M. (3) Galois speaking of him in " 1664, says he had been lately dead. M. (4) Konig Writing in 1678. has these Words, Paucis abhinc annis vivere desiit". To which I add, that others place his Death in (c) the Year 1663. Of all those Writers Patin is the only one who hits right; for 'tis certain Scioppius died in the Year 1649. Ferrarius speaks of him, as of a Man who was no longer alive, in a Speech (d) which he delivered (e) in the Sixteenth Year of his Professorship at Padua. But he began to be a Professor in that University in the Year (f) 1634. and therefore he said so in 1650. From whence it ought to be concluded that Patin was not wrongly informed about the Year in which Scioppius died, when he wrote the following passage the 13th of July 1649. " (g) This " Year proves fatal to many Men of Letters: Since " M. Hofman's and M. Pietre's Decease, we have " also lost M. des Yveteaux, who had been the late " King's Preceptor; M. Justel, Secretary to the " King, a Learned Man, who did formerly belong " to the Marshal de Bouillon. Besides, Vossius and " Spanheim are dead in Holland; Paganinus Gaudentius in Italy, and likewise Gaspar Scioppius, who " wrote about 43 Years ago a very Infamous Book " against the incomparable Joseph Scaliger. This " Scioppius was a Lutheran in his Youth; he turn'd " Catholick by Reading Baronius's Annals, as he " said: And then he went to Rome; where he was " a Domestick to Cardinal Madrucio. He had a " mind then to turn (h) Jesuit; but the Society were " of Opinion that it was better for him to remain " a Lay-Man, and that he could do them greater " Services, which he did in Writing against Scaliger. " He made some Journeys for them to Germany " and Venice in a disguise (i). And then he had a " Pension from the Emperor: But at last he declared himself an Enemy to the Emperor and " the Jesuits, and went to Padua for the safety of " his Person, where he lived secure from so many " Enemies, having obtain'd a Pardon for his past " life from the Republick of Venice. He is suspected to be the most considerable Author " of many small pieces Publish'd against the Jesuits within these 15 Years, and among others of the " Anatomia Societatis, & de Stratagematis Jesuitarum. He formerly told one of his Friends, who " is also mine, that Cardinal Baronius writ some " Letters to him, when he was in Germany, wherein " he exhorted him to turn Catholick, and promised " him to procure him a (k) Cardinal's Hat; and " that Baronius himself hoped to be made Pope after Paul V.

(O) His Application to Study, his Memory, the multitude of his Books ——— his Ascendant over his Enemies.] Ferrarius tells us that he studied Night and Day; that the fourteen last Years of his Life he kept himself shut up in a little Room, and that his Conversation with those that went to visit him, run only upon Learning; that like another Ezra he might have restored the Holy Scripture, if it had been lost; and that he repeated many passages of it for several hours with such a Memory, that those who heard him could not sufficiently admire him, especially considering that he drew from them very Remarkable Doctrines, and such as were unknown to the most Learned. The Number of his Works exceeded the Number of his Years. Ferrarius having mention'd the Interest he had with the Popes and several Princes, and the publick Employments bestowed upon him, goes on thus (l) Donec inanium pertæsus in se ipsum recederet, & partim Mediolani, partim in hac Urbe (m) victitaret, æternum libris bona fide posteritatis negotium transigeret. Eos libros in ore famæ in commendatione omnium versari. Quumque per omnes fere disciplinas capax ingenium circumtulerit, duo tamen in ipso sine exemplo satis exprimi, nedum laudari posse, judicii vim in aliorum scriptis æstimandis, & ad latinæ orationis censuram exigendis miram, atque exactam, tantam vero sacrarum literarum peritiam, quantam fortasse nullus ad hanc diem, quantamque nemo credat, qui illam auribus non usurparit. Ut, quod olim de Esdra dictum est, deperditos linguæ sanctæ Codices solus reparare potuerit. Scilicet usque ad extremam senectam, nuntio rebus humanis remisso, noctu diuque in sacrarum literarum commentatione incredibili labore versatum, ut ipsum adeuntibus per plures horas uno veluti spiritu infinita sacræ paginæ loca inusitata memoriæ felicitate stupentibus, atque attonitis repræsentaret, atque ex ipsis divinæ sapientiæ penetralibus arcana etiam doctissimis ignorata exprimeret. Nimirum cum rarò alias prodire in publicum soleret, extremis temporibus quatuordecim annos domo, ac ferme angusto cubiculo clausum diebus noctibus jungentem lucubrare perpetuo solitum, cumque à doctis inviseretur, ne unquam à literis abscederet variis, ac festivis de re literaria sermonibus profundæ eruditionis fructus uberrimos communicare consuevisse, hunceque ipsi ludum, hoc otium, hoc laborum levamen semper fuisse. Nec mirum si ætate exacta plures libros à se confectos, quam annos numeraret, ejusque opera vel magnam Bibliotecam instruere possent, ipse viva ac perambulans Bibliotheca merito appellaretur.

The ascendant he had over his Adversaries is a kind of Prodigy. I have quoted above a passage out of M. Baillet in his Tract concerning Famous Children, wherein that Author confesses (n) that God did most times reward his indefatigable Labour with great Success. The sequel of that Passage runs thus: (o) God permitted not that his excessive Labours should occasion his Death, or prejudice his Health; but would have him live in the World for the space of twenty (p) Olympiads and perhaps more, for the Execution of his designs, and the exercise of many People.

(P) For he was strangely Abused; nay, he mistrusted &c.] Soon after the Publication of the Scaliger hypobolimæus some outrageous pieces came out against him. Baudius took Scaliger's part in Verse, and Heinsius (q) in Prose. Another Author made a Bloody Satyr, Intitled, Vita & parentes Gaspari Schoppii. Scaliger did not remain Idle: He publish'd confutatio fabulæ Burdonum (r) under the Name of Janus Rutgersius, which he denoted only by the initial Letters J. R. Barthius came in for one, and wrote three Satyrs against Scioppius, which I have mention'd in another (s) place. Here follow the Titles of some other pieces against the same Man. Alberti de Albertis Lydius lapis ingenii, spiritus ac morum Gaspari Scioppii. Ejusdem vindiciæ generales adversus famosos Scioppii libellos in Jesuitas, Munich 1649. in 12. Henrici Wottoni Epistola de G. Scioppio cui propter argumenti similitudinem etiam alia adjecta sunt, Amberg 1637. One of the chief Writers for

(l) Octavius Ferrarius, in prolusione cui titulus Funus literatorum.

(m) That is, at Padua.

(n) Baillet, Enfans celebres pag. 243.

(o) Ibid. pag. 245.

(p) Mr. Baillet in the 3. Volume of the Jugem. des Sçavans pag. 475. says he lived above 80. Years: 'Tis certain he lived but 73.

(q) 'Tis he who made the Satyr Intituled, Hercules tuam fidem sive Munsterus hypobolimæus, and another piece Intituled, Virgula divina sive Apotheosis Lucretii Vespillonis.

(r) See Thomasius prætat in orationes Mureti, pag. 24.

(s) In the Article Barthius Remark Q.

---

others say he was a Jesuit, and that he left that Order. See Baillet, Jugem. t. 3. n. 535. pag. 476. 'Tis a mistake. See Amphot. Sciopp. pag. 169. (i) This seems to be false: The journey he made into Germany since he turn'd Catholick, was the Year 1607. when he was arrested at Venice for some days. He appear'd in Germany with Pomp, and as being in the Service of the Arch-Duke. (See vita & parentes Gasp. Schoppii pag. 155, 156.) Nay he dined at Amberg with the Prince of Anhalt Governor of the Palatinate, and was kindly used by him. See Amphot. Sciopp. pag. 129, 130. (k) See Amphotides Scioppianæ pag. 169.

He had the whole † Bible at his Fingers end. 'Tis not true that he would ne (Q) ſuffer his Picture to be drawn. He left behind him ſeveral Manuſcripts (R) which are very much Commended. I have not been able to find the Elogies of Julius Cæſar Capaci, wherein he is Honourably mention'd. There are two Printed Books under the Name of Andreas SCIOPPIUS, Gaſpar's (S) Brother. 'Tis a ſuppoſititious Name.

If any one deſires to know how earneſtly Scioppius applyed himſelf in his Youth to get an exact knowledge of the Latin Tongue, he needs only read his Scalig. Hypobolimæus Folio 401. Being told that the Reading of the Ancient Poets wa dangfor the Jeſuits againſt him was Father Laurence Forerus, who publiſh'd Grammaticus Proteus, arcanorum Societatis Jeſu Dædalus dedolatus, & genuino ſuo vultu repræſentatus: acceſſit auctarium animadverſionum in Gaſparis Scioppii Eccleſiaſticam aſtrologiam, Ingolſtad 1636. in 8. Appendix ad Grammaticum Proteum quid de relatione Alphonſi de Vargas ſit ſentiendum, in the ſame place and in the ſame Year in 8. The Jeſuits, (they are M. Baillet's Words (a)) "repreſent him as the greateſt Knave, and the "moſt profligate Man in the World, and as the "Plague of the Common-Wealth of Learning and "of Humane Society. And indeed the greateſt "Men of that time complain'd of him, both Ca"tholick and Hereticks, and even the Deiſts, and "all of 'em were for running him down, becauſe he "Attack'd every Body, and defamed the moſt Ho"neſt Men with as much Pleaſure as Impudence, "and ſpared neither Quality nor Merit". Ferrarius (b) who praiſed him ſo much, acknowledges that he was forced to hear very unpleaſant Stories.

I have ſaid that he did not always truſt his Pen: The thing is this. A pretender to great matters in the Common-Wealth of Learning took delight in abuſing Scioppius, and placing him in the loweſt Rank of Men of Letters. Nay, he threaten'd to write a Book againſt him, whereby it would appear to all the World that he was a meer Ignoramus. Scioppius ſent him word that he ſhould hold his Tongue, and that if he continued to vex him he ſhould be proſecuted, not before the Muſes, but before the Magiſtrates; that Scioppius laying down his Learned Arms, would uſe no other Writings but ſuch as the Records at Bologna might afford him; that he would take care to get a Copy of the Information and Sentence, whereby that Man was Convicted of ſeveral Crimes. Theſe are, ſaid he, the Arms I ſhall make uſe of, if he continues to be troubleſome to me. When that Man heard that Menace, he gave over the deſign of Writing againſt Scioppius, but continued to ſpeak ill of him. Nicius Erythræus relates the thing very handſomely; the Reader will be glad to find here his own Words. (c) Cum de ſingulis, detrahendi gratia, maledice contumelioſeque loqueretur, Gaſparem vero Scioppium, qui in literaria Rep. in primis ordinibus numeratur, imi ſubſellii virum, atque inter literatos proletarios, ut ita dicam, referendum eſſe ajebat; quem ille Scioppium, quoniam in quodam libello ſua tempora, quaſi literatis viris non amica, modeſte reprebenderat, cæpit contumeliis omnibus lacerare, atque palam eum infantem, rudem, & omnino omnis eruditionis expertem atque ignaram aſſerere, minitarique, ſe libro edito ejus inſcitiam palam omnibus facturum. At Scioppius miſit illi, qui diceret, ſi ſibi amplius moleſtus eſſet, non ſe pugnaturum cum eo eloquentiæ doctrinæque armis, ſed dictis teſtium, ac ſententiis judicum, in publicas tabulas relatis, quibus Bononiæ, malorum facinorum arguitus, evictus, ac condemnatus fuiſſet; his ſe armis curaturum, ut ejus projecta ad detrahendum bonis viris audacia infringeretur, ac retunderetur. His auditis, a ſcribendi contra illum ſententia deſtitit, ſeque tantum intra verba continuit. This may be look'd upon as a very mortifying thing for Scioppius. Properly ſpeaking Zoilus Ardelio Triumphed over him; for when a Man of Letters in a diſpute about Learning applies himſelf to Magiſtrates, Bailiffs and Attorneys, 'tis a ſign he miſtruſts his Pen and his Learning. He changes the ſtate of the Queſtion; he is afraid of an Engagement, he dares not fight his Antagoniſt (d).

(Q) That he would not ſuffer his Picture to be drawn] Thomas Bartholinus ſays that Scioppius would never ſuffer his Picture to be drawn or engraved, tho' his Friends deſired it, and he thinks he refuſed it becauſe he was afraid of Enchantments. But becauſe he is miſtaken (e) as to the Fact, his Conjecture ought not much to be minded. However I ſhall ſet down his Words, which contain ſome other Examples that are more certain. (f) Adduci nunquam potuit, Caſpar Scioppius, quamquam ſæpe ab amicis rogatus, ut effigiem ſuam coloribus pictorum vel æri cælatorum committeret. Neſcio an faſcini metu, quod adverſariorum, quos & magnos & multos habuit, præſtigias timeret. Hinc ei bellum cum Accio Poeta, voluminum non imaginum certamina exercere. Certe nec Paleottus, nec Velſerus (g) nec Pinellus, Viri magni ſe vivos depingi voluerunt, ſicut Calceolarius in Muſeo prodidit. Bartholinus might have added to the Three Examples of Calceolarius a King (h) of Lacedemon, the Philoſopher (i) Plotinus, and a Famous (k) Engliſh Divine, &c.

(R) Several Manuſcripts that are very much commended.] Read theſe Words of Morhoffus: (l) Libri Scioppiani ἀνέκδοτοι multi, atque inter illos ejus Theſaurus, ſive abſolutiſſimi de lingua Latina Commentarii apud Joh. Michaelem Pieruccium, Profeſſorem Patavinum, latitant, neque hunc in diem lucem, cum indignatione eruditorum, vident; de quibus legendus eſt Gregor. Let. Ital. regnante part 3. lib. 3. pag. 325, Magna hujus libri expectatio apud literatos eſt, & qui viderant, ita commendant, ut in illo genere nil ſimile a quoquam ſcriptum illis eſſe videatur. That Pieruccius is probably the ſame upon whom Scioppius beſtowed ſo many Encomiums in his Letter to Voſſius, and who wiſh'd he might have been Profeſſor of Philoſophy in Holland. Scioppius took him into his houſe, and made him his Univerſal Heir (m).

(S) Andreas SCIOPPIUS, Gaſpar's Brother——is a ſuppoſititious Name.] 'Tis thought (n) that the Jeſuit Garaſſe is the Author of two Satyrs, one of which is Intituled, Andreæ Scioppii Caſparis fratris Horoſcopus Anticotonis, ejuſque Germanorum Martillerii, & Hardivillerii vita, mors, cenotaphium, Apotheoſis (o): and the other, Andreæ Scioppii Caſparis Fratris Elixir Calviniſticum, ſeu lapis Philoſophiæ reformatæ a Calvino Genevæ primum effoſſus, dein ab Iſaaco Caſaubono Londini politus, cum teſtamentario Anticotonis codice nuper invento (p). M. Baillet (q) does very well obſerve that Gaſpar Scioppius had no Brother, that writ any thing; but that in point of Satyr the pretended Andreas deſerved to be Gaſpar's Brother. The Son of Iſaac Caſaubon made the ſame Obſervation. Peream, ſays he (r), niſi meruerit hic homo quiſquis ſit, ut Gaſparis Schoppii frater credatur eſſe. He had been ſaying, Certum eſt tale illud eſſe ſcriptum ut ipſe Gaſpar Schop. illius author eſſe potuerit: adeo mendaciis & calumniis refertum eſt, adeo plenum maledictis & conviciis, &c. Soon after he ſpeaks of a Satyr written by Gaſpar Scioppius, as Eudæmon-Joannes (ſ) acknowledges. That Satyr is Intituled, Holofernis Kriſſœderi Landſperga Bavari reſponſio ad epiſtolam Iſaaci Caſauboni, Regii in Anglia Archipædagogi pro viro clariſſimo Gaſpare Scioppio (t). Caſaubon is accuſed in it not only of being Ignorant of the Latin Tongue, but alſo of being a Pimp, a Whoremonger, an Adulterer, and a Thief, and ſomething worſe ſtill: (v) Ille meo patri, quem ſcit ipſe ſpectatiſſimæ ſemper integritatis fuiſſe, ſtupra, furta, lenocinia, adulteria, (hæc ipſa enim crimina illi impingit, & alia quoque vel dictu fœda) audet objicere? mirum mihi videtur & incredibile, niſi quod Schoppium cogito. The Reading of that Book, if Scioppius (w) may be

† See Ferrarius's Words in the Remark O.

(a) Baillet, Jugem. des Sçav. vol. 1. pag. 476, 477.

(b) Ita multorum in ſe odia concitaſſe, ut amaras ipſe quoque hiſtorias audire cogeretur belliſque pluſquam civilibus Muſarum pacem inquietaret. Ferrar. ubi ſupra.

(c) Nicius Erythræus, Pinacoth. 1. p. 241. He ſpeaks of one Zoilus Ardelio. 'Tis doubtleſs a ſuppoſititious Name.

(d) Compare with this what is ſaid in the Remarks D and E of the Article Thomas.

(p) Printed at Antwerp for the Heirs of Martin Nutius in 4. (q) Baillet, in the 1. tome of the Anti, pag. (r) Mericus Caſaubonus in pietate, pag. 18. (ſ) C lib. 2. pag. 125. (t) Printed at Ingolſtad, 1615 (v) Meric. Caſaubon ibid. pag. 21. (w) Scribit hic nebulo patrem meum poſtquam legeret hunc ſuum libellum, ex deſperatione vitæ renunciaſſe, atque inde vivere deſiiſſe. Id. ibid. pag.

dangerous for Young People, and being desirous to learn Latin from the best Authors, without doing any prejudice to his Chastity, he made use of a Remedy, which (I) deserves to be mention'd.

SCOT,

he believed, brought a Melancholy upon Casaubon of which he died. Meric Casaubon (a) refutes this by his Father's Journal, whereby it appears that Casaubon despised that Satyr. Having read the Infamies contain'd in it against himself, his Father, and his Wife, he wrote in his Journal that he gloried in suffering with his Family all those opprobrious things for the sake of JESUS CHRIST. His Son observes in the Margin, that there is nothing in that Libel of Scioppius against his Mother. He accuses that Satyrical Writer of Atheism, and proves it in the following manner. Scioppius has collected the finest Passages of the Scripture, wherein we are forbidden to speak ill of our Neighbours; and that the Tract wherein he has inserted them is a violent Satyr: His design was therefore to shew yet he laught at the Scripture. (b) Quum intenderet alios inaudito exemplo calumniari, & omni convitiorum genere prosequi, congerit præcipuos è S. Scriptura locos quibus vetamur aliis ullam omnino contumeliam facere, aut convitium dicere: nonne ut omnibus palam faciat, quo loco Dei mandata habeat homo perditus, atque Deo ipsi (horresco referens) illudat? The following Words of M. Baillet (c) may be added to that Latin passage. Casaubon (1) "calls "him the most cruel of all wild Beasts, and pre- "tends in another Book of his (2) that Scioppius "was a profest Enemy to God, and that he had "found in one of his Works execrable Blasphe- "mies against the Divine Authority of the holy "Scripture". But 'tis to be observed that those Blasphemies are only strain'd Expressions about the Authority, which the Roman Catholicks pretend the Church has received from God to explain the Scripture. Ducit hodie familiam, they are Casaubon's Words, (d) inter hujus generis hæreticos hostis Dei certissimus Scioppius; in cujus Ecclesiastico leviter inspecto, multas legi superioribus diebus adversus τὰς θεοπνεύστους Scripturas, blasphemias longe dirissimas.

After this digression I return to Father Garasse, and I say he could not have pitch'd upon a more proper Brotherhood. M. Baillet (e) observes that there was in the beginning of our Age one Andrew SCIOPPIUS in Saxony a Lutheran; but I cannot believe, adds he, that he was Gaspar's near Relation. I have nothing to say upon this Subject: I only know that our Scioppius calls (f) Conrad Schoppius, (a Learned Man, who was still living in 1633.) his Cousin German. He (g) taught Rhetorick at Berne, and had been Professor of Eloquence and Poetry at Heidelberg (h). I would not affirm that Conrad SCHOPPIUS a Taylor of Francfort (i), one of the chief Authors of the Insurrection which happen'd in that Town in the Year 1614. and Beheaded two Years after (k), was not related to Gaspar. There has been a Minister, call'd Conrad SCHOPPIUS, who Publish'd (l) some Latin Sermons.

(I) He made use of a Remedy, which deserves to be mention'd.] It consisted in mortifying his Body by a strict Diet. He fasted whole days in Germany poring upon his Books; and when he came to Rome, he wholly abstain'd from Wine, Meat, Eggs, and Fish: he made but one Meal in a day, and eat but very Common Things and in a small quantity, half a Cabbage, a little Rice, a small piece of Cheese, a Pear or an Apple; and both in Winter and Summer, he had no other Bed (m) than two Boards, two Blankets, and a Pillow. This is certainly an excellent Remedy for the Cure of Incontinence, when a Man does sincerely desire to be Chast. Those, who pretend that it is not very effectual, and that Marriage is the only true Remedy, are such as never tried it, or don't much care to resist Luxury; and therefore their Testimony is of no great force. Here follow Scioppius's Words. (n) Cum primis ineuntis adolescentiæ meæ annis veteres scriptores, & in primis poëtas legere cuperem, & viros autem doctos audirem, qui arma pruriginis, hoc est, obscena illa poëtarum carmina isti præsertim ætati propter periculum etiam atque etiam cavenda dicerent; excogitavi rationem, qua cum minimo meo damno aut periculo utilitates, quæ ex lectione illa peti possent, perciperem —— Ego qui Inferiat illas poëtarum contemnas tam, &, ut ait Lucretius, mox sine parte periculi percipere cuperem, temperantiæ & abstinentiæ clam me colligandum præbui. Nam ut Terentius ait, sine Cerere & Baccho friget Venus: sive ut ante ipsum Euripides:

> Ἐν πλησμονῇ τοι Κύπρις, ἐν πεινῶσι δ' οὔ.
> Saturis adest Venus, non esurientibus.

Monstrum scilicet habetur libido sine gula (ait Tertullianus) —— (o) In libidinem ebullire, res laterum est ac virium. Vires autem, ne infirmitas forsan perdat militiam, cibis excitantur. Scitis, ait ille, quid tentare soleat humanam satietatem. Toto itaque biennio sic in Germania vixi, ut integros dies avidus, siccus ac jejunus in studendo consumerem, omnimoque prandia ignorarem. Veni postea in Italiam; ubi cum plerosque omnes scriptores veteres tam Græcos, quam Latinos, diligenti lectione contrivissem, excerpsissemque sedulo omnia, quæ ad corrigendos ordinandosque mores & affectus & ad vitam quam tranquillissime agendam usui fore visa essent —— Non modo his, quod in seculo sibi non probari Plato ostendit, sed etiam semel in die saturum fieri, & vino carere nolle, non satis eo dignum esse deprehendi, qui sibi legendis sapientiæ magistris illis operæ pretium fecisse videretur —— Quare ne in legendis istis oleum & operam perdidissem, tamquam germanus Stoicus quique ad vitam potius, quæ didicisset, quam ad disputationes referenda conferret, vinum aqua ex præfluente Tiberi hausta mutavi, quod ignem scilicet ut Plato ait, igni addendum non putarem: tum carnes in perpetuum à mensa mea proscripsi, non solum (3) διὰ τὴν νωθρίαν τὴν ἀπὸ τῆς κρεοφαγίας ἐγγινομένην, sed etiam ἀσκήσεως χάριν καὶ τοῦ μὴ σφριγᾶν περὶ τὰ ἀφροδίσια τὴν σάρκα, ut idem Clemens loquitur, cum verissime a S. Hieronymo dictum sit: Esum carnis esse seminarium libidinis. Sed etiam piscibus & ovis culina ac mensa mea interdixi, quod hac quidem (4) συπτικὰ plus satis experimento didicissem, piscium vero esu majorem etiam, quam carnium, voluptatem capere solerem: quare dimidiato caule & aliquantulo oryzæ cum piro aut pomo & casei frustillo contentus, ipsas viginti quatuor horas durare soleo, eadem opera jentans, prandens, cœnans ac comissans. Take notice that he says (p) that before he had read Father Coster's Books, he practic'd most of those things only to live in Conformity to Reason, but after he had read 'em, he directed them to God. 'Tis also to be observed that he believed the Reading of some Books could excite the most drowsy Tempers. He reckon'd among those Books some Commentaries of Saliger and their Text. (q) Vos autem capulares illi, vieti, edentuli, & jam diu Acheronti debiti, si jam vos opus perdere & tamquam caballos in clivo non facere pudet, ut Satyrion compendi faciatis, familiaris hujus mei auctores, in eosdemque notas legite,

> (r) Accendi queis frigidus ævo
> Laomedontiades aut Nestoris hernia possit.

And because he took hold of every opportunity to insult that great Man, he tells him in a reproachful manner that he slighted his Father's Judgment, in Commenting upon some Authors. I shall set down his Words, that the Reader may see that Men of great Virtue and Learning, tho' belonging to the same Family, are divided in their Opinions about obscenities. (s) Cum pater tuus obscenos & immemorabiles Ausonii, Martialis, similiumque poëtarum versus negarit a Critico censendos, atque adeo ne legendos quidem omnino, aut audiendos, sed detestandos & flammis expiandos, & pro signis Priapi, adeoque pro libris honori ejus scriptis, sanctorum imagines a nobis habendas esse contenderet —— (t) Tu exortus es homo sanctissimus & castitatis ac pudicitiæ exemplar atque specimen, qui non modo illum ipsum censura patris tui notatum Ausonium, sed hoc etiam Burdigalensi Triphallo nihilo deteriùs mutoniatos Catullum, Tibullum, Propertium, & Priapeiorum versuum scriptores, magna temporis curaque impensa a te recensitos, castigatos, nec pœnitendis (ut gloriaris) commentariis illustratos

(a) Ibid. pag. 16.

(b) Ibid. pag. [illegible]

(c) Baillet, Jugemens des Savans vol. 4. pag. 376.

(1) Rhet. Casaubon. in Epistol.

(2) M. Casaub. Pietas, in Burm. p. 1. 9. M. [illegible] in Ap. [illegible] Baroni. sect. 33. pag. 133. edit. Geneve 1663.

(e) In the 1. Vol. of the Anti. pag. 311.

(f) See the 23. letter of the 1. Book Supplementum Epistolarum of Gaspar Scioppius.

(g) See the Epistle Dedicatory of Freinshemius's Commentary upon Quintus Curtius.

(h) See the Verses he made for Philip Pareus: They are Prefixed to the Lexicon Criticum of the same Pareus.

(i) See the [illegible]

(o) Sciopp. ib. verso.

(3) Non solum propter hebetudinem, quæ ex carnium esu generatur, sed etiam exercitationis gratia, & ne caro nimis perpruriscat ad Venerem.

(4) Pruriginem commoventia.

(p) Id. fol. 250. verso.

(q) Id. ib. fol. 272. verso.

(r) Juven. Sat. 6. v. 325.

(s) Sciopp. ibid. fol. 281. verso.

(t) Ibid. fol. 282.

[illegible] Idem. lib. 9. pag. 658. (l) Draudius mentions them in his Bibliotheca classica. (m) Cubitus —— asseres sine ulla culcitra tantum duabusque lodicibus instructi. Scioppius [illegible] fol. 251. (n) Idem in Scalig. hypobolim. fol. 250.

SCOTUS (MICHAEL) a Learned Man, and a great Lover of Mathematicks and Astrology, lived in the XIIIth. Century. He was well beloved by the Emperor Frederick II. to whom he Dedicated all his Books. He has been placed in the Catalogue of Magicians, and we are told ‡ that he frequently invited several People to Dine with him, without getting any thing for them; but when his Guests sat down at Table, he forced the Spirits to bring him Meat from all parts, and when it was come he told the Company, Gentlemen, this comes from the Kitchin of the King of France, and this from the Kitchin of the King of Spain, this comes from England, &c. Merlin Coccaie took pleasure ‖ in describing his Enchantments. The Poet Dante (A) adopted the Common Error. John Baccon an English Carmelite, and β the Prince of the Averroists, is more to be credited: He quotes γ Michael Scotus as a great Divine. Pitseus who (B) commends him very much, is also a more credible Author. However it be, 'tis said that this pretended Magician foresaw how he (C) should die, and foretold the place where the Emperor Frederick II. should loose his Life. I shall say something of (D) his Books.

SCULTETUS (Abraham) Professor of Divinity at Heidelberg, and Author of many (E) Books, was Born at Grunberg in Silesia the 24th of August * 1566. and after he had Studied there till the Year 1582, he was sent to Breslaw to make further Improvements. He was quickly recall'd from thence, because his Father, who had lately lost all that he had ζ by the burning of Grunberg, was no longer able to maintain him in a College, and design'd to make him learn a Trade. The Young Man did not like it, and in order to pursue his Studies went in quest of a Tutorship. He found a good one in the House of a Burgo-Master of η Freistad; which gave him an opportunity to hear Abraham θ Bucholcerus Preach. He made a Journey into Poland in the Year 1584, and the Year following went to Gorlitz in Lusatia, where he staid above Two Years, going λ constantly to the publick Lectures, and reading private ones to others. He Acted those two parts in the University of Wittemberg in 1588, and 1589. and then in that of Heidelberg till he was admitted Minister in the Year 1594. He exercised his Ministry, in a † Village of the Palatinate for some Months, and then he was invited

‡ Marcel. [illegible] of the [illegible] fol. pag. 155 [illegible] ann. 1643.

‖ Naudé Apologie des grans hommes ch. 17. pag. m. 496.

β Id. ib.

γ Part 3. sentent. distinct. 13.

* And not 1556 as Freherus theatr. pag. 424 affirms. He says in the following Page that Scultetus died the 24. of October 1625. Aged 59. Years. 'Tis a wrong Calculation.

ζ [illegible]

θ [illegible]

† [illegible] Heidelberg.

---

illustratos emittere & adolescentibus commendare auderes. Hoc, satis scio, nullo modo patri tuo probare posses.

(A) The Poet Dante adopted the Common Error.] These are his Words in the 20th Canto of his Inferno.

Quell' altro, che ne' fianchi è così poco,
Michele Scotto fu, che veramente
Delle Magiche frode seppe il gioco.

(B) Pitseus, who commends him very much.] He (a) says in express Words, that tho' Michael Scotus was accounted a Magician by the Mob and by Ignorant People, wise Men past another Judgment upon him. (1) Prudentum tamen & cordatorum hominum longe aliud fuit judicium, qui potius perspicax ejus in scrutandis rebus abditis admirabantur ingenium, laudabant industriam, quam reprehendendam judicabant curiositatem, inspiciebantque hominis scientiam, non suspicabantur culpam.

(C) Foresaw how he should die, and foretold the place where the Emperor, &c.] This I find in a Commentator upon Dante. Michael Scotus, says he (b), "lived in the Reign of the Emperor Frederick II. "and foretold the place where he should die, which "he said would be Florence. Wherein the said "Emperor was deceived by reason of the Ambi"guity of the Words; for he did not die at Flo"rence, the chief Town of Tuscany, but in a Castle "of Apulia call'd Fiorenzola. That Magician fore"saw that he himself should die by the fall of a "Stone, that should break his Head. Which came "to pass; for one day being at Church bear"headed to Worship the Body and Blood of JESUS "CHRIST, the Rope fastened to the Bell that was "Ringing, threw a stone upon his Head, and imme"diately he thought he should die, which he did "suddenly".

(D) Something of his Books.] He wrote a Treatise about Physiognomy, and a Book containing several Questions upon Sacrobosco's Sphere, and a History of Animals (c). He should have been mention'd by (d) Vossius on Account of the second Book; but that Author says nothing of him. The Treatise about Physiognomy was Written at the Request of the Emperor Frederick II. I have it in Italian: The Title runs thus: Physionomia laqual compilo Maestro Michael Scotto, a prieghi di Federico Romano Imperatore, huomo di gran scienza: & è cosa molto notabile, e da tener secreta però che l'è di grande efficacia, & comprende cose secrete della natura bastantie ad ogni Astrologo: & è diviso in tre parti. It was Printed at Venice per Marchio Sessa, in 1533. 'Tis a Book in 8. consisting of seven Sheets.

(E) And Author of many Books.] I have said in the Text of this Article that he taught Scholars in his Lodgings being still a Scholar. The Lectures he Read to them upon Morality and the Sphere at Heidelberg, occasion'd the Printing of a Book, that was explain'd in some illustrious Schools. (e) In eadem Scholâ meâ privatâ Auditoribus petentibus doctrinam Morum & Siderum explicabam; unde mihi Ethicorum libri duo, Sphæricorum libri tres confecti, qui non ita multò post publicati, & in aliquot Illustribus Scholis fuerunt enarrati. Samuel Huberus being call'd to Wittemberg, in the Year 1593, made an Oration de dissidiis in religione. Scultetus confuted it, without putting his Name to his Confutation. (f) Scholia & Notas in illam sed sine nomine edidi, in quibus homini crassos errores in Logicâ, crassiores in Grammaticâ, crassissimos in Theologiâ commonstro. He composed at the same time, 1. an Analysis of the Works of the Fathers, which was Printed some Years after, and Intitled (g) Medulla Patrum. 2. An Isagoge Historica in V. T. libros, together with an Analysis of Herodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon, Polybius, Dionysius Halicarnassæus, &c. He lost that Work and several others after the Battle of Prague, and particularly the History of the Reformation (h). He took a Journey into Silesia in 1594, and returning to Heidelberg he went thro' Gorlitz, (i) where he made a Funeral Oration for Laurentius Ludovicus, which was Printed, and afterwards inserted by Melchior Adam in his lives of the Philosophers. This Laurence had been (k) Melancthon's Scholar, and Principal of a College at Gorlitz. Martin Mylius, who succeeded him, (l) desired Scultetus to pay that Duty to his old Master. Scultetus Publish'd (m) in 1611. an Exposition of the Gospels for the Sunday, which was Translated out of German into several Languages, and put into the (n) Index librorum prohibitorum at Rome. He Publish'd two Sermons he had Preach'd in the Synod of Dort, two other Sermons Preach'd by him at Heidelberg in the secular Year of the Reformation, and that which he had Preach'd at Prague against Idols. Take notice that he did not lose all his Annals of the Reformation; for he Publish'd the two first Decads before he went into Bohemia with the Elector his Master. I find that he wrote Idea concionum in Esaiam, Epistolas D. Pauli ad Romanos & Hebræos & Psalmos Davidis, & observationes Grammaticæ, Logicæ, Historicæ, & Theologicæ in historiam Jesu Christi nati, educati, baptizati & tentati, & in historiam concionum & miraculorum Jesu Christi, & de precatione tractatio logica & Theologica, & Joannes Baptista logice descriptus

(a) Naudé Apolog. des grans hommes chap. 17. pag. 498.

(1) Pitseus 1. volum. de rebus Anglicis.

(b) Grangier in his French Commentary upon Dante's Inferno pag. 254, 255.

(c) See Naudé ubi supra. pag. 496.

(d) Vossius de scient. Mathem.

(e) Scultetus in narrat. apologetica de curriculo vitæ pag. 21.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) That Work contains [illegible] Parts, which came out one after another.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 21.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 16.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 28.

(m) Id. ib. pag. [illegible]

(n) Id. ib. pag. [illegible] It was [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] 1613.

ected by the Elector Palatin to be one of his Preachers. I ſhall ſpeak of (B) a Conference he had with Samuel Huberus. He was appointed Miniſter of St. Francis's Church at Heidelberg in 1608. And two Years after he was admitted into the Eccleſiaſtical Senate. He was ſeveral times employed to viſit the Churches and Schools of the Palatinate; and notwithſtanding thoſe Avocations, he wrote ſome Books which requir'd great Labour. He follow'd the Prince of Anhalt into the War of Juliers in 1615, and ſettled Eccleſiaſtical Affairs in thoſe parts, with great Prudence and Vigilance. He attended the Prince Palatin Frederick V. in his Journey into England, in the Year 1612, and got himſelf acquainted with the moſt Learned Men of that Country. He went to the Court of Brandenburg, in 1614. the Elector John Sigiſmund, who was ready to renounce Lutheraniſm, having ſent for him to conſult him about it. He † very well performed the Commiſſions that were given him in ſuch a juncture. Being return'd to Heidelberg, he accepted the Office of Court Preacher, having very good Reaſons for it; but he laid it down in 1618, being appointed Profeſſor of Divinity. He was ſoon after deputed to the Synod of Dort, and endeavoured at firſt to reconcile the contending Parties; but perceiving that it was in vain, he ſtoutly maintain'd the Doctrines of the Calviniſts. He Preach'd at Francfort the Year following, during the ſitting of the Electoral Diet; for his Maſter appointed him Preacher to the Deputies he ſent thither. He follow'd that Prince into Bohemia, and being gone into Sileſia, after the fatal Battle of Prague, he reſolved to return to Heidelberg, in order to exerciſe the Functions of a Profeſſor. He was no ſooner arriv'd there, but all Academical Exerciſes ceaſed: The Enemies being near the Gates, moſt Profeſſors fled away. He retired to Bretten, and then to Schorndorf, in the Dutchy of Wirtemberg, from whence he went to Embden, in Auguſt 1622. The King of Bohemia, his Maſter, approv'd that the City of Embden ſhould offer him a Miniſter's place. Scultetus * accepted of it, but he did not continue long in it, for he died the 24th of October || 1625. He was Married (C) three times, and left but one Daughter behind him. No Man was ever (D) more cruelly ſlandered by his Enemies.

† Profectus ſum Berlinum ibique [illegible] egi, prout [illegible] ad mentem uſque [illegible] et. II. 16

* Taken from a Book of Abraham Scultetus intitl'd, de curriculo vitæ.... Narratio Apologetica, Printed at Embden 1625. in 4to.

|| Paul Freher. in Theatr. pag. 425. but according to Witte in his Diarium it was in 1624.

ſcriptus. See (a) Freherus's Theatrum. He had a hand in the Greek and Latin (b) Edition of St. Athanaſius, and of the Councils of Nice and Epheſus; to which, he added a ſhort Hiſtory of the Seven Univerſal Councils, and his Tranſlation of Twenty Greek Sermons (c). I ſhall ſay nothing of his German Books (d) againſt a Jeſuit of Mentz, againſt M. de Neer's Apoſtacy, and againſt the Confeſſion of Cologne, &c. See again Freherus's Theatrum.

(B) A Conference he had with Samuel Huberus.] In the Year 1606 he was ſent to Newſtad to confer with a (e) Mathematician, who had been employ'd to Finiſh and Publiſh a (f) Book of Rheticus, and who put off from day to day the Publication of that Work. He went in the Name of the great Council, to Diſcourſe with him about what was to be done to make an end of that Edition. He found Samuel Huberus at Spire, in the Inn where he lay. That Man was preparing a Book for the next Francfort Fair, and no ſooner knew who Scultetus was, but he propoſed to him a Diſpute about Controverſies in Religion: It was accepted, and laſted from Nine a Clock in the Morning 'till Three in the Afternoon, in the preſence of the Lutheran Miniſters. It ran upon the Doctrine of Predeſtination (g). Scultetus came off (h) at laſt by an Argument, which was a kind of a perſonal Jeſt. I'll prove to you, ſaid he to Huberus, that you don't belong to the true Church: She is certainly among the Reformed, or among the Lutherans, or among the Roman Catholicks. But you have left the Communion of the Reformed, you have been expell'd from that of the Lutherans, and you write againſt the Roman; therefore, &c. The Diſpute went on quietly, for the two chief qualities of a good Diſputant met in Huberus; he patiently heard his Antagoniſts, tho' never ſo prolix, and meekly bore their hard words. (i) Acta & peracta ſunt omnia tranquillè: Neque enim diſſimulandum eſt: quæ duæ virtutes in Diſputatore primæ ſunt, eas ambas me in Hubero deprehendiſſe, patientiam adverſarium prolixè ſua explicantem audiendi, & lenitatem etiam aſperè dicta preferendi. He maintain'd (k) that all Men are Elected, and perplexed Hunnius, who denied the Election of ſome Perſons. (l) Primum laudo Huberi ratiocinationem qua Ægidium Hunnium Witembergæ conſtrinxerat, qui nec Huberi generalem, nec Reformatorum ſpecialem electionem agnoſcere voluit.

(C) He was Married three times, and left but one Daughter behind him.] His Firſt Wife was Catherine Bergia, whom he Married at Heidelberg in November 1594 (m). He loſt her the 25th of March 1605, (n) and continued ſixteen Months a Widower, (o) being ſo ſickly, that he thought his Health required he ſhould have ſome Body to take care of it. He therefore Married Catherine Lorichia the Widow of Dr. Rhodingus, and having loſt her the 20th of October 1607, he Married another Widow the 18th of July 1608 (p), by whom he had a Daughter, the 1ſt of December (q) 1609, who, together with her Mother, were the Companions (r) of his Exile at Embden, in the Year 1624.

(D) No Man was ever more cruelly ſlander'd by his Enemies.] He expreſſes himſelf thus in his Narratio Apologetica. Dentatis ſcriptis, infamibus Theſibus, contumelioſis anagrammatiſmis, picturis, cantilenis, in nomen, in famam, in doctrinam meam involarunt, perindeque omnis generis convitiis in me debacchati ſunt, ac ſi ego unus eſſem qui omnem Iſraelem turbarim & ſolem, quod dicitur, ex univerſo mundo ſuſtulerim. I can't tell whether there was any ground for thoſe Slanders, but I believe the free acceſs he had to Princes, made him odious to ſeveral People; and that the uneaſineſs of ſome, and the joy of others, after the Misfortune of the Elector Palatin in Bohemia, brought to light the ill effects of Envy. The Court Preacher was attacked when thought to be under Diſgrace, and the Ice being once broke, every body fell upon him; the Firſt Satyrs made way for others; it was like a Snow-ball that gathers more and more. He (s) was accuſed of having adviſed the Elector Palatin to accept the Crown of Bohemia: The Miſeries that followed that Enterpriſe were charged upon him; it was objected to him, that inſtead of diſcharging the Duties of his Profeſſorſhip at Heidelberg, he had acted the part of an Intriguing Man, and an Iconoclaſt in Bohemia; and that he ſhew'd himſelf an Atheiſt by approving the Union of the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia: he was blamed for having Perſecuted the Catholicks, the Lutherans and the Unitarians; and it was given out that he had loſt his Maſter's Favour, and all his Employments, after the Battle of Prague. This was diſperſed by Word of Mouth, and

(a) Freher, theatr. pag. 425.
(b) Printed for Commelin 1601.
(c) Scultet. ubi ſupra pag. 35.
(d) Id. ib. pag 8..
(e) Call'd L. Valentinus Ot-ho.
(f) I think ...ma ca-non triangulorum. See Voſſius de ſci... Ma-them. pag. ...
(g) Taken from Scultetus ubi ſupra pag 32,33.
(h) Tandem abſolvi me argumento in ſpeciem quidem ſed ...ipſa minime jocoſo, quo docui Huberum non eſſe Eccle... veræ filium. Id. ib. pag. 33. (i) Id. ib. (k) See the ...mark D in the Article Hunnius.
(l) Id. ib.
(m) Scultet. ubi ſupra p. 29.
(n) Id. ib. pag. 44.
(o) In viduitate ſedecim menſes vixi, quibus corpuſculum meum cùm non uno morbo attentaretur, valetudinis curatricem quæſivi. Id. ibid.
(p) Id. ib. pag. 45.
(q) Id: ib: pag. 47.
(r) Id. pag. 23. 45.
(s) Id. ib. pag. 76, 77

nemies. I have ſaid in another * place, that he did not approve that the Proteſtants ſhould write one againſt another. What he obſerves in Anſwer to a Man, who accuſed him of having raiſed a (E) Sacramental War in the Palatinate, is a remarkable thing. I could eaſily believe he would have made a better Apology for himſelf, as to his being accuſed of Inducing the King, his Maſter to accept and in writing in the Courts of Princes, and in the Univerſities and Towns. He was four Years without juſtifying himſelf; but at laſt he took Pen in hand for his vindication, in imitation of St. Baſil. (a) Hæc dicta, ſcripta, decantata per Regum, per Principum aulas, per Academias, per urbes & oppida: Quæ niſi reprimerem, famæ meæ prodigus jure merito haberer. Quod ſi quis quærat: Cur in quartum annum reſponſum, ad tam atroces calumnias diſtulerim? is hoc à me audiat: imitatum me fuiſſe Baſilium illum Magnum, qui cum undique appeteretur, adeò perturbatus fuit, ut non veritus ſit ſcribere Epiſtolâ ſeptuageſimâ nonâ, parum aliquando abfuiſſe, quin de omnium hominum fide & ſinceritate dubitaret: indixit autem ſibi ipſi ſilentium in tertium uſque annum, ne quid præcipitanter effunderet: poſtea varias apologias texuit. Obſerve, by the by, that thoſe Words of St. Baſil are wonderful. Men are ſo eaſily prepoſſeſt by ill Reports, or ſo blindly adapt their Actions to the Intereſts of Calumniators, that there is ſometimes ground to believe that Equity and Uprightneſs are wholly baniſh'd from this World. Scultetus (b) Anſwers, 1. That he had no hand in the deliberation whether the Elector Palatin ſhould accept the Crown of Bohemia; only he Confeſſes that he preach'd a Sermon (c) wherein he Congratulated him for accepting the Offer of the Bohemians; and encouraged him by the words of the Lord, to behave himſelf valiantly in that Enterprize. 2. That Frederick Balduinus, Profeſſor of Divinity at Wittemberg, who (d) blamed him for leaving his Church and his Profeſſorſhip, had a Collegue who went to preach in the Country of Brandenburg contrary to the Prince's Edicts. 'Tis approving at home what one condemns abroad, tho' the Domeſtick Action be much more inexcuſable than that of the Foreigner; for, adds Scultetus, I follow'd my Elector's Orders with the Conſent of the Univerſity. (e) Magnum crimen profectò, ac indubiè, Balduino judice, majus longè eo, cui D. Meiſnerus Balduini collega obnoxius: cui è Saxoniâ in Marchiam ire, contra Sereniſſ. Electoris Brandeburgici edictum, in Gynæceum Electorale irrepere, ibidem concionari nulla religio fuit. Hæc, quæ nullo colore defendi poſſunt, probat domi Balduinus: foris autem in me culpat: quòd Principem meum, cujus in ſervitio concionatorio adhuc vivebam, volentem, jubentem, conſentiente Academiâ, in Boëmiam ſequutus ſum. 3. That (f) the New King of Bohemia promiſed to all his Subjects a free exerciſe of their Religion, and kept his Word to them; that he took only for his own uſe, the Church of the Citadel of Prague, out of which he removed all the Idols. Scultetus owns that he adviſed him to it, and could not be at reſt till he had obtained it. He maintains that he acted in that reſpect like a good Chriſtian. He ſays that as ſoon as the Sermon he had preach'd upon that Subject, came to be Publiſh'd, the Lutherans and the Papiſts made a dreadful noiſe every where, which was ſuppreſt by a Learned Anſwer of Theophilus Moſanus. 4. That when he ſaid, (g) in his Sermon upon the Alliance renewed between Bohemia and Hungary the 15th of April 1620. that this Confederacy was acceptable to God, ſince all thoſe who entred upon it profeſt the ſame Faith; he only meant the Reformed and the Lutherans, and not the Papiſts, Anabaptiſts and Arians. He complains (h) that (i) Luke Oſiander having read that Sermon, openly (k) maintain'd in a publick Diſputation, that Scultetus was an Atheiſt, ſince he made no difference between Lutheraniſm, Calviniſm and Popery. 5. He Proteſts that he never excited the King his Maſter to Perſecute the Papiſts and the Lutherans, and that they have not been Perſecuted. (l) Circumferuntur varii libelli de Reformatione Boëmicâ, partim Latinâ, partim Germanicâ linguâ ſcripti: quibus ſi fides habenda; in Boëmiâ, me inſtigatore, Pontificii duriter afflicti: Lutherani magno numero ejecti: ipſi proceres Regni de libertate religionis ſuæ ſunt periclitati. He refers the Reader (m) to a German Book, wherein it was plainly made out, That this Perſecution was a Chimerical thing; and takes advantage (n) of the Contradictions of thoſe, who had mention'd that Revolution of Bohemia in their Writings. He ſpeaks (o) of a Letter handed about under the Suppoſititious Name of a Man of Antwerp, wherein he was deſired to recommend the Doctrine of Ubiquity to the King his Maſter. He does not deny (p) that being conſulted about the Reformation of the Churches immediately ſubject to the King, he Anſwer'd, That the King's Religion might be Eſtabliſh'd in 'em, ſince the People deſir'd it, and the Prieſts were not qualify'd to explain the Scripture. 6. He ſhews, that after the Battle of Prague, he did not loſe his Maſter's Favour, as his Enemies gave out. In order to colour that Lie, they invented ſeveral Reaſons of his Diſgrace, ſo far as to Accuſe him of a heinous Crime. (q) Unde haud difficulter colligere eſt cujus ſpiritus filii fuerint: qui, me Uratiſlaviâ vix digreſſo, diſſeminare hoc in orbem Germaniæ non dubitarunt: me omni gratiâ Regis excidiſſe; officio motum eſſe. Et ut res colorem haberet; pro ſuâ quiſquam libidine cauſas finxit: alius, conſilia mea de ſuſcipiendo regno Boemico: alius, demolitionem ſtatuarum & idolorum Pragenſium: alius (quod Deus æternùm averruncaſſit) atrox aliquod crimen.

The Libellers Perſecuted him in his very Exile. He was inform'd from good hands, (r) in the Year 1624, that the Secretary of a certain Prince had affirm'd in the Lower Saxony, and even at the Court of the King of Sweden, that Scultetus had departed this Life towards the latter end of the Year 1623. three days after he had Publiſh'd a Book full of Abſurd and Heterodox Opinions, which moved the Magiſtrates of Embden to ſuppreſs it. Some body writ into the Country of Brandenburg that he had fore-ſeen it long ago: and yet there never was any ſuch Book. A Dutch Piece was Publiſh'd the Year following, which contain'd a Deſcription of the Devaſtations made in Eaſt Frieſland by Mansfeld's Troops. The Author having vented his Spleen againſt the States General, and ſome Illuſtrious Perſons, attack'd Scultetus particularly, and accuſed him of having thanked God, in the Pulpit, for the Irruption of thoſe Troops. And yet it was a notorious thing, that he had only thank'd him for the Retreat of thoſe furious Soldiers; which was Atteſted in a Book written to confute that Libel.

I ſhall make no Excuſe for the length of this Remark, being perſuaded that all Men of Senſe will grant that there are no Collections of greater uſe than thoſe which ſhew the Impudence of Libellers, and the Credulity of thoſe who read their Books. It is of great concern for the Publick good, to make it appear by many plain Inſtances, that Paſſionate Men will vent any Lyes againſt the Honour of their Neighbours, and that the People will give Credit to them. Tho' you ſhew the Abſurdity and Contradictions of thoſe Satyrical Writers, they perſiſt in their Boldneſs, and new Calumniators will ſet up again. Tho' you put to the Bluſh thoſe, who have been ſo raſh and ſo ſilly, as to believe a Thouſand Fabulous Stories maliciouſly and groſly Forged, they'll proſtitute their Belief the very next Day. And therefore one can never Collect too many things like thoſe which I have Compiled.

Take notice that I don't pretend to juſtify Scultetus in all reſpects. I make no doubt, that he was guilty of the Fault, which a Court Divine does ſeldom avoid. I fancy he concern'd himſelf too much with Political Affairs, and mention'd too often the Temporal Intereſts in his Sermons. He was ſomewhat haſty in adviſing the deſtruction of Images, not conſidering that his Maſter was not ſufficiently ſettled upon his Throne to undertake ſuch an Innovation. But how can it be help'd? Men are blinded by the firſt Favours of Fortune; they fancy, that ſince the Kingdom of God is concern'd in the caſe, a good Succeſs will be attended with further Succeſſes, as in the time of Joſhua, and that there is nothing like making haſte.

(E) Of having raiſed a Sacramental War in the Palatinate.] Here follow ſome further Slanders againſt Scultetus, which he rejects as horrid Lies. A certain Apoſtate, ſays he (s), has given out, that

---

* In the Article Piſtorius.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 77.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Pro concione Majeſtati ipſius gratulatus, illamque verbis Domini è Joſuâ petitis ad id, quod ſuſceperat fortiter agendum, cohortatus ſum. Id. ibid. pag. 78.

(d) In libello quodam Germanico, quem de idolis ſcripſit. πολυπραγμοσύνης damnat, qui Eccleſiæ & Academiæ Palatinæ obligatus, in Boemiam cum Rege meo profectus ſim. Id. ib.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 78.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 81.

(h) Id, ib. pag. 83.

(i) Profeſſor of Divinity at Tubingen, and Chancellor of the Univerſity.

(k) Quibus fundamentis jactis Oſiander publicis theſibus me ATHEUM proclamat. Id. ibid.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 86.

(m) Id ib.

(n) Id. ib. pag. 87.

(o) Id. ib. pag. [illegible]

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib. pag. 93.

(r) Id. ib. pag. 99.

(s) Sc

ib. pag

cept the Crown of Bohemia, if that Enterpriſe had proved ſucceſsful. In ſuch a caſe there had been no Neceſſity for him (F) to deny the Fact, he would have been bleſt and admir'd for his Prudence: Men do commonly judge of things by the Event.

SEBONDE † (Raymundus) Profeſſor of (A) Phyſick, Philoſophy and Divinity at Toulouſe in the XVth. Century, was a Native of Barcelona. He was eſteem'd for his Parts and Learning, and wrote ſome Books, whereof the moſt conſiderable is that which is Intitl'd, Theologia naturalis, ſive Liber creaturarum. 'Tis likely, that Book does not favour of the Notions of a Vulgar and pre-poſſeſt Author, ſince Montagne ſet a great (B) value upon it. He Tranſlated it (C) into French, and that ‡ excited a Sacramental War in the Palatinate, in the Year 1603. No body ever heard of ſuch a War, but only of a little Diſpute about Euchariſtical Phraſes, between the Profeſſors of the Univerſity, and the Miniſters of the Church. 'Tis well known, continues he, that the Doctrine of the Sacraments was purged from the Romiſh Idolatry, and cleared from Scholaſtical Phraſes by Zuinglius and Oecolampadius; and that the Loſs which the Canton of Zurich ſuſtain'd in the Fight, wherein Zuinglius was kill'd, broke the League lately concluded between ſome Cantons of Swiſſerland, the City of Strasburg, and the Landgrave of Heſſe. Whereupon Martin Bucer being too timorous, was afraid that the whole Party would ſink, unleſs he ſtrengthned, with a new Alliance, the Towns of the Upper Germany, and particularly Strasburg, where he taught. He caſt his Eye upon the Potent Duke of Saxony, and the better to gain him, he endeavour'd to make every body believe that Luther's and Zuinglius's Opinions concerning the Lord's Supper, were the ſame in the main, and that a meer Diſpute about Words had prevented their Agreement. He further ſaid, that it was better to uſe Luther's than Zuinglius's Expreſſions, becauſe the latter ſpoke too meanly of the Euchariſt, and the other in a ſublime manner. He inſpired the ſame Thoughts into Calvin (a), who had fled from France to Strasburg. This Intrigue of Bucer brought in the Lutheran Expreſſions into the Towns of the Upper Germany, eſpecially after the diſmal Concordate of Wittemberg. The Divines, who taught in Saxony under the Elector Chriſtian, uſed themſelves to thoſe Phraſes of Conſubſtantiation, phraſibus illis ſynuſiaſticis aſſueverant; ſo that being expell'd after that Prince's Death, and retiring into the Palatinate, they took the Miniſters, who uſed Zuinglius's Expreſſions in that Country, to be Heterodox: Which occaſion'd a Diſſention; but it was ſo happily and ſo quickly ſuppreſs'd, that from that time the Divines of the Univerſity, and others, lived with a better Underſtanding. The Apoſtate had given out, That the Elector Palatin cauſed a Book, written upon that Quarrel, to be Burnt. Scultetus (b) calls it a Lie. One may very well preſume, that he ſpeaks Truth; for tho' it be a great piece of Boldneſs, to affirm that a Prince has cauſed a Book to be Condemn'd, when 'tis Falſe; 'tis ſtill a greater piece of Impudence to deny it, when it is True.

A Man well acquainted with the Secret Hiſtory of the Church, might inform us that Journies and Conferences about Religion are moſt times undertaken for a Temporal Concern. Bucer's Conduct affords an Inſtance of it: I have mention'd another like it taken from Scultetus in the Article of Beza (c). We are told that Bucer repented of having mediated the Formulary (d) of the Concord. (e) Bucerus dixit ſe pœnas dare quod cauſam publicam homo privatus voluiſſet componere, & tam multa prava dogmata conciliare. Peter Martyr, who heard him ſay ſo in England, told Bullinger of it; Daniel Toſſanus had it from Bullinger, and Pezelius from Daniel Toſſanus, in the preſence of Scultetus, who inſerted it in the Hiſtory of his Life.

(F) In ſuch a caſe there had been no Neceſſity for him to deny the Fact.] Some ſevere, and ſometimes too moroſe Criticks, take delight in exclaiming againſt Preachers, who encourage others to make War, without conſidering that they are the Miniſters of the Prince of Peace. A Preacher will patiently bear ſuch a Cenſure when the War proves very ſucceſsful: but ſince the Enterprize of the Elector Palatin, Frederick V. was attended with great Misfortunes; it was an unpleaſant thing for a Church-man to be told, in a reproachful manner, that he had engaged him in it. If a Divine Preaching before him, had exhorted him to undertake that War, alledging the moſt proper Texts of the Scripture, and particularly theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, (f) Accingere gladio tuo ſuper femur tuum potentiſſime, &c. he would have been Proud of it, if the new King, well ſettled upon the Throne of Bohemia, had ſecured the Peace of Germany, and Liberty of Conſcience from the ill Deſigns of the Court of Vienna. But that Enterprize prov'd Unfortunate, and then no body was willing to confeſs he had adviſed it: ſo much Men are afraid of the wrong cuſtom of judging of things by the Event. I call it wrong; for on a Thouſand Occaſions, there is more Prudence in thoſe who do not Succeed, than in thoſe who have a good Succeſs. How many ill-concerted Enterpriſes have proved Succeſsful? And how many well laid Deſigns have proved Fatal? Nay, it frequently falls out, that a great Deſign carried on according to the beſt Rules of Policy, ſucceeds by unforeſeen means, and ſuch as no body depended upon. However it be, the Poſture of Affairs was ſuch in Germany, when endeavours where uſed to beſtow a Crown upon the Elector Palatin, that Prudence required one ſhould venture a great deal. By runing no hazard, there was ground to fear a Slavery, which includes all ſorts of Miſery under the Popiſh Domination; but if the Revolution of Bohemia had been well ſupported, the Proteſtants had been uppermoſt. And therefore it was particularly, by reaſon of his Profeſſion, that Scultetus ſhould have been aſhamed if he had given ſuch Advices.

(A) Profeſſor of Phyſick, &c.] I follow M. de Mauſſac, who gives him all thoſe Titles in his Prolegomena upon Raymund Martini. Sciendum eſt, ſays he, Raymundum Sebonde nec Dominicanum, nec in Hebraicis aliiſque linguis Orientalibus valde verſatum fuiſſe, quamvis eum ex Judæo Chriſtianum nobis repreſentet Michael à Monte toto capite Apologiæ ——— Sed tantum Hiſpanum & Barcinonenſem atque in Academia Toloſana Medicinæ Profeſſorem, Philoſophiæ, ſacræque ſcientiæ, eoque gradu illic inſignitum. I find in the Abridgment of Geſner's Bibliotheque the Title of a Book (g), which is a Dialogue, inter Raimundum Sebundium Artium, Medicinæ ac Theologiæ Profeſſorem & Dominicum Seminiverbium. I have juſt now peruſed that Apology for Sebonde, to know whether the Author repreſents him as a Jew converted to Chriſtianity, and I have not been ſo lucky as to find any thing about it; but becauſe I have not read every Line of it, I don't pretend to deny in all reſpects what M. de Mauſſac affirms. I ſhall only ſay that Montagne ſays little of Sebonde in that long Apology, except in the beginning. Note, that Geſner (h) calls him Sebeyde, and ſays in the Margin, he is alſo call'd Sabunde. The Title prefixed to the Prologue of the Liber creaturarum in the Strasburg Edition 1496. has this laſt Name: Compoſitus a venerabili viro magiſtro Raymundo de Sabunde in artibus & medicina doctore, & in ſacra pagina egregio Profeſſore.

(B) Set a great value upon it.] See the following Remark, and the Remark D.

(C) He Tranſlated it into French.] I ſhall relate the Hiſtory of that Tranſlation: It may be of ſome uſe to know Sebonde. " (i) Peter Brunel (k), ſays the " Tranſlator, a Man accounted very Learned in his " time, having been for ſome time at Montagne in my " Father's Company, with ſome other perſons of his " Character, preſented him at his departure with " a Book, Intitled, Theologia naturalis, ſive liber " creaturarum Magiſtri Raymondi de Sebonde. And " becauſe the Italian and Spaniſh Languages were " very familiar to my Father, and that Book is " written,

† See the end of the Remark A.

(a) Hence it was, probably, that Calvin in his Catechiſm and elſewhere, made uſe of Phraſes, which ſeem to imply a ſubſtantial preſence of the Body of our Lord.

(b) Eſſe … tem vel … me, vel … aliis … iniſtris … alatinis, … ab omnibus con… dim … iptum … quod … er hac … publica- … quod … eniſſimi … ctoris … Vul- … fue- … conſe- … um; … ego … ſter … , … id … eratus … ſtata … lanter … mat. … ibid. … , 41. Re… M. That … ſay, of … tem- … in … d. ib. … 25.

(f) Pſalm 45.

(g) The ſame with Viola animæ.

(h) Geſner. in Bibliotheca.

(i) Montagne, Eſſays B. 2. ch. 12. p. m. 184.

(k) It ſhould be Bunel.

and made an Apology for it (D), which is the longeſt Chapter of his Eſſays. Few People have known exactly in what time Sebonde lived, and who he was. Montagne wonders how ſuch an Author could remain in ſo great an Obſcurity: All that we know of him, ſays he †, is that he was a Spaniard, and profeſt Phyſick at Toulouſe about Two Hundred Years ago. Scaliger ſays in a Letter * written in 1606, that Sebonde lived at Toulouſe Two Hundred and Thirty Years before, or thereabouts. Which does not well agree with Trithemius β, who places the Death of this Phyſician in the Year 1432. I have obſerved in another γ place, the other miſtakes of Scaliger concerning that Man. He took him to be a Dominican Monk, and aſcribed to him a Book againſt the Jews, Intitled, Pugio fidei, of which Raymund Martini is the Author. Our Sebonde was not very well known to Gabriel Naudæus, a Man of a Prodigious Memory, and who had a vaſt knowledge of Books and Manuſcripts; for || ſpeaking of what Scaliger ſays concerning Galatinus and Sebonde, he does not obſerve any fault in it. What concerns the other (E) Writings of our Sebonde may be ſeen in a Remark.

SEDULIUS (CAIUS CÆLIUS, or CÆCILIUS) Flouriſh'd (A) in the Vth Century. He was ‡ a Prieſt, and wrote a Poem, Intitled, Paſchale Carmen, and a Book in Proſe upon the ſame ſubject, Intitled, Paſchale Opus. Thoſe

"written in a kind of Spaniſh with Latin Terminations, he hoped my Father might make uſe of it with a little help, and recommended it to him as a Book very uſeful, and ſuited to the time when he gave it him, which was when the New Doctrine of Luther began to be in Vogue. —— (a) My Father, ſome Days before he died, having lighted by chance upon that Book, under a heap of uſeleſs Papers, ordered me to Tranſlate it into French. 'Tis an eaſy task to Tranſlate ſuch Authors, when there is little to do but to repreſent the Matter; but when a Book is written with great Politeneſs and Elegancy, the Tranſlation of it is a difficult Undertaking, eſpecially into a Language that has not the ſame force. It was a very ſtrange and new Employment for me; but being then at leiſure, and willing to obey the beſt Father that ever was, I did my beſt to compaſs it; which Pleaſed him wonderfully, and he ordered the Tranſlation to be Printed, which was executed after her Death". La Croix du Maine places that Impreſſion in the Year 1569. Thoſe Dialogues (b) concerning the Nature of Man (ſo he Intitles the Book of Raymond Sebonde, Tranſlated by Montagne) have been Printed at Paris for Gabriel Buon, in 1569, and for Giles Gourbin in the ſame Year. Du Verdier (c) does not mention the ſame Title, nor ſo ancient an Edition. Theſe are his words: Le livre des creatures. Raymond Sebon is the Author of it: That Book contains Three Hundred and Thirty Chapters, and was Printed at Paris in 8. for Giles Gourbin in 1581. I have ſeen, continues he, another Tranſlation of the ſame Book in very Old French. Theſe laſt words ſhew he does not mean John Martin's Tranſlation (d) Publiſh'd in 1551. There is another reaſon for it, viz. That John Martin and Montagne did not Tranſlate the ſame Book. The Book Tranſlated by John Martin contains 7 Dialogues. But the Book Tranſlated by Montagne is not written by way of a Dialogue: It is divided into Three Hundred and Thirty Chapters, as du Verdier obſerves; and 'tis certain there is but one Man, who ſpeaks in the Book, that contains Three Hundred and Thirty Chapters. From whence we may infer that La Croix du Maine does not well quote the Title of Montagne's Tranſlation, and that the Dialogues of Sebonde are the ſame Book with the Theologia Naturalis; for it appears from the very Title of the Tranſlation that it contains the ſame things. The Title runs thus: (e) La Theologie naturelle de Raymond Sebond compriſe en ſept dialogues intitulez autrement, de la nature de l'homme. See hereafter the Titles of the Books of that Doctor.

(D) He made an Apology for it.] He himſelf (f) tells us what moved him to it. "I thought the Notions of that Author were very fine, the Contexture of his Diſcourſe very cloſe, and his Deſign very pious. And becauſe many People read that Book, and particularly the Ladies, to whom we ought to be more Serviceable, I have often had occaſion to help 'em, by anſwering two main Objections raiſed againſt that Author. His deſign is Noble and Bold, for he pretends to prove all the Doctrines of the Chriſtian Religion by Philoſophical Arguments". This occaſion'd the two Objections which Montagne undertook to Anſwer. Some ſaid (g) that the Chriſtians prejudice themſelves by pretending to build their belief upon Humane Arguments, ſince it is the work of Faith, and of Divine Grace. Others ſaid (h) that Sebonde's Arguments were weak and unfit to prove his Aſſertion, and undertook to confute 'em eaſily. Montagne thought himſelf obliged to Anſwer (i) the former gently and reſpectfully, becauſe it ſeem'd to him that there was a Pious Zeal in their Objection: But, ſays he (k), the others ought to be handled more roughly, for they are more Dangerous and Malicious than the firſt. The Method he took, was to deprive 'em of the weak Arms of their Reaſon, by ſhewing them the Emptineſs and Ignorance of Men, and the Divine Majeſty, to which alone belongs Knowledge. Thoſe, who know Montagnes's Character, may eaſily gueſs that he gave himſelf a large ſcope. The judgment he makes of the Arguments alledged by his Author, is too edifying not to be inſerted in this place. To ſpeak the Truth, ſays he (l), I find, he proves the Doctrines of Chriſtianity by natural Reaſon, ſo ſucceſsfully, that I think no body can go farther than he upon that Subject, and that none did ever equal him —— I ask'd formerly Hadrian Turnebus, a very knowing Man, what that Book was: He anſwered, that he thought it might be a Quinteſſence drawn out of Thomas Aquinas; and indeed that vaſt Genius, full of Learning, and of an admirable ſubtilty, was the only Man capable of ſuch Notions —— I know, Montague goes on (m), a Man of Note bred up a Scholar, who confeſt to me, that he had been reclaim'd from his Unbelief, by Sebonde's Arguments. Every body has not ſo good an Opinion of that Book as Montagne. Father Theophilus Raynaud (n) ſpeaks of it with contempt; and a Lutheran (o) Profeſſor laugh'd at Comenius, for ſaying (p) that Sebonde has ſo demonſtratively prov'd whatever concerns the Knowledge and Glory of God, and the Knowledge and Salvation of Man, that nothing can be alledged againſt it. That Profeſſor maintains that in many things, which are not very obſure, that Spaniard argues pitifully, and he alledges, as an Inſtance of it, the Explication of the Cauſes, which produce Diſcord among Men.

(E) The other Writings of our Sebonde.] His other Works are (q) Quæſtiones diſputatæ. Viola animæ per modum dialogi de hominis natura tractans ad cognoſcendum ſe, Deum & hominem, & omne debitum quo Deo obligatur & proximo. Coloniæ apud Henricum Quentel 1501. in 4to. The Dialogues de Natura Hominis, Printed at Lyons in 1568, are probably the ſame Book with the Viola Animæ; the latter differs from the Theologia Naturalis, only as to the Method. Which clearly appears from the bare Conſideration of the following Title: Theologia naturalis, ſive liber Creaturarum, ſpecialiter de homine & de natura ejus in quantum homo, & de his quæ ſunt ei neceſſaria ad cognoſcendum ſe ipſum & deum, & omne debitum ad quod homo tenetur & obligatur tam Deo quam proximo. The Author was one of thoſe Men, who, when they have Publiſh'd a Book which pleaſes them, or for which they are eſteem'd, produce it from time to time under different ſhapes, like thoſe Cooks, who ſerve the ſame Meat dreſt ſeveral ways. Every Body that I know of, ſays, that the firſt Edition of the Theologia Naturalis is that of Paris 1509; but I have one of Strasburg in Folio, Printed in a Gothick Letter, in the Year 1496.

(A) Flouriſhed in the Vth Century.] Some think he

---

† Eſſays, l. 2. ch. 12. p. 158. of the 3. tome, Par. 1659. in 12.

* 'Tis the 211.

β See Mauſſac's Prolegomena prefixed to the Pugio fidei.

γ In the Remark C of the Article Martini.

|| Naudæus in Bibl. Biogr. Polit.

‡ See the Remark C towards the end.

(a) Ibid. pag. 185.

(b) Bibliot. pag. 329.

(c) Bibliot. pag. 872. upon the word Michael de Montagne.

(d) Ibid. pag. 720.

(e) Id. id.

(f) Montagne ubi ſupra pag. 186.

(g) Ibid. pag. 187.

(h) Ibid. pag. 187.

(i) Pag. 187.

(k) Pag. 201.

(l) Pag. 186.

(m) Pag. 201.

(n) Prolegomen. Theolog. nat. n.

(o) Jacob Thomaſius, Præfat. 77. Leipſ. 1681.

(p) Comenius, de uno neceſſario, c. pag. 4

(q) See the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque.

those two (B) Works are extant. He is said to have writ a Commentary upon St. Paul's Epistles, but it ought rather to be ascribed to one SEDULIUS a Scotch-man (C) who was much younger. We are told that a Fault of a Transcriber, the word Hereticis, instead of Heroicis, made our Poet (D) Odious, and that the Hatred conceived he made his Poem under the Reign of Theodosius the Younger, and Valentinian III. It is said so (a) in the Manuscript of Petrus Pithoeus, and in another Ancient Manuscript mention'd by Archbishop Usher (b). If it be so, he flourished about the Year 435. Father Sirmond (c) found in the best Manuscripts of Gennadius, that Sedulius died in the Reign of the Emperors above mention'd. Nevertheless Archbishop Usher places him above the Year 470. The Reason alledged by him, viz. That Sedulius's Work was found scatter'd among his Papers, and (d) put into a good Order, and Publish'd by the Consul Turcius Rufius Asterius, is not a convincing one; for that Asterius might very well be the same with him that was Consul with Protogenes in the Year 449. And tho' it were granted to Archbishop Usher, that 'tis he who was Consul with Præsidius, in the Year 494: yet there will be no necessity to grant him what he says, since there might have been some Years between the death of Sedulius, and the time when his Book was put into order, and imparted to the Publick (e). There is in the Old Editions of the Carmen Paschale, an Epistle Dedicatory in Verse, from which it should be inferr'd, that this Work was Dedicated to the Emperor Theodosius I; but 'tis very likely that this Epistle belong'd to a more Ancient Poem, and that it was improperly prefixed to this, by reason of the conformity of the Matter. 'Tis Archbishop Usher's, and (f) Father Labbe's Opinion. However it be, 'tis not doubted that Sigebert is mistaken, who says, that Sedulius flourished in the Empire of Constans and Constantius; that is, between the Year 340, and the Year 350. 'Tis also thought that Albertus Stadensis is in the wrong, to place him about the Year 378 (g). What is certain is, that this Poem of Sedulius came out before Pope Gelasius made his Decree, and consequently before the Year 496, in which that Bishop of Rome died; for that Work of Sedulius is mention'd (h) in that Decree.

(B) Those two Works are extant.] The Paschale Carmen, id est, de Christi miraculis libri (i) quinque, has been often Printed with the Epistle Dedicatory to the Priest Macedonius and without it. The Paschale Opus, which is also divided into five Books, and Dedicated to the same Macedonius, was Publish'd at Paris by Franciscus Juretus in 1585, from Pithoeus's Manuscript. 'Tis the First Edition. Note that the Priest Macedonius exhorted the Author to put the Paschale Carmen into Prose: And therefore Sigebert is mistaken, who says that the Prose was Publish'd before the Verses. (k) Sedulius Episcopus ad Macedonium Presbyterum scripsit libros de miraculis Veteris & Novi Testamenti, quos postea sub metrica lege redactos prætitulavit Paschale carmen. We have also some other Poems of Sedulius: The First Edition of his Poetical Works is that of Aldus Manutius 1502. The best is that of Paris 1624, in the Eighth Volume of the Bibliotheca Patrum. See Father (l) Labbe and Doctor (m) Cave.

(C) To one SEDULIUS a Scotch-man, who was much younger.] Mention is made of one Sedulius Episcopus Britannia, who, together with Fergustus a Scotch Bishop, assisted at a Council held at Rome in the Year 721. Baleus, Simler, and some others, call that Sedulius Bishop of the Southern Scotch, and say he writ the Canons of a Council held at Rome. The Subscriptions in the Printed Books run thus: Sedulius Episcopus Britanniæ de genere Scotorum, & Fergustus Episcopus Scotiæ Pictus huic constituto a nobis promulgato subscripsimus (n). Hepidannus (o) a Monk of St. Gall mentions one Sedulius a Scothman, under the Year 818. Sedulius Scotus clarus habetur. 'Tis to him that Father Labbe (p) ascribes the Collectaneum sive explanatio in omnes epistolas S. Pauli, Printed first at Basil in 1528. and then inserted in the Bibliotheca Patrum. 'Tis but a Rhapsody made up of several Extracts of Origen, Eusebius, St. Jerom, &c. Aubertin (q) ascribes it to Bishop Sedulius, who, together with Fergustus, assisted at a Council of Rome under Gregory II. or Gregory III. Here follow the Reasons alledged by Father Labbe. That manner of Commenting upon the Scripture, (r) does very much savour of the IX. Century, and it seems that the Author of that Collectaneum in Paulum, wrote likewise the Collectaneum in Matthæum, which is to be found in the Library of the Jesuits of Paris, written upon very fine Parchment, and with a very fair Hand, above Seven or Eight Hundred Years old. Were it true that the Collectaneum in Matthæum, and the Collectaneum in Paulum were written by one and the same Author, it would afford us a convincing Proof against the Learned Archbishop Usher, who pretended that the Collectaneum in Paulum was the Work of the same Sedulius, who wrote the Carmen Paschale in the Vth Century; for the Author of the Collectaneum in Matthæum, quotes not only the Poet Sedulius, but also Pope Gregory I. St. Isidorus, Arculfus, and Beda, who flourished in the VIII. Century (r). If what M. Du Pin (s) affirms, were true, viz. That the Author of the Collectaneum in Paulum quotes Pope Saint Gregory and Beda; Father Labbe would be very much to blame for not alledging that Reason against Archbishop Usher, and I should very much wonder that this Primate of Ireland should say, that the Poet Sedulius wrote the Commentary upon St. Paul's Epistles. I don't wonder that he said so, tho' doubtless he was not ignorant that the Jesuit Justiniani (u) observes, that the Author of that Collectaneum in Paulum transcribed some words from the 21st Chapter of the 19th Book of St. Gregory's Moralia upon Job; for knowing that this Jesuit says, that those words were transcribed without naming St. Gregory, cujus verba transcripsit tacito ejus nomine, he might have thought that Sedulius did not transcribe from St. Gregory, but that this Pope transcribed from Sedulius. He was not obliged to be of Justiniani's Opinion, who does not think it likely that St. Gregory took something from Sedulius: (x) Nec verisimile videatur Gregorium ea à Sedulio mutuatum esse, cum plane Gregoriani styli simplicitatem redoleant qui more suo hæc Apostoli verba non tam ad scribentis mentem, quam aptè ad mores informandos explicat. What has been said shews that M. du Pin is mistaken.

It were not sufficient to know that Sedulius, the Author of that Commentary upon St. Paul, is a different Man from Sedulius the Poet; 'tis further necessary to know whether the latter was a Scotch-man. Many affirm it, but I don't find they alledge good Reasons for it. The Inscription of an excellent Manuscript in the Abby of Fulde, Sedulii Scoti Hiberniensis in omnes Epistolas Pauli collectaneum, which Archbishop Usher alledges as a very good Argument, can be of no force, whilst one may believe with great probability, that the Author of that Collectaneum is not the Poet Sedulius. Tho. Trithemius says, that these words Sedulius Scotigena, are prefixed to a Book of Letters, he'll never prove the Affirmative of this Question. It should be prov'd first of all that Sedulius the Poet is the Author of those Letters. In a word, since the Ancient Authors never said that our Sedulius was a Scotch-man, what may be found about it in the following Ages ought not to be minded. One might lay some stress upon it, if there had been no Sedulius, that was a Scotch-man; but since 'tis certain that there has been one or two, 'tis no difficult thing to apprehend that the Poet was confounded with one of 'em. See Father Labbe (y).

It were to be wish'd that he had made as many Discussions upon each Ecclesiastical Writer, as upon the Poet Sedulius. I must observe by the by, that he has very well confuted those, who pretend that our Poet was a Bishop. He alledges the silence of the Ancients; he shews that Gennadius's Testimony is insignificant: Gennadius, says he, Salvian, Prosper Aquitanus, and some others, have been improperly styled Bishops by several Authors. The Title of Antistes bestowed upon Sedulius was bestowed upon Priests. Dexter's Chronicle, wherein mention is made of Sedulius, Episcopus Oretanus in the Year 428. is a Supposititious Book. Isidorus Hispalensis would not have stiled Sedulius barely a Priest, if he had been a Bishop in Spain (z).

(D) Made our Poet Odious, and that the Hatred conceived against him extended.] 'Tis said that Paul II. conceived a great Hatred against the Poets, by reason of that Fault of the Transcribers, and that many Professors of the Canon Law, for the same Reason, look'd upon all sorts of Poems as Heretical Works.

What

(r) Ex Labbe ib.

(s) Du Pin ubi supra.

(u) Benedict. Justinianus in 1. ad Corinth. cap. 6. v. 5. apud Labbe ib. pag. 337.

(x) Idem apud eundem pag. 338.

(y) Labbe ubi supra pag. 330.

(z) Ex eodem pag. 331, 332.

ceived against him extended to all other Poets. M. du Pin * says he is a Man of parts, that (E) there is a Noble turn in his Poem, that his Thoughts are Poetical, and his Verses Tolerable. What Moreri says of him wants to be new Moulded from the beginning to the end.

SEGLA (William de, Sieur de Cairas) was Counsellor in the Parliament of Toulouse towards the beginning of the XVIIth. Century. 'Twas he, who made a Report of a Criminal Process, which has been placed among the Tragical (A) Histories of that time, and for the clearing of which M. de Verdun, first President in the Parliament of Toulouse, took all possible care. The Parties accused were at last Convicted, and Punish'd according to their Deserts: And because William de Segla was thoroughly acquainted with that Cause, that † President entreated him to Publish it. The Latin Letter he received from him was prefixed to the Book Publish'd by him, which contains, besides an Account of the proceedings, a Hundred and Thirty One (B) Learned Observations. The Family of Segla continues still at Toulouse, where they have some Offices in the Parliament.

SEYMOUR

What a ridiculous thing would this be! (†) Veteres librarios indiligenter scripsisse, vel ex Tullii, Strabonis, Hieronymi, & aliorum querelis patet. Unde multi gravissimorum virorum errores emanarunt: quod hoc duntaxat exemplo probasse mihi sufficiat. Cum in prima parte Decreti, distinct. 15. c. 3. hæc Gelasii Pontificis verba, Item venerabilis viri Sedulii Paschale opus, quod heroicis versibus descripsit, insigni laude præferimus, depravata essent, & pro heroicis, librariorum incuria, legeretur, hæreticis, mendum hoc, Paulum secundum, Pontificem maximum ad Poetarum capitale odium perduxit, & plurimis aliis, Legum Professoribus, imposuit, ut omnia poemata, quamvis sacra, heretica esse duxerint; ut Pierius Valerianus, in oratione pro Sacerdotum barbis scriptum reliquit. O rem ridiculam, Cato, & jocosam. Others apply this to Pope Hadrian VI. Read the following passage, and compare it exactly with Boissieu's Words. (a) Unum adhuc addam, unde pateat, quæ damna plerunque depravati Codices afferant. In Canonibus à Gratiano digestis, dist. 15. Ubi recitatur insigniter salutare Decretum Gelasii, hæc sententia est: Venerabilis viri Sedulii Paschale opus, quod heroicis descripsit versibus, insigni laude proferendum. Ibi vulgata ante hæc exemplaria pro heroicis, hæreticis habuére. "Quod bonis quibusdam "Canonistis suspicionem movit, Poëmata omnia esse "heretica, Poëtasque inter pios, etsi sacra tractent, "neutiquam annumerari". Id quod Hadriano illi Batavo, qui Caroli V. Præceptor fuerat, adeò persuasum fuit, ut nullum hominum genus majori prosequeretur odio, quam Poetas. Et adhuc aliqui, ut Pie- "rius clarissimus affirmat, non mali alioqui præsules, "depravata illius loci lectione inducti, neminem sa- "cerdotio dignum arbitrantur, qui unquam in Par- "nasso somniarit". By comparing those two passages one with another, there is ground to suspect that one of those two Authors quoted Pierius Valerianus without reading him; for if what concerns Paul II. is to be found (b) in that Writer, how comes it that Philippus Carolus says nothing of it? Why does he only mention Hadrian VI? Take notice that what he says of this last Pope does not prove that the word hæreticis instead of heroicis made him hate the Poets. He only says that Hadrian VI. being fully persuaded that they were unworthy of being placed among Pious Men, hated them to the highest degree. And therefore I don't pretend to prove by the Testimony of that Author, that what Boissieu says of Paul II. is related of Hadrian VI. The proof I bring for it is a Passage probably occasion'd by a careless and hasty reading of Philippus Carolus's Words. (c) Ajunt eum (Hadrianum) nullum hominum genus majore prosecutum fuisse odio quam poetas, eo quod in antiquis exemplaribus Canonum à Gratiano digestorum legatur decretum Gelasii in hæc verba: Venerabilis viri Sedulii Paschale opus, quod hæreticis descripsit versibus, &c. cum ibi heroicis legi debere jam pridem monuerint viri eruditi.

I suspect the Truth of this Account, and am apt to take it for a Story forged by the Italian Humanists, to ridicule the Enemies of good Literature. However I don't deny that a Fault of a Transcriber has often occasion'd great disorders. But I know that Paul II. and Hadrian VI. had some other Reasons for hating the Poets; and I cannot apprehend that Ignorance should be able to make one and the same Person Act so contrary to good Sense as to hate the Poets for the Reason alledged here, and yet to reverence Pope Gelasius: for it ought to be observed that the Decree into which the Word Heretick crept instead of heroicis contains an Encomium upon Sedulius's Poem. 'Tis also to be observed that we are not told that this mistake did lessen in the least the Veneration that Pontif was in.

(E) That he is a Man of parts, that there is a Noble turn in his Poem, &c.] I shall add to M. du Pin's Testimony Borrichius's own Words, whereof M. Baillet (d) gives us the sense. (e) Dictio Sedulii facilis, ingeniosa, numerosa, perspicua, sic satis munda (si excipias prosodica quædam delicta). Venantius Fortunatus bestows some Encomiums upon our Poet.

Quod (f) tonat Ambrosius, Hieronymus atque coruscat,
Sive Augustinus fonte fluente rigat,
Sedulius dulcis, quod Orosius edit acutus,
Regula Cæsarii linea nata sibi est.

And in another place:

Majestatis (g) opus metri canit arte Juvencus,
Hinc quoque conspicui radiavit lingua Sedulî.

See some other Encomiums in Father Labbe (h).

(A) Among the Tragical Histories of that time.] There is an Account of it in the (i) Mercure François. Violante de Bats a Native of Spain, and a very lewd Woman, consented to the Assassination of her Husband, being Angry with him, because he would not allow her the Liberty of receiving her Lovers, the chief of which was an Augustin Monk Professor of Divinity in the University of Toulouse. His Name was Peter Arias Burdeus, and he was Born at Granada in Spain. He, and a Counsellor in the Senechal's Court were the chief Contrivers of the Assassination. That Woman's Husband was kill'd with seventeen Blows in July 1608. Burdeus being Convicted of Adultery and Murder was Condemn'd to be Beheaded and Quartered, which was Executed in February 1609. Violante was likewise put to Death with some of her Ruffians. Burdeus's Adultery " (k) was proved against him by a sufficient " Number of Witnesses, viz. by a Woman who " maintain'd to him and to Violante, that she had " seen 'em in the very Fact in the Wood of the " Farm of Launaques, belonging to a Convent of " Nuns; and by another, who maintain'd that she " had seen 'em going into the said Wood by themselves. There were also some other Witnesses, " one of which had seen 'em Kiss one another in " a Lascivious manner, being sat down at Table in " his Garden in one of the Suburbs of the Town. " The other had seen 'em twice in a Chamber for " the space of two hours——— That Crime was " also call'd a Sacrilege, there being some ground " to suspect that he had lain with Violante in a Confessionary in St. James's Church; for two Witnesses " deposed that he had been two full hours in the " said Confessionary with a pretty tall Gentlewoman, such as Violante was. Besides, there was a " Spiritual Incest and Adultery in the case, because " Violante was his Daughter of Confession, whom " he own'd to have Confess'd two or three times in " Our Lady's Chappel in the Cloyster of the Convent of the Augustins. As for what concerns " the Murder, the Common report, &c.

(B) Learned Observations.] They are intermixed with the most curious Passages of the Ancient Authors, as it was practiced at that time. Those, which concern the disorders occasion'd by Love, and the Artifices of Curtezans, have not been forgotten. That Book was Printed at Paris in 1613. in 8. Cra-

---

* [illegible] tom. 4. pag. m. [illegible]

† In 1611. Mr. de Verdun was then first President in the Parliament of Paris.

(†) Dionys. Salvagnius Boessius not. ad poëma Ovidii in Ibid. pag. m. 127.

(a) Philippus Carolus, in dissertat. de Criticis p. 17, 18. It is prefixed to his Notes upon Aulus Gellius Printed at Nuremberg in 1663.

(b) I have consulted the dissertation of Pierius Valerianus pro sacerdotum barbis, and I have found at pag. 24. of the Paris Edition 1531. apud Christ. Wechel, the sense of the whole quotation of Philippus Carolus, but nothing concerning Paul II.

(c) Autor anonymus notar. ad Sannazarii Poemata epigr. 4. lib. 3. pag. 237. edit. Amstel. 1689.

SEYMOUR (Anne, Margaret, and Joan) three Siſters Illuſtrious for their Learning in England in the XVI. Century. They made a Hundred and Four Latin Diſtichs upon the Death of Margaret de Valois Queen of Navarre, and Siſter to Francis I. which were ſoon after Tranſlated into Greek, French, and Italian, and Printed at Paris in 1551. with this Title, Tombeau de Marguerite de Valois Royne de Navarre. Nicolas Deniſot *, who had (A) been Tutor to thoſe three Learned Ladies, made a Collection containing the Tranſlations of their Diſtichs, and ſome other Verſes both in their Praiſe, and upon the Death of the Queen of Navarre, and Dedicated it to (B) Margaret de Valois Dutcheſs of Berry, Siſter to Henry II. The (C) unexactneſs of thoſe, who mention'd that Collection, occaſion'd my affirming in the Project of this Dictionary, that the Diſtichs were a different Work from the Epitaphs on the Queen of Navarre. I mend that Fault now, and I do ingenuouſly confeſs, I have diſcovered the Falſity of my Conjectures by reading the Tombeau de Marguerite de Valois Royne de Navarre. Which ſhews that a Man ought not to be too foreward, in giving out his Conjectures about Matters of Fact. 'Tis much better to ſuſpend ones Judgment till one ſees all the Writings. I retract what I have † ſaid againſt M. Joli, and M. Moreri; and I do particularly acknowledge that they are excuſable, for calling thoſe three Siſters PRINCESSES, for they might have ſeen that Title prefixed to the Collection Publiſh'd at Paris by Deniſot; but I maintain ſtill they were not Princeſſes. They have been Praiſed by many Authors, particularly by (D) Ronſard and (E) Nicolas de Herberai Sieur des Eſſars, ſo well known by his French Tranſlation of

* He ſtyled himſelf Conte d'Alſinois, Alſinois Comes in Latin, as Chancellor de l'Hoſpital calls him.

† All theſe Faults have been acknowledged in the Extract of a Letter dated the 23, of March 1693. inſerted in the Courier Galant for April 1693.

an Counſellor in the Parliament of Toulouſe, who made a report of the Proceſs of the Man, who thro' an Impoſture, pretended to be Martin Guerre, had before Publiſh'd a like Commentary upon a Proceſs and a Sentence.

(A) Deniſot who had been Tutor.] Ronſard deſerves to be quoted upon this Head, tho' his Phraſes favour of the Barbarouſneſs of his Age.

Deniſot (a) ſe vante heuré
D'avoir oublié ſa terre,
Et paſſager demeuré
Trois ans en voſtre Angleterre,
Et d'avoir cogneu vos yeux,
Où les Amours gracieux
Doucement leurs fleſches dardent
Contre ceux qui vous regardent:
Voire & d'avoir quelquefois
Tant levé ſa petiteſſe,
Que ſous l'outil de ſa vois
Rabota voſtre jeuneſſe,
Vous ouvrant les beaux ſecrets
Des vieux Latins & des Grecs,
Don't l'honneur ſe renouvelle
Par voſtre Muſe nouvelle.

Ron- rd ubi ra pag. 6.

The Ode, that contains theſe Verſes, was Printed in the Collection of the Diſtichs; but Ronſard made many Alterations in it afterwards. I make uſe of the laſt Editions.

(B) Dedicated it to Margaret.] Chancellor de l'Hoſpital did not forget that circumſtance in the following Verſes, which he made for that Learned Princeſs.

Et tibi judicium, tibi doctas Delius aures
Prabuit, ac regale referſit pectus honeſtis
Artibus: eximiam raranque in Principe laudem.
Tantum nulla decus tulit unquam regia virgo.
Innumeros hac cauſa viros, ut condere carmen
Utque ſuos vellent tibi conſecrare labores
Impulit: hac fuit iis ſcribendi cauſa poetis,
Virginibuſque tribus veſtigia preſſa terendi.
Atque hic longinquis ſua cœpit prima Britannia
Aureus incrementa liber ſermone Latino.
Inde per Euripos & formidabile nautis
Invadens ſpatium Belgas devenit & urbem
Pariſiam, novus hoſpes iit perque ora manuſque.
Res placuit noſtris argumentumque poetis:
Continuoque alii maternâ vertere linguâ,
Græcâ alii, atque Italâ, mox & nova jungere verſis
Collibuit, juſtique voluminis addere formam.

(C) The unexactneſs.] Ronſard calls the Diſtichs of thoſe three Siſters a Chriſtian Song. Richelet who Commented upon him, obſerves that they were Chriſtian Diſtichs. Neither of 'em ſays any thing, whereby it may appear that thoſe Diſtichs concern'd the Deceaſed Queen of Navarre. Chancellor de l'Hoſpital intimates no ſuch thing neither. Who would have thought that they were Epitaphs upon a Queen? What do Poets commonly put into ſuch pieces but extravagant Flatteries? Can any thing be more remote from Pibrac's Quatrains, or Michael Verin's Diſtichs, than the Tears of Poets upon the Graves of Great Perſons? I (b) thought therefore that thoſe Diſtichs Styled Chriſtian were Moral Sentences, and not Funeral Elogies, and laviſh'd Incenſe. Others would have been deceived in it as well as I. But ſince I have ſeen that Work, I muſt acknowledge that there are more Chriſtian and Moral reflections than Poetical Praiſes, in ſome Verſes of thoſe three Illuſtrious Siſters.

(b) See the Project of this Dictionary pag. 364, 365.

(D) Particularly by Ronſard.] His Ode (c) for thoſe three Engliſh Ladies contains this Praiſe among others, that if Orpheus heard 'em, he would be their Scholar.

Mais (d) ſi ce harpeur fameux
Oyoit le chant des Serenes,
Qui ſonne aux bords eſcumeux
Des Albionnes arenes,
Son Luth Payen il fendroit,
Et diſciple ſe rendroit
Deſſous leur chanſon Chreſtienne,
Dont la voix paſſe la ſienne.

. . . .

La ſcience auparavant
Si long tems Orientale
Peu a peu marchant avant.
S'apparoiſt occidentale;
Et ſans jamais ſe borner
N'a point ceſſé de tourner,
Tant qu'elle ſoit parvenuë
A l'autre rive incognue.
Là de ſon grave ſourcy
Vint aſſoler le courage
De ces trois Vierges icy,
Les trois ſeules de nôtre âge.
Et ſi bien les ſceut tenter,
Qu'ores on les oit chanter
Mains vers jumeau, qui ſurmonte
Les noſtres, rouges de honte.

(c) 'Tis the 3, of the 5 Book.

(d) Ronſard B. 5. of his Odes pag. m. 617.

I ſhall occaſionally obſerve that Richelet, who made a Commentary upon Ronſard's Odes, did not underſtand the laſt Verſe but one. 'Tis plain that mains vers jumeau ſignifies the Hundred Diſtichs of thoſe three Ladies, or thoſe Verſes which they made two and two by themſelves, in Imitation of Cato and Michael Verin: And yet the Commentator found the thing very obſcure. He thinks that jumeau ſignifies like one another, becauſe, ſays he, they are Siſters; or 'tis an Alluſion to the Tops of Mount Parnaſſus, which are double, whither the Poets go to learn how to make well a Verſe, which he calls jumeau, as if one ſhould ſay Parnaſſian. You may judge whether the Commentators upon the Antients Poets do not frequently deceive us, ſince thoſe who undertake to explain the Poets of their time and of their own Country, are liable to ſuch miſtakes. I could eaſily ſhew that Muret, who Commented upon ſome Poems of Ronſard, did not always rightly underſtand his French Words.

(E) Nicolas de Herberai.] The Praiſes he beſtows upon the three Engliſh Siſters are contain'd in a Letter he writ to them, which was prefixed to the Collection of Epitaphs upon Queen Margaret.

ceived againſt him extended to all other Poets. *M. du Pin ſays he is a Man of parts, that (E) there is a Noble turn in his Poem, that his Thoughts are Poetical, and his Verſes Tolerable. What Moreri ſays of him wants to be new Moulded from the beginning to the end.

SEGLA (William de, Sieur de Cairas) was Counſellor in the Parliament of Toulouſe towards the beginning of the XVIIth. Century. 'Twas he, who made a Report of a Criminal Proceſs, which has been placed among the Tragical (A) Hiſtories of that time, and for the clearing of which M. de Verdun, firſt Preſident in the Parliament of Toulouſe, took all poſſible care. The Parties accuſed were at laſt Convicted, and Puniſh'd according to their Deſerts: And becauſe William de Segla was thoroughly acquainted with that Cauſe, that † Preſident entreated him to Publiſh it. The Latin Letter he received from him was prefixed to the Book Publiſh'd by him, which contains, beſides an Account of the proceedings, a Hundred and Thirty One (B) Learned Obſervations. The Family of Segla continues ſtill at Toulouſe, where they have ſome Offices in the Parliament.

SEYMOUR

* Du Pin [illegible] tom. 4. pag. m. 11.

† In 1611. Mr. de Verdun was then firſt Preſident in the Parliament of Paris.

What a ridiculous thing would this be! (‡) Veteres librarios indiligenter ſcripſiſſe, vel ex Tullii, Strabonis, Hieronymi, & aliorum querelis patet. Unde multi graviſſimorum virorum errores emanarunt: quod hoc duntaxat exemplo probaſſe mihi ſufficiat. Cùm in prima parte Decreti, diſtinct. 15. c. 3. hæc Gelaſii Pontificis verba, Item venerabilis viri Sedulii Paſchale opus, quod heroicis verſibus deſcripſit, inſigni laude præferimus, depravata eſſent, & pro heroicis, librariorum incuria, legeretur, hæreticis, mendum hoc, Paulum ſecundum, Pontificem maximum ad Poetarum capitale odium perduxit, & plurimis aliis, Legum Profeſſoribus, impoſuit, ut omnia poemata, quamvis ſacra, heretica eſſe duxerint; ut Pierius Valerianus, in oratione pro Sacerdotum barbis ſcriptum reliquit. O rem ridiculam, Cato, & jocoſam. Others apply this to Pope Hadrian VI. Read the following paſſage, and compare it exactly with Boiſſieu's Words. (a) Unum adhuc addam, unde pateat, quæ damna plerunque depravati Codices afferant. In Canonibus à Gratiano digeſtis, diſt. 15. Ubi recitatur inſigniter ſalutare Decretum Gelaſii, hac ſententia eſt: Venerabilis viri Sedulii Paſchale opus, quod heroicis deſcripſit verſibus, inſigni laude proferendum. Ibi vulgata ante hac exemplaria pro heroicis, hæreticis habuêre. " Quod bonis quibuſdam " Canoniſtis ſuſpicionem movit, Poemata omnia eſſe " heretica, Poetaſque inter pios, etſi ſacra tractent, " neutiquam annumerari ". Id quod Hadriano illi Batavo, qui Caroli V. Præceptor fuerat, adeò perſuaſum fuit, ut nullum hominum genus majori proſequeretur odio, quàm Poetas. Et adhuc aliqui, ut Pie- " rius clariſſimus affirmat, non mali alioqui præſules, " depravata illius loci lectione inducti, neminem ſa- " cerdotio dignum arbitrantur, qui unquam in Par- " naſſo ſomniarit ". By comparing thoſe two paſſages one with another, there is ground to ſuſpect that one of thoſe two Authors quoted Pierius Valerianus without reading him; for if what concerns Paul II. is to be found (b) in that Writer, how comes it that Philippus Carolus ſays nothing of it? Why does he only mention Hadrian VI? Take notice that what he ſays of this laſt Pope does not prove that the word hæreticis inſtead of heroicis made him hate the Poets. He only ſays that Hadrian VI. being fully perſuaded that they were unworthy of being placed among Pious Men, hated them to the higheſt degree. And therefore I don't pretend to prove by the Teſtimony of that Author, that what Boiſſieu ſays of Paul II. is related of Hadrian VI. The proof I bring for it is a Paſſage probably occaſion'd by a careleſs and haſty reading of Philippus Carolus's Words. (c) Ajunt eum (Hadrianum) nullum hominum genus majore proſecutum fuiſſe odio quam poetas, eo quod in antiquis exemplaribus Canonum à Gratiano digeſtorum legatur decretum Gelaſii in hæc verba: Venerabilis viri Sedulii Paſchale opus, quod hæreticis deſcripſit verſibus, &c. cum ibi heroicis legi debere jam pridem monuerint viri eruditi.

I ſuſpect the Truth of this Account, and am apt to take it for a Story forged by the Italian Humaniſts, to ridicule the Enemies of good Literature. However I don't deny that a Fault of a Tranſcriber has often occaſion'd great diſorders. But I know that Paul II. and Hadrian VI. had ſome other Reaſons for hating the Poets; and I cannot apprehend that Ignorance ſhould be able to make one and the ſame Perſon Act ſo contrary to good Senſe as to hate the Poets for the Reaſon alledged here, and yet to reverence Pope Gelaſius: for it ought to be obſerved that the Decree into which the Word Heretick crept inſtead of heroicis contains an Encomium upon Sedulius's Poem. 'Tis alſo to be obſerved that we are not told that this miſtake did leſſen in the leaſt the Veneration that Pontif was in.

(E) That he is a Man of parts, that there is a Noble turn in his Poem, &c.] I ſhall add to M. du Pin's Teſtimony Borrichius's own Words, whereof M. Baillet (d) gives us the ſenſe. (e) Dictio Sedulii facilis, ingenioſa, numeroſa, perſpicua, ſic ſatis munda (ſi excipias proſodica quædam delicta). Venantius Fortunatus beſtows ſome Encomiums upon our Poet.

> Quod (f) tonat Ambroſius, Hieronymus atque coruſcat,
> Sive Auguſtinus fonte fluente rigat,
> Sedulius dulcis, quod Oroſius edit acutus,
> Regula Cæſarii linea nata ſibi eſt.

And in another place:

> Majeſtatis (g) opus metri canit arte Juvencus,
> Hinc quoque conſpicui radiavit lingua Seduli.

See ſome other Encomiums in Father Labbe (h).

(A) Among the Tragical Hiſtories of that time.] There is an Account of it in the (i) Mercure François. Violante de Bats a Native of Spain, and a very lewd Woman, conſented to the Aſſaſſination of her Husband, being Angry with him, becauſe he would not allow her the Liberty of receiving her Lovers, the chief of which was an Auguſtin Monk Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Toulouſe. His Name was Peter Arias Burdeus, and He was Born at Granada in Spain. He, and a Counſellor in the Seneschal's Court were the chief Contrivers of the Aſſaſſination. That Woman's Husband was kill'd with ſeventeen Blows in July 1608. Burdeus being Convicted of Adultery and Murder was Condemn'd to be Beheaded and Quartered, which was Executed in February 1609. Violante was likewiſe put to Death with ſome of her Ruffians. Burdeus's Adultery " (k) was proved againſt him by a ſufficient " Number of Witneſſes, viz. by a Woman who " maintain'd to him and to Violante, that ſhe had " ſeen 'em in the very Fact in the Wood of the " Farm of Launaques, belonging to a Convent of " Nuns; and by another, who maintain'd that ſhe " had ſeen 'em going into the ſaid Wood by them- " ſelves. There were alſo ſome other Witneſſes, " one of which had ſeen 'em Kiſs one another in " a Laſcivious manner, being ſat down at Table in " his Garden in one of the Suburbs of the Town. " The other had ſeen 'em twice in a Chamber for " the ſpace of two hours——— That Crime was " alſo call'd a Sacrilege, there being ſome ground " to ſuſpect that he had lain with Violante in a Con- " feſſionary in St. James's Church; for two Witneſſes " depoſed that he had been two full hours in the " ſaid Confeſſionary with a pretty tall Gentlewo- " man, ſuch as Violante was. Beſides, there was a " Spiritual Inceſt and Adultery in the caſe, becauſe " Violante was his Daughter of Confeſſion, whom " he own'd to have Confeſs'd two or three times in " Our Lady's Chappel in the Cloyſter of the Con- " vent of the Auguſtins. As for what concerns " the Murder, the Common report, &c.

(B) Learned Obſervations.] They are intermixed with the moſt curious Paſſages of the Ancient Authors, as it was practiced at that time. Thoſe, which concern the diſorders occaſion'd by Love, and the Artifices of Curtezans, have not been forgotten. That Book was Printed at Paris in 1613. in 8. Cu-

ras

(‡) Dionyſ. Salvagnius Boeſſius not. ad poema Ovidii in Ibid. pag. m. 127.

(a) Philippus Carolus, in diſſertat. de Criticis p. 17, 18. It is prefixed to his Notes upon Aulus Gellius Printed at Nuremberg in 1663.

(b) I have conſulted the diſſertation of Pierius Valerianus pro ſacerdotum barbis, and I have found at pag. 24. of the Paris Edition 1531. apud Chriſt. Wechel, the ſenſe of the whole quotation of Philippus Carolus, but nothing concerning Paul II.

(c) Autor anonymus notar. ad Sannazarii Poemata epigr. 4. lib. 3. pag. 237. edit. Amſtel. 1689.

(d) Baill Jugem les poe tom. n. 119

(e) Bot rich. differt. poetis. pag. 75

(f) Venant. For tunatus epig. 8. apud Phil. La be ubi ſupra p 326.

(g) Id. tio lib. de vita Sancti Martini apud ibid.

(h) La ib. p.

(i) To 1. fol verſo ſeq. ad ann. 16

(k) Seg Hiſt. tr gique, 14. &

SEYMOUR (Anne, Margaret, and Jean) three Sisters Illustrious for their Learning in England in the XVI. Century. They made a Hundred and Four Latin Distichs upon the Death of Margaret de Valois Queen of Navarre, and Sister to Francis I. which were soon after Translated into Greek, French, and Italian, and Printed at Paris in 1551. with this Title, Tombeau de Marguerite de Valois Royne de Navarre. Nicolas Denisot *, who had (A) been Tutor to those three Learned Ladies, made a Collection containing the Translations of their Distichs, and some other Verses both in their Praise, and upon the Death of the Queen of Navarre, and Dedicated it to (B) Margaret de Valois Dutchess of Berry, Sister to Henry II. The (C) unexactness of those, who mention'd that Collection, occasion'd my affirming in the Project of this Dictionary, that the Distichs were a different Work from the Epitaphs on the Queen of Navarre. I mend that Fault now, and I do ingenuously confess, I have discovered the Falsity of my Conjectures by reading the Tombeau de Marguerite de Valois Royne de Navarre. Which shews that a Man ought not to be too foreward, in giving out his Conjectures about Matters of Fact. 'Tis much better to suspend ones Judgment till one sees all the Writings. I retract what I have † said against M. Joli, and M. Moreri; and I do particularly acknowledge that they are excusable, for calling those three Sisters PRINCESSES, for they might have seen that Title prefixed to the Collection Publish'd at Paris by Denisot; but I maintain still they were not Princesses. They have been Praised by many Authors, particularly by (D) Ronsard and (E) Nicolas de Herberai Sieur des Essars, so well known by his French Translation of

* He styles himself Conte d'Alsinois, Alsinoius Comes in Latin, as Chancellor de l'Hospital calls him.

† All these Faults have been acknowledged in the Extract of a Letter dated the 23. of March 1693. inserted in the Courier Galant for April 1693.

ra Counsellor in the Parliament of Toulouse, who made a report of the Process of the Man, who thro' an Imposture, pretended to be Martin Guerre, had before Publish'd a like Commentary upon a Process and a Sentence.

(A) Denisot who had been Tutor.] Ronsard deserves to be quoted upon this Head, tho' his Phrases savour of the Barbarousness of his Age.

Denizot (a) se vante heuré
D'avoir oublié sa terre,
Et passager demeuré
Trois ans en vostre Angleterre,
Et d'avoir cogneu vos yeux,
Où les Amours gracieux
Doucement leurs flesches dardent
Contre ceux qui vous regardent:
Voire & d'avoir quelquefois
Tant levé sa petitesse,
Que sous l'outil de sa vois
Rabota vostre jeunesse,
Vous ouvrant les beaux secrets
Des vieux Latins & des Grecs,
Don't l'honneur se renouvelle
Par vostre Muse nouvelle.

(a) Ron- rd ubi ra pag.

The Ode, that contains these Verses, was Printed in the Collection of the Distichs; but Ronsard made many Alterations in it afterwards. I make use of the last Editions.

(B) Dedicated it to Margaret.] Chancellor de l'Hospital did not forget that circumstance in the following Verses, which he made for that Learned Princess.

Et tibi judicium, tibi doctas Delius aures
Prabuit, ac regale refersit pectus honestis
Artibus: eximiam raranque in Principe laudem.
Tantum nulla decus tulit unquam regia virgo.
Innumeros hac causa viros, ut condere carmen
Vique suos vellent tibi consecrare labores
Impulit: hac fuit iis scribendi causa poetis,
Virginibusque tribus vestigia pressa terendi.
Atque hic longinquis sua cœpit prima Britannia
Aureus incrementa liber sermone Latino.
Inde per Eurypos & formidabile nautis
Invadens spatium Belgas devenit & urbem
Parisiam, novus hospes iit perque ora manusque.
Res placuit nostris argumentumque poetis:
Continuoque alii materna vertere lingua,
Græca alii, atque Itala, mox & nova jungere versis
Collibuit, justique voluminis addere formam.

(C) The unexactness.] Ronsard calls the Distichs of those three Sisters a Christian Song. Richelet who Commented upon him, observes that they were Christian Distichs. Neither of 'em says any thing, whereby it may appear that those Distichs concern'd the Deceased Queen of Navarre. Chancellor de l'Hospital intimates no such thing neither. Who would have thought that they were Epitaphs upon a Queen? What do Poets commonly put into such pieces but extravagant Flatteries? Can any thing be more remote from Pibrac's Quatrains, or Michael Verin's Distichs, than the Tears of Poets upon the Graves of Great Persons? I (b) thought therefore that those Distichs Styled Christian were Moral Sentences, and not Funeral Elogies, and lavish'd Incense. Others would have been deceived in it as well as I. But since I have seen that Work, I must acknowledge that there are more Christian and Moral reflections than Poetical Praises, in some Verses of those three Illustrious Sisters.

(D) Particularly by Ronsard.] His Ode (c) for those three English Ladies contains this Praise among others, that if Orpheus heard 'em, he would be their Scholar.

Mais (d) si ce harpeur fameux
Oyoit le chant des Serenes,
Qui sonne aux bords escumeux
Des Albionnes arenes,
Son Luth Payen il fendroit,
Et disciple se rendroit
Dessous leur chanson Chrestienne,
Dont la voix passe la sienne.

. . . . . .

La science auparavant
Si long tems Orientale
Peu à peu marchant avant,
S'apparoist occidentale;
Et sans jamais se borner
N'a point cessé de tourner,
Tant qu'elle soit parvenuë
A l'autre rive incognuë.
Là de son grave sourcy
Vint affoler le courage
De ces trois Vierges icy,
Les trois seules de nôtre âge.
Et si bien les sceut tenter,
Qu'ores on les oit chanter
Mains vers jumeau, qui surmonte
Les nostres, rouges de honte.

I shall occasionally observe that Richelet, who made a Commentary upon Ronsard's Odes, did not understand the last Verse but one. 'Tis plain that mains vers jumeau signifies the Hundred Distichs of those three Ladies, or those Verses which they made two and two by themselves, in Imitation of Cato and Michael Verin: And yet the Commentator found the thing very obscure. He thinks that jumeau signifies like one another, because, says he, they are Sisters; or 'tis an Allusion to the Tops of Mount Parnassus, which are double, whither the Poets go to learn how to make well a Verse, which he calls jumeau, as if one should say Parnassian. You may judge whether the Commentators upon the Antients Poets do not frequently deceive us, since those who undertake to explain the Poets of their time and of their own Country, are liable to such mistakes. I could easily shew that Muret, who Commented upon some Poems of Ronsard, did not always rightly understand his French Words.

(E) Nicolas de Herberai.] The Praises he bestows upon the three English Sisters are contain'd in a Letter he writ to them, which was prefixed to the Collection of Epitaphs upon Queen Margaret.

(b) See the Project of this Dictionary pag. 364, 365.

(c) 'Tis the 3. of the 5 Book.

(d) Ronsard B. 5. of his Odes pag. m. 617.

of Amadis de Gaule. 'Tis ſomewhat ſtrange (F) they ſhould be ſo little known at this day.

SELEMNUS, a River of Achaia, had been a very Handſome young Shepherd. The Nymph Argyra fell ſo paſſionately in Love with him, that ſhe came out of the bottom of the Sea to go and lie with him. But when the prime of Selemnus's Beauty vaniſhed away by Age, the Nymph left off going to him. The young Man died of Grief for it, and was Metamorphos'd into a River by the Goddeſs Venus. That Change did not Cure him of his Paſſion: Venus was obliged to take it upon her; ſhe granted him the Favour of forgetting that Nymph. 'Tis ſaid that from that time that River had an admirable Virtue; the Perſons of both Sexes who bathed themſelves in it, loſt the Remembrance of the beloved Object *. Pauſanias is in the right to ſay, That if the Water of that River had ſuch (A) a Virtue, it would be more valuable than great Sums of Money.

SELVE (John de) Firſt Preſident in the Parliament of Paris, under the Reign of Francis I. See his Article in Moreri's Dictionary. I ſhall only add to it three or four Particulars, imparted to me by M. Baluze, whereby it may be rectified and illuſtrated. 'Tis not true that this Preſident was originally come from the Milaneſe: He was Born in (A) Limouſin; and 'tis very likely that he and his Anceſtors

(F) They ſhould be ſo little known at this day.] I ask'd ſome Engliſh-men very Learned and well verſed in the Knowledge of Books and Authors, what they knew of thoſe three Illuſtrious Ladies: They anſwered me they knew nothing of 'em. I had the ſame Anſwer from Paris, tho' I conſulted ſome perſons, who are hardly equall'd by any body elſe in the Knowledge of ſuch things. Thoſe three Illuſtrious Ladies muſt needs be quite unknown, ſince M. Juncker ſays nothing of 'em in (a) the Catalogue of Learned Women, lately Publiſhed by him. He quotes Pitſeus ſometimes; and therefore ſince he does not ſpeak of thoſe three Siſters, 'tis a ſign Pitſeus does not ſpeak of them neither. A Friend of mine had aſſured me before, that neither Baleus nor Pitſeus, who have ſo fully treated of the Writers of that Learned Nation, ſay nothing of thoſe three Siſters.

(A) Had ſuch a Virtue, it would be more valuable.] We muſt not believe whatever the Poets and Writers of Romances make amorous People ſay; the Deſcriptions of their Sufferings are Hyperbolical: however, it muſt be granted, that Love is an unexhauſtible cauſe of Miſeries and Diſorders. 'Tis a very neceſſary Paſſion for the Preſervation of living Creatures: 'Tis the Soul of the World with reſpect to them; nay, 'tis certain that the Divine Providence has annexed a thouſand Charms and Pleaſures to ſo neceſſary a Paſſion; but on the other hand it is attended with a thouſand Troubles. How many People can neither Eat, nor Drink, nor Sleep, and loſe their Wits upon that Account? The Number of thoſe who Die of it is greater than 'tis thought: Thoſe who Hang themſelves for it, are indeed ſcarce; however ſome do it. This concerns thoſe whoſe Love is not anſwer'd. As for thoſe who are as much beloved as they love others, they pay dear for their Pleaſures; for not to ſay, that their Reaſon is diſordered, and that their Paſſion is frequently contrary to their true Intereſt, whereby they are expoſed to a vaſt Number of Troubles; does not bare Jealouſie, which commonly attends their Paſſion, make 'em ſufficiently Unhappy? Can there be a more lamentable and dreadful Condition than that of Jealous People? Whether their Jealouſie be well or ill grounded, 'tis all one; their Torment is never the leſſer; they are no leſs perſecuted by the Chimera's and Phantomes of their Imagination; the Fire wherewith they are waſted and conſumed, is not more tolerable for it: and therefore it may be ſaid, that if there was a River that would Cure Lovers, it would be more valuable than Gold. Theſe are Pauſanias's words. (b) Εἰ δὲ μέτεστιν ἀληθείας τῷ λόγῳ τιμιώτερον χρημάτων πολλῶν ἐστὶν ἀνθρώποις τὸ ὕδωρ τοῦ Σελέμνου. Quod niſi commentitium eſſet, quantavis pecunia videri poſſet ea Selemni aqua precioſior. One ſhould ſay of that Water, ἄριστον μὲν ὕδωρ; but then Gold ſhould not be mention'd next to it, without being much depreſs'd in compariſon of Water. See the Margin (c). Zuccolo makes a very natural Deſcription of the fury of Jealouſy, when he introduces in his Dialogues, a Man extremely greedy of the ſweet Pleaſures of Love, and yet reſolved not to mind 'em, provided his beloved Object be not kind to any body elſe. (d) Non hò già cuore di sì gagliarda lena, che baſti a reſiſtere a quel reo veleno di Geloſia,

Che, mentre con la fiamma il gelo meſce,
Tutto il Regno d'Amor turba, e contriſta.

Siami altiera, e ſdegnoſa la mia Delia, purche non rivolga corteſe, e pia lo ſguardo ſoave altrove: mi ſia ſcarſa de ſuoi favori: avara delle ſue gratie, che tuttavia,

——Un piu gentile
Stato del mio non è ſotto la Luna,
Si dolce è del mio amaro la radice.

Ma non poſſo già ſoffrire, che i begli occhi ſereni, i quali acceſero nel mio petto fiamma ineſtinguibile d'Amore, habbiano a riſchiarare il foſco d'Horatio co'i raggi della lor luce.

Si nieghi a me, purche a ciaſcun ſi nieghi;
Che, purche altrui non ſplenda il mio bel Sole,
Ne le tenebre ancor viurò beato.

But becauſe he cannot expect ſuch a thing, he vexes himſelf, and eaſes his Grief only by Curſing Jealouſie as a Monſter that came out of Hell. (e) Ma, ſe il mio male rimane affatto ſenza rimedio, non mi ſi tolga almeno, ch'io sfoghi in qualche modo il mio cordoglio co'i lamenti, e co'i pianti.

O ſorella di morte, onde veniſte,
D'invidia figlia, fiero, horribil moſtro,
Che fai miei giorni lagrimoſi, e triſti;
Tornati a l'infernale, oſcuro chioſtro,
Che troppo co' tuoi morſi il ſen m'apriſti,
Onde il venen, la piaga, e'l dolor moſtro.

I have read in a Book Printed with the (f) Satyr upon Hermaphrodites, that a Lady having ſung (g) with a melancholy Tune, and made it appear by her Look, (h) That her Heart was ſorrowful; ſome Body ask'd her what made her ſo melancholy; and that inſtead of anſwering, ſhe ſpoke the words of Ludovico.

Che dolce piu, che piu giocondo ſtato,
Saria, di quel, d'un amoroſo core:
Che viver piu felice, & piu beato,
Che ritrovarſi in ſervitu d'amore,
Se non foſſe ciaſcuno ſtimulato,
Da quel ſoſpetto rio, da quel timore,
Da quel martir, da quella freneſia,
Da quella rabia detta gelozia.

Doubtleſs the Torments of Jealouſy obliged a Poet of the ſame Country, to make a (i) Sonnet, wherein he tells his Confeſſor, If you deſign to puniſh me for the Faults I have commited out of Love, enjoin me to fall in Love again, for there is no greater Pain than that.

Se pur brami punir l'anima errante,
Fa ch'io torni ad amar, che fra mortali
Non v'è pena maggior ch' eſſer' amante.

(A) He was born in Limouſin, and 'tis very likely he and his Anceſtors were Natives of Tulle.] Here are my Reaſons for it. I ſhall uſe the very Words of the Learned Man, who has been pleaſed to impart to me a Memorial for this Article. " (k) John de Selve was a Native of Limouſin: " There is no Difficulty in it. The Proof of it " may be ſeen at the Beginning of the Treatiſe " de Beneficio; beſides, the ſame is confirm'd by " Gabriel Lurbam, in his Book concerning the " Illuſtrious Men of Aquitain. But 'tis not known

" from

---

* Ex Pauſania lib. 7 pag. 229.

(a) 'Tis an Appendix to the Tract de Ephemeribus ſive Diariis eruditorum, Publiſh'd by him at Leipſick in 1692. in 12.

(b) Pauſan. l. 7. p. 229.

SOME CONSIDERATIONS upon Jealouſy.

(c) To underſtand this, one muſt read theſe verſes of Pindar, Od. 1. Olymp. Ἄριστον μὲν ὕδωρ, ὁ δὲ χρυσὸς αἰθόμενον πῦρ ἅτε διαπρέπει νυκτὶ μεγάνορος ἔξοχα πλούτου. Optima quidem eſt aqua: & aurum, velut ignis noctu ardens, coruſcat eximie inter ſuperbificas divitias.

ſtors were Natives of Tulle, the Chief Town of the lower Limouſin. A (B) Book, of which he is not the Author, is Fathered upon him; and 'tis without any good Reaſon that an Hiſtorian Accuſes him of having (C) corrupted the Memoirs of Philip de Comines. His true Name was (D) John de SALVA. Thoſe, who made the Elogies of the Firſt Preſidents of Paris, "† place his Death in Auguſt 1520. But John Bertaud, who made and Printed his Epitaph in that ſame Year, informs us, that he was buried at St. Nicolas du Chardonnet the Eleventh of December. That Epitaph is not upon his Tomb, but another very Modern."

SENGEBERE (Polycarp) a Civilian in the XVIIth Century, was a Native of Brunſwick. He wrote a (E) Book againſt Salmaſius. * "He diſputed with one Macquin in the Univerſity of Angers, for a Profeſſorſhip of the Civil-Law." Menage, who had been his Scholar, did not forget to ſerve him on that occaſion; but Macquin was preferr'd to him, becauſe he was more Learned than he. Nevertheleſs, by reaſon of his Merit, and becauſe he was a Man of Abilities, the Magiſtrates of Angers beſtowed upon him a Yearly Penſion of a Hundred Crowns to keep him in their Town; and M. de Boiſleve, jointly with ſome others, gave him as much, ſo that he had Six Hundred Livres a Year. There was a Deſign to accuſe him of having Bribed his Judges; but Menage was his Defender. Thoſe, who have Publiſh'd ſome Memoirs ‖ for Menage's Life, ſay he pleaded ſeveral Cauſes in the Parliament of Paris, one among others for M. Sengebere, who had a Mind to Divorce his Wife on account of Adultery. 'Tis very ſtrange that he ſhould ſay nothing of it (F) ſpeaking of that † Memorial imprinted by M. Baluze.

* Menagiana pag. 94 of the 1ſt Dutch Edition.

‖ They are prefixed to the continuation of the Menagiana.

"from what Town of Limouſin he came. There is Reaſon to believe he was born at Tulle, the chief Town of the lower Limouſin. What makes me think ſo is, that I find in an Old Record of the Year 1431. John de Salva, named among the Chief Inhabitants of that Town; and his Poſterity continues ſtill in that Town, but they go by the Name of La Selve. 'Tis very likely that the Deſcendants of the Firſt Preſident, who live ſtill at Tulle, changed their Name into that of Selve, made famous by his great Reputation. Beſides this ſtrong Conjecture, I find in the Enqueſt of Nobility by Meſſiere Chriſtopher de Leſtang, Biſhop of Carcaſſonne, and Commander of the King's Orders, made in the Year 1617. that the Firſt Preſident was the Son of John de Selva. Which perfectly agrees with John de Salva, mention'd in the Year 1431. ſince there are not a hundred full Years from that Year to the Year 1529, when the Firſt Preſident died. Beſides, the ſame Enqueſt informs us, that Margaret de Selve, his Siſter, was Married to Peter de Juyé an Inhabitant of Tulle.

"From whence 'tis eaſie to infer, that the Genealogy of the Houſe of Selve, Printed in the Elogies of the Firſt Preſidents of Paris, is not right, particularly in ſaying, that the Grandfather of the Firſt Preſident, was a Gentleman of the Milaneſe.

(B) A Book, of which he is not the Author, is Fathered upon him.] "(a) He is commonly ſaid to be the Author of the Treatiſe De Beneficio. But John Bertaud (b) informs us that 'tis not he but his Brother who is the Author of it. Adde ſe. recor. Do. Joannem de Salva ſenatus Parrhiſini principem: cujus frater Joannes de Salva inter reliquos quum primis honorius, ſicuti probitatis ſuæ facile dedit documentum quum de beneficio inſignem tractatum edidit.

(C) 'Tis without any good Reaſon that an Hiſtorian accuſes him of having corrupted the Memoirs of Philip de Comines.] "(c) What Belcarius advances in his Hiſtory, Book 7. Chap. 10, does not ſeem to me likely, viz. That the Firſt Preſident de Selve, who, ſays he, was ignorant of the Hiſtory of Lewis XI, and Charles VIII his Son, corrupted and curtailed in ſeveral places, the Memoirs of Philip de Comines. For the Firſt Edition of thoſe Memoirs came out in 1524. But the Firſt Preſident was hardly at leiſure then to Print Books, and particularly other Peoples Works. Beſides, the Editions agree with ſeveral Ancient Manuſcripts, as it has been obſerved by M. Godefroy in his Preface to thoſe Memoirs.

(D) His true Name was John de SALVA.] "(d) So he is call'd in the Epiſtle Dedicatory to John Raulin's Epiſtles Printed at Paris in 1521. Robertus Raulin Joanni de Salva Pariſienſis ſenatus primo præſidi. And in the Epiſtle, alluding to his Name, he ſays among other things, te natura Salvum fecit, ut alios abſque improperio ſalvos faceres. And in the Epigram Printed next to the Epiſtle Dedicatory:

"Aſtruit ante obitum nullum cenſura Salonis
"Salvum. Te talem primulum ortus habet.

"In the Relation of the Conference held at Madrid in the Year 1525, in order to get Francis I. releaſed; he is call'd John de Salva, in a Copy made at that time which I have by me. 'Tis true, that the Word Salva has been daſhed out ſince, and the word Selve has been put into the Margin.

"In the Treaty of Marriage between Hercules d'Eſte the Son of Alphonſus, with Renata of France, made at Saint Germain en Laye the 19th of February 1527. that Preſident, who was Renata's Attorney, is call'd Johannes de Salva, in an old Copy of that time, which I have likewiſe by me.

"John Bertaud a Native of Perigord, Publiſh'd in the Year 1529, three Books de cognatione ſacerrimi Joannis Baptiſtæ; wherein making an enumeration of the famous Canoniſts and Civilians, particularly of thoſe of Aquitain, he ſays: Adde ſe. recor. Do. Joannem de Salva ſenatus Parrhiſini principem. And in the Epiſtle to Francis de Marſillac, Firſt Preſident in the Parliament of Rouen, who had Married a Daughter of the Firſt Preſident de Salva, he ſays: fideliſſima uxor tua Magdalena à Salva. The ſame made an Epitaph upon the Firſt Preſident de Salva, wherein making an Abridgement of his Life, he begins with theſe Verſes:

"Salva domus dedit hanc, qui Salvos fecit utique
"Oppreſſos miſera conditione reos."

(E) He wrote a Book againſt Salmaſius.] Here follows a piece of Menage's Converſations. "(e) Sengebere my Maſter in the Civil-Law writ againſt Salmaſius's Book de Mutuo: The Sheets were ſent to Salmaſius as they were Printing, and he writ to me that Sengebere gave him no hard words, but that his Railleries were as ſharp as injurious Words. He acquainted me, at the ſame time, that he would anſwer that Book. But Sengebere cleared the matter better than he, and he made no Anſwer."

(F) 'Tis very ſtrange that he ſhould ſay nothing of it, ſpeaking of that Suit.] He ſpeaks of that Law-Suit with great Ingenuity, and without any Deſign of Concealing the weak ſide of his Maſter. "(f) Sengebere, Doctor of the Civil-Law at Angers, having Accuſed and Convicted his Wife, who was a very handſom Woman, of Adultery, got her confined to a Convent, and took a Concubine in her room. A Jeſter happening to be in a Company where they were Diſcourſing of his caſe, ſaid in a pleaſant manner:

(a) The ſame Memorial.

(b) In the Book mention'd at the beginning of the laſt Paragraph of the Remark D.

(c) The ſame Memorial.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Menagiana pag. 287. of the 1ſt Dutch Edition.

(f) Ibid. pag. 137.

that ſuit; for it ſeems he could not forget, upon ſuch an occaſion, to mention the Service he had done to his Maſter.

SENNERTUS (DANIEL) an Eminent Phyſician, was Born the 25th of November 1572 at Breſlaw, where his Father was a Shoe-Maker. Being ſent to the Univerſity of Wittemberg in 1593, he made a great Progreſs in † Philoſophy and Phyſick. He viſited the Univerſities of Leipſick, Jena, and Francfort upon the " ſince he had a mind to have a Whore, he might " as well have kept his Wife ". If Menage pleaded for the Husband upon that occaſion, one can hardly apprehend why he did not ſay ſo, when he related that Sengebere carried the Cauſe. He did not forget to ſay upon a leſs important Subject (*) that he had been his defender, viz. when there was a deſign to accuſe him of having bribed the Judges of the diſpute about a Profeſſorſhip. Which is not very intelligible, for he had been caſt. Is it cuſtomary for thoſe, who carry the Cauſe to accuſe the Perſon who loſes it, of having bribed the Judges? Would not ſuch an Accuſation concern the Judges rather than the Perſon accuſed of having bribed them? Is not a Judge, who ſuffers himſelf to be bribed, more guilty than the Briber? That Paſſage of the Menagiana ought therefore to be rectified; and inſtead of theſe words, there was a deſign to accuſe him of having bribed the Judges, it ſhould be, That there was a deſign to accuſe him of having endeavoured to bribe 'em. The Judges would not have been concern'd in that Cauſe; they would not have been forced to ſide with Sengebere: and it may very well happen that a Man, who caſts his Adverſary, is willing to carry his Triumph further, and load him with Confuſion, by ſhewing that he intended to have recourſe to Fraud and Bribery.

I have ſaid in another place, that ſome could wiſh this Pleading of Menage had been Printed. He was an Advocate very well qualified to ſucceed in ſuch a Cauſe. He might have ſaid many things fitly applyed and handſomely turn'd: and ſince the Wife was convicted, and her Beauty, tho' never ſo great, could not ſave her; 'tis to be preſumed that the Proofs of the Husband were as ſtrong as the Advocate could have wiſh'd. It was a great Advantage for his Advocate, and a circumſtance the more favourable, becauſe it afforded a ſuperiority very proper to confound the Common Topicks alledged by the Wife's Advocate. When a Cauſe about Adultery is doubtful, the Advocate who pleads againſt the Husband, ſpeaks in an inſulting manner, and ridicules him unmercifully; at which the Advocate, who pleads againſt the Wife, is a little ſurpriſed. But why do I ſay when ſuch a Cauſe is doubtful? I ſhould have ſaid even when it (a) is not doubtful. I ſhall quote M. Chevreau for it, who gives us the following Account of a Gentleman, who had Married a Young Woman. " (b) Ever ſince ſhe has been poſſeſt of " the beſt part of his Eſtate by Virtue of that " Donative, ſhe minds nothing but fine Cloaths and " good Cheer, and expreſſes a great Contempt or " Indifference for all the Careſſes of her Old Hus- " band.

" Hinc dolor, hinc lachrymæ,

" But there is ſomething more afflicting for the " good Old Man; and if you deſire to know it in a " few Words, for Men of his Age

" Eſt indeclinabile cornu.

" He has undeniable Proofs, as any Geometrical " Demonſtrations can be, that ſhe has made him a " Cuckold, and that his Wife, whom he uſed to call " his Treaſure, was only a Treaſure of Iniquity. Tho' " his Relations adviſed him not to make the " thing publick, he has only conſulted his An- " ger, being reſolved to get her confin'd to a Nun- " nery, by the ſame Sentence that ſhould make the " Donative void. He has mightily ſollicited, and " produced many Writings againſt her, and even " mortgaged an Eſtate in Land in order to Exe- " cute his Project. The Lady has pitch'd upon " an Advocate, who expreſſes himſelf with a won- " derful eaſineſs, and is not Covetous in the leaſt, " being as Rich as he is Voluptuous; and 'tis ſaid he " never pleads a great Cauſe for a handſome Lady, " but he has an Enjoyment for it. He mightily " exaggerated the Noble Birth, and the Perſonal " Merit of that Lady; her Virtue appearing by " her very look; the Intolerable Jealouſy of her " Husband grounded upon Dreams, and the fearfulneſs and ridiculouſneſs of the Old Man. The " Cauſe was put off in September till after St. Martin's Day. The two parties are gone, the Gen- " tleman to his Village, and the Lady to the Houſe " ſhe is poſſeſt of by the Contract of her Mar- " riage. In the mean time a Nephew of the Old " Gentleman gave him a viſit to know the par- " ticulars of his Law ſuit, of which he had but an " imperfect Account, tho' he had been told that the " Advocate of the Young Lady had abuſed him in " a moſt inſulting manner ". The Nephew adviſed him to put an end to that ſuit by a good Reconciliation, and even told him that it had been better if he had not begun it. He alledged himſelf for an example, and did not forget his Brother's Conduct. My Brother, and I, ſaid he (c), don't much care to dive into things, that would vex us, if we ſhould find them out; nor does it appear to us that the greateſt Happineſs of a Husband conſiſts in being a ſhrewd diviner. We only aim at a quiet life; and 'tis our Opinion, that a Man who continually ſuſpects his Wife, muſt needs take an ill Courſe. The Remonſtrances of a Jealous Husband are ſuſpected, his Prohibitions frequently exaſperate a Wanton Woman, pre-poſſeſt with this Opinion that ſtolen Waters are the ſweeteſt: And we could never apprehend that a Tutoring Husband ſhould prove more acceptable than a Tyrannical one. Violent means betray a bruitiſh Temper; and whoever has recourſe to the Law, muſt expect to be laugh'd at by the Judges, who are wiſer in a like caſe, and take care that a Court of Juſtice ſhould not Ring with their Wives Galantry, which they conceal even from their Confeſſors. Indeed, if the Judges were to take Cognizance of all ſuch Diſorders, the Parliaments, Preſidials, Bayliwicks, and inferior Courts would not be ſufficient for it; beſides, ſuch proceedings are very chargeable, and Lawyers and Attorneys would quickly grow the Richeſt Men in the Kingdom at our coſt. Here follows part of the Reply. " (d) I muſt needs " tell you, replyed the Uncle, that the laſt Plead- " ing of my unfaithful Wife's Advocate broke my " Heart: had he been credited, I ſhould have been " Accounted the moſt fooliſh and the moſt wicked " Man in the World. I muſt further tell you, that " I was no ſooner come out of the Court, but I " heard a confuſed voice of Book-ſellers and Shop- " keepers asking me whether I would Buy, le Cu- " rieux impertinent: le Cocu imaginaire, and Horn- " combs: Nay a wretched Shop-Boy, followed me " to the loweſt ſteps of the Court, playing, thro' " a ſilly Alluſion, upon a Cornemuſe (a Bag-Pipe). " When I came there all the Shop-Keepers cried " out with a Common conſent, Horn-combs; and I " was forced to bear a Thouſand ſilly Jeſts ". The Nephew made uſe of thoſe Circumſtances to perſuade the Husband to a Reconciliation; and offered to be a Mediator between him and his Wife, to put an end to their Quarrel (e). Perhaps the Old Man would not have been ſo lucky as Sengebere, who got his Wife confined to a Nunnery. His Demands muſt have been very juſt, and doubtleſs his Right was very plain, ſince he carried the Cauſe. But if we conſider the Puniſhment inflicted upon his Wife fully Convicted of Adultery, it will appear ſo ſlight, that one may cry out as in Juvenal's time, (f) ubi nunc lex Julia? dormis? what's become of the Roman Laws, the Laws of (†) Auguſtus, Conſtantin and Juſtinian? The firſt was leſs ſevere than the ſecond; for the lex Julia did not Condemn Adulterers to Death: but by the Law of Conſtantin that Puniſhment was inflicted upon them. Juſtinian moderated it as to Women, being contented to Condemn 'em to be whip'd and ſhut up in a Nunnery: Nay, he allowed Husbands to take 'em again at two Years end; and if they died before that time, or were not willing to have 'em again, their Wives were Condemn'd to be ſhaved, and to take the Monaſtical Habit, and to ſpend the

† In ſtudiis philoſophicis ita profecit ut anno 1597. die 3. Maii. [illegible] lauream philoſophicam inter 98. candidatos quartus [illegible] fit. Vita Sennerti in limine operum.

(*) See the Text of this Article.

(a) This is not repugnant to what I have ſaid; for it will be true ſtill that the Wife's Advocate is leſs to be feared, when the Husband's right is more evident.

(b) Chevreau Oeuvres meſlées pag. 52. & ſeq.

(c) Ibid. pag. 57.

(d) Ibid. pag. 58.

(e) Chevr. ibid. pag. 60.

(f) Juven. Sat. 2. v. 37.

(†) The lex Julia de adulteriis aſcribed by many Learned Men to Auguſtus and not to Julius Cæſar.

the Oder, and then went to Berlin in 1601. to learn the Practice of Phyſick; but he quickly returned to Wittemberg, where he took his Degree of Doctor of Phyſick the 10th of September in the ſame Year, and at a Year's end he was made Profeſſor of the ſame Faculty. He was the firſt, who introduced the ſtudy of Chymiſtry into that Univerſity, and he got (A) a great Reputation by his Works and (B) Practice. He had three Wives, and got no Children by the two laſt; but he had ſeven by the firſt. He died of the Plague at Wittemberg the 21ſt of July 1637 *. Some Adverſaries roſe up againſt him becauſe he took the Liberty to Contradict the Ancients; but none of his Opinions was leſs approved than what he Advanced concerning the Origine of Souls. He believed that the Seed of all living (C) Creatures is animated, and that the Soul of that Seed the remaining part of their lives in that Condition. (c) Primus Conſtantinus capitis pœna adulterii crimen vindicandum conſtituit (1) ——— Capitalem autem pœnam Juſtinianus in maſculis probat, mulierem verò verberibus cæſam in monaſterium detrudi præcipit, data poteſtate marito intra biennium, ſi hoc exiſtimaverit eam inde revocandi, quo tranſacto, aut viro præmortuo, eam raſo capite, monaſtico habitu amiciri, & illic omni vitæ tempore manere (2) jubet. That ſeverity was abated by degrees, and in ſome (b) Provinces an Adultreſs was allowed one half of the Eſtate purchaſed by her Husband. Pope Honorius III. reform'd that Scandalous Cuſtom. (c) Apud Rupellenſes ——— jam olim invaluere nonnullæ conſuetudines, quarum duo capita à jure, & honeſtate publica abhorrentia damnavit Honorius III. P. in Epiſtola decretali ad Majorem & Burgenſes de Rupella. Primum fuit ——— Alterum fuit, ut mulier ob adulterium non amitteret lucrum mediæ partis omnium bonorum per virum quæſitorum conſtante matrimonio: conſuetudinem emendavit Pontifex, quoad proderat mulieribus adulteris.

* Taken from his Works. See alſo his Funeral Oration delivered by Auguſtus Buchnerus. It is in Witte's Memoriæ Medicorum pag. 88, & ſeq.

'Tis to be obſerved that the Jeſt, mention'd by Menage (d), is faulty, as moſt witty ſayings are. If it be ſtrictly examin'd, it will be found to imply a falſity; for in Mens Opinion the unfaithfulneſs of a Wife is a diſgrace to the Husband. The keeping of a Concubine is not liable to ſuch a Conſtruction, and does not require that a Man ſhould have the ſame regard for her as for a Wife; and therefore Sengebere's choice did not run between like Inconveniences, as the Jeſter ſuppoſed.

(A) A great Reputation by his Works.] They are many, and have been often Printed in France and Italy. The laſt Edition, if I am not miſtaken, is that of Lyons 1676. It is divided into Six Volumes in Folio. The foregoing Editions were only divided into Three Volumes (e).

(B) And by his Practice.] Sick People had recourſe to him from all parts, and he denied no Body his Aſſiſtance. He took what they gave him for his pains, and exacted nothing; nay, he reſtored to the Poor (f) what they gave him. The Plague raged at Wittemberg above ſeven times whilſt he was a Profeſſor in that Town; but he never went away, and never refuſed to aſſiſt ſick People. The Elector of Saxony, whom he cured of a long ſickneſs in 1628. made him one of his Phyſicians in Ordinary, and yet allowed him the Liberty of living at Wittemberg. Many Dukes, Princes, Counts and Gentlemen were the better for his Remedies and Preſcriptions in their ſickneſſes. Nicolas Sapieha Great Standard-bearer of Lithuania, not knowing what to do to recover his Health, applyed himſelf to the Phyſicians of Padua. They adviſed him to put himſelf into Sennertus's Hands (g). Accordingly he took a Journey to Wittemberg, and went home again perfectly recovered. (h) Polonus ——— non vidit tantum atque coram admiratus SENNERTUM eſt; ſed mactus ingenii beneficio etiam, cùm vidiſſet, diſceſſit. Ut intelligeret, nil ſupra verum narraſſe famam: & pauciora propemodum retuliſſe: expertus noviſſimè opitulatorem feliciſſimum; quem Medicæ eruditionis principem ſalutaverat ante.

(C) That the Seed of all living Creatures is animated.] The difficulties he found in other Opinions made him ſtick to this. The Common Doctrine of the School-Men (i) ſeem'd to him abſurd, viz. That Subſtantial Forms are not produced; for they ſay, the Attribute of being produced belongs to a Natural compound and not to its parts. He did not like Avicenna's Opinion, that there is a Celeſtial Intelligence appointed for the Formation of Souls, which makes uſe of Seeds only as of an Inſtrument. (k) Avicennas animas viventium non à parentibus, ſed à quadam formarum datrice, ſeu ut Scaliger Exerc. 97. loquitur formarum promicondâ intelligentiâ quam Colcodeam nominat, provenire ſtatuit, docetque cæleſtem hanc mentem uti ſemine tanquam inſtrumento ad producendam animam vegetantem & ſentientem. Nor did he approve (l) Fernel's Opinion, that the Heavens form Humane Souls, and ſend them into a well prepared Matter. He derided, not without Reaſon, the Common Opinion of the School-Men, that Subſtantial Forms are taken out of the Power of Matter, educuntur è potentia materiæ. He rejected the plaſtick Virtue which (m) many have aſcribed to the Seed; and therefore he thought there was a neceſſity to follow the Opinion of ſome Ancient and Modern Authors, that the Soul is in the Seed before the Organization, and Forms that admirable Machine, we call a living Body. He quotes (n) two fine Paſſages, one out of (o) Galen, and the other out of (p) Titelmanus, which contain a deſcription of the Art that is obſerved in Plants and Animals. Titelmanus takes the uſual way of Generations, to be a more amazing thing than the firſt production of Animated Beings; and indeed, one may more eaſily conceive that God ſhould immediately produce Plants and Animals, than one can conceive that the Seed ſhould have the Virtue to produce an Organized Body, a Machine ſo induſtriouſly contrived, that in Compariſon of it, all the Works of the Mathematicians are but mean and childiſh Inventions. (q) Quod hæc humani corporis diſpoſitio ex operatione eſt virtutis, quæ latet in paterno ſemine (fœdiſſima, & vix nominanda ſubſtantia, quam abſque abominatione nemo conſpicit) quodque in eo tam præclara lateat virtus, corpus tam admirabile ſic efficiendi ac fabricandi, quòd tota iſtius admirabilis diſpoſitionis efficacia in illo realiter inexiſtat, id nobis meritò in immenſum aggravat pondus conſiderationis noſtræ, id prorſus ſtupidos & attonitos reddit, cogitque exclamare nos, & voce apertà confiteri, quod non ſolùm ipſe magnus ſit in ſemetipſo, neque ſolum magnus in magnis, ſed & in abjectiſſimis, contemptibiliſſimiſque & minimis glorioſus. Galen could not Apprehend what is the Ordinary Cauſe of ſuch an excellent Work; but Sennertus fancies that the Souls contain'd in the Seed have, each of 'em in its kind, the Faculty and Induſtry of Organizing matter. (r) Etſi vero Galenus cauſſam, unde illa omnia fiant, ſe invenire poſſe deſperavit, nihilque hac in re vel probabile reperire ſe potuiſſe, atque ideo magnâ triſtitiâ affectum eſſe teſtatur, lib. de fœt. format. cap. 6. tamen ſi conſideraſſet, iſtas operationes animæ cujuſque ſpeciei proprias eſſe, non ita difficulter cognoſcere potuiſſet, ab anima in ſemine latente iſtas operationes provenire. I had rather ſay, as Galen does, that we are altogether in the Dark about it, than aſcribe to a Soul hid in a ſmall Egg, the Ability that is requiſite to form the Body of an Ant, the Body of a Chicken, &c. Sennertus does very well confute the Hypotheſes different from his; but he admits of certain things, which are Incomprehenſible. He ſays (ſ) that Humane Souls have no quantity, and that they are indiviſible, and yet that each of 'em can produce its kind; that is, that the Soul of a Dog can produce many other Souls of Dogs. This would be a true Creation, and a more difficult Work than the Converſion of the Seed into an Organized Body. Had he known the Hypotheſis, which has been Invented ſince he died, I believe Auguſtus Buchnerus in orat. funebri Sennerti, apud Witmemor. Medicor. pag. 97. (i) Toletus, Conimbricenſes ii, apud Sennertum de generat. viventium, cap. 1. pag. . tom 1. edit Lugd. 1676.

---

(k) Sennert ib. cap. 2.

(l) Fernelius, lib. 1. de abdit. rerum cauſis pluribus in locis, acriter defendit omnem animam à cœlo proficiſci, & à cœlo animam omnem in materiam præparatam & idoneam immitti. Id. ibid. pag. 124.

(m) Vide Jacobum Schegkium lib. 1. de plaſt. ſeminis facultate, apud Sennert. ib. cap. 5. pag. 127.

(n) Ibid. pag. 130.

(o) Galen. lib. 3. de uſu part. cap. 10.

(p) Franc. Titelmanus lib. 8. Phyſ. c. 11.

(q) Titelmanus ib. apud Sennertum ubi ſupra.

(r) Sennert. ibid.

(ſ) Sennert. ibid. pag. 132. col. 1. & 2.

Seed produces Organization. He has been accuſed of Blaſphemy and Impiety (D) becauſe believe he would have heartily Embraced it; I mean, the Hypotheſis mention'd by me in another (a) place, which has afforded many fine Hints to the Illuſtrious Mr. Leibniz; 'Tis that of the Modern Philoſophers, who having diſcovered with the help of Microſcopes that there are Animals in the Seed, think that living Bodies are Organized from the beginning of the World before they are Born. Which leads them to this thought, That ever ſince the firſt Original of things, the Souls have been United to the ſame Organized Bodies, and that Generation or Birth is only the Extenſion or Growth of the Individuum, which is the Primitive and continual Subject of the Soul; that this Subject is not deſtroyed by Death; that it loſe only the Particles of Matter wherewith it grew up; that it recovers new ones in another Birth, &c. This Hypotheſis removes the great Difficulties that occur in aſſigning the cauſe of Organization. To have recourſe to God as to the immediate Cauſe is not to Philoſophize. To have recourſe to the general Laws of Motion is but a Poor Solution; for ſince 'tis agreed by all Sects, that thoſe Laws cannot produce, I will not ſay a Mill or a Clock, but the courſeſt Tool that is in a Smith's Shop, how could they produce the Body of a Dog, or even a Roſe and a Pomgranate? To have recourſe to the Celeſtial Bodies or to Subſtantial Forms is a pitiful ſhift. We want a Cauſe which has an Idea of its Work, and knows how to form it: Thoſe two things are requiſite in thoſe who make a Watch and build a Ship; much more are they neceſſary in the Cauſe of the Organization of living Bodies. 'Tis certain the Celeſtial Bodies have no Idea of a Humane Body, and know not how it ought to be formed. The Peripateticks own that the Subſtantial Forms of Plants and Beaſts know not how Matter ought to be modified, to give it the Organs that are in a Tree or in a Chicken; and therefore they are not the cauſe of that Organization. Thoſe who ſay they are the cauſe of it, tho' they know not the Contrivance of that Work, are a thouſand times more Abſurd than thoſe, who ſhould ſay a Man can make a Clock without thinking of it, without having an Idea of it, and without knowing what he does. This Objection ſhews the falſity of Sennertus's Opinion; for he would not have ſaid that the Souls he admitted in the Seed of Plants and Animals, had an Idea of all the Organs of Plants and Animals, and knew how to Frame and Place 'em in their proper Places. And therefore it had been a great help to him, if he had been told that there Organized Individuum's in the Seed; for 'tis more eaſy to conceive that a Soul United to ſuch Individuum's may be the Cauſe of their Growth, than 'tis to apprehend that it can Organize a drop of Liquor, and change it into the Body of a Dog.

WHETHER the general Laws of Motion are ſufficient for the Organization of Bodies.

I know ſome underſtanding Men, who pretend to comprehend that the General Laws of Motion, tho' never ſo ſimple and ſo few, are ſufficient to make a Fœtus grow, provided it be already Organized. But I confeſs I cannot well apprehend it. It ſeems to me, that a ſmall Organized Atom cannot become a Chicken, a Dog, a Calf, &c. unleſs an Intelligent Cauſe directs the motion of Matter that makes it grow; a Cauſe which has an Idea of that little Machine, and knows how to extend and encreaſe it in a due Proportion. I think it will be granted me that 'tis not more eaſy to conceive that the Laws of Motion are the only cauſe of the Building of a little Houſe, than 'tis to conceive (b) that they change it into a large Palace, in which each Room, each Door, each Window, &c. keep the ſame Proportions obſerved by the Builder of the little Houſe. If thoſe two things are equally difficult, why ſhould we believe that the Laws of Motion, which cannot Organize a ſmall Particle of Matter, will be able, if it be Organized, to change it into an Animal a Thouſand times bigger, all the Proportions being duly obſerved in an almoſt Infinite Number of Organs of different Nature, ſome of which are ſoft, others fluid, others hard, &c? I ſhould therefore think it likely that the Growth of a Fœtus, tho' Organized ever ſince the beginning of the World, is directed by a particular Cauſe, which has an Idea of that Work and knows how to enlarge it; as an Architect has an Idea of a Building and knows how to enlarge it, when he executes a Plan ready made, which he lays upon his Table. A great many People will grant me that Animals are unfolded and nouriſhed in Matter, and receive their Growth by the Direction of a Providence; but they'll ſay that God (c) Directs all thoſe things. I declare to them that they go from the State of the Queſtion; for we don't enquire into the firſt Cauſe, and the general Author of all things; we enquire into the ſecond Cauſe and the particular Reaſon of each Effect. To aſſign no other Cauſe than God in this Inquiry, does not become a Philoſopher. Suppoſe there were ſome Rational Inhabitants in the Planets, and they ſhould come down into one of our Houſes, and diſcover the uſe of Rooms, Windows, Doors, Bolts, &c. and at laſt they ſhould be contented to admire the Providence of God, who has raiſed ſuch a convenient Building for Men, would they not be rightly Accounted Ignorant? They would not know that this Houſe was Built by Men, and that a Humane Architect directed the Situation of the Stones, Boards, &c. according to the uſes he deſign'd them for. 'Tis true, Man receives that knowledge from God; but God is not the Natural and immediate Cauſe of that Building. The ſame ought to be ſaid of Trees and Animals; their Machines depend upon the particular direction of a Second Cauſe, which has received from God the Knowledge and Induſtry that are requiſite for ſuch a Work. The difficulty lies in aſſigning that Second Cauſe. Some will have it that the Subſtantial Form of each mix'd Body is a Spirit, on which God has beſtowed the knowledge that is neceſſary to produce the Temper and Effects of that mix'd Body. Dr. Henry Moor (d), who believed the Pre-exiſtence of Souls, was of Opinion, that being United to Matter, they themſelves frame an Organized Body to reſide in it. That Hypotheſis may be confuted by our Ignorance of what ought to be done, in order to put together Nerves, Veins, Bones, &c. It might be anſwered that the Soul forgets all thoſe Ideas, as ſoon as her Lodging is finiſh'd, becauſe the courſeneſs of the Organs of a Humane Body breaks the Communication ſhe had before with very ſubtil occaſional Cauſes. But I had rather ſuppoſe that the Soul does not direct the Motions neceſſary for the growth of a Fœtus; I had rather aſcribe that direction to another Spirit. If any one had a mind to rectify the Suppoſitions of Avicenna, he might ſay that there is a Created Intelligence, which preſides over the Organization of Animals, and makes, as it were, a kind af a general Manufacture of 'em, having a vaſt number of Workers under its direction, ſome for the Bodies of Birds, others for the Bodies of Fiſhes, &c. juſt as in our Towns there are many Trades-Men; ſome make Watches, others make Cloaths, &c.

(D) Of Impiety, becauſe he taught that the Souls of Beaſts are not Material.] He (e) rejects the Opinion of thoſe, who maintain that they are not of a more noble Nature than the Elements, and he ſays, that they are by their Nature as Immortal as the Souls of Men; ſo that if the latter do not Periſh with their Bodies, as others do, 'tis thro' (f) a ſpecial Favour of the Creator. He could not deny that he aſcribed an Incorporeal Nature to the Souls of Beaſts; for he acknowledged that they are not produced from Matter, and he Laugh'd at the School-Mens Eduction: But he would not ſay that they are Immortal. Freitag (g), who writ againſt him with great Fury, did not fail to object to him that his Doctrine was Impious and Blaſphematory: Which was the reaſon why a Book was Publiſh'd (h) in his Vindication, with this Title. De origine & natura animarum in brutis ſententia clariſſ. Theologorum in aliquot Germaniæ Academiis, quibus ſimul Daniel Sennertus à crimine blaſphemiæ & hæreſeos à Joh. Freitagio ipſi intentato abſolvitur. Freitag applied himſelf to all the Univerſities in Chriſtendom, and to all the Lovers of Orthodoxy, exhorting them not to ſuffer thoſe pernicious Innovations. He ask'd the Divines, whether they would bear that Impious Opinion, which aſcribed Immortality to the Souls of Beaſts, which revived the Doctrine

(a) In the Article Rorarius.

(b) Note, that I own there is this difference between the enlarging of a Houſe and the growth of a Fœtus that the Organs of the Fœtus are Moulds thro' which a new Matter may be filtrated and diſtributed. A little Houſe has no ſuch thing.

(c) M phorus Carter a Strig Groni in the Chap of his Treat parts tir. & legitimo, having jected al the caſes that are alledged of the mation of our Souls aſcribes to God. Sennertus ubi ſupra cap. 12. pag. confutes him.

(d) Henr. Morus animâ l. c. 4.

(e) Sennert. ubi ſupra cap. 9. p. 13

(f) Abs qua divi voluntat & peculiari erg homines grata ſi fuiſſet formæ humanæ non minus peri turæ quam b torum. cap. 14. pag. 14

(g) A P ſian and Profeſſor of Philo phy at Groningen.

(h) At Francfort 1638. in 8. Lindeni renovat pag. 2

becauſe he taught that the Souls of Beaſts are not Material; for his Adverſaries pretended that it was the ſame thing as if he had taught that they are no leſs Immortal than thoſe of Men. He rejected that Conſequence; he durſt not ſay, as others do, that the Souls of Brutes (E) ſubſiſt after the Death of the Subjects Doctrine of the Tranſmigration of Souls, &c. (a) Admirentur ne Theologi impiam illam de actu formarum emiſſivo, quo animis brutorum talis aſſignatur eſſentia & ſubſtantia, qui extra propriam quam informant materiam, alibi ſubſiſtere & exiſtere poſſint, opinionem? qua Metempſychoſis reducitur, Palingeneſia aſtruitur, & poculum animabus immortalitatis comparatur. Ferentne commentum de generatione formarum corruptibilium ex nihilo, è diametro ſacræ ſcripturæ adverſum & inimicum? He ſuppoſes that the greateſt part of the Profeſſors of Wittemberg were willing to ſtifle thoſe Monſters; and that the great Intereſt of their Collegue prevented their riſing up againſt him. Non ignoro Reverendos & celeberrimos Theologiæ in Academiâ Witebergicâ Profeſſores, cæteroſque Clariſſimos Profeſſores & Philoſophos, paucis de fece Sennertianâ, qui ab ipſius auſpiciis dependent, & ſputa Sennerti lingunt, quod ejus promotione gaudeant, exceptis, non tantum diſſentire, ſed & omni conatu id velle, ut errores hi in ipſâ herbâ ſupprimantur, verum ita cohiberi quod adverſus iſtum Vejovem Sennertum magnatum quorundam favore fultum ſubnixumque vix mutire & hiſcere auſint (b). Sennertus complain'd that Freitag imputed to him ſuch Conſequences as he did not acknowledge. Malitia verò eſt, ſays he (c), quod paſſim opiniones mihi affingit, quæ mihi nunquam in mentem venerunt. Inter quas non poſtrema eſt, quod ſcribit, me ſtatuere beſtialium animarum immortalitatem. Pro bono Viro Freitagium non habebo, donec monſtraverit locum, in quo ſtatuerim, animam canis, equi, bovis, leonis, anſeris, anatis, corvi, & ſimilium brutorum eſſe immortales, & poſt mortem ſupereſſe. Conſequentia verò, quibus id è meis opinionibus extorquere vult, nulla ſunt. Etſi enim inſectorum, & ſponte natorum formæ corpore organico ad ſenſum diſſoluto in materia inſtar ſeminis ſeſe habente aliquandiu conſiſtere poſſint: tamen immortales non ſunt, ſed ſuo tempore abolentur. Neque ideò animæ brutorum ſunt immortales, quia ex nihilo à Deo creatæ ſunt. Neque enim immobilis, ut putat regula eſt, quod aliquid quod ſemel fuit, in nihilum redigi nequeat. Longè rectius J. C. Scaliger, exerc. 307. ſect. 20. ſcribit &c. It may be that Sennertus, tho' a Man of great Parts, did not perceive that the Conſequences aſcribed to him, did naturally reſult from his Principle; but 'tis more likely that he perceived them, but durſt not own them, propter metum Judæorum. And therefore he rather choſe to be accounted a Man, who did not argue well, than to expoſe himſelf to the Conſequences of the Doctrine of the Immortality of Beaſts. However it be, any Philoſopher who pretends to argue Conſequentially, will rather ſay, That he knows not what the Souls of Beaſts are, than maintain on one ſide, that they are produced out of Nothing, independently upon Matter, and on the other, that they are not created Beings, and that they are annihilated as ſoon as Brutes ceaſe to live. Such was Sennertus's Opinion: His Apologiſt (d) poſitively declares that the Souls of Beaſts are made out of Nothing, and yet that they are not Created. He quotes Dannhawerus (e), who alledged the ſpecies intellectuales to ſhew that whatever is made out of Nothing, is not a Created Being. He quotes Thummius (f), who alledged the Habits of the Soul to prove the ſame thing. Thus the Peripateticks elude every thing with Arguments ad hominem. Freitag does continually object to Sennertus, that he believes the Immortality of the Souls of Beaſts; he falls into a Poetical Enthuſiaſm to exhort all manner of Beaſts to ſhout with Joy; he pretends that our Phyſician revives the idle Fancies of Paracelſus, who taught that all Souls return'd into the World from time to time. (g) Plaudite, ait, oves & boves, lupi & ſcarabæi, & veſpæ & quicquid uſpiam crabronum eſt.

Vita equidem veſtris animis à funere reſtat,
Reſtat & in corpus poſſe redire novum.
Forſitan animæ quod obivis eſſe poteſtis,
Dum triplicis mundi flamma reſolvat opus,
Dicitque quæ vobis ſtatio & fortuna ſuperſit,
Cum ruat in priſcum machina trina Chaos?

Subjicit. Hi ſcilicet ſunt fructus floreſque novæ doctrinæ à Paracelſo profectæ, quam Chriſtiani etiam (proh pudor!) ſere amplecti non erubeſcunt, quæ ſtatuitur formas rerum præter humanam corruptibilium, officio informationis functas, eſſentiam & exiſtentiam ſuam ſervare, ubi Paracelſus addit eas ire ad Orcum & Iliadum ſuum, & quotannis aut certo temporibus redire in mundi theatrum, & aſſumpto fabricatoque corpore perſonam ſuam pro ævo ſibi deſtinato ſuſtinere, eaque depoſita viciſſim ad ſuos ibi avos & proavos immortali quiete beatos redire. Sperlingen (h) anſwers in few words, That it is neither his nor Sennertus's Doctrine: And therefore he tacitly confeſſes they know not how to draw from a Principle the Conſequences ariſing from it, and that they aſcribe a very ſtrange Conduct to God, viz. That he has ordered an almoſt infinite number of Incorporeal Subſtances to be Created, which he quickly Annihilates. Heat produces every year a prodigious number of little Animals, which live no longer than the Heat laſts. Is it not a very ſtrange thing that ſo many Spiritual Souls ſhould be annihilated, becauſe there happens ſome alteration in the Organs of Animals? 'Tis to be obſerved that the School Philoſophers have made uſe againſt the Carteſians of the Arguments alledged by Dannhawerus and Thummius. They brought in ſome Inſtances, to ſhew that ſome things are produced out of Nothing, and yet are not properly Created. The Accidents of Matter afforded them thoſe Inſtances; but the Carteſians anſwered, that thoſe Accidents are not Beings diſtinct from the Subject in which they are: And therefore the Arguments made uſe of to prove that Subſtantial Forms would be Created Beings, cannot be retorted. The Carteſians reduce all the Alterations of Matter to Local Motion, and pretend that the Motion of a Body is the Body it ſelf, as it receives Exiſtence with new Relations. They muſt therefore acknowledge that Matter, conſidered as being in Motion, is Created, and that God alone can produce Motion; for none but God can Create. But the School-Men have recourſe to ſome other Examples; they ask whether the free Acts of a Man's Soul are diſtinct from the Soul. If they are diſtinct from it, they are a Being produced out of Nothing, and yet not Created; and therefore it may be ſaid that Subſtantial Forms are not Created. If they are not diſtinct from it, a Man's Soul, conſidered as having Ill Thoughts, muſt be Created: And therefore 'tis not the Soul that Forms an ill act of her Will; for ſince it is not diſtinct from the ſubſtance of the Soul, and ſhe cannot be the cauſe of her own Exiſtence, it plainly follows, that ſhe cannot be the cauſe of any of her Thoughts. She is not therefore anſwerable for willing Ill Things hic & nunc, no more than for Exiſting hic & nunc. The Carteſians know not how to Anſwer that Objection: The Perplexity they are in brings in again the Doctrine of Subſtantial Forms, and all the Chimera's of the Schools, becauſe the Arguments alledged by them prove too much. Such is the fate of Diſputes: They ſpring again out of their Aſhes; the Party ready to lay down their Arms find at laſt ſome Retorſion, whereby they recover their Ground, and diſpute it as before.

(E) As others do, that the Souls of Brutes Subſiſt.] Joannes Scotus Erigena (i) maintain'd not only that they are not Material, but alſo that they preſerve their life after the death of Brutes. John Lippius Profeſſor of Divinity at Straſburg taught the ſame thing. Dr. Henry Moor believes they ſubſiſt out of the Body, and thinks it probable enough that

(h) Mendacium eſt, brutorum animas nobis immortales & poſt mortem ſuperſtites eſſe. Mendacium eſt, nobis animas illas ubique eſſe, & abſque omni in mundo vagari materia. Mendacium eſt, nobis ortum ac interitum hominum & brutorum unum eundemque eſſe. Mendacium eſt, nobis bruta & homines formâ ſimiles & materiâ pares eſſe. Ibid. pag. 210.

(i) Subſtantiam incorpoream docuerunt Joannes Scotus Erigena, lib. 3. de diviſione naturæ, n. 41. . . . Joan. Lippius . . in Myſtaphyſica magna lib. 2. c. 1. pag. 386. . . . ille, adverſus Baſilium & Gregorium Nyſſenum diſputans, vitam ſeparatas à corpore non amittere; hic, quoque ſejunctas in aere exiſtere atque modo aliquo operari opinatur, forte cum univerſo olim in nihilum redigendas. Joan. Cyprianus, Hiſtor. animal. continuat. pag. 24.

hanne Sperlingen, Phyſ. Prof. P. Wittemberg 1638. in 8.
) Sperlingen pag. 182. of the Book, the Title of which I have now ſet down. (e) Dannhawerus, in Collegio Pſych. diſ-(f) Thummius in Diſputat. de traduce. (g) Sper-ubi ſupra pag. 206, 207.

Subjects which they have animated. His Opinion about the cause of Metals and Minerals was somewhat singular; he believed they are (F) formed by Intelligent and Spiritual Beings.

SENNERTUS,

that they continue to live in that State, but dares not affirm it: Only he alledges reasons pro and con (a). I have verified what a Professor of Leipsick ascribes to him. (b) Morus & superstites (animas brutorum) & in corpora alia remeare tradit cap. 2. (c). That Professor tells us a curious thing, viz. That a certain Man had taught few years before, that if Man had not sinn'd, Brutes had never died, and that they shall be raised with Men, to be Transported into Heaven; which is the Opinion of the Turks. (d) Absurdissime omnium M. B. Semigentilis & semi Christianus ante paucos annos cum monstrosis opinionibus aliis etiam hanc protulit, bruta nisi peccavisset homo, moritura non fuisse, atque eadem tamen licet nunc moriantur, cum hominibus olim resuscitanda, & ab hoc centro mundi ad liberiora cœli spatia transferenda; quod somnium olim Muhammedo à Turcis hodie creat, teste est Joh. Andreas in libro de Confusione Sectæ Muhammeticæ. He observes that according to Taurellus, the Souls of Beasts are Spiritual, and yet die with their Bodies. Perhaps Taurellus argued Incoherently for fear of exposing himself; he rather chose to prejudice his Reason than his Fortune. Or perhaps he and Sennertus came to believe, out of a Principle of Religion, that God destroys the Souls of Beasts, that none may subsist for ever but those of Men. Perhaps it was the Opinion of the most Eminent Rabbin that flourish'd in the XVIIth Century; for being to prove that the Souls of Brutes do not subsist after this Life, as Mens Souls do, he does not alledge any Reason taken from the Internal Constitution or Essence of those Souls. He makes use of an odd Argument: We often Dream, says he, that we see dead People; but we never see in a Dream any Animal after its Death, tho' it has been familiarly Bred in our Houses. Spizelius rejects this Logick with great reason; but he should likewise have denied the Fact. A great many People may contradict the Rabbin; they Dream a thousand times of their dead Dogs and Horses. (e) Satis ineptè Menasse Ben Israel lib. I. de Resurr. Mort. cap. IX. contendit, Animam hominum, non brutorum esse superstitem ex eo, quod sæpe de illis somniemus qui jam diu è vita excessere, tamen nunquam somniemus de ulla bestia, quæ mortua sit, etiamsi nobis familiaris ac domestica fuerit. Take notice that the pretended Blasphemies charged upon Sennertus, by a Physician and Professor of Philosophy at Groningen, were not look'd upon as an ill Doctrine by the German Divines. Non negandum est, post Franzii librum (f) hunc aliquoties editum Theologos Lipsienses, Rostochienses, Basileenses, Regiomontanos quinquaginta abhinc annis de animâ bestiarum interrogatos, inclinasse magis in Danielis Sennerti opinionem, cui asserenti animas brutorum olim ex nihilo creatas, & hodie etiam alterius quam elementaris naturæ esse, blasphemiam & hæresim Johannes Freitagius Professor Medicus Groningæ intentaverat. Enim verò & eosdem nominatos Theologos legimus in Responsis suis candide disceptationem de naturâ elementari ejus animæ à se ad Philosophos devolvisse, eorumque libertati permisisse (g).

I shall make a Reflection before I conclude this Remark. Tho' Sennertus said that the Souls of Brutes do not Subsist after this Life, as Humane Souls do, he laid down a Doctrine, whereby it plainly appears, that the Souls of Beasts are of the same Species with those of Men. The difference of their Fate, as to Duration, does not proceed from the difference of their Perfections, but from the free-will of the Supreme Master, who is a cause wholly External. Medals and Money are an Image of the Conduct which that Physician ascribes to God. Medals are stamp'd to last for ever; Money is coin'd to last till a new Order to the contrary; for after a certain time it is cried down, and melted and converted into other Species: And yet Medals and Money are made of the same Metal. According to Sennertus a Humane Soul is like Medals, and the Soul of a Brute is like Money. This is a dangerous Opinion; it would follow from thence that we cannot be sure of the Immortality of our Souls but by Revelation. Honoratus Fabri, a Jesuit, who uses Sennertus with the utmost Contempt, and taxes him with grounding his Doctrine upon frivolous Objections and Answers, maintains that this Opinion is somewhat Impious. (h) Ad rationes n. 2. & 3. adductas nonnulla reponit, (Sennertus, Hypomen. 4. c. 10.) quæ nemo sapiens refellere dignetur: v. g. vult, animam rationalem ex natura & indole sua immortalem non esse, sed tantum ex voluntate ac decreto Dei; sed contrarium demonstravit, & hoc nonnihil impietatis sapit: præterea vult semen decisum divina benedictione carere, ac proinde animam, quæ ipsi inerat, interire; si hæ nugæ non sint, nusquam invenies —— Denique quod adducit ex scriptura crescite & multiplicamini —— (i) plusquam inane est —— sed hæc mittamus, sinamusque hominem, ut egregium medicum, ita vix mediocrem Philosophum, & prorsus Catholicum (k). But notwithstanding his great contempt for the Philosophy of that Physician, he takes his Objections against the common Opinion of the School-Men, concerning the Souls of Brutes, to be un-answerable. He approves none of the Hypotheses confuted by Sennertus; and all that he says comes to this, that the Souls of Beasts are not produced anew, that they are not absolute Beings, but a Resultance of a certain Mixture of the four Elements (l). This is an absurd Opinion, which might lead one to say the same of Humane Souls.

(F) He believed that Metals are formed by intelligent and spiritual Beings.] He did not say what his Antagonist imputed to him, that a Stone produces another Stone, and a piece of Gold another piece of the same Metal; but he said that some Spirits, whose abode was unknown to him, and who keep only in certain places, thrust themselves into Mines and Quarries, where they produce the several sorts of Fossiles that are to be found in 'em. Let's see how he expresses himself: He invented not this Opinion; many Learned Men have had the same thought. (m) Malitiosè & illud mihi affingit; quasi statuam in lib. de consens. & dissens. cap. 9. quod lapis lapidem, gemma gemmam, metallum metallum generet. Neque enim tam stultus sum, ut credam, hunc adamantem, hanc crystallum, hoc aurum generare alium adamantem, aliam Chrystallum, aliud aurum, sicut planta una aliam, aut bos bovem, (hæc enim generatio solum viventium est) generat. Hæc verò mea, Anshelmi Boetii, & aliorum doctorum Virorum mens est, omnia metalla, lapides, gemmas, quæ hactenus è terra eruta sunt, & adhuc eruuntur, omnia in prima creatione secundum individua creata non esse, sed fodinas gemmarum & metallorum quod alleg. loc. pluribus historiis probavi, iterum repleri: & esse quosdam spiritus formam architectonicam metallorum & gemmarum in se continentes, qui in terra, quisque secundum suam speciem, producant metalla, lapides, gemmas, iisque figuram, colorem, & alia propria accidentia tribuant, & hos spiritus in fodinas & matrices gemmarum & metallorum sese diffundere, atque ista metalla & gemmas producere. Idque esse formas metallorum multiplicari, dixi. E quibus autem sedibus & locis spiritus illi proveniant, nobis ignotum est, ut pote ignorantibus quanam globi terreni in terra constitutio sit. Hoc certum est, spiritus istos non ubivis terrarum reperiri, sed in quibusdam saltem locis. This seems to be Absurd; but if it be considered, 1. That a good Philosopher must assign another Cause of the Phænomena than God's Will: 2. That neither the Earth nor the Elementary Qualities of Fossiles, nor their Substantial Forms, seem capable of any Effect, that requires a certain disposition of Parts: I say, if this be considered, and besides that one cannot apprehend that the Laws of Motion should be able to place the Particles of Matter exactly as they ought to be in order to make Gold, a Diamond, an Emerald, &c. or to chuse those that are fit for it, that Opinion of Sennertus seems to have some Probability in it. Can the virtue of Bodies, and the general Laws of Motion make any thing in our

(a) Henr. Morus de anima, l. 2. c. 6. n. 105. p. m. 106.

(b) Joan. Cyprianus ubi supra.

(c) He should have added lib. 2. pag. 90.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Substantiam incorpoream docuerunt... Nicolaus Taurellus ... in libello de vita & morte quæst. altera, proposit. 1 v... brutorum animas à morte superesse negat. Id. ibid.

(f) Spizelius, in Scrutinio Atheismi pag. 125.

(g) That is, Historia animalium sacra, written by Wolfgang Franzius Doctor of Divinity, where these words are to be found cap. 2. p. m. 14. Sciendum est animum bruti non esse spiritum, incorporeum, qualis est nostra mens, invisibilis & immortalis, alias quoque bruta essent immortalia. (g) Joh. Cyprianus ubi supra pag. 27.

(h) Hono ratus Fa bri, Tr. de generat. homini lib. ... propofit. 170. pag. 531. edit. Norimberg. 1657.

(i) He says in another place: Bonus Sennertus frustra se torquet & recurrit ad suum Crescite & multiplicamini; frustra alios ignorantiæ accusat, rerum istarum Philosophicarum satis imperitus. Id. lib. de generat. animal. proposit. 66. pag. 178.

(k) I think it should be Acatholicum.

(l) See his 5. Book De generat. animalium proposit. 56. & seq. pag. 164. & seq.

(m) Daniel Sennertus, epistola ad Joh. Sperlingen: It is in Sperlingen's Tract, Intitled, Defensio tractatus de origine formarum.

SENNERTUS (Andrew) Profeſſor of the Oriental Languages in the Univerſity of Wittemberg his Birth-place, Publiſh'd a great (Z) many Books, whereby it appears, that he Learnedly and Worthily diſcharged the Duties of his Profeſſorſhip. He exerciſed it † 51 Years, and died the 22d of December 1689, being 84 Years of Age *. He learn'd ‖ the Arabick Tongue of Golius at Leyden, and found out a very good Method to teach it. Dr. Pocock, who was an extraordinary good Judge, α gave him that Encomium. He has been commended for many other things in his Funeral Oration, and particularly for this, viz. That his Charity and Temperance procured him the advantage of attaining to a great Old Age, with the Vigour of the Body and Mind, that is neceſſary to a ſtudious Man, and a Profeſſor β.

SERBELLON, an Italian Family, which has afforded many Men of Note, as will appear hereafter. According to Fabulous γ Genealogies, it derives its Original from Cordubellius, the Head of the Spaniards in the time of Scipio Africanus. We are told, that ſome Ages ago, it was divided into Three Branches, becauſe Three Brothers left Burgundy, where their Family flouriſh'd, and one of 'em went to the Kingdom of Valencia, the other to Naples, and the Eldeſt to Milan. The Spaniſh Branch removed long after into Sardinia, where it continues to this Day. That of Naples is extinct, or has been reunited to that of Milan, which made a greater ſhow than the reſt, and is ſtill conſiderable δ. The Perſons I am going to ſpeak of deſcended from it.

† Witte, Diar. biograph. tom. 2. p. 175.
* Id. ib.
‖ Conradus Samuel Schurzfleiſchius orat. funeb. Andreæ Sennerti p. 91 edit. Witt. 1697.
α Id. ib.
β Id. ib. pag. 94.
γ Gio. Pietro de Creſcenzi nel ſuo Anfiteatro Romano apud Prioratum, Scen. d'huom. illuſtri.
δ Priorato ibid. and obſerve that his Book was Printed in 1659.

SERBELLON (John Peter) was the Father and Uncle of ſeveral Illuſtrious Perſons. He Married in 1506. Elizabeth Rainoldi, a Woman of a Noble and Ancient Family in Milan, and Aunt of John Baptiſt Rainoldi, Preſident of the Senate of that Town. He had by her Five Sons and Two Daughters: one of the two Daughters was a Nun; the other Married the Count de Macagno. Gabriel his Eldeſt Son, was a very great Captain. I ſhall beſtow an Article upon him. The Second, whoſe Name was John Baptiſt, took Orders, applied himſelf to the Court of Rome, was made Biſhop of Caſſano in Calabria, where he did not reſide, becauſe he was employ'd in many important Intrigues at Rome, and was appointed by Pius IV. Governor of the Caſtle of St Angelo during his whole Pontificate. The Third Son of Peter Serbellon was call'd Fabricius: I ſhall alſo beſtow an Article upon him. The Fourth Son was John Antony, who was Biſhop of Foligno, and then of Novara, and the firſt Cardinal whom Pope Pius IV. made in the Year 1560. He was Governor of ſeveral Towns in the Eccleſiaſtical State, Legate of Peruggia and Romagna, Biſhop of Oſtia and Velletri, and Died Dean of the Sacred College in 1591. He was a cunning Politician, who had a Hand in the moſt ſecret Negotiations of the Court of Rome under Pius IV. Pius V. Gregory XIII. and Sixtus V. Being Couſin to Pius IV. he eaſily obtain'd ſome Privileges for the College of Doctors at Milan. He found it more difficult to get 'em Confirm'd by Sixtus V. who was reſolved to ſuppreſs 'em; but at laſt he carried his Point, and even got thoſe Privileges amplified. The laſt Son concern'd himſelf only with his Domeſtick Affairs. Our Serbellon had a Siſter call'd Cecil, who was Married in 1485, to Bernard (A) de Medicis. She had Six (B) Sons and Seven Daughters ε.

SERBELLON (Gabriel) Eldeſt Son of the fore-going, was a famous Warrior in the XVI Century. He was Knight of Malta, and great Prior of Hungary. He gave good Proofs of his Valour when he defended Strigonia againſt the Turks, and ſignaliz'd himſelf ζ at the famous Paſſage of the Elbe, and at the Battle that was fought immediately, in which Charles V. obtain'd ſo great a Victory over the Duke of Saxony. He was Lieutenant General of the Imperial Army. He had the ſame Poſt in Italy in the Army of the Marquiſs de Marignan his Couſin, during the War of Siena, and that place Surrendred to him at laſt. He had before ſubdued η Saluſſes in Piedmont for the Emperor Charles V. After the taking of Siena, he took ſome ε Taken from Count Gualdo Priorato, Scena d'huomini illuſtri.

ζ In 1547.
η In 1552.

---

our Shops, and Laboratories without our direction? Could they make a Shoe, a Glove, a Needle, if Men did not meddle with them? How then can one believe that they produce without any direction a vaſt number of Things, a thouſand times more difficult than our Clocks?

(Z) Publiſh'd a great many Books.] You'll find a Catalogue of 'em in the Second Volume (a) of Witte's Diarium Biographicum, out of which I ſhall only Tranſcribe the following Lines: Athenæ & inſcriptiones Wittenbergenſes. Diſſertatio de quatuor linguæ Ebraicæ ætatibus. Scrutinium religionum, de religionum varietate, & una ſola Chriſtiana & vera. De principio religionis in genere, & Chriſtianæ in ſpecie. De punctorum vocalium Ebr. neque cum literis, neque cum verbo Dei coævitate; de Urim & Tummim.

(A) Bernard de Medecis]. Priorato ſeems to approve (b) thoſe, who ſay that this Bernard was of the Family of Medicis, which has obtain'd the Supreme Power at Florence; but many other Writers call the Family of Pius IV. by the Name of Medequin and not by that of Medicis.

(B) She had ſix Sons, and ſeven Daughters.] John James the Eldeſt Son, was the famous Marquis de Marignan, one of the greateſt Captains of his Age. The Second, who was made Cardinal by Paul III. was elected Pope in 1559, and took the Name of Pius IV. Two other Sons of Cecil Serbellan were Marquiſſes of Marignan one after another, after the Death of their Eldeſt Brother. Their Brother Gabriel ſerved in the Armies of Charles V. with great Courage: The Younger Brother died a Child. Of the Seven Daughters, none but two, viz. Margaret and Clara, remain'd in the World; the other five were made Nuns. Margaret Married the Count Gilbert Borromeo, and was the Mother of St. Charles Borromeo. Clara was the Wife of Count Mark (c) Altaemps. I have mention'd in another (d) place, a Cardinal, who proceeded from this Marriage.

Page 172, 173.
Ber-do lla noliſſimi milia de dici, ſi era ſcritto habitada Fio-nza in lano me ſcri-Berdino rio.

(c) Taken from Count Gualdo Priorato Scen. d'huomini illuſtri.
(d) In the Article Altaemps.

ſome other Towns in Tuſcany, which refuſed to acknowledge the Houſe of Medicis; and being made General of the Holy Church, both by Sea and Land, under the Pontificate of Pius IV. he recovered Aſcoli, built ſeveral Fortreſſes in the Eccleſiaſtical State, fortify'd the Caſtle of St. Angelo, re-built Civita Vecchia, and performed many other things of that nature; for he was a very good Engineer, which was the Reaſon why, after the Death of Pius IV. the King of Spain ſent him into the Kingdom of Naples, and into Sicily, to take a view of all the Places, and order what he ſhould think fit. Being gone occaſionally into the Iſle of Malta, he drew the Plan, and laid the Foundations of the New Town †. The Duke of Alva would have him with him in the famous Expedition of the Netherlands ‖. Serbellon was General of the Artillery, and went conſtantly before to make the Ways ready; ſo that he had a great ſhare in the glory of that famous March, one of the moſt remarkable Operations that ever was ſeen in that kind. Tho' the Engineer Paciotti, whom the Duke of Alva obtain'd of the Duke of Savoy, directed the Conſtruction of the Citadel of Antwerp; yet 'tis certain, that Serbellon was the Chief Supervisor of that Work β. He return'd ſome time after into Italy, and was at the Battle of Lepanto, where he got a great glory. He was there Captain General of the Artillery, and Commander of a Squadron of Spaniſh Galleys. He was ſo much for giving Battle, that he made Dom Juan of Auſtria reſolve upon it. The Year following he commanded in Sicily, and was made Viceroy of Tunis. The Turks having taken Goulette, beſieged him with ſo many Troops in Tunis γ, where the Citadel he was building was not yet finiſh'd, that after they had been repuls'd in four ſeveral Aſſaults, at laſt they took the Place with main Force. He was made Priſonner, and carried to Conſtantinople. He was exchanged (A) for 36 Turkiſh Officers taken at the Battle of Lepanto. When he arrived at Milan, his Birth-place, in 1575, that City expreſſed their Joy publickly for his Arrival. He was Leutenant-General of the Marquis d'Aimonte, Governor of the Milaneſe, the two following Years, that is, he govern'd that Country alone; for the Governor durſt not ſtay in it by reaſon of the Plague. Afterwards Serbellon received Orders to repair to the Netherlands, to Command there immediately under Dom Juan δ. He brought thither two Thouſand Men raiſed in the Milaneſe. That Prince had a great Eſteem for him, and called him Father. He entruſted him with the Care of haſtening, as much as he could, the Conſtruction of the Citadel of Namur ε; but they fell (B) ſick both of 'em, which put a ſtop to the Work. Dom Juan, who was only in the 33d Year of his Age, died of his Sickneſs; Serbellon, tho' above Seventy Years old, recovered of his ζ. He had a great ſhare in the (C) taking of Maeſtricht, and return'd into Italy towards the latter end of the Year 1579. He had been choſen to Command the Army which Philip II. intended to ſend into Portugal, to ſeize on that Kingdom as ſoon as Cardinal Henry ſhould die; but he could not Crown his glorious Life with that great Exploit, for he died in January 1580, being ready to go into Spain η. One of his Sons was kill'd at the Siege of Tunis θ.

† Ex Priorato ubi ſupra.

‖ In 1567.

β Ex Strada de bell. Belg. 1. Dec. l. 6. & 7.

γ In 1571.

δ In 1574. See Thuanus lib. 58.

ε Ex Priorato ubi ſupra.

ζ In 1578.

η Ex Strada ubi ſupra lib. 10.

SERBELLON (Fabricius) Brother to the Fore-going, was General of the Pope's Troops in the Country of Avignon, during the Civil Wars in the Reign of Charles IX. He was at firſt Captain of a Company of Ordinance, and Governor of Pavia for the Emperor Charles V. Afterwards he exerciſed the Office of Commiſſary General of the Army in Piedmont, and in the Year 1560, he was appointed Governor of the State of Avignon, by Pope Pius IV. and General of his Armies ϑ. He violently ſided with the Catholicks againſt the Proteſtants, and was horribly hated and dreaded by the latter, by reaſon of the Cruelties he exerciſed (A) in Orange, wherein he was furiouſly θ Ex Priorato ibid.

ι Thuan. lib. 58. pag. 76.

κ Priorato ubi ſupra.

(A) He was Exchanged for Thirty ſix Turkiſh Officers]. Gregory XIII made that Exchange. (a) Nec multo ante redierat Gabriel Serbellonius ex Tunetana captivitate in libertatem aſſertus à Gregorio XIII. commutatione captivorum qui navalis victoriæ reliqui Adriana mole attinebantur, charum in primis Auſtriaco ac partibus caput, exactaque non magis ætatis quam diſciplinæ militaris exemplum.

(a) Strada l. 10. dec. 1.

(B) They fell ſick both of 'em.] (b) Strada obſerves upon this occaſion, that the Symptoms being the ſame, all the Phyſicians, excepting that (c) of the Duke of Parma, affirm'd that Dom Juan would recover, and that Serbellon would die. And yet the latter was on the mending hand when the other died; whereupon Pennoni was as much admired as he had been laugh'd at. He might have been look'd upon as an inconſiderate Man, by reaſon of the Old Age of Serbellon, of whoſe Life he did not diſpair, and becauſe he gave Dom Juan over, notwithſtanding his Youth and Quality; but ſince the Duke of Parma was to ſucceed Dom Juan, Pennoni's Freedom is not much to be wondred at.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Hippolytus Pennonius.

(C) In the taking of Maeſtricht.] Priorato ſays he took that Town, and was the firſt who got into it. I durſt not ſay ſo, the thing being not likely, conſidering the Age of that great Captain. It were the Action of an Adventurer; for we muſt remember that Maeſtricht was taken by ſtorm. Priorato is guilty of a ſurpriζing Omiſſion; for he ſays nothing of Serbellon's firſt Journey into the Netherlands; and tho' he aſcribes to him the Conſtruction of the Citadel of Antwerp, which was Built in his firſt Journey, it plainly appears that he did not know that the Duke of Alva brought with him Gabriel Serbellon; he mentions the Citadel of Antwerp only, after having mention'd Serbellon's Journey in 1577, and the taking of Maeſtricht. Thuanus mentions one Count Cernellon, Knight of Malta, and Prior of Hungary, who is the ſame with our Gabriel Serbellon, and yet he diſtinguiſhes 'em; for having ſaid, (d) that the Duke of Alva cauſed the Citadel of Antwerp to be built, being adviſed to it by Chapin Vitelli and Count Cernellon, who had taken a View of that Place, he obſerves that the firſt who Commanded in the Citadel was Gabriel Serbellon. Cum arcis cuſtodia primo cum idoneo præſidio attributa eſſet Gabrieli Serbellonio Mediolanenſi ſpectatæ virtutis Duci, cujus aliquoties a nobis ſupra facta mentio eſt. 'Tis certain he denotes two Perſons, and that he, whom the Duke of Alva conſulted, and ſent to ſee the place, was Gabriel Serbellon: (e) Antuerpiæ arcem fundabat, Paciotti Machinatoris ingenio, Serbellonii judicio.

(d) Th… lib. … pag. …

(e) Str… lib. 7.

(A) The Cruelties he exerciſed in Orange.] Having promiſed riouſly ſeconded by the Commanders (B) of the French Troops. Pius V. kept him in the ſame Offices his Predeceſſor had beſtowed upon him in that Country; but Serbellon did not continue long in 'em: He went home in 1566. and being gone to Rome towards the latter end of the ſame Year, to take upon him the chief Command of the Church, he died in the Houſe of the Cardinal his Brother. He had Married Frances Maleſpina Siſter to the Marquis de Malgrado ‖.

‖ Id. ib.

SERBELLON (JOHN) the Sixth Son of John Baptiſt Serbellon, Count de Caſtillon, and Lord of Romagnano, was a great Captain in the Service of the King of Spain in the XVIIth Century. He was a Native of Milan. He performed his firſt Military Exploits in the Year 1616. Being informed at Rome of the Preparations that were making in the Milaneſe againſt the Duke of Savoy, he immediately repaired to Count John Peter his Brother, Colonel of Horſe, General of the Artillery, and Governor of Gattinara. He applyed himſelf ſo punctually to the Service, that he made it appear he was born for the War, and would raiſe himſelf in time. His Brother having been kill'd at Verceil, as he was taking a view of that place, he had his Regiment given him. He encreas'd in that Poſt the eſteem he was in. He was wounded with a Muſket ſhot at the Siege of Verceil, and loſt his Rigement ſome † time after; but the ſame Duke of Feria, who had reform'd that Regiment, gave him another of Three Thouſand Foot in 1620. during the Troubles of the Valteline. The Proteſtants and the Catholicks being come to blows in that Country, our Count Serbellon was ordered to go and ſupport the Catholicks; and 'tis likely he did not uſe the Proteſtants too gently, ſince the Governor of Milan was well pleaſed with his Zeal and Conduct, and gave a good Character of him to the Court. Nevertheleſs he was reformed, when the Valteline was depoſited into the hands of Gregory XV; but the Troubles beginning again in that Country, Serbellon was ſent thither again, having * the ſame Poſt, and fuller Commiſſions; and the oppoſition he made againſt the French Troops was very well approved, as it appeared by the Offices beſtowed upon

† In 1618.

* In 1624.

promiſed in another place to mention thoſe Cruelties in this Article, the beſt thing I can do is to ſet down the Words of an (a) Author who is accounted a good Catholick. He informs us that Fabricius Serbellon a Gentleman of Milan, of an Ancient Family and of great Experience, who gave himſelf over to moſt Vices that prevail among his Country Men, as he was endowed with their Virtues, joyn'd with the Catholicks of Provence, whom the Counts de Sommerive, de Suze, de Carces, &c. had gathered together, and perſuaded them (b) to make an Attempt upon Orange. He inveſted that Town when the whole Garriſon was gone out, and taking Advantage of that Favourable Juncture, he gave an Aſſault as ſoon as his Battery had made a Breach wide enough. During the Aſſault the Catholicks, that were left in Orange, open'd a Gate to him. He went in thro' it, and his Men were at firſt contented to kill every Body they met in Arms; but afterwards they renewed the examples of the moſt refined Cruelty invented formerly by Tyrants. Thoſe, who were ſo unhappy as to avoid their firſt Fury, were made ſenſible of their Death, being kill'd with many gentle Blows. Some were thrown headlong upon Stakes, Halberds, Swords and Pikes. Some were hung on the Chimneys and burnt with a ſlow Fire. They took delight in cutting the Privy Parts, and their Fury ſpared neither Children, nor old and ſick People, nor the Reapers, tho' the latter had no other Arms than their Sickles. Women and Maids did not come off with the loſs of their Honour, and then being proſtituted to black Guards; for they were ſhot to Death and hung upon the Windows. The Boys were kept to compleat the Abomination, and the Ladies, who rather choſe to die than to ſatisfy the lewdneſs of the Victors, were expoſed ſtark Naked to the publick view with Horns thruſt into thoſe Parts, which Modeſty does not permit to Name. Some of both Sexes were larded with Slips of Paper cut out of the Geneva Bibles. The very Catholicks, who open'd the Gate, were not ſpared: A place being appointed for them, and being told that they would be ſafe in it with their Wives and Children, they were all cut to pieces. There were only a Hundred and Nine Soldiers in the Caſtle, who not being able to defend it, deſired to Capitulate. Their demands were granted them; but as ſoon as they came out, they were ſurrounded; and thoſe who were not thought worthy of being kill'd by the Soldiers, were thrown headlong from the Top of the Rock. When the Plunder had been ſecured, the Victors pull'd down the Walls of Orange; and Serbellon being perſuaded that it would be a piece of Madneſs to leave ſo near the Country of Avignon a conſiderable Town, the Sovereign whereof was a Calviniſt, ſet Fire to it, which quickly Conſumed the Biſhop's Palace, and three Hundred Houſes with thoſe, who had concealed themſelves in 'em. The burning had gone on, had it not been for an extraordinary Rain, which put it out in a Moment, notwithſtanding the care of thoſe who ſtirr'd Fire. D'Aubigné (c) had ſaid long before, that the Catholick Hiſtorians mention'd what he relates concerning the Cruelties exerciſed at Orange. Doubtleſs he meant Thuanus, who (d) relates the whole matter as fully as Varillas and Beza (e); but he had ſome Reaſons not to Name him. It will be granted me that the Hiſtorian, whoſe Words I have tranſcribed, is a writer of greater Authority ad hominem, conſidering the time he wrote in.

a) Varil-
…hiſt. de
Charl IX.
Vol. 1
pag. 201.
203.

b) The
…h of June
1562.

(c) D'Aubigne Vol. 1. pag. 204.

(d) Thuan. l. 31. pag. m. 627.

(e) Beza Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 12. pag. 262.

(B) The Commanders of the French Troops.] 'Tis obſerved in the Relation (f) of the ſacking of Orange, that the Caſtle, the Biſhop's Palace, and ſeveral other Places were ſet on Fire, and part of the Walls pull'd down at the ſollicitation of the Count de Suze. He ſatisfied his Avarice as well as his Cruelty; for he took part of the beſt Booty, and furniſh'd his Houſe with it. Theſe are the Men, on whom private People beſtow ſo many Panegyricks, by Reaſon of their pretended Zeal for Religion and the Glory of God: The Monlucs, the Tavanes, the Suzes and the Guiſes will be Bleſs'd for ever among the Votaries of the Church of Rome; but what did they do for their Religion but get Wealth, Plunder and Domineer? Was this a Service done to God, for which they deſerved to be rewarded? (g) O curas hominum, ô quantum eſt in rebus inane!

(f) Beza ibid.

(g) Perſius, Sat. 1. init.

(A) Againſt the French Troops.] I don't follow my Author in every thing, to avoid advancing ſome Falſities. Priorato will have it, that the following things happen'd in 1624, and 1625. 1. Serbellon's Regiment was ſet on Foot again. 2. He ſo exactly kept the Poſts he had been truſted with in the Valteline, that the Marquis de Cœuvres, who commended the French Troops, could never get an Inch of ground on that ſide. 3. Serbellon being ſent againſt the Duke of Savoy, beſieged and took Nice de la Paglia. 4. He return'd to his former Poſts in the Valteline, where Colonel (h) Papenheim Commanded in his abſence. 5. The Duke of Rohan ſucceeded the Marquis de Cœuvres, and could make no Progreſs no more than he by Reaſon of Serbellon's Vigilance. 6. Serbellon being recall'd to Milan upon more urging Buſineſs, left the Command to Guaſco Colonel of Horſe. 7. The Duke of Rohan being informed of that change, advanced as far as Gravedone, 8. Serbellon was immediately upon him: He was made Counſellor in the ſupreme Council of Spain in 1625, Commiſſary General in the Milaneſe in 1627. General of the Artillery and Governor of Montſerrat in 1628. He ſerved under the Marquis of Spinola at the Famous Siege of Caſal; and ſome Years † after he went into Germany to ſerve in the Quality of Captain General of the Artillery under the Duke of Feria. From the Death of that Duke till the Arrival of the Cardinal Infant, he had the chief Command of the Army in Alſace. He performed wonders at the Battle of (B) Nortlingen, which the Swedes loſt the ſixth of September 1634. and having followed the Cardinal Infant into Flanders, he ſettled Winter Quarters in the Biſhoprick of Liege, and the next ‖ Spring obtain'd leave to go home. He did great Services to the King of Spain againſt the Duke of (C) Rohan in the Valteline, whilſt they were raiſing in Germany the Army he was to Command. It was thought more proper to ſend him into Catalonia, where he Commanded the Cavalry (D) in the Year 1637. He form'd a very Noble deſign, which was to beſiege Leucate, the taking whereof would have made France very uneaſy; but he was forced to raiſe the Siege. He receiv'd many Wounds as he was diſcharging the Duties of a good General; and he was hardly recover'd from his Wounds, when he fell ſick without any hopes of recovery. He died at Perpignan the Twenty firſt of February 1638. He had Married Donna Luiſa, Daughter of the Marquis John Jerome Marin, deſcended from Thomas Marin Duke of Terranova. He had ſeveral Children by her: The Eldeſt was made Marquis de Romagnano by his Catholick Majeſty *.

(h) He, who was kill'd at the Battle of Lutzen.

SERRONI (HYACINTHUS) firſt Arch-Biſhop of Alby, lived in the XVIIth Century. See the Nouvelles de la Republique † des lettres; but mend (Z) two Faults in it. See alſo Moreri's Dictionary.

SERVILIA

mediately ſent back to ſtop him, and obliged him upon the news of his return to ſet Fire to the Palace of the Duke d'Alviti, and to Retire for fear of engaging ſo brave a Captain. The Hiſtorian, having mention'd all theſe things, adds, that for an acknowledgment of all thoſe Services, Serbellon was made Counſellor in the ſupreme Council of Spain in July 1625. It cannot be denied that there are ſome Falſities in this Account. The Duke of Rohan did not Command in the Valteline at that time. The Marquis de Cœuvres was there ever ſince France made uſe of Forcible means in 1624. till the Execution of the Treaty of Peace in 1627. The Duke of Rohan was then buſy enough in France, being engaged in the Wars of Religion. As for what concerns Serbellon's reſiſtance, which was ſo great, according to Priorato, that the Marquis de Cœuvres could never get an Inch of Ground, I will not alledge againſt it the Hiſtories which mention that Marquis's Progreſs; for I might be anſwered that Priorato does not mean the whole Valteline, but only a certain part of it, into which poſſibly the French Troops could not penetrate. But to ſpeak the Truth, this would be but a Poor ſhift, and little grounded upon the Author's (a) Expreſſions. I can Convict him by his own Words of having confounded the time: And indeed when he relates in another (b) Work what happen'd in the Valteline, he places the Duke of Rohan's Excurſion to Gravedone in the Year 1636. He is in the right as to that.

(B) At the Battle of Nortlingen.] He was Poſted upon a riſing Ground, which the Council of War, held the day before the Battle, took to be of the greateſt Importance for the Succeſs of that great day. The Swedes had the ſame Opinion of it, ſince they uſed their utmoſt endeavours to poſſeſs themſelves of that Poſt; but they were always vigorouſly repulſed by Serbellon. Therefore he had the Satisfaction to hear the Cardinal Infant ſpeak theſe Words to him, in the preſence of the King of Hungary, Conde por Dios y vos tenemos la vittoria (c).

(C) Againſt the Duke of Rohan.] This belongs to the Years 1635, and 1636. The Author is in the Right, with reſpect to that time, to ſay that the Duke of Rohan and Count Serbellon acted in the Valteline: But I doubt whether he gives a faithful Account of what they did; for he ſuppoſes that there being three Bodies of Troops for France, the Duke of Rohan, who Commanded one of thoſe Bodies, endeavoured to joyn the two others, which might have proved very prejudicial to the Spaniards; and that the Count prevented that Conjunction. This is falſe, if we depend upon the Hiſtory (d) of the Duke of Rohan, wherein we are told that he had all his Troops by him; but that he was ſo Poſted, that he had the Germans on one ſide, and the Spaniards on the other. Fernemont (e) Commanded the Germans; Serbellon Commanded the Spaniards. The Duke beat the Germans three times one after another; and then attack'd Serbellon, who was advantageouſly Intrench'd at Morbeigne, and beat him. Priorato ſays nothing of it. But one can hardly doubt of it, conſidering that this Hiſtory of the Duke of Rohan, eſpecially what concerns his Exploits in the Valteline, is all grounded upon Memoirs, which ſeem to be very good. But we need not have recourſe to Memoirs. Does not Priorato in another Book (f) mention the Defeat of the Germans, and ſay that Serbellon was ſoundly beaten at Morbeigne? His own Teſtimony is ſufficient to confute whatever he ſays in his Encomium upon Serbellon with reſpect to the Duke of Rohan. I muſt not forget what he ſays concerning Fernemont, viz. that (g) he fell out with Serbellon, becauſe he did not give him his due Titles in a Letter.

(D) Commanded the Cavalry.] This ought not to be ſo underſtood, as if he had Commanded that Army in chief, for 'tis certain he was under the Duke of Cardonna. 'Tis true the preſence of that Duke did not leſſen the Authority of the Commander of the Cavalry during the Siege of Leucate, for he was not there in Perſon; and there was (h) a French Relation, wherein to confute thoſe who had given out that he had been kill'd in the Field of Battle, 'twas poſitively ſaid he had not been in the Battle, and that in imitation of the Catholick Kings he was contented to be the Spiritual and Inviſible Head of that Army, reſerving to himſelf the Title of General, but leaving the Functions of that Office to Serbellon. Priorato does not expreſs himſelf clearly enough: Any Body would infer from his Expreſſion (i), that the Count had none above him but the Court of Spain.

(Z) Mend two Faults in it.] You'll find in that Book that this Prelate was Born the Third of Auguſt: It ſhould be the Thirtieth. You'll find alſo there that the Biſhop of Pamiers was his Nephew; which is not true. The Author ſhould have ſaid the Abbot de Camps inſtead of that Biſhop. That Abbot is an Illuſtrious and very Learned Man, who has made a very Noble Collection

---

† In 1631.

‖ In 1635.

* Ex Gualdo Priorato ubi ſupra.

† For January 1687. Pag. 113.

(a) Governava il Conte Sorbellone con tanta prudenza, accuratezza, e vigilanza tutti i Forti DI QUELLE PARTI, che con quanti tentativi faceſſe il Marcheſe di Coure Generale allhora di Francia IN QUELLE PARTI, non pote mai auvanzar nè pure un palmo, tanto erano ben cuſtoditi i detti poſti.

(b) Hiſtor. delle guerre di Ferdinando &c. l. 11.

(c) Priorato ibid.

(d) Printed at Paris in 1666. and in Holland in 1667. in 12.

(e) Other call him, Forne-mont.

(f) Hiſtor. delle gu erre di Ferdinando &c.

(g) Ibid. l. 10 pag. 117.

(h) Merc Françoiſ tome, pag. 5

(i) Fu chiamat dal Re Iſpagna, e fatto Maſtro Campo Genera dell' eſe cito di C talogna. Nel pa d'Italia in quelle parti hebbe il commando ſopra tutti i Generali capi da guerra di quell' eſſercito——— benche prima combattimento haveſſe fatta inſtanza per altri ſei mila mini, o almeno quattro, fu dal Conte Duca Privato del mantenuto con lettere affettuoſe in ſperanze grandi, ma mai ſoccorſo d'un ſolo fantacino. Scena d'huom. illuſtri.

SERVILIA, Siſter by the Mother's ſide † to Cato Uticenſis, was Married firſt to Marcus Junius Brutus, by whom ſhe had Brutus, who murdered Julius Cæſar; and then to Decimus Julius Silanus ‡, who was Conſul in the Year of Rome 691. She did not behave her ſelf like a virtuous Woman; for ſhe was Julius Cæſar's Miſtreſs, and improved (A) that opportunity to Enrich her himſelf with the Spoils of miſerable People; but beſides, ſhe proſtituted one of her Daughters to her Lover. Her Brother Cato was very much ſurpriſed when they made (B) him read a Letter Written by her. She pretended to be deſcended || from Servilius Ahala, who kill'd Spurius Melius who had raiſed ſome Factions at Rome in the Year 316.

SERVILIA, Siſter to the foregoing, and Lucullus's Wife, was ſtill more Lewd than ſhe. See the Remark A in the Article Porcia. Lucullus, who had divorced Clodia, a Woman extreamly diſſolute, and infamous for her Inceſt with her Brothers, was not much better for Marrying Servilia; for abating Inceſt, ſhe was not in the leaſt (C) inferior to Lewd Clodia. Her Husband conſtrain'd himſelf as much as he could out of reſpect to his * Brother-in-Law; but at laſt he could bear his Wife no longer, and Divorced her.

SEVERUS (CORNELIUS) a Latin Poet in Auguſtus's Reign. I mention him only lection of the moſt curious Medals that can be found, as it appears by the Book, Intitled, Selectiora numiſmata in ære maximi moduli e Muſeo Illuſtriſſimi D. D. Franciſci de Camps, Abbatis S. Marcelli, & B. Mariæ de Siniaco, conciſis interpretationibus per D. Vaillant D. M. & Cenomanenſium Ducis Antiquarium illuſtrata. It was Printed at Paris in the Year 1693. in 4. M. Vaillant, who is ſo Famous for his great ſkill in Medals, ſpeaks of that Abbot in the following manner at the beginning of that Book. Nummos veteres ex omni materia, omnique modulo ſummâ curâ multiſque ſumptibus collegit undique multis ab hinc annis Illuſtriſſimus ABBAS DE CAMPS, tam proſpero ſucceſſu, ut rei nummariæ ſtudioſis omnibus, Principibus etiam non paucis opulentior in eâ re tandem evaſerat: hi ſiquidem nummos habent permultos, ille verò numiſmata maximi moduli mole, cælaturâ, raritate, eximia, in quibus Imperatorum ſeriem, ſi paucos excipias, cernere licet, ut & res ab eis præclarè geſtas, & quidquid in hiſtoriâ Romanâ legitur auguſtius. Ab amicis ſæpe invitatus, ut quæ privatæ ſtudens, tum utilitati, tum voluptati ſibi comparaverat, in publicum commodum transferret, annuit comiter votis amicorum, ipſe tamen diverſis negotiorum generibus implicatus ea in ære prius, prout extant in ipſis exemplaribus, accuratè inciſa, explicanda mihi poſt-modùm tradidit. If you conſult the Abbot de la Roque (a) in the Extract of a Diſſertation of the Abbot de Camps upon a Greek (b) Medal of Antonius Caracalla, you'll find the following Words in it (c) ". The Curious of "Rome and France have taken great Pains to ex-"plain it, and have been divided in their Opini-"ons about the truth and ſingularity of the Games "repreſented upon it. The Abbot de Camps, who has "a greater ſkill in Medals than one would think, "conſidering his Age, and his great Occupations, "is of Opinion that 'tis a ſhew of Funambuli or "Rope-dancers: Whereupon he propoſes his Con-"jectures full of Wit, and of a profound Learn-"ing—— (d) Having thus cleared with great "Wit and Learning the true ſenſe of the Reverſe "of that Medal, he examines why there are ſome "Funambuli on the Reverſe of a Medal of Ca-"racalla, and what Reaſon moved the Cyzicenians "to offer 'em to him". We are told in another place, upon occaſion of a Canon Burdigalenſis ex M. S. Codice vetuſtiſſimus, which is in his Hands, that he has alſo enquired after ſcarce Manuſcripts. "(e) This Council was never Publiſh'd. We are "obliged for it to the Abbot de Camps, who mak-"ing a diligent ſearch into every thing that may "illuſtrate the Hiſtory of the Suffragancy of Alby, "which he is Writing, has inſerted it at length "in that Hiſtory. He took it out of a Manuſcript "of Councils and Tracts of Ancient Fathers, "whoſe Antiquity, &c". 'Tis not to be doubted that he undertook to write the Hiſtory of the Suffragancy of Alby on Account of our Hyacinthus Serroni, with whom he was very great, but not his Relation. In the Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres I went upon a hear ſay; which was the Reaſon why I was miſtaken in this particular. Whilſt I mend that Fault, I am glad it appears that notwithſtanding my Miſtake, I aſcribed nothing to the Abbot de Camps, but what the Arch-Biſhop his Patron thought him worthy of. This is the ground of my Commentary upon this Article.

(A) Julius Cæſar's Miſtreſs, and improved —— to Enrich her ſelf; but beſides ſhe proſtituted one of her Daughters.] See the Remark A in the Article Porcia, and the Article Caſſius, to which theſe Words of Suetonius may be added. (f) Ante alias dilexit (Cæſar) M. Bruti matrem Serviliam: cui & proximo ſuo conſulatu ſexagies HS. margaritam mercatus eſt: & bello civili ſuper alias donationes, ampliſſima prædia ex auctionibus haſtæ minimo addixit. Cum quidem pleriſque vilitatem mirantibus, facetiſſime Cicero, Quo melius, inquit, emtum ſciatis, Tertia deducta eſt: exiſtimabatur enim Servilia, etiam filiam ſuam Tertiam Cæſari conciliare.

(B) Cato was very much ſurpriſed, when they made him read a Letter Written by her.] Plutarch having ſaid that Julius Cæſar gave orders to prevent Brutus's being kill'd in the Battle of Pharſalia, adds the following Words (g). "And this he is believ'd "to have done out of a Tenderneſs to Servilia, "the Mother of Brutus; for Cæſar had, it ſeems, "in his Youth, been very intimate with her, and "ſhe paſſionately in Love with him: And conſi-"dering that Brutus was Born about that time, "in which their Loves were at the higheſt, Cæ-"ſar had ſome Reaſon to believe that he was begot "by him. There goes a Report too, that when "ſome great and weighty Matters, concerning the "Conſpiracy of Catiline, which had like to have "been the Deſtruction of the Common-Wealth, "were debated in the Senate; Cato and Cæſar, "tho' differing in their Opinions, were placed "near to one another: In the middle of the De-"bate a little Note was delivered to Cæſar "from without, which he took and read ſilently "to himſelf. Upon this Cato cried out aloud, and "accus'd Cæſar for holding Correſpondence, and "receiving Letters from the Enemies of the Com-"mon-Wealth: Many of the Senators being much "concern'd, and the Houſe in an Uproar, Cæſar "deliver'd the Note, as he had receiv'd it, to "Cato, who reading it, found it to be a lewd Let-"ter from his own Siſter Servilia, and threw it "back again in Rage to Cæſar with theſe Words, "Keep it to your ſelf, you Sot. And the Senate that "had been interrupted, fell afreſh to the Buſineſs "that was before them; ſo publick and notorious "was Servilia's Love to Cæſar.

(C) Abating Inceſt ſhe was not in the leaſt inferior to Lewd Clodia.] Plutarch expreſſes her diſſolute life in very Emphatical Words (b) Τῆς δὲ Κλωδίας ἀπηλλαγμένος, ὔσης ἀσελγοῦς ϗ πονηρᾶς, Σερουϊλίαν ἔγημεν, ἀδελφὴν Κάτωνος, οὐδὲ τοῦτον εὐτυχῆ γάμον. ἓν γὰρ οὐ προσῆν αὐτῷ τῶν Κλωδίας κακῶν μόνον, ἡ τῶν ἀδελφῶν διαβολή· τἆλλα δὲ βδελυρὰν ὁμοίως οὖσαν ϗ ἀκόλαστον ἠναγκάζετο φέρειν αἰδούμενος Κάτωνα. τέλος δὲ ἀπεῖπεν. Repudiata autem Clodia, laſciva & improba muliere, Serviliam duxit Catonis ſororem: quæ item nuptiæ parum fauſtæ fuere. Una enim carebat ſola Clodiæ macularum infamia ex fratribus: cætera pariter flagitioſam & impudicam ut ferret Catonis reverentiâ vim intulit ſibi. Poſtremò tolerare eam non valuit.

(A) Some

---

† Plut. in Catone minore init. pag. 759.

‡ Id. ib. pag. 769. See alſo Cicero in Bruto pag. m. 354.

|| Plut. in Bruto init. pag. 984.

* Cato Uticenſis.

(a) In the Journal des Savans of the 29. of November 1677. pag. 309. Dutch Edit.

(b) Which repreſents on the Reverſe ſome Spectacles and publick Games very ſingular and hitherto little underſtood. Id. ibid.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 310.

(d) Ibid. pag. 312.

(e) Journal des Savans of the 20. of November 1679 pag. 317. Dutch Edit.

(f) Sueton. in Cæſare cap. 50.

(g) Plut. in Bruto pag. 986. See alſo the ſame Author in Catone minore pag. 770.

(b) Plutarch. in Lucullo p. 517. E.

only to take notice of ſome Miſtakes in (A) la Popeliniere, Andreas Schottus, &c. See Moreri's Dictionary †: I ſhall (B) alſo obſerve ſome Miſtakes of his.

SEVERUS (SULPICIUS) Flouriſh'd towards the beginning of the Vth Century. He was Illuſtrious for his Birth, and Eloquence, and more (C) ſtill for his Virtue. After he had appear'd with great Luſtre at the Bar, he Married very advantageouſly *, and quickly loſt his (D) Wife, and then he turn'd Prieſt. 'Tis certain he was a Native of the (E) Province of Aquitain; but one may doubt ‖ whether he was Born in the Dioceſe of Agen. The firſt Edition of his Works is (F) little known. His Hiſtory may be ſeen in Moreri's Dictionary, and in M. du Pin's Bibliotheque; and therefore I ſhall not dwell upon it.

He

(A) Some Faults of la Popeliniere, Andreas Schottus, &c.] La Popeliniere confounds that Poet with the Orator Caſſius Severus, for which he was reproved by Voſſius (a); but Voſſius ſhould not have quoted him in ſua Hiſtoria: He ſhould have ſaid in ſua Hiſtoria Hiſtoriarum to remove the Ambiguity; for the thing in queſtion is to be found in the Hiſtore (b) des Hiſtoires, and not in the Hiſtory of the Civil Wars: Tho' one might eaſily ſuſpect that la Popeliniere committed that Miſtake in this laſt Book, ſince the Modern Hiſtorians make ſometimes Digreſſions or Reflections, which give 'em occaſion to ſay what they know of Antiquity. La Popeliniere is not exact in what he ſays of Cornelius Severus: He tells us that he was an Hiſtorian, a great Orator, and an Epick Poet. The Ancient Writers repreſent him as a Poet, but they ſay nothing of his being an Hiſtorian or an Orator. 'Tis true ſome Verſes of his making are to be found among (c) the Fragments taken from ſeveral pieces of Oratory; but he, who collected all thoſe Fragments, ſays nothing whereby it appears, that Cornelius Severus profeſt Rhetorick or the Art of Oratory. Nevertheleſs this very thing, if I am not miſtaken, led Crinitus into that Error, and then la Popeliniere, who had it from him. Crinitus (d) gives it as a certain thing, that Cornelius Severus ſpent many Years in making Declamations, whilſt Aſinius Pollio, Pompeius Silo, Areſlius Fuſcus, Sextilius Hena, Caſtius Pius, Porcius Latro, and Aufidius Baſſus exerciſed the ſame Profeſſion. They are exactly part of thoſe mention'd by Seneca, who has collected their Rhetorical Flouriſhes. La Popeliniere names four of thoſe Declamers with Cornelius Severus, going upon the ſame ground, viz. That Seneca has inſerted ſome Verſes of that Cornelius in his Rhapſodies.

Andreas Schottus is partly guilty of the ſame Miſtake, for in his Tract De claris apud Senecam Rhetoribus, he mentions Cornelius Severus as one of 'em. Nay, he has committed a Fault in the very beginning of his account of Severus, for he applies to him what ought only to be underſtood of Sextilius Hena a Spaniſh Poet in Seneca. That Spaniſh Poet had made a Poem which began with this Verſe, > Deflendus Cicero eſt, Latiaque ſilentia linguæ.

Cornelius Severus gave a better turn to that thought by ſaying,

> Abſtulit una dies ævi decus, ictaque luctu
> Conticuit Latiæ triſtis facundia linguæ.

Whereupon Seneca ſays he will not commend his Country-Man for having made a very good Verſe upon Cicero's Death, ſince it had produced a much finer one, viz. that of Cornelius Severus. On the contrary Schottus makes him ſay, that he will not commend his Country-Man Cornelius Severus, for having made, &c. ſince it had produced a much finer one, viz. that of Cornelius Severus: Which would be odd, and is not the Author's meaning. Beſides, 'tis not true that Cornelius Severus was a Spaniard; nor has that Jeſuit placed him in (e) the Catalogue of the Ancient Writers of his Nation.

Voſſius in one (f) of his Books ſays, that the Old Scholiaſt (g) upon Perſius quotes this Verſe of our Severus, Pinea frondoſi dum murmurat Apennini; but in another (h) Book he aſcribes it to the Ancient Scholiaſt upon Horace, which is a miſtake.

(B) Moreri's Dictionary: I ſhall alſo obſerve ſome Miſtakes of his.] I. Quintilian ought never to be quoted in French by the name Fabius: It is an Ambiguous and Barbarous way of quoting him. II. The two Seneca's ſhould not have been confounded. He, who wrote the Controverſiæ is the Father of the Author of the Letters to Lucilius; and yet Moreri quotes them as being one and the ſame Perſon. III. Moreri ſhould have quoted the 79th Letter of Seneca, and not the 69th. IV. He ſhould have quoted the Suaſoriæ, and not the Controverſiæ. V. He ſhould have ſaid Severus and not Severo, in the Verſe of Ovid quoted by him. VI. This quotation Seneca, in Contr. ſua 6. is faulty in three Reſpects. He ſhould have put a full ſtop after ſua, and quoted the 7. Suaſoria, and not (i) the 6. & Contr. ſhould have been left out. But this is requiring too many things of Moreri; he did not much care to inquire whether there is any difference between Seneca's Controverſiæ and Suaſoriæ. Some Readers will think that one of Seneca's Books is Intitled Controverſiæ Suaſoriæ; a Miſtake which may be eaſily known, by the bare looking into good Editions.

(C) And more ſtill for his Virtue.] Read theſe words of Gennadius, (k) Vir genere & litteris nobilis, & paupertatis atque humilitatis amore conſpicuus: But particularly read theſe Verſes of Paulinus Biſhop of Nola, > Teſtis (l) adeſt docto mirabilis ore Severus,

> Et totâ Chriſtum cordis virtute ſecutus,
> Inſignis mundi titulis, ſed clarior illâ
> Quâ mundum temſit ſanctæ virtute fidei,
> Nobilitate potens, ſed multò extentius idem
> Nobilior Chriſti cultu, quam ſanguinis ortu.

(D) And quickly loſt his Wife, and then, &c.] Which appears by a Letter Paulinus writ to him. (m) Tu frater dilectiſſime, ad Dominum miraculo majore converſus es, quia ætate florentior, laudibus abundantior, oneribus patrimonii levior, ſubſtantiâ facultatum non egentior, & in ipſo adhuc mundi theatro, id eſt fori celebritate diverſans, & facundi nominis palmam tenens, repentino impetu diſcuſſiſti ſervile peccati jugum, & lethalia carnis & ſanguinis vincula rupiſti. Neque te divitiæ de matrimonio familiæ conſularis adgeſtæ, neque poſt conjugium peccandi licentia, & cælebs juventus ab anguſto ſalutis introitu, & arduo itinere virtutis, in mollem illam & ſpacioſam multorum viam revocare potuerunt.

(E) 'Tis certain he was a Native of the Province of Aquitain.] Gennadius (n) ſays ſo; but the thing is ſtill more certain from theſe words of Sulpicius Severus: (o) Sed dum cogito me hominem Gallum inter Aquitanos verba facturum, vereor ne offendat veſtras nimium urbanas aures ſermo ruſticior. This Paſſage is taken from a Dialogue, the Interlocutors whereof are Poſthumian, Sulpicius Severus, and Gallus. Take notice of Gallus's Compliment: He tells the other Interlocutors, that he is afraid being a Gaul, that his Language will appear Harſh and Barbarous to the nice Ears of the Aquitains. He looks upon himſelf as a (p) Gooſe among Swans. At that time the Aquitains were the Flower, the Ornament and Glory of Gaul, in point of Wit and Learning. The beſt Poets, the beſt Rhetoricians, and the moſt excellent Orators of the Roman Empire were to be found in Aquitain. I except the Greeks, and I ſpeak only of thoſe, who wrote in Latin. This was the reaſon of the Modeſty of that Interlocutor. See the Catalogue of Illuſtrious Aquitains by Alteſerra (q).

(F) The firſt Edition——is little known.] The Abbreviators of Geſner's Bibliotheque, Father Labbe, M. du Pin, &c. who mention ſo many Editions of that Author, ſay nothing of the firſt. It was Publiſh'd

---

† Upon the word Severus.

* See the Remark D.

‖ He ſays that Phœbadius Biſhop of Agen was his Biſhop: Which does not prove that he was Born in that Dioceſe.

(a) Voſſius, de hiſtor. Latinis, pag. 109.

(b) Pag. 324.

(c) In Seneca the Father Suaſor. 2. & 7.

(d) De Poet. Lat. c. 57.

(e) Bibliothecæ Hiſpanicæ tom. II.

(f) Voſſius de poetis Latinis, pag. 33.

(g) That Scholiaſt quotes this Verſe

(h) Id. de hiſt. Lat. pag. 109. ad Sat. 1. v. 95.

(i) Voſſius de poet. Lat. p. 33. quotes the 6.

(k) Gennadius, de Script. Eccleſ. c. 19.

(l) Paulinus lib. 5. de vita Sancti Martini.

(m) Idem epiſt. 7.

(n) Severus Presbyter cognomento Sulpicius Aquitanicæ Provinciæ. Gennadius ubi ſupra.

(o) Sulpicius Severus de vita S. Martini, lib. 3.

(p) Argutos inter ſtrepere anſer olores. Virgil. eclog. 9. v. 36.

(q) Ant. Dadinus Alteſerra Rerum Aquitanicarum libri quinque.

He has been Cenſured for ſome things by Poſſevin β, but much leſs than Sigonius who Commented upon him. Guibert Abbot of Gemblours is very much miſtaken in ſaying, That after St. Martin's death, our Sulpicius Severus was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Beziers, notwithſtanding his Reluctancy to it, for 'tis certain he continued a Prieſt all his Life time. There has been one Sulpicius among the Biſhops of Beziers; but that Biſhop was raiſed to that See One Hundred and Ninety Years after St. Martin's death γ.

SFORZA, an illuſtrious Family, derives its Original from a Country-Man of * Cotignola, who became one of the chiefeſt and moſt valiant Captains of his Age: His Name was (A) Giacomuzzo; but according to the cuſtom of the Peaſants of thoſe parts, the two firſt ſyllables of his Name were left out, and he was only call'd Muzzo. He left the Plow and Liſted himſelf, and quickly got the Reputation of a deſperate Soldier. He ſpoke of nothing but of Devaſtations and Ranſackings, and would get by force whatever he had a mind to. Which was the reaſon why he was Sirnamed † Sforza, which became afterwards the Proper Name ✠ of his Poſterity. I muſt not forget that he was alſo Sirnamed Attendolo ||. See the firſt Remark of this Article. The Famous Braccio was his Fellow Soldier, under the General Alberic de Barbiano. At firſt they Loved one another, as if they had been Brothers; but their Emulation or Jealouſy turn'd at laſt into Enmity. Ever ſince they always Embraced contrary Parties, ſo that when one of 'em was made General of the Troops of a Prince or Republick, the other had the like Imployment in the State that was at War with that Prince or Republick. They ſold their Flatterers, who had a mind to gain the Favour of Giacomuzzo's Poſterity. This is what Leandro Alberti ſays. Auvenga che alcuni cercando di acquiſtar gratia, ſcrivono altrimente (g). If I am not miſtaken, ſome Flatterers, even in the Life time of our Sforza, extoll'd his Birth, and denied what was publickly known; for tho' it be infinitely more Glorious to raiſe one ſelf to a great Fortune by Noble Exploits, notwithſtanding the meanneſs of one's Extraction, than to attain by the ſame means to the higheſt Dignities with the help of a Noble Birth; yet moſt People are unwilling to be upbraided with the Obſcurity of their Original. Moſt of thoſe, who raiſe themſelves from the loweſt to the higheſt Degree, are at laſt more willing not to be accounted Ignoble, than to be look'd upon as Men, who have overcome by their Merit the Obſtacles of a mean Extraction. They are very glad when they are ſaid to be deſcended from very illuſtrious Anceſtors, and when care is taken to make every body forget the mean Condition they were Born in. They are ſeldom of Agathocles's mind, who being made King (h) would be ſerved at Table not only in Plate, but alſo in Earthen-ware, to let every Body know that he was a Potter's Son.

lish'd by Matthias Flacius Illyricus, who put to it only the firſt Letters of his Name; which was the reaſon why a Catholick Writer beſtowed ſome Praiſes upon him, for which he was ſorry, when he came to know that the Editor was a Lutheran. This I find in a Satyrical piece of Father Vavaſſeur againſt Biſhop Godeau. Iſto ferme pacto, ſays he (a), quamvis minùs turpiter, utpote unus ac privatus, atque in cauſa leviore, clariſſimus ſe ſcriptor deceptum ſenſit, & doluit. Cùm enim mirificis laudibus extuliſſet eum, qui primus perelegantes Sulpitii Severi libros edidiſſet in lucem, neque theſaurum hunc, quam teneret ſolus, invidiſſet diutius literatis ac doctis; cumque cum propter tantum beneficium, tum maximè modeſtiæ nomine ſuſpiceret, quòd celaſſet nomen, literas modò, M, & F, adſcripſiſſet: intellectum eſt poſteriùs, Matthiam Flaccium eſſe ejuſmodi, hominem non ſolùm non modeſtum, qui hoc modeſtiæ cauſa non feciſſet, ſed etiam impurum & nequam hæreticum, qui in centurias Magdeburgenſes multa de ſuo, non tacito nomine, contuliſſet. Ut dictum nollet præpoſterus laudator, & cum bona, ſed falſæ de altero opinionis, & ridiculæ credulitatis ſuæ pœniteret.

The largeſt Commentary we have upon our Severus's Hiſtoria ſacra, is that of Chriſtian Schotanus, Printed in Folio at Franeker, 1664.

(A) A Country man of Cotignola——His Name was Giacomuzzo.] That Name is made up of two Chriſtian Names, James Muzzo contracted into one: His Sirname was Attendolo. 'Tis not agreed on all hands that he was a Country-man's Son: Sanſovino ſays he was the Grandſon of a Gentleman call'd John Attendolo, Father of Michelin, Captain of the Republick of Venice. He adds, that Michelin the Father of our Sforza Married Polyxena de Sanſeverino, and had two Siſters, one of which was the Wife of Ugolin Count de Centona, and the other was Married to Martin Caraccioli Count de Santangelo, Brother to the Great Marſhal of Naples (b). We read in Jovius that Sforza was a Man of a good Family, honeſta familia (c). But Leandro Alberti going upon the Teſtimony of a (d) writer Born at Cotignola, ſays that Giacomuzzo was a Boor, and actually digging the Ground, when he fell a conſidering whether he ſhould Liſt himſelf, as ſome of his Friends adviſed him. He flung his Spade upon a Tree, and ſaid he would be a Soldier if it ſtuck to it. It ſtuck to the Tree, and he Liſted himſelf. (e) Muzzo lavorando la terra con la zappa indotto da alcuni compagni, la gittò ſopra un'albero, promettendogli che ſe la rimanea ſopra quello, d'andar co loro alla guerra, la qual vi rimaſe, & così andò con loro, come dinota Pietro M. Caranto con molti altri ſcrittori. The ſame Author (f) obſerves, that ſome Writers, to ingratiate themſelves with the Sforza's, pretended that Giacomuzzo or Muzzo was not the true Name of that Man; but that he was call'd Mutio, and deſcended from Mutius Scævola; and they deny what is ſaid of his Spade. They were

Fama (i) eſt fictilibus cænaſſe Agathoclea regem,
Atque abacum Samio ſæpe oneraſſe luto,
Fercula gemmatis quum poneret horrida vaſis,
Et miſceret opes pauperiemque ſimul.
Quærenti cauſam, reſpondit: Rex ego qui ſum
Sicaniæ, figulo ſum genitore ſatus.

He pretended with good reaſon to heighten his Glory, by ſhewing that he was the Artificer of his own Fortune. There are ſome Panegyriſts in our Days, who acknowledging on the one Hand, that their Hero was a Man of a moſt Noble Extraction, obſerve on the other, that this Luſtre of his Family did not contribute to his high Preferments. So true it is, that the recommendation of Relations is thought to weaken the Proofs of the Merit of thoſe who are raiſed by that means. Here follows a Paſſage of the Funeral (k) Oration of Francis de Harlay Arch-biſhop of Paris. "Such Noble Talents could "not be Buried in Obſcurity, and there was no occaſion to aſk, how came he that was Born ſo great "to arrive at greatneſs? He was not beholden to "favour for his Elevation. His Family, tho' never "ſo Noble, and ſo much Reſpected, was not then in "thoſe happy Circumſtances, wherein the Star of "living Fathers pours down favourable Influences upon Children; wherein Children, Born "with Merit, have the advantage of diſcovering "it ſooner than others, and of being more worthily Rewarded for it; and wherein thoſe, who "are leſs favoured by Nature than Fortune, need "only have a good Conduct to receive the Favours, "which the Credit of their Families cannot fail to "procure to them. But the Perſon we ſpeak of β Poſſev. bibl. ſelect. tom. 1. p. m. [illegible].

"was

γ Ex Alteſerra, rerum Aquitanic. lib. [illegible] cap. 8. pag. 116.

* A ſmall Town of Romagna between Imola and Faenza.

† Some ſay Alberic de Barbiano gave it him, after he had ſeen him boldly repulſe an Injury that was done him.

|| Taken from Leandro Alberti deſcrittione di tutta Italia fol. 317. verſo & 318. Venice 1561.

(g) Id. ib. fol. 318.

(h) Plut. in apophthegm. pag. 176.

(i) Auſonius epigr. 8. p. m. 9.

(k) Delivered in the Metropolitan Church of Paris, by Father Gaillard a Jeſuit, the 23d of November 1695. See Page 16, and 17. of the Dutch Edition.

their Services very dear, and took care (B) to keep up the War, it being the beſt way they could pitch upon to ſatisfy their exorbitant Ambition. Sforza commanded the Troops of Queen Jean in the Kingdom of Naples, whilſt Braccio commanded thoſe of Alfonſo of Arragon. Both of 'em died in that War. Sforza marching to relieve the Town of Aquila, Beſieged by Braccio, was drowned (C) at the Paſſage of the River Aterno; and Braccio was kill'd ſome time after in the Fight, wherein he was engaged near Aquila, againſt Queen Jean's Troops, commanded by a Son of Sforza, and againſt the Pope's Troops. Sforza's Body was not found out. His Rival was not much more Fortunate with reſpect to Burial; for the Pope ordered that the Body of Braccio, who was Excommunicated, ſhould be Buried without the Walls of Rome in a Prophane Place †. Sforza had been Gonfalonniere of the Holy Church, and made Count of Cotignola by Pope John XXIII. He was poſſeſt of Cotignola for a Payment of the Salary the Church owed him, which amounted to Fourteen Thouſand Ducats *. He left a numerous (D) Family behind him; his Poſterity continues to this day. He was a ſtrong Man, and very free, and (E) did not care to make good Cheer. 'Tis ſaid he was one of thoſe || who lay

† Taken from Jovius in Elogia virorum bellica virtute illuſtrium lib 2. pag. m. 192. & ſeq.

* Taken from Leandro Alberti ubi ſupra.

|| See the Remark E.

" was not raiſed by ſuch means. Being more animated by the Example of his Relations to deſerve Dignities, than help'd by their Intereſt to attain to them, he himſelf was the Author of his Fortune." However it be, I fancy Giacomuzzo was not much inclin'd to imitate Agathocles, and that his Deſcendants were ſtill leſs willing to mind the Advantages that might accrue to them, from deriving their Original from a Man, who notwithſtanding the meaneſt Condition he was in, found the way to become ſo great a Man. What makes me think ſo is, that ſome Writers, in order to make their Court, Publiſh'd very Pompous Genealogies. But I am apt to believe that ſome made it their buſineſs to repreſent the Extraction of our Sforza meaner than it was. People run into extreams upon ſuch an occaſion (a).

(B) They took care to keep up the War.] Jovius does very well obſerve that part of the Character of thoſe two famous Generals, and is in the right to ſay that it was a baſe Trick, and a perfect Trade. (b) Qui ab initio fraterna charitate inter ſe conjuncti, pari ſpe, parique induſtria, & paribus inſignium, laciniarumque coloribus militantes, uſque adeo inclaruere, ut fatali demum ambitione atque ſuperbia diducti, diverſas militiæ ſectas de nomine conderent, ac æmulatione gloriæ atque potentiæ, ex amicis hoſtes facti, ex adverſo ſemper arma tractarent; qua diſſenſione potius quam ſimultate opimis ſtipendiis ſummiſque honoribus clari, atque opulenti evadebant; quum ſeſe infami aſtu, promercalique militia principibus Italiæ & liberis civitatibus venditarent, bellaque alere quam finire mallent; quod uterque de fortuna ſua immodice ſperandum putaret, & nihil impervium vividæ virtuti, generoſe & fortiter agentibus arbitrarentur. This Ambitious and Mercenary Spirit is the Fault of moſt Generals, who are not Sovereigns; but when they are Soldiers of Fortune, and in the Pay of a Prince whoſe Subjects they are not, they are more apt to be guilty of that ſort of Treaſon, which conſiſts in not depriving a vanquiſhed Enemy of all reſources, that the War may be kept up. They hope no Peace will be made, whilſt neither of the Parties get a conſiderable Advantage; and therefore they don't care to improve a Victory, and Contrive the matter ſo, that the Enemies do quickly make up their Loſſes.

(C) Was drowned at the Paſſage of the River Aterno.] 'Tis the Ancient Name of that River, now call'd Peſcara. That General periſh'd in it the 3d of January 1424, at 54 Years of age, if we believe Collenuccio (c), and ſeveral other Hiſtorians; but I have ſeen in a (d) Genealogy of the Houſe of Sforza, that he was drowned the 3d of January 1426, being 56 Years old.

(D) He left a numerous Family behind him; his Poſterity continues to this Day.] He was Married Three times; firſt to Antonia Salimbeni, Widow of the Lord de Cortona, who brought to him Montegione, Montenegro, Ripa, Bagno, and Cluſi. His Second Wife was Siſter to Pandolfo Alopo, a Neapolitan, Great Chamberlain of the Kingdom of Naples. His Third Wife was Mary de Merciano, Daughter of the Count de Seſſa. He left Fifteen Children behind him. Charles, one of the Sons, was Archbiſhop of Milan. Another called Alexander Married Conſtantia, Daughter of Galeazzo Malateſta, and was Lord of Piſauro. Another named Boſo Married Eleonora Aldobrandini, Counteſs de Santa Fiore (e). The latter was Sforza's Son by his firſt Wife, and all the Sforza's that are now alive, are deſcended from him. The Head of that Family was made Knight of the Orders of the King of France in 1675, and Married by Proxy in October 1678, Louiſe Adelaide de Damas, Daughter of the Marquis de Thiange, and Niece to Madam de Montespan (f). He was Sixty four Years of Age: His Spouſe was but 19; and ſet out from Paris the 27th of April 1679, to go to him in Italy. The following Paſſage relating to him, is to be found in the Mercure Galant. " (g) The Bridegrom is well ſhaped, tho' ſomewhat advanced in Years. He is a Man of an agreeable Humour, and of a ſolid Wit. He is Duke of Onano in St. Peter's Patrimony, and of Segni in the Campania di Roma, Count de Santa Fiore, in the Territory of Siena, and Sovereign of Caſtel Arquato in Lombardy, and of Sforzeſca in the ſame Patrimony of St. Peter. Beſides all thoſe Seats the Duke Mario Sforza, his Father, poſſeſt the Dutchy of Valmontone in the Campania di Roma. He ſold it to the Lords Barberini for Eleven Hundred Thouſand Roman Crowns." As for the other Children of our Sforza, I need not ſpeak of 'em; I ſhall only beſtow an Article upon him, who became Duke of Milan. Take notice that Alexander Sforza, Lord of Peſaro, was the Father of Conſtans who ſucceeded him. John, (h) Son of the latter was poſſeſt of the Lordſhip of Peſaro, and Married to Lucretia Borgia, Daughter of Pope Alexander VI. and then to the Daughter of Matthew Tiepoli, a Venetian Senator. Francis Maria della Rovere, Duke of Urbino, ſucceeded this John Sforza in his States (i).

(E) A ſtrong Man, and very free, and did not care to make good Cheer.] He was very different in all this from his Rival Braccio, as Jovius obſerves. (k) In Braccio aſtuti & efficacis ingenii vis ardens eminebat; in Sfortia autem naturæ ſimplicitas, nullo fuco, nulloque literarum ſubſidio ſubnixa; apertique animi conſtans, & indomitus vigor laudabantur; in robuſto præſertim corpore ad ferendos labores geſtandaque arma prævalido. Braccius habitu corporis proximus delicato, ſplendore vitæ rerumque omnium apparatu ſumptuoſo, mirè gaudebat, utpote qui vel cum injuria alienæ pecuniæ appetens & profuſus eſſet. Ex adverſo Sfortia ad delitias rudis & agreſtis, frugi diſciplina, convictu ſubitario & plane militari, contemptuque prorſus omnis luxuriæ lætabatur; utpote qui valida potius quam decora arma, proceros & peracres generoſa ſobolis equos vir equitandi peritiſſimus, vera imperatoriæ dignitatis inſtrumenta eſſe putaret, nec quicquam ad inanem ſpeciem exquiſiti ornatus oſtentare conſueſſet. Perhaps ſome will think that Sforza's Clowniſh way, and his Averſion for Luxury, may be alledged to ſhew the Falſity of what has been ſaid of his and the Queen of Naples Amours; but this would be an ill grounded Objection, ſince 'tis certain he loved Women, and was a very ſtrong Man, which was no ſmall Bait for that Princeſs. She loaded him with Favours. (l) Coſtui ——— fondò la grandezza della ſua famiglia, non ſolamente col nome, chiamandola Sforza, ma col Stato; percioche fatto Generale de gli eſſerciti di Giovanna 2. Regina di Napoli, con la quale ſi dice, che hebbe da fare, hebbe in dono da lei, Benevento, lay with the Queen of Naples. Francis Sforza who makes the Subject of the following Article, was the chief Heir † of his Valour and Fortune. * He had him by a Woman of Pleaſure, who followed the Army; her Name † was Lucia Terzana.

(a) See the Remark A in the Article Touchet.

(b) Paulus Jovius ubi ſupra pag. 192, 193.

(c) Pandulphus Collenutius hiſtor. Neapolit. lib. 5. pag. 408 edit. Latinæ Dordr. 1618. in 8.

(d) It is in the Mercure Galant for November 1678. pag. 164. of the Dutch Edition.

(e) Taken from Sanſovino ubi ſupra.

(f) See the Mercure Galant for November 1678. pag. 164. in the Genealogical Table.

(g) Ibid. pag. 166.

(h) Not he Lambald his Natural Son, as Leandro Alberti obſerves, ubi ſupra.

(i) Taken from Sanſovino ubi ſupra.

(k) Paulus Jovius ubi ſupra.

(l) Sanſovino ubi ſupra.

SFORZA (Francis) Natural Son of Giacomuzzo Attendolo, who makes the Subject of the fore-going Article, made ſtill a greater Fortune than his Father. He was created β Count of Tricarico at Thirteen Years of Age by Ladiſlaus King of Naples, and was early accounted a great Warrior. He Defeated γ the Troops Commanded by Braccio, which diſputed the Paſſage of the Peſcara; but that Advantage proved of no uſe to him, for his Father having been drowned in that River, the Deſign of raiſing the Siege of Aquila was laid aſide. Francis Sforza was δ then but 23 Years of Age. He was confirm'd by Queen Joan in all the Dignities, and in the Poſſeſſion of all the Lands ſhe had beſtowed upon Giacomuzzo, and received Orders from that Princeſs to make himſelf ready for the Siege of Naples. He very much contributed to the Reduction of that Town, and then to the Victory obtain'd near Aquila over the Troops of Braccio, the 2d of June 1425 ε. Pope Martin V. ſent him againſt Nicolas Trincio, Lord of Foligno, and he forced him to accept of a Peace upon the Conditions he propoſed to him. Afterwards he ſerved the Duke of Milan both againſt the Florentins and the Venetians, and ſignaliz'd himſelf on ſeveral occaſions ζ. He did alſo many Services to Queen Joan; and when ſhe died, which happened in 1435, he applied himſelf to Renatus d'Anjou, whom ſhe had made her Heir. That Prince was Unhappy, and oblig'd to yield to his ill Fortune. But Sforza, who had no leſs Induſtry than Courage, never wanted means to ſupport himſelf. He made himſelf Maſter of ſeveral places in the March of Ancona, and even uſurp'd ſome States belonging to the Church. Whereupon he was Excommunicated η by Pope (A) Eugenius IV. who, beſides, had recourſe to Temporal Arms and Confederacies, whereby θ Francis Sforza loſt the March of Ancona in 1444. He quickly recover'd himſelf by the gain of a Battle, in which the Son of Picenini and Cardinal de Fermo, the Pope's Legate, were taken Priſoners ι. I ſhould be too long, ſhould I give a particular Account of all the Wars wherein he was ingaged; and therefore I ſhall only ſay, that by the Treaty of Peace concluded the 22d of November 1441. it was agreed that he ſhould Marry the Natural Daughter of the Duke of Milan κ. Accordingly he Married her, which made way for a great Fortune; for he became Duke of (B) Milan after the Death of his Father-in-law. That Succeſſion did belong λ to a Prince of the Houſe of France, and yet it fell to Francis Sforza, who was μ favour'd therein by Lewis XI. He poſſeſt that State till he died, and Govern'd it with great Moderation, being accounted one of the greateſt Princes of Italy. It has been ν ſaid of him that no Uſurper

* Varillas Hiſt. de Louis XI. B. 2. pag. 138.

‖ See the Genealogical Table of the Houſe of Sforza, p. 161 of the Mercure Galant for November 1676. Dutch Edit.

ε It was fabricated for the Queen in January, 1425.

ζ Ex eodem Collenucio ibid. pag. 409, 410.

α See the Book intitl'd Ritratti & elogii di Capitani illuſtri pag. 131. Rome 1636.

β Spondan. ad an. 1442. n. 11.

γ Vianoli, hiſtoria Veneta tom. 1. pag. 598.

κ Id. ib. pag. 599.

λ Id. ib. pag. 590.

μ See Varillas Hiſt. de Louis XI. B. 2.

ν Id. ibid.

ξ Varillas ibid. pag. 140.

Benevento, Manfredonia, Baroli, & Trani con più di 20. caſtella. See the Margin (‖).

(A) Whereupon he was Excommunicated by Pope Eugenius IV.] It was a great alteration; for the ſame Pope had given him formerly the keeping of the March of Ancona, the Dignity of Gonfalonniere of the Church, and a Commiſſion to make War againſt Nicolas Fortebraccio, who had invaded ſeveral Places in the Eccleſiaſtical State. Sforza did very well diſcharge the Duties of that Commiſſion, and defeated the Troops of Fortebraccio at Tivoli. Note, that afterwards this Pope, the Venetians, and the Florentins gave him the Command of their Troops, when they declared War againſt the Duke of Milan (b).

(B) He became Duke of Milan.] Philip Maria Viſconti, who poſſeſt that Dutchy, died in April 1447, leaving no other Child behind him, but a Natural Daughter Married to Francis Sforza. Many laid a Claim to that Succeſſion. The Emperor Frederick III. maintain'd that this Dutchy was devolved to the Empire, ſince the laſt Duke had left no lawful Iſſue. Alfonſo King of Naples alledged the Laſt Will of that Duke, who had made him his Heir. The Duke of Orleans alledged his being related to him, for he was the Son of Valentina, Siſter to that Duke. Francis Sforza grounded his Pretenſion upon the Duke's Adoption, to which he added the Right of his Wife (c). During thoſe Contentions, the Milaneſe thought they had a favourable Opportunity to ſet up a Republick. Wherefore they Elected Twelve Magiſtrates, whom they call'd the Conſervators of Liberty, and tore the laſt Will of the late Duke, and gave the Command of the Troops to Francis Sforza, to (d) continue the War with the Venetians. The laſt Point was very Unpolitical, and Inconſiſtent with their Deſign of Eſtabliſhing a Republican Government. They were not ſenſible that there is nothing more favourable (e) to thoſe, who have a mind to ſway a Scepter, than to put the Sword into their Hands. That Captain-General of the Milaneſe, got ſeveral great Advantages over the Republick of Venice. His Reputation was the more encreaſed by it; and doubtleſs it was the Reaſon why the Milaneſe deprived him of new occaſions of ſignalizing himſelf: They divided and leſſen'd his Troops that he might not form any conſiderable Enterprize. He underſtood the meaning of it, and found out an Expedient very ſuitable to his Ambition. He made a Propoſal of Peace to the Republick of Venice. (f) Doppo queſti avvenimenti monſtrò inclinatione lo Sforza à riconciliarſi coi Veneti; moſſo à ciò principalmente dai trattamenti che riceveva dai Milaneſi troppo aſpri; e come di geloſi della di lui potenza ingrati, e ſpiacevoli, mentre con la diviſione delle ſue genti, e con lo ſcemamento deb' eſercito gli andavano tarpando l'ali per impedirgli il volo alla Ducale altezza; onde fu ſpedito da eſſo à Venetia Clemente Tealdino Secretario, che ſi trovava prigione con Almorò Donato nella Rocca di Cremona a proporre la trattatione della pace. His Propoſals were approv'd of, and a Treaty was concluded, whereby the Republick engaged to aſſiſt him with Men and Money, in order to make himſelf Maſter of the Town and Dutchy of Milan; and it was agreed upon, that all the Conqueſts, as far as the River Adda, ſhould belong to the Republick of Venice (g). As ſoon as the Duke of Savoy heard of that Confederacy, he reſolved to aſſiſt the Milaneſe, but the Troops he ſent 'em were cut to pieces by Sforza before they joyn'd thoſe of the Milaneſe; and then he made it his Buſineſs to ſtreighten that great City (h). The Venetians being apprehenſive that he would ſubdue it, broke with him, and Confederated with the Milaneſe. Nevertheleſs he perſued his Point; he made an Agreement with the Duke of Savoy, and confirm'd the Alliance between him and the Florentins. He hindred the Venetians from ſuccouring Milan: A Famine, and the Diviſions of the Milaneſe, and their

Queen Joan, ſhe made him High Conſtable of the King-

(a) Taken from the Ritratti & elogii di Capitani illuſtri pag. 132. Rome 1646 (b) See Spondanus's Annals. ad ann. 1447. (c) Leand. Albert. deſcript. Italiæ p. 678. editionis Lati. 1567. in fol. (d) Vianoli hiſt. Veneta tom. 1. pag. 604.

(e) Ben convenendozi la ſqada à quella mano che vuole ſcettro. Vianoli ubi ſupra.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 605, 606.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 605.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 607.

ſurper was ever a better Sovereign. He was certainly endowed with many good Qualities, and tho' he had never (C) ſtudied, he promoted Learning, ſpoke with as much Eloquence as an Orator, and argued about Political Affairs with a wonderful Solidity. The Animoſity wherewith (D) he went about to deſtroy the whole Faction of Braccio, appeared too implacable. He died the 8th of March 1466, aged Sixty Five Years *. He left Fifteen Children behind him, ſome lawfully begotten, and others not; but his Poſterity was (E) wholly Extinct in 1535. The Condition, upon which he deſign'd to Marry his Son to the Daughter of the Marquiſs of Mantua, has (F) ſomething ſingular in it.

SFOR-

Spite againſt the Venetians, brought that great Affair to an end; they ſubmitted, and received him into their Town the 26th of February (*) 1450, and acknowledged him for their Duke (†). Thus the Meaſures that City and ſeveral other Neighbouring Towns had taken to ſet themſelves at Liberty, after the death of Philip Maria Viſconti, vaniſhed into Smoak. Spondanus rightly obſerves, that many Towns of Italy fell at that time into Slavery, becauſe they were too fond of avoiding it; for many Factions ſtarting up, they were ſometimes for a certain Form of Government, and ſometimes for another, and when one of the Factions was uppermoſt, they cruelly treated the contrary Party. Was it not making way for Slavery? (a) Mediolanenſes ſervandæ per ſe libertatis impotentes erant; & ut in his fieri mos erat civitatum Italicarum, illam tueri quærentes, mutuis diſſenſionibus, ac diverſis regiminis mutationibus, crudelitatibuſque faciliorem ſervituti viam ſternebant. That Annaliſt obſerves, that the Mob of Milan kill'd the Venetian Ambaſſador, becauſe the Succours promis'd by the Republick had not got into the Town; and he adds that the Venetians did cunningly put off the Relief of it, in hopes that the Milaneſe would ſubmit to their Domination (b).

(C) Endowed with many good Qualities, and tho' he had never ſtudied, he promoted Learning, ſpoke with as much Eloquence.] He expreſs'd upon ſeveral occaſions, his Grief for his want of Learning: His Liberality towards Learned Men was grounded upon his great Deſire that they ſhould write his Actions, and immortalize his Name. He took care to procure that Honour to his Father by the Pen of a famous Writer; but his own Hiſtorian was more famous ſtill, and went about that Work with an extreme diligence. I mean John Simoneta, who wrote the Hiſtory of Francis Sforza in 31 Books, and declares he advances nothing but what he had ſeen, or was very ſure of. His work was ſent to the Preſs at Milan in 1479, and reaches from the Year 1424, to 1466 (c). Here follows a Paſſage of Jovius, which proves the Text of this Remark. (d) In hunc hominem præter invictum corporis atque animi robur, ſumma etiam dona, quæ tribui poterant, natura contulerat, perſonæ ſcilicet dignitatem eximiam; os probum. & in omni congreſſu aſpectum ſine ſuperbia ſuis pariter atque hoſtibus venerabilem, ſic, ut cuncti in eo ſæpius concionante facundiam abſoluto oratore parem admirarentur, eoque plenius, quòd nullas attigiſſet literas; & nihilo ſecius in omni civili militarique negocio, efficacis prudentiæ, divinique judicii vim expeditam & incredibilem afferret. Sed literarum decus, quum ſeſe ejus expertem ingenuo pudore ſæpe dolens fateretur, liberaliſſimè tuebatur. Juſtæ ſi quidem & veræ laudis, quæ viventi ornamento eſſet, & tranſiret ad poſteros, erat avidiſſimus. A Joanne Simoneta namque inſigni hiſtorico, & à Philadelpho poeta percelebri res ſuas bello paceque geſtas perſcribi celebrarique jubebat, ſicuti etiam patris vitam Leodorix Cribellus ejus juſſu antea perſcripſerat. He had been ſaying that Francis Sforza govern'd the Milaneſe for the ſpace of Sixteen Years, with ſo much Wiſdom, Juſtice and Mildneſs, and kept himſelf (e) ſo free from all manner of Vice, that he was accounted the beſt Sovereign of that time. But Nauclerus (f) ſays that his Love of Women made kim commit ſome Injuſtices in his Old Days.

(D) The Animoſity, wherewith he went about to deſtroy the whole Faction of* Braccio.] He had ſubdued it, but being afraid that the Son of Picinni might revive it again, he undertook to deſtroy him; and the better to ſucceed in it, he pretended to love him, and Married him to one of his Daughters. Afterwards he deliver'd him to Ferdinand King of Naples, who, contrary to his Word, and all the Rights of Hoſpitality, caus'd him to be Beheaded in a Priſon. This is a horrid Crime; Jovius condemns it in very expreſs words. (g) Fuere qui ei (Franciſco Sfortiæ) inexorabilis odii notam inurerent, quòd perſequendæ Braccianæ factionis nunquam obliti, Jacobum Piccinini filium ſummæ ſpei ducem, ſub quo Bracciana arma refloreſcere poſſe viderentur, nequaquam ſyncera fide in generum aſciverit; ſcilicet ut eo vinculo pignoreque deceptum, ad teterrimam necem Ferdinando Neapolitano regi proderet. Ab eo enim rege contra fidem refricata veterum offenſionum memoria, ut impiger in carcere per Aethiopem ſervum averſa ſecuri mactatus eſt, ſingulari quidem cum infamia amborum principum, qui vindictæ libidinem ſacroſanctæ fidei & hoſpitalis menſæ religioni prætuliſſent.

(E) He left Fifteen Children behind him (h), ſome lawfully begotten, and others not; but his Poſterity was wholly Extinct in 1535.] His firſt Wife was Polyxena Ruffa, who made him Lord of three Towns and above Twenty Caſtles. His Second Wife, as has been ſaid above, was the only Daughter of the Duke of Milan. The Son who ſucceeded him was call'd John Galeazzo Maria SFORZA (i). I have ſaid in another (k) place how he was kill'd. His Son John Galeazzo SFORZA, who ſucceeded him, was then but Four Years of Age, and Ludovic Sforza his Uncle, Son of Francis, took care of his Education. You may ſee in another (l) place how he periſh'd in 1444. His Son was excluded from the Succeſſion by the Intrigues of Ludovic Sforza, who got himſelf declar'd Duke of Milan, and obtain'd the Imperial Inveſtiture, which his Predeceſſors could never obtain: that Inveſtiture extended to Natural Children, in caſe the Lawful Iſſue ſhould fail. (m) Is poſtquam à Maximiliano Imperatore novi principatus auctoritatem obtinuiſſet, magna cum ſolemnitate totiuſque civitatis gratulatione Ducatus inſignia cepit, die qui D. Theodoro martyri feſtus habetur, anno à C. N. MCCCCXCV. Primus ex Sfortia gente Mediolanenſis Ducatus titulum ac dignitatem jure nactus eſt, quoniam anteriores auctoritatem principatus ab Sacro Imperio Romano hactenus impetrare non potuerant. Fuit autem in formula Ludovici non ſolum de filiis juſtis ut invicem ſibi ſuccedendi jus haberent, comprehenſum, ſed etiam de nothis, uti ego vidi, ſi juſtos non extare contingeret. He was depriv'd of his States in 1499 by Lewis XII. King of France, Grandſon to Valentina Viſconti, Daughter of John Galeazzo Duke of Milan. He raiſed ſome Troops in Swiſſerland, and the Year following return'd into the Milaneſe, and recovered moſt places of that Dutchy; but the Swiſs delivered him to the French, and from that Day till he died, which happen'd in 1508, he was kept in a Priſon. Lewis XII. poſſeſt the Milaneſe for ſome Years, but loſt it in 1512, and Maximilian SFORZA, Ludovic's Son, recovered it. He could not keep it after the Victory which Francis I. obtain'd over the Swiſs in 1515. at the Battle of Marignan, and was forced to Surrender. He was ſent into France, where he died. Francis Sforza his Brother was Eſtabliſhed in 1522. Duke of Milan, by the Power of a League, which had overcome the French. He did not enjoy that State quietly nor without interruption, being ſometimes expell'd by the French, and then reſtor'd by Charles V, and ſometime ill uſed by that Emperor, who at laſt admitted him into his Favour in the Year 1530. From that time he peaceably enjoy'd his States till the Year 1535, in which he died. He was the laſt of all thoſe who deſcended from Francis Sforza I. of that Name (n). Charles V. poſſeſt himſelf of the Milaneſe, and few Years after, he inveſted his Son Philip II with it. The terms of the Inveſtiture take in Philip II. and all his Poſterity both Males and Females for ever, accordin to the Order obſerved in the Hereditary Succeſſions of States, that may fall to Women.

(F) The Condition, upon which he deſign'd to Marry his Son to the Daughter of the Marquiſs of* Mantua, ha

---

* Spondan. ad ann. 1466. n. 6. p. m. 109.

(*) Vianelli ſays, 1449.

(†) Id. ib. pag. 613. 614.

(a) Spondanus ad ann. 1449. n. 7. pag. m. 9.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) See Voſſius de hiſtor. Latin. p. 625

(d) Jovius ubi ſupra lib. 3. pag. 222.

(e) Adverſus omnem vitiorum intemperiem. Id. ib. p. 221.

(f) Hic etſi cunctos prudentia & felicitate principes ſui temporis excelluiſſet, in ſenectute tamen mulierum ardore deceptus nimium prævaricatus eſt. Nauclerus generat. 49. pag. m. 970.

(i) Id.

(k) In the Article Lampugnano.

(l) In the Article Arragon (Iſabella of)

(m) Le Albertus in deſcrip Italiæ p 610.

SFORZA (CATHERINE) Grand-Daughter of the foregoing, was a Lady of great Courage; but ſhe did an Action which ſavoured much more of a Man's Boldneſs than of a Woman's Modeſty. Her Subjects having made themſelves Maſters of the Caſtle of Rimini, ſhe gave 'em her Children as Hoſtages to recover it; and then ſhe threaten'd with Death thoſe, who had occaſion'd the Inſurrection. They anſwered her, that they would kill her Children; whereupon ſhe be ſomething ſingular in it.] I have ſaid in another place, that according to the Agreement that was made between him and Lewis Gonzaga Marquis of Mantua, his Son Galeazzo was to Marry Dorothy, that Marquiſs's Daughter, provided it ſhould appear that ſhe had no Crooked Back, nor any other imperfection in her Body at 14 Years of Age. By Virtue of that Agreement, he ſent ſome Phyſicians to inſpect the naked Body of Dorothy; but the Marquis would not ſuffer it. A very Learned Civilian being conſulted about that Queſtion, maintain'd, that Francis Sforza was in the Right. Many People are ſurprized at his Anſwer. Read the following Paſſage of Camerarius in his Hiſtorical Meditations. " (a) Many wonder how Franciſcus Aretinus, a famous Civilian, undertook to prove that Francis Sforza Duke of Milan was in the right to require that Dorothy Daughter of Ludovic Marquis of Mantua, Contracted to Galeazzo the Son of that Duke, ſhould be viewed Naked by ſome Phyſicians he had ſent for that purpoſe, to know whether there was any deformity in her Body: That on the contrary the Marquis was in the wrong to refuſe ſuch an Inſpection, offering only to ſhew 'em his Daughter dreſs'd in the Petticoat, which Galeazzo had ſent her". Camerarius had read this particular in Tiraquellus, whom he quotes. I ſhall ſet down Tiraquellus's own Words, whereby it will appear that Philip Decius, a Famous Civilian, approved Aretinus's Opinion. (b) Proinde non recte fortaſſis pleriſque videbitur conſuluiſſe vir alioquin doctiſſimus autorque graviſſimus Fran. Are. conſ. 142. ex facto proponitur quòd illuſtris in tertio, & iterum in quarto dubio ejuſdem conſ. cum omnibus nervis contendit probare Franciſcum Sfortiam Ducem Mediolani jure petiiſſe, ut Dorothea filia Ludovici Marchionis Mantuæ Galeatio ipſius Ducis filio deſponſata, nuda a quibuſdam Medicis a ſe miſſis conſpiceretur, ut hinc detegeretur, ſi qua puellæ eſſet deformitas: contra Ludovicum hoc ipſum injuria recuſaſſe, ſed tantum filiam obtuliſſe videndam, Cotta (ſic enim appellas) quam ad eam Galeatius ipſe miſerat, coopertam. Cujus tamen conſilium probat Philip. Dec. in d. ca. propoſuiſti in 2. notab. An tamen bene uterque ſenſerit, aliorum ſit judicium. Tiraquellus durſt not decide whether thoſe two Civilians were in the Right; and yet he Comments in that very place upon a Law, which he reduces to theſe Terms, Let the bethroded Couple diſcover their Deformities one to another; however, let 'em not ſtrip their themſelves ſtark Naked, and particularly let the Woman forbear doing it. (c) ſuam quiſque deformitatem futuro marito, aut uxori detegito. Ne tamen ſe propterea præſertim. fœmina nudato. He had been ſaying, that if Women have any Bodily Imperfection, that is not known, they ought to acquaint with it thoſe, whom they are to Marry. (d) Illud fœminas ipſas monemus, ut ſi qua in eis ſit occulta deformitas, ei certe cui nubere velint, non re quidem, id eſt corporis nudatione, ſed verbis adaperiant, propter eam maxime (e) rationem quæ à nobis dicta eſt cum de viris in hujus capitis initio loqueremur. It ſeems therefore, that to avoid Contradicting himſelf, he ſhould have altogether condemn'd the Opinion of the Civilian Franciſcus Aretinus. It may be anſwered in his Vindication, that there are ſome particular Caſes or eſpecial Agreements which diſpenſe with the Law, and that therefore he would not interpoſe his Judgment about the Conduct of Francis Sforza and the Marquis of Mantua. He might have thought that there were ſome circumſtances in the Caſe, which made the thing Problematical. 'Tis very likely Francis Sforza meant by the Words of his Agreement with Dorothy's Father, that ſhe ſhould be ſearch'd, but that it was not expreſly ſaid ſhe ſhould be ſeen ſtark Naked. Had this Clauſe been expreſt, the Marquis of Mantua would have broke his Word by refuſing what the Duke required; and if it was not expreſs'd, he might ſay he never meant that his Daughter ſhould be inſpected as the Duke would have it. Wherefore the Reaſons pro and con might have been ſpecious, and prevented Tiraquellus's deciding the matter. He was not ignorant that 'tis more neceſſary for Sovereign Princes than for Private Perſons to know whether there are any unknown Imperfections, that may make one fear a Woman's Barrenneſs. Francis Sforza deſign'd to Marry his Son to the Daughter of Lewis Gonzaga; and therefore it highly concern'd him that ſhe ſhould want nothing: And 'tis well known that there are many Cuſtoms contrary to the Common Practice in Favour of Princes.

I ſhall occaſionally obſerve, that he alledges a vaſt Number of things upon this Subject, and is ſometimes miſtaken. He is in the wrong to ſay, (f) that in Ancient times Maids, that were to Marry, went to the Temple of Fortuna Virilis, where they pull'd off their Cloaths, that it might be known whether there was any Imperfection in their Bodies. Du Boulay gives a better Account of that Cuſtom. He ſays that on the firſt Day of April " (g) the Roman Ladies being Crown'd with Myrtle offered a Sacrifice to Venus, after they had perfectly waſh'd themſelves. Ovid mentions the cauſe of that Cuſtom in the 4th Book of the Faſti: He ſays that Venus drying one day her wet Hair upon the Banks of a River, the Satyrs perceived her Stark Naked, of which ſhe was ſo aſhamed, that immediately ſhe covered her ſelf with Myrtle, which was Conſecrated to her ever ſince, and this occaſion'd the Celebration of that Feaſt. Upon that ſame Day the Maids that were ready to be Married, Sacrificed to Fortuna Virilis with a little Perfume and Frankincenſe, and ſtript themſelves Stark Naked before the Goddeſs, ſhewing her all the Imperfections of their Bodies, and beſeeching her not to diſcover 'em to their future Husbands". He has omitted a circumſtance, viz. That the Ladies before they waſh'd themſelves, ſtript the Goddeſs Venus, and waſh'd her. Here follow the Words of the Roman Poet, who informs us of all thoſe Ceremonies.

Rite (b) Deam Latiæ colitis matreſque nuruſque:
Et vos, quis vittæ longaque veſtis abeſt.
Aurea marmoreo redimicula ſolvite collo:
Demite divitias: tota lavanda Dea eſt.
Aurea ſiccato redimicula reddite collo:
Nunc alii flores, nunc nova danda roſa eſt.
Vos quoque ſub viridi myrto jubet illa lavari:
Cauſſaque, cur jubeat, (diſcite) certa ſubeſt.
Litore ſiccabat rorantes nuda capillos.
Viderunt Satyri turba proterva Deam.
Senſit, & appoſita texit ſua corpora myrto.
Tuta fuit facto: voſque referre jubet.
Diſcite nunc, quare Fortunæ thura Virili
Detis eo, calida qui locus humet aqua.
Accipit ille locus poſito velamine cunctas;
Et vitium nudi corporis omne videt.
Ut tegat hoc, celetque viros, Fortuna Virilis
Præſtat: & hoc parvo thure rogata facit.

That Cuſtom of the Roman Virgins, ſo ill related by Tiraquellus, was a Trick wholly contrary to the ſincerity he adviſes Women to, in the Preliminaries of a Marriage. They applyed themſelves to Fortuna Virilis, as others made their addreſs to the Goddeſs Laverna, and begg'd of her that ſhe would conceal the Faults they were guilty of.

(i) Pulcra Laverna
Da mihi fallere, da juſtum ſanctumque videri,
Noctem peccatis & fraudibus objice nubem.

In a Word, that Practice of the Roman Ladies was a very bad one, tho' it was not ſo Abominable as that of the Ægyptian Women, who ſhewed their Nakedneſs to Apis for the ſpace of forty Days.

(a) Camerarius, Meditat. Hiſtoriques tom. 1. li. 3. ch. 14. pag. m. 165. I make uſe of Goulart's French Tranſlation.

(b) Tiraquellus in legem 4. connubial. n. 18. pag. m. 81.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 87.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) See that Reaſon towards the latter end of this Remark.

(f) Sed & legimus olim in templum Fortunæ virilis ventitare mulieres ſolitas, quæ nuptui debantur: & corpore nudato, ne quo vitio aut labe eſſent affectas explorari ſolere. Id. ibid. n. 11. pag. 82.

(g) Du boulay, Threſor des antiquitez Romaines pag. 516.

(b) Ovidius Faſtor. lib. 4. pag. m. 74.

(i) Horat. epiſt. 17. lib. 1.

ſhe turn'd up her Coats, and told 'em, here is wherewithal (A) to get others: Cruel Men, deſtroy the Innocent Hoſtages that are in your Hands; I conſent to it, provided I inflict upon you ſuch a Puniſhment as your Wickedneſs deſerves ‡. She was the Natural Daughter of Galeazzo Maria Sforza, and Married

This Ox was the chief Deity of the Egyptians (a) Ἐν δὲ ταῖς τετταράκοντα ταύταις ἡμέραις μόνον ὁρῶσιν αὐτὸν αἱ γυναῖκες, κατὰ πρόσωπον ἱστάμεναι, & δεικνύουσιν ἀνασυράμεναι τὰ ἑαυτῶν γεννητικὰ μόρια. Per XL. illos dies fœminæ duntaxat ipſum (Apim) vident, ante faciem ejus conſtitutæ, elevatiſque peplo inguina oſtentant. What an Abominable Notion had they of the Gods, whom they made the Spectators of ſuch things! It was not only offending againſt Modeſty, but alſo an Impious thing; and I make no doubt, that all the Romans, who knew the Rules of a Modeſt Education, Condemn'd the Ceremonies practic'd on the firſt Day of April. One may, without reading St. Jerome, approve what he ſays to ſhew that we ought to be aſhamed of our own Nakedneſs. (b) Scio præcepiſſe quoſdam, ne virgo Chriſti cum eunuchis lavet, nec cum maritatis feminis: quia alii non deponant animos virorum: aliæ tumentibus uteris præferant fœditatem. Mihi omnino in adulta virgine lavacra diſplicent, quæ ſe ipſam debet erubeſcere, & nudam videre non poſſe. 'Tis not enough to Condemn the Impudent practices Authorized by the (c) Laws of Lycurgus; one ought to Condemn the very anniverſary Cuſtoms mention'd by Ovid: And if the difference between the Duke of Milan and the Marquis of Mantua was to be decided, it were much better to Praiſe the Marquis than the Duke. The Complaints of Luigi Groto Cieco d'Adria ought to be look'd upon as meer Witty Conceits. He exclaims againſt the vaſt difference between all other Purchaſes and Marriage. If a Man Buyes a Houſe, he will ſee every corner of it from the Cellar to the Garret; and yet he does not confine himſelf to it for the reſt of his Life: He may ſell it again, or let it, if he does not like it. The only thing, ſays Luigi Groto, a Man cannot part with, when he has purchaſed it, is that about which we ſtrike a Bargain without examining it. (d) Tutte le coſe ſi conſiderano prima che ſi comprino. Le caſe ſi mirano, gli ſtromenti ſi odono, le popone ſi annaſano, il vino ſi guſta, il panno ſi tocca, le fuſa ſi maneggiano, le caraffe ſi palpano d'ogni parte ſe ſon intere, i leuti s'abbracciano, le ſtringhe ſi ſtendono, i legni ſi miſurano, le ſcarpe ſi calzano, i cavalli ſi cavalcano, le vacche ſi ſcegliono, e in ſomma tutte le coſe ſi provano con quel ſenſo, con cui le habbiamo a goder prima, che ſi conchiuda il mercato. Le mogli ſole, che non ſi poſſano mai più rifiutare in vita, con cui biſogna ſtar ſempre fino alla morte, ſi prendono a chiuſi occhi, a gatt'orba, e come ſi dice, gatta in ſacco. Ne pur ſi provano, perche non riuſcirebbono al parragone. Ne pur ſi moſtrano, perche ſe ſi vedeſſero ſi ſprezzerebbono prima, che ſi pigliaſſero. This Man would introduce into our Contracts of Marriage the cuſtom of the Taxilla, (e) an Ancient Nation among the Indians, or that of the old Romans when they bought Slaves; a cuſtom which the Emperor Auguſtus made ſubſervient to his unlawful Love, as has been ſeen in the Article of Fulvia.

I have promiſed above to mention the Reaſon alledged by Tiraquellus, why a Man and a Woman, who deſign to Marry, ſhould diſcover their Bodily Imperfections to each other. A Husband, ſays he, who does not declare 'em in due time, runs the Hazard of being hated by his Wife when ſhe comes to know 'em: 'Tis in vain for him to hope that ſhe will not perceive 'em; People that lie together in the ſame Bed muſt needs find 'em out. Contempt, Hatred and Horror will be the Conſequences of ſuch a diſcovery; and then the Wife will think of ſome other Men. (f) Si vir quiſpiam qui ſe matrimonio velit addicere, quicquam latentis vitii aut deformitatis in corpore habeat, id in primis uxori quam ducturus eſt, detegat, ne ſi jam conſummato matrimonio reſciſcat (neque enim illam qua cum dies noctesque verſaris diu latere poteſt———) te contemnat, deteſtetur, abhorreat: proindeque alios petulanter ſectetur. Let no Man Fancy, (Tiraquellus goes on) that he'll have a Wife like that, who being Married to one who had a ſtinking Noſe, did not complain of it, becauſe ſhe thought all Men had the ſame defect: There are but two ſuch inſtances mention'd by Ancient Authors; and none but a Mad-Man will expect ſuch a thing now a Days. (g) Et ſane futurum adeo neminem inſanum reor qui noſtris præſertim temporibus, ipſam conjugem uxorem ſe his ſimilem inventurum, cuique ipſe doloſe ſuum illi vitium non patefaciat. This is what he ſays to perſuade a Man to conceal none of his Imperfections, and to imitate the (h) Philoſopher Crates, and the (i) Father of the Emperor Galba. He uſes the ſame Arguments as to Women, which he confirms by this, that Marriage is a kind of purchaſe, and that Juſtice requires the Buyer ſhould be informed of the latent Faults of what he Buyes. He proves all this by many Authorities.

I don't know what was the Iſſue of the difference between the Duke of Milan and the Marquis of Mantua about Dorothy's Marriage. I can't tell whether any Expedient was found out to ſatiſfy the Duke; but I find in Sanſovino (k) that John Galeazzo Maria the Son of our Francis Sforza had two Wives: One of 'em was Suſanna Gonzaga, and the other Bonna of Savoy. The Abbot de Marolles (l) affirms that Suſanna Gonzaga, the Daughter of Lewis Marquis of Mantua, was Married to Galeazzo Maria Sforza Duke of Milan. The ſame Sanſovino ſays (m) in another place, that Dorothy Gonzaga, Daughter of Lewis Gonzaga Marquis of Mantua, was Married to Galeazzo Maria Sforza Duke of Milan. 'Tis very likely that thro' a miſtake he is frequently liable to, he calls the ſame Perſon Suſanna in one place, and Dorothy in another. From whence it ought to be inferr'd that, according to him, the Son of Francis Sforza was Married to a Daughter of the Marquis of Mantua; which would prove that the difference was made up, and the Marriage accompliſh'd. But then it might be ſaid, that Sanſovino, who is no exact Writer, ſpeaks of a Marriage in general, tho' the thing went no farther than a Bethroding.

(A) Here is wherewithal (n) to get others.] This is a Modeſt Tranſlation of the following Words. Illa magno & virili animo ſublata veſte nudanque ventre, En inquit, quo poſſim liberos iterum procreare. The Author, from whom I have this, and whom I have quoted in the Margin of this Article, had been relating the Action of a Lacedemonian Woman, who ſeeing her Sons run away from a Fight, ſhew'd 'em her Nakedneſs, and aſk'd them whither they would get in again into the ſame Belly out of which they came when they were Born, or whether they expected ſhe ſhould put 'em under her Gown, that the Enemies who purſued them, might not ſee 'em. This Queſtion of hers was attended with ſuch a ſmart Reflection upon their want of Courage, that they return'd to the Fight and got the Victory. He quotes the Apophthegms of the Lacedemonian Women, Collected by Plutarch; but all theſe Circumſtances are not to be found in that Author: He only (o) ſays, that a Woman of Lacedæmon ſhew'd her Belly to her Sons when they ran away, and aſk'd them whether they had a mind to get into it again. The other particulars are a Fabulous Addition of Balthazar Bonifacius. I call it Fabulous, tho' it is to be found in Juſtin, with reſpect to other Women, viz. the Perſian Women, when Cyrus engaged in a deciſive Battle againſt Aſtyages King of the Medes. (p) Pulſa itaque cum Perſarum acies paulatim cederet, matres & uxores eorum obviam occurrunt: orant in prælium revertantur: cunctantibus, ſublata veſte, obſcœna corporis oſtendunt, rogantes num in uteros matrum vel uxorum velint refugere. Hac repreſſi caſtigatione, in prælium redeunt: & facta impreſſione, quos fugiebant, fugere compellunt. A (q) Commentator obſerves that Tacitus mentions a thing like this concerning the Women of Germany; which is not true: The difference between that Fact and that of the Perſian Women is great enough to make it a different thing. The Women mention'd by Tacitus uſed only Entreaties, and ſhewed nothing but their Breaſt. (r) Memoria proditur, quaſdam acies inclinatas

---

‡ Taken from Balthaſar Bonifacius Hiſtor. Ludicræ lib. 6. cap. 11. pag. 177. He quotes the 8 Book of Michael Bruto's Hiſtory of Florence.

(a) Diodor. Siculus lib. 1. pag. m. 54. cap. 85. See the Hexameron ruſtique pag. m. 91.

(b) Hieronym. epiſtola ad Lætam de inſtitut. filiæ epiſtol. lib. 2. pag. m. 264.

(c) Montagne in the 3. Book of his Eſſays ch. 5. pag. m. 129. & ſeq. ſeems to excuſe Lycurgus.

(d) Lettere famigliare del Cieco d'Hadria pag. m. 35.

(e) Strabo lib. 15. p. m. 491. ſays that among them, when a Man could give no Portion to his Daughter, he carried her to the Market-place, and gathered the People together by ſound of Trumpet. If any Body offered to Marry her, ſhe ſtript her ſelf backwards to the Shoulders and then forwards.

(f) Tiraquellus ubi ſupra n. 1. pag. 79.

(o) Plut. in apophthegm. Lacæn-rum p.
241.

(p) Juſti-
lib. 1. ca-
6. p. m.
20. See alſo Plu-tarch de virtutibus mulierum
pag. 246.

(q) Ber-negger. i-Juſtin. ib-

(r) Tac-
de Germ.
cap. 8.

Married to Jerom Riario (B) Lord of Forli, and Imola β by whom she had among other Children, Octavio Riario, who was Lord of the same States, γ which he held of the Holy See. She had the Government in her Hands, as being her Son's Gardian δ, and used it to her Glory, during the Tumults occasion'd by the French Expedition into Italy in 1494. and the Years following. She privately (C) Married ζ John de Medicis; and it was one of the Reasons why she did many Services to the Florentins, and to Ludovic Sforza Duke of Milan, well affected towards the Medicis η. She defended her self with great Courage in the Fortress of Forli against the Duke of Valentinois Son of Alexander VI. in the Year 1500; but not being able to resist the violent Assaults of his Troops she was made a Prisoner and sent to Rome, where she was confined to the Castle of St. Angelo θ. It was upon this (D) occasion, if we believe some Writers, that she shewed her Nakedness; but they are mistaken. She was set at Liberty soon after κ by the Intercession of Ives d'Allegre. A French Historian commends her very much: He χ says she was very handsome, and a Widow at 22 Years of Age, having an only * Son in the Cradle, and that the Inhabitants of Imola and Forli were so Happy under her Administration, that they had no occasion to Lament the loss of her Husband. He observes that this only Son of hers was but 14 Years old in 1494 ‖. He enlarges upon the Military Qualities she discovered during the Siege of Forli. Take notice that she did not recover her States. The Duke of Valentinois was invested with 'em, and they were re-united to the Holy See after the Death of Alexander VI. †. I shall make a Reflection upon the Scruples, which hindred the Continuator (E) of Moreri's Dictionary from mentioning the Immodest clinatas jam & labantes à feminis restitutas, constantia precum & objectu pectorum, & monstrata cominus captivitate, quam longe impatientius feminarum suarum nomine timent: adeo ut efficacius obligenter animi civitatum quibus inter obsides puellæ quoque nobiles imperantur. It were an unjust thing to say that I am a rambling Writer, and that I make Digressions to fill up my Page; for I only take notice of such mistakes as I meet in my way, after having Censured Balthasar Bonifacius for advancing a Falsity. His Books and those of many other Writers are full of things, which the Authors quoted by them say nothing of. If I had a mind to swell my Compilation by bringing in things by Head and Shoulders, should I forget to Censure the same Bonifacius, for mentioning the Action of Catherine Sforza, in a Chapter (a) wherein he was only to alledge some Proofs of the Physical Virtues of the muliebre pudendum. Is that Action well connected with the other Accounts heaped up by him, which concern I know not what Faculty of driving away Hail, laying Storms, and frighting Lions? I suspect he is guilty of a much greater oversight; I think he falsifies the main parts of the Narrative of the Historian quoted by him: It is quite different in the Supplement to (b) Moreri's Dictionary.

(B) Married to Jerom Riario.] She brought him the Lordship of Imola for her Portion: Galeazzo Sforza had made himself Master of it, taking Advantage of the Quarrels, which arose in 1472. between Tadeo Manfredi Lord of Imola and his Son. Jerom Riario, Nephew to Sixtus IV. did very much imbellish that Town (c).

(C) She privately Married John de Medicis.] That Marriage was known in time. Catherine Sforza had by that second Husband John de Medicis who was the Father of Cosmo de Medicis, the first Duke of Tuscany. Boccalini has a Witty Conceit about it. He feigns that Catherine Sforza having declared (d) that she had the Courage to shew that part of her Body, whereby she took upon her self to get other Children, desired, that since she had been very much commended by all Historians for that Action, Apollo would be pleased to assign her a proper place upon Parnassus. The Judges were divided in their Opinions; some of 'em look'd upon it as a brutish piece of Lewdness. (e) Ad alcuni atto disfacciatezza, e di bruta impudicitia parve quello, che così nobil signora haveva racconsato. Apollo Judged that a Regular Observation of Modesty did belong to private Women; but that Princesses were obliged upon some occasions to shew their Virility. A Counsellor voted in this manner: The place, out of which John de Medicis, Father of the Great Cosmo, came, did certainly deserve to be exposed to the Publick view. (f) Ben degno di esser veduto da ogn' uno era quel luogo, donde era uscito il famoso Campione Giovan de' Medici padre di quel gran Cosimo, &c.

(D) It was upon this occasion, if we believe some Writers, that she shewed her Nakedness —— but they are mistaken.] Thomas Porcacchi confutes those Authors in his Marginal Notes upon Guicciardin's History: He shews that the Lady did that Action, when her Husband was kill'd. These are his Words: (g) Hanno scritto alcuni, che Madama Caterina trovandosi assediata nella Rocca di Forlì dal Valentino, & havendo egli, per indurla ad arrendersi, minacciato d'amazzarle i figlivoli, se non si arrendeva; ella con animo costante alzatasi i panni dinanzi, gli mostrò le parti vergognose, dicendo d'haver le forme da stamparne de gli altri: il che pero si vede discordar da questo autore, che dice come la Rocca fu presa incontinente, che dentro ella vi fu ritirata: & è chiaro, che non hora, ma quando fu da Lodovico Pansecco amazzato il Sig. Girolamo Riario marito di lei, ella fece questo atto. Honest Hilarion de Coste durst not relate the thing, as it happen'd: He leaves out all the Impudence of that Action, in order to multiply the Number of his Heroins. He is mistaken as to the time, if Porcacchi is in the right. That Minime expresses himself thus: "(h) Catherine Sforza, the Wife of John de Medicis, the "most Courageous and Valiant Lady that ever was "seen in Italy, gave (i) her her own Name, when "she was Christen'd. That magnanimous Heroin, "the worthy God-Mother of Queen Catherine, "gave a Proof of her Valour and Courage, when "she was Besieged by Cæsar Borgia Duke of Valentinois in the Fortress of Forli; for being "threaten'd by that Cruel Tyrant and Monster "of Nature, with the Death of her Children, if "she refused to Surrender, she boldly appear'd upon "the Walls, and laugh'd at the Rodomontades of "that Captain, laying her hand upon her Gown, "and telling him that she was Young enough to "get others".

(E) The Scruples, which hindred the Continuator of Moreri's Dictionary.] He is infinitely more Cautious than the Monk; for he says that Lady was contented to answer that she might make up the loss of her Children, and that it would bring an unavoidable Calamity upon the Rebels. Do what you can; you'll never be able to shew that he has discharged the Duty of an Historian, and that he has not neglected it in such a manner as is Inexcusable; for he says nothing of what was done by Catherine Sforza; and yet it was an Action so singular and so extraordinary, that it could not be past over in silence. Perhaps it will be said that the thing was so Impudent, that chast Ears would have been offended at it; and that instead of representing her as a most illustrious Woman, she would have been exposed to the Contempt of the Readers. Those two Excuses are insignificant: If the first was a good one, a vast number of Words should β Thom. Porcacchi in his Notes upon Guicciardin lib. 4. fol. 19. verso.

---

γ Guicciardin lib. 4. fol. 20. verso.

δ Id. ib.

ζ Id. lib. 5. fol. 104. verso.

η Id. ib.

θ Id. ib. fol. 126.

κ Id. ib.

(g) Porcacchi, Notes upon Guicciardin lib. 4. fol. 126.

(h) Hilarion de Coste, Elog. des Dames tom. 1. pag. 224.

(i) That is, to Catherine de Medicis, who has been Queen of France.

Immodeſt Action of that Lady; and I ſhall obſerve an overſight of the (F) Tranſlator of a Book of Lewis Guicciardin.

SFORZA (ISABELLA) may be placed among Learned Women. She lived in the XVI. Century. Some of her Letters may be ſeen in the Collection (Z) Publiſh'd at Venice by Hortenſio Lando in 1540; and among others a Letter of Conſolation, which ſhe writ to Bonna Sforza, late Widow of the King of Poland, and that which ſhe writ to Margaret Bobbia in vindication of Poetry

SICYON, a Town in Peloponneſus, and the moſt Ancient Kingdom that ever was in Greece. Ægialeus is ſaid * to have been the firſt King of Sicyon, and we are told that he began to Reign Seventy Four Years before the Birth of Abraham. Zeuxippus was the laſt King: He was the Twenty Sixth, and Reign'd Thirty Two Years. The form of the Government was changed after his Death: The Prieſts ſhould be ſuppreſs'd in our Language, ſuch as Naked, Nakedneſs, Adultery, Fornication, and a thouſand more which excite obſcene Ideas. At this rate the Bible ſhou'd be Corrected, and the Writers inſpired by God, wou'd be liable to Cenſure; for they mention the Nakedneſs of Noah (a), and of the Apoſtles (b), and did not ſcruple to expreſs themſelves Naturally and without a compaſs of words, upon ſuch occaſions, wherein one ſhould have a regard to Chaſt Ears, according to the Principles I confute. Thoſe, who underſtand the Hebrew Tongue, are not ignorant that Moſes made uſe of a vulgar word to denote (c) the Mortal Blow the Madianite Woman had received. (d) Tu fortaſſe, ut ſunt ferè hypocritæ, verbo tetrici, rebus obſcæni, ne ipſum quidem Moſen iſtâ notâ immunem abs te dimiſeris; cum alibi ſæpius, tum etiam ubi Phineæ haſta, quâ parte mulierum transfixerit, ſiqua fides Hebræis, aperte narrat. The ſecond Excuſe is worſe ſtill, and would be of no uſe but to a writer of Romances. I confeſs that if ſuch an Author pitch'd upon Catherine Sforza to be his Heroin, and the ſubject of an Hiſtory, like ſo many ſorry pieces that come out every day, which contain a thouſand Fables and Chimeras, beſides true matter of Fact; I ſay, ſuch an Author might omit the Faults of that Lady: But an Hiſtorian ought not to do it, he is obliged to repreſent the ill Qualities of People: Juſtice requires that what is blameable ſhould be actually blamed; and whoever conceals the Faults of great Perſons, or (e) extenuates them, Impoſes upon the World in ſeveral reſpects. We are thereby deprived of a Knowledge that belongs to us, and induced to make an ill uſe of our Approbation. If our Catherine committed a Fault, is it not reaſonable ſhe ſhould ſuffer for it in ſome meaſure, by the Judgment which the Readers will paſs upon it? And if all Hiſtorians imitated the Writer I ſpeak of, would not Men be deprived of the fear of Poſterity, which is a mighty Curb to keep 'em to their Duty, and one of the greateſt Advantages that can be reap'd from Hiſtory? Will you ſay that there was a neceſſity to paſs over in ſilence ſuch a piece of Impudence, leſt it ſhould be imitated by others? But for the ſame reaſon all the Lewd and Diſorderly Actions of Mankind ſhould be omitted by Hiſtorians, and they ſhould be meer Panegyriſts. The Profeſſion of an Hiſtorian ſhould be forbidden, and all Nations ſhould uſe it as the Jews uſed Painting. All Hiſtorians ſhould be ordered to confine themſelves to the enquiry of Natural Things, and not to meddle with Humane Life. Pliny would not have been much againſt ſuch an Order; for the care that was taken to write Annals in order to diſcover Mens Crimes, whilſt the works of Nature remain unknown, was look'd upon by him as a very Pernicious Thing. (f) Mira humani ingenii peſte, ſanguinem, & cædes condere annalibus juvat, ut ſcelera hominum noſcantur mundi ipſius ignaris. Perhaps it will be ſaid that the Author of the Supplement thought he was to expreſs himſelf, as if he had told a Story in the preſence of the moſt Virtuous Women in the World. This is a wrong Notion: Thoſe, who maintain that every word, which cannot be ſpoken before a Virtuous Woman, ought to be baniſh'd from a Book, are miſtaken. 'Tis a Maxim of over-nice and preciſe Women; which you will eaſily grant, if you conſider never ſo little the difference between a Converſation and a Book. An Honeſt Woman will be juſtly Offended, if any one tells her an Obſcene Story; but ſhe will not blame an Hiſtorian for relating it, provided he abſtain from filthy Words: An Hiſtorian ſpeaks to the Publick, and not to ſuch or ſuch a Woman in particular; and therefore what he ſays is not Offenſive, as it would be, if it was related in a Converſation or in a Letter. In theſe two laſt Caſes he would not have an advantageous Notion of the Modeſty of thoſe to whom he ſpeaks or writes; and that is it that gives Offence. They would apply the conſequence perſonally to themſelves; but none applies to himſelf in ſuch a manner what concerns only the Publick. We are obliged to hear what we are told, or to read the Letters that are written to us; but every body may read or lay aſide a Printed Book. Laſtly, I obſerve that the Writers of Dictionaries need not be ſo reſerved, ſince they ought to be clear and preciſe in the Explication of Things.

* Euſebius in Chron. [illegible] ſays that Abraham was Born the 52 Year of the Reign of Europs, ſecond King of Sicyon, who ſucceeded Ægialeus, whoſe Reign had laſted 52. Years.

(a) Geneſ. chap. 9.

(b) John XXI. 7.

(c) Num. XXV.

(d) Miltonus in defenſione pro ſe contra Alexandrum Morum p. m. 75.

(e) See the Remark A in the Article Domitia.

(f) Plinius lib. 2. cap. 9. pag. m. 152.

(F) An overſight of the Tranſlator of a Book of Lewis Guicciardin.] I don't know that Tranſlator's Name; but I know that he has Tranſlated ſeveral Italian Books into French. He himſelf ſays ſo in his Preface to L'hore di recreatione di M. Lodovico Guicciardini, Patritio Fiorentino. That Book of Lewis Guicciardin is a Collection of Stories, Sentences and Witty Sayings. He did not forget our Catherine Sforza. He ſays ſhe did what I have related above in the Citadel of Forli, when her Husband had been kill'd. (g) Ma la Conteſſa animoſa non mutando faccia, alzataſi toſtamente i panni davanti con fiero ſguardo diſſe loro: E non vi pare egli ſtolti ch'io habbia le forme da farne delli altri? The Tranſlator renders thoſe Italian words thus: But the Courageous Counteſs, without altering her Countenance, turn'd up her Coats, and told 'em with a proud Look, Don't you think you Fools, that I have ſtill Beauty enough to get others? Nothing can be more Abſurd than to make her ſay upon ſuch an occaſion I have ſtill Beauty enough. If it was ſaid in the foregoing Words, that ſhe unmask'd her ſelf to ſhew her Face, there would be ſome Juſtneſs and Coherency in her Diſcourſe; but there is none at all if it be compared with what ſhe had been doing. The Author cannot be excuſed upon account of Modeſty; for had he had ſuch a Motive, he would have omitted or wrapp'd up that Action, inſtead of relating it as plainly as he does. His miſtake proceeds from not knowing that the word Forme in that place ſignifies Moulds. This Ignorance has occaſion'd a ſtrange diſorder in the ſequel of the Diſcourſe.

(Z) The Collection Publiſh'd by Hortenſio Lando.] Christofano Bronzini has recourſe to that Collection, being obliged to confute one of the Interlocutors of his Dialogues, who ſays that few Women can write a few Words. His Anſwer is, (h) Sono ſtate tante, che paſſano le centinaia; e tanto degne di lode, che ſe voi vedeſte le lettere loro (che con tanto ſudore, con tanta diligenza, e ſpeſa furono raccolte dal Sign. Hortenſio Lando; & à perſuaſione, e preghiere di Ottavian Raverta, eletto poi Veſcovo di Terracina,) date in luce, e ſtampate da Gabriel Giolito, l'anno 1549. vi chiarireſte, con quanta eloquenza, con quanto artificio, con quanta oſſervanza, & bella maniera di dire, elle ſapeſſero porre in carta altro, che quattro parole. Beſides his referring to that Collection, he took ſome Letters out of it, and inſerted 'em in his Work; particularly with reſpect to our Iſabella Sforza. You'll find there the Letter ſhe writ to Bobbia. To conclude, ſuch a work as that of Hortenſio Lando, did very well deſerve I ſhould mention ſome Circumſtances of it; and therefore I hope the moſt ſevere Criticks will excuſe me for taking the liberty

(g) L'hore di ricreatione di Lodov. Guicciardini fol. 290. verſo edit. of Paris 1584. in 12.

(h) Christofano Bronzini, della dignita e nobilta delle donne, giornata quarta pag 40.

Prieſts were inveſted with the Supreme Authority. That Kingdom laſted (A) Nine Hundred and Sixty Two Years; it ended when Heli was High-Prieſt and Judge of the † Jews. The Worſhip which the Sicyonians paid to Bacchus, was one of the moſt Ridiculous (B) parts of the Pagan Religion.

SILANION, a Famous Sculptor, flouriſh'd in the time of Alexander the Great, * about the 114. Olympiad. He was an ‖ Athenian, and got a great skill in his Art without β being taught by any Body. The Statue of Sappho, that of one Satyrus δ, who often carried the Prize at the Grecian Games, that of another Athlet call'd Demaratus γ, and that of Apollodorus (Z) a Sculptor, who was hardly Pleaſed with his own Works, were accounted his beſt Pieces. Vitruvius ζ ſays he wrote a Tract, wherein he explain'd the Rules of Symmetry.

SYLVIUS (FRANCIS) Profeſſor of Eloquence, and Principal of Tournay-College at Paris, towards the beginning of the XVI. Century, was a Native of Amiens, where his Father Nicolas du Bois was ‡ a Gamlet-worker. Nicolas had Fifteen Children, Eleven Sons and Four Daughters. Francis was the third; and being bred up a Scholar, he became a Learned Man and ſettled at Paris. He Latinized his Name according to the Cuſtom of thoſe times. He ſent for two of his Brothers, and taught 'em Claſſical Learning: One of 'em call'd John was made Canon of Amiens, and Curate of Moneteaux; the other, whoſe Name was James, became a very Learned Phyſician, as we ſhall ſee in the following Article. Francis Sylvius found a great Barbarouſneſs in the Colleges; but he made it his Buſineſs to reſtore the uſe of good Latin, and was one of the greateſt Promoters of Polite Learning in France. He directed the Scholars to the beſt Latin Authors, and ſo earneſtly recommended to them the reading of Cicero, that 'twas not long of him, if † August. de civit. Dei l. 18. c. 19.

* Plinius lib. 34. cap. 8. pag. m. 119.

‖ Pauſan. lib. 6. cap. 4. p. 361.

β Plin. ib.

γ Pauſan. ibid.

δ Id. ib. cap. 14. pag. 487.

ζ Vitruv. præf. lib. 7.

‡ Chez i panni & ungolari biſto.

Renat. Moreau in vita Jacobi Sylvii.

berty to ſet down Bronzini's Words ſomewhat at large.

(A) That Kingdom laſted Nine Hundred and Sixty Two Years.] It laſted three Years leſs, if we believe St. Auguſtin (a). A Commentator (b) upon that Father has committed two faults in few words. He ſays, that according to Euſebius, that Kingdom laſted Eight Hundred and Sixty Two Years, and he adds that if the Years be caſt up, they'll amount to Nine Hundred and Seventy Two. 'Tis certain Euſebius (c) mentions a duration of Nine Hundred and Sixty Two Years, and that the Addition of the Years of each King of Sicyon makes but Nine Hundred and Sixty Two Years. Euſebius reckons from Abraham's Birth, and ſuppoſes that Patriarch was Born in the 22d Year of Europs, the ſecond King of Sicyon, who ſucceeded Ægialeus, and Reign'd Fifty Two Years, and that the Kingdom of Sicyon ended in (d) 889. Make an Addition, and you'll find the ſecond Fault I have Cenſured.

(B) Was one of the moſt ridiculous parts of the Pagan Religion.] They Worſhipp'd Bacchus under ſuch an Obſcene Name, that none but Impudent People can pronounce it in a free Converſation. Clemens Alexandrinus does juſtly blame the Heathens for ſuch a Turpitude. (e) Διόνυσον δὲ ἤδη σιωπῶ τὸν χοιροψάλην. Σικυώνιοι τοῦτον προσκυνοῦσιν ἐπὶ τῶν γυναικείων τάξαντες τὸν Διόνυσον μορίων ἔφορον αἴσχους καὶ τῆς ὕβρεως σεβάζοντες ἀρχηγόν. Bacchum enim jam taceo pudendi contrectatorem. Eum adorant Sicyonii, qui Bacchum membris præficiunt muliebribus tanquam turpitudinis ac fœditatis inſpectorem, & quaſi libidinis colant præfectum. M. Coſtar writing in Proſe, took a more than Poetical Liberty, when he made uſe of thoſe words of Clemens Alexandrinus to explain ſome Verſes of Horace. Such a liberty did not go unpuniſh'd; M. de Girac did ſeverely Banter him for it under the following Irony. "(f) I will not imitate him in his ill Humour; "on the contrary, I find he has been very ſucceſsful in his Explication of theſe Verſes of the ſame "Poet (g),

"Bacchum in remotis carmina rupibus
"Vidi docentem, credite Poſteri,
"Nymphaſque diſcentes, & aures
"Capripedum Satyrorum acutas.

"I did not think fit, ſays M. Coſtar (h), to write "to you a Pleaſant Thing concerning Bacchus's Scholars, leſt my Letter ſhould fall into other Hands than "yours. But now I will be bolder, because I fancy "this Paper will be more ſecret. I have read in "Clemens Alexandrinus, that Bacchus was Worſhip'd among the Sicyonians under the Name of "χοιροψάλαν (i), which ſignifies. ——— If it be "ſo, don't ask me what he was doing in remotis with "thoſe Beautiful Nymphs. Certainly, none of 'em "could come off: He felt 'em all one after another; "this was the Leſſon he gave 'em. I think, Sir, "they wanted no Pocket-Book to write it down. Pray, "let me know by the firſt opportunity what you think "of it, &c. I am ſorry I was not there, for I fancy Bacchus was a jolly Doctor, and 'twas worth ones "while to ſee him act ſuch a Part. He had an Honeſt Fellow for his Tutor, a Man of good Example, who ſets forth very fine Moral Reflections in "Euripides's Cyclopes. I don't ask M. Coſtar what "he would have done with thoſe Nymphs: But "if he had lived at that time, we ſhould not have "known ſuch fine things. However, I hope he'll "excuſe me for leaving out two or three words, "which none can be ſo Impudent as to write or "utter, than Bacchus's Maſter or his Diſciple, I "mean, Silenus, and M. Coſtar". Menage knowing that the Latin word Porcus, and the Greek word χοῖρος, ſignified that part of a Woman, which Modeſty does not permit to Name, made uſe of that Erudition to give us (i) the Etymology of the Epithet, under which Bacchus was Worſhip'd at Sicyon.

Iſaac Voſſius advances an Etymological Conjecture grounded upon the Obſcenities, over which Bacchus preſided. Non ab hoc (k) Orthagora, ſays he (l), nomen Orthagoriæ eſt arceſſendum, ſed vero a numine ſalaciſſimo, ut exiſtimo. Nullus dubito quin Bacchus, ipſe aliquando dictus ſit Orthagoras. Antequam enim ille hortorum cuſtos Lampſaci naſceretur, notum eſt Bacchum comiteſque ejus curam locorum muliebrium habuiſſe. Hinc fit ut nontantum ἰθύφαλλον ipſum vocarint, verum etiam idem ſignificantibus vocabulis, ὄρθον, ὀρθανὴν, & ὀρθαγόραν. Sane apud Ariſtophanem ἐκκλησιαζούσαις, cum juvencula hortatur anum prurientem, ut vocet Orthagoram, id non niſi de hoc dæmone peculiato videtur intelligendum, uti ad illum locum fuſius oſtendemus.

(Z) That of Apollodorus a Sculptor, who was hardly pleaſed with his own Works.] What Pliny ſays upon this is very Remarkable, and ſhews Silanion's great skill in his Art. (m) Silanion Apollodorum fudit, fictorem & ipſum, ſed inter cunctos diligentiſſimum artis, & inimicum ſui judicem, crebro perfecta ſigna frangentem, dum ſatiari cupiditate artis non quit, & ideo inſanum cognominatum. Hoc in eo expreſſit, nec hominem ex ære fecit, ſed iracundiam. Theſe words have been well enough underſtood by du Pinet; but he is ſtrangely miſtaken in the ſequel of this Paſſage. His Tranſlation runs thus: "Silanion made "the Statue of of Apollodorus, who was alſo a "Sculptor, and very much Eſteem'd. But he was "ſo intent upon his Art, that he never liked his "own Work; ſo that moſt times, he broke very "Noble Pieces out of Spite, after he had made an "end of 'em, thinking he could never do a thing "well

(i) Quindi χοιροψάλης, Conni contrectator, cognome di Bacco preſſo à Sicionii, ſecondo lo teſtifica Clemente Aleſſandrino nell' Ammonizione alle genti: il qual cognome viene anche da Eſchilo attribuito à Bacco. Menag. Origini della Ling. Italiana, in voce Potta, pag. 383.

(k) An Hiſtorian mention'd by Strabo, Ælian and Philoſtratus.

(l) Iſaac. Voſſius in Pompon. Melam. l. 2. c. 2. p. m. 133.

(m) Plin. lib. 34. cap. 8. pag. m. 126.

if that Roman Orator was not look'd upon as the only Model of a good (A) Style *. 'Tis true, that before he gave ſuch Advices, he himſelf had been taught † bad Latin, as it appears from ſome of his Compoſures. He Publiſh'd (B) ſeveral Books. I muſt not forget a thing that is very glorious to him: He procured an Edition of Martial (C) cleared from many Obſcenities, that the Youth might improve themſelves by the reading of that Poet without endangering their Morals.

* Ex ed. ibid.

† See the Remark C.

SYLVIUS (James) Brother to the foregoing, was one of the moſt famous Phyſicians of the XVI. Century. He was Born at Amiens in 1478, and went thro' his School-Learning at Paris under Francis Sylvius his Brother. He learn'd of him, and Taught in Tournay-College the Latin Tongue with much greater Purity, than it had been taught long before; which was the Reaſon why his Writings were ſo much taken notice of, becauſe of the Elegance of the Style. Having an Inclination to the Study of Phyſick, he was contented to learn ſome Hebrew of Vatablus, and reſolved to learn Greek and Latin perfectly, in order to qualify himſelf for that Study. 'Tis true, he applied himſelf likewiſe to the Mathematicks, and made ſo great a Progreſs in that Science, that he invented ſome Machines, which he preſented to the Provoſt of Merchants, and to the Echevins of Paris. When it was time for him to apply himſelf wholly to Phyſick; he ſtudied it in the Original Authors, and ſo far engaged in the reading of Hippocrates, and Galen, that he ſpent all his time in Examining and Tranſlating thoſe two Authors. Which made him ſenſible of the uſefulneſs of Anatomy; and he applied himſelf to it ſo earneſtly, that his Skill in it was as great as the Age he lived in could permit. He ſtudied Pharmacy with the ſame eagerneſs, and made ſeveral Journies to ſee the Remedies produced by different Countries. Being return'd to Paris, he betook himſelf to read

“ well enough: Which was the Reaſon why many call'd him a Mad-man. Silanion intending to ſhew it, made a Statue of Anger, in a Woman's Cloaths, inſtead of Apollodorus. „ I think there is a miſtake in theſe words of the Tranſlator in a Woman's Cloaths inſtead of Apollodorus. I don't believe this is Pliny's Meaning; but only that Appollodorus's Statue appear'd ſo Paſſionate and Cholerick, that one would have taken it to be the very Figure of Anger. See the Epigrams of the Anthologia, quoted by Father Harduin, (a) upon a Thought like that of Pliny. This Miſtake of du Pinet is inconſiderable, if compared with thoſe that follow. Read firſt the Latin Words of Pliny. (b) Et Achillem nobilem. Item Epiſtaten exercentem athletas: Strongylion Amazonem, quam ab excellentia crurum Eucnemon appellant, ob id in comitatu Neronis Principis circumlatam. Item fecit (c) puerum, quem amando Brutus Philippenſis cognomine ſuo illuſtravit. Du Pinet renders 'em thus: “ He made alſo an Achilles very much eſteem'd, and Epiſtbates, who exerciſed the Wreſtlers. He made alſo Strongylion an Amazon, which he Sirnamed Eucnemos, that is, Fine Legg'd; which the Emperor Nero eſteem'd ſo much, that he had it commonly carried along with him. He made alſo a Statue of a young Boy, ſo Beautiful, that Brutus of Philippopoli in Romania, fell in love with it, and it was called by his Name. „ You ſee he aſcribes to Silanion all the Works mention'd in the Paſſage out of Pliny, whereas he ſhould only have aſcribed to him the two Firſt. The two others belonging to a famous Statuary, whoſe Name was Strongylion. He is mention'd in the 1ſt and 9th Books of Pauſanias (d): the Tranſlator took Strongylion for the Name of an Amazon, whoſe Statue had been made by Silanion. Beſides, he was in the wrong to think that that Statue was Sir-nam'd Fine Legg'd by the Sculptor that made it; Pliny does not ſay ſo. Laſtly, If he had a Mind to be underſtood, he ſhould not have mention'd one Brutus of Philippopoli in Romania, but Brutus, who periſh'd at the Battle of Philippi, the ſame who Murder'd Julius Cæſar.

(a) Harduin. in Plin. tom. 5. pag. 126

(b) Plin. ubi ſupra.

(c) Martial. epig. 77. lib. 2. & epigr. 51 lib. 9. & epigr. 171. lib. 14. mentions that Statue of a Child, which Brutus loved.

(d) Pauſan. lib. 1. pag. 97. & lib. 9. pag. 767. edit. 1696.

That the Remark contain'd in this Article, may ſerve as a Supplement to the Collections I have made in another place, concerning thoſe who are never pleaſed with their Productions, and ſpoil 'em by much reviſing them; I ſhall add to what Pliny ſays of Apollodorus, the Words of the ſame Author, wherein he does ſo well expreſs the ſame Fault of the Sculptor Callimachus. (e) Ex omnibus autem maxime cognomine inſignis eſt Callimachus, ſemper calumniator ſui, nec finem habens diligentiæ, ob id Cacizotechnos appellatus, memorabili exemplo adhibendi curæ modum. Hujus ſunt ſaltantes Lacænæ; emendatum opus, ſed in quo gratiam omnem diligentia abſtulerit. Protogenes a Painter was as nice as the Sculptors Callimachus and Apollodorus. We have ſeen in another place what Judgment Apelles made of him; and I add here, that this Judgment was approved by Cicero. I ſhall ſet down his own words, becauſe they may ſerve as an Inſtruction to the Writers, who are never weary of Mending their Compoſures. They know not that every thing ought to be kept within due Bounds. (f) In omnibus rebus videndum eſt quatenus. Etſi enim ſuus cuique modus eſt, tamen magis offendit nimium, quam parum. In quo Apelles pictores quoque eos peccare dicebat, qui non ſentirent, quid eſſet ſatis.

(e) Plin. ubi ſupra pag. 131.

(f) Cicero de Oratore fol. m. 130.

(A) Not long of him, if that Roman Orator was not look'd upon as the only Model of a good Style.] Renatus Moreau expreſſes this in very fine Words, in his Life of James Sylvius. I ſhall not ſet 'em down, but only the Epigram made upon Sylvius by William Ducheri, as I find it in the ſame Life.

FRANCISCI SYLVII RHETORIS TUMULUS.

Quod nunquam potuit multorum exercitus olim
Barbariem Francis finibus exigere;
Illud militibus ter centum Syvius egit,
Quo duce habet regnum lingua Latina ſuum.
Rem vero aggreſſus majorem, ut clarior eſſet
Romani princeps Tullius eloquii.
O mortem properam, Lacheſiſque breviſſima penſa!
Re prope confecta Sylvius oppetiit.

(B) Several Books.] Progymnaſmatum in artem Oratoriam Centuriæ tres. Some Commentaries upon Twenty One Orations of Cicero, upon his Tract de Senectute, and his Paradoxes, and upon the Letters of Politian, and ſome other Illuſtrious Men (g). This laſt Work has been re-printed ſeveral times. The Third Edition is of the Year 1526. He Dedicated it to Euſtache de Croy, Biſhop of Arras, whom he had taught for the ſpace of Four Years at Louvain; from whence it may be inferr'd, that he had ſome Employment in that Univerſity.

(g) Geſner. in Biblioth.

(C) An Edition of Martial clear'd from many Obſcenities.] Father Vavaſſeur would not deprive our Sylvius of the glory of being the Firſt, who curtail'd Martial, tho' the ſame thing was objected to the Jeſuits, and he might have turn'd it to their Advantage. Theſe are his Words. (h) Quod unicam feciſſemus primi rem tantam, tam utilem omnibus, tam neceſſariam juventuti, eaque nobis ſolida & integra laus & propria maneret, cœpiſſe vel ſic de virtute ac morum diſciplina bene mereri. Sed eſt qui hanc nobis lauream præripuerit, antequam etiam nati, ut ſic dicam, eſſemus. Anno enim ſuperioris ſæculi decimo quarto Franciſcus quidam Sylvius, Ambianus, in Academia Pariſienſi qui tum degeret ac literas publice profiteretur, quaſi Augiæ ſtabulum purgaturus, hunc ſe laborem Herculeum ſuſcepiſſe declarat, horrida quidem & inſolenter ac barbare ſcripta epiſtola, facile ut appareat potiorem ei curam fuiſſe morum quam Latini ſermonis; ſed ex qua tamen intelligatur, &c. Afterwards he gives

(h) Vavaſſor de Epigrammate, pag. 255. & ſeq.

read Lectures, whereby he got a great deal of Money, of which he (A) was too greedy. He explain'd in two Years time, a whole Courſe of Phyſick taken from Hippocrates and Galen; and his Reputation was ſo great, that People reſorted to him from all Parts of Europe. But before he was ſo well known, he was very much thwarted by the Paris Phyſicians, who took it very ill, that a Man who had taken no where his Doctor's Degree, ſhould undertake to teach Phyſick in the Chief Town of the Kingdom. Whereupon he went to Montpellier in 1530, to take his Degree: He was there for ſome time, and then left the Place in order to return to Paris, without being admitted Doctor. He was not willing to be (B) at the Charges. Going by Lyons, he Publiſh'd there, at the requeſt of two * Phyſicians, a Diſputation de vini exhibitione in Febribus. 'Tis the Firſt Book he Printed. Being come to Paris, he endeavour'd to reconcile himſelf with the Phyſicians, that he might have leave to teach; and he Publiſh'd a French Grammar, which coſt him a great deal of pains: That Book was to be follow'd by another, which never came out, wherein he treated of the Origin of the French Tongue. He was admitted Batchelor (C) of Phyſick in June 1631. and it appears by the Records of the Faculty, that in the Year 1535, he taught in Triequet-College, whilſt Fernel taught in Cornouaille-College; but the latter had but few Auditors, whereas Sylvius (D) had a great many, becauſe he made Diſſections, and taught Botanicks, and the Preparation of Remedies, which Fernel did not do. Vidus Vidius, Profeſſor of Phyſick in the Royal College, being invited into Italy in the Year 1548, none was thought better qualify'd than Sylvius to fill up his Place. He was uncertain for gives us the Title of that Edition. M. Valerii Martialis Epigrammaton lectoris caſtimonia dignorum liber: ubi omnia Veneris illius deſpuenda quaſi irritamenta, quibus paſſim ſordidatam lectorum nares corrugabat, accurata Franciſci Sylvii Ambianatis diligentia deletili ſpongia deterſa ſunt & eluta. He alſo gives us the Title of the Epiſtle Dedicatory. Reverendum in Chriſto Patrem D. Nicolaum Conſturanum; & D. Hadrianum Henoncurium, Horeſtea amicitiæ ferrumine conferruminatos Franciſcus Sylvius Ambianas ſalute plurima impetitur. He tells us that this Epiſtle Dedicatory is written in a very barbarous Style, and quite different from that which the Author had ſome time after. Reſpondet inſcriptioni fœdæ & ridicule etiam informis quæ ſequitur epiſtola, quem ſermonem tamen ſuum Sylvius, quod vix credas, (a) Montauſeri, aliquot poſt Annis ita emendavit, ut à ſe totus diverſus & alius planè ſcriptor eſſe videatur. The Concluſion of the Epiſtle runs thus: Sylvio veſtro qui literarum haſce bonas ſegetes ab illis officium linguæ turpitudine multa ſuperantibus diſcriminavit, plauſibiliter adplaudite. Laſtly, he ſays that Martial was not ſufficiently curtail'd, and that he has ſeen ſome very obſcene words in that Edition. Vidi ego hunc ipſum librum à Jacobo Kerverio, Chriſti anno 1535. publicatum, hac inſcriptione quam modo poſui, hac epiſtola quæ caſtiſſima & ſanctiſſima omnia promitteret, nudis tamen & prætextatis aliquot vocibus ſpurcum atque infamem.

* Symphorien Champier, & Jerome Du-Mont.

(A) Of which he was too greedy.] A prodigious Avarice blaſted many good Qualitities of our James Sylvius. He had ſo many Scholars, that he ſhould not have narrowly minded whether each of 'em paid him; and yet he was ſo rigid about it, that he made a horrid noiſe, when they did not pay him exactly five (b) Pence per Month a piece. He fell once into ſo great a Paſſion, becauſe (c) one or two of his Scholars had not brought him his Monthly Money, that he ſwore he would leave off reading Lectures, if the other Scholars did not turn 'em out, or force 'em to pay him. He lived a very ſordid Life; he gave nothing but Bread to his Servants, and had no Fire all the Winter. He plaid at Foot-ball, and uſed to carry a Log upon his Shoulders from the Ground-floor to the Garret, to keep himſelf warm; and he ſaid the Heat he got by ſuch an Exerciſe did him more good than a Fire. 'Tis no wonder if he got a great deal of Money, living ſuch a ſordid Life, and if he hid his Gold under Ground. He had a Houſe in St. Marceau's Suburb, where, 'twas ſaid, he had hid 500 Ducats: Some maintain'd they had ſeen 'em in a Red Purſe; which was confirm'd by a Magician, who deſired to have one half of that Treaſure for his pains of directing to it: But tho' they ſearch'd and dug the Ground, they did not find a Penny. When the Houſe in which Sylvius had lived, in St. James's Street, was (d) pull'd down, in order to be re-built, the Maſons found ſome Piſtoles in it, and 'twas thought many more had been hid in it (e). Buchanan (f) made a Diſtich by way of Epitaph, when Sylvius was ſo angry, that he was for turning out the two poor Scholars who had not paid him. We are told, (g) that on the Funeral day, that Diſtich was poſted up to the Church-door by ſome of his Hearers. It runs thus:

> Sylvius hic ſitus eſt, gratis qui nil dedit unquam, > Mortuus & gratis quod legis iſta, dolet.

Henry Stephens (h) Tranſlated it into French Verſe, thus:

> Ici git Sylvius auquel onq en ſa vie
> De donner rien gratis ne prit aucune envie,
> Et ores qu'il eſt mort, & tout rongé de vers,
> Encores ha depit qu'on lit gratis ces vers.

Another Satyrical Piece was Publiſh'd againſt him, wherein he was tax'd with Avarice in a pleaſant manner: Moreau aſcribes it to Henry Stephens. That Libel was a Dialogue, intitl'd Sylvius ocreatus, and the Author of it took the Name of Ludovicus Arribavenus Mantuanus. Sylvius call'd for his Boots a little before he died, to ſit by the Fire ſide, and expired Booted. Whereupon the Author of the Satyr feign'd that Sylvius had put on his Boots to croſs the Acheron without a Boat, and without paying any thing for the Ferriage. He was alſo bantered in that Book, for loving to talk in a Shoemaker's Shop; which was ſomewhat ſtrange for a Man ſo Learned, and ſo little Sociable. One of his Scholars call'd John Melet, made an Anſwer to that Satyr, under the fictitious Name of Claudius Burgenſis (i).

(B) He was not willing to be at the Charges.] Renatus Moreau heard an Old Phyſician of Montpellier ſay, That Sylvius promiſed the Profeſſors of that Univerſity to bring a vaſt number of Students from all parts of the Kingdom, if they would admit him into their Society gratis; and that his Propoſal not being accepted, he reſolved to return to Paris, to deſire the Faculty to give him leave to teach.

(C) He was admitted Batchelor of Phyſick.] The Records of the Faculty, which prove this Fact, irrefragably confute thoſe, who ſhould ſay after Ranchin (k), that Sylvius was a Phyſician at Montpellier; for ſince he was made Batchelor of Phyſick after his Journey to Montpellier, 'tis undeniable that he was not admitted Doctor at Montpellier before he return'd to Paris: Beſides, 'tis certain he did not leave Paris ſince he took his Batchelor's Degree in that Univerſity. (l)

(D) Sylvius had a great many.] He Publiſh'd for the Uſe of his Scholars, the Practice of Mark Gattinaria: 'Tis ſaid that Nine Hundred Copies were Sold off in One or Two Days, and that the Bookſeller was oblig'd to make a Second Edition (m). A Poet (n) who made his Epitaph, ſays, that a Thouſand Eyes were fixed upon him, when he read his Lectures:

> Quem certa methodo medicis de rebus agentem,
> Aſſiduè in ludo totius principe terræ,
> Mille acri aſſiduè ſpectabant luminaq; viſu.

(e) Ex Renato Moreau in ejus vita.
(f) Henry Stephens, ibid.
(g) Scæv. Sammarthanus in Elog. pag. m. 27.
(h) Ubi ſupra.
(i) Ex Renato Moreau ubi ſupra.
(k) In Catalogo Doctor. Monſpel.
(l) Moreau ibid.
(m) Moreau in vita Sylvii.
(n) J. Vavræus, apud Moreau ibid.

Moreau

for the ſpace of two Years, whether he ſhould accept that Employment; but at laſt he accepted it in 1550, and continued in it 'till he died, which happen'd the (E) 13th of January 1555. 'Twas the Seventy Seventh Year of his Life ‡. He was Buried in the Burying-place (F) of poor Scholars. He never was Married, and ſeem'd to have an Averſion to Women. He took more care to clear his Style from the Barbarouſneſs that prevail'd in the Schools, than to leave off his (G) Rough and Wild way. He was ſo addicted to Galen's Opinions, that he obſtinately maintain'd his Errors; and Judicial (H) Aſtrology was the only thing wherein he departed from him. I ſhall ſay (I) ſomething of his Writings. He had a great (K) Quarrel with Veſalius.

SIMON or SIMONIS (Theodorus) was Born * at Bercheſtede in Holſtein. See the Remark I in the Article of Janſenius, to which you may add what follows. Fromond || maintains, that this Man being ſet at Liberty, Abjur'd his Hereſies at Louvain, and that Janſenius gave him wherewithal to pay his Charges in the Tavern, and to make his Journey. He further ſays, that he had forſaken his Order at Magdeburg before he came to Louvain. I ſhall ſpeak of the Anſwer that was

Moreau underſtands it of Five Hundred Auditors, and quotes Sylvius himſelf, who ſays, he had but four Hundred, (a) auditoribus circiter quadringentis. If it be ſo, Moreau ſhould not have ſaid that Sylvius's School might be compared with that of Theophraſtus (b), who had two Thouſand Scholars. Henry Stephens (c) mentions only two or three Hundred Scholars of Sylvius.

(E) The 13th of January 1555. 'Twas the 77th Year of his Life] Renatus Moreau quotes Five Authors for it, viz. Mizauld, Paſchaſius Gallus, Arrivabenus (d), Claudius Burgenſis, and La Croix du Maine. But he obſerves, at the ſame time, that Sainte (e) Marthe and (f) Geſner ſay, that he lived only Sixty Three Years; that Du Breul (g) places his Death on the Firſt Day of February 1554; and that according to Nancelius and Rouville, he flouriſhed in 1557, and 1560. My Edition of Du Breul of the Year 1639 in 4to. places Sylvius's Death in the 63d Year of his Life, and on the 10th of January 1554 Moreri, Merlinus (h), and Freherus (i) have committed the ſame Miſtake with Sainte Marthe.

(F) In the Burying-place of poor Scholars.] He ordered it ſo by his Will. That Burying-place is before Montaigu College. The Funeral was performed with great Pomp: The Univerſity were preſent at it, and the Phyſicians put on their Scarlet Gowns. The Name of that Burying-place puts me in mind of a Tract written by Sylvius, in favour of poor Scholars: It is intitl'd, De victus ratione facili ac ſalubri pauperum Scholaſticorum. He preſcribes them a Diet, which, ſays he, God has put into his Heart to Publiſh; and he enters upon ſuch a Detail as would make the Men of our Age laugh, who are leſs tractable than thoſe of Sylvius's time. He adviſes the Scholars, who awake in the Night, to Cough and Spit ſtoutly, and gives 'em ſeveral little Expedients to keep themſelves Warm in Bed. Ut citius incaleſcas pedes etiam in nates reduces, in lectum inſpira. 'Tis likely he knew the Benefit of 'em by his own Experience.

(G) His Rough and Wild way.] He ſeldom Jeſted, and ſeldom departed from his Gravity; and when he had a Mind to appear more ſociable, by ſome witty Conceit, he did it ſomewhat uncouthly. Here's the only Merry Thought that is told of him: He ſaid one Day, That he had parted with Three Beaſts, his Cat, his Mule, and his Maid.

(H) Judicial Aſtrology was the only thing] It had never been ſo much in vogue both at Court and in the Town, as in Sylvius's time; (k) and yet he oppoſed it ſtoutly, whenever there was occaſion for it. One Day after he had railed bitterly at the Aſtrologers, he told his good Friend Turnebus (l), that he had often run over the whole Almanack in the beginning of the Year, and ſet down Fair Weather whereever there was Rainy Weather; Wind inſtead of Calm; Cloudy Weather inſtead of Clear Weather; and that he found by the Event, at the Years end, that he had been a much better Aſtrologer than they.

(I) I ſhall ſay ſomething of his Writings.] The Chief Books he wrote are, Methodus medicamenta componendi ad uſum medicorum concinnata. Libri de medicamentorum ſimplicium delectu in Pharmacopæorum gratiam conſcripti. Caſtigationes & emendationes in Joannem Meſuaeum. His Books of Anatomy were Publickly explain'd by the Profeſſors of Paris. His Treatiſe De Menſibus Mulierum, was the Text on which Lewis Duret read Publick Lectures. The ſame Tract, and another de Generatione Hominis, were Tranſlated into French by William Chretien, Phyſician to Henry II. His Tracts of Anatomy and Pharmacy have been Tranſlated into French, and Re-printed ſeveral times. They are probably the ſame that were publickly explain'd by one of the moſt Zealous Scholars of Veſalius; which is much, conſidering how violently (m) he, and Veſalius hated one another. There is an (n) Edition in Folio of Sylvius's Works, Publiſhed by Renatus Moreau, who prefixed to it the Life of that great Man, out of which I have Extracted this Article. That Life is ſo well Written, that it were to be wiſh'd, the Work (o) from which it was taken, was Printed. Next to it there are many Encomiums upon Sylvius, collected out of divers Authors, whereby it appears that he was in great Eſteem.

(K) A great Quarrel with Veſalius.] The latter gave Sylvius the greateſt Trouble that ever he had. Sylvius's Excellency lay in Anatomy, and he was preparing a Work upon that Subject, which he look'd upon as his Maſter-piece. Whereupon Veſalius Publiſhes in 1541, his Opus Anatomicum, ſo well done, and with ſo many fine Cuts, that every body admires it. Veſalius had been Sylvius's Scholar for the ſpace of Three Years, which is another Vexation; the Scholar ſupplants his Maſter. Beſides, he writes againſt Galen, and not only charges him with many Faults, tho' perhaps without Reaſon, but plainly ſhews ſome of his Errors. How could Sylvius bear this, being look'd upon as the Reſtorer and Firſt Interpreter of Galen? He maintain'd that Galen had writ nothing but what was true, and indulged his Anger to ſuch a Degree, that he continually inveighed againſt his Antagoniſt. (p) Sylvius ita exarſit in iras tantoque odio commotus eſt in Veſalium, primo ut nihil a Galeno ſcriptum prolatumque eſſe contenderet quod veritati non eſſet conſentaneum; ſecundo ut nulla habita ratione ætatis & gravitatis ſuæ, impetu quodam mentis ſervilione elatus anſam declamandi in Veſalium (quem Veſanum appellabat) ſingulis diebus arriperet, & contumelioſius exciperet, quam vel ipſe propter prudentiam longa rerum experientia comparatam, vel Veſalius ob laudabile ſuum inſtitutum ad utilitatem publicam deſtinatum mereretur. The Emperor's Phyſicians, and even ſome Courtiers, who hated Veſalius, becauſe of his Preſumption and Merit, threw Oil into the Fire. That Quarrel produc'd many Books, and the Progreſs of it may be known by reading Sylvius's Book in Veſanum; Veſalius's Letter de China radice; a Piece of Francis Puteus in Veſalium, another of Renatus Henerus in Sylvium; Fallopius's Anatomical Obſervations, and Cuneus's Apology againſt Puteus.

---

‡ Taken from his Life prefix'd to his Works, and written by Renatus Moreau.

* Mollerus, Iſagoge ad Hiſtoriam Cherſoneſ. Cimbricæ, parte 4. pag. 108.

|| Lib. Fromont. das Criſi Deſperatæ cauſæ Papinis, cap. 15 pag. 284.

(a) Præfat. libri de officiis.

(b) Diog. Laert. in ejus vita.

(c) Ubi ſupra.

(d) See above the Remark A.

(e) In Elog. pag. m. 27.

(f) In 2. Catal. libr. Galeni.

(g) In Antiquitat. Pariſ.

(h) In Lindenio renovato.

(i) In Theatro. Virorum eruditione claror.

(k) Note, that inſtead of and yet, one might ſay, and therefore. This ſort of things have two Faces.

(l) Turnebus, epiſt. ad Cardinal. Lotharingum, præfixa Opuſc. Plutarchi de Orac. defectu.

was (Y) made to this Account. Some might think that a certain Impious Book concerns our (Z) Simonis; but 'tis not true. He changed his Name into that of Philippus Cosmius ✝.

SIMONIDES, a Jambick Poet, was Born at || Minoa a Town of the Isle of Amorgos † one of the Sporades. If we believe Suidas, he flourish'd 406. Years after the taking of Troy; but 'tis very likely he is not so Ancient. He is quoted by Athenæus, Julius Pollux, Ælian, and some other Authors. He made a very Ridiculous (A) Satyr against Women.

SIMONIDES, one of the best Ancient Poets, was a Native of Cea, an Island of the Ægean Sea. He flourish'd still in the time of Xerxes's Expedition, that is, about the 75. Olympiad. He exercised his Talent upon several sorts of Poems; but he succeeded (A) chiefly in Elegies. 'Tis said that he was (B) preserved twice from ✝ Biblioth. [illegible] pag. [illegible]

|| Stephan. Byzant. voce Ἀμοργός.

† Strabo lib. 10. sub fin.

(Y) Of the Answer that was made to this Account.] I shall not repeat (a) what concerns Simonis's Journey to Louvain, and his Conferences with Jansenius. I shall only say, that after he had left that Town, he writ a Piece, de falsis principiis fidei pontificiæ ejusque Idololatria, which he sent to Jansenius in 1631. It contain'd the motives of his Conversion, and he hoped that Jansenius would answer him; but he was mistaken: Whereupon he writ a Letter (b) to him, which he Publish'd, wherein he earnestly desired to have an answer from him. That Letter contains the History of his Imprisonment: It was inserted in a Book (c) of Voetius, in the Year 1635. Whereupon Fromond thought himself obliged to speak of Simonis, in his answer to that Book of Voetius. He gave a very unfaithful Account of the Matter, if we may depend upon the Answer that was made him. See the Apologetical Letter which Simonis inscribed to him: It is prefixed to his Treatise De statu & religione propria Papatus adversus Cornelium Jansenium Episcopum Iprensem, Printed at Leyden in 1638. He maintains that Fromond falsified and supprest several Circumstances of the Fact; he denies that he had abjured the Catholick Religion at Louvain; he owns that he was for sometime in the Order of the Premonstratenses, but that he left it before he (d) made any Vow.

(Z) That a certain Impious Book concerns our Simonis.] Some, who know in general that Simonis's Name is in the Title of such a Book, and that Theodorus Simonis was successively a Lutheran, a Papist, a Lutheran and a Socinian, and that he was Rector of a Socinian College in Poland, and that the Book in question was Printed in Poland, might think that this Book was Written by that Socinian, for the time is not always minded. This is the Subject of this Remark. Those, who desire to know something of that Impious Book, need only read the following Passage of Spizelius: (e) De Atheismo in Polonia, ex Atheo libello, Cracoviæ anno 1588. tit: Simonis religio, authore incerto edito, judicium fieri poterit in quo præter portenta innumera hæc quoque verba reperiuntur: Credo in tria, Cœlum, Terram, & Cœli formam, in Cœlum patrem, atque Creatorem omnium. In terram omnium matrem, atque nutricem, & in Cœli formam omnia sentientem, & intelligentem. Ede itaque, bibe, lude, jam Deus figmentum est.

(A) He made a very Ridiculous Satyr against Women.] He supposed that their Souls had a different Original, according to the Diversity of their Humours: that the Souls of some Women came from Horses, Foxes, or Apes, &c. and that the Souls of others proceeded from the Sea, or the Earth, &c. Ælian quotes what he said concerning Women, who loved to Paint, and trick up themselves: He derived their Souls from Horses. (f) Καὶ ὁ Σιμωνίδης δὲ ἐκ παντοδαπῶν θηρίων λέγων τὰς γυναῖκας γενέσθαι τε, ϗ διαπλασθῆναι, φησὶν ἐνίας ἐκ τῶν ἵππων τὸ τι φιλόκοσμον ϗ φιλόμυρον συντετυχηκέναι κατ' ἐκείνας φύσιν: Quin & Simonides fabulans ex diversis bestiis natas & conformatas esse mulieres, nonnullis earum ornatus & unguentorum studium ex equorum naturâ innatum esse scribit. I omit the Greek Verses that follow in Ælian, and I shall only set down the conclusion of that Passage in Latin. Talis quidem uxor præbet se spectaculum aliis jucundum, sed viro nocet suo: Nisi ille fuerit aut rex, aut vir præpotens. Hujusmodi uxor oblectare quem queat. The meaning of which is, that such a Woman is a pleasant sight to other Men, but very prejudicial to her Husband, unless he be a King or a great Lord. You'll find in Stobæus (g) not only the same Verses mention'd by Ælian, but also many more out of the same Work of Simonides. That Poet was very near as Unjust as the Italian Author (h), who maintain'd that Women have no Souls. To conclude, if I ascribe to this Simonides, and not to that mention'd in the following Article, the Verses quoted by Ælian, I do but follow Leo Allatius's Opinion (i).

(A) He succeeded chiefly in Elegies.] Quintilian says so. (k) Simonides tenuis (l), aliequi sermone proprio & jucunditate quadam commendari potest: præcipua tamen ejus in commovenda miseratione virtus, ut quidam in hac eum parte omnibus ejusdem operis autoribus præferant. Dionysius Halicarnassæus acknowledges, among other Virtues, that Simonides had the Talent of moving, and places him in that respect much above Pindar. (m) Σιμωνίδου δὲ παρατήρει τὴν ἐκλογὴν τῶν ὀνομάτων, τῆς συνθέσεως τὴν ἀκρίβειαν, πρὸς τούτοις καθ' ὃ βελτίων εὑρίσκεται ϗ Πινδάρου τὸ οἰκτίζεσθαι μὴ μεγαλοπρεπῶς, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐκεῖνος παθητικῶς. Simonidis vero observa nominum delectum, compositionis accuratam rationem; ad hæc, in quo etiam multo melior est ipso Pindaro, miserationem commovet, non ut ille magnifice, sed suo ipse more pathetice. When Horace has a mind to denote Lamenting Muses, he uses an Expression which represents our Poet.

Sed (n) ne relictis, Musa procax, jocis
Cea retractes munera næniæ.

Catullus (o) may be also quoted for the same thing. One of the most Famous Works of Simonides was Intitled (p) Lamentations. I have said in another (q) place, that he carried the Prize of the Elegy from Æschylus.

(B) Preserved twice from a Mortal danger.] One Day he Supp'd at Scopas's House, who was a considerable Man for his Noble Birth, and great Riches. After he had recited the Poem he had made for a set Price in that Man's Honour, wherein he inserted an Encomium upon Castor and Pollux, he was told that he should receive one half of the Price agreed upon, and that he might, if he thought fit, ask the other half of the (r) Tyndarides, on whom he had bestowed as many Praises as upon Scopas. Soon after he was inform'd that two Young Men stood at the Door and desired to speak with him. He went out and saw no Body. In the mean time the Room, where he had left Scopas and the other Guests, fell down, and they were all kill'd. Cicero relates this in very fine Words. (s) Dicunt quum cœnaret Crannone in Thessalia Simonides apud Scopam fortunatum hominem & nobilem, cecinissetque id carmen, quod in eum scripsisset, in quo multa ornandi causa poetarum more in Castorem scripta, & Pollucem fuissent, nimis illum sordide Simonidi dixisse, se dimidium ejus ei quod pactus esset pro illo carmine, daturum, reliquum à suis Tyndaridis, quos æque laudasset, peteret, si ei videretur. Paulo post esse ferunt nunciatum Simonidi, ut prodiret, juvenes stare ad januam duos quosdam, qui eum magnopere evocarent, surrexisse illum ipsum, prodisse, vidisse neminem. Hoc interim spatio conclave illud, ubi epularetur Scopas, concidisse, ea ruina ipsum oppressum cum

(a) See ... Article ... Jansenius.

(b) Dated ... 12. ... 1633.

(c) ... Papa ...

(d) ... pag. ...

(e) Spizelius, in ... 44.

(f) Ælian. ... lib. 16. ... 24. ... 341.

(g) Stobæus serm. 71. de vituperio mulierum fol. m. 252. verso.

(h) See Vigneul Marville's Melanges tom. 1. pag. 16, 17.

(i) Allat. de Simeon. scriptis pag. 206, 207.

(k) Quintil. instit. orator. lib. 10. c. 1. p. m. 468.

(l) Concerning this simplicity of Simonides. See M. le Fevre Abregé de la vie des poetes Grecs pag. m. 38.

(m) Dionys. Halic. de veter. scriptor. cens.

(n) Horat. Od. 1. lib. 2.

(o) Paulum quid lubet adlocutionis mœstius lacrymis Simonideis. Catull. epigramm. 39.

(p) See M. le Fevre ubi supra p. 39.

(q) In the Article Æschylus. (r) That is, Castor and Pollux. (s) Cicero de Oratore lib. 2. fol. 87. D. See also Phædrus, lib. 4 fab. 24.

for the ſpace of two Years, whether he ſhould accept that Employment; but at laſt he accepted it in 1550, and continued in it 'till he died, which happen'd the (E) 13th of January 1555. 'Twas the Seventy Seventh Year of his Life †. He was Buried in the Burying-place (F) of poor Scholars. He never was Married, and ſeem'd to have an Averſion to Women. He took more care to clear his Style from the Barbarouſneſs that prevail'd in the Schools, than to leave off his (G) Rough and Wild way. He was ſo addicted to Galen's Opinions, that he obſtinately maintain'd his Errors; and Judicial (H) Aſtrology was the only thing wherein he departed from him. I ſhall ſay (I) ſomething of his Writings. He had a great (K) Quarrel with Veſalius.

SIMON or SIMONIS (Theodorus) was Born * at Berchestede in Holſtein. See the Remark I in the Article of Janſenius, to which you may add what follows. Fromond || maintains, that this Man being ſet at Liberty, Abjur'd his Hereſies at Louvain, and that Janſenius gave him wherewithal to pay his Charges in the Tavern, and to make his Journey. He further ſays, that he had forſaken his Order at Magdeburg before he came to Louvain. I ſhall ſpeak of the Anſwer that was † Taken from his Life prefix'd to his Works, and written by Renatus Moreau.

* Mollerus, Iſagoge ad Hiſtoriam Cherſoneſi Cimbricæ, parte 4. pag. 608.

|| Lib. Fromondi Criſis Deſperatæ cauſæ Papatus, cap. 15. pag. 284.

Moreau underſtands it of Five Hundred Auditors, and quotes Sylvius himſelf, who ſays, he had but four Hundred, (a) auditoribus circiter quadringentis. If it be ſo, Moreau ſhould not have ſaid that Sylvius's School might be compared with that of Theophraſtus (b), who had two Thouſand Scholars. Henry Stephens (c) mentions only two or three Hundred Scholars of Sylvius.

(E) The 13th of January 1555. 'Twas the 77th Year of his Life.] Renatus Moreau quotes Five Authors for it, viz. Mizauld, Paſchaſius Gallus, Arrivabenus (d), Claudius Burgenſis, and La Croix du Maine. But he obſerves, at the ſame time, that Sainte (e) Marthe and (f) Geſner ſay, that he lived only Sixty Three Years; that Du Breul (g) places his Death on the Firſt Day of February 1554: and that according to Nancelius and Rouville, he flouriſhed in 1557, and 1560. My Edition of Du Breul of the Year 1639 in 4to. places Sylvius's Death in the 63d Year of his Life, and on the 10th of January 1554. Moreri, Merlinus (h), and Freherus (i) have committed the ſame Miſtake with Sainte Marthe.

(F) In the Burying-place of poor Scholars.] He ordered it ſo by his Will. That Burying-place is before Montaigu College. The Funeral was performed with great Pomp: The Univerſity were preſent at it, and the Phyſicians put on their Scarlet Gowns. The Name of that Burying-place puts me in mind of a Tract written by Sylvius, in favour of poor Scholars: It is intitl'd, De victus ratione facili ac ſalubri pauperum Scholaſticorum. He preſcribes them a Diet, which, ſays he, God has put into his Heart to Publiſh; and he enters upon ſuch a Detail as would make the Men of our Age laugh, who are leſs tractable than thoſe of Sylvius's time. He adviſes the Scholars, who awake in the Night, to Cough and Spit ſtoutly, and gives 'em ſeveral little Expedients to keep themſelves Warm in Bed. Ut citius incaleſcas pedes etiam in nates reduces, in lectum inſpira. 'Tis likely he knew the Benefit of 'em by his own Experience.

(G) His Rough and Wild way.] He ſeldom Jeſted, and ſeldom departed from his Gravity; and when he had a Mind to appear more ſociable, by ſome witty Conceit, he did it ſomewhat uncouthly. Here's the only Merry Thought that is told of him: He ſaid one Day, That he had parted with Three Beaſts, his Cat, his Mule, and his Maid.

(H) Judicial Aſtrology was the only thing.] It had never been ſo much in vogue both at Court and in the Town, as in Sylvius's time; (k) and yet he oppoſed it ſtoutly, whenever there was occaſion for it. One Day after he had railed bitterly at the Aſtrologers, he told his good Friend Turnebus (l), that he had often run over the whole Almanack in the beginning of the Year, and ſet down Fair Weather whereever there was Rainy Weather; Wind inſtead of Calm; Cloudy Weather inſtead of Clear Weather; and that he found by the Event, at the Years end, that he had been a much better Aſtrologer than they.

(I) I ſhall ſay ſomething of his Writings.] The Chief Books he wrote are, Methodus medicamenta componendi ad uſum medicorum concinnata. Libri de medicamentorum ſimplicium delectu in Pharmacopæorum gratiam conſcripti. Caſtigationes & emendationes in Joannem Meſuaum. His Books of Anatomy were Publickly explain'd by the Profeſſors of Paris. His Treatiſe De Menſibus Mulierum, was the Text on which Lewis Duret read Publick Lectures. The ſame Tract, and another de Generatione Hominis, were Tranſlated into French by William Chretien, Phyſician to Henry II. His Tracts of Anatomy and Pharmacy have been Tranſlated into French, and Re-printed ſeveral times. They are probably the ſame that were publickly explain'd by one of the moſt Zealous Scholars of Veſalius; which is much, conſidering how violently (m) he, and Veſalius hated one another. There is an (n) Edition in Folio of Sylvius's Works, Publiſhed by Renatus Moreau, who prefixed to it the Life of that great Man, out of which I have Extracted this Article. That Life is ſo well Written, that it were to be wiſh'd, the Work (o) from which it was taken, was Printed. Next to it there are many Encomiums upon Sylvius, collected out of divers Authors, whereby it appears that he was in great Eſteem.

(K) A great Quarrel with Veſalius.] The latter gave Sylvius the greateſt Trouble that ever he had. Sylvius's Excellency lay in Anatomy, and he was preparing a Work upon that Subject, which he look'd upon as his Maſter-piece. Whereupon Veſalius Publiſhes in 1541, his Opus Anatomicum, ſo well done, and with ſo many fine Cuts, that every body admires it. Veſalius had been Sylvius's Scholar for the ſpace of Three Years, which is another Vexation; the Scholar ſupplants his Maſter. Beſides, he writes againſt Galen, and not only charges him with many Faults, tho' perhaps without Reaſon, but plainly ſhews ſome of his Errors. How could Sylvius bear this, being look'd upon as the Reſtorer and Firſt Interpreter of Galen? He maintain'd that Galen had writ nothing but what was true, and indulged his Anger to ſuch a Degree, that he continually inveighed againſt his Antagoniſt. (p) Sylvius ita exarſit in iras tantoque odio commotus eſt in Veſalium, primo ut nihil a Galeno ſcriptum prolatumque eſſe contenderet quod veritati non eſſet conſentaneum; ſecundo ut nulla habita ratione ætatis & gravitatis ſuæ, impetu quodam mentis ſervidiore elatus anſam declamandi in Veſalium (quem Veſanum appellabat) ſingulis diebus arriperet, & contumelioſius exciperet, quam vel ipſe propter prudentiam longa rerum experientia comparatam, vel Veſalius ob laudabile ſuum inſtitutum ad utilitatem publicam deſtinatum mereretur. The Emperor's Phyſicians, and even ſome Courtiers, who hated Veſalius, becauſe of his Preſumption and Merit, threw Oil into the Fire. That Quarrel produc'd many Books, and the Progreſs of it may be known by reading Sylvius's Book in Veſanum; Veſalius's Letter de China radice; a Piece of Francis Puteus in Veſalium, another of Renatus Henerus in Sylvium; Fallopius's Anatomical Obſervations, and Cuneus's Apology againſt Puteus.

(q) Of

(a) Præfat. libri de officiis.

(b) Diog. Laert. in ejus vita.

(c) Ubi ſupra.

(d) See above the Remark A.

(e) In Elog. pag. m. 27.

(f) In 2. Catal. libr. Galeni.

(g) In Antiquit. ut. Paris.

(h) In Lindenio renovato.

(i) In Theatro Virorum eruditione clarorum.

(k) Note, that inſtead of and yet, one might ſay, and therefore. This ſort of things have two Faces.

(l) Turnebus, epiſt. ad Cardinal. Lotharingum, præfixa Opuſc. Plutarchi de Orac. defectu.

(m) See the Remark K.

(p) Ren. Moreau in vita Sylvii.

was (Y) made to this Account. Some might think that a certain Impious Book concerns our (Z) Simonis; but 'tis not true. He changed his Name into that of Philippus Cosmius γ.

SIMONIDES, a Jambick Poet, was Born at || Minoa a Town of the Isle of Amorgos † one of the Sporades. If we believe Suidas, he flourish'd 406. Years after the taking of Troy; but 'tis very likely he is not so Ancient. He is quoted by Athenæus, Julius Pollux, Ælian, and some other Authors. He made a very Ridiculous (A) Satyr against Women.

SIMONIDES, one of the best Ancient Poets, was a Native of Ceos, an Island of the Ægean Sea. He flourish'd still in the time of Xerxes's Expedition, that is, about the 75. Olympiad. He exercised his Talent upon several sorts of Poems; but he succeeded (A) chiefly in Elegies. 'Tis said that he was (B) preserved twice from γ Biblioth. Antitrinit. pag. [illegible]

|| Stephan. Byzant. voce Ἀμοργός.

† Strab. lib. 10. sub fin.

(Y) Of the Answer that was made to the Account.] I shall not repeat (a) what concerns Simonis's Journey to Louvain, and his Conferences with Jansenius. I shall only say, that after he had left that Town, he writ a Piece, de falsis principiis fidei pontificiæ ejusque idololatria, which he sent to Jansenius in 1631. It contain'd the motives of his Conversion, and he hoped that Jansenius would answer him; but he was mistaken: Whereupon he writ a Letter (b) to him, which he Publish'd, wherein he earnestly desired to have an answer from him. That Letter contains the History of his Imprisonment: It was inserted in a Book (c) of Voetius, in the Year 1635. Whereupon Fromond thought himself obliged to speak of Simonis, in his answer to that Book of Voetius. He gave a very unfaithful Account of the Matter, if we may depend upon the Answer that was made him. See the Apologetical Letter which Simonis inscribed to him: It is prefixed to his Treatise De statu & religione propria Papatus adversus Cornelium Jansenium Episcopum Iprensem, Printed at Leyden in 1638. He maintains that Fromond falsified and supprest several Circumstances of the Fact; he denies that he had abjured the Catholick Religion at Louvain; he owns that he was for sometime in the Order of the Premonstratenses, but that he left it before he (d) made any Vow.

(Z) That a certain Impious Book concerns our Simonis.] Some, who know in general that Simonis's Name is in the Title of such a Book, and that Theodorus Simonis was successively a Lutheran, a Papist, a Lutheran and a Socinian, and that he was Rector of a Socinian College in Poland, and that the Book in question was Printed in Poland, might think that this Book was Written by that Socinian, for the time is not always minded. This is the Subject of this Remark. Those, who desire to know something of that Impious Book, need only read the following Passage of Spizelius: (e) De Atheismo in Polonia, ex Atheo libello, Cracoviæ anno 1588. tit: Simonis religio, authore incerto edito, judicium fieri poterit in quo præter portenta innumera hæc quoque verba reperiuntur: Credo in tria, Cœlum, Terram, & Cœli formam, in Cœlem patrem, atque Creatorem omnium. In terram omnium matrem, atque nutricem, & in Cœli formam omnia sentientem, & intelligentem. Ede itaque, bibe, lude, jam Deus figmentum est.

(A) He made a very Ridiculous Satyr against Women.] He supposed that their Souls had a different Original, according to the Diversity of their Humours: that the Souls of some Women came from Horses, Foxes, or Apes, &c. and that the Souls of others proceeded from the Sea, or the Earth, &c. Ælian quotes what he said concerning Women, who loved to Paint, and trick up themselves: He derived their Souls from Horses. (f) Καὶ ὁ Σιμωνίδης δὲ ἐκ παντοδαπῶν θηρίων λέγων τὰς γυναῖκας γενέσθαι τε, καὶ διαπλασθῆναι, φησὶν ἐνίας ἐκ τῶν ἵππων τό τε φιλόκοσμον καὶ φιλόμυρον συντεχθῆναι κατ' ἐκείνας φύσει: Quin & Simonides fabulans ex diversis bestiis natas & conformatas esse mulieres, nonnullis earum ornatus & unguentorum studium ex equorum naturâ innatum esse scribit. I omit the Greek Verses that follow in Ælian, and I shall only set down the conclusion of that Passage in Latin. Talis quidem uxor præbet se spectaculum aliis jucundum, sed viro nocet suo: Nisi ille fuerit aut rex, aut vir præpotens. Hujusmodi uxor oblectare quem queat. The meaning of which is, that such a Woman is a pleasant sight to other Men, but very prejudicial to her Husband, unless he be a King or a great Lord. You'll find in Stobæus (g) not only the same Verses mention'd by Ælian, but also many more out of the same Work of Simonides. That Poet was very near as Unjust as the Italian Author (h), who maintain'd that Women have no Souls. To conclude, if I ascribe to this Simonides, and not to that mention'd in the following Article, the Verses quoted by Ælian, I do but follow Leo Allatius's Opinion (i).

(A) He succeeded chiefly in Elegies.] Quintilian says so. (k) Simonides tenuis (l), alioqui sermone proprio & jucunditate quadam commendari potest: præcipua tamen ejus in commovenda miseratione virtus, ut quidam in hac eum parte omnibus ejusdem operis autoribus præferant. Dionysius Halicarnasseus acknowledges, among other Virtues, that Simonides had the Talent of moving, and places him in that respect much above Pindar. (m) Σιμωνίδου δὲ παρατήρει τὴν ἐκλογὴν τῶν ὀνομάτων, τῆς συνθέσεως τὴν ἀκρίβειαν, πρὸς τούτοις καθ' ὃ βελτίων εὑρίσκεται καὶ Πινδάρου τὸ οἰκτίζεσθαι μὴ μεγαλοπρεπῶς, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐκεῖνος παθητικῶς. Simonidis vero observa nominum delectum, compositionis accuratam rationem; ad hæc, in quo etiam multo melior est ipso Pindaro, miserationem commovet, non ut ille magnifice, sed suo ipse more pathetice. When Horace has a mind to denote Lamenting Muses, he uses an Expression which represents our Poet.

Sed (n) ne relictis, Musa procax, jocis
Ceæ retractes munera næniæ.

Catullus (o) may be also quoted for the same thing. One of the most Famous Works of Simonides was Intitled (p) Lamentations. I have said in another (q) place, that he carried the Prize of the Elegy from Æschylus.

(B) Preserved twice from a Mortal danger.] One Day he Supp'd at Scopas's House, who was a considerable Man for his Noble Birth, and great Riches. After he had recited the Poem he had made for a set Price in that Man's Honour, wherein he inserted an Encomium upon Castor and Pollux, he was told that he should receive one half of the Price agreed upon, and that he might, if he thought fit, ask the other half of the (r) Tyndarides, on whom he had bestowed as many Praises as upon Scopas. Soon after he was inform'd that two Young Men stood at the Door and desired to speak with him. He went out and saw no Body. In the mean time the Room, where he had left Scopas and the other Guests, fell down, and they were all kill'd. Cicero relates this in very fine Words. (s) Dicunt quum cœnaret Crannone in Thessalia Simonides apud Scopam fortunatum hominem & nobilem, cecinissetque id carmen, quod in eum scripsisset, in quo multa ornandi causa poëtarum more in Castorem scripta, & Pollucem fuissent, nimis illum sordide Simonidi dixisse, se dimidium ejus ei quod pactus esset pro illo carmine, daturum, reliquum à suis Tyndaridis, quos æque laudasset, peteret, si ei videretur. Paulo post esse ferunt nunciatum Simonidi, ut prodiret, juvenes stare ad januam duos quosdam, qui eum magnopere evocarent, surrexisse illum ipsum, prodisse, vidisse neminem. Hoc interim spatio conclave illud, ubi epularetur Scopas, concidisse, ea ruina ipsum oppressum cum

(g) Stobæus serm. 71. de vituperio mulierum fol. m. 252. verso.

(h) See Vigneul Marville's Melanges tom. 1. pag. 16, 17.

(i) Allat. de Simeon. scriptis pag. 206, 207.

(k) Quintil. instit. orator. lib. 10. c. 1. p. m. 468.

(l) Concerning this simplicity of Simonides. See M. le Fevre Abregé de la vie des poëtes Grecs pag. m. 38.

(m) Dionys. Halic. de veter. scriptor. cens.

(n) Horat. Od. 1. lib. 2.

(o) Paullum quid lubet adlocutionis mœstius lacrymis Simonideis. Catull. epigramm. 39.

(p) See M. le Fevre ubi supra p. 39.

(q) In the Article Æschylus. (r) That is, Castor and Pollux. (s) Cicero de Oratore lib. 2. fol. 87. D. See also Phædrus, lib. 4 fab. 24.

from a Mortal danger, and that it was for a reward of his Virtue. The Invention of Local (C) Memory is aſcribed to him. He is one of thoſe Poets, whoſe Vein and Memory laſted a long time; for at 80 Years of Age he diſputed the (D) Prize of Poetry, and † carried it, and boaſted ‖ of having the beſt Memory of any Man in the World. He lived ſtill * above ten Years longer. 'Tis ſaid that the Deſtruction of his Tomb by a General of the Agrigentins did not (E) remain cum ſuis interiſſe. Valerius Maximus (a) relates the ſame thing, but he is guilty of an inexcuſable Omiſſion; for he does not ſay why Caſtor and Pollux did that good Service to Simonides. Solinus (b) aſcribes to Pindar what all other Writers aſcribe to Simonides. Salmaſius (c) ſuſpects that Solinus took this courſe to conceal his Robberies, I mean, to make People believe that he was not a meer Tranſcriber of Pliny. Quintilian (d) calls this Apparition of the Tyndarides a Fable, becauſe that Poet, who doubtleſs would not have deprived himſelf of ſo great a Glory, does not mention it in his Works. He obſerves that Authors do very much differ as to the Perſon in whoſe Honour Simonides made that Poem: Nor did they agree about the Town where the Entertainment was given. He tells us that the Perſon, whom Simonides Praiſed, was a Victorious Wreſtler. (e) Cum pugili coronato carmen, quale componi victoribus ſolet, mercede pacta ſcripſiſſet: abnegata ei pecuniæ pars eſt, quòd more poetis frequentiſſimo digreſſus, in laudes Caſtoris & Pollucis exierat. The Omiſſion of this particular in Cicero is very prejudicial to Simonides; for one would think he made improper Digreſſions, and that he was ſo imprudent as to obſcure the Glory of the Man, who bought his Panegyrick, by inſerting in it an Encomium upon the Gods. But if we conſider that Simonides was to celebrate the Victory of a Wreſtler, the Objection vaniſhes away, and 'tis plain that (f) Caſtor and Pollux were to have a ſhare in his Praiſes, which are not a wrong Digreſſion, but a neceſſary Epiſode. I muſt obſerve that M. de Girac makes a wrong Criticiſm upon Quintilian. That Learned Rhetorician, ſays he (g), would not have made uſe of a Negative Argument, if he had read in Callimachus that Simonides himſelf mentions that Adventure in Words full of gratitude towards his Deliverers. 'Tis certain that Quintilian might have ſaid what he ſays, notwithſtanding Callimachus's Verſes. There is a vaſt difference between what a Poet relates in his Poems, and what others make him ſay in their Writings.

‖ [illegible] 759. A.

Here follows the other Miracle. Simonides having Landed found the dead Body of an unknown Man upon the ſhore, and buried it. That unknown Man warn'd him in a Dream, not to take Shipping again the next Day; Simonides followed his Advice, and the Ship ſunk. He made a Poem upon that Adventure. (h) Longe indulgentius Dii in poeta Simonide, cujus ſalutarem inter quietem admonitionem conſilii firmitate roboraverunt. Is enim cùm ad litus navem appuliſſet, inhumatumque corpus jacens ſepulturæ mandaſſet, admonitus ab eo ne proximo die navigaret, in terra remanſit: Qui inde ſolverant, fluctibus & procellis in conſpectu ejus obruti ſunt. Ipſe lætatus eſt, quòd vitam ſuam ſomnio, quam navi, credere maluiſſet. Memor autem beneficii, elegantiſſimo cum carmine æternitati conſecravit, melius illi & diuturnius in animis hominum ſepulchrum conſtituens, quam in deſertis arenis ſtruxerat. He did not think that Humanity required any thing from him beſides the burying of the dead Body; but being ſo well rewarded for that Favour, he went farther, and put this Glorious Epitaph upon the Tomb of that unknown Man.

Οὗτος (i) μὲν Κείοιο Σιμωνίδου ἐστὶ σαωτήρ,
Ὃς καὶ τεθνειὼς ζῶντι παρέσχε χάριν.
Hic quidem Cei Simonidis eſt ſervator,
Qui & mortuus vivo retulit gratiam.

(C) The Invention of Local Memory is aſcribed to him.] It will not be improper to obſerve upon what occaſion he Invented it. When Scopas and his Gueſts were kill'd by the fall of the Room, they were ſo diſfigured that they could not be known one from another. And yet there was a neceſſity to know them; for every one of thoſe, who deſign'd to bury 'em, had a mind to perform that Duty to his Kinſman. Simonides removed the Difficulty: Remembring in what place each Gueſt ſat down at Table, he was thereby enabled to tell their Relations which of 'em was to be Buried by his Kinſman. Afterwards, conſidering how neceſſary Order is to preſerve the Ideas of Objects, he Invented the method of annexing them to certain Places, that is, he was the inventer of Local Memory. This we read in Cicero, (k) Non ſum tanto ego, inquit, ingenio, quanto Themiſtocles fuit, ut oblivionis artem quam memoriæ malim, gratiamque habeo Simonidi illi Chio, quem primum ferunt artem memoriæ protuliſſe. Dicunt enim quum cœnaret—— (l) Quos quum humare vellent ſui, neque poſſent obtritos internoſcere ullo modo, Simonides dicitur ex eo quod meminiſſet quo eorum loco quiſque cubuiſſet, demonſtrator uniuſcujuſque ſepeliendi fuiſſe. Hac tum re admonitus inveniſſe fertur, ordinem eſſe maxime, qui memoriæ lumen afferret. Itaque iis qui hanc partem ingenii exercerent, locos eſſe capiendos, & ea quæ memoria tenere vellent, effingenda animo, atque in his locis collocanda: ſic fore, ut ordinem rerum locorum ordo conſervaret, res autem ipſas rerum effigies notaret, atque ut locis pro cera, ſimulacris pro literis uteremur. That Author obſerves in another (m) place that Simonides had a very good Memory. Theſe Words of Philoſtratus give a great Notion of it: (n) Apollonius being a Hundred Years Old had ſtill a better Memory than Simonides ever had in his greateſt Vogue; and he uſed to ſing a Canticle which that Poet had made in Praiſe of Memory, wherein he ſays that every thing Fades and Vaniſhes away in time, whereas time never grows Old, and always remains the ſame, with Memory that goes along with it. It has been ſaid that Simonides took ſome Remedies to get a good Memory, which produced the intended Effect (o).

(D) At 80 Years of Age he diſputed the Prize of Poetry.] This he mention'd in one of his Poems. (p) Simonides vero Poëta octogeſimo anno & docuiſſe ſe carmina, & in eorum certamen deſcendiſſe ipſe gloriatur: nec fuit iniquum, illum voluptatem ex ingenio ſuo diu percipere, cùm eam omni ævo fruendam traditurus eſſet.

(E) The Deſtruction of his Tomb—— did not remain Unpuniſh'd.] Phœnix General of the Agrigentins being at War with the Syracuſans, (q) pull'd down Simonides's Tomb, and built a Tower with the Materials of it: It happen'd that the Town was taken thro' that part of the Wall where the Tower was Built. Callimachus brought in Simonides complaing of that Impious Action, and ſaying that Phœnix had not been afraid of Caſtor and Pollux, who, added he, preſerved me from the fall of a Houſe. (r) Suidas's negligence cannot be ſufficiently wondred at; for he does not Name the Town, where a Tower was built of the Stones of Simonides's Tomb. But becauſe he ſays that a General of the Agrigentins cauſed that Tomb to be demoliſh'd, and the Tower to be built, we have ſome Reaſon to think that it was at Agrigentum. Unleſs one had rather ſay, that Phœnix having Conquered Syracuſa, and being Beſieged in it, cauſed a Wall to be Fortified by the Building of a Tower, and that Syracuſa was re-taken, thro' that place. 'Tis likely Simonides died at Hiero's Court. A very Learned Chronologer places the Death of the Poet a Year before that of the Prince. (ſ) Utriuſque obitus contiguos, ut ita dicam, in annos incurrit, Simonidis quidem in annum mundi 3516. Hieronis autem 3517. apud P. Petavium lib. 13. de doctrina temporum. Petavius (t) follows Diodorus Siculus, who

(a) Valer. Maximus lib. 1 cap. 8. n. 7. in ext.
(b) Solin. cap. 1. pag. m. 15.
(c) Salmaſ. exercitat. Plin. tom. 1. pag. 53.
(d) Quanquam mihi totum de Tyndaridis fabuloſum videtur, neque omnino hujus rei meminit uſquam poeta ipſe, profecto non taciturus de tanta ſua gloria. Quintil. lib. 11. cap. 2. pag. m. 517.
(e) Id. ib.
(f) They were in a manner the Patrons of Wreſtlers.
(g) Girac, Replique a Coſtar ſection 53. p. m. 465. He quotes the words of Callimachus mention'd by Suidas.
(h) Valer. Maximus lib. 1. c. 7. n. 3. in ext. See alſo Cicero de Divinatione lib. 1. fol. 308 C.
(i) Tzetzes Chiliad 1. hiſtor 24. He quotes one Ariſtides. See Voſſius de hiſtor. Græcis lib. 3. c. 30. pag. 331. where he mends a paſſage of Tzetzes.

[illegible]
* Suidas makes him live 89 Years and not 99. as Gyraldus doet. di 9. hiſt. poet. pag. 463.
(k) Cic de Oratore lib fol. 85. See alſo Quintil ubi ſup
(l) You may ſee the foregoing Remark the words I skip here.
(m) Cic to Tuſculan. qu lib. 1. f 249. C.
(n) Philoſtr. in the life Apollo B. 1. ch. See the ſame in vitis Sophiſtar. lib. 2. Proclo.

(o) Scriptores varii memorant Cyrum regem & Simonide lyricum & Hippiam Eleum——ideo valuiſſe memoria q epotis quibuſdam remediis id impetrarunt. Amm. Marc lib. 16. l. 5. pag. m. 116. (p) Valer. Maximus lib. 8. 7. n. 13. in ext. (q) Διαλύει τὸν τάφον τοῦ Σιμωνίδου μ ἀπηνῶς τε καὶ ἀνοίκτως. Simonidis ſepulchrum cum ma contemptione & crudeliter diſſolvit. Suidas in Σιμωνίδης m. 741, 742. (r) Taken from Suidas ibid. (ſ) Leſcalopier Ciceron. de natura Deorum lib. 1. pag. 84. (t) Petavius, rationario temporum parte 1. lib. 3. c. 6. p. m. 135 main Unpuniſh'd. His anſwer to a Prince, who aſk'd him the Definition (F) of God, has been very much talk'd of: I mean, his anſwer to Hiero Tyrant of Syracuſa, to whoſe Court he went, notwithſtanding his great Age, being prompted to it by his Covetouſneſs, for he † loved Money, and knew that Hiero was a Liberal who ſays that Hiero died the Second Year of the 78. Olympiad; and therefore he believed that Simonides died the firſt Year of the (a) ſame Olympiad. But becauſe he places (b) the beginning of the Olympiads in the Year of the World 3209, he muſt needs have placed the Death of Simonides in the Year of the World 3517.

† See the Remark N.

(F) His anſwer to a Prince, who aſk'd him the Definition of God, has been very much talk'd of.] Hiero Tyrant of Sicily deſired that Poet to tell him what God is. The Poet anſwered him that it was not a Queſtion that could be immediately anſwered, and that he wanted a whole day to think upon it. When that Term was over, Hiero aſk'd the anſwer; but Simonides deſired two days more to conſider of it. This was not the laſt delay he aſk'd: Every time he was ſummon'd to give his Anſwer, he aſk'd for half a longer time. The Tyrant wondring at it, deſired to know the Reaſon of it. I do ſo, anſwered Simonides, becauſe the more I examin the matter, the more it appears to me obſcure. Cicero expreſſes it in the following manner. Nec ego nunc ipſe aliquid afferam melius: ut enim modò dixi, omnibus ferè in rebus, & maximè in phyſicis, quid non ſit, citiùs, quam quid ſit dixerim. Roges me, quid aut quale ſit Deus: auctore utar Simonide: de quo cùm quæſiviſſet hoc idem tyrannus Hiero, deliberandi cauſſâ ſibi unum diem poſtulavit. Cùm idem ex eo poſtridie quæreret, biduum petivit: cùm ſæpius duplicaret numerum dierum, admiranſque Hiero quæreret cur ita faceret, Quia quantò, inquit, diutius conſidero, tanto mihi res videtur obſcurior. Sed Simonidem arbitror (non enim poeta ſolùm ſuavis, verùm etiam ceteroqui doctus, ſapienſque traditur) quia multa venirent in mentem acuta, atque ſubtilia, dubitantem quid eorum eſſet veriſſimum, deſperaſſe omnem veritatem (c).

A Jeſuit, who writ a Commentary upon Cicero's Books de natura deorum, does not blame Simonides for being ſo reſerved, and wiſhes the Ancient Poets and Philoſophers, and the Hereticks had imitated him. (d) Quæ Tertullianus inſcitiæ, alii modeſtiæ dederunt. Atque utinam veteres philoſophi, & poëtæ, quique illos conſecuti ſunt Hæretici, hac in parte tam verecundi, quàm Thales, aut Simonides, fuiſſent: nunquam profectò adeò abſurda, impia, & blaſphema Divinæ Naturæ affinxiſſent, nunquam impegiſſent in fœdiſſimos errores, in quos per ſummam impudentiam præfidentes homunculos videmus, & dolemus impegiſſe. Nimirum tenemur omnes magno quodam ſciendi ſtudio, cognoſcendi verò numinis, multò majore: ex quo Deum quidem à nobis cognoſci velle licet intelligere; ſed intra fines præſtitutos, & intra columnas, quibus ſuo ipſe quaſi digito inſcripſit, Ne plus ultra: ſunt enim divinis in rebus adyta quædam, in quæ Magnus Deus noluit nos penetrare: quod ſi quis temeritate, & confidentiâ ſui elatus porro pergit, ac perrumpere hoc ſacrarium attentat, quò penitiùs ingreditur, eò denſiores illi tenebræ offunduntur, ut vel ſic, & Divinæ Naturæ majeſtatem imperveſtigabilem, & humanæ mentis imbecillitatem, ſi quid ſapit, agnoſcat, ac confiteri cum Simonide cogatur. Quantò diutiùs conſidero, tantò mihi res videtur obſcurior. Quemadmodum de ſpecu quodam Coricio narrat Pomponius Mela, qui primùm jucundâ quadam amœnitate allectat adeuntes ad ſe, donec altiùs, atque altiùs ingreſſos tandem horror quidam ac Majeſtas numinis illic inhabitantis pedem referre compellat. Afterwards he alledges a Remarkable (e) Paſſage of St. Auguſtin. A French Author look'd upon Simonides's Modeſty as a pious Action, and took from thence occaſion to inveigh againſt the boldneſs of the Eunomians. Remember, ſays he, (f) the Picus Modeſty of Simonides, "who having aſk'd but one day of King Hiero, to diſcourſe of the Divine Eſſence before him, aſk'd him afterwards two days, and then three, proteſting that the more he thought upon it, the more he found it difficult to perform his Promiſe. For my part, I make no doubt that this Humble acknowledgment of his Ignorance was more acceptable to the Supreme Being, tho' Simonides was a meer Heathen, than the boldneſs of Eunomius, and of that kind (f) of Aëtius, who followed him, and boaſted of comprehending God as fully as he himſelf did." Du Pleſſis Mornay in the (g) Chapter, wherein he proves by Reaſons and Authorities that 'tis impoſſible to comprehend God, did not forget Simonides's anſwer. He obſerves (h) without quoting any Body, that this Poet taught very well that God is Wiſdom it ſelf. He ſays in another (i) place, that Ariſtotle in his Metaphyſicks mentions and commends the known anſwer of Simonides to Hiero, importing in ſhort that none but God is a Metaphyſician, that is, can ſpeak of things that are above Nature.

I have peruſed Ariſtotle's Metaphyſicks, and cannot find that paſſage quoted by that Philoſopher as being an anſwer of Simonides to Hiero. But I find the following Words in the 2. Chapter of the 1. Book. (k) Διὸ ϗ δικαίως ἂν ἐκ ἀνθρωπίνη νομίζοιτο αὐτῆς ἡ κτῆσις. πολλαχῇ γὰρ ἡ φύσις δούλη τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐστίν. ὥστε κατὰ Σιμωνίδην, Θεὸς ἂν μόνος τοῦτ' ἔχοι γέρας. ἄνδρα δ' ἐκ ἄξιον μὴ ζητεῖν τὴν καθ' αὑτὸν ἐπιστήμην. Quocirca merito, ejus poſſeſſio non humana exiſtimari poteſt. Multis enim in rebus ſerva natura hominum eſt. Itaque ut Simonidi placet, ſolus Deus hunc ſibi honorem vindicat. At non decet virum eam ſcientiam, quæ ſibi congruit, non quærere. Thoſe words amount to this: The knowledge of the firſt Principles is ſo ſublime, that it might be reaſonably ſaid, that the Poſſeſſion of it does not belong to Man; and therefore according to Simonides, that Poſſeſſion is the Priviledge of God only: But it were an unbecoming thing for Man not to endeavour to know himſelf, or to neglect the knowledge that concerns him. I fancy, that if I had lived in Ariſtotle's time, I ſhould have found his thought clearer than it is: However, I can find nothing in it, whereby it may appear that he commends or approves Simonides's Opinion, and I have read ſome Commentators who affirm that he confuted it. Fonſeca making a Paraphraſtical Note upon thoſe words of Ariſtotle, puts in the Margin Refutatio ſententiæ Simonidis. Here are the Words which anſwer that Summary. (l) Adeo compertum eſt hanc ſcientiam non eſſe humanam poſſeſſionem, ut inde ſumpſerit Simonides poeta ſui erroris occaſionem. Monebat enim iis tantùm ſcientiis dandam eſſe hominibus operam, quæ cum mortali vita congruerent; proinde hanc ſcientiam, quæ de divinis rebus inſtituitur, relinquendam eſſe Deo, diviniſque ſubſtantiis, quod ſit ſupra humanum captum. Cui inepto conſilio, & virilis animi magnitudine indigno reſpondet Ariſtoteles. He will have it (m) that Ariſtotle Condemns a like thought of Simonides in another place, and that this Poet is hinted at in the following Words: (n) Χρὴ δὲ ἐ κατὰ τὰς παραινοῦντας, ἀνθρώπινα φρονεῖν ἄνθρωπον ὄντα, ἐδὲ θνητὰ τὸν θνητὸν, ἀλλ' ἐφ' ὅσον ἐνδέχεται ἀπαθανατίζειν. ϗ ἅπαντα ποιεῖν πρὸς τὸ ζῆν κατὰ τὸ κράτιστον τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ. Neque nos oportet humana ſapere ac ſentire, ut quidam monent, cum ſimus homines: neque mortalia, cum mortales: ſed nos ipſos, quoad ejus fieri poteſt, à mortalitate vindicare, atque omnia facere, ut ei noſtri parti, quæ in nobis eſt optima, convenienter vivamus. If this be true, this Sentence ought to be placed among thoſe of Simonides: Since we are but Men, our knowledge can be but Humane; and ſince we are Mortal, we ought to be contented with the knowledge of things Mortal. We ſhall ſee another miſtake of Du Pleſſis Mornay. The firſt conſiſts in affirming that the abovemention'd Saying of Simonides was approved by Ariſtotle.

We find in Plato's (o) Protagoras, that that Saying was to be found in a Poem inſcribed to Scopas, Son of Creon the Theſſalian. It was not therefore an anſwer to King Hiero: And 'tis to be obſerved that the thing ſpoken of in that place is not Science but Virtue; and therefore it might be ſaid, that Ariſtotle's Application is not right, or that our Poet made uſe of the ſame thought ſometimes with reſpect to Moral, and ſometimes in Relation

---

(a) Id. ib. pag. 5. p. m. 151.

(b) Suidas ſays that Simonides lived till the 78. Olympiad.

(c) Cicero de nat. Deorum lib. 1. pag. 81. edit. Leſcaloperii.

(d) Leſcaloperius in Ciceron. de nat. Deorum. lib. 1. pag 84, 85.

(e) Certe hoc eſt Deus, quod & cùm dicitur, non poteſt dici: cùm æſtimatur, non poteſt æſtimari: cùm comparatur, non poteſt comparari: cùm definitur, ipſâ definitione creſcit. Auguſtin. Sermone de tempore 109. apud Leſcaloperium ibid. pag. 85.

(f) La Mothe le Vayer, Letter 116. pag. 26. of the 12. Vol. edit. in 12.

(f) Theodor. hær. fabul.

(g) 'Tis the 1. Chapter of his Book concerning the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion.

(h) Ibid. fol. m. 15.

(i) Ibid. ch. 20. fol. 256 verſo. There is in the Latin Edition of that Book of Du Pleſſis p. m. 446. Ariſtoteles tritum illud Simonidis ad Hieronem laudat, de rebus, inquit, quæ præter naturam Deo ſoli credendum.

(k) Ariſtotel. Metaphy. lib. 1. cap. 2. pag. m. 644. E.

(l) Fonſeca in Ariſt. metaphyſ. lib. 1. cap. 2. pag. m. 99. 100.

(m) Id. ib. See alſo Theophilus Raynaud, Theol. natur. pag. 1.

(n) Ariſtot. moral. lib. 10. cap. 7. p. m. 102. H.

(o) Plato in Protagora p. 235. E.

Liberal Prince. Some Divines would not blame him (G) for being ſo Modeſt as to ſay, that he could not give a definition of God. His anſwer to a King of Lacedæmon produced the ſame Effect (H) as that of Solon to Crœſus. Another anſwer is aſcribed to him very (I) like that of the Philoſopher, who boaſted that he carried about him all that he had. What he anſwer'd (K) to Hiero's Wife, ought not to be taken in a Literal Senſe; it was rather a Jeſt than a Serious Notion. He acknowlation to Intellectual Qualities. Plato is very particular in his diſcuſſion of ſome Verſes, wherein Simonides ſaid, (a) that 'tis a difficult thing to become a perfectly Honeſt Man, and that Pittacus was very much miſtaken in ſaying, that 'tis a difficult thing to continue an Honeſt Man. (b) Χαλεπὸν ἐσθλὸν ἔμμεναι. Difficile eſt bonum manere. One of Plato's Interlocutors maintains that thoſe words of Simonides are contradictory. Another maintains they are not, and underſtands 'em in this ſenſe: 'Tis a difficult thing to become an Honeſt Man, and impoſſible to continue ſo always; and therefore Pittacus is miſtaken, for he ſuppoſes 'tis poſſible for a Man to perſiſt in the practice of Virtue: Had he not believed the poſſibility of it, he would not have ſaid that it is a difficult thing. This Explication is proved by a Sentence of Simonides, inſerted in the ſame place, which imports (c) that God alone is always Good.

(G) Some Divines would not blame him for being ſo Modeſt.] A Proof of this may be ſeen in the foregoing Remark; but the famous Peter Charron Theologal of Condom, is ſtill more formal in one of his Works (d), to which I refer the Reader.

I ſhall ſet down a Paſſage of Arnobius to this purpoſe. (e) O maxime, ô ſumme rerum inviſibilium procreator! O ipſe inviſe, & nullis unquam comprehenſe naturis! ——— Prima ——— tu cauſa es, locus rerum ac ſpacium, fundamentum cunctorum quæcunque ſunt, infinitus, ingenitus, immortalis, perpetuus, ſolus, quem nulla delineat forma corporalis, nulla determinat circumſcriptio, qualitatis expers, quantitatis, ſine ſitu, motu, & habitu, de quo nihil dici & exprimi mortalium potis eſt ſignificatione verborum: qui, ut intelligaris, tacendum eſt; atque, ut per umbram te poſſit errans inveſtigare ſuſpicio, nihil eſt omnino mutiendum. The Commentators (f) upon Arnobius ſhew that the moſt Orthodox Fathers have confirm'd what he ſays. Thoſe, who have Commented upon theſe words of Minucius Felix, (g) Nobis ad intellectum pectus anguſtum eſt: & ideo ſic eum (Deum) digne æſtimamus, dum inæſtimabilem dicimus. Eloquar quemadmodum ſentio, magnitudinem Dei, qui ſe putat noſſe, minuit: qui non vult minuere, non novit. Nec nomen Deo quæras: Point out a vaſt number of Paſſages out of the Ancient Fathers, wherein they agree with Arnobius upon that point. The Jeſuite Leſcaloperius alledges thoſe very words of Minutius Felix, to confirm the Remark he had made, that the Wiſeſt and Modeſteſt Philoſophers confeſs every where, that God is not only Inviſible and Inexpreſſible, but alſo Inintelligible. (h) Sapientiſſimi quique ac modeſtiſſimi philoſophorum Deum ἄγνωστον, non intelligibilem, ἀειδῆ minime ſpectabilem, ἄρρητον καὶ ἀνεκφώνητον indicibilem, &, ſi fas, invocabilem, innominabilem, ubique confitentur, at nihil hunc in locum afferri poteſt illuſtrius, quam quod habet Minutius Felix.

(H) Produced the ſame Effect as that of Solon (i) to Crœſus.] Pauſanias ſitting at Table with Simonides, ordered him to ſpeak ſome Sentence. Remember, anſwered he, that you are a Man. This ſaying appeared ſo Inſipid to Pauſanias, that he did not mind it; but when he happen'd to be in (k) a place of Refuge, where he ſtruggled with an intolerable Hunger, and out of which he could not come, without running the hazard of being put to Death, (a Misfortune he brought upon himſelf by his Ambition) he remembred the words of that Poet, and cried out three times, Oh! Simonides, what you told me was very judicious. (l) Τηνικαῦτα ἐμνήσθη τοῦ Σιμωνίδου, καὶ ἐξεβόησεν εἰς τρὶς, ὦ ξένε Κεῖε, μέγα τι ἄρα χρῆμα ἦν ὁ λόγος σου, ἐγὼ δὲ ὑπ' ἀνοίας οὐδὲν αὐτὸν ᾤμην εἶναι. Tunc in mentem ei venit Simonidis, & ter magna voce exclamavit: O Cee hoſpes, magnum quiddam in tuo ſermone inerat, ego vero inani perſuaſione eram adductus, ut eum nullius momenti putarem. 'Tis certain that nothing would be more Mortifying and Inſtructive, than to think ſeriouſly and like a Philoſopher that one is a Man. This Notion comprehends all the Weakneſs, Miſery and Inconſtancy that can be thought of.

(I) Very like that of a Philoſopher, who boaſted that he carried about him all that he had.] 'Tis ſaid that Simonides, in order to free himſelf from Poverty, rambled about the great Towns of Aſia, where he Sung for Money the Praiſes of Conquerors. Being grown Rich by that means, he took Shipping for the Iſle of Ceos, his Native Country. The Ship was caſt away: Every Body ſaved himſelf with whatever he could carry. Simonides took nothing, and being ask'd the reaſon of it, he anſwered (m), 'Tis becauſe all that I have is with me. Many Paſſengers were drowned ſinking under the weight of what thay had a mind to Save. Thoſe who Landed, were Plundered by Highwaymen: Every body went to Clazomenæ, a Town not far from the place where the Ship was caſt away. A Citizen, who loved Learning, and had read Simonides's Poems with great Admiration, knowing him, afforded him all Neceſſaries, whilſt the reſt where forced to beg in the Streets. The Poet meeting them, told 'em his Anſwer was right (n).

(K) What he anſwered to Hiero's Wife.] That Princeſs deſired to know whether it was better to get Learning than Riches. Simonides anſwered her, That Riches were better than Learning; for, ſaid he, I ſee every day Learned Men waiting upon Rich People (o). We muſt not believe that he valued Silver and Gold more than Knowledge; but he made uſe of a nice Railery to blame ſo many Men of Letters, who court Rich People, and endeavour to get ſome Preſents from them. He himſelf was concern'd in his own Jeſt, ſince he was at the Court of Syracuſa, thro' a motive of Intereſt, and upon many other occaſions had made it his buſineſs to mend his Condition by the Liberality of others. It might be ſaid alſo, that he preferr'd Riches to Learning, conſidering the advantage that accrues from them. 'Tis manifeſt, that Riches are more proper than Learning to procure Temporal Advantages, and whatever is moſt earneſtly wiſh'd for in Humane Life. In this ſenſe it were true literally, that 'tis better to be Rich than Learned. I muſt not forget the Reflection that was made upon the Proof alledged by Simonides. It has been ſaid that 'tis the part of Phyſicians to viſit ſick People, and that for the ſame reaſon 'tis requiſite Learned Men ſhould frequently viſit thoſe that are Rich. Here are two Witty Sayings of an Ancient Philoſopher. Some body was ſaying that he always ſaw the Philoſophers reſort to Rich Mens Houſes; Ariſtippus anſwered him, (p) Don't Phyſicians go to ſick People, and yet no body would rather chuſe to be Sick than to be a Phyſician. Upon an other occaſion Diogenes as'd him, Why do Philoſophers viſit Rich People, and how comes it that Rich People don't viſit the Philoſophers? His anſwer was, (q) 'Tis becauſe the Philoſophers know what they want, but Rich People don't know it. Eraſmus clears that thought in the following manner: The Philoſophers are not ignorant that one can't live without Money, and therefore they ask ſome of Rich Men; but if Rich Men knew that they want Learning, they would be more careful to make their Court to the Philophers. I omit Eraſmus's Moral Reflection; it may be ſeen in theſe Latin words. (r) Philoſophi ſciunt abſque pecunia vivi non poſſe: itaque petunt eos qui quod opus eſt dare poſſunt. Quòd ſi divites æquè intelligerent ſe egere ſapientia, multo magis tererent philoſophorum limina. Miſerior enim eſt egeſtas animi quàm corporis: atque hoc miſerius egeni ſunt divites quòd non intelligant, quàm pretioſa quamque neceſſaria re careant.

(L) That

(a) Ὅτι ἄνδρα ἀγαθὸν μὲν ἀλαθέως γενέσθαι χαλεπὸν, χερσί τε καὶ ποσὶ καὶ νόῳ τετράγωνον, ἄνευ ψόγου τετυγμένον. Difficile eſſe virum vere bonum fieri, manibus pedibuſque & mente ad amuſſim quadratis. Id. ibid.

(b) Id. ib. p. 216. A.

(c) Ὅτι θεὸς ἂν μόνος ἔχοι τοῦτο γέρας. Quod ſolus Deus hoc munere frui dignus ſit. Id. ib. pag. 237. D. See alſo pag. 239. C.

(d) Peter Charron, Des trois veritez, Book 1. ch. 5.

(e) Arnob. l. 1. pag. m. 17.

(f) See Elmenhorſtius upon this paſſage of Arnobius pag. m. 28, 29.

(g) Minut. Felix pag. m. 143.

(h) Leſcalop. ubi ſupra pag. 2.

(i) See Herodotus lib. 1. c. 86.

(k) See Cornelius Nepos in the Life of Pauſanias.

(l) Ælian. var. hiſtor. lib 9. c. 41. See alſo Plutarch in conſolat. ad Apollonium pag. 105. A.

(m) Mecum inquit mea ſunt cuncta. Phædrus ubi infra.

(n) Taken from Phædrus fab. 21. lib. 4.

(o) Ariſtoteles Rhetoric. lib. 2. c. 16. p. m. 438.

(p) Diogen. Laertius in Ariſtippo l. 2. n. 70.

(q) Id. ib. n. 69.

(r) Eraſm. in apophthegm. l. 3. in Ariſtipp. n. 10. pag. m. 186.

acknowledged that he could not (L) deceive filly People. Some Verfes, wherein he cenfured a Maxim of Pittacus, were thought * very difficult. It appears from the Examination of thofe Verfes that he was none of thofe fevere Criticks, who Praife nothing but what feems to them perfectly Good, and who cenfure the leaft Faults. He was infinitely more Tractable, and could † bear Humane Imperfections. He was well enough pleafed, provided a Man was not too Wicked. There would be no end, faid he, of cenfuring thofe who are guilty of Follies, and I don't look upon Earth for a Man of an unblameable Life: There is no fuch Man; and I fhall never Praife any body at that rate. 'Tis enough for me that a Man be tolerably good and free from Crimes ‖. He was of Opinion that Men fhould ufe all the things of this Life as a Sport , and mind nothing ferioufly. Tho' the chief Character of his Poetry was a kind of a moving and foftning Sweetnefs, he made himfelf dreaded by (M) his fharp Invectives. No body denies that he was an Excellent Poet; and if it be confidered that he reconciled two Princes ╋ extremely Incenfed, and actually at War one againft another, it will be confeft that all his Merit did not confift in making very good Verfes. He had doubtlefs many other Qualities, which made him a confiderable Man; but one cannot excufe (N) his Avarice, and his being a Mercenary Writer. His Glory muft needs fall upon that account; I mean they are Shadows, which inftead of

* See the Remark [illegible] towards the end. ‖ [illegible] [illegible] sunt [illegible] & ille quisquis malus non eft, nimiumve iners. Plato in Protag. pag. 240.

(L) That he cou'd not deceive filly People.] Erafmus did not forget, in his Collection of Apophthegms, Simonides's anfwer to thofe who ask'd him, why he did not endeavour to get fomething from the Theffalians, fince he was fo careful to get what he could in other Countries: (a) Thofe Men, faid he, are too filly to be deceived by me. I fhall fet down the whole Paffage of Erafmus, becaufe it contains a good Reflection. (b) Idem (Simonides) quum cæteros laudando venaretur, ut aliquid darent, interrogatus cur non & Theffalos captaret, Stupidiores funt, inquit, quàm ut a me falli poffint. Qui quærunt cui imponant, ad ftupidos eunt. At qui tam erant ftupidi, ut non fentirent ingenium poematum illius, nec tangerentur amore nominis in pofteros tranfmittendi, non poterant ab illo falli. Erafmus is in the right: Thofe, who have a mind to deceive others, look for Fools; but thofe, who are too ftupid to be fenfible of the Beauties of a Poem, or to defire a long Fame, were not fit to be deceived by Simonides. A thought of Gorgias Leontinus may be applied to this Subject. He defined Tragedy (c) a Deceit, wherein the deceiver is more juft than he, who does not deceive, and he who is deceived is more knowing than he who is not deceived. Whereupon Daniel Heinfius makes this Obfervation. (d) A tantis viris poffe decipi, paucorum eft: & illorum fere tantum, qui præftantiam eorum, fi non affequi re ipfa, mente ac intellectu æftimare ac complecti poffunt, qui cum aliquo judicio decipiuntur. I have faid in the Article of Agefilaus, that a great Captain complain'd that his Enemies were fo filly, that he could not fucceed in his Stratagems againft 'em. I have faid alfo in another place, that Balzac was of Opinion that the Maids of his Village were too filly to be deceived by a witty Man.

(M) Made himfelf dreaded by fharp Invectives.] Timocreon was his (e) Enemy: He was one of the (f) Ancient Comick Poets, and confequently he knew how to give Injurious Words, and did it with an immoderate Licenfe:

Eupolis (g) atque Cratinus, Ariftophanefque Poetæ,
Atque alii, quorum Comœdia prifca virorum eft,
Si quis erat dignus defcribi, quòd malus, aut fur,
Quod mœchus foret, aut ficarius, aut alioqui
Famofus; multâ cum libertate notabant.

He made a Comedy (h) againft Simonides; and therefore one may very well believe he did not fpare him: Neverthelefs, fome Verfes are ftill extant, wherein he confeffes that he had been a Sufferer, and we have his Epitaph made by Simonides. It is very Injurious. (i) Id non impune feciffe (Timocreontem) colligo ex carminibus ejufdem Timocreontis nondum editis, qui in femetipfum Simonidis dicacitatem accufat, & plane vituperat metro Trochaico pentametro: Καλὰ μετιθεὶς τῆς λέξεως, dictionibus fcilicet tranfpofitis.

Κηΐα μὲ προσῆλθε φλυαρία ἐκ ἐθέλοντα,
Οὐκ ἐθέλοντά με προσῆλθε Κηΐα φλυαρία.
Cœa me nugacitas importuna loquacitas invitum,
Invitum me invafit Cœa importuna loquacitas.

Extatque hodie num Simonidis Epigramma in Timocreontis fepulchrum, quo injurias fibi illatas ultus probe fuiffe fibi vifus eft.

Πολλὰ (i) φαγὼν, καὶ πολλὰ πιὼν, καὶ πολλὰ κάκ' εἰπὼν Ἀνθρώπους κεῖμαι Τιμοκρέων Ῥόδιος.
Cum multa comederim & multa biberim, multa mala dixerim Hominibus, jaceo Timocreon Rhodius.

(i) Athenæus lib. 10. p. 415.

(N) One cannot excufe his Avarice, and his being a Mercenary Writer.] I know what he anfwered thofe, who ask'd him why he was fo Covetous in his Old Days; becaufe, faid he (k), I had rather leave fomething to my Enemies after my Death, than want the affiftance of my Friends during my Life. This Anfwer is not altogether amifs; for there is nothing one ought more carefully to avoid than to be Chargeable to any body, or to depend upon the Difcretion and Caprices of others: But Simonides fhould not have been afraid of it; he might have avoided that Misfortune, without being fo intent upon getting Money. Another anfwer, lefs tolerable than the firft, is afcribed to him. Plutarch does not approve of it. " (l) For not only,

" Venus to Old Men is averfe, ——
" As Euripides has it; but their Appetite alfo to their " Meat and Drink is for the moft part dull, and as " one would fay, toothlefs; fo that they have but " little Guft and Relifh in them. They ought there" fore to furnifh themfelves with Pleafures of the " Mind, not ungenerous or illeberal, as Simonides
" faid to thofe, who reproach'd him with Covetouf" nefs, that being by his Years depriv'd of other
" Pleafures, he recreated his Old Age with the only " Delight he took in heaping up Riches. But the " Political Life, or the Management of the Com" mon-Wealth has in it Pleafures exceeding great,
" and no lefs honourable; being fuch, as 'tis pro" bable the very Gods do only, or at leaft chiefly
" Injoy themfelves in; and thefe are the Delights
" which proceed from doing good, or being bene" ficial to many, and performing what is honeft
" and laudable ". Had I curtail'd this Paffage, I fhould have left out fome things, that may be of fome ufe to the Readers. His way of living was fomewhat fordid, as (m) Chamæleon rightly obferved. (n) Ὄντως δὲ ἦν ὡς ἀληθῶς κίμβιξ ὁ Σιμωνίδης καὶ αἰσχροκερδὴς ὡς Χαμαιλέων φησίν. Fuit autem revera præparcus Simonides & quæftus vel turpis avidus, ut ait Chamæleon. Read this paffage of Ælian. (o) Οὐκ ὤκνησέ γε Σιμωνίδης βαρὺς ὢν ὑπὸ γήρως πρὸς αὐτὸν ἀφικέσθαι· ἦν μὲν γὰρ καὶ φύσει φιλάργυρος ὁ Κεῖος· προύτρεπε δὲ αὐτὸν καὶ πλέον ἡ τοῦ Ἱέρωνος φιλοδωρία φασί. Neque Simonidem impedivit fenectus profunda, quo minus ad eum veniret. Erat enim Ceus aviditfimus pecuniæ, magifque ipfum

(k) Stobæus ferm. 8. fol. m. 55.

(l) Plut. an feni fit gerenda refpubl. pag. 786.

(m) He writ the Life of Simonides.

(n) Athen. lib. 14. pag. 656.

(o) Ælian. var. hiftor. lib. 9. cap. 1.

Id. Heinfius ib. (e) Suidas in Τιμοκρέων. (f) Id. ib.
Horat. fat. 4. lib. 1. init. (h) Suidas ibid. (i) Leo Allade Simeonum fcriptis pag. 213.

of setting off the finest Parts of his Picture, make 'em Dark and Ugly. Of all the Sayings that are ascribed to him, I shall only mention this: He said *, that Necessity was a thing which the Gods themselves would not oppose. His Father Leoprepes has been quoted for a good (O) Advice he gave to two young Men. Tho' † Gyraldus's Collections are very good, they don't equal those of Allatius ‡ concerning our Simonides. He gives us the Titles of all his Poems, as far as they can be known by the Ancient Monuments that are extant; but he says nothing of Simonides's Egg, mention'd by M. Blondel ¶ the Architect. M. Blondel is mistaken: He has confounded Simonides with Simmias Rhodius.

SIMONIDES, Son of the Daughter of the foregoing, was a Native of the Isle of Ceos: Some think he was Sirnamed (A) Melicertes. He flourished before the Peloponnesian War, and writ three Books of Genealogies, and three Books of Inventions ‖. I shall take notice of some small Faults (B) in Moreri's Dictionary. Tho' there ipsum commovit Hieronis propensus ad largiendum animus, ut fama est. He had always something to say in his Vindication, when he was desired to tell why he was so sparing; but his Answers, as has been seen above, were far from being satisfactory. Whilst he was at Syracusa, the King supplied him plentifully with every thing that was necessary for his Maintenance. He sold the greatest part of it, and alledged for his Reason, (a) that he had a Mind to shew his Frugality, and Hiero's Magnificence: Which was a poor Subterfuge.

He has been blamed for being the First Mercenary Poet: Which, I think, ought not to be understood as if the Poets, who lived before him, had slighted all manner of Rewards. I believe they had an Eye to the Presents and Liberalities of those, for whom they sung, and they made heavy Complaints against those ungrateful Men, who gave 'em nothing, or less than they expected. How then shall we understand these reproachful Words of Callimachus?

(b) Οὐ γὰρ ἐργάτιν τρέφω
Τὴν μοῦσαν, ὡς ὁ Κεῖος Ὑλλίχου νέπους.
Non enim mercenariam alo
Musam, ut Ceus ille Hyllichi nepos.

My Muse, says he, is not Mercenary like that of Simonides. The latter was taxed with the same Fault by (c) Anacreon; and 'tis thought Pindar level'd a like Stroke at him, when he spoke of a certain time when the Muses were not yet Mercenary.

ἁ (d) μοῖσα γὰρ ὐ φιλοκερδής πω τότ' ἦν, ὐδ' ἐργάτις, ὐδ' ἐπέρναντο γλυκεῖαι μελίφθογγοι ποτὶ Τερψιχόρας, ἀργυρωθεῖσαι πρόσωπα,
μαλθακόφωνοι ἀοιδαί.

These Greek Verses are thus Paraphrased by Benedictus. Nondum enim Musa lucri amans erat, nec quemadmodum operarii operam mercede locabat. Neque a Terpsichore Lyricorum magistra dulces cantilenæ, molli vocis sono pronunsiandæ, suaque suavitate adblandientes, atque argenti in fronte mentionem facientes vendebantur. If it be so, we must suppose that Simonides introduced an Innovation, which consisted in making Verses for a set price. He would not sing upon Trust, nor rely on the Generosity of his Heroes: He would have, first of all, his Wages agreed upon; and, perhaps, he desired sometimes to be paid before hand, or, at least, took an Earnest. However it be, he does not deserve to be placed among the Inventers of good Things, but among those who have depraved or corrupted good Customs. He dishonour'd the Muses by his Mercenary Spirit, and occasion'd a (e) Proverb ignominious to him. We are told (f) that he used to say; I have two Trunks, one for Salaries, and the other for Favours; I open 'em from time to time, and I always find the Trunk of Salaries Full, and that of Favours empty. He needed not wonder at it; for since he did nothing gratis, he could not pretend to free Gifts, but only to be paid according to the Agreement he had made with his Heroes. Perhaps, he intended to excuse the Precautions he used, and his meaning was this: I got two Trunks ready, one for what I should receive by way of Gift, and the other for what I should receive by way of Payment: I never found any thing in the First, and therefore I have set a Price to my Poems: It has turn'd to a good account; the Trunk for Payments is always full. Some will have it, that by the Trunk for Favours, he meant Thanks: if so, his meaning would be, that the Trunk of Thanks was of no use to him; when he look'd into it, he found nothing that could serve his turn (g).

We read in Phedrus's Fables, that Simonides rambled about the Towns of Asia to get Money by singing the Praises of Conquerors. There is in the Printed Copies (h) Mercede accepta laudem victorum canens; but several Criticks maintain, it should be pacta instead of accepta, because he used to make a Bargain before hand. Which appears from another (i) Passage of the same Phedrus, and from a Story mention'd in Aristotle's Rhetorick. A Man, who got the Prize of the Race, desired Simonides to make a Triumphal Song upon that Subject: The Poet not being satisfied with the Reward offered to him, answered he could not treat that Subject worthily; for that Victory had been obtain'd in a Race with Mules, and he pretended that a Mule did not afford Matter for an Encomium. He had a better price offered him, and then he made the Poem according to that Man's Desire (k).

(O) His Father Leoprepes, has been quoted for a good Advice he gave.] Two good Friends ask'd him which was their best way to preserve their Friendship. You must never be angry, said he, one with another at the same time; but one of you must respect the Anger of the other (l). 'Tis a very judicious Advice.

(A) That he was Sirnamed Melicertes.] They are mistaken. This is not Suidas's meaning; but Vossius ascribes it to him, when (m) he says that Simonides the Grandfather, was Sirnamed Melicertes.

(B) Some small Faults in Moreri's Dictionary.] I shall also take notice of those, which concern the other Simonides. I. Moreri, says that he was esteem'd in the 65th Olympiad, and that he died in the 88, being Eighty Nine Years Old. This is a wrong Calculation. Simonides was at least Twenty Years of Age when he was esteem'd; and therefore according to Moreri, he should have been Born in the 60th Olympiad: From whence it follows, that he should have died 112 Years old, or thereabouts, if he had lived till the 88th Olympiad. If Moreri shews himself a sorry Arithmetician in that respect, he makes it appear also, that he knew not how to transcribe right the (n) Author quoted by him; for that Author places the Birth of Simonides in the 56th Olympiad, and his Death in the 78th Olympiad: Which makes up 89 Years of Life, that he gives him. II. Moreri mentions one Simonide de Melece (they are his French words) more ancient than the Lyrick, who, in all likelihood, invented four Letters of the Greek Alphabet. Here is a very childish Oversight; for these Words Simonide de Melece are the Translation of these, Simonides Melicus, which signify Simonides the Lyrick Poet: Moreri found 'em in Vossius. I could wish for the Honour of Vossius, that these two Lines were not to be found in the 14th Page of his Tract concerning the Greek Historians. Simonides Melicus qui temporibus belli Medici vixit, quatuor vel quinque literas alphabeto finito adjecit, atque ita illud primus absolvit. He refers this to the 29th Olympiad: But one there were † many Simonides's, I think it would be a difficult thing to Name any of 'em (C) that lived before Phalaris.

---

* Ἀνάγκῃ δ' οὐδὲ θεοὶ μάχονται. Cum necessitate neque Dii pugnant. Suidas in ἀνάγκῃ pag. 741.

† Gyrald. dial. 9. de poet. histor. pag. 402. & seq.

‡ Allatius de Simeonum scriptis p. 167. & seq.

¶ In his Compara- … Pindare … This … having observed in the … Publisher in French by a Dutch … on the Work of M. Blondel at Amsterdam 1716.

‖ Taken from Suidas.

(a) Ὅπως εἶπεν ἥτε Ἱέρωνος μεγαλοπρέπεια περιφανὴς ᾖ, καὶ ἡ ἐμὴ κοσμιότης. Ut perspecta sit inquit, & Hieronis magnificentia & mea temperantia. Athen. lib. 14. pag. 656.

(b) Callimach. in fragm. pag. 337. Edit. Græv. 1697.

(c) See Tzetzes Chil. 8. num. 228.

(d) Pindar. Od. 2. Isthm. pag. m. 675.

(e) See Erasmus upon the Proverb Simonidis cantilenæ Chil. 2. centur. 9. n. 12.]

(f) Plut. de curiositate pag. 520.

(g) See Rittershusius upon Phædrus pag. 18.

(h) Phædrus fab. 21. lib. 4.

(i) Simonides … victoria laudem cuidam pyctæ ut scriberet CERTO condixit PRETIO. Id. ib. 24. lib. 4.

(k) Ex Aristot. rhetor. lib. 3. c. 2.

(l) Ælianus ibid. lib. 4. c. 24.

(m) Simonides Ceus ex filia nepos fuit Simonidis Lyrici, cognomento Melicerta qui memoriæ artem invenisse dicitur. Vossius de histor. Græcis lib. 4. c. 6. p. 4

(n) Vit. Suidas.

SYNERGISTS. So they call'd in the XVI Century ſome German Divines, who thinking that Luther's Hypotheſis about Free-will was too harſh, taught that Men are not Converted by the Divine Grace, without the Concourſe of their Will. This was the Fifth Schiſm * that aroſe among the Lutherans. Melanchthon laid the Foundations of it; for Villarinus, Strigelius, and ſome other Divines, who had a great regard for his Authority, conſidered ſome Phraſes which they found in his Books, whereby it appear'd that he aſcrib'd a great Power to Man's Will. Wherefore they maintain'd that the Power of Free-will concurr'd with the Grace of God in the Converſion of a Sinner. George Major, Paul Eberus, Paul Crellius, and Pizenius were alſo the chief Defenders of that Opinion ‖, and were Perſecuted by the Faction of Illyricus. 'Tis certain that Melanchthon did not (A) like the rigid Method of Luther and Calvin about the Doctrine of Grace, and it were in vain one can't apprehend what he means by his Bellum Medicum at that time. Beſides, when in the 55th Olympiad (a) he mentions Simonides, who makes the Subject of the foregoing Article, he calls him a Lyrick Poet, and aſcribes to him the Invention of Four Letters. Whereby the Reader is induced to believe, that he mentions the ſame Poet twice, and that he makes him flouriſh from the 29th Olympiad till the (b) 75th. I confeſs he obſerves in the 14th Page, that Simonides, placed by Euſebius in the 29th Olympiad, cannot be he that was Born at Ceos; but why then does he call 'em both Lyrick Poets, and aſcribe to them the Invention of Four Letters? But to return to Moreri. III. He ſays that Simonides the Younger was the Son of a Siſter of the other Simonides. He ſhould have ſaid the Son of a Daughter. He ſtumbled in a good way, ſince he miſunderſtood theſe words of Voſſius, (c) Simonides Junior, Simonidis Lyrici è filia nepos. IV. Moreri ſhould not have aſcribed ſome Poems to him, ſince Suidas aſcribes none to him, and Voſſius durſt not reckon him among the Poets. (d) Ambigo an & in poetis ei ſit locus. V. Why does Moreri aſcribe to him a Treatiſe concerning things lately Invented? Does Suidas, or any other Writer mention that Circumſtance? Were it not an abſurd thing to ſay, that Polydorus Virgil writ a Book, wherein he mentions thoſe who had lately invented ſome things?

(C) Any of 'em that lived before Phalaris.] I have read a thing in Voſſius's Letters, which gives me occaſion to make this Remark. Voſſius being uneaſie on account of his Friend Puteanus, who was brought into Trouble for a Political Book, (e) wiſhes his Enemies may be contented to tell him what Phalaris told Simonides, Mind only the Muſes. Doubtleſs there is here a ſlip of Memory: I thought at firſt, that Voſſius had ſaid Phalaris inſtead of Hiero; from whence I concluded that Simonides concern'd himſelf with a Court Intrigue, that was like to bring him into Trouble: But at laſt, I have found out wherein the Miſtake lies. Voſſius put in Simonides inſtead of Steſichorus, whom Phalaris exhorted to meddle no more with State-Affairs, and to mind only his Muſes: (f) Μέλοιεν δέ σοι μουσῶν εὔκλεεῖς πόνοι. Cura tibi ſint præclara muſarum ſtudia.

(A) Melanchthon did not like the rigid Method of Luther and Calvin.] Balduinus gave a good Proof of it, when he Publiſh'd an Abſtract of a Letter which Melanchthon writ to Calvin, the 11th of May 1543. Calvin had Dedicated to him his Book (g) de ſervitute humani Arbitrii. Here is part of the Letter wherein he thanks him for it. (h) Malim te illam tuam excellentem eloquentiam in aliis materiis magis propriis Eccleſiæ conſumere quam in queſtione περὶ τῆς ἀνάγκης. Habebam amicum Tubingæ doctum hominem Franciſcum Stadianum, qui diſcere ſolebat ſe utrumque probare, evenire omnia ut divina providentia decrevit, & tamen eſſe contingentiam: ſed ſe hæc conciliare non poſſe. Ego cum hypotheſin hanc teneam, Deum non eſſe cauſam peccati nec velle peccatum; poſtea contingentiam in hac noſtra infirmitate judicii noſtri admitto, ut ſciant rudes Davidem ſua voluntate ultro ruere. Et eundem ſentio cum haberet Spiritum ſanctum, potuiſſe eum retinere & in ea lucta aliquam eſſe voluntatis actionem. Hæc etſi ſubtilius diſputari poſſunt, tamen ad regendas mentes hoc modo propoſita, accommodata videntur. Accuſamus ipſi noſtram voluntatem cum labimur: non quærimus in Dei conſilio cauſam. E contra cum nos erigimus ſcimus Deum & velle opitulari & adeſſe luctantibus. Μόνον θέλησον (inquit Baſilius) καὶ θεὸς προαπαντᾷ. Excitatur ergo cura in nobis & laudatur Dei immenſa bonitas, qui & promiſit auxilium, & præſtat ſed petentibus. Every body knows that Calvin and Caſtalio were like Fire and Water with reſpect to thoſe Doctrines. Now Melanchthon being at Worms in 1557, writ a very obliging Letter to Caſtalio, which was a kind of a Symbol of Fraternity about the Doctrine of Predeſtination. (i) Porro cum ex eo (ut ſcis) conventu amiciſſime ſcripſiſſet ad Caſtalionem, & ejus ſententiam neſcio quam de prædeſtinatione & libero arbitrio ſuam eſſe ſignificaret: ſcire potuiſti, & quam damnaret tuam in eo viro vexando intemperiem, & quam ne tum quidem probaret omnia tua paradoxa. They are Balduinus's Words to Calvin; and 'tis to be obſerved, that he declares to him, he knows not wherein Caſtalio's Opinion conſiſts. This Ignorance proceeded from two Cauſes: one was, that Caſtalio's Book had been ſuppreſs'd; the other, that Balduinus did not much care to examin the Doctrine of Predeſtination. He confeſſes he does not underſtand it. (k) Equidem arcanam illam περὶ ἀνάγκης quæſtionem non excutio, neque Caſtalionem —— unquam vidi vel audivi, ac ne per literas quidem unquam ſum allocutus —— neque quod de ea quæſtione ſcripſit (nam & id ſupprimi pro tuo imperio juſſiſti) unquam legi: neque quod de fatali neceſſitate diſputas ſatis intelligo, & in meis ad Minucium annotationibus nuper non diſſimulavi mihi non liquere (l).

Let's ſee what Beza anſwer'd to that part of Balduinus's Book. Firſt, he denied that Melanchthon had writ (m) ſuch a Letter to Caſtalio: His Reaſon for it was, that all the Books of Melanchthon, and the very Letter produced by Balduinus, ſhewed that this German Divine differr'd from Calvin only in his way of expreſſing himſelf. In the ſecond place, he alledged a Fragment of that Letter, to prove that there was a perfect Agreement between Melanchthon and the Divines of Geneva as to the Doctrine. (n) In rebus ipſis quàm inter illum & nos convenerit, unde tandem meliùs quàm ex ipſius teſtimonio probabitur? Sic ergo ſcribit in iis literis quarum tu ipſe partem citaſti: Quum autem & honorifico me teſtimonio ornaris, & de tota re non ſolùm piè, ſed etiam eloquenter diſſerueris, de utraque re, videlicet de mea gratitudine, & de ipſa diſputatione coram nos, ut ſoliti ſumus quoties unà fuimus, prolixè colloqui poſſe optarim. Etſi enim, tantum vel ingenii vel doctrinæ mihi non arrogo quantum tribuis, & nos in primis in Eccleſia agnoſcere noſtram imbecillitatem decet, tamen benevolentia erga me tua vehementer delector, tibique gratiam habeo quòd in ſcripto luculento (loquitur autem de Calvini libris de libero arbitrio adverſus Pighium ſcriptis) tamquam in illuſtri poſitam loco extare ſignificationem amoris erga me tui voluiſti. An hæc verba ſunt, Balduine, hominis à Calvino diſſentientis? Thirdly, he taxed Balduinus with a great Falſification; and to prove his Charge againſt him, he alledged a Period Maliciouſly left out of Melanchthon's Letter. That Period runs thus: (o) Hæc non ſcribo ut tibi tradam quaſi dictata homini & eruditiſſimo & peritiſſimo exercitiorum pietatis: & quidem SCIO HÆC CUM TUIS CONGRUERE, ſed ſunt παχύτερα, & ad uſum

† See Voſſius de Poetis Græcis, pag. 84.

* Micrælius Syntagm. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. m. 865.

‖ Ex eodem ibid.

(i) Balduin. ibid. pag. 138.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) He ſpeaks thus, pag. 141. Me unum qui talia non tracto, nec fortaſſe intelligo, in Gallia exagitas.

(m) De Philippi vero literis quicquid garris falſiſſimum eſt. Bezæ reſponſ. ad Balduin. pag. 230. tom. 2. oper.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) Id. ib.

vain to alledge, as a Proof of his being of the ſame Opinion with them upon that Head, the great Praiſes he beſtowed upon their Piety; for he was a Man who knew very well how to avoid the ill Conſequences of Prepoſſeſſion. He believed that Men (B) may be in an Error thro' a good Motive. What I ſhall ſuggeſt thereupon uſum accommodata. Beza's firſt Obſervation is not ſolid; He himſelf affords us the Refutation of it; for in a Book, wherein he did not think of Balduinus, and was not aware of ſaying nothing that might ſerve that Adverſary, he ingenuouſly confeſſes that Melanchthon had Cenſured the Divines of Geneva, as if they had introduced the Fatality of the Stoicks. (a) Baſileæ vero Caſtellio ——— non obſcure Pelagianiſmum tuebatur. Quinetiam hic de rebus ita ſcribere cœperat Philippus, ut quamvis antea Calvini adverſus Pighium libro diſerte ſubſcripſiſſet, tamen Genevenſes quaſi Stoicum Fatum invehentes notare quibuſdam videretur. These words of Beza plainly ſhew, that neither all the Books of Melanchthon, nor the very Letter he writ to Calvin (I mean the Letter, out of which Balduinus quoted a Paſſage) could refute thoſe who maintain'd that he had writ a Letter of Approbation to Caſtalio. The ſecond Part of Beza's Anſwer has no force in it; for the Praiſes Melanchthon beſtowed upon Calvin, do not prove that he was of his Opinion. He was ſo moderate, civil and equitable, that he did Juſtice even to thoſe who maintain'd ſuch Opinions as he did not approve. Tho' he was prepoſſeſt in favour of Free-will, he could diſcern the great Parts, and the Piety and Eloquence which Calvin diſcovered in maintaining the contrary Opinion; and he praiſed him upon that account. I ſhall enlarge (b) hereafter upon this Thought. What Beza ſays in the third place is his beſt Remark, and yet 'tis not very ſolid. He juſtly exclaims againſt Balduinus, and calls him a Falſifier: The omiſſion of that Period ſhews Balduinus's Unfairneſs; he would not have left it out, had he not been afraid of doing himſelf ſome Prejudice by producing it. And therefore he deſign'd to impoſe upon his Readers, and to carry the Cauſe by a Trick and dolo malo. But I muſt obſerve, that on this occaſion, Balduinus ſhewed as little Wit as Sincerity; for he might eaſily have perceived that the Period he left out was not prejudicial to him. When a Man declares that he admits an Active and even an Antecedent Concourſe of the Will, and that he wiſhes no body would write Books to maintain the Neceſſity of Humane Actions, he ſhews plainly enough that he is not of Calvin's Opinion. Now this is what Melanchthon had declared in the Words alledged by Balduinus: And therefore if he declares afterwards, that he does not advance thoſe things, as if Calvin wanted to know 'em, and that he thinks they agree at the bottom with Calvin's Doctrine, tho' they are not propoſed with the Subtilty of that Divine, but in a plain and more popular manner; I ſay, if he takes ſuch a Courſe, 'tis plain he does it out of Civility and Compliment, to diveſt himſelf of the odious Appearance of a Man, who takes upon himſelf to Adviſe and Cenſure others. Every Body knows there is a Civil way of putting People in mind of their Duty, which conſiſts in telling them they are not ignorant that ſuch and ſuch things ought to be done, and that they don't want to be told of it. I cannot ſufficiently wonder how Beza could maintain againſt Balduinus, that Melanchthon, and the Divines of Geneva had the ſame Notion about the Doctrine concerning Free-will. This he maintain'd in the Year 1563. He knew what he had writ (c) ſince in the Life of Calvin; he was not ignorant of the Diſputes of the Synergiſts (d) mention'd by Balduinus. But what will not a Man do in the Heat of a Diſpute? (e) En quo diſcordia cives?

I fancy the Readers will not be diſpleaſed to know what Balduinus replied. He was ſilent as to the Omiſſion of the Period, finding no other way to hide his Shame; but as to the reſt, he anſwered haughtily, and in a few words, Nihil quicquam impudentius dici aut fingi poteſt quam quod jam contendis, hac tota in re Philippum idem quod vos, & vos idem quod Philippus ſentire. Nam etſi nonniſi poſtremis ejus libris & ſententiis ſtandum eſſe dicam, tamen quæ poſtremo ad articulos Flacianos ſcripſit, an cum doctrina in hoc genere veſtra plane conſentit (f)?

(B) That Men may be in an Error through a good Motive.] A Haughty and Cholerick Divine will be ſo exceſſively fond of his Opinions, that he thinks none can oppoſe them without acting againſt common Senſe, or the Dictates of his Conſcience. But a Modeſt, Humble, and Moderate Divine, and of a Phlegmatick Temper, as Melanchthon was, takes a different courſe. Tho' he rejects an Opinion as being Falſe and Dangerous, yet he ſhews his Equity to thoſe who maintain it: He acknowledges, not only their other excellent Qualities, for which he commends 'em, but alſo does not ſcruple to own that they have very ſpecious Reaſons to maintain it. He will not therefore break with them, nor looſen the Bonds of Fraternity, whilſt the Diſſenſion is confined within certain Bounds. From whence it appears that neither Melanchthon's Letters to Calvin, nor the Praiſes he beſtowed upon him in Printed Books, can prove that they agreed in the Doctrine of Free-will. All that can be inferr'd from thence is, that he was ſo equitable as to diſtinguiſh theſe two things one from another, Calvin's Doctrine, as he conſider'd it, and that ſame Doctrine as Calvin himſelf conſidered it. He thought that Doctrine made God the Author of Sin; but he knew that Calvin did not teach it under that Notion, and would have look'd upon it as an abominable Tenet under that Conſideration. He was not ignorant that it appear'd to Calvin under the Appearance of a Syſtem, grounded upon ſeveral Paſſages of the Scripture, and tending to maintain the Rights of God's Providence, and thoſe of the Diſpenſation of the New Law. He was not ignorant that the Doctrine of Free-will appeared to Calvin under a monſtrous ſhape, as deſtructive of Providence, and directly contrary to St. Paul's Epiſtles, and to the glory that redounds to God from Mens Salvation. And therefore, tho' Melanchthon did not approve Calvin's Opinion, yet he believed that it was grounded upon a Motive worthy of a good Man, and a Zealous Servant of God: Notwithſtanding their different Notions, they agreed in this Maxim, That of two Opinions, that which is moſt conſonant to the Scripture, and to the Glory of God, ought to be preferr'd to the other. Their perfect Agreement in this Point, occaſion'd their Diſcord; for, by virtue of this Maxim, Calvin embrac'd the Doctrine of Neceſſity, and Melanchthon that of Free-will. One of 'em believed that the Supreme Empire of God, and the Rights of a Providence, worthy of the Infinite Being, required an abſolute Predeſtination. The other believed that the Goodneſs, Holineſs and Juſtice of the Supreme Being required we ſhould be free in our Actions. Such were their Principles. Both of 'em aim'd at the ſame thing, viz. at the greateſt Glory of God, but through different Ways. Was this a ſufficient Reaſon for 'em not to own one another (g) for Brethren, and Fellow-Labourers in the Lord's Vineyard?

I foreſee it will be Objected to me, that thoſe different ways ſhould have obliged thoſe two Divines to Anathematize one another, ſince Melanchthon ſhould have believed that under pretence of aſſerting the Rights of the Divine Authority, Calvin deſtroyed the Goodneſs, Holineſs and Juſtice of God, by making him the Author of Sin; and on the contrary, Calvin ſhould have maintain'd, that under pretence of preſerving thoſe three Divine Attributes, Melancthon overturn'd Providence and the Empire of God, by aſſerting that Man has a Free-will. But I ſhall give a very good Solution of this thereupon will give me occaſion to examin the (C) Anſwer, that was made to a Paſſage in the Philoſophical Commentary upon theſe Words, Compel them to come in.

(a) Beza in vita Calvini ad ann. 1555 oper. tom. 3. pag. 376.

(b) In the following Remark.

(c) See one of the Marginal Quotations above in this Paragraph.

(d) Audiveras paulo antequam hæc ſcriberes in Saxonia inter Illyricum & Victorinum magnam fuiſſe quæſtionem περὶ αὐτεξουσίου ἢ συνεργίας. Tu Illyricum qui tecum ſentit, ferre non potes: Victorinum qui Melanthonem ſequitur non oppugnas. Balduin. ubi ſupra, pag. 141.

(e) Virgil. ecl 1. v. 72.

(f) Reſponſ. ad Calvinum & Bezam pro Franc. Balduino fol. [illegible] verſo.

(g) Note, that I don pretend to extend this Noti- on to all the Se that sho agree in the gene Maxim o aiming a God's Glory.

Sal R 15,

this difficulty. If Calvin had argued thus, Not being able to preſerve all the Attributes of God, I give over part of 'em, that I may preſerve the reſt, and I rather chuſe to Sacrifice the Moral Virtues, to the Phyſical ones, than the Phyſical to the Moral, I rather chuſe to make him a powerful Maſter than a good one; he would deſerve to be Anathematized by all Men. But he maintain'd on all occaſions, that by aſſerting the Supreme Authority of God, he pretended not to ſtrike in the leaſt at his Goodneſs, Holineſs and Juſtice. And therefore Melancthon had been very unjuſt, if he had imputed to him ſome Conſequences, which at the worſt proceeded only from his Doctrine, ſince Calvin diſowned them; which he did in theſe Words. (a) Ubique in ſcriptis ſuis clamitat (Calvinum) quoties de peccato agitur, non miſcendum eſſe Dei nomen: quia in Dei naturam non niſi perfecta rectitudo & æquitas competit. Quam putida igitur calumnia eſt, hominem de Eccleſia Dei bene meritum, crimine hoc involvere, quaſi Deum faciat authorem peccati? Docet quidem ubique nihil fieri niſi volente Deo. Interea quæ ſcelerate fiant ab hominibus Deum arcano judicio ita moderari aſſerit, ne quid affine habeat hominum vitiis. Summa doctrinæ ejus eſt, Deum mirabiliter, & modis nobis incognitis, in quemcumque vult finem omnia dirigere, ut æterna ejus voluntas prima ſit rerum omnium cauſa. Cur autem velit Deus quod nobis videtur minime conſentaneum, fatetur eſſe incomprehenſibile. Ideoque nimis curioſe & audacter inveſtigandum eſſe negat: quoniam judicia Dei ſint abyſſus multa, & myſteria quæ modulum noſtrum ſuperant, reverenter adorare conveniat potius, quam excutere. Interea principium illud retinet, Quamvis nos ratio conſilii lateat, ſemper tribuendam eſſe Deo juſtitiæ laudem: quia ejus voluntas ſumma ſit æquitatis regula.* Warm and Paſſionate Men will not be ſatisfied with ſuch a wiſe Anſwer; but Melancthon, who was a lover of Peace, and whoſe great Equity and Modeſty enabled him to diſcover the weak and the ſtrong ſide of the Opinions he approved or rejected, was always diſpoſed to do Juſtice to Calvin. Every Body ſhould imitate that equitable Divine. Tho' you ſhould clearly prove againſt a Predeſtinarian, that his Syſtem is neceſſarily attended with this Conſequence, Therefore God is the Author of Sin, you ſhould be contented with this Anſwer as to his Perſon: I ſee, as well as you, the Connexion of my Principle with that Conſequence, and my Reaſon that ſees it, does not afford me a ſufficient Knowledge to make me underſtand how I am miſtaken in ſeeing it; nevertheleſs, I am fully perſuaded, that God finds in the Infinite Treaſures of his Power and Wiſdom, a certain and moſt infallible way of breaking that Connexion, tho' it be unknown to me, and it exceeds the extent of my Knowledge. A Chriſtian ought chiefly to ſubmit to God's Authority. This is the ſenſe of Calvin's Words, which we have juſt now ſeen. Melancthon, and any other Divine, who aſſerts Man's free Will, would be the more to blame for not being ſatisfied with this Anſwer, becauſe they are forced to have recourſe to ſuch an Explanation; for when they have any ſincerity, they acknowledge that the manner of reconciling God's Providence, and his Preſcience with Man's free Will, (b) is Incomprehenſible to them. Thus they are driven into the ſame Precipice into which they drove others; they take Refuge in their turn in the Incomprehenſibility of God's Nature, with reſpect to the Weakneſs of Humane Reaſon.

'Tis therefore a great Subject of Scandal to ſee the Diviſions occaſion'd by the diſputes about Grace. Every ſect Taxes the other with teaching Impious things and horrid Blaſphemies, and carries Animoſity to the higheſt degree; and yet, 'tis about ſuch Doctrines that a mutual Toleration ſhould quickly take place. Thoſe, who are againſt Toleration might be excuſed, if they could clearly prove their Opinions, and anſwer all Objections after a convincing manner; but that Men ſhould Anathematize, Baniſh and Hang thoſe that Diſſent from them, tho' their beſt Solution is God's Incomprehenſibility, is a thing altogether inexcuſable. Melancthon was more Humane. He did not believe that thoſe, who deny free Will, are unworthy of being look'd upon as God's Servants; he excuſed 'em on Account of the obſcurity of the Matter, and the Goodneſs of their Motives.

Nothing would be more uſeful than to make ſerious Reflections upon what is to be found concerning that Controverſy in a (c) Book of the Biſhop of Salisbury.

(C) The anſwer, that was made to a Paſſage in the Philoſophical Commentary.] I think one of the Reaſons why Melancthon expreſs'd ſo great a Moderation and Civility about this diſpute, was his conſidering that the Method God thought fit to uſe, was choſen by him among Infinite others equally worthy of the moſt Perfect Being. Now this Conſequence ariſes from that Conſideration, viz that a Man may be miſtaken in explaining Theological Doctrines, without aſcribing any thing to God that is prejudicial to his Perfections: for thoſe are miſtaken, who imbrace an Hypotheſis not conſonant to what God has actually done; but if it be agreeable to one of the other Methods he might have choſen, it aſcribes to God a Conduct altogether worthy of him. Let us clear the matter by an Example. Let us ſuppoſe that Solomon, who uſed to ſend (d) Enigms to the King of Tyre, writ to him a Letter in Cyphers, wherein he argued about a State Affair. Let us ſuppoſe that Titius and Mevius being ordered to decypher that Letter, did not make uſe of the ſame Key: One of 'em took for an A what the other took for an O, and ſo with the other Figures. Titius found out Solomon's Intention, and conſequently Mevius departed from it; nevertheleſs Mevius found out ſo reaſonable and ſo Coherent a ſenſe, that Solomon's Wiſdom appeared as much by it as by that of Mevius. It might have been Objected to Mevius, that he aſcribed ſome things to Solomon Inconſiſtent with the uſual courſe of Prudence; but he might have anſwered, that Solomon being a Man of a vaſt Genius, dived ſo far into Political Affairs, as to find out things that were above the Capacity of other Men. And therefore, would he have ſaid, what ſurpriſes us in the preſent caſe, ought to be look'd upon as an effect of his extraordinary Wiſdom. A like Objection might have been raiſed againſt Titius, and he would have anſwered it the ſame way. The great Genius of that King of Jeruſalem would have ſerved for a New Key to reſolve the particular Difficulties in the Explication of the Cyphers. None but he could have determin'd whether Titius had been more lucky or knowing than Mevius; but perceiving on the one hand, that Mevius aſcribed to him a ſublime Reaſoning, and on the other, that if there remain'd any Difficulty in it, it was removed by a ſuppoſition very Glorious to his Wiſdom, he might have been as well pleaſed with Mevius as with Titius, and might have told them: One of you makes me think what I have thought, and the other what I might have thought with an equal Glory.

It will be granted me, that this is an Image of the fate of Aſtronomers, who explain the Celeſtial Phænomena by oppoſite Syſtems. Thoſe Phænomena are like an Enigmatical Letter, delivered by God to be Decyphered by Aſtronomers: Some take the Motion of the Earth, and others its Reſt, for their Key. The Syſtems of Ptolemy, Copernicus, and Tycho Brahe, tho' never ſo different, explain the Phænomena; and yet there is but one that is true. This was M. Marion's (e) meaning, when he ſaid that Copernicus's Syſtem was an Opinion true in Art and falſe in Nature. But as all the followers of thoſe Syſtems are agreed in admiring in the Work the Infinite Power and Wiſdom of the Author of it, they are not afraid of Offending God if they ſhou'd be miſtaken. They think that if he does not perform thoſe things as they fancy he does, he might do it without any prejudice to his Perfections, and that

(a) Cal- inus in revi re- ſponſione diluen- nebu- nis cu- ſdam ca- nnias m. 737. tatise. Theologi- is.

) Beza tells them, at they ve no her an- er when y are ss'd rd, I ve quo- d his ords in e Re- rk H of e Article aſtalio.

(c) M. de Beauval has given an extract of it in his Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans Oct. 1699. pag. 435. & ſeq. and alſo Mr. Bernard in his Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres, for Auguſt 1700. pag. 155. & ſeq.

(d) Joſeph. antiq. Jud. lib. 8. c. 2. fol. m. 215.

(e) In one of his Pleadings. See Mr. Arnauld, Difficult. propoſées a M. Steyaert part. 9. pag. 101.

SIRIS, a River of Italy, at the Mouth of which there was a Town call'd SIRIS, having an Infinite Knowledge, he has the Ideas of Infinite Plans of the World, all Beautiful and worthy of the most Wise and most Perfect Being. I am sure that a Copernician, after much exclaiming against Ptolemy's System, and the Perplexities of so many Circles and Epycycles, and the insignificancy of the prodigious Swiftness of the Firmament, &c. will confess, if he minds it, that all the Faults he observes in that Hypothesis might be made up by some Advantages, not to be found in the simple Mechanism of the Motion of the Earth. Whoever considers the Idea of an Infinite Knowledge, will see the possibility of such a Compensation; he will perceive that Man is not the only Being, for whom such great Spectacles are design'd. He'll be sensible that the inconceivable Rapidity of the Celestial Spheres might be of a wonderful use, with respect to some parts of the Universe, placed beyond the reach of our sight; in a word, that if Ptolemy's System is false, yet it is possible, and consequently worthy of the Creator's Wisdom; for if it was unworthy of it, it would not be possible. I don't think that any Astronomer, who is conscious to himself, that he prefers that System to all others, because all things duly considered, he believes it to be more consonant to God's Choice, would be afraid of appearing before the Judge of the World with such an Opinion, tho' it should prove false. I think he would expect that the Copernician and he should receive an Answer, much like that which I have supposed Solomon would have made to Titius and Mevius. Few People will deny this (a); but if the Question was about a point of Divinity, many Doctors wou'd deny it. I fancy Melancthon wou'd be none of 'em, as to the Systems concerning Free-will, and Necessity. He wou'd suppose that the False is probable, possible, and not contrary to God's Perfections.

Laying aside the Doctrinal part of those Questions, I shall mention a fact, which the Laws of History allow me to take notice of; and if I add some Criticisms to my Narrative, I shall do nothing that exceeds the bounds of this Dictionary. A Minister of Utrecht, in his Reflections upon the Philosophical Commentary, has confuted the following Passage as well as he could. " (b) Here is a hint that may " serve to remove the Phantoms and Panick Fears, " wherewith Divines have been so long troubled in " point of Error; for 'tis certain that the reason " why Men find so many Arguments, which seem to " be of an equal solidity to maintain Truth and " Falsehood in Controversies about Religion, is that " most Falsities that appear in 'em are as possible as " the Truths. In effect, we all suppose that the " Revelation depends upon a free decree of God; " for he is not necessitated by his Nature to make Men " or any other Being. And consequently he might " (if he had been willing,) have produced nothing, " or produced a World different from this; and if " he had design'd to place Men in it, he might have " directed 'em to his end, by Methods quite con" trary to those he has pitch'd upon, and equally " worthy of the most perfect Being; for an Infinite " Wisdom has Infinite ways of Manifesting it self, " that are all worthy of it. Which being so, 'tis " no wonder if Divines find as many Arguments to " maintain Free-will as to impugn it; for we have " Ideas and Principles to apprehend and to prove that " God could make Man a free Creature, and forbear " bestowing upon him a Liberty of Indifference, as " it is call'd; and the same may be said of many o" ther Contradictory Propositions. 2 Tom. suppl. " chap. 24. pag. 308, 310 ". The Reflections upon this Passage, as far as they concern the present Subject, consist first in this Interrogation: (c) Who told him that we have Ideas and Principles to apprehend and to prove, that God could make Man a free Creature, and forbear bestowing upon him a liberty of Indifference? I believe M. Saurin wou'd not have us'd such a Question, if he had considered that for the space of one Hundred and Fifty Years, a vast number of Books have been Publish'd all over Europe, for and against Liberty, in which each Party make unanswerable Objections. He would have confest then that we have Ideas and Principles to apprehend, &c. Let him give himself the trouble to peruse some Books written by the Arminians, Calvinists, Molinists, or Jansenists, and he'll see that those Ideas and Principles are very plentiful in Mens Minds. He adds, (d) that there are contradictory things, repugnant to God's Nature, and consequently impossible ——— that God could not Create Bodies without Extension and three Dimensions, nor Spirits without being endowed with the faculty of Thinking. These words are Insignificant; for the Commentator said nothing, whereby he intimates that there are not some things absolutely Impossible: To what purpose then does M. Saurin observe, that the Attributes, which constitute the Essence of a Creature, cannot be separated from it? Did the Commentator doubt of that Truth? If God, (M. Saurin (e) goes on,) has not made Man endowed with a Liberty of Indifference, our Philosopher can't know whether he could have created him with that Liberty; and whether that Liberty is not as Contradictory as a square Circle, or an independant Creature. I don't understand this well enough to confute it; but I think that Melancthon being to answer such an Instance, would have been contented to say: I don't love to use subtilties upon this Subject, I follow the Notions of the People, I believe God has freely Created every thing, and I wonder a Minister calls such a Truth (f) into Question: His intimating that the Liberty of Indifference is as Contradictory as a Square Circle is still more strange to me, since he affirms a little after, (g) that 'tis impossible God should produce intelligent Creatures, without giving 'em some Laws. The Laws God gave to Adam were attended with Promises and Threatnings: Which clearly shews that it was in Adam's Power to obey or disobey. The most Rigid Divines, St. Augustin and Calvin expresly Teach, that Men have lost their Free Will only because Adam made an ill use of it in the Terrestrial Paradise. I desire no more to be certain that 'tis possible for God to bestow a Liberty of Indifference upon Men. Had he not bestowed it upon Adam, all our Systems of Religion wou'd come to nothing: From whence I conclude, that God gave him such a Liberty; now every Body knows the Maxim, Ab actu ad potentiam valet, consequentia. But I conceive he might have determin'd his Will to good things, in such a manner, as never to Waver between Good and Evil; and therefore the Hypothesis of Man's Liberty and that of Necessity appear possible to me. This is what I think Melancthon might have answered. I think also he would have taken it ill, that the Author of the Reflections upon the Philosophical Commentary should not declare his Opinion, but be contented with a If God, &c. a Wavering Phrase, from which one may infer, that the Privation of Free Will is Contradictory: For if it should follow from God's Creating Adam without a Liberty of Indifference that 'tis a Liberty which implies Contradiction; others will maintain, that if he had Created him with that Liberty, it would result from it, that the Determination to one of the Contraries wou'd be as impossible as a Square Circle. I omit what the Author of the Reflections says against the Commentator, who Advances that the Proofs of a false thing are sometimes as good as the Proofs of a true one. What M. Saurin answers to it is full of needless things; for 'tis needless in a dispute to prove to an Adversary what he does not deny. The only thing that does not seem insignificant is his saying, that (h) the Reasons which determine us to the choice of a Religion, ought to be Moral Demonstrations: But that very thing is of no use in the Controversy about Free-will mention'd by the Commentator; for since each Party pretends to such Demonstrations, 'tis referring us to Equivocal Signs.

Here follows another Passage of the Commentary. " (i) What do they do then, when the Re" velation

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Id. ib. pag.

(f) The Truth is call'd in question by these words; If God has not made Man endowed with a Liberty of Indifference.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 33

(h) Id. ib. pag. 3

(i) Id. ib. pag. 3

(a) If the Question was only to foretell Eclipses, and other Phænomena, to satisfy our Curiosity, or for the use of Life, one might be free to chuse a System: Different Hypotheses might be reconciled with the same Phænomena; or if one had an ill Success, it were but a Mistake attended with no ill Consequence. Whether we follow Ptolemy's System, or Tycho Brahe's, or Kepler's, or Copernicus's, it signifies but little as long as we do not positively affirm a thing of which we have not a Mathematical certainty. But 'tis not so with Systems of Religion. Saurin ubi infra pag. 335. (b) Saurin, Reflex. sur les droits de la conscience pag. 323. (c) Id. ib. pag. 324.

SIRIS, went ſucceſſively by ſeveral (A) other Names. That Town was ſaid to have been built by the Trojans, and to prove it, they ſhewed there a Statue of the Trojan Minerva *. It was ſhewn ſtill in Strabo's time, as a Miraculous Image; for it look'd downwards, and the Reaſon given for it is, that the Goddeſs conceived a great Horror, when the Ionians took the Town, and ſhewed no reſpect for that Statue Many Inhabitants fled to that Minerva, and implored the Clemency of the Conquerors, as in a place of Refuge which they thought to be inviolable; but the Enemies had no regard to their Intreaties, and they were Barbarouſly pull'd out of that Sanctuary †. The Goddeſs had not the Courage to ſee ſuch an Irreverence; which was the Reaſon why ſhe caſt her Eyes downwards. It was not the firſt time that a dreadful Spectacle made her turn her Eyes another way: She had done it before at Troy || when Caſſandra was Raviſh'd. The Author, from whom I have theſe Particulars, makes a judicious Reflection upon (B) the many Statues, which the Trojans were ſaid to have Conſecrated ſince their diſperſion. M. de Marolles Abbot of Villelain (C) made the ſame Obſervation on

* Strab. lib. 6. pag. 18.

† Id. ib.

|| Id. ib.

" velation is doubtful about ſome Points? Some explain it by one Syſtem, and others by another. " Granting that one of thoſe Syſtems is Conſonant " to the Method which God has actually pitch'd upon, " it does not follow that the other Syſtem is not " Conſonant to what he might have done with the " ſame Glory and Wiſdom he has diſcovered by doing another thing, ſince we conceive that God " might have done things otherwiſe than he has " done 'em, a Thouſand different ways, all worthy " of his Infinite Perfections: Otherwiſe, he wou'd " not be a free Being, and wou'd not differ from " the God of the Stoicks, Subject to an avoidable " Fate, a Doctrine little better than Spinoziſm. " And conſequently no falſe Syſtem can be Pernicious, but when a Divine builds it upon Notions which he believes to be contrary to God's " Word, and unbecoming his Majeſty. But I think " there are no ſuch Divines in the World. 2. " Tom. Suppl. chap. 24. pag. 310, 311 ". M. Saurin comparing thoſe Words with another Paſſage, wherein the Commentator ſays, he will not take Advantage of the Compariſon of a Prince, whoſe vaſt Empire ſhould contain many Nations, that have different Laws, Cuſtoms and Languages, thinks (a) that the Commentator juſtifies not only all the Sects of Chriſtianity, but alſo thoſe of Paganiſm. I wonder he did not perceive that his Adverſary (b) confines himſelf to the Syſtems grounded on the different ſenſes put upon the Scripture. Here follows another Paſſage, at which you'll be ſurpriſed. God might have done things otherwiſe than he has done 'em, a Thouſand different ways, all worthy of his Infinite Perfections. M. Saurin (c) having quoted a Second time thoſe words of the Philoſophical Commentary, confutes them with a diſtinction between the Eſſential parts of Religion and thoſe that are not Eſſential; and then he ſays: (d) " The Author makes no ſuch Diſtinction; he uſes " an Univerſal Propoſition, God might have done " things otherwiſe than he has done 'em, a Thou- " ſand different ways, and what is remarkable is " that among thoſe different ways he reckons " thoſe, that have been contrived by the Hea- " then Poets and the Chineſe Philoſophers; for " he will juſtify all the Syſtems of Religion, that " have been invented by Doctors, and received by " the People. In order to prove his Aſſertion, he " alledges the Liberty of God. Otherwiſe, ſays " he, he wou'd not be a free Being, and wou'd not " differ from the God of the Stoicks, ſubject to an " unavoidable Fate, a Doctrine little better than " Spinoziſm. Were this Conſequence right, God " would have the moſt dreadful Liberty of Indif- " ference that can be imagined. He might Lie and " Perjure himſelf, when he Swears by himſelf: he " might Command us to Hate him, and forbid us " to Love him: He might Command us Trea- " chery, and Perjury, in a word all ſorts of " Crimes: In ſhort, he might turn all Virtues " into Vices, and all Vices into Virtues ". Theſe few Words are ſufficient to refute thoſe Reflections: mind this Clauſe, ALL WORTHY OF HIS INFINITE PERFECTIONS. It ſhews with the utmoſt Evidence that God's Liberty does not conſiſt in being able to act right or wrong, wiſely or imprudently; but in having the Power of chuſing among Infinite Plans, equally beautiful and good, ſuch as he thinks fit. Can this ſignify that he might have introduced the falſe Worſhips ſung by the Heathen Poets? Are they worthy of his Infinite Perfections?

(a) Id. ib. pag. 129.

(b) What they ſo … when … THE … ABOVE … RELIGION … doubtful … ſome … Comment. … Philoſoph.

(c) Saurin … ſupra. pag. 327.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 329.

Id. ib. pag. 330.

(A) Went ſucceſſively by ſeveral other Names.] Cluverius (e) will tell you it was call'd Leuternia, Polieum, Heraclium. He ſays that the Tarentini having built Heraclea three Miles above the Mouth of the River Siris, removed thither the Inhabitants of Siris; ſo that from that time the Town of Siris was only the Port of the Town of Heraclea. According to Stephanus Byzantinus the Town of Siris was call'd Policum by the Trojans; but according to Tzetzes it was call'd Polieum, before it went by the Name of Siris. It may be infer'd from Lycophron, Strabo, and Tzetzes, that Leuternia was its firſt Name (f).

(e) Cluver. Ital. Antiq. lib. 4. cap. 15. pag. 736. Ep tom. Bunon.

(f) Cluver. ibid.

(B) A judicious Reflection upon the many Statues.] 'Tis a piece of Impudence, ſays he, to pretend, not only that a Statue did formerly caſt its Eyes downwards, but even, that ſuch a Statue may be ſeen to this Day. 'Tis ſtill a greater Impudence to mention many ſuch Statues brought from Troy. They pretend at Rome, at Lavinium, at Luceria, and at Siris, to have the Minerva of the Trojans; and what is ſaid of the Trojan Women is applied to ſeveral other places: and therefore tho' the thing be not impoſſible, it does not appear credible. (g) Ἰταμὸν μὲν οὖν καὶ τὸ οὕτω μυθεύειν ὥς τι μὴ μόνον καταμύσαν φαινόμενον, καθάπερ καὶ τὸ ἐν Ἰλίῳ ἀποστραφῆναι κατὰ τὸν Κασάνδρας βιασμὸν, ἀλλὰ καὶ καταμύον δείκνυσθαι. Πολὺ δὲ ἰταμώτερον τὸ τοσαῦτα ποιεῖν ἐξ Ἰλίου κεκομισμένα ξόανα ὅσα φασὶν οἱ συγγραφεῖς· καὶ γὰρ ἐν Ῥώμῃ καὶ ἐν Λαουινίῳ καὶ ἐν Λουκερίᾳ καὶ ἐν Σιρίτιδι Ἰλιὰς Ἀθηνᾶ καλεῖται, ὡς ἐκεῖθεν κομισθεῖσα· καὶ τὸ τῶν Τρωάδων δὲ τόλμημα περιφέρεται πολλαχοῦ, καὶ ἄπιστον φαίνεται, καίπερ δυνατὸν ὄν. Enimvero protervum eſt fingere, ſimulacrum aliquod non modo viſum fuiſſe connivere, ſicut imaginem Minervæ Ilii ferunt oculos avertiſſe cum violaretur Caſſandra: ſed fabulæ adjicere, ſimulacrum etiamnum connivens conſpici. At multo etiam protervius eſt ea ab Ilio allata fabulari, quæ ſcriptores ponunt. Nam & Romæ, & Lavinii, & Luceriæ, & Siritidi Minerva habetur Iliaca quaſi ab Ilio allata: & facinus mulierum Trojanarum multis adſcribitur locis, eoque fides ei derogatur cùm fieri tamen potuerit. I have ſet down the Greek for the Satisfaction of thoſe, who are never pleaſed, only they ſee the Original Words, and likewiſe to diſpenſe my ſelf from a ſtrict Tranſlation of that Paſſage. Strabo's Reflection is very judicious; for if the Variations of Hiſtorians are not a certain Character of Falſity, they afford at leaſt a juſt pretence to ſuſpend ones Belief: And when ſeveral Towns pretend to have the ſame Miraculous Image, 'tis a ſtrong preſumption that all of 'em falſely boaſt of it, and that the ſame Trick and the ſame Intereſt moves 'em to ſet up their Traditions.

(g) Strabo lib. 6. pag. 182.

(C) The Abbot of Villelain made the ſame Obſervation.] Theſe are his Words. " (h) As they were " ſhewing (i) her the Head of St. John the Baptiſt, which

(h) Marolles, Memoires pag. 132. ad ann. 1641.

(i) He means the Princeſs Mary Gonzaga, who was then at Amiens.

on Account of the frequent Multiplication of the ſame Relicks. I have obſerved in another γ place Floruſ's miſtake about the River Siris.

SIXTUS IV. Made Pope in the Year 1471. had been General of the Cordeliers, and his Name was Franceſco della Rovere. He was Born the 22d of July 1414. at Cella * a Town of the Rivera di Genoa, five Miles from Savona. One of his Hiſtorians ‡ aſcribes to him all ſorts of good Qualities, great Learning, an Ardent Charity for the Poor, a great Liberality to the Princes oppreſs'd by the Turks, an admirable exactneſs in getting Juſtice duly Adminiſtred, and a great care of repairing the Ruins of Rome, and adorning that Town. He does not diſſemble the Faults for which he was blamed. 1. His committing many Injuſtices (A) in favour of his Creatures. 2. His raiſing a War in Italy very improperly. 3. His Excommunicating Laurence de Medicis. 4. And then exerciſing all manner of Hoſtilities againſt the Florentins. He does not charge him, as others do †, with knowing and having a hand in the Conſpiracy of the Pazzi. He ſays nothing of the diſſolute Life of the Cardinals who were in favour under that Reign, one of which, as many believe, is denoted (A △) in ſome Verſes

" which the People reverence as one of the moſt " conſiderable Relicks in the World; after ſhe " had kiſs'd it, ſhe bad me come near and do the " ſame. I conſidered the Shrine and what was " in it: I kiſs'd it as others did, being contented " to ſay with all poſſible Gentleneſs, that it was the " fifth or ſixth Head of St. John the Baptiſt, which " I had the Honour to kiſs: At which her Highneſs was a little ſurpriſed, and cou'd not forbear " ſmiling. The Sacriſtan or Treaſurer, who alſo " took Notice of what I ſaid, replied, he cou'd " not deny that ſeveral others were mention'd " (for perhaps he had been told that the ſame " Head was to be ſeen in St. John's Church at " Lions, at St. Jean de Morienne, at St. Jean d'Angeli in Saintonge, at Rome, in Spain, in Germany " and in ſeveral other places) but that the Head he " ſhewed was the true one. And to prove the " Truth of his Aſſertion, he deſired us to obſerve " the hole that was in the Scull of that Relick " above the Right Eye, pretending it was the " ſame hole that Herodias made in it with a knife " when the Head was brought to her in a Diſh. " I think, ſaid I, the Goſpel does not mention " ſuch a particularity; but perceiving he was re- " ſolved to maintain the Contrary, I yielded very " reſpectfully: And without entring into a farther " Examination of the matter, and alledging the Au- " thority of St. Gregory Nazianzen, who ſays that " all the Bones of St. John the Baptiſt were burnt " in his time by the Donatiſts, in the Town of Sebaſtia, and that nothing remain'd of 'em but a " ſmall part of the Head, which was carried to Alexandria, I was contented to tell him that the " Authority of ſo venerable a Church as that of " Amiens, was ſufficient to Authorize ſuch a be- " lief, tho' it was not above Four Hundred Years " Old, and tho' it was no Article of Faith. " People get many Repreſentations of that Holy " Relick, and the Honeſt Prieſt was very well " ſatisfied". The Author (a) of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres ſpeaking of a Book written about the Holy Winding Sheet, mention'd this Paſſage of the Abbot of Villeloin, and alledged theſe Words of Charles Patin, (b) I am ſorry to ſee ſo often the Picture of the Virgin drawn by St. Luke; for 'tis certain People are miſtaken about moſt of 'em, it being unlikely that St. Luke ſhou'd have drawn ſo many Pictures of the Virgin.

(A) Many Injuſtices in favour of his Creatures.] " (c) He was more indulgent to his Friends than " any other Pope, and he is blamed for having " done and granted many things upon their Ac- " count præter fas juſque, againſt all Humane and " Divine Laws". The three Cardinals of his firſt promotion were (d) Peter Riario of Savona, whom he brought up being a young Boy, with his Brother Jerome (not without Myſtery) and Julian his Brother's Son, who was afterwards Julius II. He beſtowed great Benefices upon Peter, a Man ſo Luxurious and Prodigal, that he ſeem'd to be Born to throw away Money, having ſpent during the two Years of his Cardinalſhip Two Hundred Thouſand Crowns for his Ordinary, and when he died he owed Sixty Thouſand Crowns, and left many rich Houſe-hold Goods, departing this World all over Rotten by Reaſon of his Debaucheries at (e) 28 Years of Age. " (f) 'Tis he, whoſe prodigious " Prodigality has been deſcribed by Baptiſta Fulgoſius (1), which he carried ſo far as to give " his Whore Tireſia Pattins ſet off with Pearls. " Baptiſta Mantuanus (2) made alſo the following " Verſes upon him, wherein he repreſents him Sa- " luted by Jupiter in Hell.

" At tu impiume caput cui tanta licentia quondam
" Fœmineos fuit in coitus, tua furta putabas
" Hic quoque prætextu mitræ impunita relinqui?
" Sic meruit tua fœda Venus, &c".

We ſhall ſee hereafter that M. Jurieu applies thoſe (g) Verſes to Pope Sixtus, tho' he had read in Du Pleſſis that they were made upon the Cardinal I ſpeak of. Coeffeteau does not deny the diſſolute Life of that Cardinal, and adds that Sixtus was not more lucky in his choice of Jerome, if the Hiſtorians are to be credited, excepting that he was not given to Senſuality, being only fond of Hunting. Jerome being made Prince of Imola and (h) Friuli by the Pope, Married the Baſtard of the Duke of Milan, and upon Account of that Marriage, Sixtus gave a Cardinal's Hat to Aſcagno, the Duke's Son. Sixtus raiſed alſo Leonard, his Brother's Son, and Married him to a Baſtard of King Ferdinand, and made him Governor of Rome. When the Nephew died, he raiſed in his Room another Nephew Brother ——— of Cardinal Julian, and made him Prince of Sorra and Senegaglia. This Second Nephew Married Joan, Daughter of Frederick de Monteſeltro Duke of Urbino, by whom he had Francis Maria, who after the Death of his Uncle Ubaldino, who died without Male Iſſue, ſucceeded by Adoption to the Dutchy of Urbino (i). Du Pleſſis writ an Abominable thing in the following Words. " (k) Sixtus, who deſign'd to raiſe his dear Jerome, had a mind to make himſelf Maſter of " Florence; but Laurence and Julian de Medicis " were an obſtacle to it. He practiſed upon " Francis Pazzi, who was the leader of the contrary " Faction, to attempt upon their Lives; and in " order to carry on the thing with greater ſafety, " he ſent to Florence Raphael Riario Cardinal of " St. George, a young Man and Jerome's Nephew, " to Encourage the Conſpirators. Accordingly up- " on a Sunday they fell upon the Medicis in " the middle of the Service in St. Reparada's Church. " Julian was kill'd; Laurence was wounded, and " the Church Wardens carried him into the Veſtry, " &c".

(A △) One of the Cardinals that were in Favour, as many believe, is denoted in ſome Verſes of Baptiſta Mantuanus.] You have ſeen in the foregoing Remark four Latin Verſes of that Poet, which concern the Cardinal Pietro Riario, if we believe M. Du Pleſſis. He is not the only Author who applies them to him: Others pretend they ought to be underſtood of Pope Sixtus. But the better to judge of the whole matter, 'tis neceſſary to conſider the Reflections which an Ingenious Perſon has been pleaſed to ſend me. Here

---

γ In the Article Pyrrhus, Remark G.

* Ghilini, Teatro parte 1. pag. 93. Rivet is miſtaken in his Remarks upon the Reponſe au Myſtere d'iniquité 2. part. pag. 622. where he makes him a Native of Albizola.

‡ See the Life of Sixtus IV. at the end of Platina [illegible] edit. Lugd. 1512.

(a) For Sept. 1685. art. 5. p. 999. He examines whether it be an imprudent thing to multiply thoſe things.

(b) Relations hiſtoriques pag. 221. Lyons 1676.

(c) Du Pleſſis Mornai, ex Volaterrano & Onuphrio, in his Myſtere d'iniquité, pag. 555.

(d) Du Pleſſis ibid.

(e) Volaterran. lib. 22. p. m. 818.

(f) Du Pleſſis ib.

(1) Baptiſt. Fulgoſ. dict. & factor. memorabil. l. 9.

(2) Baptiſt. Mantuan. in Alphon. l. 4.

(g) Simon Goulart in his continuation of the Catalogus teſtium veritatis, does likewiſe apply them to Sixtus, and alſo what has been ſaid there of the great expences of Cardinal Peter Riario. Gretſer in examin. Myſterii Pleſſ. pag. 544. takes advantage of this Variation.

(h) It ſhould be Forli.

(i) Coeffeteau, Reponſe au Myſtere d'iniquité, pag. 1209.

(k) Du Pleſſis ubi ſupra, pag. 556.

Verſes of Baptiſta Mantuanus. Nor does he mention the abominable Lewdneſs, to which ſome ſay that Pope lent a helping Hand. They will have it that he granted a Petition, wherein he was deſired to permit the exercice of Sodomy, during three Months in a Year. I have inquired into (B) the Origin of this Fact.

Here they are. "(a) In order to underſtand thoſe Verſes of Mantuanus, in the 4th Book of his Poem, Intitled Alphonſus, we muſt know that in that Work, which is only a deſcription of Alphonſus's going thro' Hell, the Poet repreſents the ſtate of ſeveral Souls, ſome of which were Condemn'd to Eternal Torments, and others to thoſe of Purgatory. He feigns that Alphonſus, Son of John II. and Grand-Son of Henry III. Kings of Caſtile, going with his Father and Grand-Father from Purgatory to the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, heard a long Dialogue between the Soul of a Pope in Purgatory, and a Devil call'd Jupiter, who tormented her. The Pope's Soul diſcovers her quality in theſe Verſes:

" Apud ſuperos ego templa tenebam
" Vaticana, dabant Reges his oſcula plantis.

"The Devil, in one of his Replies, ſpeaks to him thus, At tu implume caput cui tanta licentia quondam, Femineos fuit in coitus, &c. from whence it follows, that the laſt Verſes ought to be underſtood of a Pope. The Queſtion is, Whether they concern Sixtus IV? The Commentator Badius ſays, he found in the Margin of the Copy he made uſe of this Annotation S. P. or. Minorum in two places, viz. over againſt theſe Verſes:

" Prima ſono vox languenti, miſerere dolentum,
" Et ſine, clamabat feſſos ſpirare parumper.

"And Eighty Verſes after, over againſt this:

" At tu implume caput, &c.

"From whence it appears, ſays he, that Pope Sixtus is meant by them, tho' he will not warrant the Truth of it: nam Sixtus, they are his words, inter bonos numeratur Pontifices. Verum nullus malus purgatorio infertur, purique tam pauci decedunt, ut nihil purgandum ſecum ferant, opera enim illorum ſequuntur illos. The ſame Commentator upon the Verſes: At tu implume caput, adds, that the Poet not having ſpecified the Pope, he dares not ſpecify him neither, notwithſtanding the Marginal Note. And three Lines after explaining this Verſe, At niſi feminea tandem prece motus olympi Rex afferret opem, &c. by feminea prece, words which the Devil uſes out of Contempt, he underſtands Divæ Virginis cui, ſays he, ſi de Sixto quarto loquitur, ſtudioſus admodum fuit, ejuſque conceptionis diem celebrari indixit. Badius entangled himſelf for want of minding Chronology. Properly ſpeaking, thoſe Verſes cannot be underſtood of Pope Sixtus, ſince Alphonſus, who is the Hero of the Poem, dying on the 5th of July 1468. remain'd in Purgatory, according to Mantuanus, till the taking of Negropont by Mahomet II. the 12th of July 1470. after which the Poet ſuppoſes that Alphonſus goes from Purgatory to the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, and from thence to Heaven, where he arrived on Eaſter-Day, the Year following 1471. and conſequently near four Months before Sixtus was made Pope, and above thirteen Years before he died. 'Tis therefore more reaſonable to believe that Mantuanus deſign'd to make in general a deſcription of a Proud and Voluptuous Pope, who however having obtain'd before his Death the Remiſſion of his Sins, by the Virgin's Interceſſion, Feminea prece, was Condemn'd in the other World, not to Hell Torments, as ſome Authors have raſhly affirm'd, but only to thoſe of Purgatory. This is what the Devil himſelf owns, whom the Poet introduces ſpeaking to that Pope in theſe words:

" At niſi feminea tandem prece motus olympi
" Rex afferret opem, cum jam ſuſpiria raucus
" Ultima vix traheres, & mors incumberet ori,
" Noſter eras, ego jam ſtratum tibi molle parabam
" Larga ubi terrenas intrat ſentina cloacas,
" Par meritis locus ille tuis, Deus iſte malorum
" Fautor, ut antiquis viduatam civibus aulam
" Et noſtro mæſtam exilio repararet, in aſtra
" Colluviem vulgi humani, paſſimque volentes
" Hic levat, &c.
" Sic illi placet, & placeat, mihi forſitan olim
" Non impune feres, & non ſine vulnere multo
" In loca pervenies quondam mea.

"I don't deny that the Poet, who was naturally ſomewhat Satyrical, has inſerted in his Deſcription ſome ſtrokes relating to the diſorderly Life of ſome Popes and Prelates, whoſe Memory was ſtill freſh. Some curious Perſons have exerciſed their Wit in making their Applications. Some have ſaid that the Author meant Sixtus IV. and others that he meant Paul II. At leaſt, I find in the Edition of Bologna in Folio, of the 11th of June 1502. over againſt theſe Verſes, Prima ſono vox languenti miſerere dolentum, Et ſine, clamabat, &c. this Marginal Note Papa P. And lower over againſt the Verſe, At tu implume caput, there is in the Margin of the ſame Edition F. P. or. minorum, which ſome render, Frater Petrus ordinis Minorum, viz. Peter Riario a Cordelier, and afterwards a Cardinal, Nephew to Pope Sixtus. I confeſs there is nothing in theſe laſt Verſes but what ſuits that Cardinal; but becauſe 'tis certain the Poet brings only two Interlocutors into his Dialogue, viz. a Pope, whoever he be, and a Devil call'd Jupiter, it follows that a third cannot be admitted, and conſequently that this Conjecture, tho' never ſo probable, vaniſhes away.

There is another thing, whereby it may be proved that Baptiſta Mantuanus did not mean Pope Sixtus, viz. that he commends him very much in the ſame Work, wherein he deplores the Corruption of his Age. He Praiſes him ſo far as to ſay, that if that Corruption had not been ſo great as to be paſt Curing, that Pope might have Cured it.

(b) Poſtquam rerum te Roma potentem
Fecit, & obſcuro jubar hoc reſplenduit orbi,
Exanimis virtus, ſcelerum ſub mole ſepulta
Reſpirare parum viſa eſt, & tollere frontem;
Et niſi tot vitiis hæc ſecula noſtra fuiſſent
Depravata, hoc i poterant rectoris habenæ
Errantes frenare rotas, ſed tantus equorum
Impetus aurigam ſuperat, fruſtraque retractans
Lora gubernator ſine lege per invia fertur,
Propterea ſortem doleo mitiſſime Patrum
Sixte tuam, fueras annis melioribus aptus,
Eſt tibi quæ tanto ſatis eſt in principe virtus.

(B) I have inquired into the Origin of this Fact.] In the Year 1686, M. Jurieu Publiſh'd his Prejugez legitimes contre le Papiſme, wherein he ſays among other things, (c) that Sixtus IV. was more Debauched and Vicious than one can think, and a Popiſh writer ſays of him, that a Petition was preſented to him, by the Family of the Cardinal of Santa Lucia, that they might be permitted to perform the act of Sodomy during the three hoteſt Months of the Year, June, July, and Auguſt. He wrote under the Petition, I grant it. 'Tis for him (d) that Baptiſta Mantuanus, who lived at that time, made theſe Verſes.

At tu implume caput cui tanta licentia quondam
Fæmineos fuit in coitus: tua furta putabas
Hic quoque pretextu mitræ impunita relinqui,
Sic meruit tua fœda Venus: ſic prodiga in omnem
Nequitiam, ad virtutis opus tua avara libido,
Illa Dioneæ Cythereia munera conchæ,
Illa pudicitiam quibus impugnare ſolebas,
Et noctes emere & nudæ indulgere paleſtræ.

The Poet introduces a Devil ſpeaking to Sixtus IV. in Hell, and telling him that his Mitre and Bald Pate will not prevent his being Puniſh'd for his Luxury, and (b) Bapt. Mantuanus de calamit. ſuorum tempor. lib. 3.

(c) Jurieu, Prejug. legitim. tom. 1. pag. 246.

(d) Mr. Zuinger Profeſſor of Divinity at Baſil, affirms the ſame thing, pag. 135. of his tractatus de feſto corporis Chriſti Printed in 1685.

Fact, and I ſhall ſay in the Remarks what I think of it. It is highly (C) improbable. If Sixtus IV. had granted ſuch a Petition, he would have fallen ſhort of the

and Lewdneſs, and for the Veneral Sports, upon which he beſtowed ſo many Days and Nights. He quotes for the Petition Weſſelus Groningenſis. Tractatu de Theſauro Eccl. ſ. Indulg. I have been told that a very Honeſt Man, and a very good Proteſtant, having read that particular, went to M. Jurieu in his Study, and deſired him to ſhew him the Author, who relates ſuch a monſtrous thing; and that M. Jurieu ingenuouſly confeſt to him that he had him not, but that it is to be found in many good Writers. That Honeſt Man went away very well ſatisfied with that Anſwer. For my part, I confeſs I ſhou'd not have been contented with it: The Author of the Prejugez ſhou'd have quoted Du Pleſſis Mornay from whom he had that Paſſage; in a word, he ſhou'd have added to the Quotation, and Du Pleſſis Mornai, Myſt. d'Iniquité pag. 557. But notwithſtanding this Addition, I wou'd have made further Inquiries; for we want to be inform'd how Du Pleſſis came to know that Weſſelus relates ſuch a thing. It is ſo ſtrange and ſo improbable, that one ought not to believe it without ſeeing it. I have therefore endeavoured to find out that Book of Weſſelus, and not being able to get it, I have look'd for the Anſwers that were made to Du Pleſſis. Coeffeteau's Anſwer ſeems to me weak; for he only excepts againſt the Witneſs, becauſe he was a Heretick, and becauſe ſuch a Diſpoſition ſhews his great Impudence. It is ſufficient for the Reader, ſays he (a), " to know that Weſſelus was a Heretick. Beſides, 'tis a piece of Impudence to write ſuch a thing, nor can it be imagin'd that any Man ſhou'd have been ſo profligate as to think of what he imputes to Pope Sixtus, and to the Cardinals of St. Sixtus, and Santa Lucia. I cannot apprehend how a Gentleman could write down ſuch filthy things." This Anſwer of Coeffeteau ſhews that he owns the thing to be in Weſſelus, whereby he grants to Du Pleſſis whatever he could deſire. The Jeſuite Greiſerus came off much better; he denies that Weſſelus ſaid ſuch a thing, and proves it (b). 1. Becauſe his Treatiſe of Indulgences quoted by Du Pleſſis, and Publiſh'd by Goldaſtus a good Calviniſt, contains nothing relating to the Petition preſented to the Pope. 2. Becauſe Flacius Illyricus, who took out of Weſſelus's Works whatever he thought conducible to his Deſigns, did not mention what concerns that Petition. From whence it plainly follows, that neither Flacius Illyricus, nor Goldaſtus, two Men throughly verſed in the Knowledge of ſuch Books, found in any Library a Manuſcript of Weſſelus's Works, that contain'd the Fact mention'd by Du Pleſſis. The only Authority that remains, is therefore that of Baleus, who having related that particular (c), quotes for it the Book of Papal Indulgences, written by Weſſelus of Groningen. Not being willing to ſtop here, I further look'd into the Reply to Coeffeteau, made by a very Learned (d) Miniſter, who had as much reading as any Man in his time. Tho' he knew what Greiſerus had anſwered, he replies nothing to it, which ſhews that Greiſerus did not tell a Lie, in what he affirm'd concerning Goldaſtus's Edition, and Illyricus. From whence it ought to be concluded, that 'tis only upon Baleus's Credit, that we are inform'd that Weſſelus mention'd the Petition in Queſtion.

Which being ſo, I ſay that none will mention again ſuch a Petition, but a wretched Rhapſodiſt, who tranſcribes and heaps up without any Judgment, whatever he finds in the Writers of his Party; for if the Author of the Prejugez had conſidered what he did, he would have foreſeen that ſuch a Petition would be denied, and he wou'd have made himſelf ready to maintain the Truth of it. But then he would have quickly found out that the thing could not be maintain'd, and if he had been a Wiſe Man, he had wholly laid aſide that Objection. Let us ſuppoſe an Adverſary, who attacks him upon that Account. Prove to me, will he ſay, that Sixtus IV. granted the Exerciſe of Sodomy for three Months to thoſe who Petition'd him for it. M. Jurieu will anſwer that Weſſelus of Groningen affirms it in his Book concerning Indulgences. 'Tis not true, will the Adverſary reply; here is that Book of Weſſelus, Publiſh'd by a Proteſtant, but that Fact is not to be found in it. Illyricus, another Proteſtant, who had ſo much peruſed Weſſelus, did not find it neither: And therefore you Calumniate Weſſelus. No, will M. Jurieu ſay, I don't Calumniate him, for Baleus aſcribes to him the thing in Queſtion. But the Adverſary will anſwer, if you had common ſenſe, could you believe that the Authority of a Writer, ſo much cried down and deteſted by the Church of Rome, will counterballance Illyricus's Silence, and Goldaſtus's Edition? Why not, will M. Jurieu reply. The Papiſts have ſtruck that Paſſage out of Weſſelus's Book, and therefore Illyricus and Goldaſtus could not find it; but Baleus had a Copy that was not curtailed. I maintain, will the Antagoniſt ſay, that Baleus made uſe of a Copy, into which a Man, who was not better than he, foiſtered that Paſſage, if Baleus himſelf was not the Impoſtor; and after all, you are to ſhew me a Manuſcript of Weſſelus, which you may oppoſe to Goldaſtus's Edition. I don't know what M. Jurieu could reply; and therefore he is like thoſe imprudent Accuſers whom Cicero (e) laugh'd at, who have nothing to ſay when their Aſſertions are denied. Every Wiſe Man will grant that the believing of a Crime is not ſufficient to charge any Body with it, and that one muſt be in a capacity to prove it to thoſe who deny it. Tho' you believe never ſo much that Sixtus IV. was guilty of ſuch an Abomination, you will not affirm it in a Book, if you are a Man of Judgment, and if you have no better Proofs than M. Jurieu. To conclude, I don't pretend that theſe Critical Obſervations concern M. Du Pleſſis Mornay: He wrote in a time when Men were not ſo Nice; and Goldaſtus's Edition (f) was unknown to him.

I had almoſt forgot to obſerve, that none but a very Ignorant or Unſincere Man can maintain that Weſſelus was a Papiſt. If he had been a Papiſt, would Luther have beſtowed this Encomium upon him? (g) Prodiit en Weſſelus, vir admirabilis ingenii, rari & magni ſpiritus, quem & ipſum apparet eſſe vere theodidactum, quales prophetavit fore Chriſtianos Eſaias: neque enim ex hominibus accepiſſe judicari poteſt, ſicut nec ego. Hic ſi mihi antea fuiſſet lectus, poterat hoſtibus meis videri Lutherus omnia ex Weſſelo hauſiſſe, adeo ſpiritus utriuſque conſpirat in unum, &c.

Note, That M. Saldenus a Dutch Miniſter at the Hague, affirms, that according to Agrippa, the Permiſſion I have been ſpeaking of, was granted to a Cardinal by Sixtus IV. Idem hic Sixtus, teſte Agrippa, Cardinali cuidam maſculæ Veneris uſum certis menſibus ſecure indulſit (h). Agrippa ſays no ſuch thing.

(C) It is highly improbable.] My Deſign is not to extenuate the Vices of thoſe, who are ſaid to have preſented that Petition; on the contrary, I aggravate them: For, I maintain, that if thoſe Men had been ſo wicked as to preſent it, and make uſe of the permiſſion granted them, they were too profligate to mind ſuch a permiſſion. You may be ſure that ſuch Men would not forbear plunging themſelves into Vice, till the Pope had granted their Petition. Beſides, was it neceſſary to draw up a Petition in Form, and to expect an Anſwer to it in Writing? Was it not ſufficient to whiſper it in the Ear, without diſcovering ſuch an abominable Impudence to ſeveral Perſons? The moſt profligate Men do commonly obſerve a Decorum, when they cannot offend againſt it without acting needleſly, or to their prejudice. If that Pope had a Mind to grant a Privilege, he might have done it by word of Mouth, without expoſing his Reputation. If he grants it in Writing, the Conſcience of the Petitioners will not be more at reſt for it, and he runs the hazard of being Convicted of an Abominable Action by his own hand. Will a profligate Man, if he has any Cunning, commit ſuch a Fault?

I muſt not forget an Obſervation that is proper enough to ſhew the falſity of that Story. 'Tis ſuppoſed that the Family of the Cardinal of Santa Lucia ask'd leave to perform the act of Sodomy during the

(a) Coeffeteau, Reponſe au Myſtere d'iniquité, pag. 1107.

(b) et in illo libro (de indulgentiis Papalibus) prout tomo primo monarchiæ Goldaſticæ a Goldaſto Calviniſta evulgatus eſt; nullum penitus de hac inexpiabili enormitate verbulum reperitur; nec, quod mireris, Illyricus in Catalogo ejus meminit, eo loco, ubi ex operibus Weſſeli, ea, quæ ad ſuum forum facere credebat, excerpſit. Gretſerus. in examin. Myſterii Pleſſæani, pag. 545.

(c) Cent. 8. cap. 50.

(d) Andrew Rivet. See the ſecond part of his Book pag. 625.

the Prudence and Virtue which Clement VII. diſcovered, when he thought that the three hoteſt Months in the Year, viz. June, July, and Auguſt. There is in it a Miſtake in matter of Fact, which makes the whole Story ſuſpected: 'Tis ſuppoſed that lewd People in Italy are more Tormented with their Paſſion during the greateſt Heat, than at any other time; which is a falſe Suppoſition. If you conſult Phyſicians, they'll tell you, that of all the Seaſons of the Year, Men are leſs inclined to Venery in Summer, becauſe the Heat weakens and enervates them. (a) Coitum promulieres æſtate magis appetunt, quia ſemen earum frigidum tunc calore temporis contemperatur, ac movetur, in viro autem fit exhalatio, conſumptio, ac debilitas a calore aſſiduo: hyemis vero frigore vigoratur, & vegetior ac fortior redditur, ideoque magis appetunt viri hyeme, quam mulieres. If thoſe, who tell this Story, had pitched upon March, April and May, it had been more likely. We are told in the Menagiana of a Woman, who confeſt ſhe would not ingage to be chaſte in May, tho' ſhe pretended to overcome the Temptations of the Fleſh all the other Months of the Year. In France the Month of May is accounted the ſtrongeſt in that reſpect: And becauſe all the Effects of the Spring are earlier in Italy, the Month of April muſt needs be there what the Month of May is in other Countries. I would not have any Conſequences drawn from what we obſerve in Plants and Animals; they might be unexact, becauſe Man's Induſtry affords him a Thouſand Remedies againſt the ſeverity of the Winter, which are unknown to Vegetables, and Beaſts: However, I ſhall take notice of what the Naturaliſts obſerve, that the Spring is the (b) uſual time of Generations.

Nam (c) ſimul ac ſpecies patefacta'ſt verna diei,
Et reſerata viget genitalis aura Favoni;
Aëria primum volucres te, Diva, tuumque
Significant initum percuſſa corda tua vi:
Inde feræ pecudes perſultant pabula læta,
Et rapidos tranant amnes; ita capta lepore,
Illecebriſque tuis omnis natura animantum
Te ſequitur cupide, quo quamque inducere pergis:
Denique per maria, ac monteis fluvioſque rapaceis,
Frondiferaſque domos avium, campoſque virenteis,
Omnibus incutiens blandum per pectora amorem,
Efficis, ut cupide generatim ſæcla propagent.

What you have juſt now read out of the Menagiana, was quoted by me without Book: I had not then time to look for the Page; I have found it ſince, and tho' I did not forget the Senſe of the Author, I am ſenſible that I omitted ſome Circumſtances, that deſerved to be mention'd. Here follows the whole Paſſage. “ (d) One day as we “ were diſcourſing of the Effects of the Month of “ May, which heats anew, not only the Earth, “ and what's on it, but alſo revives Love in the “ very bottom of the Water; after a great deal of “ talk about that Subject, the Marchioneſs de C--- “ L--- Mother of the Marchioneſs de S—— “ told me, I'll ingage to be Chaſte in all the Months “ of the Year, but I cannot be ſure of it in May. „ A Phyſician, who continued the Work of Laurence Joubert about Popular Errors, examins this Queſtion: (e) Whether this Saying be right, Don't ſport much with Women, but drink hard in the Months that have no R. He diſapproves that Rule no farther than as it excludes the Month of May; a Month, ſays ſhe (f), the moſt devoted to Love: And I could eaſily believe that in Ancient times People did not Marry in May, not ſo much out of Jealouſy, or for fear of getting bad Wives, according to the Poet's ſaying, Maio nubunt malæ, as by reaſon of the fury of Love, which is then ſo violent in Women, that they can hardly be ſatisfy'd, and therefore they may think of other Men, to be as Marte viri, Maio mulieres. He had made uſe of theſe words in the fore going Page: “ (g) If therefore the Spring “ is the moſt proper time for ſuch a Sport, it “ ſeems unreaſonable to abſtain from it in all the “ Months that have no R, ſince the Spring begins “ only about the latter end of March, and laſts all “ April and May, which has the true Qualities of “ Heat and Moiſtneſs; and 'tis then that the Pleaſantneſs of the Seaſon fills all ſorts of Animals “ with Love.

“ In furias ignemque ruunt, furor omnibus idem.

“ At this rate the Spring, which is the beſt time of “ the Year for ſuch Performances, would paſs away “ without 'em. „ The Doctrine of Rodericus à Caſtro above mention'd, is that of the Ancient Naturaliſts. One of the Properties of Summer, according to Heſiod, is to weaken the Males, and kindle a greater Love in Females.

Τῆμος (h) πιόταταί τ' αἶγες, καὶ οἶνος ἄριστος,
Μαχλόταται δὲ γυναῖκες, ἀφαυρότατοι δέ τοι ἄνδρες
Εἰσίν.
Tunc pingueſque capræ, & vinum optimum,
Salaciſſimæ vero mulieres, & viri imbecilliſſimi ſunt.

The Poet Alcæus (i) was of the ſame Opinion. Ariſtotle ſuppoſes it to be true, (k) and inquires into the Reaſons of it: The Moderns, who ſo much criticize the Ancient Naturaliſts, have nothing to ſay againſt 'em upon that point. M. Venette, a famous Phyſician, follows their Opinion, and expreſſes himſelf fully to that purpoſe. (l) “ The “ great Heat, ſays he, of July and Auguſt, together with our fiery temper, deſtroys our Natural Heat, waſtes our Spirits, and weakens all the “ parts of our Bodies. It produces a great deal of “ Choler, and many ſharp Excrements, which “ make us weak and faint. If we have then a mind “ to ſport with Women, our ſtrength fails us immediately; and tho' at firſt our Paſſion enables “ us to make ſome efforts, we quickly find our ſelves “ ſo weak and ſo exhauſted, that 'tis impoſſible for “ us to be ſtout Champions. And if we have a “ mind to loſe all our ſtrength, and to be ſick, we “ need only ſport frequently with Women. On “ the contrary, Women are much more laſcivious “ in Summer time. Their Cold and Moiſt temper “ is mended by the ſcorching heat of the Sun—— “ Truly thoſe amorous Paſſions are not well divided. Whilſt Women are fiery, we are languiſhing. Their Paſſion no ſooner begins to appear, “ but ours vaniſhes away, as if Nature intended “ to teach us, that the exceſs of Love is wholly prejudicial to Mens Health. „ This Reflection of M. Venette puts me in mind of a Paſſage in Pliny, wherein, I thought he acknowledged a Providence (m) of Nature in ſuch a diviſion of Paſſions; but having more narrowly conſidered it, I find it ought not to be underſtood in that Senſe: Nay, it ſeems to me that Pliny has committed a Fault, which perhaps no body took notice of; and therefore I ſhall ſet down his Words. (n) Urinam ciere præcipue traditur (ſcolymos) ſanare lichenas & lepras ex aceto. Venerem ſtimulare in Vino, Heſiodo & Alcæo teſtibus: qui florente ea cicadas acerrimi cantus eſſe, & mulieres libidinis avidiſſimas, viroſque in coitum pigerrimos ſcripſere, velut providentia naturæ hoc adjumento tunc valentiſſimo. It ſeems to me that Pliny did not apprehend Heſiod's and Alcæus's meaning; for thoſe two Poets ſay nothing of the Virtue of the Scolymos: They only ſay that 'tis a Plant, which Bloſſoms during the greateſt Heat of the Summer, and when Graſs-hoppers ſing moſt, &c. They deſcribe the Summer by thoſe two Marks, and by ſome others, but without pretending that there is any Relation between 'em as between a Cauſe and its Effect.

To Conclude, we may very well ſay, that thoſe, who mention'd the Petition in queſtion, did wrongly chuſe the three Months of the Diſpenſation. They pitched upon the three hoteſt Months in the Year, whereas they ſhould have pitched upon any other Month. The Spaniards wou'd not have made ſuch a choice, as it appears from theſe words of the Continuator of Laurence Joubert. (o) Celſus ſeems to have Learnedly concluded this Chapter, when he ſays, (p) that amorous Exercißes are not dangerous and pernicious in Winter, that they are very wholſome in the Spring, and neither good in the Summer nor in the Autumn, tho' more tolerable in the Autumn. For one ought wholly to forbear it in the Summer, if it be

(h) Heſiod. opera & dier. v. 585.

(i) See Proclus in Heſiod. ibid. Conſult Menage in Diog. Laertium lib. 2. pag. 352. and Father Hardouin in Plinium tom. 4. p. 205, 206.

(k) Ariſtot. problem. ſect. 4 quæſt. 26.

(l) Venette, Tableau de l'Amour conjugal pag. 180, 181. edit. 1696.

(m) As if Nature had deſign'd thus to divide the Seaſons of Love, to prevent the ill Conſequences of exceſs.

(n) Plin. l. 22. c. 22. p. m. 205, 206.

(o) Bachot ubi ſupra pag. 302, 303.

(p) Venus tum (hieme) non æque pernicioſa eſt—— Neque æſtate vero, neque autumno utilis Venus eſt. Tolerabilior tamen per autumnum: æſtate in totum, ſi fieri poteſt, abſtinendum eſt. Corn. Celſus, l. 1. c. 3. p. 33, 34.

Fact, and I ſhall ſay in the Remarks what I think of it. It is highly (C) improbable. If Sixtus IV. had granted ſuch a Petition, he would have fallen ſhort of the

and Lewdneſs, and for the Venereal Sports, upon which he beſtow'd ſo many Days and Nights. He quotes for the Petition Weſſelus Groningenſis. Tractatu de Theſauro Eccl. ſ. Indulg. I have been told that a very Honeſt Man, and a very good Proteſtant, having read that particular, went to M. Jurieu in his Study, and deſired him to ſhew him the Author, who relates ſuch a monſtrous thing; and that M. Jurieu ingenuouſly confeſt to him that he had him not, but that it is to be found in many good Writers. That Honeſt Man went away very well ſatisfied with that Anſwer. For my part, I confeſs I ſhou'd not have been contented with it: The Author of the Prejugez ſhou'd have quoted Du Pleſſis Mornay from whom he had that Paſſage; in a word, he ſhou'd have added to the Quotation, and Du Pleſſis Mornai, Myſt. d'Iniquité pag. 557. But notwithſtanding this Addition, I wou'd have made further Inquiries; for we want to be inform'd how Du Pleſſis came to know that Weſſelus relates ſuch a thing. It is ſo ſtrange and ſo improbable, that one ought not to believe it without ſeeing it. I have therefore endeavoured to find out that Book of Weſſelus, and not being able to get it, I have look'd for the Anſwers that were made to Du Pleſſis. Coeffeteau's Anſwer ſeems to me weak; for he only excepts againſt the Witneſs, becauſe he was a Heretick, and becauſe ſuch a Dipoſition ſhews his great Impudence. It is ſufficient for the Reader, ſays he (a), "to know that Weſſelus was a Heretick. Beſides, 'tis a piece of Impudence to write ſuch a thing, nor can it be imagin'd that any Man ſhou'd have been ſo profligate as to think of what he imputes to Pope Sixtus, and to the Cardinals of St. Sixtus, and Santa Lucia. I cannot apprehend how a Gentleman could write down ſuch filthy things." This Anſwer of Coeffeteau ſhews that he owns the thing to be in Weſſelus, whereby he grants to Du Pleſſis whatever he could deſire. The Jeſuite Gretſerus came off much better; he denies that Weſſelus ſaid ſuch a thing, and proves it (b). 1. Becauſe his Treatiſe of Indulgences quoted by Du Pleſſis, and Publiſh'd by Goldaſtus a good Calviniſt, contains nothing relating to the Petition preſented to the Pope. 2. Becauſe Flacius Illyricus, who took out of Weſſelus's Works whatever he thought conducible to his Deſigns, did not mention what concerns that Petition. From whence it plainly follows, that neither Flacius Illyricus, nor Goldaſtus, two Men throughly verſed in the Knowledge of ſuch Books, found in any Library a Manuſcript of Weſſelus's Works, that contain'd the Fact mention'd by Du Pleſſis. The only Authority that remains, is therefore that of Baleus, who having related that particular (c), quotes for it the Book of Papal Indulgences, written by Weſſelus of Groningen. Not being willing to ſtop here, I further look'd into the Reply to Coeffeteau, made by a very Learned (d) Miniſter, who had as much reading as any Man in his time. Tho' he knew what Gretſerus had anſwered, he replies nothing to it, which ſhews that Gretſerus did not tell a Lie, in what he affirm'd concerning Goldaſtus's Edition, and Illyricus. From whence it ought to be concluded, that 'tis only upon Baleus's Credit, that we are inform'd that Weſſelus mention'd the Petition in Queſtion.

Which being ſo, I ſay that none will mention again ſuch a Petition, but a wretched Rhapſodiſt, who tranſcribes and heaps up without any Judgment, whatever he finds in the Writers of his Party; for if the Author of the Prejugez had conſidered what he did, he would have foreſeen that ſuch a Petition would be denied, and he wou'd have made himſelf ready to maintain the Truth of it. But then he would have quickly found out that the thing could not be maintain'd, and if he had been a Wiſe Man, he had wholly laid aſide that Objection. Let us ſuppoſe an Adverſary, who attacks him upon that Account. Prove to me, will he ſay, that Sixtus IV. granted the Exerciſe of Sodomy for three Months to thoſe who Petition'd him for it. M. Jurieu will anſwer that Weſſelus of Groningen affirms it in his Book concerning Indulgences. 'Tis not true, will the Adverſary reply; here is that Book of Weſſelus, Publiſh'd by a Proteſtant, but that Fact is not to be found in it. Illyricus, another Proteſtant, who had ſo much peruſed Weſſelus, did not find it neither: And therefore you Calumniate Weſſelus. No, will M. Jurieu ſay, I don't Calumniate him, for Baleus aſcribes to him the thing in Queſtion. But the Adverſary will anſwer, if you had common ſenſe, could you believe that the Authority of a Writer, ſo much cried down and deteſted by the Church of Rome, will counterballance Illyricus's Silence, and Goldaſtus's Edition? Why not, will M. Jurieu reply. The Papiſts have ſtruck that Paſſage out of Weſſelus's Book, and therefore Illyricus and Goldaſtus could not find it; but Baleus had a Copy that was not curtailed. I maintain, will the Antagoniſt ſay, that Baleus made uſe of a Copy, into which a Man, who was not better than he, foiſtered that Paſſage, if Baleus himſelf was not the Impoſtor; and after all, you are to ſhew me a Manuſcript of Weſſelus, which you may oppoſe to Goldaſtus's Edition. I don't know what M. Jurieu could reply; and therefore he is like thoſe imprudent Accuſers whom Cicero (e) laugh'd at, who have nothing to ſay when their Aſſertions are denied. Every Wiſe Man will grant that the believing of a Crime is not ſufficient to charge any Body with it, and that one muſt be in a capacity to prove it to thoſe who deny it. Tho' you believe never ſo much that Sixtus IV. was guilty of ſuch an Abomination, you will not affirm it in a Book, if you are a Man of Judgment, and if you have no better Proofs than M. Jurieu. To conclude, I don't pretend that theſe Critical Obſervations concern M. Du Pleſſis Mornay: He wrote in a time when Men were not ſo Nice; and Goldaſtus's Edition (f) was unknown to him.

I had almoſt forgot to obſerve, that none but a very Ignorant or Unſincere Man can maintain that Weſſelus was a Papiſt. If he had been a Papiſt, would Luther have beſtowed this Encomium upon him? (g) Prodiit en Weſſelus, vir admirabilis ingenii, rari & magni ſpiritus, quem & ipſum apparet eſſe vere theodidactum, quales prophetavit fore Chriſtianos Eſaias: neque enim ex hominibus accepiſſe judicari poteſt, ſicut nec ego. Hic ſi mihi antea fuiſſet lectus, poterat hoſtibus meis videri Lutherus omnia ex Weſſelo hauſiſſe, adeo ſpiritus utriuſque conſpirat in unum, &c.

Note, That M. Saldenus a Dutch Miniſter at the Hague, affirms, that according to Agrippa, the Permiſſion I have been ſpeaking of, was granted to a Cardinal by Sixtus IV. Idem hic Sixtus, teſte Agrippa, Cardinali cuidam maſculæ Veneris uſum certis menſibus ſecure indulſit (h). Agrippa ſays no ſuch thing.

(C) It is highly improbable.] My Deſign is not to extenuate the Vices of thoſe, who are ſaid to have preſented that Petition; on the contrary, I aggravate them: For, I maintain, that if thoſe Men had been ſo wicked as to preſent it, and make uſe of the permiſſion granted them, they were too profligate to mind ſuch a permiſſion. You may be ſure that ſuch Men would not forbear plunging themſelves into Vice, till the Pope had granted their Petition. Beſides, was it neceſſary to draw up a Petition in Form, and to expect an Anſwer to it in Writing? Was it not ſufficient to whiſper it in the Ear, without diſcovering ſuch an abominable Impudence to ſeveral Perſons? The moſt profligate Men do commonly obſerve a Decorum, when they cannot offend againſt it without acting needleſly, or to their prejudice. If that Pope had a Mind to grant a Privilege, he might have done it by word of Mouth, without expoſing his Reputation. If he grants it in Writing, the Conſcience of the Petitioners will not be more at reſt for it, and he runs the hazard of being Convicted of an Abominable Action by his own hand. Will a profligate Man, if he has any Cunning, commit ſuch a Fault?

I muſt not forget an Obſervation that is proper enough to ſhew the falſity of that Story. 'Tis ſuppoſed that the Family of the Cardinal of Santa Lucia ask'd leave to perform the act of Sodomy during the

(a) Coeffeteau, Reponſe au Myſtere d'iniquité, pag. 1407.

(b) Et in illo libro (de indulgentiis Papalibus) prout tomo primo monarchiæ Goldaſticæ a Goldaſto Calviniſta evulgatus eſt; nullum penitus de hac inexpiabili enormitate verbulum reperitur; nec, quod mireris, Illyricus in Catalogo ejus meminit, eo loco, ubi ex operibus Weſſeli, ea, quæ ad ſuum forum facere credebat, excerpſit. Gretſerus. in examin. Myſterii Pleſſæani, pag. 545.

(c) Cent. 8. cap. 50.

(d) Andrew Rivet. See the ſecond part of his Book pag. 625.

the Prudence and Virtue which Clement VII. diſcovered, when he thought that the three hoteſt Months in the Year, viz. June, July, and Auguſt. There is in it a Miſtake in matter of Fact, which makes the whole Story ſuſpected: 'Tis ſuppoſed that lewd People in Italy are more Tormented with their Paſſion during the greateſt Heat, than at any other time; which is a falſe Suppoſition. If you conſult Phyſicians, they'll tell you, that of all the Seaſons of the Year, Men are leſs inclined to Venery in Summer, becauſe the Heat weakens and enervates them. (a) Coitum porro mulieres æſtate magis appetunt, quia ſemen earum frigidum tunc calore temporis contemperatur, ac movetur, in viro autem fit exhalatus, conſumptio, ac debilitas à calore admiſſa: Hyemis vero frigore vigoratur, & vegetior ac fortior redditur, ideoque magis appetunt viri hyeme, quam mulieres. If thoſe, who tell this Story, had pitched upon March, April and May, it had been more likely. We are told in the Menagiana of a Woman, who confeſt ſhe would not ingage to be chaſte in May, tho' ſhe pretended to overcome the Temptations of the Fleſh all the other Months of the Year. In France the Month of May is accounted the ſtrongeſt in that reſpect: And becauſe all the Effects of the Spring are earlier in Italy, the Month of April muſt needs be there what the Month of May is in other Countries. I would not have any Conſequences drawn from what we obſerve in Plants and Animals; they might be unexact, becauſe Man's Induſtry affords him a Thouſand Remedies againſt the ſeverity of the Winter, which are unknown to Vegetables, and Beaſts: However, I ſhall take notice of what the Naturaliſts obſerve, that the Spring is the (b) uſual time of Generations.

Nam (c) ſimul ac ſpecies patefacta'ſt verna diei,
Et reſerata viget genitalis aura Favoni;
Aëriæ primum volucres te, Diva, tuumque
Significant initum percuſſæ corda tua vi:
Inde feræ pecudes perſultant pabula læta,
Et rapidos tranant amnes; ita capta lepore,
Illecebriſque tuis omnis natura animantum
Te ſequitur cupide, quo quamque inducere pergis:
Denique par maria, ac monteis fluvioſque rapaceis,
Frundiferaſque domos avium, campoſque virenteis,
Omnibus incutiens blandum per pectora amorem,
Efficis, ut cupide generatim ſæcla propagent.

What you have juſt now read out of the Menagiana, was quoted by me without Book: I had not then time to look for the Page; I have found it ſince, and tho' I did not forget the Senſe of the Author, I am ſenſible that I omitted ſome Circumſtances, that deſerved to be mention'd. Here follows the whole Paſſage. “ (d) One day as we “ were diſcourſing of the Effects of the Month of “ May, which heats anew, not only the Earth, “ and what's on it, but alſo revives Love in the “ very bottom of the Water; after a great deal of “ talk about that Subject, the Marchioneſs de C--- “ L--- Mother of the Marchioneſs de S—— “ told me, I'll ingage to be Chaſte in all the Months “ of the Year, but I cannot be ſure of it in May.„ A Phyſician, who continued the Work of Laurence Joubert about Popular Errors, examins this Queſtion: (e) Whether this Saying be right, Don't ſport much with Women, but drink hard in the Months that have no R. He diſapproves that Rule no farther than as it excludes the Month of May; a Month, ſays ſhe (f), the moſt devoted to Love: And I could eaſily believe that in Ancient times People did not Marry in May, not ſo much out of Jealouſy, or for fear of getting bad Wives, according to the Poet's ſaying, Maio nubunt malæ, as by reaſon of the fury of Love, which is then ſo violent in Women, that they can hardly be ſatisfy'd, and therefore they may think of other Men, to be as Marte viri, Maio mulieres. He had made uſe of theſe words in the foregoing Page: “ (g) If therefore the Spring “ is the moſt proper time for ſuch a Sport, it “ ſeems unreaſonable to abſtain from it in all the “ Months that have no R, ſince the Spring begins “ only about the latter end of March, and laſts all “ April and May, which has the true Qualities of “ Heat and Moiſtneſs; and 'tis then that the Plea- “ fatneſs of the Seaſon fills all ſorts of Animals “ with Love.

“ In furias ignemque ruunt, furor omnibus idem.

“ At this rate the Spring, which is the beſt time of “ the Year for ſuch Performances, would paſs away “ without 'em.„ The Doctrine of Rodericus à Caſtro above mention'd, is that of the Ancient Naturaliſts. One of the Properties of Summer, according to Heſiod, is to weaken the Males, and kindle a greater Love in Females.

Τῆμος (h) πιόταταί τ' αἶγες, καὶ οἶνος ἄριστος,
Μαχλόταται δὲ γυναῖκες, ἀφαυρότατοι δέ τοι ἄνδρες
Εἰσίν.
Tunc pinguiſque capræ, & vinum optimum,
Salaciſſimæ vero mulieres, & viri imbecilliſſimi ſunt.

The Poet Alcæus (i) was of the ſame Opinion. Ariſtotle ſuppoſes it to be true, (k) and inquires into the Reaſons of it: The Moderns, who ſo much criticize the Ancient Naturaliſts, have nothing to ſay againſt 'em upon that point. M. Venette, a famous Phyſician, follows their Opinion, and expreſſes himſelf fully to that purpoſe. (l) “ The “ great Heat, ſays he, of July and Auguſt, together “ with our fiery temper, deſtroys our Natural Heat, waſtes our Spirits, and weakens all the “ parts of our Bodies. It produces a great deal of “ Choler, and many ſharp Excrements, which “ make us weak and faint. If we have then a mind “ to ſport with Women, our ſtrength fails us immediately; and tho' at firſt our Paſſion enables “ us to make ſome efforts, we quickly find our ſelves “ ſo weak and ſo exhauſted, that 'tis impoſſible for “ us to be ſtout Champions. And if we have a “ mind to loſe all our ſtrength, and to be ſick, we “ need only ſport frequently with Women. On “ the contrary, Women are much more laſcivious “ in Summer time. Their Cold and Moiſt temper “ is mended by the ſcorching heat of the Sun—— “ Truly thoſe amorous Paſſions are not well divided. Whilſt Women are fiery, we are languiſhing. Their Paſſion no ſooner begins to appear, “ but ours vaniſhes away, as if Nature intended “ to teach us, that the exceſs of Love is wholly prejudicial to Mens Health.„ This Reflection of M. Venette puts me in mind of a Paſſage in Pliny, wherein, I thought he acknowledged a Providence (m) of Nature in ſuch a diviſion of Paſſions; but having more narrowly conſidered it, I find it ought not to be underſtood in that Senſe: Nay, it ſeems to me that Pliny has committed a Fault, which perhaps no body took notice of; and therefore I ſhall ſet down his Words. (n) Urinam ciere præcipue traditur (ſcolymos) ſanare lichenas & lepras ex aceto. Venerem ſtimulare in Vino, Heſiodo & Alcæo teſtibus: qui florente ea cicadas acerrimi cantus eſſe, & mulieres libidinis avidiſſimas, viroſque in coitum pigerrimos ſcripſere, velut providentia naturæ hoc adjumento tunc valentiſſimo. It ſeems to me that Pliny did not apprehend Heſiod's and Alcæus's meaning; for thoſe two Poets ſay nothing of the Virtue of the Scolymos: They only ſay that 'tis a Plant, which Bloſſoms during the greateſt Heat of the Summer, and when Graſs-hoppers ſing moſt, &c. They deſcribe the Summer by thoſe two Marks, and by ſome others, but without pretending that there is any Relation between 'em as between a Cauſe and its Effect.

To Conclude, we may very well ſay, that thoſe, who mention'd the Petition in queſtion, did wrongly chuſe the three Months of the Diſpenſation. They pitched upon the three hoteſt Months in the Year, whereas they ſhould have pitched upon any other Month. The Spaniards wou'd not have made ſuch a choice, as it appears from theſe words of the Continuator of Laurence Joubert. (o) Celſus ſeems to have Learnedly concluded this Chapter, when he ſays, (p) that amorous Exerciſes are not dangerous and pernicious in Winter, that they are very wholſome in the Spring, and neither good in the Summer nor in the Autumn, tho' more tolerable in the Autumn. For one ought wholly to forbear it in the Summer, if it be poſſible.

(h) Heſiod. opera & dier. v. 583.

(i) See Proclus in Heſiod. ibid. Conſult Menage in Diog. Laertium lib. 9. pag. 352. and Father Hardouin in Plinium tom. 4. p. 205, 206.

(k) Ariſtot. problem. ſect. 4 quæſt. 26.

(l) Venette, Tableau de l'amour conjugal pag. 180, 181. edit. 1696.

(m) As if Nature had deſign'd thus to divide the Seaſons of Love, to prevent the ill Conſequences of exceſs.

(n) Plin. l. 22. c. 22. p. m. 205, 206.

(o) Bachot ubi ſupra pag. 302, 303.

(p) Venus tum (hieme) non æque pernicioſa eſt—— Neque æſtate vero, neque autumno utilis Venus eſt. Tolerabilior tamen per autumnum: æſtate in totum, ſi fieri poteſt, abſtinendum eſt. Corn. Celſus, l. 1. c. 3. p. 33, 34.

that (C△) ſome Ladies deſir'd he would permit 'em to do an Unlawful thing. 'Tis ſaid that Sixtus died in the Year 1484. of the Grief he conceiv'd, when he heard (D) that a Peace was concluded between the Duke of Ferrara and the Venetians. He loved the War, and he has been look'd upon as the Diſturber of the Repoſe poſſible. The Spaniards ſeem to have better obſerv'd this common (a) Saying, than we have, by excluding May, and reckoning only Three Months: Junio, Julio, y Auguſto, Dieta olgueta & quatre nudios in braguetta.

If any one ſhould ſay that ſome Reaſons, well known at Rome to debauched People, did perhaps occaſion the asking of a Diſpenſation for the three hotteſt Months in the Year, he ſhould deſerve no Anſwer. Such a general Diſcourſe ought neither to be examin'd nor minded; and unleſs a better Reaſon be alledged, the firſt who mention'd that Petition, will juſtly be accounted one of thoſe Satyrical Writers, who know not how to obſerve the Rules of Probability. We may apply to him (b) theſe words of an Ancient Father, voluntatem eum habere mentiendi, artem fingendi non habere: he is very willing to tell a Lie, but he does not underſtand the Art of Lying. This does not concern Weſſelus; for firſt, 'tis not known whether he mention'd that Petition; that Fact is not to be found in his Books that are extant: And it may be preſum'd that if he ſaid ſomething of it, 'twas upon the Credit of others. He quoted ſome body, or at leaſt he made uſe of this Clauſe, fama eſt, fertur, It has been reported, 'tis ſaid, &c. However it be, I declare I don't take him to be the firſt Author of that Story. Many Controverſiſts have been impoſed upon by the Name of ſuch a Wiſe and Eminent Divine; but ſince they knew not how he ſpoke of it, whether he gave ſome proofs of it, or none at all, whether it was upon a hear-ſay, or upon the Teſtimony of grave Men, they have been too haſty in their Judgment, and in their Quotations. 'Tis particularly about Libels diſperſed againſt ſuch Perſons as Sixtus IV. that one ought to be cautious. He had diſturbed the publick Peace of Italy; he had Excommunicated the Republicks of Venice and Florence, and engaged in a violent War with both. There was a great Corruption in his Court; his Relations made themſelves Odious by their Ambition and Debauchery: And therefore it was to be expected that many Paſquinades would come out (c) againſt him. Any Venetian or Florentin, skill'd in the Art of Slandering, could not fail to pleaſe his Sovereigns and his Fellow-Citizens, by uſing his Talent againſt the Pope. He might expect that his Satyrical Strokes, whether true or falſe, would be very acceptable: 'Tis a Conſolation for thoſe who fear or hate a Prince, to ſee him abuſed in Libels; they believe every thing, and therefore Satyrical Writers do not much care to obſerve the Rules of Probability, being ſure to make People believe the groſſeſt Lies. Which they are particularly ſure of, when they can juſtly charge others with ill Actions: Thoſe Truths ſerve as a falſe Conduct (d) to the Falſities that go along with them. This Obſervation might be of Uſe at all times to thoſe, who are not willing to confound well-grounded Slanders with malicious Calumnies. But to ſpeak only of Sixtus IV. I obſerve that if there was any ground for the Petition in queſtion, Weſſelus would not be the only Writer that ſaid ſomething of it. How could he have found out what was unknown to the Satyrical Writers of Venice and Florence?

(C△) Clement VII. diſcovered, when he thought that ſome Ladies deſired he would permit 'em to do an Unlawful thing.] This Particular may be ſeen in a Chronicle; 'tis not a Story preſerved by Tradition. It may be found in the Annals of Aquitain, Publiſh'd (e) ſeveral times by John Boucher, who lived at that time. He ſpeaks of an Interview between Clement VII. and Francis I. at Marſeilles in 1533. "(f) During that Interview between the "Pope and the King, where all the Blood of "France was, and many Princes and Lords, and "alſo the Queen of France and her Retinue, there "was a common Report, that a pretty Trick had "been plaid to three Ladies of the Queen, who "were Virtuous, Chaſte, and Devout Women. "Thoſe three Ladies, who were all Widows, having a weakly and ſickly Conſtitution, deſired to "have a Licenſe from the Pope to eat Fleſh upon "prohibited Days; and in order to it, they made "their Application to the Duke of Albania, his "near Relation, who promiſed to ſpeak to the "Pope about it, and then ſent for 'em to come "to the Pope. This Duke, who was very familiar with thoſe Ladies, having a mind to give "ſome ſport to the Pope and to the King, told the "Pope, Holy Father, there are three Widows young enough to get Children, whom I take "to have ſome Luſtful Temptations, becauſe they "have deſired me to beg of you that they may be "allowed to make uſe of a Man when they want "one. How, Couſin, ſaid the Pope, it were againſt "God's Commandment, from which I can diſpenſe "no body? I beſeech you, Holy Father, reply'd the "Duke, to hear 'em, and to make this Remonſtrance "to them. Whereupon the Ladies came into the "Hall where the Pope was, and after they had kiſſed his Feet, one of 'em told him, Holy Father, "we have deſired the Duke of Albania to beg a favour of you, and to repreſent to you our Age, and "weak Conſtitution. Daughters, ſaid the Pope, "your Requeſt is not reaſonable, for I ſhould act "againſt God's Commandment. The Widows not "knowing what the Duke of Albania had told him, "anſwered, Holy Father, be pleas'd to give us ſuch "a Diſpenſation, three times in a Week, at leaſt in "Lent. How, reply'd the Pope, muſt I give you "leave to commit Fornication? I ſhould be damn'd "if I did it. Whereupon the Ladies were ſenſible, that there was ſome Jeſt in the matter; and "one of 'em told him, We beg a Diſpenſation to "eat Fleſh upon prohibited Days. The Duke of "Albania told 'em, I thought, Ladies, you meant "live Fleſh. The Pope perceiving the Jeſt, ſmiled, and told the Duke, Couſin, you make the "Ladies bluſh; when the Queen comes to hear of "this, ſhe'll be diſpleas'd with it. The King, the "Queen, and the Princes, were immediately told "of it, and liked the Humour very well." You'll find this Adventure in Brantome's Memoirs, towards the end of the Second Volume (g) of his Dames Galantes, where it is related more at large than in the Annals of Aquitain. Brantome knew not that this Story was to be found in that Book; for he concludes thus: (h) I have been told the Names of theſe three Ladies, viz. The Lady de Chateau-briant, the Lady Chaſtillon, and the Widow of the Bayliff of Caen, all very virtuous Women. I have this Story from the Old Courtiers.

(D) Of the Grief he conceived when he heard that a Peace.] He had declared War againſt the Republick of Venice, in favour of the Duke of Ferrara, and had a mind to keep it up; but his Allies forſook him, and made a Peace without conſulting him. The Grief he conceived upon it increaſed his Gout, and carry'd him off within Five Days. What a Vicar of the Prince of Peace, who ſays in his Goſpel, Bleſſed are the Peace-Makers, (i) Quum pacem a ſociis præter ejus voluntatem & conſenſum fieri conſpiceret, ex animi uti putatur dolore, podagra inſuper aggravante qua in ultimis annis maxime laborabat, in quintum diem expiravit. He deſerved the Epitaphs, which the Poets (k) made upon him.

I will not forget a fine Paſſage of Alcyonius. (l) Ad id adductus videri poterat Ferdinandus a Xyſto Pont. Max. qui & officii Pontificii, & religionis & Dei oblitus non ſecus in Italia bella excitare ſolebat atque illa Aſia aut Africa provincia eſſet, in qua Turcæ & Pœni regnarent, non pars Europæ ex flore clariſſimorum virorum conſtans, cujus princeps eſſet pontifex maximus qui moderatiſſime & ſapientiſſime clavum tanti imperii tenere & gubernacula Reip. tractare in maximo curſu & fluctibus deberet. Dein eodem Xyſto ſi non ſuaſore & impulſore certe approbatore Veneti terra & aquis arma intulerunt Herculi Ferrarienſi Princi-

(a) Viz. that which I have mention'd above.

(b) 'Tis obſerved in the 9. Volume of the Morale pratique des Jeſuites p. 159. that this ſaying was applied to the Jeſuite Briſacier.

(c) Non modo omnes Italiæ potentatus in eo (Venetos) concitavit, ſed etiam veluti Clemens 6. alias fecerat, illos execravit, interdixit, & omnibus dignitatibus privavit. Nec quoad vixit, illis abſolutionis beneficium impendere voluit. Ex quo multos detractores habuit. Nauclerus gener. 50. fol. m. 979.

(d) Note, that on the other hand this mixture of Truths and Falſities is favourable to thoſe who make an Apology for Perſons that are defamed; for when the Writer of a Libel is convicted of Falſhood upon ſeveral Points, he becomes ſuſpected of Calumny in every thing elſe.

(e) He ſays Fol. 270. verſo edition of Poitiers 1557. that they were Printed at Poictiers the third time in the beginning of the Year 1535.

(f) Bouchet Annales d'Aquitaine fol. m. 267.

Repose of Italy. Agrippa ſays a thing of him (E) which deſerves to be mention'd. You may ſee in * Moreri that it has been ſaid that this Pope got himſelf admitted into the Houſe of la Rovere, which was very Illuſtrious in Piedmont. That Family was in Poſſeſſion of a ſtrange (F) Prerogative. All Authors are agreed that Sixtus IV. was a Learned Man. He took his Doctor's Degree at Padua, and read publick Lectures at Bologna, Pavia, Siena, Florence and Perugia. Afterwards he was promoted to ſeveral Dignities: He was made firſt of all Provincial of the Province of Liguria, and then Procurator General of his Order at the Court of Rome, afterwards Vicar General of Italy, and at laſt General of the Cordeliers. After thoſe Preferments he received a Cardinal's Hat. He got a great Reputation by (G) his Works, and being raiſed to the Papal See he made it appear that he was ſtill a Lover of Learning; for he ſet up the Library of the Vatican, and gave the Direction of it to the Learned Platina, and allowed a Yearly Penſion to ſeveral other Perſons, who were to help him in taking care of the Books, and tranſcribing Greek, Latin, and Hebrew Manuſcripts †. He ordered β the ſame Platina to write the Hiſtory of the Popes. It has been obſerved that he proved more Liberal to his Siſters Sons than to his Brothers Sons, and that among his Siſters Sons he particularly favoured (H) Peter and Jerome Riario. Which wou'd not be an odd thing, as 'tis thought, but rather a very Natural one, were it true that he was their Father, as ſome writers will have it. He was the firſt γ who Inſtituted the Feaſt of the Conception and Preſentation of the Holy Virgin, and likewiſe that of St. Anne and St. Joſeph, and that of Francis

* Upon the word Rovere.

† Taken from Ghilini teatro d'huomini letterati tom. 1. pag. 93.

β Platina epist. dedicat. ad Sixtum IV.

γ Vita Sixti IV. ab eodem Platina fol. m. 364.

Principi (a). Take notice that I have been inform'd by M. de la Monnoie, that the Firſt of the Three Epitaphs, which I have mention'd above, after Du Pleſſis Mornay, does not concern Pope Sixtus, and that it contains two Verſes of Sannazarius againſt Pope Alexander VI; that one ought to read Sextum and not Sixtum, and that Sannazarius did rather praiſe Sixtus than blame him, as it appears from this Epigram againſt the ſame Alexander. Viſuram ſe iterum Sixtum cum Roma putaret, Pro Sixto Sextum vidit & ingemuit.

(E) Agrippa ſays a thing.] Du Pleſſis relates it thus. Among the Pimps of theſe latter times, ſays Agrippa, Sixtus IV. was moſt remarkable, who built a Noble Bawdy-houſe at Rome ——— The Curtezans of Rome pay a Giulio every Week to the Pope, and this Yearly income does ſometimes amount to above Twenty Thouſand Ducats; and that Office is ſo particularly appropriated to the Chief Eccleſiaſticks, that the Rent of Pimping is reckon'd part of the Revenues of the Church. For, ſays he, I heard formerly the Computation made in the following manner: He has two Benefices, a Living of Twenty Ducats, a Priory of Forty, and three Whores in the Bawdy Houſe, who bring him Twenty Giulio's every Week (b). Thoſe, who deſire to ſee Agrippa's Words, need only read the following Paſſage. Sed & recentioribus temporibus Sixtus Pontifex Maximus Romæ nobile admodum lupanar extruxit ——— Multi alii magiſtratus ——— in civitatibus ſuis lupanaria conſtruunt foventque, nonnihil ex meretricio quæſtu etiam ærario ſuo accumulantes emolumenti: quod quidem in Italia non rarum eſt, ubi etiam Romanæ ſcorta in ſingulas hebdomadas Julium pendent Pontifici, qui cenſus annuus nonnunquam viginti millia ducatos excedit, adeoque Eccleſiæ procerum id munus eſt, ut unà cum Eccleſiarum proventibus etiam lenociniorum numerent mercedem. Sic enim ego illos ſupputantes aliquando audivi; Habet, inquientes, ille duo beneficia, unum curatum aureorum viginti, alterum prioratum ducatorum quadraginta, & tres putanas in burdello, quæ reddunt ſingulis hebdomadibus viginti (c).

(F) A ſtrange Prerogative.] It was a right over the Virginity of the Maids, whom their Vaſſals Married. A Cardinal of that Houſe threw into the Fire the Patent of that Privilege. Cotal (d) coſtume de pagani & da gentili, fu gia in Piemonte, & il Cardinale Illuſtriſſimo Hieronimo della Rouere mi diceva haver egli ſteſſo abbrucciato il privilegio, che havea di cio la ſua Caſa (e). They are the Words of an Author, who lived in the beginning of the XVII. Century. See the Margin (†).

(G) By his Works.] Here follow the Titles of 'em. De ſanguine Chriſti liber: De futuris contingentibus: Commentaris de Potentia Dei: De Conceptione B. Virginis: Contra errores cujuſdam Carmelitæ Bononienſis qui aſſirmabat Deum ſua omnipotentia, damnatum hominem ſalvare non poſſe. He writ alſo a Book to ſhew that Thomas Aquinas and Scotus, who differ ſo much in words, are at the Bottom of the ſame Opinion (f).

(H) He particularly favoured Peter and Jerome Riario. It wou'd not be an odd thing ——— were it true that he was their Father, as ſome Writers will have it.] " (g) He had nine Nephews, viz. five, " whoſe Name was de la Rovere as well as his, " and they were the Sons of his three Brothers de" ceaſed, and four who went by the Names of Ria" rio, Baſſo, and Sanſoni, the three Families into " which his Siſters, and one of his Neeces, had been " Married ——— (h) It was not barely the exceſs " of the Pope's Ambition that made it intolerable, " ſince it was Attended with a kind of oddneſs, " grounded neither upon his Intereſt nor upon Pro" bability; for tho' 'twas likely that Sixtus wou'd " ſhew more kindneſs to the five Nephews I have " juſt now mention'd, than to the other four, who " were only related to him by his Siſters Side; " tho' he had all the Reaſon in the World to do " it, and tho' Julian the Eldeſt of 'em all was en" dowed with all the wonderfull Qualities, which " made afterwards his Pontificate ſo Famous under " the Name of Julius II. 'tis certain he never " cou'd obtain of his Uncle that he ſhould appear " like the head of the Houſe of la Rovere, or " perform the Functions of Cardinal Nephew, " or that his Brother or his three Couſins ſhou'd " have what was denied him. In a word, Sixtus ap" pear'd all along more kind to his Siſters Chil" dren, eſpecially to thoſe of the Eldeſt, who had " two Sons, viz. Peter and Jerome Riario. Peter " had been a Cordelier as well as his Uncle, and " perhaps deſerved upon that Account to have a " greater ſhare in his Uncle's Affection. He was " made Cardinal on the ſame day that Julian " was; but he had this Advantage above him, " that he was declared Cardinal Nephew, and ob" tain'd the Biſhoprick of Treviſo, which Julian " had demanded. Afterwards the moſt conſidera" ble Benefices, that came to be Vacant, were " beſtowed upon him; and he became ſo Powerful " that he had a greater Train than the reſt of " the Sacred College ——— (i) His Brother Je" rome ——— whom the Pope deſign'd to make " his chief Heir, &c ". Machiavel will tell us that Peter and Jerome Riario were call'd Sixtus's Nephews, only to conceal the Relation of Paternity under ſuch a Name. Fu queſto Ponteſice, ſaith he, (k) il primo che cominciaſſe a moſtrare quanto un Ponteſice poteva, & come molte coſe chiamate per

(a) Petrus ... ponius ... nelice ... gro ... teriore ... l. 1. ... rio.

(b) Ibid. ... 557.

(c) Agrip- ... de va- ... te ... tiar. ... tom. ... Ope- ... pag.

(d) The ... been ... ing of ..., which ... Holme ... ng of ... land ... eſta- ... 94.

(e) Boni- ... Van- ... ni, ... erti- ... ti Po- ... tom. ... pag.

(f) Taken from Ghilini, Teatro parte 2. p. 94.

(g) Varillas Anecd. de Florence pag. 67.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 68.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 69.

(k) Machiavelli delle hiſtorie Fiorentine lib. 7. pag. m. 289.

(†) Mr. Pars Miniſter of Katwick ſays in a Dutch Book, I... ..., Katwijkſe outheden, that is antiquities of Katwic, pag. ... that ſome Lords in Holland (he Names ſome of 'em) had ... a Privilege, and that it was ſuppreſt by the States who gave ... Money for the ſuppreſſion of it.

Francis of Aſſiſi. He Canonized Bonaventura ‖, and appointed him a Feaſt ‡ among thoſe of the Apoſtolical Palace. He reſtored a Devotion invented by St. Dominick, which was interrupted, viz. that of the Roſary and the Pſalter of the Holy Virgin †. 'Tis a miſtake to ſay that he was the firſt who ordered that the Jubile ſhou'd be Celebrated once in 25 Years. That Ordinance was made by Paul II. his Predeceſſor in the Year 1470. He only confirm'd it, and was the firſt who put it in Execution in the Year 1475 §. Polydorus Virgil places him among the Inventers of things, whereby he does him little Honour, for he aſcribes to him the firſt (I) Creation of many Offices that were bought: Which occaſion'd a diſorder that encreaſed daily. All Authors are not agreed that this Pontif was a Man of a mean (K) Extraction. If he was, he may be properly alledged to confirm what I have ſaid in another place, that the moſt Haughty and daring Men may be Born among the dregs of the People; for his Haughtineſs was very great: The Florentins found it ſo by Experience; for they cou'd not be reconcil'd to him, but by ſubmitting ¶ to the moſt ſhameful Humiliations. The Satiſfaction he required of 'em was very mortifying. 'Tis in vain for Father Bonanni to ſay that John Michael Brutus has no Reaſon to complain of the hard Anſwer that was made by that Pope to their Deputies: What he relates and what he confeſſes is a ſufficient Proof of the great Mortification they went thro' ‖.

‖ Ibid.

‡ Bonanni in numiſm. Pontificum tom. 1. pag. 91.

† Id. ib.

§ Id. ib. pag. 98.

¶ In the Year 1480.

‖ See Bonanni ubi ſupra pag. 101, & ſeq.

SMIGLECIUS

per l'adietro errori, ſi potevano ſotto la Pontificale autorità naſcondere. Haveva tra la ſua famiglia Piero e Girolamo, i quali (ſecondo che ciaſcuno credeva) erano ſuo figliuoli, nondimeno ſotto altri più honeſti nomi gli palliava. John Michael Brutus affirms that Sixtus begot thoſe two Boys when he was but a Cordelier, and had 'em bred up under the Name of his Nephews to conceal his Fault. (a) Ab eo cum adhuc ageret in Franciſcanorum familia liberos ſuſceptos fuiſſe: ac quo minor Parentis infamia eſſet, propinquorum honeſtiori nomine liberaliter quidem & honeſte, ſed non tamen in ſpem tantam educatos.

Some ſay he was neither the Father nor the Uncle of Peter and James Riario, and that they were only his Minions. Coeffeteau put that ſenſe upon the Parentheſis of a Paſſage above quoted, which contains theſe three Words, not without Myſtery. Theſe are Coeffeteau's Words. (b) Du Pleſſis pretends there was an Abominable Myſtery in that Love, which is a thing that a Man of Honour ſhou'd have no thought of. I own it, replies Rivet, " (c) in " order to approve it, and much leſs to delight
" in it; but an Honeſt Man may take notice of " it, and deteſt it in a ſinful Man, and it will no
" more defile his Imagination than the Words of " the Scripture concerning the Sodomites, or thoſe
" of St. Paul ſpeaking of the Heathens, in the firſt
" Chapter of his Epiſtle to the Romans. Certainly " Volaterranus's Words, together with that extra" ordinary Indulgence, may raiſe a ſuſpicion in the " moſt Charitable Perſons; for ſpeaking of thoſe
" two Men, he ſays, Petrum à puero, una cum Hiero-
" nymo fratre, SIBI educaverat.

(I) Polydorus Virgil ——— aſcribes to him the firſt Creation of many Offices that were bought.] See the 2d Chapter of the 8th Book de inventoribus rerum, out of which I ſhall ſet down the following Paſſage. " Pius II.——— following the Example " of John XXII. Created ſome Abbreviators, and " made it an Office, which was bought as well
" as the reſt. Afterwards Paul II. being a con-
" ſcientious Man turn'd out thoſe Blood-Suckers;
" but Sixtus reſtored them as ſo many Servants
" neceſſary to a Maſter, who is reſolved to get " Money by any means whatſoever. Nay, he did
" ſomething worſe, for he ſet up a band of Solli" citors, Recorders and Promoters, without whom
" no Bulls cou'd be drawn up, that being examin'd
" by ſeveral Perſons they might not be ſo eaſily
" Corrupted and Falſified. At laſt he appointed " Nine Comptrolers or Superviſors of the Treaſury,
" to whom he gave a Salary, that their Offices
" might be the better Sold. Nor was he fruſtra-
" ted in his Expectation; for an Office that was " Sold before for five Hundred Ducats, Sold moſt
" times for one, two, or three Thouſand Ducats by Rea-
" ſon of that Salary. This gain proved ſuch a bait
" to Innocent VIII. who ſucceeded Sixtus, that " he appointed an Office of Secretaries———
" and encreaſed their Number. Alexander VI.
" appointed the Collectors of Briefs to the Num" ber of Fourſcore. I leave you to judge whether " among ſo many Recorders and Writing Men
" there is any want of Serjeants, whoſe Faces (as
" the Poet has it) are always pale with Hun" ger, and who greedily feed upon the People:
" To whom we may add the Griffins, thoſe who
" ſo well know how to Shear Sheep, I mean No-
" taries and Scriveners who ſuck Poor Peoples Sub-" ſtance, whom Nicolas III. turn'd out being a" fraid they wou'd deſtroy the whole Sheep-Fold".
I need not inform the Reader, that this Invention of Sixtus IV. is blamed, not only as an unlawful means of getting Money, but alſo as a very ill Example which makes way for greater Miſchiefs. I might ſay many things upon it, if I wou'd make Political Reflections; but I don't pretend to that. I rather chuſe to quote another Writer, who mentions the ſame Conduct of Sixtus IV: it will appear from his Words, that it was grounded upon the deſire of Aggrandizing one of his Nephews. " (d) The only thing that remain'd to be " done by Riario, in order to compleat his Settle" ment, was to get ground in Umbria, from whence
" he might have eaſily penetrated into Romagna
" and perhaps into Tuſcany; but having no Troops,
" and wanting a great deal of Money to raiſe ſome,
" his Uncle did not ſcruple to ſell the Offices of " the Chancery and of the Court of Rome, which " had been the Reward of Virtue and Ability under
" the foregoing Popes. He Created five Colle" gues, thro' whoſe hands all the diſpatches of the " Datary were to go ſucceſſively, and Nine new " Offices in the Apoſtolical Chamber, which were " bought very dear. He neither conſidered the " ſhameful Trade he was going to introduce, nor
" the Honeſt Liberty of which he deprived the " Court of Rome, nor the Inconveniences that " wou'd ariſe from putting an end to the In-" duſtry of the moſt refined Italians, by taking " from them Offices freely given, which kept up " their Emulation. He encreaſed the old Taxes,
" and laid new ones: He alſo ordered extraordinary
" Tithes to be paid.

(K) All Authors are not agreed that this Pontif was a Man of mean Extraction.] He was ſo, if we believe Machiavel, (e) and many ſay his Father was a Fiſher-Man. Their Proof for it wou'd be a weak one, ſhou'd they go upon the Authority of Panvinius, who obſerves that the Inhabitants of the Village, where he was Born, do hardly get their Livelihood any other way but by Fiſhing; for that Hiſtorian ſays on the other ſide, that the Family of that Pope was none of the moſt inconſiderable in the Town of Savona, and that it was a Branch of the Houſe della Rovere, one of the moſt Ancient in Piedmont. (f) It appears by ſeveral Letters of that Pope, that he Pretended to be a Native of Savona; and 'tis obſerved that he was Born by chance in the Village of Cella, becauſe his Father and Mother had fled thither during the Plague that raged at Savona. 'Tis further ſaid, that Family bore the Arms (g) of the Houſe della Rovere before Sixtus was Born; which is alledged by ſome, to confute thoſe who ſay, that the Lords of that Family beſtowed their Name and their Arms upon Pope Sixtus. Francis Carriere ſays ſo in his

(a) Jo. Michael Brutus hiſtor. Florent. lib. 7. pag. 187. apud Jo. Zuingerum de feſto corporis Chriſti pag. 133.

(b) Coeffeteau ubi ſupra pag. 1205.

(c) Rivet, Remarques ſur la reſponſe au myſtere d'iniquité part. 2. pag. 623. Note that he is miſtaken in calling Peter and Jerome Riario by the Name of la Ruere. M. Zuinger ubi ſupra has committed the ſame Fault: Ad Petri Ruerii, ſays he, quem pro Cinædo habuerit Sixtus & Hieronymi fratris ſui, (it ſhou'd be ejus) poſtulationes &c.

(d) Vari las Anec de Flor. pag. 72.

(e) Hu modi b ſſima & vile conditione. Machiavelli ubi ſupra.

(f) See Bonanni numiſmat Pontific. Roman tom. 1. pag. 91.

(g) They are ſpeaking Arms viz. the kind of Oak which the Latins call Rob the Itali ans Rov re or R vere, the Fr Rouvre.

SMIGLECIUS (MARTIN) a Native of Lemberg in Poland, turn'd Jeſuit at Rome in the Year 1581. where he ſtudied with great Application and good Succeſs. Being ſent back into Poland, he taught Philoſophy at Vilna Four Years, and Divinity ten Years. He was Rector of ſeveral Colleges, and Superior of the Profeſs'd Houſe at Cracow. He died at Kaliſs after a long Sickneſs the 26th of July 1618. at 56 Years of Age. He ſhew'd an Admirable Patience in his Adverſity, eſpecially during the Sickneſs which Conſumed him by Degrees *. He applied himſelf very much to Controverſy both againſt the Proteſtants and the Unitarians, as it appears from (Y) his Books. His Logick (Z) is very much eſteem'd; It was Printed in Two Volumes in 4*to*. at Ingolſtad in the Year 1618.

SOCINUS (MARIANUS) a Famous Civilian, was Born at Siena the 4. of September 1401. He taught the Canon Law at Padua and then at Sciena: It appears from his † works that he underſtood it perfectly. He received in his Country all the Honours due to his great Merit. He was deputed by his Country Men to Pope Pius II. who made him Advocate Conſiſtorial, and gave him a Thouſand Marks of a particular Eſteem. He was a (A) little Man, but of a ſtrong Conſtitution: He had a more Univerſal Knowledge ‖ than any other Man in his time. 'Tis ſaid that one day he eaſily check'd (B) Politian's Vanity. What he anſwered to thoſe, who ask'd him why he left off reading Lectures, ſince he was (C) Married, is a Curious thing. He died at Siena the 30. of September 1467. See his Encomium in the Letters of Pius II β. He left ſeveral Children behind him, and among others (D) a Son, who exceeded him.

SOCINUS (MARIANUS) Grand Son ζ of the foregoing, was not leſs Famous than his Grand-Father in the Profeſſion of the Law. He was Born at Siena the 25th of March 1482, and having taken his Degree of Doctor of the Civil Law at Siena at 21 Years of Age, he taught that Science there for many Years, and then he was call'd to Piſa, where he taught it ſeven Years. He was recall'd to Siena, from whence at a Years end he went to Padua to be Profeſſor of the ſame Science. From that place he removed to Bologna, to fill up the Chair that was Vacant by the return of Alciatus to Pavia in 1540. The Penſions and Privileges beſtowed β Taken from his Life written by Panzirolus, in libro 3. de claris legum Interpretibus, c. 35. pag. m. 456. & ſeq.

* Taken from Sotvel Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 592, 593.

† See the Remark D at the end.

‖ Æneas Silvius epiſt. 112. lib. 1. apud Panzirol. ubi infra.

ζ He was the Son of Alexander SOCINUS the Son of Marianus. To diſtinguiſh theſe two Marianus's, the firſt is Sir-Named Senior and the Second Junior.

his Expoſition of the Prophetical Symbols of Malachi an Iriſh Man. Father Oldoini has Collected ſeveral Reaſons to prove that our Franceſco della Rovere was of a Noble Family, and that he turn'd Cordelier of his own motion, and not becauſe Poverty put him upon looking for a Livelyhood at the expence of others (a). See Father Bonanni's Hiſtory of the Popes by Medals, and compare with this the Remark A in the Article Julius II.

(Y) As it appears from his Books.] I omit thoſe he Publiſh'd in his Mother Tongue, ſome of which (b) are written againſt the Arians; and I ſhall only ſet down the Titles of thoſe he put out in Latin, as I find 'em in Father Alegambe. (c) Latine edidit de Zachariæ Prophetæ pro Chriſti divinitate illuſtri teſtimonio, adverſus Fauſti Socini Anabaptiſtæ cavillationes. Vilnæ MDXCVI. in 4. Nodum Gordium, ſeu, de Vocatione Miniſtrorum. Cracoviæ MDCIX. in 4. Nova Monſtra novi Arianiſmi. Niſſæ MDCXII. in 4. Verbum Caro factum, ſeu, De Divinâ Verbi Incarnati Naturâ, contra novos Arianos. Cracoviæ MDCXIII. in 4. Refutationem vanæ Diſſolutionis Nodi Gordii de Vocatione Miniſtrorum, contra Joannem Volkelium Miniſtrum Arianum. Ib. MDCXIV. in 4. De erroribus novorum Arianorum, lib. 11. contra Valentinum Smalcium, Ibid. MDCXV. in 4. De Chriſto vero & naturali filio Dei, ejuſque pro nobis ſatisfactione, adverſus Valentinum Smalcium Arianum, lib. 11. Acceſſit Reſponſio ad refutationem C. errorum Smalcio objectorum. Ibidem MDCXV. in 4. De Baptiſmo, adverſus Hieronymum Moſcorovium Arianum, lib. 1. Ibidem eodem anno ac formâ. De Ordinatione Sacerdotum in Eccleſiâ Romanâ, contra Jacobum Zaborovium Calvinianum Miniſtrum. Cracoviæ MDCXVII. De Notis Miniſtrorum. lib. 11. contra eundem. MDCXVII. Vanam ſine viribus iram Miniſtrorum Evangelicorum. Coloniæ apud Antonium Boëtzerum MDCXI. in 16. Refutationem Epicherematis miſſionem Miniſtrorum Evangelicorum propugnantis. MDCXII.

(Z) His Logick is very much eſteem'd.] (d) "Smiglecius a Poliſh Jeſuit was one of the laſt Logicians, who wrote upon Ariſtotle's Logick with the greateſt Subtilty and Solidity. He dived into the bottom of that Science with a clearneſs and exactneſs, hardly to be found in any other Author. His Logick is a fine Work". This Teſtimony of a Fellow Jeſuit will not appear a flattering one to thoſe, who are capable of judging of ſuch a Book. The Engliſh have done juſtice to that Work; it has been Reprinted in their Country.

(A) He was a little Man.] Æneas Silvius his Country Man, who was Pope by the Name of Pius II. ſpeaks of it thus. (e) Nihil ei præter formam natura invidit. Homuncio eſt, naſci ex mea familia (f) debuit cui parvorum hominum eſt cognomen.

(B) Politian's Vanity.] That great Critick, who ſhou'd have been contented with the Reputation of an excellent Philologer, pretended alſo to be a Civilian of the firſt rank. He ſaid one day that he cou'd make better Lectures of the Civil Law than the Famous Accurſius; but our Socinus nonpluſs'd him by the firſt Queſtion he put to him. (g) Semel etiam Angelum Politianum virum græcis latiniſque literis impenſè eruditum, cum Senis in Juris civilis interpretationibus ſe vel Accurſium ſuperaturum jactabundus gloriaretur, leniter correxit, ab eo enim interrogatus Angelus, quis eſſet in jure ſuus hæres, ob imperitiam obmutuit, ac pudore ſuffuſus ſuæ audaciæ pœnas dedit (1).

This ſeems to me a Fabulous Story, for Politian was but 15 Years of Age, when Socinus died.

(C) Since he was Married.] His anſwer was, I have got a Wife; and being told that Socrates did not leave off his Lectures after he was Married, 'tis, replied he, becauſe Xantippe was an ill humour'd Woman, and perhaps ugly, whereas I have got a handſome and complaiſant Wife: (h) Uxore ductâ, cum docendi munus intermiſiſſet, interrogatus, cur id non continuaret, ſe conjugem duxiſſe reſpondit; (2) cum verò replicaretur, Socratem nunquam philoſophiam ob uxorem deſeruiſſe, ſubjecit, illum moleſtam, & fortè turpem Xantippem, ſe autem formoſam, & obſequentem habere.

(D) He left behind him ——— a Son ——— who (i) exceeded him.] Viz. Bartholomew SOCINUS, Born at Florence the 25th of March 1437. He taught

a) Bonan. ubi ſupra p. 92.

b) See Alegambe & Sotvel. Bibli. oth. Script. Soc. Jeſu.

c) Alegambe ib. pag. 331. col. 2.

d) Rapin Reflexions, ſur la Logique, § 8. p.m. 393.

(e) Æneas Silvius, epiſt. 112. lib. 1. apud Panzirol. de claris legum Interpretib. lib. 3. c. 35. pag. 438.

(f) Pius II. was of the Family Piccolomini.

(g) Panzirolus ibid. pag. 457.

(1) Corraſ. lib. 3. miſcell. cap. 16.

(h) Panzirolus ubi ſupra.

(2) Tiraquell. in 2. l. connubia gloſ. 1. part 2. n. 25. Æneas Sylvius, de dictis & factis Alfonſi Regis, lib. 3. c. 27.

(i) Eo provectus eſt ut patrem ſuperavit. Panzirol. ibid. lib. 2. c. 126. pag. 276.

beſtowed upon him, at Bologna were ſo conſiderable, that he wou'd not leave it, tho' he had very great offers made him in ſeveral other Univerſities. He Married Camilla Salvetta at Siena, and loſt her after he had been Married Forty Six Years. Having been uſed for a long time to lie with a Woman, he cou'd not be without it; ſo that he (A) gave up himſelf to Lewdneſs, whereby he got ſome Diſtempers, which proved ſo troubleſome to him, that at laſt the violence of the Remedies he uſed conſumed his Strength, and occaſion'd his Death the 19th of Auguſt 1556 *. If we believe Panzirolus †, he had Thirteen Children, two of which only, viz. Celſus and Philip out lived him. Celſus who was Profeſſor of the Canon Law at Bologna, obtain'd there the Profeſſorſhip of the Civil Law after his Father's Death, and left it. Panzirolus ſhou'd have known that Marianus left behind him a third Son, call'd Lælius SOCINUS, the (B) firſt Author taught the Civil Law at Siena, and then at Piſa in 1474. Having a greater Reputation than all the Civilians of his time, he was call'd to Ferrara, where he was a Profeſſor four Years; and then he performed the ſame Function at Bologna, from whence he return'd to Piſa, being offer'd a Penſion of a Thouſand Ducats. There aroſe a great Emulation between him and Jaſo Mainus: They grew ſo hot in their Diſputes, that Laurence de Medicis went to Piſa on purpoſe, to have the Pleaſure of ſuch a Spectacle. He removed ſeveral times from one Univerſity to another, and at laſt a kind of Paralyſy in the Tongue having deprived him of his Speech, he was only a Chamber Counceller. He died at Siena in 1507 (a). He had more Learning than Virtue, for he lived a Debauched Life, and made ſo many fooliſh Expences, that he was Buried at the Publick Charges. (b) Illiberalibus verò moribus inſignem doctrinam maculaſſe dictus eſt, qui chartarum, & aleæ ludo ſupra modum deditus, non modo debitis lectionibus quandoque auditores fraudaſſe, ſed inſomnes etiam noctes turpiter egiſſe dicitur. Eo vitio paternis opibus conſumptis, & univerſis, quam docendo, & de jure reſpondendo plurimam coegerat, pecunia effuſa, ad extremam inopiam deductus eſt, uſque adeo ut nec quod funeri ſuppeteret, poſt ſe reliquiſſe dicatur. Eam ob cauſam ſemper egens undique pecuniam avarus conquirere cogebatur. His Memory fail'd him upon two remarkable Occaſions. (c) Memoriæ imbecillitate bis inter orandum excidit. Primo cum anno MCCCCXCII. a Republica Senenſi Alexandro VI. Pont. Max. ſua civitatis nomine gratulatum miſſus in prima prope oratione, quam illi Angelus Politianus dictaverat, defecit, quod ubi Pontifex deprehendit, manum ſublevans ſatis ſibi notam viri virtutem eſſe dixit, cumque Advocati Conſiſtorialis titulo honeſtavit. Idem iterum illi Venetiis contigit, ubi dum apud Auguſtinum Barbadicum Reipublicæ Principem dicere conatur, excidentibus quæ antea excogitaverat, nihil exprimere potuit. His Conſultations, and thoſe of his Father, have been collected into Four Volumes. (d) Beſides, each of 'em wrote many other Books, that are Printed.

(A) He gave up himſelf to Lewdneſs.] (e) Apud eos (Bononienſes) Camillam uxorem LXIII. annum agentem amiſit, quicum annis XLVI. vixerat. Poſtea uxori aſſuetus parum continenter vixiſſe dicitur; unde contracto morbo non ſemel ægrotavit, ac demum dum præſentaneis remediis ſibi mederi conatur, potentium pharmacorum vi oppreſſus LXXIIII. ætatis anno deceſſit.

(B) Call'd Lælius SOCINUS, the firſt Author of the Socinian Sect.] He (f) was Born at Siena in 1525. Being deſign'd for the Civil Law by his Father, he began early to look for the Foundations of that Science in the word of God, and by that Study he came to diſcover that the Church of Rome taught many things contrary to the Revelation. Deſigning to dive more and more into the true Senſe of the Holy Scripture, he ſtudied Greek and Hebrew, and even Arabick, and quickly left Italy to go into a Proteſtant Country. Fear contributed alſo to that deſign; for he knew that Private Opinions in matters of Religion were not Tolerated in his Country. He began to Travel in 1547. and ſpent four Years in going thro' France, England, the Netherlands, Germany, and Poland; and then he ſettled at Zurich. He made himſelf known to the moſt Learned Men of that time, who expreſs'd their eſteem for him in their Letters to him: But having diſcovered, by the Doubts he propoſed to them, that he was inclined to the Arian or Photinian Hereſy, he made himſelf very much ſuſpected; Calvin gave him very good advice about it in 1552. (g) Quod pridem teſtatus ſum, ſerio iterum moneo, niſi hunc quærendi pruritum mature corrigas, metuendum eſſe, ne tibi gravia tormenta accerſas. Socinus making a good uſe of that Advice, and more ſtill of Servetus's Execution, took care not to diſcover his Thoughts but in a proper time and place, and behaved himſelf ſo dexterouſly, that he lived among the great Enemies of his Opinions, without being in the leaſt Injured by them. An Example, that is propoſed in his Nephew's Life to thoſe, who expoſe themſelves raſhly to Martyrdom, being ſometimes more greedy of a great Reputation, than truly Zealous for Truth. (h) Sciant, quos nimia veri libertas in pericula ſæpe intempeſtiva præcipitat, ipſam illam, quam propugnant, veritatem in circumſpectæ prudentiæ lenitate, quam in effreni zelo plus habere præſidii. Ut qui ultro ſuis diſcriminibus occurrunt, magis ad privatam laudem, quam ad publici emolumenti rationem feſtinare videantur. He found ſome Diſciples, who reſpectfully heard his Inſtructions: They were Italians, who wandred up and down in Germany and Poland. He alſo communicated his Errors to his Relations in ſome Writings he ſent to 'em at Siena. He took a Journey into Poland after his (i) Father's Death, and obtain'd from the King ſome Letters of recommendation to the Doge of Venice, and the Duke of Florence, that he might be ſafe at Venice all the time his Affairs ſhou'd require his ſtay there; for he intended to inherit his Father's Eſtate, and to ſettle the matter with his Relations. It was about the Year 1558, that he Travelled into Poland. (k) Circa annum 1558, & 1559. literis Poloniæ atque Bohemiæ Regum muniri voluit, ut ſecurius in urbe Veneta cum amicis de patrimonio agere poſſet. Tunc profecto patuit apud pleriſque Germaniæ atque Poloniæ proceres, ipſoſque adeo Reges, quantum is gratia potuerit. Summo enim ſtudio in ejus cauſa apud Ludovicum Priulum Venetiarum, atque Coſmum Hetruriæ Duces certatum eſt. His Family was diſperſed at that time: They were ſuſpected of Hereſy: His Brother Camillus was Impriſon'd; ſome others fled away, and his Nephew Fauſtus was one of 'em. Lælius return'd into Swiſſerland, and died at Zurich in May 1562. Fauſtus was then at Lyons, and ſet out immediately when he hear'd that his Uncle was dead. He arrived at Zurich before any of Lælius's Papers had been convey'd away; he took Poſſeſſion of 'em, and made uſe of 'em afterwards (l).

Some other Circumſtances are to be found in the Bibliotheca Antitrinitariorum. Lælius SOCINUS Born in 1525, began to confer about matters of Religion in the Year 1546, with above Forty Perſons. They privately met in the Territory of the Venetians (m), and brought into queſtion particularly the Doctrine of the Trinity, and of CHRIST's Satisfaction. Ochinus, Valentinus Gentilis, and Paul Alciatus, aſſiſted at thoſe Conferences. They were diſcovered: Some of thoſe Innovators were apprehended, and condemn'd to Death; the reſt fled away. The Chronology of that Author is not right, for Ochinus left Italy about the Year 1542. Zanchius ſays that Lælius Socinus endeavoured to infect him with his Heretical Notions, not by maintaining them in expreſs words, but propoſing them as Doubts and thor of the Socinian Sect. Alexander SOCINUS Son of the ſame Marianus, and Father of Fauſtus SOCINUS, of whom I am going to ſpeak, died very (A) Young,

---

* Taken from Panzirolus ubi ſupra, lib. 2. cap. 161. pag. 338. & ſeq.

† Ibid. pag. 341.

(a) Taken from Panzirolus ubi ſupra, pag. 75. & ſeq.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 279.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 280.

(d) Printed at Venice in 1579.

(e) Panzirolus ibid. pag. 341.

(f) Bibliotheca Antitrinitar. pag. 18.

(g) See the Life of Fauſtus Socinus prefix'd to the 1. Volume of the Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum.

(h) Ibid.

(i) His Father, as I have ſaid before, died at Bologna in 1556.

(k) Vita Fauſti Socini pag. 2.

(l) Taken from the Life of Fauſtus Socinus.

(m) Circa annum 1546. inſtituerat cum ſociis ſuis iiſdem Italis, quorum numerus quadragenarium excedebat, in Veneta ditione, collegia colloquiaque de religione, in quibus potiſſimum &c. Biblioth. Antitrinit. pag. 18.

and by way of a Diſpute. He adds, that Lælius underſtood very well Greek and Latin, and was a Man of an unblamable Life. (a) Fuit is Lælius, nobili honeſtaque familia natus: bene Græce & Hebraice doctus; vitæque etiam externæ inculpatæ: quorum rerum cauſa mihi quoque interceſſerat cum illo non vulgaris amicitia; ſed homo fuit plenus diverſarum hæreſium: quas tamen mihi nunquam proponebat, niſi diſputandi cauſa: & ſemper interrogans, quaſi cuperet doceri. 'Tis certain, that when Zanchius wrote thoſe words, Lælius had (b) made a Paraphraſe upon the firſt Chapter of St. John's Goſpel full of Photinianiſm. He alſo wrote a Dialogue in 1554, againſt the Book Publiſh'd by Calvin to ſhew that Hereticks ought to be puniſh'd with Death. Calvinus and Vaticanus are the Interlocutors of that (c) Dialogue: Some aſcribe it to Caſtalio; but others, as (d) Cloppenburg and (e) Hornbeck aſcribe it to Lælius Socinus. He is ſaid alſo to be the Author of the Book, Intitled, de Hæreticis capitali ſupplicio non afficiendis, that was Publiſh'd (f) under the fictitious Name of Minus Celſus Senenſis; and there is more reaſon to aſcribe it to him, than to Fauſtus Socinus. Some (g) pretend that Lælius is the Author of a Book, Intitled, Martini Bellii Dialogus Lælius de hæreticis gladio coercendis, Publiſh'd againſt Calvin, and endeavour to prove it againſt Placcius by the Teſtimony of the Bibliotheca Antitrinitariorum. Placcius (h) aſcribes that Dialogue to Caſtalio, and refers us to Calvin's Life, where, ſays he, Beza boaſts of having confuted that Book of Caſtalio; but 'tis certain Beza makes no mention there of a Piece, Intitled, Dialogus Lælius. He only ſpeaks of a Farrago, which he aſcribes to Caſtalio, and againſt which he wrote a Book. What he calls Farrago, is Intitled, De Hæreticis, an ſint perſequendi, & omnino quomodo ſit cum eis agendum, Lutheri & Brentii, aliorumque multorum tum veterum tum recentiorum ſententiæ. Liber hoc tam turbulento tempore perneceſſarius, & cùm omnibus, tum potiſſimum principibus & magiſtratibus utiliſſimus, ad diſcendum, quodnam ſit eorum in re tam controverſa, tamque periculoſa, officium; and contains the following Pieces, MARTINI BELLII præfatio, in qua quid ſit hæreticus, & quidnam cum eo agendum ſit, demonſtratur. MARTINI LUTERI ſententia, in qua apertè oſtenditur, hæreticorum punitionem ad magiſtratum non pertinere. JOANNIS BRENTII de Anabaptiſtis, & cæteris qui hæretici habentur, ſententia, quæ idem docet. Aliorum authorum, tum veterum, tum recentiorum eadem de re ſententiæ. Baſilii Montfortii refutatio eorum, quæ pro perſecutione dici ſolent. I ſhall take notice of another ſmall Negligence in Placcius; for he refers us to a Book (i) of Hoornbeek, wherein he only mentions the Dialogue between Calvinus and Vaticanus. A Learned German (k) whom I have quoted, alledges this Teſtimony of Placcius, and does not rectify it: He alſo alledges M. Teiſſier, who only ſays pag. 238. of the 1. Volume of his Additions to the Elogies taken from Thuanus, that Caſtalio is the Author of a Book Publiſh'd under the Name of Martin Bellius, in which he endeavours to prove that Hereticks ought not to be Puniſh'd. Thus here are two Authors quoted, the laſt of which does not ſay what is imputed to him, and the other is miſtaken: But let's ſee whether the Objection raiſed againſt the latter is a ſolid one. 'Tis objected againſt Placcius, that Martini Bellii Dialogus Lælius de hæreticis gladio coercendis, is aſcribed to Lelius Socinus in the Bibliotheque of the Antitrinitarians. (l) Verum in Bibliotheca Antitrinitariorum ——— pag. LXIV. & XX. ille tractatus Lælio Socino tribuitur, allegata in hanc ſententiam auctoritate Johannis Cloppenburgii & Hornbekii. Conſult the 64th Pape of that Bibliotheque, and you'll find that 'tis thought Lælius Socinus Senenſis took the Name of Minus Celſus Senenſis in a Book, de Hæreticis non capitali ſupplicio afficiendis. Conſult the 20th Page, and you'll find that the Dialogue between Calvinus and Vaticanus, wherein 'tis aſſerted that the Power of the Sword ought not to be extended to Hereticks, is aſcribed to Lælius Socinus by Cloppenburg and Hoornbeck. I need not ſay that there is little exactneſs in this Account. As for what concerns the other Writings of Socinus the Uncle, ſee the ſame Bibliotheque.

I muſt not forget a Paſſage of Hoornbeck quoted in it, whereby it appears that Melanchthon had conceived an eſteem for Lælius Socinus. That Paſſage will confirm what has been ſaid above of Lælius's deſign to take a Journey to Venice. (m) Uti Zanchium, quamdiu cum eo viveret, mirifice fefellit Lælius: ſimiliter bono viro Philippo Melanthoni, quocum triennium egit familiariter, adeo impoſuit, ut Philippus pro eo tanquam optimo viro a. ciↃ IↃ lviii. interceſſerit tum ad Imp. Maximilianum II. tum ad Poloniæ regem Sigiſmundum ut horum nomine Lælius Legati vicem Venetiis obire, eaque ratione paternam hæreditatem, ſibi, ob conſuetudinem cum Proteſtantibus in Germania, interclusam adire tutius poſſet. Father Maimbourg has committed ſome Faults, which ought to be obſerved. Lælius Socinus, ſays he (n), and Matthew Gribaldus, joyn'd Gentilis in Poland. He had been ſaying, that Gentilis being ſent for by Blandrata, went into Poland, after he had privately left Geneva. Now you muſt know, that Gentilis having left Geneva, ſometime after he had made an Honourable Amand on the 2d of September 1558. acted ſo many (o) parts before he went into Poland, that 'tis probable he went not thither till about the Year 1560. The Socinian Hiſtorians place that Journey (p) in the Year 1562, or 1563. and therefore he did not make it with Lælius Socinus; for the latter was in Poland about (q) the Year 1558. Maimbourg adds, (r) that as Gentilis and Lælius Socinus were returning thro' Germany and Swiſſerland into Italy, teaching their Doctrine every where, Socinus died at Baſil, and Gentilis was apprehended by the Magiſtrates of Berne. Socinus died at Zurich the 16th of May 1562, and Gentilis did not leave Poland till the Year 1566.

(C) Alexander SOCINUS ——— the Father of Fauſtus SOCINUS died very Young, being accounted, &c.] He was admitted Doctor of the Civil Law at Siena in 1530. He had before maintain'd, during five Days at Padua, and during two Days at Siena, Three Hundred Theſes with great Succeſs. After he had been made Doctor he explain'd the Inſtitutes in his Country, and then he was call'd to Padua to be Profeſſor in Ordinary. The Quarrels, that aroſe between him and the other Profeſſors, obliged him to return to Siena, where he continued to make Publick Lectures. He went to Macerata in 1540, to teach the Civil Law in the Univerſity lately Founded there, where he died the 26th of April 1541 (s). He had Married Agnes Petrucci Daughter of Burgeſio Petrucci, and of Victoria Piccolomini. This Petrucci having ſucceeded his Father Pandolphus, who had been the Head of the Republick of Siena, could not keep his Poſt long, being turn'd out by a contrary Faction, and died ſoon after. Victoria Piccolomini his Widow, Siſter, Niece or Couſin to many great Lords, bore that Misfortune with great conſtancy, and lived Fifty Six Years after the death of her Husband, in the conſtant practice of the Virtues moſt eſſential to her Sex. Her Daughter, brought up by ſuch a Mother, anſwered her Education, and was Married to Alexander Socinus a Young Man of great (t) Parts. Theſe are the Father and Mother of Fauſtus Socinus. (u) Relicta vidua Victoria animum, quem in prioris faſtigii ſplendore nunquam ſuſtulerat, tam iniqua rerum viciſſitudine frangi non permiſit. Itaque annis quinquaginta ſex, quibus mariti vitæ & communi fortunæ ſuperfuit, ſingulari modeſtia & ſpectata integritate ac pudicitia vidui ſtatus ſolitudinem toleravit. Filiam agnetam, quam, ut tanto genere dignum erat, ſanctiſſimis moribus imbuerat, Alexandro Socino in matrimonium dedit, patricio quidem juveni, ſed tamen privato. Is fuit Fauſti noſtri pater. Had Panzirolus known how Fauſtus Socinus turn'd his

(a) Zanchius, in præfat. libr. de tribus Elohim, apud Biblioth. Antitrinit. pag. 19.

(b) He wrote it in the Year 1561. Biblioth. Antitrin. pag. 21.

(c) It was Re-printed in Holland in 1612. with ſome other pieces of the ſame Nature. The following it was Printed in Dutch in the ſame Country. Ibid pag. 20.

(d) In præfat. compendioli Sociniani confutati.

(e) In Summa controverſ.

(f) In the Bibliotheca Antitrinitariorum pag. 21. The 2d Edition of that Work placed in the Year 1584. But Placcius de Pſeudon. pag. 175. mentions an Edition in 1577. Chriſtlinge in 8, which does not ſeem to be the firſt.

(g) Joh. Albertus Faber, Decade decad. num. 25.

(m) Hoornbeck, Summa controverſ. lib. 7. pag. 442. edit. 1653.

(n) Maimbourg, Hiſt. de l'Arianiſme, Book 12. pag. 351, 352. Dutch Edit.

(o) See his Article.

(p) See the Article Alciatus.

(q) See the Life of Fauſtus Socinus pag. 2.

(r) Maimbourg ibid. pag. 361.

(s) Taken from Panzirolus ubi ſupra pag. 341.

(t) Alexander ſubtilitatum & pater ejus Marianus Junior Juriſconſultorum principes vocati ſunt. Vita Fauſti Socini, initio.

(u) Ibid.

(h) Placcius de Pſeudonymis pag. 161. (i) Summa controverſ. pag. 563. of the 2d Edition, and 442 of the firſt. (k) Joh. Albertus Faber. His Decas decadum was Printed in 1689. (l) Joh. Albertus Faber ubi ſupra.

young, being accounted a Learned Civilian. We have ſome (D) Works of his Father.

SOCINUS (Fauſtus) Grandſon of the foregoing, and the Chief Founder of a very ill Sect that goes by his Name, and which notwithſtanding the Perſecutions, flouriſh'd a (A) conſiderable time in Poland, was Born at Siena the 5th of December 1539. He ſtudied but little in his Youth; he only had a Tincture of Claſſical Learning, and learned only the Elements of Logick. The Letters his Uncle writ to his Relations, whereby they and * their Wives were imbib'd with many Seeds of Hereſy, made an Impreſſion upon him; ſo that he fled away as the reſt, when the Inquiſition began to perſecute that Family. He was at Lyons when he heard of his Uncle's death, and immediately ſet out to take Poſſeſſion of all the Writings of the Deceaſed. He return'd into Italy, and became ſo acceptable to the Great Duke, that the Charms of the Court, and the Honourable Imployments beſtowed upon him, hinder'd him for the ſpace of Twelve Years from remembring that he had been look'd upon as the Man, who was to put the laſt Hand to the Syſtem of Samoſatenian Theology, whereof his Uncle Lelius had drawn but a rough Draught. At laſt, the ſearch after the Goſpel Truths appearing to him more valuable than the Delights of a Court Life, he voluntarily left his Country, and went into Germany in the Year 1574, nor did he care to return, tho' he was deſired to do it by the great Duke. He was three Years at Baſil, where he ſtudied his Studies, he wou'd not have uſed the following words. (a) Ex eo (Alexandro) & Agnete ex Burgheſia Pandulfi Petrucci Senarum Principis nepte natus, Fauſtus praeclari ingenii Juvenis parentum veſtigia ſecuturus eſſe ſperatur.

(D) Some Works of Marianus Socinus.] The Catalogue of the Bodleian Library mentions a Conſilium in materia monetaria, Printed at Cologne in 1591. He is ſaid to be (b) the Author of Bartolus's Diſtinctions, Printed at Venice in 1564, and we are told that his Conſultations afforded the Book of the common Opinions of the Doctors, Publiſh'd by one Muſculus.

(A) And which notwithſtanding the Perſecutions, flouriſhed a conſiderable time in Poland.] Sigiſmund Auguſtus granted Liberty of Conſcience to the Sects which forſook the Church of Rome. They made no ſeparate Bodies at firſt; but when the Evangelicks came to know the Opinions of the Unitarians, they would no longer Communicate with them, which occaſion'd two different Communions. That Rupture began at Cracow by the care of Gregory Pauli. The Unitarians had ſeveral Churches in Poland and Lithuania, ſome in (c) great Towns, and others in the Country Seats of Gentlemen. They eſtabliſh'd their Metropolis at Racovia, in the little Poland: There they had a Yearly Synod, there they erected a College, and ſet up a Printing-Houſe. Some Catholicks ſent their Children to that College; and ſome joyn'd with thoſe Hereticks. Some Proteſtants did the ſame, and a vaſt number of Books came out of the Printing-Houſe of Racovia, and were diſperſed in Foreign Countries. This Proſperity was interrupted in 1638; for ſome Scholars of the College of Racovia having broke a Wooden Croſs ſet up in a High way, the Diet of Warſaw ordered that the College ſhould be demoliſh'd, the Church of Racovia ſhut up, the Printing-houſe of the Unitarians deſtroy'd, and the Miniſters and Teachers Baniſh'd (d), which was executed. Sometime after the Judges of Lublin deſtroy'd the Church of Kiſlin and that of Bereſc in Volinhia, under Pretence that the Miniſters of Racovia, and the Teachers of the College had fled thither. The Diet of the Year 1647 Baniſh'd Jonas Slichtingius for Publiſhing a Book intitl'd, Confeſſio Chriſtiana, and that Book was Burnt by the Hands of the Executioner. But notwithſtanding thoſe Misfortunes, the Unitarians performed their Religious Exerciſes in many places of that Kingdom, till the Year 1658. They were then Expell'd upon Pretence that ſome of 'em had put themſelves under the Protection of the King of Sweden, who had Conquered the greateſt part of Poland. However that Reaſon was not alledged in the Edict of Baniſhment, for fear of offending the Swedes, who had ſtipulated a general Amneſty for all the Subjects of the King of Poland, who adhered to them during the Invaſion. Their Baniſhment was only grounded upon their Doctrine; it being alledged, that in order to draw God's Bleſſing upon the Kingdom, 'twas neceſſary to Baniſh thoſe, who denied the Divinity of the Eternal Son of God. They were therefore ordered to depart from it upon pain of Death: All their Eſtates were Confiſcated, all Perſons were forbidden upon the ſame Penalty, to give 'em any Aſſiſtance, or any Mark of Affection in their Exile. (e) Quum Sueci Poloniam invaſiſſent, & pleraque ejus loca occupaſſent, ita ut & provinciae multae miſſis legatis Regi Suecorum ut victori ſeſe ſubjicerent, & exercitus ipſi cum Ducibus ſuis eidem ſeſe adjicerent, quia ex Unitariis nonnulli etiam ad Suecorum patrocinium & protectionem confugerant, quamvis multi eorum nullam cum Suecis inirent ſocietatem, poſt Suecorum diſceſſum, omnes ii quos Arianos vocant, publica regni conſtitutione, 1658. non praetextu perduellionis, ne Sueci, qui per tractatus amneſtiam iis qui ipſis adhaeſerant pacti ſunt, offenderentur, ſed directe ob religionem, ob id quod Jeſu Filii Dei praeaeternam, quam vocant, Deitatem non agnoſcant, extorres acti ſunt, ut ſcilicet Deus hiſce blaſphemiis amotis, omnia proſpera iſti regno tribueret: ita ut niſi patria excederent, accuſati poenae capitali ſubjicerentur: bona quoque eorum fiſco publico ſunt applicata: & vetitum ne quiſquam eos ullo modo juvare, vel extra ſolum patrium exſulantes, aliquo benignitatis ac benevolentiae indicio proſequi audeat, alioqui eidem cum ipſis poenae obnoxius futurus (f). The Socinians never recover'd from that ſevere Blow: They diſperſed themſelves as well as they could in Tranſylvania, Sileſia, Pruſſia, &c. There is a great Fault in thoſe Latin Words, for they intimate a great Falſity, viz. That the Eſtates of the Unitarians were Confiſcated; and they ſay nothing of their being permitted to ſtay two Years in the Kingdom to ſettle their Affairs. 'Tis an uſual thing for thoſe, who complain of their Sufferings, to ſuppreſs whatever might make their Perſecution look leſs violent than it was. And therefore in order to repreſent the true ſtate of the thing, I ſhall give another Account of it contain'd in the following Paſſage. " (g) Becauſe, during the laſt " War of the Swedes in Poland, it was found out " that the Arians, or Socinians intending to raiſe " themſelves over the Ruins of the State, kept " Intelligence with Ragotski Prince of Tranſylvania, " who attack'd that Kingdom at the ſame time; " the Catholick Lords, in the general Diet of " Warſaw, in the Year 1658, took hold of that " Opportunity to exterminate that abominable Hereſy out of Poland, which might bring ſtill greater Calamities upon the State. The Lutheran " and Calviniſt Deputies, who were in that Diet, " being apprehenſive that a Law Enacted againſt " thoſe Hereticks might be a Preſident againſt " themſelves, and that in time they would be treated in the ſame manner, joyn'd together in order to oppoſe it. But becauſe their Number was " very ſmall, if compared with the Catholicks, and they ſtudied Divinity three Years with great Application; and having embraced a Doctrine very different from that of the Proteſtants, he undertook to maintain and ſpread it; and in order to it, he wrote a Book (B) de Jeſu Chriſto Servatore. He Diſputed at Zurich with Francis Puccius, in the beginning of the Year 1578. The Differences occaſion'd by the Ill Doctrine of Francis David, about the Honours and the Power of the Son of God, cauſed a great Diſturbance in the Churches of Tranſilvania. Blandrata, a Man of great Authority in thoſe Churches, and at Court, ſent for Socinus, whom he took to be a Perſon well qualify'd to pacify thoſe Troubles. He lodg'd him in the ſame Houſe with Francis David; but the latter could not be undeceiv'd, and maintain'd his Opinion ſo openly and ſo boldly, that he was impriſon'd. He died ſoon after; and Socinus was ill ſpoken of upon that account, tho' 'tis affirm'd he had no hand in the Counſels that were given to the Prince of Tranſilvania, in order to oppreſs Francis David. He retir'd into Poland in the Year 1579, and deſir'd to be admitted into the Communion of the Unitarians; but becauſe he differ'd from them in ſome Points, and would not be ſilent, he met with a repulſe. Nevertheleſs, he writ in favour of their Churches againſt their Enemies. The Book he wrote againſt James Paleologus afforded his Enemies a Pretence to exaſperate the King of Poland; and yet that Book was nothing leſs (C) than Seditious. But tho' the bare reading of that Book was ſufficient to Confute the Informers, Socinus thought it expedient to leave Cracow, after he had been there Four Years, and to take Sanctuary in the Houſe of a Poliſh * Lord. He lived above three Years under the Protection of ſeveral Lords of the Kingdom, and

---

* His inter quoque, ſuggerente veritatis miras artifice Laelio, ejus ſemina ſparſerit, eaque longis illi et terrarum ſpatiis divulſi, tam efficaci ſtudio fovebat, ut nonnullorum uxores ignotus aliis & abſens in partes traxerit. Vita Fauſti Socini p. 2.

(a) Panzirol ibid. pag. 147.

(b) Scripſit diſtinctiones Bartoli, quas Venetiis A. MDLXIV edidit, & Socino vindicavit Simon Schardius. Etiam ex ejus conſiliis collectae ſunt communes Doctorum opiniones, editae ab Eraſmo Muſculo Hanoienſe. Hoornbeek, Apparatu ad Socinian. controverſ. p. 50.

(c) Such as Cracow, Lublin, and Novogrod.

(d) I ſhall quote an Author in the Remark L, who denies that all thoſe things were contain'd in the Decree of the Diet.

(e) Taken from the Preface to the 1. volume of the Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum.

(f) The ſame Preface, pag. * 2.

(g) Maimbourg, Hiſt. de l'Arianiſm. l. 12. pag. 375, 376. of the 4th Tom. Dutch Edition.

" they were not depriv'd of their Liberty, and beſides they did not love the Arians, having more than once before demanded that they ſhould not be Tolerated in Poland, a Law was at laſt Enacted with a common Conſent againſt Arianiſm; and the Arians and Socinians comprehended under the ſame Name, were obliged to Abjure their Hereſy, or to depart the Kingdom within two Years, allowed them to ſell their Eſtates. That Law, which was afterwards Confirm'd in the other general Diets, was none of thoſe that loſe by degrees the force that was given 'em in the heat of a Zeal conceived from time to time againſt Publick Diſorders. It was executed, and is ſo to this Day. "

Leſt any one ſhould think that the Jeſuit Maimbourg has falſify'd this part of his Hiſtory, to praiſe the King and the States of Poland for having obſerved a kind of Moderation, I muſt acquaint the Reader that ſome Socinian (a) Writers ſay, that the Edict of the Year 1658, allowed them three Years to ſell their Eſtates, and that afterwards one of thoſe three (b) Years was taken from them; ſo that the 10th of July 1660 was the Day appointed for their departure. There's hardly any thing more lamentable than the Deſcription they make of the Miſeries they were expoſed to from the Year 1648, till they left Poland. They ſuffered a Thouſand Inſults; they could not Sell their Eſtates but at a very low rate, and their Miſery was aggravated by all ſorts of Artifices. They don't forget the Infraction of perpetual and irrevocable Edicts, and of the Royal Oaths, by virtue of which, they had been Unmoleſted near One Hundred Years: Much leſs do they forget to obſerve, that the Clergy moved the States of the Kingdom to ſuch an Infraction, and King John Caſimir to break the Oath he had taken ten Years before. (c) Cœpit id primum odium Theologicum & furor vulgi; vis deinde confecit ſacerdotalis occupata autoritate Comitiorum, reſciſſis, projectis, ſpretis, pro omnium Diſſidentium pace ac ſecuritate, quâ annis admodum centum gaviſi ſumus inviolati, ſeveriſſimis legibus, graviſſimis ſtatutis, pactis, fœderibus, promiſſis quæ omnium ordinum ſanctiſſimo ſcito & conceptiſſimo Regum, hujus nominatim & quidem ter repetito jurejurando, ſæpè & nuperrimè erant religioſiſſimè & ampliſſimè renovata, aſſerta, atque confirmata; ut vim juris obtinerent inviolabilis atque æterni. Two Pages after, they ſet down the Oath taken by the King, in 1648, and then they ſay (d): Decimo poſt anno, octavo videlicet quinquageſimo menſe eodem, Papali plerique faſcino incantati, Ordines Regni, ac fidei ſuæ, honoris ac conſcientiæ religioſiſſimis nexibus obligatæ turpiter obliti, perculſis qui rectè ſentiebant violentis clamoribus & minaci turba, Sanctiſſimam & Saluberimam pacis legem, tot Comitiorum cautionibus, pactis, fœderibus, ſtipulationibus, tot Regum à Sigiſmundo Auguſto continua ſerie ſuccedentium, publicis Sacramentis firmiſſimè conſtitutam, & nuper adeo tam ſollicitè ac ſolemniter conſtabilitam nobiſcum proſcribunt, noſque hoc feriunt, & natali ſolo exterminant diro decreto. In order to know the Vexations they were under before the Revocation of the Edicts, you need only read the Latin Paſſage I am going to quote. It will appear from it, that the King and the Republick of Poland ſtruck many Blows one after another, before they came to the laſt Extremities. France took the ſame courſe (e) againſt the Proteſtants. It appears alſo from the ſame Paſſage, that the Unitarians aſcribed all the Calamities of Poland to the Perſecution which the Sects, ſeparated from the Church of Rome, had ſuffered in that Kingdom, contrary to the Publick Faith. (f) Poloniam deinde infauſto omine commemorant, patriam noſtram; quæ dum non tantum nobis, ſed etiam Evangelicis, & aliis, contra juris jurandi & fœderum fidem, templa adimit, exercendæ religionis libertatem labefactat, & variis preſſuris ob diverſum in ſacris ſenſum, infeſtam ſeſe præbet; vindicem Dei manum in ſe provocavit, & iis ſeſe cladibus & calamitatibus involvit, quarum necdum finem videmus ullum: quæ quamdiu ſartam tectam cuivis ſervavit conſcientiæ & religionis libertatem, altiſſima pace, & omnium bonorum felicitate cumulata floruit; ſed ubi vinculum illud, æquali lege omnes de rebus divinis diſſentientes continens, ſolvi cœpit, omnia.

In pejus ruere, & retro ſublapſa referri.

Thus they ſpeak in a Writing which they preſented to the States of the Province of Holland in the Year 1654.

(B) A Book de Jeſu Chriſto Servatore.] 'Tis a Diſpute againſt a Miniſter (g) of Paris, who being come to Baſil, in his way to Francfort, lodged in the ſame Houſe with him. That Book was Printed in 1595, by a Diſciple of the Author. Socinus's Name was put to it; 'twas the firſt time his Name appeared in his Works. (h) Diſputationem illam edidit poſtmodum Socini amicus & ſequax, Elias Arciſſevius, Polonus, An MDXCV. præfixo, quod nunquam ante factum in aliis ſcriptis fuerat, Auctoris nomine. I ſhall ſay (i) by and by, why he was ſo long without putting his Name to his Books.

(C) Was nothing leſs than Seditious.] He ſo fully condemns the Subjects who take up Arms againſt their Prince, and the Proteſtant Divines who ſaid that it was lawful to oppoſe thoſe who oppreſt the Liberty of Conſcience, that perhaps the greateſt Sticklers for the Arbitrary and Deſpotical Power of Sovereigns never ſpoke more poſſitively. He ſpeaks rather like a Monk, who endeavour'd to make the Proteſtant Reformation odious, than like an Italian Refugee. Theſe are his words: (k) Veſtris belli gerendi Chriſtiano populo conceſſionibus factum eſt, ut contra ipſum magiſtratum Chriſti nomine gaudens populus arma capere non dubitaverit, vobis non modo aſſentientibus, & approbantibus, verum etiam ſuadentibus, atque impellentibus, & libris præterea editis, id & poſſe, & debere fieri publice conteſtantibus, ac contendentibus. Teſtis eſt hodie eorum quæ dico orbis ipſe terrarum, qui hæc fieri aut vidit, aut certiſſima * Chriſtophorus Moorſtinius Pamlikovii Dominus.

---

) See two Letters inted the end the ſtoria forma- nis Po- nicæ, g. 278. ſeq ) Ibid. g. 294.

) Hiſtor. formac. lonicæ, g. 290.

) Ibid. g. 293.

(e) That is before the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685.

(f) Apologia pro veritate accuſata, adverſus edictum Ordinum Hollandiæ pag. 40.

(g) Call'd James Couet. He has been Miniſter of the French Church at Baſil.

(h) Hoornbeeck in Apparatu ad controverſ. Socinianas, pag. 91.

(i) In the Remark E.

(k) Socin. in libro de Magiſtratu, adverſ. Paleologum, part. 1. p. 144, 145. apud Hoornbeck ibid. p. 58.

tiſſima

and even Married a Woman of a good Family. He loſt her in the Year 1587, at which he was (D) extremely Afflicted; and to compleat his Affliction, he was deprived of the Yearly Income (E) of his Patrimony by the Death of Francis de Medicis Great Duke of Florence. The ſatisfaction he had to ſee his Doctrine approved at laſt by many Miniſters, was very much troubled in 1598. for he received a Thouſand Inſults at Cracow, and his Friends had much ado to reſcue him out of the Hands of the Mob. He loſt his Houſhold-goods, and ſome of his Manuſcripts, the loſs of which he (F) extremely Lamented. He loſt, among others, that which he had writ againſt the Atheiſts. To avoid * the like Dangers for the time to come, he retir'd to a Village about Nine Miles diſtant from Cracow, where he ſpent the remaining part of his Life in the Houſe of Abraham Blonski a Poliſh Gentleman. He died there the Third of March 1604 †. His Sect was ſo far from dying with him, that it very much Encreaſed; but ſince it was expell'd from Poland in 1658, it is very much decay'd as to its viſible State: I expreſs my ſelf ſo, becauſe moſt People are perſuaded that it has made an inviſible Progreſs, and grows daily more numerous; and 'tis thought, conſidering the preſent ſtate of things, that Europe would be amazed to appear Socinian in a little time, if Potent Princes made a Publick Profeſſion of that Hereſy, or only order'd that thoſe, who profeſs it, ſhould enjoy the ſame Advantages as others do. 'Tis the Opinion of many People, which makes 'em uneaſie. But others pretend there is nothing to fear, and that Princes will never embrace tiſſima fama accepit, ſed teſtes potiſſimum ſunt duæ nobiliſſimæ provinciæ Gallia, & Germania inferior, quæ civili ſanguine jam diu madent, atque redundant, eo quod perſuaſum ſit, ex certis quibuſdam cauſis populo, ſeu populi parti, adverſus dominum & principem ſuum Bellum gerere licere. Itaque hac ætate noſtra ab iis, qui Chriſtianos ſe eſſe præ cæteris jactant, per ſpeciem Chriſtianæ Religionis aſſerendæ, id fieri vidimus, quod barbari atque efferati homines facere exhorreſcunt, ut ſcilicet contra proprios reges arma ferant. Et tamen (ſi Deo placet) eos, qui ob prædictam ſive in ipſa acie, ſive alibi ceciderunt, & obtruncati ſunt, in martyrum Chriſti numerum referri, publice audivimus. O ſeculum! Hi nimirum ſunt, ut dixi, veſtrarum belli gerendi conceſſionum fructus. Egregii vos ſcilicet magiſtratuum defenſores eſtis, qui populos contra magiſtratum, id eſt reges ſuos armatis, dum, magiſtratu jubente, bella juſte geri poſſe docetis. Rege enim tyranno facto (quod quid ſit, quilibet ſuo modo interpretatur) non regem amplius, ſed populum ipſum, ſive aliquos ex regni proceribus magiſtratum eſſe, vulgus hominum, vobis ipſis indicantibus, vel certe annuentibus, contendit, quibus auctoribus, ex veſtra diſciplina, tyrannum illum, ut ipſi putant, ejuſque vim armis repellere, cumque eo aperte bellum gerrere non dubitant. Unde quot ingentia mala neceſſario proficiſcantur plus ſatis jam experientia novimus, quæ miſere deplorari magis quam apte verbis explicari poſſunt. Hoornbeek having quoted this long Paſſage, adds a ſhort confutation to it, and obſerves (a) among other things, that ſuch a malicious Reflection upon the Conduct of the Dutch againſt Philip II. might have been alledged by the States General, when they expell'd the Socinians in the Year 1598. I wonder that Cocceius, who quotes another Paſſage out of that Book of Socinus, knew not that this Heretick did particularly condemn the Wars of the Dutch againſt Spain. Cocceius's Words deſerve to be inſerted here: It appears from them, that in 1654, the Socinians did very much commend the Conduct which Socinus had ſo much blamed in 1581. (b) Socinus contra Palæologum p. 261 dicit: Ex quo intelligi poteſt, quam præpoſterè ii ſe gerant, qui arma adverſus eos, qui dominantur, capiunt, ut (quemadmodum ajunt ipſi) Dei cultum & religionem tueantur. Ita Socinus A. C. 1581. locutus eſt. Neque eſt, puto, qui credat, eum non harum provinciarum proceres deſignaſſe. Nunc Eques laudat ſcilicet Illuſtrium Ordinum pro præſumpta iſta libertate conſcientiæ geſtum bellum, & Deum hanc præclaram Rempublicam elegiſſe dicit, ut illius libertatis, imò licentiæ, ſedes eſſet. But I muſt obſerve by the by, that Informers are a ſort of Men that will do any thing; for Socinus (c) was Accuſed to the King of Poland as being the Author of a Seditious Libel: And yet Socinus openly condemn'd in that Book all the Writers, who ſay that Subjects may take up Arms, and ſet up for Judges of this Queſtion, Whether a Prince is a Tyrant or not?

a

I don't think that any Socinian has hitherto maintain'd, That it is Lawful to take up Arms againſt ones Prince; the reaſon of it is, that they have had no occaſion to juſtify their Sect upon that Head. It has ſtill its Virginity in that reſpect, and is not like many others, which might ſay as the Curtezan in Petronius, Nunquam memini me Virginem fuiſſe, &c. 'Tis likely the Socinians have not been in proper Conjunctures to imitate them.

(D) He loſt his Wife, in the Year 1587, at which he was extremely Afflicted] His Grief was ſo violent that his Health was impaired by it: He could not ſtudy for ſome time, not being able to recover his ſtrength. His Wife, ſome Months before ſhe died, was delivered of a Daughter, who was Married to a Poliſh Gentleman, by whom ſhe had ſeveral Sons and Daughters. (d) Filiam Agnetem ſuſtulit circa Pentecoſtem anni 1587, ætatis 48, ex qua, cum poſt mortem patris Staniſlao Wizowatio Equiti Polono nupſiſſet, nepotes neptesque etiamnum ſuperſunt. Eodem anno in Septembre amiſit uxorem Eliſabetham: quem caſum viro luctuoſum & acerbum gravis ægritudo corporis excepit: adeo quidem pertinax, ut per aliquot menſes ſtudiorum uſum interciperet.

(E) Deprived of the Yearly Income of his Patrimony, by the death of Francis de Medicis.] During the Life of Iſabella de Medicis, Siſter to the great Duke, and Wife of Paul Giordano de Urſini, the Inquiſitors endeavoured, in vain, to get that Heretick depriv'd of his Eſtate. When ſhe died, the Great Duke himſelf took care to protect him. He ſent him word to return into Italy, and aſſured him that if he would not return, he would let him enjoy his Income, and only recommended to him, not to put his Name to his Books. This was certainly a very great Favour in a Country where the Court of Rome is ſo powerful. (e) Ne qua calamitatis ſpecies abeſſet, eadem fere tempeſtate, per mortem Franciſci Magni Ducis Hetruriæ, fructus bonorum ejus, quem quotannis ex Italia capiebat, penitus ipſi fuit ereptus. Sane aliquanto ante, criminatorum acerbitate ac minis Pontificum, bona ejus in periculum venerant. Sed Iſabellæ Mediceæ Magni Ducis Hetruriæ ſororis, quæ Paulo Jordano Urſino, quem ſupra memoravimus, nupta fuerat, dum vixit, enixo ſtudio, & poſtea ipſius Franciſci Magni Ducis benevolentia, factum eſt, ut illo ſuperſtite annuos ex iis reditus Socinus caperet. Adeo nondum illic meritorum ejus exoleverat memoria, ut literis ac precibus, damnati & exulis, pridem deſtituti ac ſæpe repudiati, principes difficillima in re gratificarentur. Humaniſſimis quoque literis compellatus, & in poſterum quoque bono animo eſſe juſſus eſt, quamdiu vita illis ſuppeteret, dum ne in libris edendis nomen ſuum publice extare pateretur. Sed tunc illos principes infeſtum Socini fatum abſtulerat.

(F) Manuſcripts, the loſs of which he extremely Lamented.] The Scholars of Cracow having ſtirr'd up ſome of the Mobb, they got into Socinus's Houſe; they took him half naked out of his Chamber, tho' he was ſick; they carried him along the Streets; they cryed that he ſhould be Hang'd; they beat him, and

---

* Cum ad tam barbarum furoris exemplum minæ quoque accederent, Cracovia Luclaviciam migravit, in pagum ultima ſua habitatione atque obitu nobilem, novem circiter milliaribus Cracovia diſſitum; ubi aliquot annos, uſus menſa & ædibus viri nobilis Abrahami Blonſcii, vicinus Stoinio vixit. Vita Fauſti Socini fol.  3.

† Taken from the Life written by Samuel Przypcovius a Poliſh Gentleman. It is prefixed to the firſt Volume of the Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum.

(a) Hoornbeeck ibid. pag. 59.

(b) Cocceius in examine Apologiæ Equitis Poloni, pag. 141.

(c) Stephanus tunc Regnum Poloniæ obtinebat. Ejus aures accuſator imbuit ſeditioſi contra Magiſtratum ſcripti criminatione. Indignum eſſe, ſi authori vago atque exuli Italo impune abeat hæc audacia. Libellus contra Palæologum deſignabatur. Qui licet aliud non poſtularet innocentiæ teſtimonium, quam ſui lectionem, declinari tamen periculum placuit. Vita Fauſti Socini, fol.  2 verſo.

(d) Vita F. Socini ibid.

(e) Ibid.

a Sect, which does not approve (G) War, and the Exerciſe of Magiſtracies. That very thing, ſay they, will always prejudice Private Men againſt Socinianiſm; for few People can Renounce (H) Ambition, and give over a Military Life. To be convinced of it one needs only conſult Experience, and conſider what is daily and a Profeſſor had much ado to get him out of the Hands of thoſe Raſcals. His Houſe was Plunder'd, he loſt his Goods; but he particularly lamented the loſs of ſome Manuſcripts, which he would have redeem'd at the price of his Blood. (*) Anno 1598, commota per Scholaſticos infimæ plebis fæce, æger tunc & forte curandæ valetudini intentus, extrahitur è cubiculo ſeminudus, & per forum ac celeberrimas plateas, deſpuentibus ad ſupplicium pleriſque contumelioſe rapitur. Tandem in illa furentium colluvie peſſime mulctatus, à M. Valovita Profeſſore Cracovienſi ægre furenti multitudini eripitur. Direptas tunc ſarcinas & ſuppellectilem, quæque alia rapi potuere, longe minori dolore tulit, atque ſcriptorum quorundam jacturam irreparabilem, quam ipſius vitæ impendio ſeſe redempturum fuiſſe ſæpe profeſſus eſt. Periit ibi una inſignis contra Atheos liber, quem refellendis ingenioſis magni cujuſdam Viri commentis ſuſceperat.

(*) Bib. [illegible] p.

(G) Princes will never embrace a Sect, which does not approve War.] How many Sovereigns make a Trade of their own Subjects, as a Private Man deals in Horſes and Sheep? They raiſe Troops not to defend their Frontiers, or to Attack their Enemies, but to make 'em ſerve other Princes for Money. They are very well pleaſed to have many Subjects always ready to Liſt themſelves upon the firſt beating of a Drum, they get a great deal by it; and therefore they don't deſire by no means that they ſhou'd turn Socinians: their Treaſury wou'd be the worſe for it. On the other ſide, moſt Sovereign Princes love to make Irruptions into the Neighbouring States, or to Confederate with other Princes who are at War; and 'tis of great Moment for them that it ſhou'd be known, that whoever Attacks them will not do it with Impunity. Nothing therefore cou'd be more inſignificant than to Command Men, who are engaged not to bear Arms out of a Principle of Religion. There goes a Story, which perhaps is only a meer Jeſt, viz. That the King of Poland being Attack'd by the Rebellious Coſacks and by the Tartars, and wanting all his Subjects to oppoſe the Enemies, ſent word to the Socinians to take up Arms. They anſwered, that their Conſcience did not allow them to ſhed Humane Blood, nor to do any Harm to reaſonable Creatures. Whereupon, it was propoſed to them to go to the Army without putting any Shot in their Muſkets: They were told that they wou'd make a ſhew; which wou'd prove of ſome uſe, becauſe their Enemies wou'd be more Afraid: But they had much ado to like that Expedient. See the end of the next Remark.

I have it from very good Hands, that the Poliſh Gentlemen of the Socinian perſuaſion went to the War, when the Laws of the Kingdom required it, and even that ſome of 'em profeſt a Military Life, without being obliged to it out of a Neceſſity of obeying the Laws of the Kingdom: Their Sect did not approve their Conduct in the laſt caſe.

(H) Few People can renounce Ambition, and give over a Military Life.] Thoſe, who Love War, are innumerable, and Acted by very imperious Motives. Gentlemen are Animated by the only deſire of raiſing themſelves, and acquiring Glory, or, beſides, by a deſire of ſupplying their Wants. The Soldiers are Animated by Lazineſs and Debauchery: They hope to be Idle the greateſt part of the time, they hope to Pillage and Plunder and to have plenty of good Wine and many Debauched Women. In every Town thoſe, who are qualified to pretend to Offices, ſue for them with great earneſtneſs, and leave nothing unattempted to obtain them. As ſoon as there is a Vacancy, you immediately ſee many Competitors, who have long before open'd the way by their Suits and Liberalities: Which plainly ſhews, that the deſire of Honours and Dignities is very quick and general. From whence it ought to be concluded that the Socinian Religion cannot ſuit a whole Nation nor the greateſt Number; it is only Adapted to ſome Perſons of a particular Temper: And if it be true, that a Pope hearing that the Proteſtants puniſh'd Adulterers and Fornicators, Cried out, (a) that their Religion wou'd be of no long Continuance, it may be affirm'd that his Prognoſtication wou'd have been more juſt, if he had applied it to a Sect of Men, who will neither bear Arms nor exerciſe any Office.

WHETHER the rejection of Myſteries is a good way to get many Followers.

I deſire I may be allowed to impart to my Readers an Obſervation that was made in my hearing againſt thoſe, who ſay that all the Italians, who forſook Calviniſm to ſet up a new Arianiſm, deſign'd to Form a greater Party than that of the Reformers of Germany and Geneva. 'Tis ſuppoſed that tho' they did not doubt of Myſteries, they pretended to oppoſe them, in order to have many Followers. (b) The Captivating of ones underſtanding to the belief of three Perſons in the Divine Nature, and of a God-Man, is a heavy Yoke for Reaſon: Chriſtians are therefore very much eaſed when freed from ſuch a Yoke; and conſequently 'tis probable that vaſt crowds will follow a Man, who removes ſo great a Burthen. Hence it was, that thoſe Italians, who fled into Poland, denied the Trinity, the Hypoſtatical Union, Original Sin, abſolute Predeſtination, &c. They thought that ſince Calvin ſhaking off the Neceſſity of believing all the incomprehenſible things contain'd in Tranſubſtantiation, brought over many People to him, they wou'd make a greater Progreſs ſtill, if they rejected all the inconceivable Doctrines which that Reformer had kept. But it may be anſwered, that they had been very ſilly and unworthy of the Italian Education, if they had made uſe of ſuch a Cheat. The Speculative Myſteries of Religion are little troubleſome to moſt People: They will tire a Profeſſor of Divinity very intent upon them, in order to explain 'em and anſwer the Objections of the Hereticks. Some other ſtudious Men, who examin them very nicely, may be alſo weary of the reſiſtance of their Reaſon; but all other Men are eaſy in that reſpect: they believe or fancy they believe all that is ſaid of 'em, and quietly reſt in that Perſuaſion. None therefore but a kind of a Viſionary can think that Citizens and Peaſants, Soldiers and Gentlemen wou'd be freed from a Heavy Yoke, if they were diſpenſed from believing the Trinity, and the Hypoſtatical Union. They like much better a Doctrine that is Myſterous, Incomprehenſible and above Reaſon: Men are more apt to admire what they don't comprehend; they form to themſelves a more Sublime and Comforting Idea of it. All the ends of Religion are much better to be found in Incomprehenſible things: They inſpire a greater Admiration, Reſpect, Fear and Conſtancy. If Falſe Religions have had their Myſteries, 'tis becauſe they have been forged by the Ape of the True one. God out of his Infinite Wiſdom has Accommodated himſelf to the State of Man, by mixing Darkneſs with Light in his Revelation. If a Man had a mind to invent an Hypotheſis only for Philoſophers, and ſuch as might be call'd Religio Medici, 'tis likely, he wou'd think himſelf obliged to lay aſide the Doctrines that can hardly be comprehended; but then he muſt not expect to be followed by the Multitude. If he had a mind to ſatisfy his Vanity in that reſpect, he ſhou'd do as the Hero of Lorenzo Gratian (c). But granting that thoſe Italians have been ſo ſilly as to think that People wou'd be freed from an Intolerable Yoke, if they were diſpenſed from believing the Trinity, &c. muſt we alſo grant that they thought the Prohibition of Civil and Military Imployments wou'd not be a Yoke a Thouſand times Heavier than that which they intended to Break? Will any one be ſo unreaſonable as to require that we ſhou'd have ſuch a Notion of thoſe Men, who wanted neither Wit nor Addreſs, as every Body owns? What I am going to ſay will doubtleſs reſolve the Queſtion. When Men of Abilities, deſigning to ſet up a New Sect, pitch upon a looſe Method, and ſubſtitute an eaſy Doctrine in the Room of a Difficult one, it may

---

(a) See the Article Abelians.

(b) See l'Eſprit de Mr. Arnaud tom. 1. chap. 6. pag. 211.

(c) That Author ſays, that el Heroe platique incomprehenſibilidades de caudal: And that he diſcovers him-without being comprehended. Gran treta en el arte de entendidos oſtentarſe al conocimiento, pero no a la comprehenſion. See Father Bouhours, Entretines d'Ariſte, p. m. 54.

daily practiced. They alledge ſome other (I) Reaſons very proper to ſhew that this Sect is not like to encreaſe. Thoſe, who ſay that the Socinians have a full Liberty of Conſcience (K) in the United Provinces, are little acquainted with Hiſtory be ſaid that they don't pitch upon the moſt proper Method to ſucceed in their deſign; but it ought not to be ſuppoſed that they are contented to ſuppreſs Speculative Myſteries, and that they keep the whole Practical Part, and even aggravate the Yoke of the Moral Precepts. And yet this is ſuppoſed concerning the Founders of the Socinian Hereſy; and therefore what is ſaid of their deſign is a miſtake. They are more rigid than other Chriſtians about the Prohibition of Vengeance, and the Contempt of Worldly Honours; they are not for any mitigated or figurative Explications of ſuch Texts of the Scripture as relate to Morality. They have revived the Severity of the Primitive Chriſtians, who did not approve that the Faithful ſhou'd concern themſelves with Magiſtracies, (a) and ſhou'd have a hand in the Death of their Neighbours, ſo far that they wou'd not have 'em to accuſe a Malefactor. The Prohibition of Civil and Military Offices is a heavier Burthen than the Prohibition of Vengeance; for it excludes the Expedients of deceiving one ſelf and others. Thoſe, who Preach moſt earneſtly againſt Vengeance, find out a Thouſand Diſtinctions to elude that Precept. Some ſay, they don't hate their Neighbour as he is a Man, but as he is an Enemy of God: Others proteſt that they do him no harm to Revenge a private Quarrel, but for God's Glory. This is approving by the help of ſome Diſtinctions what one pretends to Condemn. Some deceive themſelves; Others are meer Hypocrites who deceive the World: But no ſubterfuge can be alledged as to the Doctrine, which forbids going to the War, and exerciſing Civil Offices; thoſe who profeſs ſuch a Doctrine muſt neceſſarily follow it; the Practice cannot be ſeparated from the Theory; there are no Diſtinctions nor Equivocations. 'Tis therefore a true conſtraint; 'tis not a Tranſient Maceration, like that of thoſe who Diſcipline themſelves once a Year; 'tis a perpetual and continual State. We may therefore affirm that thoſe Italian Refugees were no Cheats: They were deceived by their Subtilties, and by relying too much upon Reaſon; and if they kept only part of the Chriſtian Doctrines, 'tis becauſe their firſt Principle, whereby they will admit nothing that is directly againſt their Reaſon, led them to it. This is probably the cauſe of their choice; had they been meer Cheats, greedy of Followers, they wou'd have gone another way to Work. Let us therefore Condemn their Principle, as a deceitful one, without pretending to ſearch the Hearts. Their Principle debaſes Religion, and changes it into Philoſophy. The Greatneſs, Authority and Sovereignty of God require that we ſhou'd walk by Faith and not by Sight.

The Heathens ſaid that Myſteries make God appear more Majeſtuous, and are an Image of his Nature, becauſe he cannot be perceived by our Senſes. Ἡ κρύψις ἡ μυστικὴ τῶν ἱερῶν σεμνοποιεῖ τὸ θεῖον, μιμουμένη τὴν φύσιν αὐτοῦ ἐκφεύγουσαν ἡμῶν τὴν αἴσθησιν. Myſtica ſacrorum occultatio majeſtatem numini conciliat imitans ejus naturam effugientem ſenſus noſtros. They are Strabo's Words pag. 322, of the 10th Book.

But what I am going to ſay may undeceive thoſe, who flatter themſelves that the averſneſs of the Socinians for Military and Civil Offices will always be a great Obſtacle to the Progreſs of that Sect. 'Tis no Article of the Socinian Faith that one ought to renounce Civil and Military Offices. The Socinians are in that reſpect more indulgent than the Mennonites. They don't Scruple to exerciſe publick Imployments in Tranſilvania, and 'tis likely they would bear Arms as other Men do, if they had a Sovereign of their Religion.

(I) They alledge ſome other Reaſons.] For if it be conſidered that moſt Men are more inclined to acquieſce in their inward Sentiments, than to follow the Thread of many Conſequences Methodically Connected and proceeding from diſtinct Notions, and beſides that may be quickly and eaſily offended they the Paradoxes which Reaſon brings forth, it will appear ſomewhat probable that the Socinian Syſtem is not Adapted to moſt People. It may rather lead ſtudious and ſpeculative Men to Scepticiſm. There will always be ſome thing in that Syſtem, whereby People may be kept from it: The Eternity of Matter, God's Extenſion, the Limitation of his Extenſion, and of the Divine Knowledge, and of Hell Torments, are Socinian Doctrines, which being Eloquently repreſented to Princes and their Subjects, will always inſpire them with great Horror. If it be a convenient thing to each private Perſon not to be afraid of being puniſh'd after this Life, it is ſtill more inconvenient to think that one is daily Converſing with People who are not afraid of it. And therefore 'tis not the Intereſt of Private Perſons, that any Doctrine tending to leſſen the Fear of Hell Torments ſhou'd be admitted in their Country; and 'tis probable that the Preachers of ſuch a looſe Doctrine will always be more offenſive than acceptable to the publick. An Author ſays, that (b) the ſame Perſons, who reject the Goſpel by Reaſon of the Auſterity of its Moral Precepts, would expreſs a greater Horror for a Religion enjoyning them to plunge themſelves into the moſt infamous Diſorders, if it was offered to them, when they are able to Reaſon, and before they are blinded by the prejudices of Education. He argues upon it, but he has omitted one of the beſt Reflections; for he ſays nothing of Self-Love and Perſonal Intereſt. 'Tis true, that a wicked Man wou'd like a Doctrine, with reſpect to his Conſcience, that ſhou'd allow him to be a Poiſoner, and to Commit Adultery, Perjury, &c. but he wou'd not like it upon many other Accounts. He has a Mother, a Wife, ſome Siſters and Neeces, who wou'd vex him horribly, if they grew infamous for their Lewdneſs. There are more People, who can Poiſon, Rob, and Cheat him, &c. than there are againſt whom he can Commit the ſame Crimes. Every Body is more capable of being offended than of offending others; for of 20 equal Perſons, 'tis Evident that every one of 'em is leſs ſtrong againſt 19 than 19 (c) againſt one. 'Tis therefore the Intereſt of each Private Perſon, tho' never ſo wicked, that Men ſhou'd be taught that there are Puniſhments after this Life.

(K) That the Socinians have a full Liberty of Conſcience in the United Provinces, are little acquainted with Hiſtory.] The Unitarians made ſeveral Attempts to ſettle in Holland. The firſt is aſcribed to Eraſmus Joannes Rector of a College at Antwerp, who Publiſh'd a Book in 1585, without putting his Name to it. That Book is Intitled, Antitheſis Doctrinæ Chriſti & Antichriſti de uno vero Deo. Zanchius confuted it the Year following. The Second Attempt was that of Cornelius Daems, a Civilian of Mechlen, who removed from Tergow, where he reſided, to Utrecht, in order to diſperſe ſome Manuſcript Tracts of Socinus. The Magiſtrates having notice of it reſolved to Arreſt him; but he ran away: His Papers were ſeized, but he recovered them ſome Months after, becauſe the Government of the Town came into other Hands. The Third Attempt was that of Oſtorode, and Vaivode, who came from Poland to Amſterdam in 1598, with many Socinian Books Printed and Manuſcript, which they began to get Tranſlated into Dutch (d). The Magiſtrates having ſeized all thoſe Books ſent 'em to the Univerſity of Leyden and then to the States General, having firſt made a ſevere Reprimand to thoſe two Socinians and Commanded them to leave the Country. The States General, being informed of the Judgment paſt upon thoſe Books by the Divines of Leyden, ordered them to be burnt in the Preſence of Oſtorode and Vaivode, and thoſe two Men to depart from the United Provinces within ten days (e). The Judgment of the Leyden Divines imported that thoſe Books were little different from Mahometiſm, and

---

(a) Non enim cum occidere Deus vetat, latrocinari nos tantum prohibet, quod ne per leges quidem publicas licet, ſed ea quoque ne fiant monet, quæ apud homines pro licitis habentur. Ita neque militare juſto licebit, cujus militia eſt in ipſa juſtitia, neque vero accuſare quemquam crimine capitali, quia nihil diſtat, utrumne ferro, an verbo potius occidas, quoniam occiſio ipſa prohibetur. Itaque in hoc Dei præcepto nullam prorſus exceptionem fieri oportere, quin occidere hominem ſit ſemper nefas, quem Deus ſanctum animal eſſe voluit. Lactant lib. 6. cap. 20. pag. m. 426.

(b) Penſ diverſes ſ les Comè tes, p. pag. 598.

(c) Withou ſuppoſing that the 19. Att concert a gainſt the 20th

(d) Taken from Giſbertus Vo etius Diſ put. tom. 3. p. 811.

(e) Hoorn beeck, Apparatu ad contro verſias Socinia nas, pag. 98.

Hiſtory, and will plainly ſee the contrary, if they read the * Anſwer that was made to M. Stoupp's Letters: They'll find in it the dates † of many Ordinances publiſh'd againſt the Sectaries. I || ſhall ſay ſomething of thoſe which concern the Socinians, and I ſhall dwell ſomewhat longer (L) upon that of the Year 1653. The contain'd ſome Blaſphemies, that cou'd not be Tolerated among Chriſtians without great Impiety. (a) Scripta iſta ad Turciſmum proxime accedere, & veram æternamque Deitatem Chriſti Filii Dei, & Spiritus S. officium Chriſti, beneficia ejus ſalutaria, & Baptiſmi ſancti inſtitutionem, & noſtrum Religioſum erga eum officium evertere, & ſimilia multa adeo blaſphema, ut ſine graviſſima impietate nec in vulgus ſpargi, nec inter Chriſtianos ferri poſſint continere. Adolphus Venator, a Miniſter of Alcmaer was confined to an Iſland in 1617. for Writing a Book, that favoured of Socinianiſm, quod portenta Sarmatica ſaperet (b). The Schiſm of the Arminians made way for the Introduction of Socinianiſm into Holland; for they don't refuſe to hold an Eccleſiaſtical Communion with the Socinians; and therefore the latter might ſtay in many Towns of the United Provinces without being known. The (c) Prince of Tranſilvania intercepted a Letter in 1638. wherein the Socinian John (*) Sartorius, who lived at Amſterdam, acquainted a (d) Miniſter of his Sect, that there were many (e) Perſons of their perſuaſion in Holland. 'Tis certain they had ſome Followers at that time, and that their Books were diſperſed up and down. In order to put a ſtop to it, the Magiſtrates of Amſterdam Condemn'd ſome Pieces (f) of Volkelius to be burnt in the Year 1642. The Synods of Holland have appeared very Zealous to prevent the Propagation of that Hereſy. They (g) preſented a Petition to the States of the Province in 1628. wherein they alledged ſeveral Reaſons why they ſhou'd not Tolerate it, and repreſented, among other things, (h) that ſuch a Toleration would make the Common-Wealth of the United Provinces ſtink all over Chriſtendom. That Remonſtrance was Publiſh'd and Confuted. Thoſe, who confuted it, ſaid in anſwer to that particular Reaſon, that (i) Poland was therefore very ſtinking, ſince it granted Liberty of Conſcience to the Socinians. Whereupon Voetius ſays, they never had ſuch a Liberty in Poland; and that the contrary appear'd ſome Years after by the ill uſage they met with. (k) Sed infelices illi hiſtorici perperam præſupponebant Regis & regni conceſſionem; quæ nulla erat (l), nec unquam fuerat: & paucis annis poſt ſatis oſtendit regnum Polonicum quid iſtic libertatis cuivis ſectæ, & inter eas Socinianæ conceſſum ſit. Quærant modo ex fratribus ſuis Sartorio, Jona Slichtingio, aliiſque, quo loco nunc ſit libertas ipſorum.

(L) I ſhall dwell ſomewhat longer upon the Ordinance of the Year 1653.] I don't know what the States of Holland anſwered in 1628, to the Remonſtrances of their Synods; but I have read the Acts of what was done in a like caſe in the Year 1653. The Deputies of the ſame Synods repreſented to them that the Followers of Socinus, a ſort of Men who deſtroyed Chriſtianity, the Reſurrection of the Dead, the Hopes of an Eternal Life, &c. were ſo bold as to come into the United Provinces, and particularly into Holland, to pervert the Faithful, and tear the Church; that it was well known how Zealous the Ragotski's had been againſt thoſe Hereticks in Tranſilvania, and that ſome Decrees had been made againſt 'em in Poland in the Years 1638. and 1647. That they had been expell'd from Poland; that their Church, their Library and their Printing Houſe had been deſtroyed, becauſe they had in the Preſs a very Scandalous Book againſt the Myſtery of the Trinity. (m) Quemadmodum Rakociana domus in Tranſſylvania adverſus hos errorum ſeminatores zelaverit; quid Anno 1638. & 1647. in Polonia contra ipſos actum ſit, quomodo ex Polonia ſint ejecti, & ipſorum bibliotheca diſperſa, ipſorum cœtus disjectus, templum, ſchola, typographeum, ipſis adempta, quòd librum ſub prelo haberent hac inſcriptione, Tormentum throno Trinitatem deturbans, in recenti memoria eſt. That the States General proceeded ſeverely againſt 'em in 1598. That in 1619, by the Suggeſtion of the Engliſh Ambaſſador, all the Provinces were informed of the Arrival of ſome Socinians, and deſired to prevent the Evil by their Decrees. That in the Year 1630. the States of Holland acquainted the Synod of Amſterdam with their Reſolution, importing that in what concern'd the Proſcription of the Socinians and their Books, all neceſſary Orders wou'd be given about it, as ſoon as the State of the thing ſhou'd be more exactly known. (n) Anno 1640. Synodo Amſterodamenſi hoc decretum Illuſtrium & Præpotentium Ordinum intimatum eſt: Quod attinet Socinianorum excluſionem & librorum ejus Sectæ, ſcitum eſt, ſi accuratius Illuſtres Ordines doceantur, Socinianos aut libros ipſorum in hac provincia apparere, ipſos tunc promtè adverſus ipſos & ipſorum libros prout res exegerit, ſtatuturos. That the States General ordered the 17th of July 1651, purſuant to the Advice of the States of the Province of Holland, given the 12th of April foregoing (o), that the inſolence of the Sectaries ſhou'd be repreſs'd, and good Edicts Publiſh'd againſt the Socinian Books, &c. Next to this, the Deputies of the Synods repreſent, that 'tis plain thoſe Hereticks go all over the Country, make it their Buſineſs to get Proſelytes, and diſperſe many (p) ill Books; that they are the moſt dangerous Enemies the Church can have, ſince beſides their being Cunning, and Apparently Devout, they teach a Doctrine that is not above the reach of Reaſon. They conclude, 1. With moſt Humbly beſeeching their Illuſtrious Lordſhips to prevent the Evil in due time, by proceeding againſt the Perſons, and forbidding Conventicles and prohibiting Books: 2. With intimating that they hope their Lordſhips will Execute the Ordinances already made. (q) Rogant ſubmiſsè Illuſtrium VV. DD. cultores, Deputati Synodorum Auſtralis & Borealis Hollandiæ, ipſorum nomine, ut huic malo in tempore obviam eatur, ut in perſonas ſtatuatur, ut conventicula ipſorum & libri prohibeantur, ut prela & typographiæ iſto ſtercore non contaminentur, & officinæ tam damnoſa merce vacuentur. The States of Holland Communicated this Synodal Petition to the Faculty of Divinity of Leyden, deſiring to have their Opinion about it. The Faculty anſwered, that nothing (r) cou'd be more Horrid and Abominable than the Socinian Sect; that it differ'd but little from Paganiſm; that it was certain it crept into the Country, and that there was a neceſſity to Pray to God that he wou'd inſpire the Sovereigns with a Steady and Holy Reſolution of removing all thoſe Blaſphemies, and ſuppreſſing ſuch wicked Books. Conſilium ſapiens, utile avertendis omnibus Blaſphemiis & abolendis tam noxiis libris. Whereupon the States made an Edict, whereby all Perſons, whatever Condition they might be of, were forbidden to bring any Socinian Hereſy into the Country, or to impart it to others, and hold any Aſſembly with ſuch an intent. They declared that all Offenders ſhou'd be baniſh'd the firſt time from the Province, as Blaſphemers of God's Name, and diſturbers of the Publick Peace, and in caſe of a relapſe they ſhou'd be puniſh'd as ſhou'd be thought fit. They alſo forbad under ſevere Penalties, the impreſſion and ſale of the Socinian Books, and ordered that this Edict ſhou'd be Publiſh'd and Poſted up where ever it ſhou'd be requiſite, that none might pretend to be Ignorant of it. This is what they decreed the 19th of September 1653. The Magiſtrates (ſ) of Utrecht Publiſh'd a like Edict in the Year 1655.

The Socinians were not ſilent: They employed one (t) of their beſt Writers to Compoſe an Apology, that came out in the Year 1654, with this Title, Apologia pro veritate accuſata ad illuſtriſſimos & potentiſſimos Hollandiæ & Weſt-Friſiæ Ordines, conſcripta ab Equite Polono. That piece is well Written, and with a great deal of Art; the Author ſhews a great Moderation, and boldly denies the Accuſations. He alledges the ſame General (v) Reaſons made uſe fœteat. id. ibid. (k) Id. ib. (l) The Socinians maintain contrary in the Paſſages above quoted Remark A. See alſo Remark L. (m) See Cocceius's Anſwer ad Apologiam E- Poloni, fol. * 2. verſo.

---

† Page 171.

|| In the Remark L.

(n) Ibid.

(o) Decretum eſt, ut non tantum protervia & inſolentia Sectariorum, ut oportet, corrigatur, ſed & idonea Edicta adverſus omnia gravia peccata, ſcandaloſos libros & ſcripta Sociniana, & ſimilia, publicentur & proponantur. Ibid.

(p) Many of 'em are ſpecified in the Remonſtrance.

(q) Cocceius ibid. fol. * 3 verſo.

(r) Nihil exitiabilius & magis horrendum iſta hæreſi excogitari poteſt . . . nihil aut parum differt à Paganiſmo.

(ſ) Voetius, Polit. Eccleſ. tom. 1. p. 533.

(t) Jonas Slichtingius. See the Biblioth. Antitr. pag. 130.

(v) I uſe that Epithet, becauſe the Circumſtances with reſpect to the ſeverity of the Penal Laws, &c. are not the ſame as here in Tertullian*'s and* Calvin*'s Apologies*

The Accuſation Publiſh'd by a Modern Author is altogether improbable, viz. that uſe of by Tertullian in his Apology, and by Calvin in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Inſtitutions, and by many other Reformers in their Books againſt the Sorbonne. 'Tis an unavoidable Inconveniency: A Falſe Church, which pleads for Toleration, and complains of the Penal Laws, alledges the ſame common Topicks with the true Church in a like caſe. The true Church, which deſires that the Sovereigns would extirpate a falſe one, uſes the ſame Motives and Arguments alledged by the falſe one for the Extirpation of the true Church. It were to be wiſh'd that Communions ſo different in their Tenets, ſhou'd not be like one another in uſing the ſame Style and the ſame Topicks; but ſuch a thing is not to be expected in this World. The Evil is paſt curing in that reſpect: Man among other Exerciſes is obliged to ſearch after Truth, in the midſt of a Hundred Pretenders, who expreſs themſelves the ſame way as to general Reaſons. But I proceed to another Obſervation.

When People preſent a Petition againſt a Party, they ought to take ſpecial care not to alledge any Facts whereof they are not well informed, or which are only equivocal Proofs; for ſome time after they are Confuted in an unpleaſant manner. For Inſtance, the Poliſh Knight maintains, 1. That the (a) Rogotski's never Perſecuted the Socinians, and (b) never deprived them of the Liberty of Conſcience which they had granted 'em. 2. That no advantage ſhou'd have been taken of the Vexations the Socinians were expoſed to in Poland, nor of the Deſtruction of their Church at Racovia, ſince the Evangelicks met with the ſame croſſes in that Country, and received at Vilna a treatment like that of Racovia two years after, and under the ſame pretence. (c) Poloniam deinde, infauſto omine commemorant, patriam noſtram; quæ dum non tantum nobis, ſed etiam (d) Evangelicis, & aliis, contra juriſjurandi & fœderum fidem, templa adimit, exercendæ religionis libertatem labefactat, & variis preſſuris, ob diverſum in ſacris ſenſum, infeſtam ſeſe præbet; vindicem Dei manum in ſe provocavit——(e) Everſum nobis fuerit Racoviæ templum, quanquam de everſione templi decretum nihil habet, eo quo dicunt anno: ſed eodem exemplo everſum eſt & Vilnæ Evangelicis biennio poſt ſuum templum. Pulſi fuerint Miniſtri Racovia, quanquam Miniſtri Racovia decreto pulſi non ſunt, ſed ſoli Profeſſores; pulſi ſunt & Vilna; proſcripti fuerint illi; proſcripti ſunt & iſti & quidem illi ipſi, qui paulo ante Racoviano caſui ex ambone inſultaverant. Sic in nobis cœptum, in Evangelicis, qui permiſerant, ulterius progreſſum eſt exemplum. Exempla enim tramites quærunt, nec ibi conſiſtunt, ubi cœpere. Occaſio & prætextus utriuſque injuriæ & calamitatis innocentibus inferendæ fuit idem, nempe imago juvenili quorundam temeritate violata. 3. That what happen'd at Racovia was not grounded upon the Impreſſion of a Book, whoſe Title was injurious to the Trinity. He proves it demonſtratively by the decree of the Diet, which mention'd no ſuch Book, and wou'd have certainly mention'd it, if it had been the reaſon of inflicting ſuch a Puniſhment upon their Sect. He adds that John Lætus, the only Author who mentions the Impreſſion of that Book, does not ſay that it occaſion'd the deſtruction of their School, and of their Printing-Houſe. (f) Nam cauſa diſturbationis Racovianæ, quam accuſatores noſtros coram vobis pro vera venditare non pudet, ipſo Decreto Comitiali manifeſtæ vanitatis coarguitur. Ajunt enim cauſam fuiſſe, quod librum habuerimus ſub prælo, hoc titulo, Tormentum throno Trinitatem deturbans. Nullus liber unquam hoc titulo inter nos extitit, nedum ut ſub prælo fuerit.——Auctor (1) iſtius commenti fuit Lætus quidam, Moravus, qui profugum ſeſe ex Moravia, religioniſve an rebellionis cauſa oblitus; ſed odii in nos ex ſuorum diſciplina concepti non immemor, in ipſa patria noſtra, quæ exulem benigne ſuſcepit & fovit, eo proterviæ progreſſus eſt, ut nobis patriæ civibus inſultare auſus fuerit, edito fumorum pleno libello; inter quos & hæc de libro iſto fabula eſt. Et tamen hic ipſe, quamvis vanus Auctor, dicit quidem illo ipſo tempore, quo res Eccleſiæ noſtræ Racoviæ ſunt everſæ, deſudaſſe noſtros in extrudendo iſto peſtifero, quem ait, libello: ſed hanc fuiſſe cauſam adverſariis illorum evertendorum non dicit: Juventus, inquit, Scholæ cauſam præbuit, quæ effigiem crucis depecerat. Sed narrationi illius per ſe vanæ, quo ſpecioſior eſſet, aſſumentum aliquid fuit ab accuſatoribus. Cocceius Publiſh'd a very ſolid Anſwer to that Manifeſto of the Socinians, in the Year 1656. I have conſulted it particularly upon thoſe three Heads; for I expected to find the Apologiſt confounded: But I have found nothing in it neither upon the firſt, nor upon the ſecond Head; and as for the third, all that Cocceius ſays is, that there was a Report, that the Socinians had ſuch a Book in the Preſs, when they were ſo ill uſed at Racovia. (g) Quam cauſam habuerint Poloni eripiendæ nobis Racoviæ, non diſputo. Certum eſt, eo tempore vulgatum fuiſſe rumorem, tale, quale libellus Deputatorum memorat, ſcriptum ſub prælo ſudaſſe. Uncertain Reports ſhou'd never be depended upon in Juridical Pieces, ſuch as the Remonſtrances of a Synod to their Sovereign, deſign'd to obtain the ſuppreſſion of a Sect. In Accuſations that concern Doctrines, it is more eaſy to juſtify an unexact Aſſertion: For inſtance, it was poſitively ſaid in the Remonſtrance, that the Socinians denied the Reſurrection of the Dead, and Eternal Life. The Faculty of Divinity at Leyden affirm'd likewiſe that they deny, as the Sadducees do, the Life of the Soul ſeparated from the Body, and the Reſurrection of the Wicked. The Poliſh Knight maintain'd that ſuch an Accuſation was a Calumny. (h) Quis non cupiat animas etiam corporibus carentes vivere, agere, intelligere; Dei conſpectu & gaudiis cæleſtibus perfrui, pro nobis, in corpore adhuc, tanquam in carcere agentibus, Deum orare, noſtrique curam gerere? quis non pedibus in hanc ſententiam eat?——(i) Nos animarum, quamdiu ſine corporibus ſunt, ſtatum, Deo relinquimus, certiſſima fide, quæ propria Chriſtianorum eſt, mortuorum reſurrectionem complexi——Negare nos ajunt impiorum reſurrectionem. Nos vero cum Apoſtolo (2) ſpem habemus in Deo, reſurrectionem fore mortuorum, juſtorum & injuſtorum; juſtorum ad vitæ æternæ gaudia; injuſtorum ad ignis æterni ſupplicia. Et (3) hunc terrorem Domini, (qui haud quaquam vanus in ullis futurus eſt) ſcientes, homines ſuademus, Deo autem manifeſti ſumus, ſperamus vero etiam conſcientiis veſtris fore manifeſtos. Cocceius was not ſilenced by this denial, grounded upon a Book, in ſome meaſure Liturgical and at leaſt Authentick, ſince it was an Apology for the Confeſſion of Faith: He (k) confeſt he knew nothing of that Book; but he alledged ſeveral Quotations, and had ſomething to ſay.

I ſhall obſerve by the by, that nothing has proved more prejudicial to the Socinians, than a certain Doctrine which they thought very proper to remove the greateſt difficulty a Philoſopher can find in our Theology. A thinking Man, who only conſults Reaſon and the bright Idea of an Infinite Goodneſs, which morally ſpeaking, makes up the Principal Character of the Divine Nature, will be offended at what we read in the Scripture concerning the Eternity of Hell Torments; eſpecially if he adds to it the Paraphraſes, and the many (l) Explications that are to be found in ſeveral Books. Deus optimus maximus were the current and uſual Titles of the Divine Nature among the Ancient Heathens: 'Twas their ſet form when they ſpoke of God, and they never ſaid Deus ſeveriſſimus, implacabiliſſimus. The two Epithets Optimus & Maximus, properly ſpeaking, were only the Image and Expreſſion of one ſole quality, I mean a Supreme Goodneſs; for Goodneſs ought to be attended with Greatneſs to appear in all its Luſtre. But what is Greatneſs? Is it any thing elſe beſides Magnanimity, Generoſity, Liberality, Magnificence, and pouring out of Favours? This natural Idea, which made the Heathens ſpeak in that manner, is confirm'd by the Scripture, wherein the Goodneſs of God is all along extoll'd above his other Attributes. Doing good, ſhewing Mercy, is the daily and pleaſant work of God: Chaſtizing, Puniſhing, ſhewing Severity, is his unuſual and unpleaſant Work. And therefore unleſs a Man humbly ſubmits

(a) Apolog. pro veritat. accuſata, pag. 39.

(b) Quibus hæc illuſtriſſima Domus pacem & libertatem conſcientiæ ac religionis juratam, ſacroſancte cuſtodivit ſemper, & etiamnum cuſtodit. Ibid.

(c) Ibid. pag. 40.

(d) See John Lætus in Compend. Hiſtoriæ p. m. 532. & alibi, where he ſhews that the Evangelicks of Poland loſt their Churches in ſeveral places, ſometimes by Popular Commotions, and ſometimes by unjuſt Pretences.

(e) Ibid. pag. 41.

(f) Ibid. pag. 42.

(1) Joan. Læti Compend. Hiſtor. Leidæ 1643. pag. 766. and pag. 543. of the Edition 1661.

(g) Cocceius in examine Apologiæ Equitis Poloni, cap. 116.

(h) Apologia Equitis Poloni, p. 77, 78.

(i) Ibid. pag. 78.

(2) Act. 24. 15.

(3) 2 Cor. v. 11, 12. Vide et Confeſſ. vindic. cap. 20.

(k) Negari a ſuis impiorum reſurrectionem, negat Eques. Citat in margine Confeſſ. vindic. cap. 22. Ipſa Confeſſio Belgica, quæ Apologiæ adjungi ſolet, in capita diſtincta non eſt. Quid libri ſit Confeſſ. vindic. adhuc ignoro. Cocceius ubi ſupra pag. 220.

(l) See the Book, Intitled, Les merveilles de l'autre monde, written by a Canon of Riez call'd Arnoux.

that the Socinian Hereſies (M) were privately taught at Port-Royal; and 'tis certain he has given out a falſe Story about it. It has been * confuted. Moſt People mits to the Authority of ſome Paſſages in the Goſpel, he will not believe that moſt Men are Condemn'd to Hell Torments for ever. The Socinians relying too much upon Reaſon, have limited thoſe Torments the more carefully, becauſe they conſidered that no advantage wou'd accrue from thoſe Torments to the Sufferers or the Spectators. They hoped to bring over to Chriſtianity by that means thoſe, who are offended with a Notion, that ſeems little conſiſtent with the Supreme Goodneſs. But thoſe Hereticks were not aware that this very thing wou'd make 'em more odious, and more unworthy of a Toleration than all their other Tenets. After all, few People are offended with the Doctrine concerning the Eternal duration of Hell Torments, and are like (a) Theodorus Camphuſius. He was a Miniſter, born at Gorcum in Holland: He turn'd Socinian, and publickly declared he wou'd have had no Religion, had he not met with ſome Books, wherein he found that Hell Torments will not laſt for ever. (b) Memini, meminerunt & alii, fuiſſe quendam Didericum Camphuſium, qui in epiſtola typis expreſſa, & canticis ipſius adjuncta, profiteretur, ſe pronum fuiſſe ad relinquendam omnem religionem, donec incideret in illos libros, qui docerent, perpetuos ignes nihil eſſe & æternos cruciatus.

* See hereafter the Remark M Δ.

(M) That the Socinian Hereſies were privately taught at Port-Royal.] The Author of the Politique du Clergé de France affirms, that there is a third Party, from which the Gallican Church has every thing to fear. "They profeſs, ſays he (c), "to believe that the Church of Rome is the True "Church, to which one ought to be inſeparably "United; and yet they don't follow her Doctrines, "and have no reſpect for her Worſhip. Such Men "were never ſo numerous in that Kingdom as they "are now. Some of 'em carry their Unbelief ſo "far as to call in queſtion the moſt important Doctrines of Chriſtianity. They are Socinians; they "believe neither the Trinity nor the Incarnation. I "know ſome things about it, that are ſo particular "that I cannot doubt of it: I ſhall not impart "them to you for fear of Scandalizing you. And "what is moſt terrible is, that 'tis not only the "Religion of our Young Abbots, but alſo of ſome "Grave and Wiſe Societies, that make a great "ſhew of the Purity of their Morals, and of their "Adherence to the Catholick Faith". Let's ſee what M. Arnauld anſwered to that Author. "(d) "A Man muſt have neither Honour nor Conſcience, who aſcribes heinous Crimes to many Perſons, when every body may eaſily know that ſuch "horrid Accuſations are only grounded upon a meer "Calumny. Now who does not ſee that no other Thoughts can be entertained of this Writer? "There may be in France, and even among Abbots, ſome Perſons that are ſo Impious as to "believe neither the Trinity nor the Incarnation; "but ſomething elſe is requiſite to ſay, without "being guilty of a horrid Calumny, that 'tis now "the Religion of our Abbots. He muſt be ſure that "there are at leaſt many of thoſe Young Abbots, who "have no other Religion. But how cou'd he know "it? If any of 'em were ſo unhappy as to entertain "ſuch Impious Opinions, wou'd they be ſo Imprudent as to declare them up and down, and "thereby expoſe themſelves to the dangerous Conſequences of it? Could ſuch a folly be common "to ſo many Perſons, that one might ſay, without "fearing to be accounted an Impoſtor, that 'tis the "Religion of Young Abbots? And yet he is ſo Impudent as to ſuppoſe it as a thing ſo well known, "that it ſerves him only for a Prelude to authorize a more horrid Calumny; for he affirms it "as a thing, of which he is very ſure, that ſome "grave, wiſe, and orderly Societies, which are accounted Catholick, believe neither the Trinity "nor the Incarnation no more than thoſe Abbots. "And what is moſt terrible, ſays he, is, that 'tis not "only the Religion of our Young Abbots, but alſo of "ſome grave and wiſe Societies, that make a great "ſhew of the Purity of their Morals, and of their "Adherence to the Catholick Faith. 'Tis a moſt Imprudent thing to impute not to ſome Private Perſons, but to Societies, not to one only, but "to ſome Societies, whom he very much commends for their Wiſdom and Morals, that they "do not believe the firſt Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion; and to ſuppoſe that thoſe, who "cou'd put a ſtop to ſo great a diſorder, know "nothing of it, or are unwilling to ſuffer "it; and laſtly, to fancy that the World will be "ſo ſilly as to believe ſuch an incredible Thing, "upon the credit of an inconſiderable Writer, "who ſays in an Anonymous Book: I know ſome "things about it that are ſo particular, that I can- "not doubt of it, adding with a ſorry Craftineſs, "I ſhall not impart them to you for fear of Scan- "dalizing you. One can hardly conceive how a "Man can carry Boldneſs and Calumny to ſuch a "degree. However, the thing is not ſo ſurprizing "in a Calviniſt, &c.

The Author of the Politique du Clergé de France cou'd not well be ſilent after ſuch a vigorous Anſwer: I ſhall ſet down what he ſaid in his Vindication. He thought, ſays he (e), ſpeaking of Mr. Arnauld, that the Author meant the Janſeniſts by thoſe grave and wiſe Societies, that make a great ſhew of the Purity of their Morals, and of their adherence to the Catholick Faith. Perhaps he is not in the wrong. (f) I don't know the thoughts of the Author of the Politique du Clergé; but I do very well know that there is ground to ſuſpect thoſe Gentlemen of having a Theology little Chriſtian, and bordering upon Socinianiſm. I am ſorry I am obliged to ſay what I think, and what I have reaſon to think of it. I don't love to oppreſs thoſe unhappy Men, who are already loaded with the Publick Hatred. And indeed, were it not that I am forced to it by thoſe Gentlemen, I wou'd not expoſe to the Publick view, what may confirm that ſuſpicion. But they have no regard for us; and if they are diſpleaſed with what I am going to ſay, they muſt blame themſelves for it. I wou'd not be ſo poſitive as Filleau, and the Jeſuite Meynier, who ſay that thoſe who go by the name of Janſeniſts are downright Deiſts, Enemies to the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion. But 'tis certain they have dropt ſome words againſt the Divinity of JESUS CHRIST, which give ground to ſuſpect that they harbour dreadful Monſters in their Breaſts. Pray, mind the Proofs he alledges. Thoſe Gentlemen, ſays he (g), don't ſcruple to confeſs that the Divinity of JESUS CHRIST is not ſufficiently proved in the Holy Scripture ——— (h) The Author of the Perpetuité de la Foy, asks, (1) Why did not CHRIST diſcover his Divinity in ſuch clear words that they might not be eluded? From thoſe words and from theſe, God was not willing that the Chriſtian Doctrines ſhou'd be propoſed with the utmoſt Evidence, the Author of the Politique du Clergé infers, that the Janſeniſts admit this Principle: (i) The Divinity of JESUS CHRIST and the Trinity are not clearly expreſs'd in the Scripture. Afterwards he tells us, 1. That this Principle is utterly falſe; for 'tis not true that the Paſſages which prove CHRIST's Divinity, may be any ways eluded. There are no Paſſages, tho' never ſo clear, but what the Hereticks may Cavil upon. If this be call'd eluding, there is nothing in the Holy Scripture, nor in any Book or Language but what may be eluded. This he proves by ſhewing how one might Cavil about ſome Texts in the Goſpel, wherein Chriſt's Humanity is aſſerted, and about the (k) Canons of the Council of Nice, and a Paſſage contrived on purpoſe (l), to be the cleareſt and the moſt diſtinct proof of the Trinity and Incarnation that can be imagin'd. In the 2. place he ſays, that (m) it is the moſt ſhamefull thing, and the greateſt Prevarication an Orthodox Divine can be guilty of againſt the Divinity of the Son of God, thus to give it up to the Hereticks, by acknowledging a thing ſo falſe, ſo dangerous, and ſo proper to Confirm them in their Errors ——— (n) The Confeſſion, that the Divinity of the Son is not ſufficiently explain'd in the Revelation, is that very thing which confirms the Socinians in their

(e) Eſprit de Mr Arnauld tom. 1. ch. 6. pag. 196.

(f) That writer is the Author of the Politique du Clergé, tho' he denies it.

(g) Eſprit de Mr. Arnauld ibid. pag. 197.

(h) Id. ib. pag 198.

(1) Pag. 103.

(i) Eſprit de M. Arnauld ibid. pag. 201.

(k) Ibid. pag. 203. & ſeq.

(l) Ibid. pag 205. & ſeq.

(m) Ibid. pag 209.

(n) Ibid. pag 211.

People would be extremely concern'd, if they had Publiſh'd a Story as ill Cir-cumſtantiated their Hereſy, and may induce others to Embrace it. In the Third place he ſays, (a) that M. Arnauld ought to acknowledge, That 'till the Council of Nice, it was lawful to deny the Divinity of Chriſt without running the hazard of one's Salvation, and that if the Divinity of the Son was not an Article of Faith, neceſſary to Salvation, for the ſpace of three Hundred Years, it could not be ſo by the Deciſion of a Council, becauſe according to the Wiſeſt Doctors of the Church of Rome, among whom the Gentlemen of Port-Royal ought to be Reckon'd, the Church, the Pope and the Councils cannot make New Articles of Faith. From whence it follows, that to this very Day the Divinity of the Son is not an Article of Faith, for which thoſe who deny it deſerve to be Anathematiz'd. Thus, by proceeding from one Principle to another, 'tis plain there is good ground to ſuſpect that M. Arnauld does not believe the Myſteries of the Trinity and Incarnation, or at leaſt, that he does not look upon 'em as eſſential parts of the Chriſtian Religion. In the Fourth place he proves, (b) that thoſe Gentlemen have made it appear that they have no great Regard for the Authority of the Church. Which being ſo, concluded he (c), ſince the Myſteries of the Trinity and Incarnation cannot be proved by any Paſſages of the Scripture, but what may be eluded, according to thoſe Gentlemen; and beſides, ſince they are only grounded upon Deciſions, to which they don't think themſelves oblig'd blindly to ſubmit; 'tis plain thoſe Myſteries are built upon no ſolid Foundation, and are only meer Problems according to their Theology. In the Fifth place, he tells us a Story, to which he prefixes a pleaſant Preamble. I ſhall add a Story, ſays he (d), which I Publiſh with Reluctancy. If theſe Gentlemen were not ſo hard upon us, I would have been more reſerved; but I am not oblig'd to ſhew any regard to ſuch a Man as M. Arnauld, who openly tranſgreſſes againſt the Laws of Charity and Sincerity.

Here follows an Abridgement of that Story. “(e) About (f) Fifteen or Twenty Years ago, a young Man, the Son of a Treaſurer of France in the Generality of Orleans, whoſe Name was Picaut or Picot, and who was deſign'd for the Church, Studied at Paris, in the Houſe of the Gentlemen of Port-Royal.„ The Converſation of a Miniſter, and the reading of ſome Books, convinced him that the Pope is Antichriſt; whereupon he wrote a Piece for his own uſe, and being informed that it was come into the Director's Hands, and that his Family had notice of it, he made his eſcape. “(g) He came into Perche, where he had a Living, to try whether he could get ſome Money by it. He fell, by chance, into the Hands of a Proteſtant Gentleman, a Perſon diſtinguiſh'd by his Birth, and particularly by his Merit. That Gentleman being very well skill'd in Matters of Religion, ask'd him ſeveral Queſtions about the Motives of his Change; and as he proceeded from one Subject to another, he perceiv'd that this young Man had the Notions of the Socinians about the Trinity and Incarnation, and knew all their ſorry Objections; but abating of that, he was very fond of the Opinions of the Church of Rome, and very little diſpoſed to embrace the Doctrines of the Reformed, excepting this, that the Pope is Antichriſt. The Gentleman was very much ſurprized to find this young Man a Socinian, and ask'd where he had learn'd that Doctrine. The young Man anſwer'd, without any Myſtery, that he had learn'd it at Port-Royal, where he had ſtudied; that ſeveral Perſons had the ſame Opinions in that Houſe; that the Novices and the Students were not allowed to read the Books of Calvin and of the Calviniſts; but the Socinian Books were not ſhut up by themſelves in the Library, and every body might read them. Afterwards the young Man made his eſcape into a remote Province, and at laſt left the Kingdom to avoid being moleſted by his Relations. And it has been known ſince, that thoſe who went about to inſtruct him, could never cure him of his Socinianiſm.„ What follows is the moſt curious part of the Story, and therefore I muſt not forget it. “(h) The Author of the Apology for the Catholicks, who falls into a violent Paſſion when he meets with a word that vexes him never ſo little, will doubtleſs call this Story a piece of Impudence, an Impoſture and a Calumny. He will ſay that all the Fire in Hell will not be ſufficient to puniſh the Author of ſo horrid a Slander. But I muſt tell him, that I only warrant the Truth of theſe two things. 1. That this young Man told that Story, and even to many Perſons very credible, and of known Probity. 2. That this young Man was a true Socinian, when he left the Divines of Port-Royal, and that he learn'd Socinianiſm in their Houſe. As for what he adds, that his Maſters were infected with the ſame Hereſy, I cannot tell whether it be true. But I ſee no reaſon why that Student ſhould invent ſo horrid a Calumny. This, together with their way of ſpeaking of the Trinity and Incarnation, may form, if not a Proof, at leaſt a very ſtrong Suſpicion. This is what I know of the matter, and what I had to ſay about it. The Publick will judge of it, as they think fit. This is what People get by being ſo hard upon others.„

This Author did not think that M. Arnauld's Reply would contain but few Words; he expected abundance of Reflections and Exclamations, for he believ'd his Hiſtory would produce great Effects. But M. Arnauld was contented to Confute it in a few words, and with great Moderation, tho' he knew very well how to be Paſſionate. His Anſwer runs thus (i) He had a mind to make People believe that the Divines of Port-Royal had an Averſion for Calviniſm, but that they were very much inclin'd to the Socinian Hereſy, for which he gives this Proof. Some young Children of Quality were inſtructed at Port-Royal, in Humane Learning, tho' at the ſame time care was taken to give 'em a pious Education. Moſt of 'em were but Ten, Twelve, or Fourteen Years of Age, and the Oldeſt was hardly Sixteen. The Greek and Latin Methods, and the Greek Roots in French Verſe were made for 'em. Now let's ſee what M. Jurieu tells us in his famous Book, Intitl'd, l'Eſprit de M. Arnauld. He ſays the Books of the Calviniſts were carefully kept from them, but that they had a full liberty to read thoſe of the Socinians; and that by the reading of thoſe Books, one of thoſe Children whom he Names, and who was a Native of Orleans, as he ſays, being fond of the Socinian Errors, left the Church, and turn'd Huguenot. But this Story is utterly falſe. There never was a Child at Port-Royal of ſuch a Name and Family; Nay, there never was any of the City of Orleans. The ground on which he builds that Story, viz. That Children of that Age were allowed to read the Socinian Books, ſufficiently ſhews that one may expect any thing from a Man, who does not ſcruple to Publiſh ſuch horrid and incredible Lies.

Many Reflections might be made on the Pains the Author of L'Eſprit de M. Arnauld took to Convict the Gentlemen of Port-Royal of Socinianiſm; but I ſhall only make Three.

The I. is, that if any one accuſed that Writer of the ſame thing, he wou'd find the Proofs of his Accuſation in L'Eſprit de M. Arnauld, for he needs only form this Syllogiſm.

A Man (k) who believes on the one ſide, that the Myſteries of the Trinity and Incarnation cannot be proved by any Paſſages of the Scripture, but what may be eluded, and who on the other ſide does not blindly ſubmit to the Deciſions of Councils, is a Socinian.

But the Author of L'Eſprit de M. Arnauld believes it, and has no ſuch Submiſſion.

Therefore he is a Socinian.

The major Propoſition of this Syllogiſm is plainly the Doctrine of that Author; for intending to juſtify what he had ſaid, (l) that Socinianiſm was the Theology of ſome grave Societies, meaning the Gentlemen of Port-Royal, he alledges for a Proof their Teaching that Chriſt's Divinity has not been Revealed with a ſufficient Evidence, and their giving ground to ſuſpect that they don't believe one ought to ſubmit to Councils. He muſt therefore look upon this as an undoubted Sign of the Socinian Hereſy, otherwiſe he could not clear himſelf of Calumny; his Accuſation would be ill Proved, and he would be a Falſe Accuſer. Wherefore I need only prove

(a) Ibid. pag. 212, 213.

(b) Pag. 213. till 219.

(c) Ibid. pag. 220.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Note that the Author wrote his Book in the Year 1683

(g) Ibid. pag. 222.

(h) Ibid. pag. 224.

cumſtantiated as that which concerns (MΔ) young Picaut, the Witneſs alledged by prove the Minor Propoſition. It conſiſts of two Parts: The Second does not want to be proved; for 'tis manifeſt that a Proteſtant Miniſter does not blindly ſubmit to Councils: And the following words afford the Proof of the Firſt. (a) I am far from deſigning to leſſen the force and clearneſs of thoſe Characters of the Divinity of the Scripture; but I dare ſay that every one of them may be eluded by Prophane Men. None of 'em makes a Proof, and is unanſwerable; and if they be conſidered together, tho' they have a greater force than when they ſtand by themſelves, yet they are not ſtrong enough to form a Moral Demonſtration. It were needleſs to object to me that this Paſſage does not concern Chriſt's Divinity; for it were in vain to pretend that God has evidently revealed to us the Divinity of his Son in the Scripture, if it was affirm'd that it does not clearly appear, that the Scripture is the Word of God. But, beſides, that Author (b) has a Diſpute with another Miniſter (c) about this Queſtion, Whether the Belief of our Myſteries ſuppoſes the Evidence of the Teſtimony, and does not only deny it, but alſo maintains that the Affirmative is a pernicious Opinion. I am going to ſhew that he may receive another Wound with his own Weapon. You have ſaid (d) that 'tis not true that the Paſſages, which prove Chriſt's Divinity, can be any ways eluded. You have ſaid that they are as clear as the Paſſages which concern his Humanity, and as clear as the deciſion of the Council of Nice, or any Text made on purpoſe. The meaning of which is, that the Cavils raiſed againſt them are as frivolous and vain, as thoſe that ſhould be raiſed againſt a Text made on purpoſe. How come you then to confeſs (e) that the Characters of the Divinity of the Scripture may be eluded? How come you to ſay that the Objections of the Socinians are conſiderable? Theſe are your words: (f) The Proofs of the Scripture, on which the Trinity, the Incarnation, and the neceſſity of Grace are grounded, have not the utmoſt Evidence: Thoſe Myſteries are liable to ſome Difficulties, not only with reſpect to Human Reaſon, but in relation to the Holy Scripture, wherein there are many Paſſages that want to be reconcil'd. Thoſe, who take the Objections of the Socinians againſt Myſteries, and thoſe of the Pelagians againſt Grace, to be vain and inconſiderable, are miſtaken, and do not conſider the thing with a due Attention. They are real Difficulties, and deſerve to be cleared. Remember that in the Book, Intitl'd, L'Eſprit de M. Arnauld, (g) 'tis a baſe thing, and the greateſt Prevarication an Orthodox Divine can be guilty of againſt the Divinity of Chriſt, thus to give it up to the Hereticks, by making a Confeſſion ſo falſe, ſo dangerous, and ſo proper to confirm them in their Errors, that is, by confeſſing as you do, that (h) Chriſt has not diſcovered his Divinity in words ſo clear as not to be eluded.

My II. Reflection is, That if thoſe Proofs alledged to ſhew that the Gentlemen of Port-Royal are Socinians, were good, it would follow from thence that all the Roman Catholicks are Socinians; for what has been ſaid by thoſe Gentlemen concerning the Obſcurity of the Scripture, is the general Doctrine of the Church of Rome. Beſides, few Roman Catholicks believe the Pope's Infallibility in Matters of Fact; Nay, they don't aſcribe that Privilege to Univerſal Councils. The Janſeniſts never denied the Infallibility of thoſe Councils in point of Doctrine, and even have acknowledged that the Five Propoſitions were Heretical, in the Senſe they pretend the Popes have condemn'd them. What they have ſaid in particular to juſtify ſome Nuns, who refuſed to Subſcribe to ſome Formularies, and to ſubmit to ſome Epiſcopal Mandates, is of ſuch a Nature, that all Monks would ſay the ſame, if they were moleſted by ſome Biſhops. How often have they been at Law with their Prelates? How often have they appeal'd againſt 'em to Synods, or to the Pope? Is it not a plain Demonſtration, that they don't believe one ought to Sacrifice one's Knowledge to the Authority of inferior Tribunals? I confeſs ſome ſay that a Monk ought blindly to obey his Superiors; but 'tis only in what concerns the Diſcipline and Obſervances; and they would not think themſelves obliged to obey him, if he commanded them to believe what they know to have been condemn'd by the Councils. And therefore if the Gentlemen of Port-Royal are Socinians, becauſe they ſay, on the one ſide, that our Myſteries are not evidently contain'd in the Scripture, and on the other, that one ought not to ſign againſt ones Conſcience an Epiſcopal Mandate, or a Bull that decides only a Matter of Fact, there is no Univerſity nor religious Commonalty in the Church of Rome, but what is Socinian. Let us therefore admire the diſcerning Faculty of M. Arnauld's Adverſary, and let us confeſs that no Man was ever more lucky than he in the choice of his Proofs. 'Tis not to be doubted, that if the Jeſuits found themſelves in the ſame Circumſtances with the (i) Divines of Port Royal, they wou'd do what thoſe Divines have done. Wou'd that prove their being Socinians?

My III. Reflection concerns the great care that Writer takes to excuſe himſelf to the Publick, for revealing the Secret of one Picaut or Picat. He is afraid of undoing Port-Royal; he declares he has been a long time doubtful whether he ſhould ſtrike ſuch a blow; he wou'd never have done it, had thoſe Gentlemen been leſs unjuſt and cruel to his Party; However, he applauds himſelf for his Victory; this is what People get, ſays he, by being ſo hard upon others. Does it not look like a convincing Proof? Would not one think it is one of thoſe Productions, that put an end to all Cavils, and further proceedings in a Cauſe? But after all, it appears that the only thing he objects againſt the Gentlemen of Port-Royal is a Story, the truth whereof he dares not warrant: He knows not whether it be true. Who will believe it then, ſince he himſelf doubts of it, being otherwiſe ſo ſilly as to fancy that his Tale wou'd caſt ſuch a Blot upon thoſe Gentlemen, that he is afraid of being guilty of a piece of Cruelty? He needs not be afraid of it: He may be ſure that ſuch Stories will never make any Impreſſion upon Impartial Men, not even upon the Jeſuits. I wou'd not deny that Picaut ſaid ſo; but he muſt be compared to thoſe Deſerters, who tell a thouſand Lies to the Beſiegers about the State of the Towns that are Beſieged. I have a Book Printed at Cologne for Peter Marteau in 1679, and Intitl'd, Traité des Parlemens ou Eſtats generaux composé par Pierre Picault. This is doubtleſs, the Man I have been ſpeaking of; for there is a great deal of Socinianiſm in that Book. When a grave Man, who has a great Reputation, leaves his Country and his Church, what he ſays may be depended upon. And therefore I believe the Author of the Politique du Clergé knew not what he ſaid when he ſpoke of a third Party, and of a vaſt number of Socinians in France; for when I ask'd two (k) or three Years ago a famous (l) Father of the Oratory, whether it was true that there were many Socinians among the Clergy of France, he anſwered me that there was hardly any body who knew the Works and Doctrines of that Sect. There are every where ſome Unbelievers and Doubting Men, but they are not Socinians.

Let us conclude, That the Author of the Politique du Clergé not being able to prove the heinous Accuſation Publiſh'd by him againſt Port-Royal, is duly Convicted of being a downright Calumniator. The Proofs alledged by him, ought to be compared with thoſe of a Man, who having ſaid that the Governor of a Place betrays his Sovereign, ſhould prove it, Firſt, By imputing to him a Conduct like that of all other Governors, and of thoſe whoſe Fidelity he could not deny. Secondly, By Publiſhing a ſilly Story, which a Soldier, who left the Place, told the Enemies.

(MΔ) What concerns young Picaut, the Witneſs alledged by the Modern Author.] Here follows what M. le Vaſſor did me the Honour to write to me, the 2d of January 1697. If you had told me that you deſign'd to ſpeak of Picaut's Adventure, which M. Jurieu relates very wrong, I could have given you a good account of it. He was my (m) Country-man, and I was very well acquainted with him. His eldeſt Brother married a near Relation of mine. He was a Young Man, whom Aubert de Verſé ſpoiled with Socinianiſm, not at Port-Royal, but in a Houſe of the Oratory,

(i) During the Congregation de Auxiliis, Clement VIII. being not favourable to them, they publickly maintain'd at Rome, that 'twas no Article of Faith, to believe that Clement VIII. was Pope. Others taught that he was not Infallible. See the Hiſtory of that Congregation Printed in 1687. pag. 49. Matthieu Hiſt. de France, Book 2. is quoted in it.

(k) I write this in July 1696.

(l) Viz. M. le Vaſſor, who is now at London, and is very well known by his Works, who profeſt Divinity in the Oratory, and is perfectly acquainted with the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical ſtate of France.

(m) M. le Vaſſor is a Native of Orleans.

by the Modern Author I speak of. I ſhall not give a particular Account of what concerns the Opinions and Books of Socinus: It may be ſeen in general in Moreri's Dictionary. A German Hiſtorian * has reduc'd the Doctrine of the Socinians into 229 Propoſitions. The moſt general Objection raiſed againſt 'em is, That by refuſing to believe what they think to be contrary to Reaſon, and by denying the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion, they open a way to Scepticiſm, Deiſm, and Atheiſm. Perhaps it might be objected to them, that they do it alſo, at leaſt indirectly, by their way of explaining the Paſſages of the Scripture, which concern the Conſubſtantiality of the Word. For it ſeems, that the Reſult of their Explications is, That the Apoſtles being animated with an ardent Zeal for the Glory of CHRIST, made uſe of the moſt ſtrain'd Figures and Expreſſions that Devotion can ſuggeſt, when they ſpoke of his Perfections. Thus the Votaries of the Holy Virgin have carried it as high, and as near a True and Real Deification as ever they could. But if the Expreſſions of the Apoſtles were to be aſcribed to an Enthuſiaſtick Zeal, and not to the immediate direction of the Holy Spirit, 'tis plain the Scripture would be of little more Authority than the Panegyricks upon the Saints. But by over-throwing the Inſpiration of the Sacred Writers, the whole Revelation comes to nothing, and then every thing will be a meer Philoſophical Diſpute.

SOMMONA-CODOM. So the Siameſe call a certain extraordinary Man, whom they think to have attain'd to the Supreme Felicity †. I mention him (A) only to have an Opportunity of Examining a very Subtil Objection of M. du Rondel againſt what I have ſaid in the Article of || Lucretius, That the Belief of God's Exiſtence without the Belief of a Providence, cannot be an inducement to Virtue.

* Daniel [illegible] in his continuation of M. Micraelii Syntagm. Hiſtor. Eccleſ.

† See M. de la Loubere, Relation de Siam, tom. 1. chap. 22. n. 4. & 5. pag. m. 400, 401.

|| At the end of the Remark I.

Oratory, where they happen'd to be. The Fathers of the Oratory ſent away de Verſé as ſoon as they perceived that he dogmatized, and kept Picaut for ſome time in order to Cure him, but they could not do it. This Account does perfectly agree with a Printed Letter of M. Simon, who ſays: (a) I can aſſure you that there are in that (b) Libel, many falſe Stories, which could not be (c) ſpoiled by M. J. For Inſtance, can any thing be more Falſe and more Ridiculous than that, which is to be found at large in the 221 Page, and the following of the Firſt Volume. He ſuppoſes the Gentlemen of Port-Royal had a Houſe in Paris, where they taught their Scholars Socinianiſm, and permitted them to read the Books of the Socinians. That Tale is ſo well Circumſtantiated, that any body would think at firſt, 'tis rather true matter of Fact than an idle Story. And yet 'tis certain, the Gentlemen of Port-Royal have had no School in Paris where they taught Youth. Here is what gave occaſion to that Story. The young Man ſpoken of in that Book, call'd Picaut, was in the Inſtitution of the Fathers of the Oratory, which is properly a place for the Novices, who deſire to be admitted into that Congregation. A Man very well known in the World, who had been a Miniſter in Burgundy, and was expell'd by his Brethren, being Convicted of Socinianiſm, happen'd to be there at the ſame time. The Fathers of the Oratory, who took him to be a converted Miniſter, admitted him into their Inſtitution. 'Twas he who turn'd the young Man's Brains with what he told him about the Apocalypſe and Socinianiſm. Thus that Socinianiſm proceeded from your People, and not from the Gentlemen of Port-Royal, nor from the Fathers of the Oratory. That School, wherein the Socinian Books are not lock'd up, is a meer Viſion of your Men, who give out thro' the whole Book manifeſt Lies for true Stories.

(A) Only to have an Opportunity of examining an Objection.] M. du Rondel having read what I have ſaid at the end of the Remark I. in the Article of Lucretius, was pleaſed to write to me, that he thouht it would be confuted by Examples and Arguments. " (d) For in the Firſt place, at Siam, and in other " Countries, where they believe in Sommona-Codom, " 'tis an undoubted Doctrine that this God concerns " himſelf with nothing in his Nireupan, and ſuffers " every thing upon Earth to take its courſe; and " yet they Pray to him, and endeavour to imitate " him in the Practice of Virtues. See the firſt Tome " of M. de la Loubere's Relation. But in the Second " place, ſuppoſing there was no Sommona-Codom, " nor any other God in this World, the bare ſpeaking of the Gods, and annexing to thoſe Ideas all " the Beauty of Morals, would induce many People to aſpire to that degree of Glory. „ Being under a neceſſity of laying aſide a great many things till another time, I am forced, to my great grief, to ſuppreſs the ſequel of M. du Rondel's fine Letter; but I ſhall give the Subſtance of it in theſe few words: He ſets forth the power of Admiration, and ſhews by great Examples, that the bare deſire of imitating an excellent Model, has induced Men to very difficult Actions.

I. I ſhall Anſwer firſt the Objection he grounds upon the Conduct of the Siameſe; and the better to clear the matter, I ſhall firſt of all ſet down the Words of the Hiſtorian. " (e) Sommona-Codom order'd, before he died, that Statues and Temples " ſhould be Conſecrated to him, and ſince he died " he is in that ſtate of Reſt, which they expreſs by the " word Nireupan. 'Tis not a Place, but a manner of Being; for, ſay they, to ſpeak properly, " Sommona Codom is no where, and enjoys no Felicity: He has no Power, and can do neither good " nor harm: The Portugueſe call it an Annihilation. Nevertheleſs, the Siameſe believe on the other ſide, that Sommona-Codom is Happy, they put " up Prayers to him, and ask him whatever they " want: Whether it be that their Doctrine is Inconſiſtent, or that they carry their Worſhip beyond their Doctrine. But in whatever ſenſe they " aſcribe a Power to Sommona-Codom, they are agreed in this, that he has no Power, but over the " Siameſe, and does not concern himſelf with Nations, that Worſhip other Men than him. „ It plainly appears, that the Siameſe ſpeak inconſiſtently of their Sommona-Codom. They ſay, he enjoys no Felicity, and on the other hand, they think he is Happy. One may therefore believe, that tho' they ſay he has no Power, they take him to be very Powerful: And therefore, 'tis no wonder if they Pray to him; their Notions are ſo confuſed, that they affirm Contradictory things of one and the ſame Object. When they conſider it in a certain Senſe, they ſay one thing of it, and when they conſider it in another Senſe, they deny it. Their Notions are different from their inward Sentiments, which is the reaſon why their Theory does not agree with their Practice: However it be, we ought to believe that they don't invoke Sommona Codom, as a Being to which they aſcribe no Power, and which minds nothing, but as a Being in which they acknowledge ſome Power in ſome reſpects, by virtue of an inward Sentiment, which commonly has a greater influence upon People, than the clear Doctrines of ſpeculative Men. The Hiſtorian does clearly inſinuate, that they aſcribe ſome Power to him; in whatever Senſe, ſays he, they aſcribe it to him, they are agreed in this, that he has no Power but over the Siameſe. This is my Firſt Remark, to which I add this Obſervation. They are fully perſuaded that ſome things lead the Soul to an Eternal Happineſs or Miſery, and that whatever they can do in the Honour of Sommona-Codom is Fine, Praiſe-worthy, Juſt, and proper to make one attain to the Supreme Good. And therefore, tho' they ſhould teach conſtantly, and without any contradiction, that he concerns himſelf with

(a) Lettres choiſies de M. Simon, pag. 145.

(b) That is, l'Eſprit de M. Arnauld.

(c) This refers to theſe words of the ſame Page, The Man being vexed at that overſight, Anſwered me very ingenuouſly, and without much conſideration on what he ſaid, ſpeaking of M. J... That Man ſpoils every thing that is ſent to him.

(d) A Letter of M. du Rondel of the 28. of January 1696.

(e) La Loubere, Relation de Siam, tom. 1. ch. 14. p. m. [illegible] 534.

I add in this Second Edition what follows. Father Tachard relates many things of this Sommona Codom, whom he calls Sommonakhodom. 'Tis, ſays he ‖, the God whom the Siameſe Worſhip at this time. They ſuppoſe he "was Born a God by his "own Virtue, and that immediately after his Birth, without any Maſter to inſtruct "him, he acquired by a bare Intuition of his Mind, a perfect Knowledge of what-"ever concerns Heaven and Earth, Paradiſe and Hell, and of the moſt Impene-"trable Secrets of Nature; that he remembred at the ſame time, whatever he had "done in all the ſeveral Lives he had lived; and that after he had Taught "thoſe great things, he left 'em in Writing, that the Poſterity might be bene-"fitted by them. He ſays in thoſe Books, that being a God, he deſired to mani-"feſt his Divinity to Men by ſome extraordinary Prodigy—— † That immedi-"ately he found himſelf carried thro' the Air on a Throne Shining with Gold "and Jewels, that came out of the Earth in the very ſame place where he was, "and that the Angels coming down from Heaven paid him the Honour and Wor-"ſhip due to him—— * That ever ſince he aſpired to be a God, he return'd "into the World five Hundred and Fifty times under different Shapes; that in each ‖ Tachard voiage to Siam B. 6. p. 2??, Dutch Edit.

† Id. ib. pag. 206.

* Id. ib. pag. 207.

with nothing, that he has no Power, and does not hear the Prayers put up to him, yet they ſhould apply themſelves to him in their Neceſſity, and practice ſuch Virtues as he was pleaſed with; for in their Opinion, 'tis the way to the Supreme Felicity. And therefore, I ſay, that their Devotion and their Practical Morality are not contrary to what I advance; for they believe both an Exiſtence and a Providence. 'Tis true, they aſcribe no Providence to Sommona-Codom; but it is ſufficient for my purpoſe, that they attribute it to ſomething elſe, from which they expect to be Rewarded for their Good Works. (a) They have loſt the Idea of God, as well as the Chineſe. But they have preſerved an Ancient Maxim according to which Virtue is to be rewarded, and Vice to be puniſh'd. They aſcribe that diſtributive Juſtice to a blind Fatality, from which they expect their Happineſs, if they live virtuouſly; and they are perſuaded it will reward them for the Honours paid to Sommona-Codom. To have a right Notion of their Impious Doctrine, one needs only conſider the Opinions of the Men of Letters among the Chineſe: They are (b) thoſe, who have degrees of Literature, and the only Men who have a ſhare in the Government. They are grown altogether Impious, and having made no Alteration in the Language of their Predeceſſors, they have changed the Soul of the World, and all other Souls into I know not what Aerian Subſtances, deſtitute of Intelligence: And they have eſtabliſh'd a blind Fatality, as the only judge of Mens Actions, that does what an Omnipotent and moſt wiſe Juſtice could do. They pretend that 'tis a thing Conſonant to the Principles of Nature, that Virtue ſhou'd be always attended with Happineſs, and Vice with Miſery, by a certain tho' unknown Sympathy between Virtue and Happineſs, and between Vice and Miſery. Thus the Chineſe and Siameſe very much differ from Epicurus: They deny the Exiſtence of God, and acknowledge a (†) Providence, whereas Epicurus rejected Providence, and acknowledged the Exiſtence of a Deity. 'Tis not therefore ſtrange that the Siameſe ſhou'd invoke Sommona-Codom, and endeavour to imitate his Virtuous Life; but one might wonder at Epicurus, if he had prayed to Jupiter, and laid a great conſtraint upon himſelf to Honour the Gods; for he was perſuaded that his Prayers and Endeavours wou'd be of no uſe to him. On the contrary, the Siameſe believe that the Worſhip of their Hero will bring a Noble Reward upon them: The Blind Fatality, the Natural Laws and Sympathies they acknowledge between Virtue and Happineſs, and between Vice and Miſery, are as Powerful a Motive and as great a Curb as the belief of a knowing Providence.

(a) Id. la Loubere ... chap. ... pag. 515.

(b) Id. ib. ... pag. 514.

(†) That ... a Law ... whereby ... Vice is ... puniſh'd, ... Virtue ... rewarded.

I go farther ſtill, and I ſay that according to the courſe (c) of Nature, that belief has not ſo great an Influence as the Opinion of the Siameſe. A Natural Connexion between Virtue and Happineſs, and between Vice and Miſery, wou'd be more proper to Act upon a Mercenary Mind than the perſuaſion of the Orthodox without the Divine Grace. That Connexion wou'd never fail to produce its Effect, ſince it wou'd not be ſubmitted to a Cauſe, which thinks fit ſometimes to derogate from it Laws, to extend or confine them, and to haſten or retard the Execution of 'em, in a Word, to diſpoſe of 'em according to its Deſigns and Various Circumſtances. That Connexion, for that very Reaſon that it were only a Blind Fatality, wou'd afford Good Men a perfect certainty of a quick Reward, and fill the Wicked with a neceſſary Fear of a quick Puniſhment. But by ſuppoſing a Providence, which diſpoſes of all things according to its will, and with a Wiſdom whereof all the deſigns are unknown to us, one cannot be certain that a good Action will be Profitable, or a bad one Detrimental; for one may think in each particular juncture that 'tis one of the Caſes, wherein God is not pleaſed to follow the General Laws of rewarding Good Actions, and puniſhing Evil ones. Chriſtians acknowledge that God ſuſpends the Execution of thoſe Laws as long as he thinks fit. Nay, they ſay that an old Sinner, who has enjoyed all the Pleaſures of Life, will be Eternally Happy, provided he truly Repent on his Death-Bed; and that whoever in his old Age departs from the way to Virtue, tho' he walk'd in it for a long time with many Adverſities, will be Eternally Damn'd (d). Doubtleſs this may be the Reaſon why the Fear of God's Judgments, or the Hope of his Rewards, make no great Impreſſion upon Worldly People. If there was an indiſſoluble Connexion between Devoutly asking a good thing of God, and obtaining it, none cou'd doubt of the Efficacy of a Devout Prayer; but according to the Doctrine of Divines about that part of Divine Worſhip, none can be ſure that the moſt Earneſt and Devout Prayers of a Mother for the Recovery or Converſion of her Son, or for the Deliverance of her Husband unjuſtly Impriſon'd, will be heard. Thoſe, who have heard ſome Divines Preach about the Efficacy of Prayer, or who have read ſome Books upon that Queſtion, know that the Proofs alledged and grounded upon Examples or Arguments, are very ſtrong and cogent: However, the Difficulties muſt be examin'd at laſt. Preachers don't conclude without ſuppoſing that it will be aſk'd, How comes it that ſome things are not obtain'd tho' they be aſk with Faith, and for the greateſt Glory of God? Their Anſwer is, That God refuſes us what we aſk'd of him upon ſeveral occaſions, in order to try us, or Humble us more and more, or becauſe he knows that the Favours we Pray for wou'd be prejudicial to us, and becauſe our Wants and what concerns his Glory are better known to him than to us. In each Caſe every Body may judge that his Prayers will not be heard thro' one of thoſe Motives; hence it is that the hope of being heard is always mixed with great uncertainty, and many People grow remiſs in the Practice of Prayer, or only aſk of God the General Grace of acquieſing in his Will. Men wou'd act otherwiſe, were they perſuaded that there is a neceſſary Connexion between a Devout Prayer, and the obtaining of what is Prayed for; they wou'd apply themſelves to Providence in all their Wants, as they come near a Fire, when they are troubled with Cold. And therefore ſince the Siameſe are perſuaded that there is a Fatal, Immutable, and Neceſſary Connexion between Virtue and Happineſs, and between Vice and Miſery, that Doctrine ſhou'd be a more Powerful inducement to Virtue among 'em, than Orthodoxy in other Countries. They ſhou'd apply themſelves to Virtue in order to be Happy, as they have recourſe to Food, when they are Hungry; and they ſhou'd depart from Vice to avoid Miſery, as they keep off from the Fire when they are afraid of being Burnt. But then their Morals wou'd be wholly Mercenary;

(c) That ... without ... conſidering ... the opera- ... of the ... Divine ... Grace.

(d) Compare with this the XVIII. Chapt. of Ezekiel.

“ each Birth, he had always been the firſt, and as it were the Prince of thoſe “ Animals under whoſe Shapes he came into the Word; that he often gave his “ Life for his Subjects, and that being an Ape he delivered a Town from a Horrid Monſter which deſolated it; that he had been a moſt Potent King, and that “ ſeven Days before he obtain'd the Empire of the World, he removed in Imitation of a certain Anachoret, with his Wife and his two Children into remote “ Solitudes, where he renounced the World and his Paſſions —— * He went all over “ the World diſcovering Good and Evil to Men, and teaching them true Religion, “ which he writ down to leave it to Poſterity. He had many Diſciples, who being “ Prieſts, were to Imitate him in a moſt particular manner by wearing an Habit like “ his, and obſerving the Rules he preſcribed to them, when at laſt he attain'd to the “ Eighty Second Year of his Age——He was ſeized with a violent Cholick of “ which he died. (B) His Soul aſcended into the Eighth Heaven ”. We ſhall ſee (C) what is related of his Brother.

* Ibid, pag. 215.

SOPHRONIA, is the Name that is given to a Roman Lady, whom Euſebius commends for her Courage and Chaſtity. I can't tell where ſome have found her Name; for Euſebius does not Name her in the † 14. Chapter of the 8. Book of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, nor in the 34. Chapter of the 1 Book of Conſtantin's Life.

He

† Moreri quotes 17. after Charles Stephens, and many other Dictionaries

the Pure Notions of Honeſty wou'd not be their Principle. I muſt obſerve by the by, that 'tis very ſtrange they ſhou'd believe what is told of 'em concerning that Fatal Connexion. Is there no Man among 'em that grows Rich by unlawful means, or that is Wounded by endeavouring to ſave another Man's Life? I fancy, if they were preſs'd hard upon this Head, they wou'd come off with ſome Stoical Notions, viz. that Diſeaſes, Vexation, and Poverty are no Evils, and that Riches, Pleaſure and Health are not good things. I cou'd eaſily believe that the People do not follow that Opinion of a Natural Sympathy between Virtue and Happineſs, and between Vice and Miſery; and that it is only a Doctrine of their Men of Letters, who deny a Providence, and are ſenſible that 'tis an uſeful thing to preſerve the Common Opinion about Rewards and Puniſhments.

WHETHER the Admiration of an excellent Being, that can do neither good nor harm, may be of any uſe to make us Virtuous.

II. I come now to examin the other Part of the Objection. I grant, that a Man may admire and honour an Object without expecting any Reward for it, beſides, the ſatisfaction of doing Juſtice to Merit; but I cannot grant that any Man will invoke it, croſs his Inclinations, and offer Sacrifices to it in order to pleaſe it, and appeaſe its Anger, if he be well perſuaded, 1. That it concerns it ſelf with nothing; that the ill Lives of Men do not diſpleaſe it, and that their good Lives are not acceptable to it. 2. That there is no Being that can reward the Honours paid to that Object, nor puniſh Men for indulging their Paſſions. This is the ground of the Maxim I have advanced, the belief of the Exiſtence of God without the belief of a Providence, cannot be an inducement to Virtue, nor a curb againſt Vice. But, will ſome ſay, is it impoſſible for Men full of Admiration for an Excellent, Holy and Happy Being, that is Honoured all over the World, to propoſe it to themſelves as the Model of their Lives, and to croſs their bad Inclinations and uſe their utmoſt endeavours to Practice Virtue in order to Imitate it? I anſwer, they can do it, if they believe that this Painful Imitation will make 'em like that Being, or procure 'em another Glory of great Value. But then their Belief of the Divine Exiſtence will be attended with the Belief of a Providence: They'll believe, as the Siameſe and Chineſe do, that Nature has inſeparably United by a blind fatality Happineſs with Virtue, and Miſery with Vice, and that the Imitation of one Sommona-Codom will in time put 'em in a State like his; or they'll believe that an Intelligent Legiſlator has deſign'd a Reward for thoſe, who chuſe the Holy and Happy Life of the Immortal Gods for their Pattern. At leaſt, they'll hope that Mankind will be ſo Equitable as to admire their Virtue, and beſtow Glorious Rewards upon it, and that perhaps ſome time or other they ſhall be Deified. The Glory of Miltiades had a great influence over Themiſtocles, tho' Themiſtocles expected nothing from Miltiades; I grant it: Will any Body deny that at this Day the Memory of the Alexanders and Cæſars may have ſuch a Power over the Paſſions of ſome Men, as to make 'em undertake the moſt difficult things? And yet they are perſuaded that thoſe Conquerors know not what paſſes upon Earth, and can do neither good nor harm. I own it; but didn't Themiſtocles know that by imitating Miltiades, he wou'd attain to the ſame Glory with him? And if any one ſhou'd now tread in the ſteps of Cæſar and Alexander, cou'd he be Ignorant that Trophies, Panegyricks, and the Immortality of his Name wou'd be the Price and Reward of his Fatigues? And therefore all the Examples of the Power of Admiration and Imitation, that can be alledged, ſuppoſe the Exiſtence of a Cauſe, which Rewards the Admirer and the Imitator; and conſequently they are not contrary to my Aſſertion. Here is another Reflection. The Belief of the Divine Exiſtence, without a Belief of a Providence, ought not to be accounted an Inducement to Virtue, if whatever it can produce, may be produced by the meer Idea of what is Honeſt, and by the meer deſire of being Praiſed: But the meer Idea of what is Honeſt, and the meer deſire of being Praiſed may produce whatever the Admiration and Imitation of the Gods of Epicurus cou'd Effect. This is manifeſt if it be attentively conſidered. Therefore, &c. I have not been willing to take Advantage of this, viz. That a Follower of Epicurus cou'd not flatter himſelf, that by Imitating the Gods, he (a) wou'd be in time as Happy as they were: It had been an improper thing, ſince M. du Rondel does not ſuppoſe that Epicurus is alſo concern'd in the Objection. See the Margin (b).

(B) His Soul aſcended into the Eighth Heaven.] “ (c) 'Tis properly the Paradiſe call'd Nyruppaam: She is no longer Subject to Pain and “ Miſery, and enjoys a perfect Felicity; and therefore ſhe will never be Born again: this is what “ they call being Annihilated. For they don't underſtand by that word the entire Deſtruction of a “ thing, whereby it is reduced to nothingneſs; but “ they only mean that one appears no longer upon “ Earth tho' he lives in Heaven. As for his Body “ it was Burnt; and his Bones, as they ſay, have “ been preſerved to this preſent time. They are “ partly in the Kingdom of Pegu, and partly in “ that of Siam. They aſcribe a wonderful Virtue “ to thoſe Bones, and affirm that they Shine with “ a Divine Splendor ”. It may be infer'd from theſe laſt Words, that the Worſhip which the Siameſe pay to that God is attended with the hopes of ſome Advantage accruing from it.

(C) What is related of his Brother.] His (d) Name was Thevathat. (e) He was always Born with his Brother Sommonokhodom of the ſame kind with him, but alwas inferior in Dignity, becauſe Sommonokhodom was the Prince of the Animals, whoſe figure he aſſumed. But Thevathat aſpiring likewiſe to become a God, and not being able to bear any thing above him, would never ſubmit to his Brother. On the contrary, he endeavoured by continual Revolts to diſturb his Reign, and left nothing unattempted to deprive him of the Empire: At laſt he accompliſh'd his deſign in ſome meaſure, for he kill'd him, when they were both Apes (†)——(f) Having a great deal of Wit and Addreſs he found a way to Form a new Sect, in which he engaged many Kings and Nations, who followed him to be his Imitators. This occaſion'd a Schiſm, which divided the World into two Parts, and gave Birth to two Religions, whereas before there was but one. Some—— adhered

to

(a) Epicurus and his Followers taught that the Soul dies for ever with the Body.

(b) I propoſe this only as a Problem, which M. du Rondel may examin, and I deſire him to confute it as much as he'll think fit, for the further Inſtruction of my Readers.

(c) Tachard Voiage de Siam B. 6. p. 215. Dutch Edition.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 206.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 206.

(†) This Tale ſeems to be derived from the Hiſtory of Cain and Abel.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 209.

He only ſays that the Lady was Married to the Governor of Rome, and that knowing that the Archers whom Maxentius made uſe of to bring him the Woman he intended to Raviſh, were already got into her Houſe with a Permiſſion extorted from her Husband, ſhe thruſt a Sword into her Breaſt, and made it appear by that Action, that nothing but Chriſtian Virtue is Invincible and Proof againſt Death. This is Euſebius's Account. He does not ſay that ſhe ask'd her Husband's leave, and God's Pardon for what ſhe was going to do; nor that the Church has given a Teſtimony of the Truth of her Martyrdom by the Declaration of her Holineſs. They are meer Gloſſes, which Moreri, being deceived (A) by Charles Stephens, falſely aſcribes to that Hiſtorian.

SORANUS (QUINTUS VALERIUS) Flouriſh'd * in the VII. Century of Rome. He was eſteem'd for his Eloquence, but much more for his Learning, being the moſt Learned Man, that had (B) been ſeen among the Latin Authors. Tho' he was Born near † Rome, he had a Country Accent, which doubtleſs did ſome prejudice to to Thevathat, and others to Sommonokhodom. Thevathat, tho' the Younger Brother, finding himſelf ſupported by ſo many Princes, who undertook to defend him, made uſe of Forcible and Treacherous means to deſtroy his Brother, and invented the moſt horrid Calumnies to Blot his Reputation; but he did not ſucceed in his deſigns. Nay, he was overcome more than once, when in order to confirm his Followers in his Doctrine, he durſt contend with his Brother, who ſhou'd work the greateſt Miracles. His Ambition made him wiſh to be a God; but not being truly one, he was ignorant of many things, whereof his Brother had a perfect knowledge; and becauſe his Pride did not permit him to hear Sommonokhodom, he did not learn of him what paſt in Paradiſe and in Hell, nor the Doctrine of Tranſmigration, nor the Changes which had happen'd and were to happen in all Ages. The Siameſe (a) believe that the Doctrine of Thevathat, as a cauſe of Schiſm and Diviſion, has produced ſeven other Sects, which have a great affinity one with another —— " (b) " Thevathat having done ſo many injuries to his " Brother, without any reſpect for the Rights of " Nature, and for the Deity it ſelf, it was juſt he " ſhou'd be puniſh'd for it. Accordingly the " Writings of the Siameſe mention his Puniſhment; " and Sommonokhodom ſays in thoſe Books, that being " made a God, he ſaw his Impious Brother in the " deepeſt part of Hell. I ſaw him, ſays he, over-" whelm'd with Evils, and Groaning under the " weight of Miſery. He was in the Eighth Abode, " in the place where the greateſt Malefactors are " Tormented, where he expiated by a Horrid Pu-" niſhment all the Sins he had Committed, eſpecially " the Injuries he had done me. Afterwards, ex-" plaining the Puniſhment inflicted upon Thevathat. " He ſays he was faſtened to a Croſs (c) with large " Nails, which piercing his Hands and his Feet, " gave him a violent Pain; that he had a Crown " of Thorns on his Head, that his Body was full of " Wounds, and to compleat his Miſery, the Infernal " Fire burnt him without conſuming him. He was " moved with Compaſſion at the ſight of ſuch a " dreadful Spectacle; he forgot all the Injuries his " Brother had done him, and cou'd not ſee him in " that Condition without reſolving to come to his " Aſſiſtance. In order to it, he propoſed to him to " adore theſe three Words Pputhang, Thamang, " Sangkhang: Sacred and Myſterious Words, for " which the Siameſe have a Profound Veneration; the " firſt whereof ſignifies God, the ſecond Word of " God, and the third Imitator of God. He promiſes " him, that if he wou'd accept ſuch reaſonable and " eaſy Terms, he wou'd deliver him from the Tor-" ments to which he was Condemn'd. Thevathat " conſented to adore the two firſt Words, but re-" fuſed to adore the third, becauſe it ſignified Prieſt " or Imitator of God, proteſting that Prieſts were " ſinful Men, who deſerved no reſpect. 'Tis for a Pu-" niſhment of ſuch a Pride that he is under ſufferings " to this Day, and will ſuffer in Hell for the ſpace " of many Years".

Judge by this whether the Siameſe can ſay, without Contradicting themſelves, that 'tis a God who has no Power. Do they not acknowledge that he can deliver from the moſt Horrid Torments of Hell thoſe, who accept the Conditions he Propoſes to them? If it be ſaid that this concerns the time when he was not yet in the Eighth Heaven; I'll Anſwer that the Example of Thevathat may make 'em afraid of being miſerable, if they don't conform to the Rules preſcribed to them by Sommonokhodom; and conſequently, their Worſhip is not free from Self-Intereſt. They fancy that the (d) Chriſtians are Thevathat's Diſciples, (e) and they are ſo afraid of being thrown into Hell with Thevathat, if they follow his Doctrine, that they cannot be perſuaded to embrace Chriſtianity.

(A) Moreri being deceived by Charles Stephens.] The Article of Sophronia being very ſhort in Charles Stephens, I ſhall ſet it down at length. Sophronia matrona Romana, altera Lucretia Chriſtiana, cum vim Decii Principis videret ſe paſſuram, conſentiente viro arrepto gladio ſeipſam tranſfixit, ac inter ſanctas mulieres eſt relata. Euſeb. lib. 8. cap. 17. Moreri had from thence that Sophronia is call'd the Chriſtian Lucretia; which is a Fault, for he gives too large a ſenſe to the Words of the Latin Dictionary. The words conſentiente viro, which ought to be referr'd to paſſuram, and not to arrepto gladio, was a Trap for Moreri; a Comma ill placed made him believe that this Lady did not kill her ſelf without asking her Husband's Permiſſion to do it, which is falſe. Perhaps, the Comma ſignifies nothing to the Matter; for if you put one next to paſſuram, and one next to viro, the Ambiguity will be the ſame. An exact Writer wou'd have placed paſſuram next to viro, and then the Reader wou'd not have been uncertain. I need not take notice of the other miſtakes. I ſhall only ſay that Moreri has not Tranſcribed all the miſtakes of Charles Stephens; he has left out Decii Principis, and put the Tyrant Maxentius in the Room of Decius. Lloyd and Hofman have not mended one Syllable. I wonder Rivet ſays, (f) that Euſebius tells us that Sophronia having pray'd to God upon her Knees, as it were to Sacrifice her Chaſtity to JESUS CHRIST, kill'd her ſelf in the preſence of the Tyrant Maxentius. From whence I learn that he is alſo one of thoſe, who quote from the Modern Writers, without conſulting the Originals: I had a better Opinion of him. I was not ſurpriſed that Raviſius Textor in his Officina, and Decimator in his Sylva vocabulorum had Committed the ſame Faults with Charles Stephens. Thoſe Authors did not think of verifying their Quotations. Decimator ſeems to me more exact than all the reſt as to the Alluſion to Lucretia; he does not ſay, as Moreri does, that Sophronia was call'd the Chriſtian Lucretia, but that ſhe might juſtly be call'd ſo: Caſtitatis nomine celebris, ita ut altera Lucretia Chriſtiana non immerito dici poſſit.

(B) The moſt Learned Man —— he had a Country Accent.] The Proof of this is to be found in the 3. Book de Oratore; where Cicero ſays that the moſt agreeable Pronunciation of the Greek Tongue was that of the Athenians (g). They ſpoke better without any Learning than the moſt Learned Aſiaticks: Which ought not to be underſtood as if their words had been better placed; it concerns only the tone of their Voice and their Accent. Cicero ſays the ſame of the Romans: He obſerves that the moſt Ignorant Roman ſurpaſs'd in that reſpect the Learned Soranus; I ſhou'd rather call him the moſt Learned Man of that time. (b) Hanc dico ſuavitatem, quæ exit ex ore, quæ quidem ut apud Græcos Atticorum, ſic in latino ſermone hujus eſt urbis maxime propria —— Noſtri minus ſtudent literis quam latini, tamen ex iſtis quos noſtis, urbanis, in quibus minimum eſt literarum, nemo eſt quin literatiſſimum togatorum omnium Q. Valerium Soranum to his Eloquence: He obſerved in his Works a (B) Method, which Pliny followed; he added ſeveral Summaries to his Books, whereby the Reader cou'd chuſe what he had a mind to, without giving himſelf the trouble of Reading every thing. 'Tis ſaid he was ſo bold as to divulge a Myſtery (C) which the Romans kept very ſecret; 'twas the Name of the Tutelar God of their City. 'Tis further ſaid that he was puniſh'd with Death upon that account. Perhaps he ought not to be diſtinguiſh'd from Quintus (D) Valerius, whom Pompey cauſed to be put

---

* See the Remark [A]

† See the Remark

(a) Id. ib. pag. 211.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 211,

This es 'em ve JE- S RIST not r from vathat, what firms m moſt that inion y are er chard's ds ib. 214) that we orſhip Image the cified iour, ch does fectly reſent Pu- ment icted n Thevathat.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 209.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 213.

(f) Euſeb. lib. 8. Hiſtoriæ refert de Sophronia præfecti Romanæ urbis uxore quod cum animadverteret maritum metu mortis perterritum, prodidiſſe pudicitiam ſuam Maxentio Tyranno, cum prius defixis genibus Deum oraſſet, tanquam pudicitiam ſuam Chriſto immolaturam, pectus coram eo ferro transfixiſſe. Andr. Rivetus in Geneſ. Exercit. 73. oper tom. 1. p. 281. I have refer'd coram eo to Maxentius; perhaps it ſhould be referr'd to Husband. Rivet has committed a Solecism in this place.

(g) Eruditiſſimos homines Aſiaticos quivis Athenienſis indoctus, non verbis, ſed ſono vocis, nec tam bene quam ſuaviter loquendo facile ſuperabit. Cicero lib. 3. de Oratore fol. 90. D.

(b) Id. ib.

Soranum lenitate vocis, atque ipſo oris preſſu & ſono facile vincat. Theſe words plainly inſinuate that Soranus was then Living; and therefore I had reaſon to ſay, that he Flouriſh'd in the VII. Century of Rome; for Cicero ſuppoſes that the Diſcourſes, which make up his work de oratore, were made in the Year 662. Many believe that this Soranus was a friend of Cicero, and underſtand the following Paſſage of him: (a) Q. & D. Valerii Sorani, vicini & familiares mei non tam in dicendo admirabiles, quam docti & græcis literis & latinis. What goes before, ſhews that thoſe two Soranus's were not born at Rome, but in the Latium. I believe they were Natives of Sora, a Town of that Country, according to Pliny and Ptolemy (b).

(B) A Method which Pliny followed.] Theſe are his words in his Preface to Titus Son of Veſpaſian: (c) Quia occupationibus tuis publico bono parcendum erat, quid ſingulis contineatur libris huic epiſtolæ ſubjunxi: ſummaque cura, ne perlegendos eos haberes, operam dedi. Tu per hoc & aliis præſtabis ne perlegant: ſed ut quiſque deſideraverit aliquid, id tantum quærat & ſciat quo loco inveniat. Hoc ante me fecit in litteris noſtris Valerius Soranus, in libris quos ἐποπτίδων inſcripſit. I muſt not forget the Note of Father Hardouin: (d) Epoptides ſcripſerat, hoc eſt, ut Turnebus quidem intepretatur, de Grammatica libros: tanquam de myſteriis literarum & doctrina. Erant enim ἐπόπται qui ad inſpicienda ſacra occulta admittebantur. 'Tis certain our Soranus wrote ſome Grammatical Books. See (e) Varro, (f) and Aulus Gellius.

(C) To divulge a Myſtery———that he was puniſh'd with Death upon that account.] Pliny does not ſay in expreſs Terms that Soranus divulged the Name of the Tutelar God of Rome; but it may be inferr'd from his words: (g) Cujus (Romæ) nomen alterum dicere arcanis cærimoniarum nefas habetur: optimaque & ſalutari fide abolitum enunciavit Valerius Soranus luitque mox pœnas. He ſays the City of Rome had two Names: One that was known to every Body; and the other ſo Myſterious that Religion did not permit it ſhou'd be Revealed, and that Soranus having divulged it, was immediately Puniſh'd for it. 'Tis not to be doubted that the Myſterious Name was the ſame with that of the Tutelar God of the Town, or (h) at leaſt, that it was look'd upon as a thing that protected it. Solinus, who Tranſcribes Pliny, took the liberty to ſpecify the Puniſhment inflicted upon Soranus for his Profanation: He ſays (i) that he was Condemn'd to Death; but confines himſelf to the unknown and myſterious Name of the City, and does not ſay it was the Name of the Tutelar God of Rome. I am going to quote two Authors, who are more formal upon this Point. (k) Verum nomen ejus numinis quod urbi Romæ præeſſet, ſciri ſacrorum lege prohibetur, quod auſus quidam tribunus plebis enuntiare, in crucem levatus eſt. This is the ground on which ſome (l) ſay that our Soranus was Tribune of the People, and Crucified. They are obliged to add ſomething of their own, for Servius names no Body. The other Paſſage, which I am to quote, is out of Plutarch. (m) Διὰ τί τὸν θεὸν ἐκεῖνον ᾧ μάλιστα τὴν Ῥώμην σῴζειν προσήκει ϗ φυλάττειν, εἴτε ἐστὶν ἄρρην εἴτε θήλεια, ϗ λέγειν ἀπείρηται ϗ ζητεῖν ϗ ὀνομάζειν; ταύτην δὲ τὴν ἀπόρρησιν ἐξάπτουσι δεισιδαιμονίας, ἱστοροῦντες Οὐαλέριον Σωρανὸν ἀπολέσθαι κακῶς διὰ τὸ ἐξειπεῖν. Cur tutelarem Romæ Deum, maſne ſit an femina, dicere aut quærere, ejuſque nomen efferre nefas eſt? quod quidam interdictum a ſuperſtitione repetunt, narrantes Valerium Soranum male periiſſe, quod nomen illud edidiſſet. Note, That according to Plutarch, none was allowed to inquire into the Sex or the Name of the Tutelar God of Rome. Note alſo, that ſome Authors find ſomething more Myſterious in Soranus's Puniſhment; for they ſay, that as ſoon as he uttered that Name, he fell Dead upon the place. They (n) affirm that this is to be found in Pliny, and ſeveral other Writers. Pliny ſays nothing of it. We ſhall ſee in the Remark D that perhaps Soranus's Indiſcretion was not the occaſion of his Death. Take notice of a great Miſtake in Gyraldus. Having ſaid, 1. That (o) Pliny and Solinus relate that Valerius Soranus (p) was Condemn'd to Death for being ſo bold as to pronounce the occult Name of Rome, 2. That (q) Sempronius wrote the ſame thing; he adds, that others affirm that this Soranus was Crucified, which occaſion'd the Worſhip of the Goddeſs Angerona, the Patroneſs of Silence. (r) Alii in crucem ſublatum tradunt, & PROPTEREA cultam Deam Angeronam ſilentii præſidem. It plainly appears from Pliny that it was a very Ancient Worſhip, grounded upon the Myſtery of the occult Name of Rome. (s) Exemplum religionis ANTIQUÆ ob hoc maxime ſilentium inſtitutæ. Namque Diva Angerona, &c. Solinus expreſſes himſelf more clearly ſtill: (t) Inter ANTIQUISSIMAS ſane religiones Sacellum colitur Angeronæ. There is hardly any Illuſion more dangerous than that of the Particles term'd Cauſales by the Grammarians. They have occaſion'd horrid Blunders in the moſt Learned Compilers; and when a Man goes about to give a different turn to what he Tranſcribes, and to ſhorten it as much as he can, he'll be apt to miſtake the Senſe of thoſe Particles, unleſs he be very attentive. The Learned Gyraldus was miſtaken for want of duly conſidering Pliny's words.

(D) From Quintus Valerius, whom Pompey cauſed to be put to Death.] If I am not miſtaken, Plutarch is the only Author who informs us of this particular. He ſays that Pompey being well informed of that Man's Learning, took him a ſide and walk'd with him. Note, that Pompey was then in Sicily, and actually judging the Criminals, that is, thoſe of Marius's Party who were to be put to Death. When he ſaw Quintus Valerius brought to the Tribunal, he roſe up to diſcourſe with him in Private; but as ſoon as he knew of him what he deſired to know, he ordered him to be kill'd. Plutarch relates this only upon the credit of an Author, whom he (u) miſtruſts as to thoſe things which concern'd the Friends or Enemies of Cæſar. (x) Γάϊος δὲ Ὄππιος, ὁ Καίσαρος ἑταῖρος, ἀπανθρώπως φησὶ ϗ Κοΐντῳ Οὐαλερίῳ χρήσασθαι τὸν Πομπήϊον. ἐπιστάμενον γὰρ ὡς ἔστι φιλολόγος ἀνὴρ ϗ φιλομαθὴς ἐν ὀλίγοις ὁ Οὐαλέριος, ὡς ἤχθη πρὸς αὐτὸν, ἐπισπασάμενον ϗ συμπεριπατήσαντα, ϗ πυθόμενον ὧν ἔχρῃζε ϗ μαθόντα, προστάξαι τοῖς ὑπηρέταις εὐθὺς ἀνελεῖν ἀπαγαγόντας. Addit C. Oppius Cæſaris familiaris ſævum Pompeium etiam in Q. Valerium extitiſſe: quum enim ſciret humanitatis & literarum inter paucos ſtudioſum Valerium, ut actus ad ipſum eſt, ſeduxiſſe illum & deambulaſſe una, ubi accepit & didicit ab eo quæ cupiebat, imperaſſe lictoribus ut ilicò auferrent eum & interficerent. May not one ſuppoſe, 1. That it was upon this occaſion that our Soranus divulged the unknown Name of the City of Rome? 2. That Oppius omitted this particular, not to afford a pretence to excuſe Pompey? For if it might have been alledged that Soranus revealed to him ſuch a Secret, he who cauſed him to be put to Death might have been cleared, and his ſeverity might have been look'd upon as an act of Devotion, and a Holy Zeal againſt Profane Men. I affirm nothing, and leave it to the Judgment of the Criticks. I ſhall only ſay, that 'tis not to be imagin'd that Pompey had a mind to learn of him ſome Political Secrets, and ſome Intrigues of Marius; for his deſire of having a private Diſcourſe with him, was only grounded upon his knowing that he was a Man of great Learning. Plutarch obſerves it in expreſs words. Now 'tis certain that the knowledge of Philoſophy and the ſtudy of Antiquity enabled Soranus to diſcover to Pompey a Religious Secret, an unknown Law, an old Ceremony, but not the

(a) Idem in Bruto p. m. 283.

(b) See Corradus in Brutum Ciceronis pag. 284.

(c) Plinius in præfat. in fine.

(d) Harduin. in hunc locum Plinii.

(e) Varro de lingua Latina l. 6. p. m. 71.

(f) Aulus Gellius lib. 2. c. 10.

(g) Plinius lib 3. cap. 5. pag. m. 330, 331.

(h) See the Paſſage of Macrobius in the Remark E.

(i) Valerium denique Soranum, quod contra interdictum id eloqui auſus foret ob meritum profanæ vocis neci datum. Solin. c. 1, p. 1.

(k) Servius in 1. lib. Georg. v. 499.

(l) Vives in Auguſt. de civit. Dei l. 7. c. 9.

(m) Plut. in quæſt. Roman. p. 278. E.

put to Death. I ſhall obſerve by the by, that the reaſon why the Romans (E) conceal'd the Name of their Tutelar God, has little Solidity in it. It appears from two Verſes of Soranus, which are ſtill Extant, that he believed that God is the Immanent Cauſe of all things. That Opinion does not differ (F) from Spinoziſm. I ſhall alſo obſerve why * ſome think that he was Tribune of the People. I make no doubt that he was related to D. Valerius SORANUS, who, as well as he, made himſelf more conſiderable for † his Learning, than for the beauty of his Diſcourſes.

(*) In the Remark C.

(†) See in the Remark A.

SOUBISE,

the moſt Private Intrigues of Marius's Factions. Beſides, 'tis not improbable that, as things ſtood then, Pompey was willing to know the occult Name of Rome. His Party, which was that of Sylla, had lately taken that Town. Was Pompey ſure that the other Party wou'd never Conquer it again? Did not Pompey ſee that the Republick wou'd be expoſed to Civil Wars? Was he not ſenſible of his Ambition? Cou'd he think that the diſcovery of the Name of the Tutelar God wou'd be of no uſe to him? However it be, if Quintus Valerius in Plutarch, and Soranus in Pliny are one and the ſame Man, which is very likely, there is little reaſon to ſay that the Profane Indiſcretion of the Man, who divulged the unknown Name of Rome, was immediately Puniſh'd; for according to Plutarch he was Puniſh'd as one of Marius's Accomplices. 'Tis not true that Plutarch calls him a (a) Philoſopher. (b) Ludovicus Vives, Charles Stephens, Lloyd and Hofman are in the wrong to ſay ſo. Note, that Florus reckons the Death of the Prætor Soranus among the Cruel Actions of Sylla's Party. Piget poſt hæc referre, ſays he (c), ludibrio habita fata Carbonis, fata Sorani prætoris, &c. This might be of ſome uſe to thoſe, who wou'd prove that our Soranus was Prætor, and the ſame Valerius whom Pompey cauſed to be put to Death.

(E) The Reaſon why the Romans conceal'd the Name of their Tutelar God, has little Solidity in it.] They had Conjured upon ſome occaſions the Tutelar Gods of other Towns, and were afraid the like wou'd be done to them. This was the reaſon why they were not willing that the Name of their Patron ſhou'd be known. They hoped the Ignorance of that Name wou'd ſecure his Protection to them, as the Tyrians believed they might keep their Gods from removing by loading 'em with Chains. This is one of Plutarch's Anſwers to the Queſtion above mention'd. (d) Πότερον, ὡς τῶν Ῥωμαϊκῶν τινὲς ἱστορήκασιν, ἐκκλήσεις εἰσὶ καὶ γοητεῖαι θεῶν· αἷς νομίζοντες καὶ αὐτοὶ θεούς τινας ἐκκεκλῆσθαι παρὰ τῶν πολεμίων καὶ μετῳκηκέναι πρὸς αὑτούς, ἐφοβοῦντο τὸ αὐτὸ παθεῖν ὑφ' ἑτέρων; ὥσπερ οὖν Τύριοι δεσμοὺς ἀγάλμασι λέγονται περιβαλεῖν, ἕτεροι δὲ αἰτεῖν ἐγγυητὰς ἐπὶ λουτρὸν ἢ καθαρμόν τινα προπέμποντες, οὕτως ᾤοντο Ῥωμαῖοι τὸ ἄρρητον καὶ τὸ ἄγνωστον ἀσφαλέστατον εἶναι θεῷ καὶ βεβαιότατον φρουράν. An quia, ut nonnulli rerum Romanarum ſcriptores tradunt, carmina quædam ſunt & præſtigiæ quibus dii eliciuntur: quibus uſi Romani cùm putarent ſe quoſdam hoſtium deos ad ſe traduxiſſe, cavere voluerunt ne idem ſibi ab aliis eveniret? Itaque ſicut Tyrii (†) vincula injicere ſimulacris dicuntur, alii autem cùm ea ad lavacrum aut luſtrationem aliquam deducunt, fidejuſſores pro reditu exigunt: ita Romani tutiſſimè ac conſtantiſſimè adſervari deum crediderunt, qui neque de nomine notus aliis eſſet. I have found in Pliny a Paſſage ſo full of Particulars, that the Reader will be well pleaſed to find it here: (e) Verrius Flaccus auctores ponit, quibus credat, in oppugnationibus ante omnia ſolitum a Romanis ſacerdotibus evocari Deum, cujus in tutela id oppidum eſſet: promittique illi eundem, aut ampliorem apud Romanos cultum. Et durat in Pontificum diſciplina id ſacrum: conſtatque ideo occultatum, in cujus Dei tutela Roma eſſet, ne qui hoſtium ſimili modo agerent. Macrobius informs us of two things: One is, (f) that every Town is under the Protection of a God, and that the Romans perceiving that it was likely the Towns they Beſieged, wou'd be obliged to Surrender, Conjured their Tutelar Gods, whether they believed they cou'd not take a Town without it, or becauſe they thought it an Impious thing to make the Gods Priſoners. The other is, that for theſe Reaſons they conceal'd the Name of the Tutelar God of Rome, and the Latin Name of that Town. He adds, that the Name of that Deity was nevertheleſs ſeen in the Books of ſome Ancients. 'Tis true they mention'd it differently; but as for the Occult Name of Rome, it was never known, no not to the moſt Learned Men, for the Romans took an effectual care to prevent their being treated as they had treated others, by conjuring the Gods who protected them. (g) Propterea ipſi Romani & deum in cujus tutela urbs Roma eſt ut ipſius urbis Latinum nomen ignotum eſſe voluerunt, ſed dei quidem nomen nonnullis antiquorum licet inter ſe diſſidentium libris inſitum: & ideo vetuſta perſequentibus quidquid de hoc putatur innotuit---Ipſius vero urbis nomen etiam doctiſſimis ignotum eſt, caventibus Romanis ne quod ſæpe adverſus urbes hoſtium feciſſe ſe noverant idem ipſi quoque hoſtili evocatione paterentur, ſi tutelæ ſuæ nomen divulgaretur. I wonder Macrobius did not know what Pliny and Plutarch relate of Soranus. He knew it not, ſince he ſays the Myſterious Name of Rome was always unknown even to the moſt Learned Men. I wonder alſo at his diſtinction between the Tutelar God of Rome, and the unknown Name of that City, to which he aſcribes likewiſe the ſame Protection. But I wonder more ſtill, that having ſaid what I have juſt now mention'd, he ſhou'd give us the Formulary of conjuring Tutelar Gods; for it appears by that Formulary that there was no neceſſity to know the Name or the Sex of the Deities who protected a Town. They conjured them without naming them, and with this Clauſe, Whether you be a God or a Goddeſs. (h) Eſt autem carmen hujuſmodi, quo di evocantur cum oppugnatione civitas cingitur: SI. DEUS. SI. DEA. EST. CUI. POPOLUS. CIVITAS. QUE. KARTHAGINIENSIS. EST. IN. TUTELA. TE. QUE. MAXIME. ILLE. QUI. URBIS. HUIUS. POPOLI. QUE. TUTELAM. RECEPISTI. PRECOR. VENEROR. QUE. VENIAM. QUE. A. VOBIS. PETO. UT. VOS. POPOLUM. CIVITATEM. QUE. KARTHAGINIENSEM. DESERATIS. LOCA. TEMPLA. SACRA. URBEM. QUE. EORUM. RELINQUATIS. ABSQUE. HIS. ABEATIS, &c. Was not I in the right to ſay that the reaſon why the Romans kept the Name of the Tutelar God ſecret, was not a ſolid one? They knew not the Names nor even the Sex of the Tutelar Gods they Conjured, and yet they Conjured them; and therefore, what did it avail them that their Enemies ſhou'd not know the Name of the God who was the Protector of Rome, or the True Name of that City? Cou'd this prevent practiſing againſt the Romans what they had practiced againſt other Towns? Macrobius is leſs excuſable than the other Writers, ſince in the very ſame Page where he ſpeaks as they do, he mentions a Formulary of Conjuring which confutes what he ſays. 'Tis certain that the Conditional Particle ſi Deus, ſi Dea, undeniably proves that they knew not the Name of the God whom they Conjured; for Varro affirms that they uſed thoſe words, when they were afraid of miſtaking the Name of a Deity for that of another. They made uſe of 'em when they offered Sacrifices upon occaſion of an Earthquake; becauſe they knew not the Name of the God, who was the cauſe of ſuch a Calamity. Aulus Gellius is my Author for it. (i) Propterea, that is, becauſe the Name of that God was unknown, veteres Romani —— ubi terram moviſſe ſenſerant, nunciatumve erat, ferias ejus rei cauſa edicto imperabant; ſed dei nomen, ita uti ſolet, cui ſervari ferias oporteret, ſtatuere & edicere quieſcebant; ne, alium pro alio nominando, falſa religione populum alligarent. eas ferias ſi quis polluiſſet, piaculoque ob hanc rem opus eſſet, hoſtiam, SI. DEO. SI. DEAE. immolabat. idque ita ex decreto pontificum obſervatum eſſe M. Varro dicit: quoniam & qua vi & per quem deorum dearumve terra tremeret incertum eſſet.

(F) That Opinion does not differ from Spinoziſm.]

(a) He … calls him a Philoſo… pher and … a Phi… loſopher.

(b) Lud. Vives in Auguſt. de Civit. Dei lib. 7. c. 9.

(c) Florus, lib. 3. cap. 21.

(d) Plut. in quaſt. Roman. pag. 278, 279.

(†) See … Quintus Curtius lib. 4. cap. … n. 22. & … Freinſ… mius.

(e) Plin. … 28 c. 2. … 119, … 20.

(f) Con… omnes … es in … cujus … i eſſe … tela, … morem… e Ro… norum … anum … multis … otum … iſſe, ut, … m ob… derent … bem … ſtium … m que … m capi … ſſe con… derent, … rto car… ine evo… rent tu… lares … os: quod … aliter … bem … pi poſſe … n cre… rent, aut … poſſet … fas æſti… arent … os ha… re cap… vos. … acrob. … turnal. … 3. cap. … pag. m. … 3.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Macrobius ubi ſupra. He ſays he takes it from the fifth Book rerum reconditarum of Sammonicus Serenus, who had found it in an old Book of Furius.

(i) Aulius Gellius lib. 2. cap. 28.

SOUBISE, a Town in Saintonge. Many Perſons of Quality had their Name from it. In 1575, it fell to the Houſe of Rohan by the Marriage of Catherine de Parthenai, Daughter and Heireſs of John de Parthenai L'Archeveſque, with Renatus de Rohan II. of that Name. This John de Parthenai, known by the Name of Soubiſe, will make the Subject of the following Article.

SOUBISE (John de Parthenai Lord of) is one of the Heroes of the XVI. Century among the Proteſtants of France. He began to know their Doctrine at the Court * of the Duke of Ferrara; when Renata of France, Daughter of Lewis XII. and Wife of that Duke, received there ſome Preachers of the Reform'd Religion, and embraced their Opinions. Being return'd into France, he zealouſly (A) endeavoured to propagate his Doctrine; and Catherine (B) de Medicis was like to become his Proſelyte. In the very beginning of the Criſis, which made the War unavoidable between both Religions in 1562. he was one of the moſt conſiderable Aſſociates of the Prince of Condé, who choſe him to Command at Lyons, when that great Town, which had declar'd for the Cauſe, did not ſeem to be in good Hands under Baron des Adrets. Soubiſe wonderfully juſtify'd the Choice that was made of him to keep ſuch a Place; for notwithſtanding all the Difficulties he went through, he preſerved it, and gave a good Account of it. He perform'd many † Noble Actions. The Duke of Nemours Beſieged that Town to no purpoſe, and the Queen Mother endeavoured in vain || to ſurpriſe him by Negotiations. He was very much ſuſpected of having a Hand in the Murder of the Duke of Guiſe; and it appears that Poltrot laid many things to his charge in his Depoſitions: Nevertheleſs, 'tis the Opinion of the moſt Equitable (C) Writers of the Church of Rome, that he was not concern'd in that abominable Action. He had been β Gentleman of the King's Chamber, and was made Knight γ of the Order the 7th of December 1561. He had Commanded the Army of Henry II. in (D) Tuſcany, and to uſe Le Laboureur's δ Words, he was a Leading and very Serviceable Man. He died in ε 1566, being ζ about 54 Years of Age. He had Married Antoinette Bouchard, Eldeſt Daughter of the Houſe of Aubeterre. She was a Lady (E) very Zealous for her Religion. They left but one Daughter, viz. Catherine de Parthenai, whom I have mention'd in Her Article.

I need only quote a Paſſage of St. Auguſtin to prove this. (a) Jovem ut Deus ſit, & maxime ut rex deorum, non alium poſſunt exiſtimare, quam mundum: ut in diis cæteris ſecundum iſtos ſuis partibus regnet. In hanc ſententiam etiam quoſdam verſus Valerii Sorani exponit idem Varro, in eo libro, quem ſeorſum ab iſtis de cultu deorum ſcripſit, qui verſus hi ſunt.

Jupiter omnipotens regum rex ipſe (b), deuſque
Progenitor, genitrixque deûm, deus unus, & omnis.

Exponuntur autem in eodem libro, ita ut eum marem exiſtimarent, qui ſemen emitteret, fœminam quæ acciperet: Jovemque eſſe mundum, & eum omnia ſemina ex ſe emittere, & in ſe recipere, qua cauſa, inquit, ſcripſit Soranus: Jupiter progenitor genitrixque: nec minus cum cauſa unum & eundem omnia eſſe. Mundus enim unus, & in eo uno omnia ſunt.

(A) He zealouſly endeavoured to Propagate.] The Author of the Hiſtory of the Reformed Churches in France, makes the following Obſervation concerning the Reformation of the Town of Soubiſe. (c) " As " for the Town of Soubiſe, the Lord of that place, " who was a Man of an extraordinary Piety, had ſo " ordered it, that many People were already very " well inſtructed. Which the (d) Old Man perceiving, " ſo earneſtly laboured in the Work of the " Lord, that every body look'd upon his Labours " as a wonderful thing. He never ſlept in the " Night, becauſe they durſt not meet in the Day " time, and he went through all the adjacent places, " being often obliged to make his Eſcape into the " Woods, where he ſpent whole Nights. In ſhort, " the Lord did ſo effectually employ him in his " Work, that in a little time a great part of the " People forſook the Maſs in the Neighbouring " Country.

(B) Catherine de Medicis was like to become his Proſelyte.] I ſhall quote an Author (e), who read a Manuſcript Life of Soubiſe, wherein doubtleſs he found many particulars. The Admiral, ſays he, was only miſtaken " in believing that Catherine de Medicis " was a Calviniſt in her Heart; but any body " elſe would have been deceived in it. Soubiſe ac- " quainted him with the long Conferences he daily " had with that Princeſs about Calviniſm. He aſ- " ſured him that ſhe was as well inſtructed in it " as the Queen of Navarre. He ſuppoſed at leaſt, " that ſhe was no leſs inclin'd to it——— The " Dutcheſs of Montpenſier was always preſent at " thoſe Converſations, and ſeem'd to be ſo well per- " ſuaded of Soubiſe's Diſcourſes, that ſhe oppoſed, " as much as ſhe could, the Deſign of her Hus- " band, who intended to put into a Nunnery their " three laſt Daughters——— And indeed the " Dutcheſs being at the Point of death, when Diſſi- " mulation can be of no uſe, ſent for John Malot, " a Miniſter of Paris, and deſired to receive the Sa- " crament in the Calviniſtical way, which was de- " nied her." Varillas informs us in another (f) place, that Soubiſe, who left the Queen at laſt, being weary of her Delays, affirm'd, that tho' ſhe wanted Courage to declare her ſelf a Calviniſt, ſhe wou'd not be unwilling to be forced to it. He had ſome reaſon to think ſo, witneſs what ſhe ſaid (g), when ſhe heard the falſe News that the Proteſtants had won the Battle of Dreux, Well, we muſt pray to God in French; to which I add, the great Fondneſs ſhe ſhewed to the Friends of the New Opinions. She wou'd have quickly reſolved to abjure Popery, if it had been worſted, and to procure to Soubiſe the glory of a great Converter. Varillas owns (h) that ſhe ſided with the Catholick Party more out of Neceſſity than out of Choice.

(C) 'Tis the Opinion of the moſt equitable Writers.] Le Laboureur made no Scruple to Publiſh theſe Remarkable Words. (i) " Admiral de Chatillon, " Count de la Rouchefoucaut, and the Sieurs de " Soubiſe and Feuquieres had no hand in Poltrot's " Conſpiracy——— One cannot believe ſuch a " thing of Men of their Quality, and it is ſo ill " proved by the Interrogatories of the Murderer, " that 'tis plain, his only Deſign in accuſing them " was to make the World believe, that ſome Lead- " ers of a Faction that was actually in Arms, had " a hand in that Plot.

(D) The Army of Henry II. in Tuſcany.] If we believe Brantome, he was brought into Trouble when he had that Employment. That Hiſtorian ſays (k) that M. de Soubiſe being accuſed by the Sieneſe of many things he had done in Tuſcany, when he was employed there in King Henry's Reign, the Duke of Guiſe interceded for him. I cannot tell why Varillas (l) clears and paraphraſes thoſe Words in the following manner. After the War of Siena, in which 'twas ſaid that Soubiſe had been guilty of a Miſdemeanor, both as to the War, and the Diſtribution of Money, ſome Accuſations were brought againſt him, tending to deprive him of his Honour and Life; but the Duke of Guiſe openly Protected him.

(E) A Lady very Zealous for her Religion.] A Report being ſpread that the Catholicks deſign'd to take her, to carry her to the Gates of Lyons, and to threaten to ſtab her and her Daughter in the ſight of her Huſband, if he refuſed to Surrender that Place; Soubiſe ſent to her Poltrot, who came back with

---

* Varillas, Hiſt. de l'Hereſ. l. [illegible] towards the End.

† See Varillas Hiſt. de Charl. IX. tom. 1. pag. 212, 215. Dutch Edition. But ſee particularly Beza hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 11.

|| Varil. ib. pag. 225.

β Beza l. 3. p. 257.

γ Le Laboureur Add. t. to Caſtelin. tom. 1. pag. 378.

δ Labour. ib. p. 804.

(a) Auguſtin. de civitate Dei lib. 7. c. 9. pag. m. 637.

(b) There is in the Old Manuſcripts as Ludovicus Vives obſerves, rerumque deumque, and I find the ſame reading in the 11. Chapt. of the ſame Book of St. Auguſtin in my Edition.

(c) Beza, Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 2. ad. ann. 1559. pag. 199.

(d) He means a Miniſter, call'd Michael Mulot who was above 60 Years old.

(e) Varillas Hiſt. de Charl. IX. tom. 1. pag. 60.

Article. The First Husband ſhe had, viz. the Baron du Pont in Bretagne, took the Name of SOUBISE: 'Tis he who makes a glorious Figure in the moſt remarkable Operations of the Second and Third Civil Wars. He was made Priſoner * at the Battle of Jarnac in 1569; but he made his Eſcape. La Noue being Wounded at the Siege of Fontenai-le-Comte the Year following †, Soubiſe Commanded in Chief, and made himſelf Maſter of the Place. In the ſame Year he receiv'd two Wounds at the Siege of Saintes ‖. He was kill'd during (F) the Paris Maſſacre, after he had Defended himſelf like a Lion. The Ladies β were curious to ſee what ground there was for the γ Action that was brought againſt him. I ſpeak of it in another place δ.

SOUBISE (BENJAMIN DE ROHAN, DUKE (A) OF) Grand-Son of the fore-going, and Son of Renatus de Rohan II. of that Name, and of Catherine de Parthenai, ſeconded ſtoutly the Enterpriſes of the Duke of Rohan his Brother, either to relieve Rochelle, or to maintain the Proteſtant Party in France. He had learn'd the Art of War in Holland, under Prince Maurice, and he was one of the French Gentlemen ε who threw themſelves into Bergue, when the Spaniards Beſieged that Place in the Year 1606. He ſuſtain'd the Siege of St. Jean d'Angely in 1621, againſt an Army commanded by Lewis XIII, and when he Surrendred the Place, obtain'd an Amneſty for what was paſt, upon Promiſe (B) of Obedience for the time to come. Nevertheleſs he made himſelf Maſter of Royan towards the latter end of the ſame Year. In February 1622, he ſeized Olonne, and was ſo fully Maſter of the Country in the Lower Poitou, that his Parties went and made ſome Priſoners five Leagues from Nantes. He was not long uppermoſt, for he was ſo vigorouſly attack'd in the Iſle (C) of Rié, ſoon after he had ſubdued it, that all his Forces were ſcattered. He retir'd to Rochelle, where the Inhabitants expreſſed ſome Contempt and Diſſatisfaction againſt him; which moved him to go the ſooner into England to ask for Succours. The Court of France being inform'd of it, he was declared Guilty of High Treaſon the 15th of July 1622. He found a way to fit out ſome Ships, notwithſtanding the Refuſal of his Britannick Majeſty; but they were caſt away at Plimouth. In the beginning of ζ the Year 1625, he took Poſſeſſion of the Iſle of Ré, and made an Attempt upon Blavet or Port-Louis in Bretagne, in which he had but an imperfect Succeſs; for 'twas commonly his Fate (D) not to be very Fortunate in the vaſt Projects he formed. He took the Port and ſix Men of War he found in it; the Landing Forces took the Town, but meeting with ſome Reſiſtance in the Fort,

* D'Aubigné tom. I. p. 291.
† [illegible] hist. [illegible] l. 5.
‖ D'Aubigné ib. pag. 475.
β Ib. ib. pag. 540.
γ 'Twas a Proceſs about Impotency.
δ In the Article Quellenec, and in the Remark C. of the Article Parthenai.
ε Grotius Ann. l. 15.
ζ This Event is placed in the Year 1624, in the Miniſtere du Cardinal de Richelieu.

with ſome Letters of that Lady, "wherein ſhe entreated him to ſuffer 'em both to be kill'd, and "to remain faithful to his Party (a). "She was a "worthy Wife of a Man, who (b) expreſs'd an unſurmountable Averſion for all ſeperate Treaties, "and proteſted he would never ſign none but ſuch "as ſhould be Sign'd with the Prince of Condé's "Hand." She was likewiſe a worthy Siſter of the Viſcount d'Aubeterre, who forſook all for the Proteſtant Religion, and ſubmitted to a very hard Life. Brantome ſpeaks of him in the following manner. "(c) He was a Refugée at Geneva, and "a Button-maker by his Trade; for there was a "Law in that Town, that every Body ſhould have "a Trade and live by it, tho' he were a Gentleman "or a Lord. The ſaid Aubeterre, tho' a Man of "a Noble Family, was a Button-maker: I ſaw him "once, as I went through Geneva, very poor and "miſerable. Afterwards he was taken, during the "Conſpiracy of Amboiſe, and Condemn'd like the "reſt; but the Duke of Guiſe, at the Requeſt of "Marechal de St. André, procured him his Pardon." Some have ſaid, (d) that by the recommendation of the Lady de Soubiſe, Counſellor Fumée was ſet at Liberty, when he run the ſame Danger as Counſellor du Bourg; but others (e) aſcribe it to the Expedients ſuggeſted by Soubiſe to the Queen Mother, who had been kind to him long before. Catharina, they are (f) Thuanus's words, in gratiam Joannis Parthenai Subiſæ reguli ſibi percari, & Fumeo amiciſſimi ſua commendatione apud judices illius cauſam non parum ſublevaſſe creditur. 'Tis very likely, d'Aubigné took the Wife for the Husband.

(F) Was kill'd during the Paris Maſſacre.] Varillas ſays, that after Poltrot's Attempt, Soubiſe went but once to Court, which he left before he had been obſerved, being afraid that the Guiſes were not perſuaded of the Truth of what was Publiſh'd, to invalidate the Depoſition of an Aſſaſſin, who had been his Domeſtick. If this be true, he would not have gone to the King of Navarre's Wedding, if he had been living; and it wou'd be a new Proof that Soubiſe mention'd by d'Aubigné, was the Baron du Pont (g).

(A) Duke of.] I give him that Title in imitation of the Author, who Publiſh'd the Life of the Duke of Rohan in 1666. That Writer follows the common Road. Nevertheleſs, 'tis certain, that the Lordſhip of Soubiſe was never erected into a Dutchy, and that the Geographer du Val (h), who affirms it, does it without Reaſon. 'Tis an Abuſe that prevails in the Noble Families of France, to annex ſometimes one Title, and ſometimes another to a Seat, without expecting Letters of Erection. Don't we ſee that the Sons of Dukes bear, under the Title of Marquiſate, the Name of the Seats of which their Fathers ſtyle themſelves Dukes? Nay, there are ſome Seats that belong no longer to a Family, and yet the Perſons belonging to that Family take the Name of thoſe Seats; one calls himſelf Marquiſs, another Count, another Viſcount or Baron, &c. of thoſe Seats. Le Laboureur (i) does mightily exclaim againſt it.

(B) Upon promiſe of Obedience for the time to come.] The Author who anſwered this Duke of Soubiſe's Manifeſto in 1625, pretends, (k) that the Duke asked the King's Pardon when he came out of St. Jean d'Angely, and ſwore to be for ever his moſt faithful Subject and Servant; to bear Arms no longer againſt his Service, upon any Pretence whatſoever, and to adhere no more to the Aſſociations and Aſſemblies that ſhould be made without his Majeſty's Authority. He pretends alſo that the Proteſtant Hiſtorians took care not to inſert in their Hiſtories the Oath taken by M. de Soubiſe, and thoſe that came out of St. Jean d'Angely, with him, but that 'tis to be found in the Records of the Provoſtſhip of the Hôtel, and in the Memoirs of the Sieur de Modene, Great Provoſt of France, Printed at Toulouſe in the Year 1621.

(C) In the Iſle of Rié] M. de Puyſegur has confounded that Defeat with the Loſs which the Duke of Soubiſe ſuſtain'd in the Iſle of Ré in the Year 1625. After the Siege of Montpellier, ſays he (l), there was no War againſt the Proteſtants for the ſpace of Four Years. The King cauſed a Fort to be built near Rochelle——— and then he went into the Iſle of Ré with his Army commanded by the Prince of Condé. The Duke of Soubiſe, who had Four Thouſand Men in that Iſland, was beaten. Thus you ſee how the reſemblance of Names occaſions Anachroniſms. The Victory of the Iſle of Rié, wherein Lewis XIII was in Perſon, was obtain'd before the Siege of Montpellier; but neither he nor the Prince of Condé were preſent at that of Ré, which happen'd after that Siege.

(D) Not to be very Fortunate.] If this was the only thing charged upon him in the Relations of the Catholick

(a) The Manuſcript life of Soubiſe ... Va- ... Charl. ... tom. 11 ... pag. 331. (b) Va- ... ibid. ... pag. 277. ... occa- ... of the ... des ... Lettres ... the ... Dauphi- ... and to ... to have ... Soubiſe's ... (d) Me- ... 3. ... du ... de ... (e) D'Au- ... tom. ... p. 123. ... La ... de ... II. ... 147. ... hiſt. ... l. 3. ... 257. ... Thu- ... l. 23.

(h) In his Book, Intitl'd la France, in the Chapt. of Xaintonge.

(i) Addit. to Caſtelnau's Memoirs tom. 2. p. 793.

(k) Mercure Fr. tom. 11. pag. 262.

(l) Memoir. pag. 37. Dutch Edit.

Fort, he Re-imbarkt his Troops, and went away, not (E) without leaving ſome Ships that run a-ground. One of thoſe he took, call'd the Virgin Mary, carried Eighty Guns, and coſt above Two Hundred Thouſand Crowns. He had the Vexation of being diſown'd by the Proteſtants, tho' it was not doubted that he had Concerted every thing with the Duke of Rohan his Brother, in the Conferences he had with him at Caſtres, in the Autumn of the Year 1624. He Publiſh'd a Manifeſto, which was aſcribed to La Milletiere, who ſtyled himſelf Intendant of the Churches Admiralty: And 'till he ſhould find a proper time to make a Deſcent near Bourdeaux, he made himſelf Formidable by taking many Merchant-men, and kept all the Coaſt in Awe from the Mouth of the Garonne to the Mouth of the Loire. He came into the Garonne the 11th of June 1625 with a Fleet of Seventy Four Sail, and making a Deſcent into Medoc, poſſeſt himſelf of Caſtillon. After all, this Undertaking ſignified but little; he was quickly obliged to return into the Iſle of Ré, from whence advancing ſome Days after towards the Fleet of the Enemies, he Burnt (F) the Dutch Admiral, which made the Court haſten the Preparations that were making to clear that Coaſt. The Duke of Montmorency Admiral of France, ſupported by the Dutch Ships, beat Soubiſe's Fleet. He was expell'd from the Iſle of Ré, and then from that of Oleron, and forced to retire into England *. He was there very Inſtrumental to procure to the Rochelois the Succour that was ſent to them; and when that Town was taken, notwithſtanding that Succour, he did not care to enjoy the Benefit of the Amneſty in France, but rather choſe to ſtay in England, where he died without Iſſue, and from whence he endeavour'd to prejudice the Court of (G) France as much as he cou'd. The Name of SOUBISE continues ſtill in the Houſe of Rohan, in the Perſon of Francis de Rohan, (Son of Hercules de Rohan Duke of Mombazon) who ſtyles himſelf Prince of SOUBISE. He Married the 16th of April 1663 Anne de Rohan, Daughter of Henry Chabot and of Margaret de Rohan, Heireſs of the Duke of Rohan. He is Captain of the Gendarmes, and has ſignaliz'd himſelf on ſeveral Occaſions, for inſtance, at the Battle of Senef, where he had a Leg broke. The Princeſs of Soubiſe, his Conſort, was Lady of Honour to the late Queen of France, and has been accounted one of the † greateſt Beauties of the Court. She has been very much Praiſed by the Modern Authors, and no leſs admir'd for her Virtue and Wiſdom than for her Beauty. The News-Writers in Holland gave out that the Prince of Soubiſe was one of thoſe, who laid down their Commiſſions of Lieutenants General, becauſe they were not comprehended in the Promotion of the Mareſchals of France, that was made in March 1693.

The Abbot de SOUBISE, his Son, has been much taken notice of during the courſe of his Studies. He is Coadjutor of the Biſhop of Strasburg || ſome Months ſince. His Elogy may be ſeen in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Poſthumous Works of the Chevalier de Meré.

SOU-

Catholick Writers, they could not be ſuſpected of being too Paſſionate; but they go ſo far as to accuſe him of Want of Courage. 'Tis too great an Inſult. (a) 'Tis ſaid that a great Lord told the King, Sir, M. de Soubiſe having ſhunn'd your Preſence at Rié, and now that of your Admiral in the Iſle of Ré, there's Reaſon to believe that if he goes on, he will be, one day, the Oldeſt Captain in your Kingdom. 'Tis ſaid (b) in the ſame Relations, that he did not engage in the Fight of the Iſle of Ré, and that as ſoon as he ſaw the Ill Succeſs of it, he haſtily made his Eſcape in a Shallop, without his Hat and his Sword. Nay, we are told, that his Captain of the Guards having ſeen that Sword, ſaid it had certainly dropt from his Belt, becauſe he was ſure he had not drawn it. The Satyrs (c) upon the Defeat in the Iſle of Ré are ſtill more Injurious. He has been reproach'd with another thing very different from that, (d) viz. That at his Return from England, he made a Gentleman belonging to him ſwear, that if he ſaw his Ship ready to be taken, and if they cou'd not make their eſcape, he wou'd ſet the Powder on fire to burn 'em all, chuſing to die in ſuch a manner, rather than make their Enemies triumph by their being made Priſoners. But that the Reader may have a better Reaſon to miſtruſt the Hiſtories Publiſh'd by the Catholick Party, I ſhall mention a Slander that looks like one of thoſe Calumnies, that are ſpread among the People to keep up their Zeal by ſtirring their Paſſions. It was given out (e), that when the Inhabitants of Olonne deſired to Capitulate, M. de Soubiſe anſwer'd them haughtily and impudently, that he would have 'em chuſe the moſt handſome Maids they had, for himſelf, and then for his Favourites, or give him a Hundred Thouſand Crowns; that both Conditions being rejected, he promiſed to exempt them from being Plunder'd for Twenty Thouſand Crowns, Eighty Pieces of Canon, and Three Ships, and that he Plundered them, tho' they had granted him all his Demands.

(E) Not without leaving behind him ſome Ships that run a-ground.] To ſhew the Partiality of thoſe Relations, I ſhall ſet down here what a Catholick (f) Author tells us about that Attempt upon Blavet. He ſays that the Duke of Soubiſe with only Three Hundred Soldiers and a Hundred Sea-men, ſo vigorouſly attacked the large Ship call'd the Virgin, that after ſome reſiſtance, he got into it with Sword in Hand, and took it, and then all the reſt. ——— And that the Port having been ſtopt with Men. And with an Iron Chain and a large Cable, he was ſhut up in it Three Weeks; but the Wind turning about he made uſe of it, and cauſed the Chain and the Cable to be cut with Hatchets, notwithſtanding the Fire that was made upon him, and went and poſſeſt himſelf of the Iſle of Oleron. How come theſe Paſſages that are glorious to him, to be omitted in the Mercure François?

(F) He Burnt the Dutch Admiral.] I have ſeen no Author yet, that makes a ſolid Anſwer to thoſe, who ſay that the Duke of Soubiſe broke his Word to the Dutch Admiral. We are told (g) they had agreed to undertake nothing one againſt another, during the Negotiations for a Peace that were carrying on at the Court; but that Soubiſe taking advantage of the Promiſe the Admiral had made him, came upon him in half an Hour's time by the help of the Wind and Tide, took his Ship, when he expected no ſuch thing, and burnt it by means of two Pinaces full of Fire-works. 'Tis futher ſaid in the Mercure (h) that Hoſtages had been given on both ſides. 'Tis likely the Agreſſor replied ſomething, when he was charged with Unfaithfulneſs in that reſpect. The Catholick Writer of the Duke of Rohan's Life makes no mention of that Reproach: He ſays that Soubiſe being inform'd that Manty, and Hautin, Admiral of Zealand, came to charge him with Forty Ships, he went to meet 'em, ſunk five of their Ships, and kill'd above Fifteen Hundred Men. I have juſt now read what the Proteſtant Author, who took the Fictitious Name of Theophilus Miſathée, Publiſh'd (i) in Soubiſe's Vindication. 'Tis ſomething, but I could deſire a better Diſcuſſion, and a more exact Verification.

(G) To prejudice the Court of France as much.] For it appears by a Declaration (k) of Lewis XIII. Dated

---

* Taken from ſeveral Volumes of the Mercure François.

† See Cotin's Oeuvres galantes. M. Menage made ſome Greek Verſes upon that Lady's being adviſed to Bath her ſelf in the Sea, after ſhe had been bitten by a Dog. They are very fine Verſes, and may be ſeen at pag. 178 of his Poems, edit. Amſtel. 1687.

|| I write this in May 1701.

(a) Merc. Franc. tom. 11. p. 891.

(b) Ibid. pag. 882. See alſo the Miniſtere du Cardinal de Richelieu ad ann. 1625. pag. 179. Dutch Edit.

(c) See the Mercure Franc. tom. 8. pag. 559.

(d) Merc. Fr. tom. 11. pag. 281.

(e) Claudius Malingre Hiſt. de la rebellion tom. 2. pag. 225.

(f) The Author of the History of the Duke of Rohan, Printed at Paris 166. I have [illegible] in another place that this History is aſcribed to M. Fauvelet-du-Toc.

(g) Miniſt. du Card. de Richelieu pag. m. 177.

(h) Tom. 11. pag. 874.

(i) Apologie pour les Egliſ Reformées de France, Printed 1625. chap.

(k) See Montreſor's Memoirs pag. 366.

SOUCHES (LEWIS RATTUIT, COUNT DE) Son of a (A) Gentleman of Rochelle call'd John Rattuit Sieur de Barres, left France after the War of the Proteſtants, and went thro' Holland and Germany in his way to Sweden. He was no ſooner arrived there but he had a proſpect of being raiſed by the good Offices of Count de la Gardie, who quickly procured him a Regiment of Dragoons, and then a Regiment of Foot. After he had ſerved ſome Years, he had a quarrel with his * General, laid down his Commiſſion, and fought him; and intending to return into France by the way of Auſtria and Italy, he ſtaid ſome days at Vienna; and becauſe the Arch-Duke William, Brother of the Emperor Ferdinand III. Propoſed to him to ſerve in the Emperor's Armies, he reſolved to do it, and accepted a Regiment of Dragoons, that was Vacant. He made a great Fortune in the Service of his Imperial Majeſty, for he was ſucceſſively raiſed to the Dignities of Gentleman of his Chamber, Counſellor of War and State, Marſhal de Camp General, and Commander General of the Frontiers of Sclavonia. He died in Moravia in the Year 1682. being 74 Years of Age, and left Children (B) as we ſhall ſee. Theſe are the Contents of

* Call'd S[illegible].

ted the Eighth of June, 1641. That within the ſpace of one Year, ſome of thoſe who had been ſent by Soubiſe and la Valette, to corrupt many French Men, came into his Majeſty's Hands, and had Confeſt, that the ſaid Soubiſe and la Valette——— were treating with the King of Spain to make a Deſcent into Bretagne and Aunis, or into the Gaionne.

(A) Son of a Gentleman of Rochelle.] The Author of the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary was baſely deceived by what he had heard in common Diſcourſe; when he affirm'd that Count de Souches was the Son of a Grocer of Rochelle. A Hear-ſay is hardly to be depended upon, when the Queſtion is about the Birth of a Perſon raiſed to great Poſts, tho' his Anceſtors are not mention'd in Hiſtory. This ſilence proves only that they did not appear at Court, and had no conſiderable Imployments in their Provinces; but 'tis no Proof that they were not Gentlemen. And yet thro' a Baſe or Malicious Inclination to tell Lies, People take delight in Vilifying, as much as they can, the Birth of a Favourite, a Miniſter of State, or a General of an Army, who is the firſt of his Family, that was raiſed to great Preferments (a). Some ſay, his Father was a Peaſant, a Fiſher-man, or a Servant; others will have it, that he was the Son of a Shoe-maker, a Mercer, or at moſt, of a Scrivener, or an Attorney's Clerk. They are ſometimes in the right, and very often miſtaken; and therefore Prudence requires one ſhould miſtruſt thoſe common Reports; for when the thing is narrowly examin'd, it commonly appears that this pretended Son of a Mercer, or Fiſher-man, is of a very noble Family, but little known out of its Diſtrict. However it be, here are the Proofs of Count de Souches's Nobility, as they have been imparted (b) to me.

) See Re-A the Arle Toun.
) They
e been from nna to Booker by
**

The 6th of Auguſt 1686. Before Gabriel Beraudin Eſquire, Seigneur de Grandjai, Counſellor to the King, and his Lieutenant-General in the Senechauſſée, and Preſidial of the City and Government of Rochelle; at the requeſt of Meſſire Amabee Huet, Chevalier Seigneur du Rivau, Captain of the Marine, appeared Fourteen of the moſt Eminent Perſons in the Country, whoſe Names and Offices are ſpecify'd in the Act whereof I have a Copy, Collated with the Original at Vienna in Auſtria the 18th of September 1692. by Henry Caſtillan d'Aviſter, ſworn Apoſtolical Protonotary. The Lieutenant General in the Senechauſſée of Rochelle above Named declares, that thoſe Fourteen Perſons living and ſettled in Aulnis have certified to all thoſe, whom it may concern, that Meſſire Lewis Ratuit Count de Souches, was Born a Gentleman, being the Son of John Ratuit Eſquire, Sieur de Barres, and of the Lady Margaret de Bourdigale, and that they do certainly know, that the ſaid John Ratuit, Father of the ſaid Count de Souches deceaſed, was deſcended from a Noble Family, and one of the moſt conſiderable in the City of Rochelle, where he and his Predeceſſors made their Abode, and kept their Rank among other Gentlemen, according to their noble Extraction. In witneſs whereof they have ſign'd this preſent Declaration, and put to it the Seal of their Arms; which Declaration we have received, and given a Copy of it to the ſaid Lord at his requeſt, which we have alſo ſign'd, and for a greater Approbation we have cauſed his Majeſty's Seal to be put to it: in this Preſidial Chancery of the City of Rochelle. I need not Name all thoſe, who ſign'd that Act; it being ſufficient to ſay that M. Miller Marſhal de Camp, Governor of the Principality of Chateau-Renaud, and Lieutenant General in the Government of Aunix, M. Arnou, Intendant of the Province, M. Gabarret firſt Commodore, M. de Chaſtellaillon Commander at Rochelle were ſome of thoſe, who Certified it.

Here follows another Atteſtation: I have a Copy of it Collated with the Original at Vienna the 18 of September 1692. by the ſame Henry Caſtellani d'Aviſter above mention'd. "We whoſe Names are "under Written, atteſt and certify that we certainly "know, that M. Lewis Ratuit de Souches is of a "Noble Extraction both by the Father's and Mother's ſide, and of one of the moſt Ancient Families of this Country, and that they have enjoyed "the Honours, Privileges and Exemptions granted "by our Kings to the Nobles and Gentlemen of this "Kingdom, and that they always kept their Rank "among other Gentlemen. In Witneſs whereof we "have ſign'd the Preſent Atteſtation. Done at Rochelle the 12 of March 1687". This Atteſtation was ſign'd by Eighteen Perſons: The firſt is the Biſhop (c) of Rochelle, the Second M. de Chaſtellaillon, Commander in Aunix and at Rochelle, the Third M. Beraudin Lieutenant General of Rochelle. The others are M. Villette Commodore, the Chevalier de Blenac, the Chevalier d'Arbouville Captain of a Ship of War, M. d'Oſmons Knight of Malta, &c. I add that I have ſeen a Copy of a Letter written by M. le Baili de la Vieuville from Paris the 29, of March 1699. to Count de la Tour Son-in-Law to Count de Souches. He writes to him, that he has been very well pleaſed to find an opportunity to write to Malta what he had heard, being at Rochelle, of the Family of Count de Souches, whoſe Anceſtors, ſays he, without much raiſing themſelves in the War, have always enjoyed the Privileges of Nobility, and never done any thing derogatory to it.

(c) Henry de Laval.

Menage obſerves that the Name Souches is the Name of a Lordſhip belonging to the Count I ſpeak of. He ſays the Ancient Name was Des-Ouſches. I ſhall ſet down his Words, which I take out of a Chapter, wherein he proves by ſeveral Examples, that Proper Names are not always Pronounced according to the Ancient and true Orthography. "(d) Like-"wiſe they always ſay De Souches inſtead of Des-"Ouſches, ſpeaking of the Governor of Moravia, "who Commands now the Emperor's Troops in "Flanders. Souches is the Name of that General's "Lordſhip, for his Name is Rattuit. Rattuit is a "Family of Rochelle, where that Lord was Born; "and Ouſche is an old French Word, which ſignifies "a Garden Encloſed with a Hedge, and full of Trees, "under which they ſow Pulſe or Hemp. That French "Word is derived from the Latin Olca, which is to "be found in Gregorius Turonenſis, much in the ſame "ſenſe.

(d) Menage, Obſervations ſur la langue Françoiſe tom. 1. pag. 307. Paris 1675.

(B) He left Children.] He was Married twice, firſt to Anne Elizabeth Counteſs de Hoffkirk, and then to Anne Solome Counteſs d'Aſpermont and Reckheim. He had two Sons and one Daughter by his firſt Wife. John Lewis his Eldeſt Son is ſtill living, and is Married to Eve Eleonora de Nottbaſſt and Werenberg Counteſs of the Empire, by whom he has had three Daughters, viz. 1. Louiſe Lady of Honour at the Empreſs's Court, and now the Wife of Count de Horn. 2. Claudia Lady of Honour at the Empreſs's Court in her Siſter's Room. 3. Thereſa a Carmelite Nun in Stiria. The Second Son of Count de Souches was call'd Charles. He was General of the Emperor's Infantry, and died of a Wound he receiv'd at the Battle of Salankemen in Hungary in the Year of a Memorial imparted to me, which comes from * very good Hands. I ſhall add to it a thing, which very much heightens the Glory of Count de Souches, viz. that he was the Principal cauſe of the long Reſiſtance of the Town of Brin (C) againſt the Swedes, who were forced to raiſe the Siege upon that account, which proved a great Piece of Service to the Emperor. I ſhall take Notice of ſome miſtakes (D) in Moreri's Dictionary, and I'll make ſome Obſervations on what concens the Count de

Souches,

1691. He had loſt his Wife Marianne Counteſs de Buchem, by whom he left behind him two Sons, Lewis and Charles Joſeph. The latter has been admitted Knight of Malta in the Priory of Bohemia. The Daughter of Count de Souches is Married to Count Charles de la Tour, and has many Children (†).

(C) The Principal cauſe of the long Reſiſtance of the Town of Brin againſt the Swedes——— which proved a great piece of Service to the Emperor.] Torſtenſon having beaten the Imperialiſts in February 1645. made himſelf Maſter of ſeveral places in Moravia, and was ſo dreaded, that upon the News of his March the Enemies raiſed the Siege of Olmutz; and then he Beſieged Brin, the only ſtrong place that was ſtill for the Emperor in that Province (a). The Beſieged made ſuch a Vigorous Defenſe, that his Imperial Majeſty had the time to ſettle his Affaies that were in an ill Poſture. He made a Treaty with Ragotzki Prince of Tranſilvania, (b) and yielded to him ſeven Lordſhips in Hungary: Ninety Churches were open'd in his Conſideration, wherein the Proteſtants were to teach their Doctrine publickly, and the Privileges of the Hungarians were reſtored to them. This Treaty ſeem'd diſadvantageous to the Catholicks; but it proved more prejudicial to the Swedes: For the Emperor having removed this rub out of his way, relieved Brin, and Forced Torſtenſon to raiſe the Siege. Then Lewis Count de Souches, a French Gentleman, who had been the Principal cauſe of its Preſervation, was made Governour of it as a Reward for ſo great a Service. An Hiſtorian obſerves that Torſtenſon loſt more Soldiers before that place, than he wou'd have loſt in a Pitch'd Battle: He adds that in the mean time the Emperor repaired his Forces. (c) Longa illic difficiliſque obſidio, atque ad extremum irrita fuit. Ac ſatis conſtat plus ibi militum, quam ſi juſta acie depugnatum foret, Dorſtenſohnio periiſſe. Interea Cæſari ſpacium datum reparandi vires, colligendique & conſcribendi novum exercitum, quem hoſti opponeret. No Service was ever more ſeaſonable than that, and Count de Souches did certainly deſerve to be Rewarded for it. Note, that the Town of Brin was alſo Rewarded according to its Deſerts; for the Emperor gave it the firſt Rank among the Towns of Moravia: This Superiority belong'd to the Town of Olmutz, which was deprived of it by Reaſon of their weak Reſiſtance againſt the Swedes. This Obſervation is to be found in the Voyage of Count de Brienne. (d) Cracovia relicta Vindobonam verſus pergimus, per Sileſiam, & Moraviam: ubi præter Olomutium & Brinnum nihil notatu dignum: illud, ſede Epiſcopali; hoc, obſidione quam adverſus Suecos tam fortiter ſuſtinuit, ut inde ob memoriam facti extiterit caput regionis, virtutis præmium; dignitate illa Olomutio ſublata, nota vecordiæ.

(D) Some miſtakes (e) in Moreri's Dictionary.] I. The firſt Concerns the Extraction of Count de Souches, and has been ſufficiently confuted in the Remark A. II. He ſhou'd not have been call'd General of the Empire; he was only the Emperor's General. III. 'Tis certain from the Memorial imparted to me, out of which I have Compoſed the Text of this Article, that his Father did not give him to a German Gentleman, and that he entred not into the Emperor's Service before he had Fought that Gentleman. IV. An Exact Hiſtorian will not ſay that this Count was defeated at the Battle of Senef by the Prince of Conde, in the Year 1674. For, properly ſpeaking, that Battle was neither won nor loſt by either of the Parties. The Allies as well as the French aſcribed the Victory to themſelves, and cauſed Te Deum to be ſung, and Bone-fires to be made: Both did it out of Policy, being fully convinced that there was no ground to boaſt of any Advantage (f). The beginning of that Bloody Battle was Advantageous to the French, and the end proved Advantageous to the Enemies. Many are of Opinion that the Prince of Conde behaved himſelf like a great Captain for ſome Hours, and then like Orlando Furioſo, and Hercules in a Fury, Hercules furens in Seneca. Was it not a kind of Enthuſiaſm, and Delirium, ſay they, to leave the beſt Troops ſo long expoſed to the fire of the Enemy well covered with Hedges and Hop-Fields; I ſay, to leave them expoſed to a Perfect Slaughter, which they cou'd not avoid, and to a dreadful ſhower of Musket Shots? At laſt (g) he was forced to Retire, and he left behind him a vaſt Number of dead Bodies. They add, that the Prince of Conde was not well pleaſed with himſelf on occaſion of that Battle, and did not care to hear any thing of it: The Remembrance of it made him uneaſy. This is the Opinion of many People; I don't pretend to give my Judgment upon ſuch things. However it be, whether he was well pleaſed with that Journey or not, whether he obtain'd or loſt the Victory, this at leaſt is no Problematical thing, that Count de Souches had no hand in the Misfortune of the Allies, and very much contributed to their Advantages. The Dutch and Spaniſh Troops ſuſtain'd the whole Loſs; the Imperial Troops Commanded by him did not begin to fight till the reſt were diſordered; and after they had joyn'd their Allies the Enemy loſt his Advantage and was very much worſted in his turn. V. What has been added (h) to Moreri's Dictionary in the Dutch Editions is not right. Theſe words have been inſerted in it; By refuſing to expoſe his Troops he occaſion'd the Victory obtain'd by the Prince of Conde. They can only be underſtood of the Battle of Senef; but the Enemies of France don't uſe to own that ſhe got the Victory on that day. However it be, 'tis not true that ſhe got it, becauſe our Count refuſed to expoſe his Troops; for 'twas by expoſing them that he put a ſtop to the Progreſs of the Enemy. The Dutch Relations agree in this, that (i) Count de Souches, who was gone before with the Imperialiſts, and was at ſome Hours diſtance from the Army, being inform'd of what paſt, went back with great diligence, and came at one a Clock in the Afternoon near the main Body of the Allies; ſo that his Highneſs (k) placed the Imperialiſts and Spaniards in an Advantageous Poſt on the left Hand, and his own Troops in the right Wing, and then it was that the Battle was renewed with greater Fury than before——— (l) The Prince of Conde endeavoured firſt to make his Men turn to the left Hand, but M. de Fariaux, a Man of a known Valour, and Major General of the Dutch Army, was ſent thither with ſome Battallions, and being ſupported by Count Chavagnac, who commanded a Squadron of Horſe near that place, he made ſuch a reſiſtance that the French were forced to retire, ſo that the ſaid Count cauſed four Pieces of Canon to be placed there, and by that means did very much annoy the French. The left Wing, the greateſt part whereof was made up of Imperialiſts and Swiſs (m), gave ſo many Proofs of their Valour, that above one half of the Swiſs were kill'd upon the ſpot, according to the Report of the Priſoners. Count de Souches their General threw himſelf wherever the Enemies were thickeſt, and gave Proofs of an extraordinary Valour, as he had done before on many other occaſions. The Prince of Lorrain did the ſame, and was ſeen ſeveral times fighting in the firſt Ranks, where he was ſo much Wounded in the Head that he was forced to retire. Prince Pio, who was near the Village of Senef with his Squadron, being attended by the Marquis de Grana, and Count Starnberg, ſhewed a wonderful Bravery, and was alſo Wounded in the Thigh with a Musket-ſhot. The Marquis de Grana, and the Son of Count de Souches Fought ſo Valiantly at the Head of their Squadrons, that the Swiſs cou'd not get an Inch of Ground from them, ſo that they contributed to the Happy Iſſue of that Battle. This Account is confirm'd by the Prince of Orange's (n) Letter to the Deputies for the Secret Affairs of the States General; for having deſcribed what paſt before the Germans came back again, he adds: " (o) " The Enemies endeavoured at firſt to turn to the " left

* [illegible]

(†) Taken from the Memorial de quo infra in the Margin of the Text of this Article.

(a) See John Cluverius's Universal Hiſtory in the Appendix pag. 759. Edit. 1668.

(b) Lewis du Mai, Diſcours hiſtorique & politique ſur les cauſes de la guerre de Hongrie p. m. 284.

(c) Appendix Joh. Cluveri ubi ſupra.

(d) Lud. Hen. Lomenii Briennæ Comitis itinerar. pag. 58. edit 1662.

(e) See alſo the Article Leuwentz.

(f) We went near Mons, where Te Deum was ſung as it was at Paris; both Parties pretending to have got the Victory. For my Part I have always been of Opinion that neither Party had reaſon to boaſt of it. Memoires de Chavagnac pag. 388, 389. Dutch Edit. This is perhaps the beſt thing that is in thoſe Memoirs.

(g) The Battle of Senef was with reſpect to the French as the Figure mention'd by Horace de arte Poet. v. 3. ut turpiter atrum deſinat in piſcem mulier formoſa ſuperne.

(h) This Addition is alſo to be found in Moreri's Dictionary Printed at Paris 1699.

(i) Mercure Hollandois for the Year 1674. pag. 451.

(k) That is, the Prince of Orange.

(l) Ibid. pag. 452, 453.

(m) It ſhou'd not be, and Swiſs, but oppoſed to the Swiſs, or ſomething like it; for it appears by the whole Thread of the diſcourſe, that the Author means the Swiſs in the French Army.

(n) Ibid. pag. 47[illegible]

(o) Ibid. pag. 47[illegible] 481.

Souches in Chavagnac's (E) Memoirs. That Book was Printed in Holland in the Year 1700, when the Style had been mended in ſeveral places.

SPANHEIM (FREDERICK) Profeſſor of Divinity at Leyden, was a Man of great Merit. He was Born at Amberg in the Upper Palatinate the firſt day of * January 1600, “ left Hand, but ſome Battalions were detached to “ go to them; and M. de Chavagnac, who was there “ with a Body of Imperial Horſe, repuls'd them “ with all imaginable Vigour, and kept that Poſt, “ and ſent for 4 Pieces of Canon, which did very “ much Annoy the Enemy——— (a) Among the “ Imperial Troops Count de Souches has given Proofs “ of the Courage and Bravery he has diſcovered on “ ſo many other occaſions. The Prince of Lorrain has “ alſo ſignalized himſelf, but at laſt he has been “ Wounded in the Head, and the Prince Pio in the “ Thigh. The Vigorous Reſiſtance of the Marquis “ de Grana, who was near the Village with his Battalion, has not contributed a little to the Happy “ Succeſs of the Battle; and I may ſay the ſame of “ the Bravery of the Battallions of the Regiment of “ Souches Commanded by the Son of the ſaid Count”. How then can it be ſaid that Count de Souches, by refuſing to expoſe the Imperialiſts occaſion'd the Victory obtain'd by the French?

There are ſtill three Faults in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, which I intend to mend. VI. Count de Souches did not live Fourſcore Years, but only ſeventy Four. VII. His Son did not Command the Armies of the Empire; he has been only imployed in the Emperor's Troops. VIII. He was not kill'd at Rhinfeld in 1678. but in Hungary in the Year 1691.

(E) Upon what concerns Count de Souches in Chavagnac's Memoirs.] Chavagnac (b) deſcribes him as the moſt Fooliſh and the baſeſt Man in the World; and having mention'd whatever may induce one to think that he was a Traytor, he adds: (c) I don't think he was; but he was a Malicious and Ignorant Man, and the greateſt Robber that ever lived. Many Reaſons convince me that theſe Slanders ought to be minded. 1. The Author of thoſe Memoirs Commends himſelf all along: He pretends to have given all the Counſels that have prov'd ſucceſsful; if a thing does not ſucceed, 'tis becauſe they wou'd not believe him; he has frequently prevented great Inconveniencies; he takes upon him the Boldeſt and the moſt Laborious Executions with a good Succeſs; in a word every thing goes Well when he meddles with it, and every thing goes Ill without him. His Commending himſelf ſo much, ſhews he had a great Opinion of his Merit, and was willing others ſhou'd have the ſame Notion of it. It appears from his own Hiſtory that he was a Haughty, Ambitious, Fantaſtical and Conceited Man. From whence it ought to be infer'd that whoever was his Enemy cou'd not miſs being ſlandered by him. I obſerve in the 2. place, that he fell out (d) with Count de Souches in the beginning of the Campaign of 1647, and that probably his blunt way moved ſometimes that General to put him in mind of his Inferiority. Thus Subaltern Officers expoſe themſelves to ſeveral Mortifications, when they have not a due regard for their General. This vexed Count de Chavagnac more and more, and diſpoſed him to ſpeak ill of Count de Souches. Note, in the 3. place, that he loved to ſpeak ill of Generals. He (e) gives us a very mean Character of Count Monsecuculi, with reſpect to the moſt Glorious and Brighteſt Campaign that can be found in the long life of that General: I mean, the Campaign, of 1673, in which he diſappointed all the Deſigns of M. de Turenne, and deſtroyed by the taking of one (f) Town all the Harveſt the French had made in Holland in the Year 1672. Can any Body give Credit to ſuch Slanders? Are they not contrary to the Rules of Probality? And therefore muſt we not conclude that what ſuch a Writer ſays of his Enemies ought to be ſuſpected? I omit many Sharp and Satyrical Stories, to be found in his Memoirs againſt the Chief Officers of the Imperial Troops, which ſeem to proceed from a Reſentment, that made him unwilling to do them Juſtice. For every Body owns that the Imperial Armies have been above theſe Hundred Years one of the beſt Schools of War, and that there are very few that Form ſo many good Officers. Note, in the 4. place, that he is often miſtaken in his Accounts, even when he does not deſign to ſpeak Ill of thoſe with whom he was diſpleaſed. Conſult the Notes inſerted in the Dutch Edition, which concern what paſt in Germany in the Year 1675. The Marquis de * * * who is the Author of thoſe Notes, and who Commanded one of the beſt French Regiments at that time, contradicts him in ſeveral Important Points: If other Officers wou'd give themſelves the Trouble of Criticizing him, doubtleſs they wou'd find matter enough for it. In the 5. place, there are ſo many incredible things in what he ſays againſt Count de Souches, that this alone is ſufficient to confute him: “ (g) Souches, who had received orders from the Emperor not to paſs the Maeſe upon any pretence “ whatſoever, to act only between the Maeſe and the “ Moſelle, and to give Four Thouſand Horſe with a “ General, if the Allies wanted them, ordered me “ to ſtay in the Camp, whilſt he went and dined “ with all the Generals in the Camp of the Spaniſh “ Troops———(h) Souches decamped to go and beſiege Mont-Olimpe; but becauſe the Prince of Orange demanded the Four Thouſand Horſe which “ the Emperor had promiſed him, I was detach'd to “ Command 'em; ſo that I went back and Encamp'd “ in the Suburb of Namur: I can't tell what Jealouſy he had upon my Account, he himſelf came “ thither with his whole Army. Every Body knowing that the Orders were formal, knew not what “ he meant; but he was not long unreſolved, for he “ brought the Army thro' Namur. Monterey and “ the Prince of Orange joyned him, and aſk'd what “ good Angel had moved him to paſs the Maeſe: He “ anſwered that he paſt the Moſelle and not the Maeſe. I could not forbear Laughing, and telling him “ that I pitied him, and that the Moſelle was above “ 15 Leagues from thence. He told me that I was “ not a Man of a ſufficient Capacity to teach him “ the Country, and fell into a great Paſſion againſt “ me. Caplieres our Commiſſary General, and the “ Emperor's Agent came upon this, and aſk'd him “ what was the matter. This Gentleman, ſaid he, “ uſes me like a Child, but I'll complain of it to “ his Imperial Majeſty. I told Caplieres what was “ the Subject of his Diſcontent, and Caplieres told “ him that I was in the Right: Whereupon he “ grew Angry again, and aſk'd his Guides what “ River we had paſs'd: They told him 'twas the “ Maeſe; and then he changed his Countenance, and “ cried out, I am undone”. The Falſity contain'd in thoſe Words is ſo Plain and Obvious that one may perceive it without any Examination; but whoever conſiders the circumſtances of the Narrative, that this General (i) brought his Army into the Country of Liege, that he went and dined (k) in the Camp of Count Monterey, which he cou'd not do without paſſing the Maeſe, that he went up again (l) towards Charleville to make the Siege of Mons-Olympe, a place ſituate on the Maeſe, that he (m) came again near Namur, another place ſtanding on the Maeſe, will think it impoſſible that he ſhould have been ignorant of the Situation of that River. The moſt ſtupid Soldiers cou'd not be Ignorant of it, after ſo many Marches and Countermarches of that Nature; how then can one believe that a General above 60 Years Old knew it not, having received an expreſs (n) order to act only between the Moſelle and the Maeſe? Whoever can believe ſuch a thing muſt be more credulous than a Child of four Years of Age. The abſurdity of Chavagnac's Narrative will be more ſenſible, if it be conſidered that Count de Souches had raiſed himſelf to a great Poſt in the Emperor's Court. He was a French Man, and 'twas a Fault not eaſily forgiven in that Court. He was a Gentleman Born, but his Gentility not being attended with a Title, and ſupported by the Credit and Wealth of his Family, wou'd hardly have been of greater uſe to him to become a General in the French Armies, than if he had been a Citizen's Son: Much more was it inſignificant to him in Germany. He had therefore no other way to Raiſe himſelf but his Valour and the Art of War; and he muſt needs have excell'd in it to overcome all the Obſtacles a meer French Gentleman cou'd meet with at the Emperor's Court.

---

* Ut his annos cum ſeculo computaveris, qui lucem cum incipiente anno & ſeculo primam vidit. He is miſtaken in taken the Year 1600, to be the firſt of the XVII. Century. 'Tis the laſt of the XVI. Many commit the ſame Fault.

Ibid. . 464.

See vag- 's Me- from 390.

Ibid. 401.

Ibid. 371.

Ibid. page to 358.

Bonn. took ntly the ch ps mand. by the ce of nge King Eng. d.

(g) Ibid. pag. 372, 373.

(h) Ibid. pag. 374, 375.

(i) Ibid. pag. 372.

(k) Ibid. pag. 373.

(l) Ibid. pag. 374.

(m) Ibid.

(n) Ibid. pag. 373. 374.

1600, and very carefully bred up by his Father, (A) who was not only a Learned Man, but also very much eſteem'd at the Electoral Court. After he had ſtudied in the College of Amberg till the Year 1613, he was ſent the next Year to the Univerſity of Heidelberg, which was then in a very flouriſhing Condition, where he made ſo great a Progreſs both in the Languages and Philoſophy, that it appeared he wou'd prove a great Man. He return'd to his Father's in 1619, and went ſoon after to Geneva to ſtudy Divinity. The Miſeries of the Palatinate made him reſolve to ſave his Father the Charges of his Board; and therefore he went into Dauphiné in the Year 1621, and was three Years in the Houſe of the † Governor of Ambrun in the Quality of Tutor. He had twice || a ſet Conference about matters of Controverſy, which was an uſual thing at that time, and came off Gloriouſly. He return'd to Geneva, and then went to Paris, where he found a good (B) Kinſman, who was Miniſter of Charenton, and adviſed him not to accept the Profeſſorſhip of Philoſophy at Lauſanne, which the Magiſtrates of Berne offered him. He took a Journey into England for four Months in 1625. and after he had made a further ſtay at Paris, he return'd to Geneva, where he diſputed for a Chair of Philoſophy in 1626, and carried it. The Year following he (C) Married a Gentlewoman Originally come from Poitou. Sometime after he was admitted Miniſter, and in the Year 1631. he ſucceeded Benedict Turretin in his Profeſſorſhip of Divinity. He diſcharged the Duties of thoſe places both like an able and an indefatigable Man; ſo that his great Reputation made ſeveral Univerſities deſirous to have him. That of Leyden was the moſt Happy, for he accepted their offers: But the utmoſt endeavours were uſed to keep him at Geneva, and the Marks of Eſteem and Affection he received at his departure cannot be expreſs'd. He took his Degree of Doctor of Divinity at Baſil, to comply with the uſe of the Country

† John de Bonne, Baron de Vitrolle.

|| Firſt with Father Hugh, a Jeſuit of Avignon, who Preach'd the Lent Sermons at Ambrun, and then with a Cordelier of Naples.

Court. None therefore but a ſilly Reader can believe that a General Beſieges and takes a (a) Town upon a River, and goes along that River for ſeveral Months, without knowing its Name, and thoſe of the Fortreſſes that are waſh'd by it, without knowing that Namur is ſituate upon the Maeſe, and not upon the Moſelle. Had he behaved himſelf in that manner, tho' he had a particular Reaſon to be well informed of the Situation of the Maeſe, ſince he had been ordered not to ſerve beyond that River, he wou'd be the moſt ridiculous Man in the World; but we ſhou'd be very near as Ridiculous as he, ſhou'd we believe that he thought he went over the Moſelle (b) when his Troops croſs'd the Maeſe at Namur. We may therefore look upon this as one of thoſe Falſities, which never appear too extravagant, when a Man intends to give out a ſingular thing, or to ridicule an Enemy. I omit ſaying that 'tis not likely the Emperor gave expreſs orders to Count de Souches not to paſs the Maeſe. Did not the Emperor deſign to do as much miſchief to the Enemy as ever he cou'd? Why then ſhou'd he have forbidden his General to joyn with the Dutch and the Spaniards, if ſuch a Conjunction was neceſſary to ſtrike a greater blow? To which I add, that if Count de Souches had perceived that he had been Surpriſed, he wou'd have ordered his Army to repaſs immediately. He had been more willing to mend his Fault in ſuch a manner, than to expoſe himſelf to loſe his Head for having acted againſt the Expreſs Orders of his Imperial Majeſty. How comes it that Count de Chavagnac, having ſaid that this General cried out, I am undone, forgets to tell us whether his Fault was approved or excuſed? It was neceſſary to acquaint the Reader with it; but the Writer of thoſe Memoirs did not much care for it. What has been ſaid confirms the Suſpicions of thoſe, who read this part of Count de Chavagnac's Memoirs.

After all the Obſervations I have made, the Reader will be apt to give no credit to the Satyrical Deſcription he gives (c) of Count de Souches's Conduct before Oudenarde. I am willing to believe according to the moſt Common Opinion that this General wou'd not follow the advice of the reſt, nor take with them the neceſſary Meaſures for the good Succeſs of that Enterpriſe; but none can believe the extravagance and cowardly Stupidity that he is Taxed with in Chavagnac's Memoirs. 'Tis plain that Author was Angry when he writ that Paſſage. The Reader perceives that his Pen was directed by the reſentment of ſome Offence, and is confirm'd in that Opinion by conſidering the Conduct of the Imperial Court. The Puniſhment inflicted upon Count de Souches was ſo ſlight and ſo diſproportion'd to what he deſerved, were Chavagnac's Memoirs true, that this very thing is ſufficient to convince us that this Author is not to be credited. I don't think the Relations of Count de Souches ought to juſtify him againſt ſuch an Enemy, who knew not how to obſerve any Probability or Equity; for 'tis not to be thought that he was Ignorant of the Reaſons on which the Count de Souches grounded his Opinions and his Conduct. Why didn't he ſay ſomething of the matter at leaſt to confute him? Equity required it of him.

(A) By his Father, who was not only a Learned Man.] His Name was Wigand SPANHEIM; he was Doctor of Divinity, and Eccleſiaſtical Counſellor to the Elector Palatin. He Married Renata Toſſan, Daughter of Daniel Toſſan Miniſter of Orleans, and then Profeſſor of Divinity at Heidelberg. Daniel Toſſan had Married Mary Couet a Pariſian, Daughter of Philibert Couet Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, who had fled to Orleans for her Religion with her Mother and two Siſters in the Year 1562. Toſſan, in order to avoid the Perſecution, retired thro' ſeveral by-ways to Montargis, where his Wife was brought to Bed of a Daughter, and Renata of France Dutcheſs of Ferrara was her God-Mother. That Dutcheſs, Daughter of Lewis XII. being extremely Zealous for the Reformed Religion, received at Montargis as many Refugees as ſhe cou'd; but 'tis not true, as Heidanus will have it, that ſhe kept there Daniel Toſſan till the Year 1575. We ſhall ſee in the Article of Toſſan in what Year he retired to Montargis, and went away from thence. His Daughter Renata (God-Daughter of the Dutcheſs of Ferrara) was Married to Wigand Spanheim, and was the Mother of our Frederick and of two Daughters (d). Wigand was a very Pious Man, a Learned Divine, and a good Philologer, as it appears from his Letters to Chriſtian Becman (e). He died in the Year 1620. having in his hands a Letter of his Son, which made him Cry with Joy. Freberus (f) mentions this particular as being in the Funeral Oration of Frederick Spanheim; but he is miſtaken in that reſpect. Lecto affixus poſtquam literas à filio Geneva accepiſſet eas præ gaudio totas lachrymis conſperſit, & tenaciter ambabus manibus retinuit, donec in Chriſto exſpiravit A. 1620.

(B) A good Kinſman, who was Miniſter of Charenton.] His Name was Samuel Durant: I cannot tell in what degree he was related to him, for the Latin Words of my Author are Ambiguous. (g) Humaniſſimè à Samuele Durantio —— cognato ſuo (erat enim Durantii mater ſoror aviæ parentis ejus) exceptus eſt. The Ambiguity lies in the Parentheſis. For 'tis uncertain whether the Word Parens ſignifies a Father or Mother. Beſides, a every Man having two Grand-mothers, many Families ſhou'd be run over to find the Grand Mother of our Spanheim, Siſter to Durant's Mother. Durant left (h) his whole Library to our Frederick Spanheim.

(C) He Married a Gentlewoman Originally come from

(a) Dinant which he took before his Army paſs'd the Maeſe at Mamur. See the Mercure Hollandois ubi ſupra. pag. 436.

(b) To confirm this, I add that if he had thought to paſs the Moſelle when he went thro' Namur, he muſt have believed that he had not yet followed the order of acting between the Maeſe and the Moſelle, or he muſt have thought that he paſt the Moſelle to go towards Philisburg or Nancy, which are monſtrous ſuppoſitions.

(c) Chavagnac ubi ſupra pag. 390. & ſeq.

(d) Ex Heidano, in Orat. funebr. Frid. Spanhem. pag. 6. & 7.

(e) De Wigando Spanhemio nihil aliud mihi compertum eſt niſi ſingularis pietate & eruditione præſtantem hominem fuiſſe, nec Theologica ſolum ſed & Philologica eruditione inſtructiſſimum, & linguarum Latinæ imprimis & Græcæ callentiſſimum. Id quod ex literis quæ... quæ in operibus Philologicis Chriſtiani Becmani... leguntur conſtat. Heidanus Orat. funeb. pag. 7.

(f) Theatr. pag. 406.

(g) Heidanus ibid. pag. 17.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 18.

Country he was going to; for neither at Geneva nor in the Proteſtant Academies of France, the Profeſſors of Divinity were not admitted Doctors; it had been of no uſe to them. He ſet out from Geneva in 1642. after he had been Profeſſor of Divinity Eleven Years. He happen'd to be Rector, when they Celebrated the Jubile or the Secular Year of the Reformation, and he made a very fine Speech upon that Subject. He arrived at Leyden the 3d of October 1642, where he kept up and even encreaſed the Reputation he had got; but he died in May 1649. His great Labours ſhorten'd his Days. Notwithſtanding his Lectures and Diſputations, his * Sermons and the Books he wrote, and many Viſits, and Domeſtick Concerns, he kept a great Correſpondence by way of Letters. Beſides, he was obliged to wait upon the Queen of Bohemia and the Prince of Orange; he was very much eſteem'd in thoſe two Courts. Queen Chriſtina did him the Honour to write to him, to acquaint him with her great Eſteem for him, and that ſhe was very well pleaſed with the reading of his Works. He (D) Publiſh'd many Books. He left behind him Seven Children †, whereof the two Eldeſt *(D*Δ*)* are become very Famous. He was rigid in (E) point of Innovation, and in that reſpect, ſpared neither Friends nor Foes. He could not forbear writing againſt M. Amyraut, and did not live long enough to reply

* He was Miniſter of the Wallon Church at Leyden.

† Taken from his Funeral Oration, made the 21ſt of May 1649. 'Tis a good Piece.

from Poitou.] Heidanus, (a) calls her in Latin Carlottam à Portu, which I take to ſignify Charlotte du Port. She was the Daughter of Peter du Port, Seigneur de Mouillepied & de Boiſmaſſin, Counſellor to the King, and Commiſſary for Proviſions in his Majeſty's Armies, only Son of Joachim du Port, a Gentleman of Poitou, Seigneur de Mouillepied. The Mother of Peter du Port, call'd Joan du Cheſne, was the only Daughter of Joſeph du Cheſne (Sieur de la Violette, Counſellor and Phyſician to the King) and of Anne de Tile, Daughter of Margaret Budé, whoſe Father was the Learned William Budé (Budæus) (b).

(D) He Publiſh'd many Books.] At the Requeſt of Guſtavus's Envoy to Geneva, he wrote a Book Intitl'd, Le Soldat Suedois (c), which ſold very well. That Book was quickly follow'd by the (d) Mercure Suiſſe. He Publiſh'd in 1639, a Commentaire Hiſtorique de la vie & de la mort de Meſſire Chriſtofle Vicomte de D'hona, at the Widow's Requeſt: I ſhall ſpeak of it hereafter. He Publiſh'd Six Years after, ſome Memoirs upon the Life and Death of the moſt Serene Princeſs Louiſe Juliana, Electreſs Palatin, Born Princeſs of Orange. He undertook that Work, at the Requeſt of the Queen of Bohemia. All theſe (e) Books are Anonymous. le Throne de Grace, de Jugement, & de Gloire, are Three Sermons prodigiouſly long, and written in a pretty Old French, but they contain excellent things. The Firſt was Preach'd at Charenton. His Dubia Evangelica, in Three Parts, written at Geneva, and occaſion'd by the Objections diſperſed among the Students of Divinity by one Antoine, who being a Chriſtian, had turn'd Jew, are good Books. He Compos'd his Chamierus Contractus, for the Benefit of the Students of Divinity, who cou'd not conveniently make uſe of Chamierus's vaſt Panſtratia. Whilſt he liv'd at Leiden, he wrote againſt Amiraut's Hypotheſis Exercitationes de gratia univerſali, in Three Volumes in 8. Item Epiſtolam ad Cottierium de conciliatione gratiæ univerſalis. He alſo writ a Letter ad Buchananum de Controverſiis Anglicanis, & Vindiciæ de gratia univerſali (f). 'Tis a Reply to M. Amyraut, which he could not finiſh, and it ſavours of a Poſthumous Piece. The Author I quote has omitted a Letter, which M. Spanheim writ to Prince Edward, when he Changed his Religion. Since he mentions a (g) Conſolatory Letter upon the Death of an only Son, he might alſo have mention'd the other Letter. I muſt not forget M. Spanheim's Speeches, which are very good, eſpecially his Funeral Oration of Frederick Henry Prince of Orange. See Balzac's (h) Thanks to him, after he had read it.

I have ſaid that this Profeſſor of Divinity, is the Author of the Commentaire hiſtorique de la vie & de la mort de Meſſire Chriſtofle Vicomte de Dhona. But I muſt add that the word Viſcount he made uſe of, is very improper, and does not anſwer the Title of Burgrave, which has been in the Illuſtrious Family of DHONA for many Ages. 'Tis a Nobler Title than that of Viſcount. See the Nouveau Journal des Sçavans, Publiſh'd at Berlin by M. (i) Chauvin in 1696. and look for the Extract of the Firſt and Second Volumes of M. (k) Manget's Bibliotheca Practica, Dedicated to Count Alexander de Dhona Governour to the Electoral Prince of Brandenburg, where you'll find ſome things very inſtructive concerning the Burgraves. This is not a proper place to enlarge upon the great Merit of that Count, and the glory of the Houſe of Dhona. I ſhall only refer the Reader to Moreri's Dictionary, and occaſionally obſerve that a Fault has crept into it; for inſtead of ſaying that Count Alexander's Mother was Counteſs de Terraſſieres Montbrun, it ſhou'd be de Feraſſieres Montbrun. She was the only Daughter of Count de Feraſſieres, Lieutenant General in the French Armies, and Brother to M. de St. André Montbrun, who was General of the Venetians in Candia, and whoſe Hiſtory (l) was Printed at Paris in 1696.

*(D*Δ*) Seven Children, whereof the two Eldeſt are become very Famous.*] The firſt (m) has a perfect Knowledge of Medals, and all ſorts of Literature: Beſides, his Embaſſies give him a glorious Rank among States-men. He is a Perſon of an extraordinary Merit. (n) The Second died within theſe (o) few days, being Profeſſor of Divinity at Leyden. He had been a long time in that Imployment, and was juſtly accounted one of the moſt conſiderable Men in the Reformed Church. He has writ many Books, which procured him a great Reputation: The Journaliſts have often made an honourable mention of him. Tho' the Journaliſt of Paris does ſeldom ſpeak of Books written by the Miniſters, he has given large Extracts of this Learned Man's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory: You'll find 'em in the Twenty Eighth Volume of the Journal des Sçavans. Whoever deſires to be informed of the great Learning of M. Spanheim the Eldeſt, needs only read his Book de præſtantia & uſu numiſmatum; the Five Letters he writ to M. Morel, a famous Antiquarian, and a great Medalliſt, which have been Printed with the Specimen univerſæ rei numarariæ antiquæ, Publiſh'd by the ſame M. Morel, at Leipſick in 1695; his Notes upon Callimachus, and Julian's Cæſars, and ſome other Tracts, the Titles whereof may be ſeen in Moreri's Dictionary of the Paris Edition 1699. together with a Liſt (p) of all his Imployments in the Courts of Princes, 'till he was ſent the fouth time to the Court of France after the Peace of Ryſwick. He was at Paris from that time till the beginning of the Year 1701, that is, 'till his Electoral Highneſs of Brandenburg became King of Pruſſia. He took then his Audience of leave, becauſe the change of the Ceremonial was not yet regulated at the Court of France. He is (q) lately gone into England by order of the New King his Maſter. I ſhall obſerve by the by, that this New Epoch of the Royalty of Pruſſia will ſignalize the beginning of the XVIII Century, and that there was in it a remarkable Concourſe of Circumſtances; for about the ſame time that the Electoreſs of Brandenburg was Crowned Queen of Pruſſia, the Electoreſs of Brunſwick, her Mother, Daughter to the King of Bohemia, has been named to ſucceed to the Crown of England. Thoſe two Princeſſes are extraordinarily qualify'd to fill up a Throne, and to renew the Glory of Queen Elizabeth.

(E) He was rigid in point of Innovation.] It was a Maxim with him, That one ought to fight ones own Brethren, whenever they act againſt Orthodoxy: The neglect of little Evils, ſaid he, will ſometimes occaſion the greateſt Diſorders. (r) Sæpe profitentem audivimus ſe licet mallet cum Eccleſiæ hoſtibus congredi, tamen

(l) See an Extract of it in the Journal des Sçavans of the Fourth of Auguſt 1698. p. 551. & ſeq. Dutch Edit.

(m) Ezechiel Spanhemius.

(n) Fridericus Spanhemius.

(o) I write this the 26th of May 1701.

(p) It was before in the Dutch Edition of Moreri's Dictionary till 1693.

(q) I write this in May 1701.

(r) Heidan. p. 32.

reply to him as he had a Mind to. His Adverſaries (F) gloried of it. I ſhall (G) mention the Praiſes beſtowed upon him, by a Man who cannot be ſuſpected of Flattery.

SPIFAME (James Paul) Biſhop of Nevers in the XVI Century, left his Biſhoprick, and retir'd to Geneva, in order to profeſs the Reformed Religion. He * went by the Name of M. de Paſſi, and at laſt he † turn'd Miniſter, to have, as 'tis ſaid, a more eaſie Acceſs into the Councils, and a greater Share in Affairs. The Parliament of Paris iſſued out ‖ a Warrant againſt him in the Year 1550. That Proſelyte was very ſerviceable to the Cauſe in Germany, whither the Prince of Conde ſent him to juſtify his taking up Arms. He Publiſh'd there γ the Four Letters which Catherine de Medicis had writ to that Prince, to recommend to him the Welfare of the Kingdom, and the Intereſt of the King her Son: He diſcovered δ many Secrets, obtain'd great Succours of the Princes of Germany, and ε harangued the Emperor at the Diet of Francfort in 1562 with ſuch a Strength, that it proved one of the beſt Manifeſto's of the Proteſtants. He cauſed ζ the Reiſters and Lanſquenets to be recall'd, and Count de Rocquendolfe, and other Chiefs, who Commanded them, to be put to the Ban of the Empire. He made Three Speeches in that Country. His End was not η anſwerable to ſuch a Noble Beginning; for he found himſelf involved in ſome Crimes, for which he was (A) Beheaded at Geneva the 23d of March 1566. His Birth, his (B) Parts, and his Learning might have raiſed him to the higheſt Dignities in France, where he had quickly gone through ſeveral Employments. Nothing can β Le Laboureur ib. tom 1. pag. 798.

* Le Laboureur, Addit. to Caſtelnau tom. 2. pag. 29.

† Id. ib. pag. 53.

‖ Spondan. Annal. Eccleſ. ad ann. 1550. n. 18. See alſo Thuanus l. 12. pag. 453.

γ Id. ib.

δ Id. ib. tom. 2. pag. 29.

men & bellum illis etiam fratribus indicendum judicare, qui vel data opera, vel ex ignorantia & infirmitate per cuniculos illam ſubruerent. Quod enim initio parvum videtur, id ſæpe, neglectum magna incendia dare in progreſſu. Cum cui quis ſemel patrocinium commodavit et mordicus inhæret, & ſæpe error non detectus cum occulte ſerpat, placere incipit, & tandem pudor eſt retractare quæ ſemel defenderis. Many Reaſons may be alledged to maintain this common Topick and this Maxim; but in order to perſuade, they ought to be attended with Choler. With ſuch an Ingredient, they commonly produce a Conviction; but without it, they appear weak, and are Confuted by many other fine Maxims. Heidanus obſerves, that the Perſon he praiſes, was a Man of a (a) fiery temper. That Fire is a wonderful Light to ſhew that the Reaſons alledged for Toleration, are bad ones, and that thoſe who cry out, to Arms, to Arms, bella, horrida bella, have well dived into the bottom of things. (b) Tros Rutulusve fuat nullo diſcrimine habebo; no matter, tho' they be Friends, Allies, or Relations; let's fall upon 'em, per calcatum perge patrem (c); 'tis for Truth.

(F) His Adverſaries gloried of it.] See the Paſſage quoted by Colomeſius (d) out of a Book of M. Amyraut.

(G) I ſhall mention the Praiſes beſtowed upon him, &c.] Sorbiere is the Perſon I ſpeak of: What he ſays of M. Spanheim deſerves to be tranſcribed; it contains ſome Particulars that will be acceptable to the Curious, and beſides, they belong to the Deſign of this Dictionary. Barlæus, ſays he (e), having made a Funeral Oration in Verſe, upon the Death of the Prince of Orange, and Dr, Spanheim having deliver'd one in Proſe, was very much diſpleaſed with the unequality of their Reward; for, as Salmaſius wittily ſaid, it was a great Overſight to give the Pay of a Trooper to a Foot-Soldier, and that of a Foot-Soldier to a Trooper. Barlæus received but Five Hundred Livres, and the other Five Hundred Crowns. All that I can tell you of the latter, is what was ſaid of him after his Deceaſe, viz. That Salmaſius had kill'd him, and that Morus had been the Dagger. 'Tis a long Story, and to be ſhort, I ſhall only tell you that Salmaſius did not love M. Spanheim, out of Jealouſie about Merit and Learning in the School; that in order to mortify him, he cauſed M. Morus to be ſent for into Holland, whom he only knew by his Name, but he was the Scourge and the Averſion of his Collegue; that the Doctor left no Stone unturn'd to prevent his coming, and that he died when he heard that his Adverſary was ſet out on his Journey. However, I muſt do this juſtice to that Learned German, even by Salmaſius's Confeſſion, who was not Prodigal of his Praiſes, that he had a ſtrong Head, and full of Learning, that he was fit for Buſineſs, Steady and Dexterous, Quick and Laborious. He read publick Lectures of Divinity four times in a Week, and private ones upon different Subjects to his Scholars; he heard the Students of Divinity; he preach'd in two Languages, German and French; he viſited the Sick; he wrote a vaſt number of Letters; he compoſed at the ſame time, two or three Books upon quite different Subjects; he aſſiſted every Wedneſday at his Highneſs's Council, who ſent for him to the Hague; he was Rector of the Univerſity, and notwithſtanding ſo many Occupations, he kept an Account of all the Expences of his Houſe, that was full of Boarders.

(a) Ὀξύχολος etiam, ut ipſe fatebatur, fuit, & ſubtilis choleræ nonnihil habuit, quæ inſtar flammulæ ſalpetræ momento incendebatur, ſat ſine fumo & nidore momento diſpergebatur. Ibid. p. 33.

(b) Virgil. Æn. l. 10. v. 108.

(c) Ita apud illum præponderabat amor veritatis, ut nulla amicitiæ jura, nullæ neceſſitudines, nullus metus illum a defendenda illa avertere potuiſſent. Heidan. ib. pag. 32.

(d) Colomeſ. in Gallia Orientali. pag. 206.

(e) Sorbiere Letter 64. p. 442, 445.

(A) In Crimes for which he was Beheaded.] M. Spon gives the following account of it. (f) "James Paul Spiſame Biſhop of Nevers, having left his Biſhoprick, and a yearly Income of Forty Thouſand Livres, retir'd to Geneva, to profeſs the Doctrine of the Proteſtants. He preſented a Petition to be made a Citizen, which was granted him, and even was admitted into the Councils of Two Hundred and of Sixty. The Magiſtrates and the Men of Letters had an eſteem for him on account of his Learning. Sometime after he was ſent into France to ſerve there as a Miniſter; but the Magiſtrates of Geneva were inform'd that he privately endeavour'd to get another Biſhoprick. Wherefore at his Return, his Conduct was more narrowly obſerved, and his former Life examin'd. It was found out that before his Marriage he had a Child by the Woman he Married, and leſt it ſhould be accounted a Baſtard, he cauſed his Contract of Marriage to be Antidated, and a falſe Seal to be put to it, that his Son might inherit his Eſtate, which was pretty conſiderable. For theſe Cauſes he was Impriſon'd, and having confeſt the whole matter, he was Beheaded in the Place du Molard, with a great Repentance of his Faults, which he ſhew'd by a fine Diſcourſe he made to the People upon the Scaffold. Some will have it that thoſe Accuſations were only a Pretence to Condemn him, and that he was Executed to comply with Catherine de Medicis, who had prevail'd upon the Syndics, being ſollicited to it by the Pope." See the Paſſage of M. de Rocolles in the Remark E.

(B) His Birth, his Parts, and his Learning might have raiſed him——— he had——— gone thro' ſeveral Employments.] " (g) He was of a Noble Family, originally come from Lucca, and ſettled at Paris in the Year 1350, when Bartholomew SPIFAME was living, from whom are deſcended all thoſe of that Name, Seigneurs de Biſſeaux, des Granges, and de Paſſy. His Father was John SPIFAME, Sieur de Paſſy, Secretary to the King, and Treaſurer of the Wars; and his Mother Jaquette Ruzé: He was the youngeſt of Five Brothers——— The progreſs he made in Learning procured him an Office of Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris; afterwards he became Preſident of the Inqueſts, Maſter of the Requeſts, and Counſellor of State; and he ſhewed ſo great a Capacity and Learning in all his Employments, that having devoted himſelf to the Church, there was no Dignity above the great Reputation he was in. After he had been a Canon of Paris, Chancellor of the Univerſity, and Abbot of St. Paul at can be more abſurd than what Moreri (C) ſays, that Calvin cauſed him to be put to Death. Others aſcribe (D) his Tragical End to Beza's Jealouſie, but cou'd not prove it. I have Confuted in another † Book Maimbourg's Reflections, and therefore I need not do it again. One of thoſe, who wrote againſt his Hiſtory of Calviniſm, wants (E) to be rectify'd. He has given us ſeveral curious Particulars about the true Cauſe of that Biſhop's Execution. 'Tis not true that Spiſame wrote a Book under (F) the Name of Peter Richer. Some ſay * he aſſiſted at the Council of Trent, and was afterwards Miniſter of Bourges and Iſſoudun. 'Tis certain, that when the Reformed received the Communion in the Town-Houſe of Bourges, towards the Beginning of the Year 1562, 'twas he who Officiated. He went thither from Iſſoudun with a Guard of 150 Troopers ††. The Author, who informs me of this, ſays in a Letter dated from Paris the 11th of December 1561, that Spiſame had been call'd by the Reform'd Church of Lyons, to be their Miniſter, and that four Years before he had been Accuſed of Lutheraniſm, for which he had been put to Death, had he not quickly fled to Geneva ‖.

" Sens,

SPINA, β (John de) in Latin Spinæus, Miniſter of a Reformed Church in the XVI. Century “ſent, he became Great Vicar of Charles Cardinal de Lorraine, Archbiſhop of Rheims, and in that Quality, he was named by Henry III. to the Biſhoprick of Nevers, of which he took Poſſeſſion in the Year 1548 ——— (a) Being infatuated with his Learning and Reputation, he reſolved to follow the New Opinions as ſome other Learned Prelates had done, and left his Church to take a Wife.

(C) Than what Moreri ſays, That Calvin cauſed him to be put to Death.] See with what Rhetorical Flouriſhes he adorn'd his Dictionary. (b) Calvin, who was then the great Califf of Geneva, the Infamous Receptacle of Hereſy and Hereticks, being acted by an Intolerable Vanity, thought that every body was to ſubmit to him, and was not ſatisfy'd with the Civility Spiſame ſhewed him. Perhaps, having obſerved that Spiſame repented of his Apoſtacy, he falſly accuſed him of ſome Crimes, eſpecially of being a meer Spy at Geneva, and had him Beheaded to be revenged of him. It was the 25th of March 1565. That Paſſionate Author might be Confuted ſeveral ways; but I ſhall only uſe this Chronological Reaſon. Calvin died the 27th of May 1564, and Spiſame was Beheaded the 23d of March 1566, according to M. Spon, who, in that reſpect, is a more Credible Author than thoſe (c) who place that Execution on the 25th of March 1565. Tho' we ſhou'd prefer this Date to that of M. Spon, and ſuppoſe it agrees with the Cuſtom of beginning the Year in January, it were ſtill moſt certain, that Calvin died above Nine Months before Spiſame was Executed.

(D) Others aſcribe it to Beza's Jealouſy.] Le Laboureur ſpeaks of it as confidently as if he had ſome Proofs for it. Beza, ſays he (d), who envied him mortally, did ſo narrowly obſerve him, when that Man was vexed to be reduc'd to a Private and Miſerable Life, that he made him ſuſpected of keeping Intelligence with Queen Catherine and the Catholicks, and of intending to leave Geneva. He was Impriſon'd, Try'd, and Beheaded the Twenty Fifth of March 1565, and was the Firſt Victim of the Liberty he had (e) procured to that City. Beza, who was his Enemy, not contented with his Execution, made the following Latin Verſes againſt his Memory, wherein he could not forbear Reflecting upon him, contrary to the Maxims of his Religion, for preferring a Wife to a Biſhoprick; and beſides, he owns, that ſhe was rather a Concubine than a lawful Wife. That Author quotes Ten Latin Verſes, which he aſcribes to Beza, upon the Death of James Spiſame, with a bloody Anſwer that was made to them likewiſe in Latin Verſe. I queſtion whether it can be proved that the Epigram of Ten Verſes has been juſtly aſcribed to Beza. It will not be improper to ſee what he anſwered to Claudius de Sainctes, who had reproach'd him with ſome things relating to James Spiſame. (f) Spiſamius mihi nunquam collega fuit, & cur ego illum odiſſem, à quo nunquam injuriam acceperam? num, ſicut in alterius nomine ineptus ille tuus monitor mihi exprobrat, quod vererer ne meis luminibus officeret? Atqui, neque hoc ille unquam cogitavit, opinor, neque (abſit verbo invidia) cauſa ulla fuit cur id timerem. An tamen illi à me intentata vana crimina fuiſſe proditionis, illiciti matrimonii, & ſtupri, quum longè gravius ipſo in iſtis deliquiſſem. Quòd ſi vana illa fuerunt, quomodo ille minùs quàm ego graviter deliquerit? an quòd apud vos iſta pro nihilo ducantur? At tu hominum vaniſſime, vide quam teipſum fallas. Num enim ego accuſator, num ſubſcriptor in eo fui quæ nunquam in illius cauſa in diſceptationem venerant? Nam de proditione vel ſtupro nulla quod ſciam fuit mentio. Sciunt autem omnes ex hujus civitatis more qua quiſque de cauſa damnetur. Nec de adulterio quæſitum eſt. De quo igitur dices? hoc vero tu ex me non audies, qui ne hoc quidem niſi à te coactus commemoro. Jure tamen damnatum fuiſſe ſi mihi non credis, ipſemet ſaltem credere te oportuit. There are Three things in this Latin Paſſage. 1. That Spiſame was not a Man who pretended to eclipſe Beza's Glory, and that Beza had no ground to be afraid of ſuch a thing. 2. That Beza did not ſet up for an Accuſer of Spiſame. 3. That Spiſame was not accuſed of Adultery, nor of Fornication, nor of Treaſon. Mezeray is therefore to blame for ſaying that (g) upon I know not what Umbrage that was taken at him, at Geneva, he was accuſed of Adultery, and Beheaded for that pretended Crime.

(E) Wants to be rectify'd. He has given us ſome curious Particulars.] “(h) Spiſame ——— having retired to Geneva cou'd not be quiet. Having formed an Intrigue with the Counſellors of the Queen-Mother, Catherine de Medicis, to get the Catholicks reſtored into that Town, and to enable the Biſhop to get into it with main Force, in hopes of being provided with a New Biſhoprick, his Treacherous Practices were diſcovered by Grillon, Collonel of the Regiment of Guards, who gave notice of it to the Agent of Geneva who attended the Court. The Agent took care to acquaint the Magiſtrates of Geneva with it: Whereupon Spiſame was Arreſted; and the Pretence on which he was brought to his Trial, was that he kept a Married Woman, and not, as Maimbourg brutiſhly ſays, that he had made a falſe Contract, or falſe Seals. An Adulterer may be puniſh'd with Death according to the Law Julia de Adulteriis. 'Twas upon this juſt Pretence that he was Beheaded, without mentioning his Conſpiracy, for fear of diſpleaſing the Court of France. And to prevent that Court from concerning themſelves for him, and ſending an Expreſs to ſave his Life, the Council made a quick diſpatch of his Tryal, which ended the Third day after he had been Arreſted.” This Author gives a hard word to Maimbourg without a cauſe; for that Jeſuit goes upon the Credit of a Proteſtant (i) Writer. The ſame Author tells us that Spiſame was Condemn'd under pretence of Adultery, which is not true. He takes no notice of a Falſity in Maimbourg. The Prince of Conde, ſays he (k), imploy'd Spiſame in other things beſides making Sermons; for he ſent him into Germany to demand the Succours, which he cou'd not obtain. 'Tis certain he obtain'd them. Beza (l), d'Aubigné (m), Le Laboureur (n) and ſeveral others ſay ſo. And Maimbourg himſelf mentions (o) above Three Hundred Reiſters, and Four Thouſand Lanſquenets, whom the Prince of Condé receiv'd from Germany.

(F) 'Tis not true that Spiſame wrote a Book under the Name of Peter Richer.] Du Verdier Vau-Privas ſays, (p) that James Spiſame, who left his Biſhoprick, wrote, under the Name of Peter Riaher, a Confutation of the Idle Fancies and Lies of Nicolas Durand, call'd the Chevalier de Villegaignon, in the Year 1562, in 8. Moreri affirms the ſame thing. But

---

† See the New Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm pag. 480. & ſeq.

* Catherinot, Calviniſme de Berri pag. 1.

†† Hub. Languetus Ep. 57. lib. 1.

‖ Id. Ep. 63. ejuſd. lib. p. 184.

β He is alſo call'd de L'Epine.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 53.

(b) Moreupon the ...d Spiſame. This Paſſage ... been ...ft out in ... Dutch ...itions.

...) M. le ...aboureur ...m. 2. ... 51. ...one of ...n.

...) Le Laboureur ...bid.

...) 'Tis not ...e that ...piſame ...ocured ... Liber... of Ge...va.

...) Theod. ...za apo...gia alte... ad F. Claudium ... Xain... ... p. m. ...81.

(g) Mezerai Abregé Chronol. tom. 6. circa fin. pag. m. 450.

(h) Rocolles Hiſtoire veritable du Calviniſme pag. 444, 445.

(i) Mr. Spon. See the Remark A.

(k) Maimbourg ubi infra.

(l) Beza, Hiſt. des Egliſes. B. 6. p. 88.

(m) D'Aubigné, Hiſt. univ. tom. 1. B. 3. ch. 12. p. 226.

(n) Le Laboureur, Addit. to Caſtelnau's Memoirs tom. 2. pag. 42. See the Text of this Article.

(o) Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Calviniſm B. 4. pag. 285.

(p) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 620.

Century, had been a Monk. I ſhall obſerve upon what occaſion he forſook (A) his Order, and ſided with the Proteſtants. He did many Services to the Cauſe. He was one of the Deputies of the Conference of Poiſſy: I have ſaid in another * Place, that he was diſtinguiſh'd from the Miniſters that were call'd Factious, and † that he and Du Roſier Diſputed with two Catholick Doctors in the Year 1566. The Church of Rochelle deſir'd he ſhou'd be their Miniſter in the Year 1561, ‖ and ſent to him ſome Deputies at Fontenai-le-Comte; but the Conſequences of that Deputation are not known. He wrote (B) very edifying Books, full of Piety and good Morality. He Died § at Saumur in 1594. Anjou was his Native Country, as La Croix du Maine obſerves. He eſcaped the Paris Maſſacre, becauſe the Murderers were too eager in running after a Lady whom he accompanied, and killing her in the River ¶. I don't think he was then 76 Years Old, as 'tis affirm'd in a Marginal Note of Varillas's Hiſtory of Charles IX, of the Paris Edition in 12. 1684.

* In the Article Charpentier.

† In the Article Roſier Remark B.

‖ Vincent, Recherches ſur les commencemens de la reformation de la Rochelle pag. 61.

§ Id. ib. pag. 68.

¶ Varillas Hiſt. de Charles IX. tom. 2. p. m. 458. See alſo Thuanus lib. 52. pag. m. 1078.

SPINOSA (John de) lived in the XVI. Century. He was Born at Belovado in the Province of Rioja in the Kingdom of Caſtile, and at Fourteen Years of Age was taken into the Houſe of the Marquis d'Alarcon. He became an Able Man, and ſhewed ſo great a faithfulneſs, that the Marquis conceived a particular Affection and Eſteem for him, ſo far as to entruſt him with the greateſt Secrets, and Conſult him about the moſt important Affairs. After the Deceaſe of that Lord, Don Pero Gonçalez de Mendoça his Son-in-Law ſucceeded him in his Offices, and was afterwards made Captain-General in Sicily by the Emperor Charles V. He made John de Spinoſa Secretary of the Cyphers, and of State Affairs, and was very well ſatisfy'd with his Conduct; for when Barberouſſe's Fleet fill'd the Streights of Meſſina, John de Spinoſa was ſo fortunate and dexterous as to croſs the Streights, and bring into Sicily the Emperor's Orders, and the Money due to the Soldiers. Some time after he quelled the Mutiny of the Troops in the Kingdom of Naples. He follow'd the ſame Mendoça in the Wars of Piedmont, and was his Secretary; and after the Death of that Lord, he was ſent twice to Venice for the Affairs of the Milaneſe. That Imployment made him ſtay Twelve Years at Venice, and gave him occaſion to diſcover ſome Qualities, which procured him the Approbation and the Praiſes of the Venetians. He alſo received many Marks of a particular Eſteem from the Emperors Charles V. and Ferdinand, and from Philip II. He commanded in ſome Provinces of Lombardy under the Duke de la Cueva, Governor of the Milaneſe, and General of the Spaniards in Italy. He had before commanded in part of Abruzzo with great Probity, where he cauſed two (A) Famous Robbers to be Puniſh'd

---

But I have ſhewed in another (a) place that Peter Richer is a real Man, and not a Fictitious Name.

(A) Upon what occaſion he forſook his Order.] M. Vincent's Grandmother by his Mother's ſide, ſaid that John Rabec was taken at Chateau-Gontier, in Anjou, in her Father's Houſe. " M. de l'Eſpine, who was " then a Carmelite, and was going to Preach at " Angers, happen'd to be in that Houſe, where he " was known and well beloved, as one who had a " great Reputation, tho' he was but a young Man. " He had been there ſome days with Rabec, with- " out knowing him; but being well pleaſed with " his Converſation, he was very much concern'd " for his Impriſonment: which moved him to give " him many Viſits in his Priſon, in order to diſſuade " him from the Reform'd Religion, and bring him " back to the Catholick. His Viſits had an effect " quite contrary to his Intention; for Rabec's Ar- " guments convinced him, and prevail'd upon him " by degrees. Beſides, he was extremely moved with " the admirable Conſtancy Rabec expreſs'd when " he was Burnt, and with the Wonder God wrought " in him; for tho' his Tongue had been cut off, " he ſung at the place of Execution with an au- " dible Voice, the LXXIX Pſalm.

O God, the Gentiles do invade Thine Heritage, to ſpoil, &c.

" As he was continually reflecting upon thoſe " things, he made no doubt that the Doctrine, a- " gainſt which he had ſo much diſputed with Rabec, " was the true one. He himſelf Preach'd it at Angers " above a Year, tho' without openly profeſſing it, " and quitting his Habit. He Cenſured ſeveral A- " buſes; and inſtead of inſiſting, as other Monks " did, upon Indulgences, Pilgrimages, and the In- " terceſſion of the Saints, he exhorted his Hearers " to Repent, and to implore the Divine Grace " through Jeſus Chriſt. He was very much fol- " lowed at firſt, but at laſt he was ſuſpected, which " made him think of removing. He went to Re- " nata of France, Dutcheſs of Ferrara, who was a " Proteſtant and reſided at Montargis." This is what M. Vincent (b), a Miniſter of Rochelle, heard his Grand-Mother ſay ſeveral times. He obſerves, that ſhe (c) " was Twelve or Thirteen Years of " Age, when M. de l'Eſpine and Rabec happen'd to " meet at Chateau-Gontier, and that ſhe died in the " Year 1624, being about Eighty Years Old." This Chronology is not very Exact; and indeed a great accuracy is ſeldom minded in ſuch Narratives. We read in Beza, (d) that Rabec was arreſted at Chateau-Gontier the 1ſt of Auguſt 1555, where he ſuffer'd Martydom the 24th of April 1556. M. Vincent's Grand-Mother muſt therefore have been then younger than ſhe ſaid, or muſt have lived more Years than her Grand-Son gives her. Note, as he obſerves (e), that L'Eſpine had been an Auguſtin Monk, if we rely upon the Preface of his Tracts. Others ſay, (f) he had been a Dominican. D'Aubigné (g) ſays he did not make an open Profeſſion of the Proteſtant Religion, 'till the Conference of Poiſſy.

(B) He wrote very Edifying Books] Here follow the Titles of 'em. Traicté des tentations, & moien d'y reſiſter. Lyons 1566. in 8. Traicté conſolatoire contre toutes afflictions, qui adviennent ordinairement aux fideles Chrêtiens. Lyons 1565. in 8. Traicté pour ôter la crainte de mort, & la faire deſirer à l'homme fidele. Lyons 1558. in 8. He Publiſh'd alſo ſome Controverſial Pieces, among others, Diſcours du vrai ſacrificateur. Lyons 1564. Defenſe & Confirmation du Traicté du vrai ſacrifice & ſacrificateur à l'encontre des frivoles reſponſes & argumens de René Benoiſt Docteur en Theologie. Geneva 1567. in 8. (h). Some of his Works were Tranſlated into Latin; for we have the following Books in that Tongue. De tranquillitate animi libri 7. De juſtitia Chriſtiana, de confeſſione peccatorum, de ægrotis conſolandis & de Providentia Dei. He made an (i) Excellent Sermon at Rochelle in 1587, upon the Lord's Supper, which M. Vincent intended to Publiſh. Simon Goulart of Senlis Publiſh'd in 1591. a Collection of Excellent Diſcourſes made by John de l'Eſpine, to which, as he uſed to do, he added Notes and Summaries. They are the ſame Seven Books concerning the Tranquility of the Mind, which, as has been ſaid above, were Tranſlated into Latin.

(A) Where he cauſed two famous Robbers to be Puniſh'd.] One of 'em was ſo Cruel, that he drank the

(a) In the Article of this Richer.

(b) Vincent Recherches ſur les commencement de la reformation en la ville de la Rochelle p. 65. & ſeq.

(c) Ibid. pag. 68.

(d) Bez. Hiſt. eccleſiaſt. l. 2. pag. 10[illegible]

(e) Vincent ib. p. 61.

(f) Varillas, Hiſt. de l'Hereſie l. 24. p. m. 214.

(g) D'Aubigné, Hiſt. univerſ. tom. 1. B. 2. chap. 15. pag. 14[illegible]

(h) Taken from Du Verdier's Bibliotheque Françoiſe. pag. 68[illegible]

(i) Vincent ubi ſupra pag. 6[illegible] niſh'd. He loved Study, and applied himſelf to it as much as his Employments and Journeys cou'd permit him, and even writ (B) ſome Pieces †.

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE) a Jew by Birth, who forſook Judaiſm, and at laſt became an Atheiſt, was a Native of Amſterdam. He was a Syſtematical Atheiſt † Taken from the preface which ſerves me for an Introduction prefixed to the Gynecepenos of John de Spinoza, Printed at Milan in 1580.

the Blood of thoſe, whom he kill'd; the other added a Horrid Lewdneſs to his Robberies and Murders, for he raviſh'd as many Women as he cou'd get. Here are the Spaniſh words of my Author. (*) Governo en Abruzzo el eſtado de la valle Siciliana, dando de ſu integridad muy grandes ſennales, con ſu pobreza: De ſu prudencia con diverſos juizios, y ſentencias notables: y de ſu juſticia con la muerte de Proſpero Camiſola cruceliſſimo homicida, è, inſolentiſſimo violador de mugeres, y de Ruttino de haman, atroce ſalteador de caminos, (y tan in humano, que como fiera ſalvaje acoſtumbrava bever la ſangre de aquellos a quien por los boſques heria, ò, matava:) y con la cabeça de ſcachia diabolo pueſta por terror de los mal hechores, en una pica à las almenas; y ſu cuerpo en quatro partes, en los paſſos, mas peligroſos del eſtado.

(B) And even writ ſome Pieces.] I have only ſeen his Gynecepænos, or his dialogo en laude de las mugeres. It was Printed at Milan in 4. in the Year 1580, and Dedicated by the Author to Mary of Auſtria, Daughter of the Emperor Charles V, and Wife of the Emperor Maximilian II. Women are highly praiſed in that Book, which is ſtuff'd with Examples and Quotations, the choice whereof is none of the beſt. The Author promiſed a ſecond Part, wherein he was to beſtow Encomiums upon many illuſtrious Ladies of that Age. I wiſh he had perform'd his Promiſe, and that I might ſee his Book. He wrote another Book, Intitled, Micracanthos, wherein he inſerted the Actions and memorable Sayings of great Men, and obſerved the Tragical end of the wicked, that his Book might teach his Readers how to attain to Glory and how to avoid Infamy. He inſerted in it a Digreſſion concerning thoſe, who take delight in ſpeaking ill of a Book. It will appear a good one, if we judge of it by the following words. They are very judicious, and teach us how to make a difference between Cenſures and Flatteries, and then between Cenſures that may be uſeful, and thoſe that can be of no uſe. (a) Pero contra aquellos que——— quiſieſſen por ventura en otras coſas tacharme: dexare por agora de hazer excuſationes, ò, reſpueſta defenſiua; refiriendome ala apologia que enel micracanthos tengo ſcrita. Donde ſuficientemente ſe trata delas ſpecies de maldicientes, y detractores; y dela reprehenſion que deue (excluſas todas las de mas) aceptarſe, y como obra ſaludable, y virtuoſa, agradeſcerſe. Alo qual remi tiendome, ſolamente dire agora que ſin deſear contra los mal dicientes, y arrogantes burladores; mas venganza de aquella con que la ſcriptura los amenaza diziendo, (1) parata ſunt deriſoribus judicia. Y ſin admitir por otra parte, las alabanzas engannoſas delos aduladores: ſperare gratamente con deſeo, y humildad la correction delos buenos, y ſabios varones. Teniendo para ello ſiempre enla memoria, aquellas divinas palabras del Eccleſiaſte, que dizen. (2) Melius eſt à ſapiente corripi, quàm ſtultorum adulatione decipi. Nicolas Antonio never ſaw (b) that Micracanthos. I add that our Spinoza made a large Collection of Proverbs, and fill'd it with Moral Reflections. He did not Publiſh it, and gave his Reaſons for it in the 2d Part of the Micracanthos. (c) Ha ſcrito algunas otras obras. Entre las quales (allende de los Dialogos dichos:) no es de poca importancia, la que yo he viſto de mas de ſeiſmil proverbios vulgares que ha recogido, y parte dellos compueſto; (aunque no acabada de comentar, ni impreſſa; por las cauſas que in los poſtreros razonamientos de la ſegunda parte del Micracanthos, ſe dize:) obra cierto de maravilloſa Doctrina, y provecho, y muy agradable: (anſi como las otras:) por la copia, y diverſidad de las materias, Todas ellas puramente applicadas ala virtud.

This Author may be therefore added to thoſe, who were mention'd in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres for the Year 1686. I ſhall ſet down the Paſſage, without minding the moroſe Humour of thoſe, who will not like it: I rather chuſe to have a regard for thoſe, who will be very well pleaſed with it. (d) "M. Menage Promiſes to Publiſh an Etymological Treatiſe upon the French Proverbs. There are few Subjects that are ſo curious as that is, and that require a greater ſkill in the knowledge of Hiſtory. There has been a vaſt Number of Proverbs in all Languages. Didymus made a Collection of 'em in 10 Books, which he Dedicated to thoſe, who had writ upon that Subject. Aldus Manutius Publiſh'd ſomething of Didymus's work with Tharræus's Proverbs in the Year 1505. But 'tis to be obſerved, that Greek and Latin Proverbs are not ſo Numerous as Eraſmus, and thoſe who have collected what was omitted by him, wou'd make us believe; for 'tis certain, and they have been ſufficiently upbraided with it, that they took for a Proverbial Expreſſion what was not ſo. Oudin made a pretty large Collection of French Proverbs, Intitled, Curioſitez Françoiſes, but he does not give their Etymologies. The Dialogues between a Clown and a Philoſopher have been often Re-Printed at Paris; they contain the Origine of a conſiderable Number of Proverbs, ſometimes well and ſometimes wrong. The Edition of 1655. is Intitled, Les illuſtres proverbes nouveaux & Hiſtoriques expliquez par diverſes queſtions curieuſes & morales 2. Vol. in 12. M. Furetiere, who has Publiſh'd a ſecond Caſe very Satyrical againſt many Members of the French Academy, pretends that the Proverbs of his Univerſal Dictionary are not taken from that of the Academy, and that in order to remove their meanneſs, he has enrich'd moſt of 'em by enquiring into their Origine, or applying to them curious Hiſtories, and comparing them with the Proverbs of other Nations, which Paquier, Belinghen, and ſome other grave Authors have not thought unworthy of their Pen". A good Supplement might be made to this long Paſſage. It might be ſaid that Belinghen mention'd by Furetiere ſhou'd have been call'd Fleury de Bellingen, which was his true Name. I think he taught French in Holland. He Publiſh'd at the Hague in 1656. L'etymologie ou explication des proverbes François, divided into three Books by way of a Dialogue. 'Tis a Book in 8. of 363 Pages. The Premiers eſſais des proverbes, Publiſh'd by that Author in 1653, having met with a good Reception, he reſolved to put out a 2d Edition much larger, viz. that whoſe Title I have juſt now mention'd. M. de Brieux Publiſh'd at Caen the Origines of ſome Proverbs in the Year 1672. in 12. If we go higher we ſhall find at the end of Nicod's (e) Dictionary the Explications morales d'aucuns proverbes communs en la langue Françoiſe, with a Tranſlation of ſome French Proverbs into Latin Verſe by Joannes Ægidius Nucerienſis. You'll find in Morhofius's Polyhiſtor many things upon this Subject; you'll find there that Angelus Monoſinius has Treated at large of the Italian Proverb in a Book Printed at Venice in 1604, and (f) that Julius Varini wrote a Book (g), Intitled, Scuola del Volgo, wherein the Italian Proverbs are placed according to the order of Humane Actions, and attended with ſome Prudential Precepts. You'll ſee there that the Alphabetical Collection of Italian Proverbs made by Orland Perſquet is to be found in Gruterus's Theſaurus; and that ſome mention one Thomaſo Buoni, who Publiſh'd a Collection of Italian Proverbs in (h) Two Volumes. But you will not find there the origini de volgari Proverbii (i) Publiſh'd by Aloyſio Cinthio at Venice in 1526. Morhofius (k) forgot the Name of a Modern Author, who has Collected the Italian Proverbs, and is mention'd in the Journals: I mean Menage. It does not appear that Morhofius was well acquainted with the Writers of our French Proverbs. He only mentions the Collection of an Anonymous Author, and that of Joh. Ægidius Nucerienſis, and the firſt Edition of Belingen's Proverbs, and laſtly le Duc, who put out a Book, (l) Intitled, Proverbes en rimes, ou rimes en Proverbes. Morhofius knew the Collection of Spaniſh Proverbs made by Ferdinand Nunnez, Profeſſor of Eloquence and of the Greek Tongue at Salamanca, and the Filoſofia vulgar of Juan de (m) Mal Lara, and the Medicina Eſpannola contenida en proverbios vulgares de nueſtra lengua, Compoſed by Juan Soropan de Rieros. That Filoſophia vulgar is a Collection of a Thouſand Proverbs, with their Explication. I don't wonder he does not mention (*) Hiero- ... nymo ... Geronim, ... he praiſes ... things ... of thoſe ... in his mu- ... ders.

(a) John ... Spino- ... Adver- ... ment to ... Reader ... fixed to ... Gyng- ... nos

(1) Prov. 19. ...

(2) Eccl. 7.

(b) See his ... liot. ... Script. ... Hiſpaniæ ... on the ... word ... Joannes de ... Spinoza ... tom. 1. ... p. 521.

(c) Hiero- ... ni. Set- ... ubi ... 2.

(d) Nou- ... velles de ... Repub- ... que des ... tres for ... bruary ... 1686. art. ... In the ... Extract of ... Etymo- ... gies of ... Italian ... Tongue ... written by ... M. Me- ... nage, at ... end of ... which ... there is an ... Explica- ... tion of ... many Ita- ... lian Pro- ... verbs. ... AUTHORS, who have writ upon Proverbs.

(e) The Edition I make uſe of is that of Paris 1606. in fol.

(f) Morhofius, Polyhiſt. lib. 1. c. 21. pag. 256.

(g) Printed at Verona 1642. in 12.

(h) Printed at Venice in 8. in 1604. & 1606.

(i) See Nicolas Antonio Bibl. Hiſp. tom. 1. pag. 559.

(k) Mentio etiam fit, ſi recte memini, in poſtremis Ephemeridibus Gallicis novi cujuſdam autoris qui proverbia Italica congeſſerit, cujus mihi nunc nomen excidit. Morhof. ibid. The Journal des Savans 1686. pag. 164. Dutch Edit. and the Nouvelles de la Rep. des lettres for the ſame Year pag. 164. mention that Collection of Mr. Menage.

(l) Printed at Paris 1665. in 12.

(m) It ſhou'd be Mallara.

theist, and brought his Atheism into a (A) new method, tho' the substance of his Doctrine was the same with that of many Ancient and Modern Philosophers, both in Europe and the Eastern Countries. As for the latter, one needs only read what mention the Book of our Spinoza; for 'tis lost. He does not forget the Compilers of German, English, and Dutch Proverbs. I know no Author that mentions Polydore Virgil, who pretends to have broke the Ice, both with respect to Proverbs and the Inventors of things. His Treatise of Proverbs came out in 1498, and was Dedicated to Guido Ubaldo Duke of Urbino (a). I have an Edition of it revised and enlarged the fourth time, and Printed at Basil 1541. it contains 456 Pages in 8.

I

(A) A systematical Atheist, and brought his Atheism into a new method, tho' the substance of his Doctrine was the same with &c.] I think he is the first who brought Atheism into a System according to the method of the Geometricians; but his Doctrine is not new. It has been believed long ago that the whole Universe is but one Substance, and that God and the World are but one Being. Pietro della Valle mentions some Mahometans (b), who call themselves Ehl Eltahkik, or Men of Truth, Men of certainty, who believe that there is nothing but the Four Elements, which are God, Man, and every thing else. He also mentions the Zindikites, another Mahometan Sect. (c) They come near the Sadducees, and have their Name from them. They don't believe a Providence, nor the Resurrection of the Dead, as Giggeius shews upon the Word Zindik ——— (d) One of their Opinions is, that whatever is in the World is God. There have been such Hereticks among Christians; for we find in the beginning of the XIII. Century, one David of Dinant, who made no Distinction between God and the first Matter. 'Tis a mistake to say (e) that he is the first who vented such a foolish Doctrine. Albertus Magnus mentions a Philosopher, who had done the like. (f) Alexander Epicureus dixit Deum esse materiam vel non esse extra ipsam, & omnia essentialiter esse Deum, & formas esse accidentia imaginata, & non habere veram entitatem, & ideo dixit omnia idem esse substantialiter, & hunc Deum appellavit aliquando Jovem, aliquando Apollinem, & aliquando Palladem; & formas esse peplum Palladis, & vestem Jovis; & neminem sapientum ajebat ad plenum revelare posse ea quæ latebant sub peplo Palladis & sub veste Jovis. Some (g) believe that this Alexander lived in Plutarch's time; others say in express words, that he lived before David of Dinant. Secutus fuit Alexandrum qui fecit librum de materia, ubi probare conatur omnia esse unum in materia. This we find in the (h) Margin of the Treatise, in which Thomas Aquinas confutes that Monstrous and Extravagant Opinion. Perhaps, David of Dinant knew not that there was such a Philosopher of the Epicurean Sect; but it must be granted me, that he knew very well he had not invented that Doctrine. Had he not Learned it of his Master? Was he not the Disciple of Amalricus, whose dead Body (i) was dug up and burnt in 1208, and who taught that all things were God, and but one Being? Omnia sunt Deus: Deus est omnia. Creator & creatura idem. Idea creans & creantur. Deus ideò dicitur finis omnium, quòd omnia reversura sunt in ipsum, ut in Deo immutabiliter conquiescant, & unum individuum atque incommutabile permanebunt. Et sicut alterius naturæ non est Abraham, alterius Isaac, sed unius atque ejusdem: sic dixit omnia esse unum, & omnia esse Deum. Dixit enim, Deum esse essentiam omnium creaturarum (k). I dare not affirm that Strato, a Peripatetick Philosopher, was of the same Opinion; for I don't know whether he taught that the Universe or Nature was a simple and sole Being: I only know, that he believed it to be Inanimate, and that he acknowledged no other God than Nature. Nec audiendus ejus (Theophrasti) auditor Strato, is qui Physicus appellatur, qui omnem vim divinam in natura sitam esse censet, quæ causas gignendi, augendi, minuendi habeat, sed careat omni sensu ac figura (l). Because he laugh'd at Epicurus's Atoms and Vacuum, one might think that he made no distinction between the several Parts of the World; but this is no necessary Consequence. All that can be concluded is, that his Opinion comes a great deal nearer Spinozism, than the System of Atoms. Here follows a Passage, wherein it is more largely set forth. (m) Negat sine Deo posse quicquam, ecce tibi è transversò Lampsacenus Strato, qui det isti Deo immunitatem magni quidem muneris. Sed quum Sacerdotes Deorum vacationem habeant, quanto est æquius habere ipsos Deos? Negat opera Deorum se uti ad fabricandum mundum. Quæcunque sint docet omnia effecta esse natura, nec ut ille qui asperis, & levibus, & hamatis, uncinatisque corpusculis concreta hæc esse dicat interjecto inani, somnia censet hæc esse Democriti non docentis, sed optantis. Ipse autem singulas mundi partes persequens, quicquid aut sit, aut fiat, naturalibus fieri, aut factum esse docet ponderibus & motibus: sic ille & Deum opere magno liberat, & me timore. Nay, there is ground to believe that he did not teach, as the Atomists did, that the World was a new Work produced by Chance; but that he taught, as the Spinozists do, that Nature has produced it necessarily and from all Eternity. I think the following words of Plutarch, if rightly understood, signify, that Nature made all things of it self and without knowledge, and not that its Works begun by Chance. (n) Τελευτῶν τὸν κόσμον αὐτὸν οὐ ζῶον εἶναι, τὸ δὲ κατὰ φύσιν ἕπεσθαι τῷ κατὰ τύχην. ἀρχὴν γὰρ ἐνδιδόναι τὸ αὐτόματον, εἶτα οὕτω περαίνεσθαι τῶν φυσικῶν παθῶν ἕκαστον. Denique mundum ipsum animal esse negat (Strato) vultque naturam sequi temerarios fortunæ impetus, initium enim rebus dare spontaneam quandam naturæ vim, & sic deinceps ab eadem natura physicis motibus imponi finem. This Translation, which I have found in Page 58. of Lescaloperius's Commentary upon Cicero de natura Deorum, and to which I have added enim after initium, is better than those of Amyot and Xylander: Nevertheless, there is something in it that does not suit the Notion one ought to have of the Opinion of that Famous Philosopher, the greatest (o) of all the Peripateticks: The words temerarii fortunæ impetus spoil the Symmetry of his System; and we see that Lactantius distinguishes it from that of the Epicureans, and ascribes no chance to it. Qui nolunt, says he (p), divina providentia factum esse mundum, aut principiis inter se temerè coeuntibus dicunt esse concretum, aut repente natura extitisse. Natura verò (ut ait Straton) habere in se vim gignendi & vivendi, sed eam nec sensum habere ullum, nec figuram: ut intelligamus, omnia quasi sua sponte esse generata, nullo artifice, nec authore. Utrumque vanum, & impossibile. Note, that Seneca (q) represents Plato's Doctrine, and that of Strato as being Diametrically opposite: one of 'em deprived God of a Body, and the other deprived him of a Soul. I think I have read in Father Salier's Book upon the Eucharist, that many Ancient Philosophers or Hereticks Taught the Unity of all things; but because I have not that Book now, I only mention this by the by. Father Salier is a French Minime. His Book Printed at Paris in 1689, is Intitled, Historia Scholastica de speciebus Eucharisticis, sive de formarum materialium natura singularis observatio ex profanis sacrisque Autoribus. It has been mention'd in the Histoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans for September 1690, Page 13.

The Doctrine of the Soul of the World, which was so common among the Ancients, and the Principal Part of the System of the Stoicks, is in the main the same with that of Spinoza. Which wou'd more clearly appear, if it had been explain'd by Methodical Authors; but because the Books wherein it is mention'd, are Written rather in a Rhetorical than in a Dogmatical Method; whereas Spinoza is a Precise Writer, and avoids the Figurative Style, which often hinders us from having a just Notion of a Body of Doctrine; hence it is that we find many Material differences between his System and that of the Soul of the World. If any one shou'd maintain that Spinozism is more Coherent, he shou'd also maintain that it is not so Orthodox; for the Stoicks did not deprive God of his Providence; they re-united in him the knowledge of all things; whereas Spinoza ascribes to him only a separate and very limited Knowledge. Read these Words of Seneca. Eun-

dem

(a) See the Epistle-Dedicatory of the Book de Inventoribus rerum, written by Polydorus Virgil.

(b) See the Article Abumuslimus.

A LIST of some Persons, who had the same Opinion with Spinoza.

(c) Bespier, Remarques curieuses sur Ricaut, Etat present de l'Empire Ottoman. pag. 648.

(d) Pietro della Valle, p. 394. of the 3. tome, apud Bespier ibid.

(e) Asseruit Deum esse materiam primam, quod nemo ante eum deliraverat. Theoph. Raynaud. Theol. naturali, distinct. 6. n. 6. p. 563.

(f) Albertus in 1. Phys. tract. 3. cap. 13. apud Pererium de communibus principiis, lib. 5. c. 12. p. m. 309, 310.

(g) Is est, opinor, quem inter sodales suos memorat Plutarchus II. sumpos. 3. Thomasius Dissertat. 14. ad Phil. Stoic. pag. 199.

(h) Ad. lib. 1. Thomæ contra Gentil. c. 17. f. 23. ed. Lugd. A. 1586. Thomas. ib. p. 200.

(i) See Prateolus in Elencho hæresum, voce Almaricus, pag. m. 23. He says that according to some Authors, that Heretick and his Adherents were burnt alive.

(k) Hæc de Amalrico Gerson tract. de Concord. Metaph. cum Log. Part. IV. Oper alphab. 20. lit. N. ex Hostiensi & Odone Tusculano. Thomasius ubi supra pag. 200.

(l) Cicero de nat. Deorum, lib. 1 pag. m. 56.

(m) Idem Academ. Quæst. l. 4. fol. C.

(n) Plutarchus adversus Colotem, p. 1115. B.

(o) Τῶν ἄλλων περιπατητικῶν ὁ κορυφαιότατος Στράτων. Peripateticorum reliquorum summus Strato, Plut. ubi supra.

(p) Lactant. de ira Dei cap. 10. p. m. 539.

(q) Ego feram aut Platonem aut Peripateticum Stratonem, alter fecit Deum sine corpore, alter sine animo? Seneca in libro contra superstitiones, apud Augustin. de Civit. Dei lib. 6. cap. 10.

I have related in the Remark D of the Article Japan, and what I ſhall ſay (AΔ) concerning dem quem nos Jovem intelligunt, cuſtodem RECTOREMQUE univerſi, animum ac ſpiritum, mundani hujus operis dominum & artificem, cui nomen omne convenit. Vis illum fatum vocare? non errabis. Hic eſt, ex quo ſuſpenſa ſunt omnia, cauſa cauſarum. Vis illum providentiam dicere? recte dices. Eſt enim, cujus conſilio huic mundo providetur, ut inconcuſſus eat, & actus ſuos explicet. Vis illum naturam vocare? non peccabis. Eſt enim, ex quo nata ſunt omnia, cujus ſpiritu vivimus. Vis illum vocare mundum? non falleris. Ipſe enim eſt, totum quod vides, totus, ſuis partibus inditus, & ſe ſuſtinens vi ſua (a). Quid eſt autem, cur non exiſtimes in eo divini aliquid exiſtere, qui Dei pars eſt? Totum hoc quo continemur, & unum eſt, & Deus: & ſocii ejus ſumus & membra (b). Read alſo Cato's diſcourſe in the 9. Book of Lucan's Pharſalia, eſpecially theſe three Verſes, Eſtne (c) Dei ſedes niſi terra, & pontus, & aer,

Et cælum & virtus? Superos quid quærimus ultra?
Juppiter eſt quodcunque vides, quocunque moveris.

I ſhall obſerve by the by an abſurdity of thoſe, who maintain the Syſtem of the Soul of the World. They ſay, that all Souls both of Men and Brutes, are Particles of the Soul of the World, which are re-united to their Whole, by the Death of the Body: And to make us apprehend it, they compare Animals to Bottles full of Water, floating upon the Sea. If thoſe Bottles were broke, their Water wou'd be re-united to its Whole; thus it is with particular Souls, ſay they, when Death deſtroys the Organs in which they were ſhut up. Nay, ſome ſay that Extaſies, Dreams, and ſtrong Meditations re-unite a Man's Soul to the Soul of the World, and that this is the Reaſon why People foretell things to come by compoſing figures of Geomancy (d). 'Tis no difficult thing to perceive the Falſity of this Parallel. The matter of the Bottles floating in the Sea is an incloſure, which keep the Sea Water from touching the Water they are full of; but if there was a Soul of the World, it wou'd be diſperſed in all the Parts of the Univerſe, and therefore nothing cou'd prevent the Union of the Soul to its Whole, and Death cou'd not produce that Re-union. I ſhall ſet down a Paſſage of Bernier, whereby it will appear, that Spinoziſm is only a particular method of explaining a Doctrine, which very much prevails in the Eaſt-Indies.

"(e) You are not Ignorant of the Doctrine of many Ancient Philoſophers concerning the great Soul of the World, whereof they ſay our Souls and thoſe of Brutes are Portions. Shou'd we dive into Plato's and Ariſtotle's Doctrine, perhaps we ſhou'd find that it was their Opinion. This is in a manner the Univerſal Doctrine of the Pendets in the Eaſt Indies; and that very ſame Doctrine conſtitutes to this day the Cabal of the Souſys, and of the greateſt Part of the Men of Letters in Perſia, and is explain'd in Perſian Verſes very Sublime and Emphatical in their Goul-tchen-raz or parterre of Myſteries; as it has been the Doctrine of Flud, which our Great Gaſſendus has ſo Learnedly confuted, and that of moſt of our Chymiſts. Now thoſe Cabaliſtical Indians carry the Extravagance farther than all thoſe Philoſophers, and pretend that God or that Supreme Being, which they call Achar, Immutable, Immoveable, has not only produced the Souls out of its own Subſtance, but alſo whatever is Material and Corporal in the Univerſe, and that their Production was not made in the way of efficient Cauſes, but as a Spider produces a Cob-Web out of it ſelf, and re-aſſumes it whenever it pleaſes. Creation therefore, ſay they, is only an Extenſion of God's own Subſtance, and Deſtruction only his re-aſſuming that Divine Subſtance into himſelf; ſo that the laſt Day of the World, which they call Maperlé or Praley, in which they believe there will be a general Deſtruction of all things, will only be a general re-aſſuming of what God had Emitted out of himſelf. And therefore, ſay they, there is no reality in any thing which we Believe we See, Hear, Smell, Taſte or Touch: this World is but a kind of a Dream and a meer Illuſion, becauſe that multitude and great Variety of things, that appear to us, are but one and the ſame thing, viz. God himſelf, as all our different Numbers, ten, twenty, one Hundred, a Thouſand, &c. are but one and the ſame Unity repeated many times. But if you ask 'em a Reaſon of ſuch a Fancy, and if you deſire 'em to explain that Emanation and Return of Subſtance, that Extenſion, and Apparent Diverſity, or how it comes to paſs that God, who is not Corporal, but Biapek, as they own, and Incorruptible, ſhou'd nevertheleſs be divided into ſo many Portions of Bodies and Souls, their Anſwer conſiſts in Compariſons. They tell you that God is like an immenſe Ocean, in which many Vials full of Water ſhou'd move; that thoſe Vials, where ever they ſhou'd go, wou'd be always in the ſame Ocean, in the ſame Water; and that if they ſhou'd break, the Waters contain'd in them wou'd be united to their Whole, to that Ocean of which they are Portions. Or they'l tell you, that 'tis with God as 'tis with light, which is the ſame all over the World, and yet appears a Thouſand ways different, according to the Variety of the Objects on which it falls, or according to the different Colours and Figures of the Glaſſes thro' which it is conveyed. They are contented with theſe Compariſons, which have no Affinity with God, and are only fit to caſt a miſt before the Eyes of Ignorant People; and no ſolid Anſwer can be expected from them, if they be told that thoſe Vials wou'd be in the like Water, (f) but not in the ſame, and that there is indeed a like light all over the World, but not the ſame; and ſo with many other ſtrong Objections that are raiſed againſt 'em: They repeat ſtill the ſame Compariſons, and the ſame fine Words, or, as the Soufs do, the fine Poems of their Goult-chen-raz".

It appears from the following Paſſage that Peter Abelard is accuſed of aſſerting that all things are God, and that God is all things. (g) Primam elementorum concordiam eſſe Deum & materiam ex quâ reliqua fierent, docuit Empedocles——Hæc erat illius ætatis Theoſophia, hæc notitia quæ de Cauſa principe habebatur. Jam tandem obſoleverat, & inter veterum ſomnia & phantaſmata recenſebatur. Eam inter veteris Philoſophiæ parietinas & rudera revocavit Petrus Abailardus, ingenio audax, & famâ celeber: Sepultam cineribus invenit, & quaſi Euridiceen Orpheus ab inferis tandem revocavit. Teſtor Vazquezium i. part. quæſt. 3. art. 8. Num. 28. & Smiſingum de Deo uno tract. 1. diſp. 2. quæſt. 2. Numb. 54. Deum eſſe omnia, & omnia eſſe Deum, eum in omnia converti, omnia in eum tranſmutari aſſeruit, quia Empedocleâ, aut fortè Anaxagoricâ præventus Theoſophiâ, diſtinguebat ſpecies ſecundum ſolam apparentiam, nempe quia aliquot Atomi in uno ſubjecto erant educta quæ latebant in alio.

(A Δ) Concerning the Theology of a Sect of Chineſe.] The Name of that Sect is Foe Kiao. It was eſtabliſh'd by the Royal Authority among the Chineſe in the Year 65. of the Chriſtian Æra. Its firſt Founder was a Son of the King In fan vam, and was at firſt call'd Xe, or (h) Xe Kia; and then when he was thirty Years of Age, Foe, that is, no man (i). The Prolegomena of the Jeſuits prefixed to Confucius Publiſh'd by them at Paris, treat of that Founder at large. It is ſaid there, that "(k) having retired into a Deſart, as ſoon as he came to be 19. Years of Age, and having put himſelf under the Diſcipline of four Gymnoſophiſts to learn Philoſophy of 'em, he remain'd under their Direction till the Age of 30 Years, when rising

(a) Seneca, Quæſt. Natur lib. 2. c. 45.

(b) Idem Epiſt. 92. pag. 351.

(c) Lucan. Pharſal. lib. 9. v. 578.

(d) Nihil
…s attin-
…de arte
… pro-
…tica
…que
…omman-
…, quibus
…e Flud-
… quam
…rinum
…uit.
…ſi enim
…ns co-
…ndo
… in ſeip-
… colli
…, ac ve-
…i ab-
…phi
…ſit, ut
…manas
… con-
…mpletur
…ut e
…dam
…cula:
…tamen
…d illa
…ſic,
…ndia
…x mor-
… cir-
…veſti-
…corpo-
…ita uni-
…animæ
…ndanæ,
…ſicut il-
omnia
…gnoſcit, ita ipſa particeps fiat cognitionis hujuſmodi: quòd
… item in hac extaſi digitos regat ad exprimenda varia pun-
…la, ex quibus effectus ſive arbitrarios, ſive fortuitos colligere
…at; hoc aut longe fallor, aut fabulam ſapit. Gaſſendus in …mine Philoſoph. Flnddanæ, n. 29. Operum tom. 3. pag. 247.

…) Bernier, Suite des Memoires ſur l'Empire du grand Mo-
…, p. 202. & ſeq. Dutch Edit.

(f) Note, that the Spinoziſts make no better anſwer to the puzzling diſtinction between ſame and like.

(g) Caramuel, Philoſoph. realis lib. 3. ſect. 3. pag. 175.

(h) The Japaneſe call him Xaca.

(i) See the Acta Eruditor. 1688. pag. 257, in the Extract of the Book of Confucius Printed at Paris in the Year 1687.

(k) Biblioth. Univers. tom. 7. pag. 403, 404. in the Extract of the ſame Book of Confucius.

cerning the Theology of a Sect of Chineſe. I have not been able to learn any particulars relating to Spinoza's Family; but there is ground to believe it was none

"riſing in the Morning before break of Day, and contemplating the Planet of Venus, that bare ſight gave him immediately a perfect knowledge of the firſt Principle; ſo that being full of a Divine Inſpiration, or rather of Pride and Folly, he betook himſelf to inſtruct Men, gave out himſelf as a God, and drew after him Fourſcore Thouſand Diſciples——At 79 Years of Age being upon the Point of Death he declared to his Diſciples, that for the ſpace of Forty Years that he had Preach'd to the World, he had not told 'em the Truth, but had concealed it under the vail of Metaphors and Figures; and that it was time to declare it to them. There is nothing, ſaid he, to be inquired after, and on which one may place ones hopes, but Nothingneſs and a Vacuum (1), which is the firſt Principle of all things". Here's a Man very different from our Unbelievers: They don't leave off ſpeaking againſt Religion but towards the latter end of their life; they don't renonce their Libertiniſm, but when they think the time of departing this life draws near. But it was then that Foe began to declare his Atheiſm. (a) Teterrimum virus Atheiſmi jam moriturus evomuiſſe perhibetur, diſerte profeſſus, ſe per annos quadraginta eoque amplius non declaraſſe mundo veritatem, ſed umbratili & metaphorica Doctrina contentum, figuris, ſimilibus, & parabolis nudam veritatem occultaſſe; at nunc tandem, quando eſſet morti proximus, arcanum ſenſum animi ſui ſignificare velle: extra vacuum igitur & inane, primum ſcilicet rerum omnium Principium, nihil eſſe quod quæratur, nihil in quo collocenter ſpes noſtræ. His Method was the Reaſon why (b) his Diſciples divided his Doctrine into two parts: One is outward, and publickly Preach'd and taught; the other is inward, and carefully concealed from the Vulgar, and diſcovered only to thoſe that are initiated. The outward Doctrine, which, as the Bonzes expreſs it, is only like the Centers, on which a Vault is built, which are afterwards removed, when the Building is finiſh'd, conſiſts 1. In teaching that there is a real difference between Good and Evil, Juſtice and Unjuſtice: 2. That there is another life wherein Men ſhall be Puniſh'd or Rewarded for what they have done in this World: 3. That Happineſs may be attain'd to by thirty two figures and Fourſcore qualities: 4. That Foe or Xaca is a Deity and the Saviour of Men, that he was Born for their ſake, out of Compaſſion for their Errors, that he has Expiated their Sins, and that by Virtue of his Expiation they ſhall obtain Salvation after Death, and ſhall have a new and more Happy Birth in another World. They add to this five moral Precepts, and ſix works of Mercy, and threaten with Damnation thoſe who neglect thoſe Duties.

"(c) The inward Doctrine, that is never imparted to the Vulgar, becauſe they ought to be kept to their Duty by the Fear of Hell and ſuch like Stories, as thoſe Philoſophers ſay, is however in their Opinion, the ſolid and true one. It conſiſts in laying down, as the Principle and end of all things, a certain Vacuum and real Nothingneſs. They ſay, our firſt Parents proceeded from that Vacuum, and return'd into it when they died, and that it is ſo with all Men, who are reſolved into that Principle by Death; that Men, all the Elements, and all Creatures make part of that Vacuum; and that therefore there is but one and the ſame Subſtance, which is different in all particular Beings only by Figures and Qualities, or an Internal Configuration, much like Water, which is always Eſſentially Water, whether it be turn'd into Snow, Hail, Rain or Ice". If it be a Monſtrous thing to aſſert that Plants, Brutes and Men are really the ſame thing, (d) and to ground ſuch an Opinion upon this pretenſion that particular Beings are not diſtinct from their Principle, 'tis ſtill more monſtrous to ſay, that this Principle has no Thought, no Power and Virtue. And yet, this is the Doctrine of thoſe Philoſophers: They place the ſupreme Perfection of that Principle in its Inaction and abſolute Repoſe. (e) Hoc autem Principium cum doceant eſſe prorſus admirandum quid, purum, ſimplicium, ſubtile, infinitum, quod nec generari poſſit nec corrumpi, quod perfectio ſit rerum omnium ipſumque ſumme perfectum & quietum; negant tamen, corde, virtute, mente, potentia ulla inſtructum eſſe, imo hoc eſſe maxime proprium eſſentiæ ipſius, ut nihil agitet, nihil intelligat, appetat nihil. Spinoza was not ſo Abſurd: The only ſubſtance he admits, is always acting and thinking; and his moſt general Abſtractions cannot inable him to diveſt it of Action and Thought. The Foundations of his Doctrine don't allow it.

Obſerve by the by, that the Followers of Foe teach Quietiſm; for they ſay that all thoſe, who ſeek true Happineſs ought to be ſo far abſorbed by profound Meditations as to make no uſe of their Intellect, and that they ought, thro' a perfect Inſenſibility, ſink into the Repoſe and Inaction of the firſt Principle; which is the true way of being perfectly like it and partaking of Happineſs. They further ſay, that thoſe, who have attain'd to that State of Quietude, may follow the uſual courſe of life as to the outſide, and teach others the Doctrine commonly received. 'Tis only in private and inwardly, that one ought to practice the Contemplative Inſtitute of the beatifical Inaction. (f) Quocirca quiſquis bene beateque vivendi ſit cupidus, hunc aſſidua meditatione, ſuique victoria eniti oportere, ut principio ſuo quam ſimillimus, affectus omnes humanos domet ac prorſus extinguat, neque jam turbetur, vel angatur re ulla, ſed ecſtatici prorſus inſtar abſorptus altiſſima contemplatione, ſine ullo prorſus uſu vel ratiocinio intellectus, divina illa quiete, qua nihil ſit beatius, perfruatur: quam ubi nactus fuerit, communem vivendi modum & doctrinam tradit aliis, & ipſemet ſpecie tenus ſequatur, clam vero ſibi vacet & veritati, & arcana illa quiete vitaque cœleſtis inſtituto gaudeat. Thoſe who were moſt intent upon this Contemplation of the firſt Principle, formed a new Sect, call'd Vu guei Kiao, that is, the Sect of Idle People, nihil agentium. Thus among Monks thoſe, who pretend to the moſt ſtrict Obſervance, form new Commonalties or a new Sect. The greateſt Lords and the moſt illuſtrious Perſons ſuffered themſelves to be ſo infatuated with this Quietiſm, that they took the inſenſibility to be the way to Perfection and Happineſs, believing that the nearer a Man came to the Nature of a Block or a Stone, the greater Progreſs he made, and the more he was like the firſt Principle, into which he was to return ſometime or other. 'Twas not enough that the Body ſhou'd be without motion for ſeveral Hours; the Soul was alſo to be unmoveable, and deſtitute of all manner of ſenſe. (g) Optimates Imperii & ſummos quoſque viros hac inſania adeo occupatos, ut quo quiſque propius ad naturam ſaxi truncive acceſſiſſet, horas complures ſine ullo corporis animique motu perſiſtens, ſine ullo vel ſenſuum uſu vel potentiarum, eo profeciſſe felicius, propiorque & ſimilior evaſiſſe principio ſuo aërio, in quod aliquando reverſurus eſſet, putaretur. A Follower of Confucius refuted the Impertinences of that Sect, and fully proved this Maxim of Ariſtotle, that (h) Nothing can be made out of Nothing; nevertheleſs they maintain'd and ſpread themſelves, and there are many People to this day, who apply themſelves to thoſe vain Contemplations (i). Were it not for the Extravagances of our Quietiſts (k), we ſhou'd be apt to think that the Writers, who mention thoſe ſpeculative Chineſe, did neither underſtand nor relate well what they ſay of 'em; but if we conſider what paſſes among Chriſtians, we need not deny what we are told of the Follies of the Sect Foe Kiao, or Vu guei Kiao.

I am apt to believe either that the Senſe, which thoſe Men put upon Cum hiu, is not exactly expreſs'd, or that their Notions are contradictory. We are told that thoſe Words ſignify Emptineſs and Nothingneſs, vacuum & inane; and in order to confute that Sect, this Axiom, Nothing can be made out of Nothing, has been alledged againſt them; and therefore thoſe who alledged it, muſt have believed that, according to that Sect, Nothingneſs is the Principle of all Beings. I cannot believe that thoſe Chineſe take the Word Nothingneſs

(1) Pag. 29. Vacuum & inane, Cum hiu in the Chineſe Language.

(a) Acta erudit. Lipſiens. p. 257.

(b) Biblioth. Univerſ. ubi ſupra pag. 404. & ſeq. See alſo the Nouveaux Memoires ſur l'état preſent de la Chine by Father le Comte, tom. 2. pag. 103. Amſt. 1698.

(c) Biblioth. Univers. ibid. pag. 406.

(d) Omnia, quæcunque exiſtunt, vita, ſenſu, mente] prædita, quamvis inter ſe uſu & figura differant, intrinſece tamen unum quid idemque eſſe, quippe a principio ſuo indiſtincta. Acta erudit. Lipſ. ib. pag. 258.

(e) Ibid.

Quietiſm taught and practis'd by ſome Chineſe.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Ibid.

(h) Copioſe probans Ariſtotelicum illud ex nihilo nihil fieri. Ibid.

(i) Ibid.

(k) See the Remark in the Article Brachmanes.

none (B) of the most considerable. He learned the Latin Tongue of a Physician * who taught it at Amsterdam, and applied himself † early to the study of Divinity, and bestowed many Years upon it: And then he wholly devoted himself to the study of Philosophy. Having a Geometrical Genius, and being desirous to have a good Reason for every thing, he quickly disliked the Doctrine of the Rabbins: so that the Jews easily perceived, he did not approve many Articles of their Religion; for he was a free Thinker, and hated Dissimulation, and therefore he freely declared his Doubts and his Belief. 'Tis said that the Jews offered to tolerate him, provided he would comply outwardly with their Ceremonies, and even that they promised him a Yearly Pension; but he could not resolve upon such an Hypocrisy. However, 'twas only by degrees that he left their Synagogue; and perhaps he wou'd not have broke with them so soon, had he not been treacherously attack'd by a Jew, who gave him a Thrust with a Knife, that went no deeper than his Cloaths. From that time he left them altogether, which was the Reason of his Excommunication. I have enquired into the Circumstances of it, but have not been able to find 'em out ‖. He wrote, in the Spanish Tongue, an Apology for his leaving the Synagogue, which has not been Printed: However β 'tis known that he inserted several things in it, that have appeared since in his Tractatus Theologico-Politicus, Printed at Amsterdam γ in 1670, a Pernicious and Execrable Book, which contains all the Seeds of the Atheism he plainly discovered in his Opera Posthuma. M. Stoupp has no reason to insult (C) the Ministers of Holland for not answering the Tractatus Theologico-Politicus. What he says of him is not ness in its proper signification, and I fancy they understand it, as People do, when they say that there is nothing in an empty Trunk. We have seen that they ascribe some (a) Attributes to the first Principle, which suppose that they conceive it as a Liquor. And therefore 'tis likely they only divest it of the gross and sensible parts of Matter. If it be so, the Disciple of Confucius would be guilty of the Sophism call'd ignoratio elenchi; for he understood by the Word nihil, what has no Existence; whereas his Adversaries understood by it what has not the Properties of sensible Matter. I fancy they meant by that Word, what the Moderns mean by the Word Space; I say, the Moderns, who being neither Cartesians not Aristotelicians, maintain that Space is distinct from Matter, and that its indivisible, unpalpable, penetrable, unmoveable, and Infinite Extension is something real. The Disciple of Confucius wou'd have easily proved that such a thing cannot be the first Principle, being besides destitute of Activity, as the speculative Chinese will have it. An Extension, tho' never so real, can produce no particular Being, unless it be moved; and if it be supposed that there is no Mover, the production of the World will be equally impossible, whether there be an Infinite Extension, or nothing at all. Spinoza wou'd not deny it; he does not admit of a First Principle without Action. The abstracted Extension he gives it in general is only, properly speaking, the Idea of Space; but he adds Motion to it, which may produce the Varieties of Matter.

(B) Poor and very inconsiderable.] 'Tis well known that Spinoza would not have had wherewithal to live, if one of his Friends had not left him by his Will, wherewithal to maintain himself. The Pension that the Synagogue offered him, shews that he was not rich.

(C) M. Stoupp has no reason to insult the Ministers of Holland for not answering.] He is the Author of some Letters, Intitl'd, La Religion des Hollandois. That Book was written at Utrecht in the Year 1673, whilst the French were Masters of it. M. Stoupp was then Lieutenant Collonel of a Swiss Regiment. He raised himself afterwards so far as to be made a Brigadier, and wou'd have been promoted to higher Offices, had he not been kill'd at the Battle of (b) Steinkerken. He had been formerly a Minister, and had served the French Church of the Savoy in London in Cromwel's time. He affected in the Letters I speak of to make an odious Description of the many Sects that are in Holland. What he says of Spinozism is contain'd in these words. "(c) I should think that I have not mention'd all the Religions of this Country, if I shou'd say nothing of a Famous and Learned Man, who, as I have been assured, has many Followers wholly devoted to his Opinions. His Name is Spinoza; he was born a Jew, and has not abjured the Jewish Religion, nor embraced the Christian: And indeed he is a bad Jew, and no better Christian. He has Publish'd within these few Years a Latin Book Intitl'd, Tractatus Theologico-Politicus, wherein the chief thing he seems to aim at is, to destroy all Religions, particularly the Jewish and the Christian, and to introduce Atheism, Libertinism, and a full liberty for all Religions. He maintains that all of 'em have been Invented for the Publick Good, that all Citizens may live Honestly and obey the Magistrates, and practice Virtue, not in hopes of any Reward after Death, but for the Excellency of Virtue it self, and the Advantages that accrue in this very Life to those who follow it. He does not openly say in that Book what he thinks of the Deity; he only gives some hints of it, whereas in Conversation he plainly declares that God is not an Intelligent, and a most Perfect and Happy Being, as we fancy, but only the Power of Nature, diffused all over the World. Spinoza lives in this Country; he has been sometime at the Hague, where he was visited by all the Curious, and even by some Women of Quality, who pretend to more Wit than is allotted to their Sex. His Followers dare not discover themselves, because his Book wholly overthrows the Foundations of all Religions, and has been Condemn'd by a Decree of the States, and the Sale of it is forbidden, tho' they Sell it still Publickly. Among all the Divines that are in this Country, none has ventur'd to Confute the Opinions contain'd in that Treatise. I am the more surpris'd at it, because the Author discovers a great Knowledge of the Hebrew Tongue, of all the Ceremonies and Customs of the Jews, and of Philosophy; and therefore those Divines cannot say that 'tis a Book that deserves no Answer. If they continue to be silent, it will be said that they have no Charity, since they leave such a pernicious Book Unanswer'd, or that they approve the Opinions of that Author, or are not able to Confute 'em." This Passage has been imparted to me by M. Des-Maizeaux.

An Answer to those Letters of M. Stoupp was Printed in 1675. It is Intitl'd, La Veritable Religion des Hollandois, avec une Apologie pour la Religion des Estats Generaux des Provinces Unies— by John (d) Brun. The Substance of what concerns Spinoza in that Answer is as follows. "(e) I think Stoupp is Mistaken, when he says, that Spinoza has not abjured the Jewish Religion, since he has not only renounced the Opinions of the Jews, having forsaken all their Practices and Ceremonies, but also Eats and Drinks every thing that is brought to him, "and β See the Book of M. Van Til, Minister and Professor of Divinity at Dort, Intitl'd, Het Voor-hof der Heidenen voor de Ongeloovigen geopent. That Book is mention'd in the Acta Erudit. 1695. p. 393.

* Call'd Francis Van den Ende. See the Remarks.

‖ Taken from a Memorial imparted to the Bookseller.

γ And not at Hamburg, as 'tis in the Title Page.

(d) He was then Minister and Professor of Divinity at Nimeguen. He is now Professor at Groningen. His Latin Name is Braunius; it has appeared in the front of several Books.

(e) Pag. 158.

not (D) always right. When * Spinoza betook himſelf to the Study of Philoſophy, he quickly grew out of Conceit with the common Syſtems, and was wonderfully pleaſed with that of Deſcartes. He found himſelf ſo much (E) inclined to inquire after Truth, that he renounced the World in a manner, the better to ſucceed in that Enquiry. Not contented to free himſelf from all manner of Buſineſs, he alſo left Amſterdam, becauſe the Viſits of his Friends interrupted his Speculations, and went into the Country, where he Meditated without any hindrance, and made Microſcopes and Teleſcopes. He continued in the ſame courſe of Life after he had ſettled at the Hague; and was ſo well pleaſed with Meditating, and putting his Meditations into order, and communicating them to his Friends, that he ſpent very little time in Recreating himſelf, and was ſometimes times

* Præfat. Oper. Poſthum.

" and even Bacon and Wine, tho' it ſhou'd come " from the Pope's Cellar, without inquiring whether it be Caſcher or Neſech. 'Tis true, he profeſſes no other Religion, and ſeems to be very " indifferent for all Religions, unleſs God moves " his Heart. I ſhall not inquire whether he maintains all the Opinions Stoupp aſcribes to him; " and it had been more edifying if Stoupp had " ſaid nothing of it: Let him juſtify himſelf, if " he will. Neither ſhall I enquire whether he " is the Author of the Book, Intitl'd, Tractatus " Theologico-Politicus. I am aſſured that he does " not own it; and if we may believe the Title " Page, it has been Printed at Hamburg, and " not in theſe Provinces. But ſuppoſe this wicked " Book had been Printed in Holland; the States " endeavoured to ſtifle it in its Birth, they Condemn'd it and Prohibited the Sale of it by a Publick Decree, as ſoon as it came out in their Country, as Stoupp himſelf confeſſes pag. 67. I know " it has been ſold in England, Germany and France, " and even in Swiſſerland as well as in Holland; but " I don't know whether it has been Prohibited " in thoſe Countries. The States, whilſt I am " writing this, expreſs their Piety by forbidding " that Book again, with many others of the ſame " ſtamp.„ As for what concerns Stoupp's Complaints, that this Book had not been confuted, the Author Anſwers 1. That ſince (a) it has been Printed at Hamburg, at leaſt, according to the Title, Stoupp ſhou'd rather Complain of the Divines of that City, than of the Dutch. 2. That (b) ſince that pernicious Book tends to the ſubverſion of Chriſtianity, the Roman Catholicks and the Lutherans were no leſs obliged to Confute it than the Reformed; and among the Reformed, the Divines of Germany, France, England, and Swiſſerland, ſhould have done their Duty in that reſpect as well as the Dutch Divines. 3. That M. Stoupp may be blamed for the ſame thing. Why did he not Anſwer it himſelf? 4. (c) That Spinoza's Book is not more Pernicious than his; for, if the firſt teaches Atheiſm openly, the other does it covertly: Both of 'em ſhew the ſame indifference for Religion. An Enemy, who attacks us privately, and under the appearance of Friendſhip, is much more dangerous than an open Enemy. 'Tis neceſſary to cry out againſt a Private Enemy, that every Body may know of it, whereas every body ſtands upon his Guard againſt a profeſt Enemy. Perhaps, this is the Reaſon why the Divines of Holland and Swiſſerland have been of Opinion that there was no neceſſity to make a ſpeedy Anſwer to Spinoza, believing that the Horror of his Doctrine is a ſufficient Confutation of it; the more, becauſe there is nothing New in that Treatiſe, what is contain'd in it having been a thouſand times repeated by Profane Men, and yet, thanks be to God, the Church has received no great harm by it. That he (John Brun) (d) has writ ſeveral Remarks upon that execrable Book, which perhaps he would have Publiſh'd, had not the War prevented it: Tho', ſays he, I think I have ſpent my time much better upon ſome other Works: Nay, I never took Spinoza's Book to be ſo pernicious as the Defamatory Libel of Stoupp. 6. That (e) Spinoza's Tract has been at laſt Confuted in Holland by an Excellent Man, who was a very good Divine, and a great Philoſopher, viz. by the late M. Mansfeldt Profeſſor at Utrecht. Doubtleſs that Confutation had been ſooner Publiſh'd, had not Death prevented the Author. And I don't queſtion that others would have confuted it long ago, had not Stoupp and his Accomplices hindred it by this Bloody War. I ſhall ſet down in the Remark H, the Titles of ſome other Anſwers to that Book of Spinoza.

(D) What he ſays of him, is not always right.] Does he not ſay, that according to Spinoza, Religions have been Invented to induce Men to the Practice of Virtue, not in hopes of being rewarded in another World, but becauſe Virtue is an Excellent thing in it ſelf, and advantageous in this Life? Is it not certain that this Atheiſt had no ſuch Thoughts, and that he wou'd not have argued thus without making himſelf ridiculous? All the Religions in the World, both the True and the Falſe ones, run upon this great Hinge, That there is an inviſible Judge, who Rewards and Puniſhes Men after this Life. The greateſt Uſe of Religion is ſuppoſed to derive from that; and if Religion had been Invented, this had been the chief Motive of the Contrivers of it. 'Tis plain enough that Good Actions don't generally procure Temporal Advantages ot Men, and that Bad ones are the moſt uſual and the moſt effectual way of raiſing ones ſelf; and therefore in order to inſpire Men with the love of Virtue, and prevent their running into Vice, it had been neceſſary to propoſe to them Rewards and Puniſhments after this Life. This is the Craft which the Libertines aſcribe to thoſe, whom they Pretend to have been the firſt Contrivers of Religion. This is what Spinoza ſhould have believed, and doubtleſs he believed it; and therefore M. Stoupp did not underſtand this part of his Doctrine. I wonder this Fault was not left out in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, in an Article that bears M. Simon's Name. Note, that thoſe who deny the Immortality of the Soul, and Providence, as the Epicureans did, are thoſe who maintain that Virtue ought to be follow'd by reaſon of its Excellency, and becauſe the practice of Morality is attended in this Life with ſufficient Advantages, to have no reaſon to Complain. Doubtleſs, this is the Doctrine Spinoza would have taught, if he had been ſo bold as to dogmatize Publickly.

(E) So ſtrongly inclined to inquire after Truth.] The Proof of theſe words, and of many more in the Text of this Article, is to be found in the Poſthumous Works of that Author. (f) Fuit ab ineunte ætate literis innutritus, & in adoleſcentiâ per multos annos in Theologiâ ſe exercuit; poſtquam verò eo ætatis pervenerat, in quâ ingenium matureſcit, & ad rerum naturas indagandas aptum redditur, ſe totum Philoſophiæ dedit: quum autem nec præceptores, nec harum Scientiarum Auctores pro voto ei ſatisfacerent, & illo tamen ſummo ſciendi amore arderet, quid in hiſce ingenii vires valerent, experiri decrevit. Ad hoc propoſitum urgendum Scripta Philoſophica Nobiliſſimi & ſummi Philoſophi Renati des Cartes magno ei fuerunt adjumento. Poſtquam igitur ſeſe ab omnigenis occupationibus, & negotiorum curis, veritatis inquiſitioni magnâ ex parte officientibus liberaſſet, quò minus à familiaribus in ſuis turbaretur meditationibus, urbem Amſtelædamum, in quâ natus, & educatus fuit, deſeruit, atque primò Renoburgum, deinde Voorburgum, & tandem Hagam Comitis habitatum conceſſit, ubi etiam IX. Kalend. Martii anno ſupra milleſimum & ſexcenteſimum ſeptuageſimo ſeptimo ex Phthiſi hanc vitam reliquit, poſtquam annum ætatis quadrageſimum quartum exceſſiſſet. Nec tantum in veritate perquirendâ intentus fuit, ſed etiam ſe ſpeciatim in Opticis & vitris, quæ Teleſcopiis & Microſcopiis inſervire poſſent, tornandis, poliendiſque exercuit; exercuit;

(a) Pag. 160.

(b) Ibid. pag. 161.

(c) Ibid. pag. 162.

(d) Ibid. pag. 163.

(e) Ibid. pag. 164.

(f) Præfat. oper. Poſthum. B. D. S.

times a Quarter of a Year without ſtepping out of doors. Tho' he lived a very retired Life, his Name and his Reputation flew every where. Men of little Belief (F) reſorted to him from all parts. The Palatin Court offered him a (FΔ) a Profeſſorſhip of Philoſophy at Heidelberg, but he refuſed it, being an Employment little conſiſtent with his great Deſire of inquiring into Truth, without any Interruption. He fell ſick of a lingring Diſeaſe, of which he died at the Hague, the 21ſt of February 1677, being ſomewhat above 44 Years of Age §. I have heard ſay that the Prince of Condé * being at Utrecht in the Year 1673, ſent him word that he would be glad to ſee him. Thoſe who have been acquainted with Spinoza, and the Peaſants of the Villages where he liv'd a Retir'd Life for ſome time, do all ſay that he was a Sociable, Affable, Honeſt, Officious, exercuit; & niſi mors eum intempeſtiva rapuiſſet, (quid enim in his efficere potuerit, ſatis oſtendit) præſtantiora ab eo fuiſſent ſperanda. Licet verò ſe totum mundo ſubduxerit, & latuerit, plurimis tamen doctrinâ, & honore conſpicuis Viris ob eruditionem ſolidam, magnumque ingenii acumen innotuit: uti videre eſt ex Epiſtolis ad ipſum ſcriptis, & ipſius ad eas Reſponſionibus. Plurimum temporis in naturâ rerum perſcrutandâ, inventis in ordinem redigendis, & amicis communicandis, minimum in animo recreando inſumpſit: Quin tantus veritatis expiſcandæ in eo ardor exarſit, ut teſtantibus iis apud quos habitaverit per tres continuos menſes in Publicum non prodierit. Quinimò, ne in veritatis indagine turbaretur, ſed ex voto in eâ procederet, Profeſſoratum in Academiâ Heidelbergenſi, ei à Sereniſſimo Electore Palatino oblatum, modeſtè excuſavit, uti ex (a) Epiſtola quinquageſimâ tertiâ & quartâ perſpicitur. The Theology he ſtudied ſo long was that of the Jews. (b) 'Tis ſaid that he was not well verſed in their Learning, and in the Knowledge of the Scripture. 'Tis certain he underſtood (c) Hebrew better than (d) Greek.

§ Taken from the Preface of his Poſthumous Works. See the Remark [?]

* See the Remark F.

(F) Men of little Belief reſorted to him from all Parts] I have named one in another (e) place. I omit the reſt, and I ſhall only ſay that the Prince of Condé, whoſe Learning was almoſt as great as his Courage, and who loved the Converſation of Free Thinkers, deſired to ſee Spinoza, and procured him a Paſſport to come to Utrecht. He commanded then the Troops of France. I have been told, by ſome Perſons, who were certainly informed of the thing, that he was obliged to go and viſit a Poſt the Day Spinoza was to come, and that the term of the Paſſport expired before that Prince return'd to Utrecht: So that he did not ſee the Author of the Tractatus Theologico-Politicus; but he had given orders, that in his Abſence, Spinoza ſhould meet with a good Reception, and ſhould not go without a Preſent. The Author of the Anſwer to the Book, Intitl'd, La Religion des Hollandois, mentions this in the following Manner. "(f) Before I leave this Subject, I muſt needs "ſay that I wonder Stoupp ſhould ſo much inveigh "againſt Spinoza, and ſay that he is Viſited by ma-"ny People in this Country, ſince he contracted "ſuch a ſtrict Friendſhip with him when he was "at Utrecht. For I have been aſſured that the "Prince of Condé, at his Sollicitation, ſent for him "from the Hague to Utrecht on purpoſe to Diſ-"courſe with him, and that Stoupp praiſed him "very much, and was very familiar with him.

(FΔ) A Profeſſorſhip of Philoſophy at Heidelberg.] M. Chevreau ſays thereupon a thing that wants to be rectifyed. Being at the Court of the Elector Palatin, ſays he (g), "I gave a good Cha-"racter of Spinoza, tho' (h) I knew not then that "Proteſtant Jew but by the Firſt and Second parts "of Deſcartes's Philoſophy, Printed at Amſterdam "for John Rieuwertz in 1663. The Elector had "that Book; and after I had read ſome Chapters "of it to him, he reſolved to call him to his U-"niverſity of Heidelberg to teach Philoſophy, on "Condition that he ſhould not Dogmatize. M. Fabricius, who was then Profeſſor of Philoſophy, "was order'd to Write to him; and tho' Spinoza "was not in very good Circumſtances, he refu-"ſed that Honourable Employment. The Rea-"ſons of his Refuſal were enquired into; and I "Conjectured from ſome Letters I received from "the Hague and Amſterdam, that theſe Words, on "Condition that he ſhou'd not Dogmatize, had fright-"ed him." M. Chevreau is miſtaken as to the Condition he mentions, and M. Bernard rightly obſerves that it had been a Contradiction. Theſe are his words. "(i) One may very well wonder, that "ſince Spinoza was already ſo well known, the "Elector ſhould have been willing to intruſt him "with the care of teaching young People Philoſo-"phy, and much more to require from him that "he ſhould not Dogmatize; for ſince his impious "Doctrine was built upon the very Principles of "his Philoſophy, how could he have taught that "Science without teaching his Impious Errors? "Such a Propoſal, together with the Law impo-"ſed on him, implied a kind of Contradiction." 'Tis certain, that ſuch a thing was not required from him, and that M. Chevreau is miſtaken in that particular: Which may be eaſily proved by the Letter that was written to him. M. Fabricius, who was ordered to write it, promiſed Spinoza a full Liberty of Philoſophizing; of which, adds he, the Elector thinks you will not make an ill uſe to the Prejudice of the Religion Eſtabliſh'd by the Laws. If you come hither, you'll live a pleaſant Life, and ſuch as becomes a Philoſopher. (k) Philoſophandi LIBERTATEM habebis AMPLISSIMAM, quâ te ad Publice ſtabilitam Religionem conturbandam non abuſurum credit ——— Hoc unum addo, te, ſi huc veneris, vitam Philoſopho dignam cum voluptate tranſacturum, niſi præter ſpem & Opinionem noſtram alia omnia accidant. Spinoza anſwered, that if he had deſired to be a Profeſſor, he wou'd have deſired no other Profeſſorſhip than that which was offered him in the Palatinate, eſpecially, becauſe his Electoral Highneſs granted him the liberty of Philoſophizing. (l) Si unquam mihi deſiderium fuiſſet alicujus facultatis profeſſionem ſuſcipiendi, hanc ſolam optare potuiſſem quæ mihi à Sereniſſimo Electore Palatino, per te offertur, PRÆSERTIM OB LIBERTATEM PHILOSOPHANDI quam Princeps Clementiſſimus concedere dignatur. I confeſs, that among other Reaſons for which he declares he does not find himſelf diſpoſed to accept that Profeſſorſhip, he ſays he does not know within what Bounds he muſt confine himſelf, to avoid doing any Prejudice to the Religion Eſtabliſh'd by Law. (m) Cogito deinde, me neſcire, quibus limitibus libertas iſta Philoſophandi intercludi debeat, ne videar publice ſtabilitam Religionem perturbare velle. But this does not prove that the Condition mention'd by M. Chevreau was required from him. This ſhews that even good Authors are very apt to give a wrong account of a Fact. M. Chevreau ſhould have been contented to ſay that Spinoza was given to underſtand, that if he ſhould impugn the Principles of the Reformed Church, it would be taken amiſs. Inſtead of which he uſes a general Propoſition, importing a formal Prohibition of Dogmatizing: This is a perfect Contradiction in the Terms. However 'tis certain that the Clauſe inſerted in the Letter written to Spinoza, ſeem'd very inconvenient to him: this I have expreſſed in a general way,

(a) M. Fa- ...icius ...feſſor ...Divini- ...at Hei- ...berg, ...Coun- ...r to ...Ele- ...Pa- ...ne, ...it that ...ter to ...inoza, ...his ...ſter's ...ler, ...16th. ...Febru- ...1673. ...fol- ...ing ...ter is ...inoza's ...ſwer to ...Fa- ...icius, ...e, that ...was ...nknown ...be the ...ther ...the ...ractatus ...heolo- ...co-Po- ...icus.

...) See ...Sup- ...ments to ...reri's ...ctiona- ...upon ...word ...za.

(i) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres for September, 1700. pag. 301.

(k) Epiſt. 53. Spinozæ p. 562. Oper. Poſth.

(l) Ibid. Epiſt. 54.

(m) Ibid. pag. 563.

...) See at the end of his Opera Poſthuma his Abridgment of ... Hebrew Grammar. (d) Tam exactam linguæ Græcæ cog...ionem non habeo, ut hanc Provinciam ſuſcipere audeam. ...za Tractatu Theologico-Politico, cap. 10. ſub. fin. p. 136. ...) See the Article Henault. (f) Brun, veritable Religion des ...ollandois, p. 164. (g) Chevræana tom. 2. pag. 99, 100. ...ch Edition. (h) To ſpeak like an Orthodox, M. Chevreau ...uld have ſaid, becauſe I only knew that Proteſtant Jew by the ...ſt, &c.

cious, and a (F△△) good Moral Man. This is ſtrange; but after all, 'tis not a more ſurpriſing thing, than to ſee Men live an ill Life, tho' they be fully perſuaded of the Truth of the Goſpel *. Some will have it that he follow'd the Maxim, nemo repente turpiſſimus, and that he became an Atheiſt only by Degrees, and that he was very far from being ſo in the Year 1663, when he Publiſhed the † Geometrical Demonſtration of Deſcartes's Principles. He appears as Orthodox in that Book upon the Nature of God, as Deſcartes himſelf; but we muſt know that he did not ſpeak according to (F△△△) his Perſuaſion. There is ground to believe that the Ill Uſe he made of ſome Maxims of that Philoſopher, occaſion'd his Atheiſm. Some ſay that the Pſeudonymus Piece de Jure Eccleſiaſticorum, Printed in 1665, (G) was the Fore-runner of the Tractatus Theoloby ſaying, That he refuſed that Profeſſorſhip of Philoſophy, being an Employment little conſiſtent with his great Deſire of inquiring after Truth without any interruption; for he had good Reaſon to believe he would be continually interrupted, and that the Divines of the Palatinate would make him loſe a great deal of time in juſtifying to the Prince what he ſhould teach his Scholars. They wou'd have found in his Lectures ſometimes one thing directly contrary to the Religion of the Country, and ſometimes another indirectly contrary to it. Which would have afforded many Complaints and Accuſations: He knew not how far the thing would go, and therefore he could not be ſure of living a quiet life; and tho' he had not fore-ſeen that it would make him loſe a great deal of time, he was ſenſible that his Meditations would be very much interrupted by his ſet Lectures, and many other Functions belonging to a Profeſſor. I deſire my Reader to add this to the Explanation, which has been Publiſh'd in the (a) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres.

gico

(F△△) And a good Moral Man.] If you except what he told his Intimate Friends, who deſired to be his Diſciples, he ſaid nothing in Converſation but what was edifying. He never ſwore; he never ſpoke diſreſpectfully of God; he went ſometimes (b) to hear Sermons, and exhorted others to go conſtantly to Church. He did not care for Wine, good Chear or Money. What he gave to his Landlord, a Painter at the Hague, was very inconſiderable. He minded nothing but Study, in which he ſpent the greateſt part of the Night. He liv'd a perfect ſolitary Life. 'Tis true, he did not refuſe the Viſits occaſion'd by his Reputation; and that ſometimes he viſited ſome conſiderable Perſons, not to talk of trifling things, or for his Diverſion, but to diſcourſe of State-Affairs. He had ſome Skill in them, tho' not by Experience, and gueſs'd pretty right what courſe General Affairs would take. I find all theſe Particulars in the Preface of (c) M. Kortholt, who in a Journey he made to Holland, inform'd himſelf of Spinoza's Life as well as he could. Vacavit interdum doctis & principibus viris, ſays he (d), quos non tam convenit, quam admiſit, iiſque cum de rebus civilibus ſermones inſtituit. Politici enim nomen affectabat, & futura mente ac cogitatione ſagaciter proſpiciebat, qualia hoſpitibus ſuis haud rara prædixit ——— Se profeſſus eſt Chriſtianum, & vel Reformatorum vel Lutheranorum cœtibus non modo ipſe adfuit, ſed aliis auctor ſæpenumero & hortator extitit, ut templa frequentarent, domeſticiſque verbi quoſdam divini præcones maximopere commendavit. Nec unquam jusjurandum aut petulans de Déo dictum ex ore Spinoſæ exiit; nec largiore uſus eſt vino, & ſatis duriter vixit. Ideoque hoſpiti quavis anni parte LXXX, aureos Belgicos tantummodo perſolvit, & ſummum CCCC. quotannis impendit. Auro plane non inhiabat.

(F△△△) He did not ſpeak according to his Perſuaſion.] On the contrary, he believed then the ſame things which are to be found in his Poſthumous Works, viz. That our Souls are but Modifications of the Subſtance of God. This may be certainly inferr'd from the Preface of the Book, by any one that knows Spinoza's Syſtem. I ſhall ſet down the Paſſage of that Preface, wherein 'tis ſaid, that having a Scholar to whom he had promiſed to explain Deſcartes's Philoſophy, he ſcrupl'd to depart never ſo little from the Opinions of that Philoſopher, tho' he did not approve of 'em in ſeveral things, eſpecially in what concerns Mens Will and Liberty. (e) Cum Diſcipulum ſuum Carteſii Philoſophiam docere promiſiſſet, religio ipſi fuit, ab ejus ſententia latum unguem diſcedere, aut quid, quod ejus dogmatibus aut non reſponderet, aut contrarium eſſet, dictare. Quamobrem judicet nemo, illum hic, aut ſua, aut tantum ea, quæ probat, docere. Quamvis enim quædam vera judicet, quædam de ſuis addita fateatur; multa tamen occurrunt, quæ tanquam falſa rejicit, & à quibus longè diverſam fovet ſententiam. Cujus notæ inter alia, ut ex multis unum tantùm in medium afferam, ſunt, quæ de voluntate habentur. Schol. Prop. 15. part. 1. Principior. & Cap. 12. Part. 2. Appendic. quamvis ſatis magno molimine atque apparatu probata videantur: Neque enim eam diſtinctam ab intellectu, multò minus tali præditam eſſe libertate exiſtimat. Etenim in his aſſerendis, ut ex Diſſertat. de Method. Part. 4. & Meditat 2. aliiſque locis liquet, tantùm ſupponit, non probat Carteſius, mentem Humanam eſſe ſubſtantiam abſolute cogitantem. Cum contrà Author noſter admittat quidem, in Rerum natura eſſe ſubſtantiam cogitantem: Attamen neget illam conſtituere eſſentiam Mentis humanæ; ſed ſtatuat, eodem modo quo Extenſio nullis limitibus determinata eſt, Cogitationem etiam nullis limitibus determinari: adeoque quemadmodum corpus humanum non eſt abſolute, ſed tantum certo modo ſecundum leges naturæ extenſæ per motum & quietem determinata extenſio; ſic etiam mentem ſive Animam humanam non eſſe abſolutè, ſed tantum certo modo determinatam cogitationem: quæ neceſſario dari concluditur, ubi corpus humanum exiſtere incipit. Ex quâ definitione, non difficile demonſtratu eſſe putat, Voluntatem ab intellectu non diſtingui, multò minus eâ, quàm illi Carteſius adſcribit, pollere libertate; quin imò ipſam affirmandi & negandi facultatem prorſus fictitiam. It appears from a (f) Letter of Spinoza, that he deſired the Author of the Preface ſhou'd uſe the Advertiſement we have juſt now read. From which you may conclude, that a Divine might have taken many Thoughts and Phraſes from that Book of Spinoza, without being Heterodox. See the Book, Intitl'd, (g) Burmanorum pietas, Printed at Utrecht in 1700.

(G) The Pſeudonymous Piece de Jure Eccleſiaſticorum ——— was the Fore-runner.] M. Davis inſerting ſome Objections in his Journal againſt a Book (h) of M. de la Placette, ſays that ſincere Men (i), "who depreſs the Eccleſiaſtical Authority, and at "the ſame time raiſe the Temporal one —— don't "obſerve that they Fall into the Firſt Snare laid by "Spinoza, to open the way to his Impious Do-"ctrine. This Conjecture is grounded upon the "Date of two Books Publiſh'd by that perni-"cious Man, One in 1665, and the Other in "1670. The Firſt is Intitl'd, Lucii Antiſtii Con-"ſtantis de jure Eccleſiaſticorum liber ſingularis quo do-"cetur: Quodcumque Divini humanique juris Eccle-"ſiaſticis tribuitur, vel ipſi ſibi tribuunt, hoc aut falſo "impieque illis tribui, aut non aliunde quàm a ſuis, "hoc eſt ejus Reipublicæ ſivè Civitatis Prodiis, in qua "ſunt conſtitui, accepiſſe. The Second is his Tracta-"tus Theologico-Politicus, which made a much great-"er Noiſe than the firſt. The Style and the Prin-"ciples of thoſe two Books are ſo like, that one "needs only compare 'em together, to be fully "convinc'd that they were written by the ſame "Author. And the bare reading of 'em is ſuffi-"cient to ſee that he has depreis'd the Authori-"ty of the Clergy, and at the ſame time "rais'd that of Kings and Magiſtrates, in the "Firſt, only to make way for the Impious Do-"ctrines which he aſſerts in the Second.

I

---

* Taken from the Memorial imparted to the Bookſeller.

† Here is the Title of that Work: Renati DesCartes Principiorum Philoſophiæ Pars I. & II. more Geometrico demonſtrata per Benedictum de Spinoza Amſtelodamenſem. Acceſſerunt ejuſdem Cogitata metaphyſica, in quibus difficiliores, quæ tam in parte Metaphyſices generali, quam ſpeciali occurrunt, quæſtiones breviter explicantur.

(a) In December 1700, p. 689, 690.

(b) See the Remark S.

(c) Sebaſtian. He is Profeſſor of Poetry at Kiel, ſince the Month of Februaary, 1701.

(d) Sebaſtianus Kortholtus præfat. edit. 2. Tractatus Chriſtiani Kortholti patris ſui de tribus impoſtoribus.

gico-Politicus. All those, who have (H) confuted the Tractatus Theologico-Politicus, have discovered in it the Seeds of Atheism; but none has done it so nearly as M. John Bredenbourg. It is not so easy to Answer all the Difficulties contain'd

I don't think that Mr. Dartis is in the right: There is more Reason to believe that the Author Lucii Antistii, &c. was the same Socinian, viz. Lewis Meier, who Publish'd the Year following the Dissertation, Intitled, Philosophia sacræ Scripturæ interpres.

(H) All those, who have confuted the Tractatus Theologico-Politicus, have discovered in it——but none has done it so nearly as M. John Bredenbourg.] I have already mention'd the Posthumous Answer of a (a) Professor of Philosophy in the University of Utrecht. To which I add, that a Socinian call'd Francis Cuperus, who died at Rotterdam in 1691. Intitled his Answer to that Book of Spinoza, Arcana Atheismi revelata, philosophice & paradoxe refutata. 'Tis a Book in Quarto Printed at Rotterdam, in 1676. M. Yvon a Disciple of Labadie, and Minister of the Labadists, at Wiewert in Friesland, confuted the same Book of Spinoza, in a Work, Intitled, L'impieté convaincue, and Publish'd at Amsterdam in 1681, in 8. 'Tis said in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, 1. That M. Huet, in his Demonstratio Evangelica, and M. Simon, in his Book concerning the Inspiration of the Sacred Writings, have confuted the Impious System contain'd in the Tractatus Theologico-Politicus. 2. That this Tractatus has also been Translated into French, and Printed with this Title, Reflections curieuses d'un Esprit desinteressé sur les matieres les plus importantes au salut tant public que particulier. I add that this Translation, Printed in the Year 1678, in 12. came out with (b) two other Titles, as it has been rightly observ'd in the Catalogue of the Library of the Arch-Bishop of Reims, and that the Latin Original has been Re-Printed in 8. with several Odd and Chimerical Titles, as the Booksellers thought fit to deceive the Publick, and elude the Prohibitions of the Magistrates. I further add, that Father (c) le Vassor has very well confuted Spinoza, in his Treatise concerning the true Religion, Printed at Paris in 1688. See the Journal des Sçavans of the 31st of January 1689. the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, and the Histoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans in the same Year. M. Van Til (d) a Minister of Dort, wrote very good Books in Dutch, to maintain the Divinity and Authority of the Scripture against that Impious Man. The Passage I am going to quote out of M. Saldenus, a Minister at the Hague, will inform us of the Names of some other writers against Spinoza. That Minister does not approve that Spinoza should be confuted in the Vulgar Tongue; he's afraid that Curious Men, fond of Paradoxes, will learn by that means, what it were better for them to be Ignorant of. (e) Neque defuere, qui se (f) abominandis ipsius Hypothesibus voce calamoque opposuerunt. Hos inter fuere, Batelerius, Mansveldius, Cuperus, Musæus, &c. qui omnes an æque feliciter contra eum decertarint non sine ratione à quibusdam dubitatur. Hos secutus postmodum est Guilielmus Blyenbergius (g), civis Dordracenus, qui idiomate etiam vernaculo confodere ipsum laboravit; licet nesciam, an consilio satis tuto; tum quod, quem oppugnat, Adversarius Sermone ille non scripserit, tum quod periculo vix careat, ne pestilentissimum impudentissimi Novatoris venenum, quod sub linguâ ignotâ latere hactenus plurimos poterat, Sermone vulgato in ipsum etiam vulgus plus justo fere curiosum, & in paradoxa proclive, proserpat tandem & transeat.

An Anonymous Writer, who denoted his Name by these Initial Letters, I. M. V. D. M. Publish'd a Latin Letter at Utrecht in 1671. against the Tractatus Theologico-Politicus. As for those, who have inserted in some Books, which they did not write designedly against that Tract of Spinoza, many things whereby they confute his Principles, I cannot Name 'em all, they are so many: I shall only Name two Famous Professors of Divinity, M. Witzius, and M. Majus, one in Holland, and the other in Germany, and M. de la Motte a French Minister at London.

I shall now speak of M. John Bredenbourg. He was a Citizen of Rotterdam, who Publish'd a Book (h) in 1675. Intitled, Johannis Bredenburgii enervatio tractatus Theologico-politici, una cum demonstratione, geometrico ordine disposita, NATURAM NON ESSE DEUM, cujus effati contrario prædictus tractatus unice innititur. He set in a full light what Spinoza had endeavoured to wrap up and Disguise, and made a solid Confutation of it. The Readers were surpris'd that a Man, who was no Profest Scholar, and who had very little (i) Learning, shou'd have been able to dive into all the Principles of Spinoza, and to Confute them so successfully, after he had represented them in their full strength, by a fair Analysis. I have heard of a Remarkable thing, viz. That this Author having made many Reflections upon his Answer, and the Principle of his Adversary, found at last that this Principle might be demonstrated. Whereupon he undertook to prove that there is no other Cause of all things, but a Being which necessarily Exists, and Act, by an immutable, and unavoidable Necessity. He observed the Method of the Geometricians, and after he had built his Demonstration, he examin'd it all manner of ways; he endeavour'd to find out the weak side of it; and could never think of any way to Confute it. Which made him very uneasy; he groan'd and sigh'd, he was angry with Reason, and desired his most Learned Friends to help him to find out the Fault of that Demonstration. Nevertheless, he suffered no Body to take a Copy of it: Francis Cuperus Transcribed it (k) by stealth, tho' he had promised not to do it. That Man, perhaps out of Jealousy, for he had writ against Spinoza, and had not been so successful as John Bredenbourg, made use of that Copy some time after to accuse him of Atheism. He Publish'd it in Dutch with some Reflections; Bredenbourg defended himself in the same Language: Many Pieces were Publish'd on both sides, which I have not read, for I don't understand Dutch. Orobio (l) an able Jewish Physician, and Aubert de Verse (m) engag'd in that Quarrel, and sided with Cuperus. They maintain'd that the Author of the Demonstration was a Spinozist, and consequently an Atheist. As far as I have been able to understand by what I have heard, the latter defended himself, by alledging the Common Distinction between Faith and Reason. He pretended that as the Protestants and the Catholicks believe the Mystery of the Trinity, tho' inconsistent with the Light of Nature, he believed Free-Will, tho' Reason afforded him strong Proofs that every thing happens by an unavoidable Necessity. It is no easy thing to drive a Man out of such an Intrenchment. It may be said that he is not sincere, and that 'tis impossible to believe as a Truth what is contrary to a Geometrical Demonstration: But can this be said without setting up for a Judge in a Case, wherein Incompetency may be Objected against you? Have we a right to decide what passes in other Mens Hearts? Have we a sufficient knowledge of a Man's Soul, to be positive that such and such Combinations cannot be found in it? Have we not many instances of Absurd Combinations, and such as come nearer Contradiction than that which John Bredenbourg alledg'd? For it ought to be observed that there is no Contradiction between these two Things: 1. Reason teaches me that this is false; 2. And yet I believe it, because I am persuaded that Reason is not Infallible, and because I had rather follow an inward sense, and the Impressions of Conscience, in short, the word of God, than a Metaphysical Demonstration. This is not believing, and disbelieving at the same time one and the same thing. Such a Combination is impossible, and none ought to be admitted to alledge it for his Vindication. However it be, the Man I speak of made it appear that the Sense of Religion, and the Hopes of another life prevail'd in his Soul against

(a) Call'd Regnier de Mansvelt. His Book was Printed at Amsterdam 16[illegible] in 4to.

(b) One of 'em is, Traité des Ceremonies superstitieuses des Juifs, and the other La clef du Sanctuaire.

(c) He as then ather of tory. is rn'd otestant ce.

(d) See he Hi oire des Ouvrages s Sçavans r March 696. t. 3.

(e) Saldenus, in tiis Theologicis, pag. 25.

(f) See m b: is of the Tractatus Theologico-Politicus pag. 23.

(g) I think writ against the Posthumous orks, and ot against he Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.

(h) 'Tis a Book in 4. of 100 Pages.

(i) He owns in his Preface, that not being able to express himself in Latin, he had writ his Book in Dutch, and then had it Translated into Latin.

(k) I have been inform'd just now, that Cuperus did always deny it, and that he always protested that he found the demonstration among the Papers of the Sieur Hartighvelt, whose Heir he was.

(l) I have seen the Tract he publish'd at Amsterdam in 1684. Intituled, Certamen philosophicum propugnatæ veritatis divinæ ac naturalis, adversus I. B. principia, &c. It is in Latin and Dutch.

(m) I have seen something of what he publish'd in the same Year under the Name of Latinus Serbaltus Sartensis. 'Tis a Book in Latin and Dutch.

tain'd in that Book, as utterly to deſtroy the Syſtem of his Opera Poſthuma; for it is the moſt Abſurd and Monſtrous Hypotheſis that can be imagin'd, and the moſt (l) contrary to the cleareſt Notions of our Mind. One would think that against his Demonſtration; and I have been told that the Signs he gave of it, during his laſt ſickneſs, put his ſincerity out of all doubt. The Abbot de Dangeau (a) ſpeaks of ſome Men, whoſe Religion is in their Mind and not in their Heart; they are perſuaded of the Truth of it, but they are not affected with the Love of God. I think it may be ſaid that there are ſome Men, whoſe Religion is in their Heart, and not in their Mind. They loſe the ſight of it, when they make uſe of Reaſon to come to the knowledge of it; it eſcapes the Subtilties and Sophiſms of their Logick; they know not which way to turn whilſt they compare the Arguments pro and con: But when they leave off diſputing, and mind only their inward ſenſe, the Inſtinct of Conſcience, &c. they are perſuaded that there is a Religion, and Conform their Lives to it as much as Humane Infirmities can permit it. This was the caſe of Cicero: One can hardly doubt of it who compares his other Books with thoſe de natura Deorum, wherein he makes Cotta Triumph over all the Interlocutors, who maintain'd the Exiſtence of the Gods.

Whoever deſires to know the Shifts and Equivocations made uſe of by Spinoza to conceal his Atheiſm, needs only read Chriſtian Kortholt's Book de tribus (b) impoſtoribus magnis, Printed at Kiel in 1680, in 12. The Author has Collected many Paſſages of Spinoza, and ſhown all the Venom and Artifice that lye in 'em. This is one of the moſt Curious Parts of the Hiſtory and Character of that Atheiſt. He quotes (c) among other things his 19. (d) Letter, wherein Spinoza complains that there was a Report (e) that he had a Book in the Preſs to prove that there is no God.

(l) The moſt Abſurd and Monſtrous Hypotheſis—— the moſt contrary to the cleareſt Notions of our Mind.] He ſuppoſes (f) that there is but one Subſtance in Nature, and that this only Subſtance is endow'd with Infinite Attributes, and among others, with Extenſion and Thought. Afterwards he affirms that all Bodies in the Univerſe are Modifications of that Subſtance, as it is Extended; and that for Inſtance, all the Souls of Men are Modifications of that Subſtance, as it thinks: So that God, the neceſſary and moſt perfect Being, is the Cauſe of all things that Exiſt, but does not differ from them. There is but one Being, and one Nature, and that Being produces in it ſelf, and by an Immanent Action, whatever goes by the Name of Creatures. He is both Agent and Patient, an Efficient Cauſe and a Subject; it produces Nothing but what is its own Modification. This is the moſt extravagant Hypotheſis that can be thought of. The moſt Infamous things ſung by the Heathen Poets, do not come near the Horrid Notion Spinoza gives us of God For the Poets did not aſcribe to the Gods all the Crimes that are Committed, all the Infirmities of Mankind; but according to Spinoza, there is no other Agent and Patient but God, with reſpect to Phyſical and Moral Evil. Let us obſerve ſome Abſurdities of his Syſtem.

THAT according to Spinoza God and Extenſion are the ſame thing.

I. It is impoſſible that the Univerſe ſhou'd be one only Subſtance; for whatever is Extended muſt neceſſarily conſiſt of Parts, and whatever conſiſts of Parts muſt be compounded: And becauſe the Parts of Extenſion do not Subſiſt one in another, it neceſſarily follows that Extenſion in General is not a Subſtance, or that each part of Extenſion is a particular Subſtance, and diſtinct from all others. But according to Spinoza, Extenſion in General is the Attribute of a Subſtance. He owns, as all other Philoſophers do, that the Attribute of a Subſtance does not really differ from that Subſtance; and therefore he muſt acknowledge that Extenſion in General is a Subſtance: From whence it ought to be concluded, that each part of Extenſion is a particular Subſtance; which overthrows the Foundation of the whole Syſtem of that Author. He cannot ſay that Extenſion in General is diſtinct from the Subſtance of God; for ſhou'd he ſay ſo, it wou'd follow that this Subſtance is in it ſelf unextended: And therefore it cou'd never have acquired the three Dimenſions but by Creating them, ſince 'tis manifeſt that Extenſion cannot proceed from an unextended Subject, but by way of Creation. But Spinoza did not believe that any thing cou'd be made out of nothing. Again, 'tis manifeſt, that a Subſtance unextended by its Nature, can never become the Subject of the three Dimenſions; for how could they be plac'd upon a Mathematical Point? They wou'd therefore Subſiſt without a Subject; and therefore they wou'd be a Subſtance: So that if this Author admitted a real Diſtinction between the Subſtance of God and Extenſion in General, he wou'd be obliged to ſay, that God is compos'd of two Subſtances diſtinct one from another, viz. of his unextended Being, and of Extenſion. Thus he is obliged to acknowledge that Extenſion and God are but one and the ſame thing; and becauſe he maintains that there is but one Subſtance in the Univerſe, he muſt needs teach that Extenſion is a ſimple Being, and as much uncompounded as Mathematical Points. But is it not a Ridiculous Aſſertion, and contrary to our moſt Diſtinct Ideas? Is it more evident that the Number One Thouſand is made up of a Thouſand Unites, than 'tis evident that a Body of a Hundred Inches is made up of a Hundred Parts really Diſtinct one from another, each of which has the Extenſion of an Inch?

THAT Extenſion is compoſ'd of Parts, each of which is a particular Subſtance.

It were in vain to raiſe any Objections againſt our Imagininination and our Senſes; for the moſt Intellectual and the moſt Immaterial Notions diſcover to us, with the utmoſt Evidence, that there is a moſt real Diſtinction between things, one of which has a Quality, which the other has not. The School-Men have been very ſucceſsful in ſhowing the Characters and Infallible Signs of Diſtinction. When, ſay they, one may affirm of one thing, what cannot be affirm'd of the other, they are diſtinct: Things that may be ſeparated one from another, either with reſpect to time, or with reſpect to Place, are Diſtinct. If we apply thoſe Characters to the 12 Inches of a Foot of Extenſion, we ſhall find a true Diſtinction between them. I can affirm of the five, that it is Contiguous to the ſix, and I can deny it of the Firſt and Second, &c. I can remove the Sixth into the place of the Twelfth; and therefore it may be Separated from the fifth. Note, that Spinoza cannot deny that the Characters of Diſtinction made uſe of by the School-Men are very juſt; for 'tis by that he acknowledges that Stones and Animals are not the ſame Modification of the Infinite Being. He acknowledges therefore, will ſome ſay, that there is ſome difference between things. He muſt needs own it, for he was not ſo Fooliſh as to Believe that there was no difference between him and the Jew, who offered to run him thro with a Knife; or to ſay, that his Bed and his Chamber were in all reſpects the ſame Being with the Emperor of China. What did he ſay then? He taught, not that two Trees are two Parts of Extenſion, but only two Modifications. You'll be ſurpris'd that he ſpent ſo many Years in forging a New Syſtem, ſince one of the main Pillars of it was to be the pretended difference between the word Part, and the word Modification. Could he expect any Advantage from this change of a word? What ſignifies it, whether he declines to uſe the word Part, and ſubſtitutes the word Modification in the room of it? Will the Notions annexed to the word Part vaniſh away? Will they not be apply'd to the word Modification? Are the Signs and Characters of difference leſs real or evident, when Matter is divided into Modifications, than when it is divided into Parts? Not at all. The Idea of Matter is always that of a compounded Being, of a Syſtem of many Subſtances. This will be fully prov'd by what I am going to ſay.

Modi-

(a) See his 3. Dialogue at the end, or the Extract of it in the Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres for August 1685. art 6. pag. m. 805.

(b) Viz. Edward Herbert de Cherbury; Thomas Hobbes; & Benedict de Spinoza.

(c) Chriſt. Korth. de tribus Impoſt. pag. 171.

(d) Written to M. Oldenbourg in 1675.

(e) Qui quidem rumor, ait, a plurimis accipiebatur. Unde quidam Theologi (hujus forte rumoris authore occaſionem cepere de me coram principe & magiſtratibus conquerendi.

(f) See among his Poſthumous works what he has intitled Ethica.

that Providence puniſh'd in a particular manner the Boldneſs of that Author, by Blinding him to ſuch a degree, that in order to avoid ſome Difficulties, which may perplex a Philoſopher, he run himſelf into others Infinitely more Inexplicable, INCONSISTENT Modifications require Diſtinct Subjects.

Modifications are Beings, which cannot Exiſt without the Subſtance they Modify; and therefore there ought to be a Subſtance where ever there are Modifications; Nay, it muſt needs be multiplyed in Proportion as Modifications inconſiſtent one with another are multiplyed: So that where ever there are five or ſix ſuch Modifications, there are alſo five or ſix Subſtances. It is evident, and no Spinoziſt can deny it, that the Square and the Circular Figures cannot be in the ſame Piece of Wax. And therefore the Subſtance Modified by a Square Figure is not the ſame Subſtance with that which is Modified by the Circular Figure. When therefore I ſee a Round Table, and a Square Table in a Room, I may affirm that the Extenſion, which is the Subject of the Round Table, is a Subſtance diſtinct from the Extenſion, which is the Subject of the other Table; for otherwiſe the Square Figure and the Round Figure wou'd be at the ſame time in one and the ſame Subject; which is impoſſible. Iron and Water, Wine and Wood are Incompatible; and therefore they require diſtinct Subjects. The lower end of a Stake driven into a River is not the ſame Modification with the other end: It is ſurrounded with Earth, whilſt the other is ſurrounded with Water; and therefore they have two Contradictory Attributes, viz. being ſurrounded with Water, not being ſurrounded with Water: And therefore the Subject they Modify muſt be at leaſt two Subſtances; for an only Subſtance cannot be at the ſame time Modified by an Accident ſurrounded with Water, and by an Accident not ſurrounded with Water. This ſhows that Extenſion is made up of as many Diſtinct Subſtances as there are Modifications.

THE IMMUTABILITY of God is Inconſiſtent with the Nature of Extenſion. That Matter is actually divided into Parts.

II. If it be an abſurd thing to ſay that God is extended, becauſe, 'tis depriving him of his Simplicity, and aſcribing to him an Infinite Number of Parts; what ſhall we ſay when we conſider that this Opinion reduces him to the Condition of Matter, the vileſt of all Beings, and ſuch as moſt Ancient Phiſophers have plac'd immediately next to Nothing. Matter is the Stage of all ſorts of Changes, the Field of Battle of contrary Cauſes, the Subject of all Corruptions and of all Generations, in a word, there is no Being, whoſe Nature is more Inconſiſtent with the Immutability of God. And yet the Spinoziſts maintain that it ſuffers no Diviſion; and the Reaſon they alledge for it is the moſt frivolous in the World. They pretend that if Matter was divided, one of its Portions ſhould be ſeparated from others by empty Spaces; which never happens. This is certainly a very wrong Definition of the Diviſion of Matter. We are as really ſeparated from our Friends, when the Space that divides us is taken up by other Men plac'd a Breaſt, as if it was full of Earth. And therefore when the Spinoziſts maintain, that Matter reduc'd into Aſhes and Smoak is not actually divided, they advance a thing quite contrary to our Notions. But what will they get, if we ſhould lay aſide the Advantage we may draw from their wrong Defining Diviſion? There will remain ſtill many Proofs of the Mutability and Corruptability of the God of Spinoza. All Men have a very clear Idea of an Immutable Being: They underſtand by that word a Being, which never acquires any new Thing, which never loſes what it is once poſſeſt of, which is always the ſame with reſpect to its Subſtance and the manner of its Being. The clearneſs of this Idea enables us to apprehend moſt Diſtinctly what a moveable Being is: 'Tis not only a Being, whoſe Exiſtence may begin and have an End; but a Being, which always ſubſiſting as to its Subſtance, may ſucceſſively acquire many Modifications, and loſe the Accidents or Forms which it has ſometimes. All the Ancient Philoſophers have acknowledged, that the continual Series of Generations and Corruptions, which is obſerv'd in the World, neither produces nor deſtroys any Portion of Matter: hence it is, that they ſaid that Matter is Ingenerable and Incorruptible as to its Subſtance, tho' it be the Subject of all Generations and Corruptions. The ſame Matter which is Fire now was Wood before; all its Eſſential Attributes remain the ſame under the Form of Wood, and the Form of Fire: and therefore it loſes and acquires nothing but Accidents, when Wood is chang'd into Fire, Bread into Fleſh, Fleſh into Earth, &c. And yet it is the moſt ſenſible and the moſt proper Example that can be given of a Being mutable, and actually liable to all ſorts of Internal Alterations and Changes. I call 'em Internal; for the different Forms under which it Exiſts are not like the different Cloaths under which Actors appear upon the Stage. The Bodies of thoſe Actors may ſubſiſt without any manner of Change or Alteration under a Thouſand ſorts of Cloaths: Cloth and Linnen, Silk and Gold, are not united with the Man that wears 'em: they are always Foreign Bodies, and outward Ornaments; but the Forms produc'd in Matter are inwardly and penetratively united to it; it is their Subject of Inherence, and according to right Philoſophy, there is no other Diſtinction between them and Matter, then what is to be found between Modes and a thing Modified. From whence it reſults, that the God of the Spinoziſts is a Being actually Changing, that goes continually thro' ſeveral States internally and really different one from another. It is not therefore the moſt perfect Being, (a) with whom there is no variableneſs, neither ſhadow of turning.

Note, that Proteus mention'd by the Poets, their Thetis, and their Vertumnus, who were Images and Examples of Inconſtancy, and (b) which occaſion'd the Proverbs whereby the oddeſt fickleneſs of Men was denoted, would have been Immutable Gods, if the God of the Spinoziſts was Immutable; for it was never pretended that there happen'd any Alteration in their Subſtances, but only New Modifications. See the Remark Y. If any Reader wants here ſomething to entertain him, let him Read theſe Verſes of Virgil concerning Proteus.

Verum, (c) ubi correptum manibus vincliſque tenebis,
Tum variæ illudent ſpecies, atque ora ferarum:
Fiet enim ſubitò ſus horridus, atraque tigris,
Squamoſuſque draco, & fulvâ cervice leæna:
Aut acrem flammæ ſonitum dabit, atque ita vinclis
Excidet: aut in aquas tenues delapſus abibit.
Sed, quantò ille magis formas ſe vertet in omnes,
Tantò, nate, magis contende tenacia vincla:
Donec talis erit mutato corpore, qualem
Videris, incepto tegeret cùm lumina ſomno.

As for what concerns Thetis ſee (d) Ovid: See alſo the ſame Poet concerning (e) Vertumnus, and beſides conſult the fourth Book of Propertius in the Second Elegy.

THAT GOD cannot be the Subject of Inherence of Men's Thoughts, ſince thoſe Thoughts are contrary to one another.

III. We ſhall ſee ſtill more monſtrous Abſurdities, if we conſider the God of Spinoza as being the Subject of all the Modifications of Thought. The Combination] of Extenſion and Thought, in one and the ſame Subſtance, is a great Difficulty; for the Queſtion is not about a Mixture like that of Metals, or of Wine and Water, which requires only a juxta-poſition: But the Combination of Thought and Extenſion ought to be an Identity; Thought and Extenſion are two Attributes Identify'd with a Subſtance. They are therefore Identify'd between themſelves, by the Fundamental and Eſſential Rule of (f) Humane Logick. I am ſure that if Spinoza had found the ſame Intricacy in another Sect, he would have thought it unworthy of his Attention; but he did not much Trouble himſelf with it in his own Cauſe: So true it is that the moſt diſdainful Cenſurers of other Men's Thoughts, are very indulgent to themſelves. Doubtleſs, he derided the Myſtery of the Trinity, and wondred that ſo many People ſhou'd ſpeak of a Nature terminated by three Hypoſtaſes; and yet properly ſpeaking

(a) Jam. 1. 17.

(b) Quo teneam vultus mutantem Protea nodo? Horat. Epiſt. 1. lib. 1. Sæpe notatus Cum tribus annellis, modo læva Priſcus inani, Vixit inæqualis, clavum ut mutaret in horas: Ædibus ex magnis ſubito ſe conderet, unde Mundior exiret vix libertinus honeſte. Jam mœchus Romæ, jam mallet doctus Athenis Vivere: Vertumnis, quotquot ſunt, natus iniquis. Idem. Sat. 7. lib. 2. v. 8.

(c) Virgil. Georg. lib. 4. v. 405. See alſo Horace Sat. 3. lib. 2. They had it from Homer Odyſs. lib. 4.

(d) Ovid. Metam. lib. 11. fab. 8. pag. m. 262, 263.

(e) Id. ib. lib. 14. fab. 16. v. 647. & ſeq.

(f) Quæ ſunt idem uni tertio, ſunt idem inter ſe.

cable, and ſo ſenſible that any Man of a right Judgment muſt needs perceive them. Thoſe who complain that the Authors who have undertaken to Confute him, ſpeaking he aſcribes as many Perſons to the Divine Nature as there are Men upon Earth. He looks upon thoſe who believed Tranſubſtantiation, and who ſay that a Man may be in many places at one and the ſame time, as ſo many Fools; and yet he maintains, that the Extended Subſtance, tho' but one and Indiviſible, is all at once every where, Cold in one place, Hot in another, Melancholly in one place, Merry in another, &c. This by the by: But mind what I am going to ſay. If there is any thing certain and undeniable, 'tis this Propoſition: (a) Oppoſita ſunt quæ neque de ſe invicem, neque de eodem tertio ſecundum idem, ad idem eodem modo atque tempore vera affirmari poſſunt. That is, two oppoſite Terms cannot be truly affirm'd of the ſame Subject in the ſame reſpects and at the ſame time. For Inſtance, one cannot ſay without lying, Peter is well, Peter is ſick: He denies that, and he affirms it: Suppoſing, that the Terms have always the ſame Relation, and are taken in the ſame ſenſe. The Spinoziſts deſtroy that Idea, and falſify it in ſuch a manner, that I don't know where they can find the Character of Truth; for if ſuch Propoſitions were falſe, there is none that can be accounted true. And therefore 'tis in vain to diſpute with 'em; for if they deny this, they may as well deny any other Reaſon alledg'd againſt 'em. I ſhall make it appear that this (b) Axiom is very falſe in their Syſtem; and in order to it, I lay down firſt of all this undeniable Maxim, that all the Titles that are given to a Subject to ſignify what it does, or what it ſuffers, do properly and Phyſically belong to its Subſtance, and not to its Accidents. When we ſay Iron is hard, Iron is heavy, it ſinks into Water, it cleaves Wood, we don't pretend to ſay that its hardneſs is hard, that its heavineſs is heavy, &c. This wou'd be an Impertinent way of ſpeaking: We mean that the extended Subſtance it is made of Reſiſts, is heavy, goes down into Water, and cleaves Wood. In like manner when we ſay that a Man denies, affirms, is angry, is kind, Praiſes, &c. we aſcribe all thoſe Attributes to the ſubſtance of his Soul, and not to his Thoughts, as they are Accidents or Modifications. And therefore were it true, as Spinoza will have it, that Men are Modifications of God, we ſhould ſpeak falſly ſhou'd we ſay, Peter denies this, he wills that, he affirms ſuch a thing; for according to that Syſtem 'tis properly God who denies, who wills, who affirms, and conſequently all the Denominations, reſulting from the Thoughts of all Men, do properly and Phyſically belong to the Subſtance of God. From whence it follows that God hates and loves, denies and affirms the ſame things, at the ſame time, and according to all the Conditions requiſite to make the Rule I have mention'd concerning oppoſite Terms falſe: For it cannot be deny'd, that according to thoſe Conditions ſtrictly taken, ſome Men love and affirm what other Men hate and deny. I go further ſtill: The Contradictory Terms, to Will and not to Will, belong at the ſame time to different Men according to all thoſe Conditions; and therefore according to Spinoza's Syſtem they belong to that ſole and indiviſible Subſtance he calls God. 'Tis therefore God who at the ſame time forms an Act of Will, and does not form it with reſpect to the ſame Object. And therefore two Contradictory Terms are true of him; which overthrows the (c) firſt Principles in Metaphyſicks. I am not Ignorant that in diſputes concerning Tranſubſtantiation, a Cavil is made uſe of which might help the Spinoziſts. 'Tis ſaid that if Peter Wills a thing at Rome, which he does not Will at Paris, the Contradictory Terms to Will and not to Will, are not true with reſpect to him; for ſince 'tis ſuppoſed he Wills at Rome, it were a Lie to ſay he Wills not. I leave 'em this vain Subtilty, and I ſhall only ſay that as a Square Circle is a Contradiction, a Subſtance is ſo too, when it Loves and Hates the ſame Object at the ſame time. A Square Circle wou'd be and wou'd not be a Circle; which is a plain Contradiction: It wou'd be a Circle according to the Suppoſition, and it wou'd be no Circle, ſince the Circular Figure is wholly inconſiſtent with the Square Figure. I ſay the ſame of a Subſtance, that Loves and Hates the ſame thing; it Loves and does not Love it; there is nothing wanting to make this a Contradiction: It Loves it, according to the ſuppoſition; it does not Love it, ſince Hatred does eſſentially exclude Love. Thus you ſee what it is to have a wrong Niceneſs. Spinoza cou'd not bear the leaſt obſcurity of Peripatetiſm, Judaiſm, or Chriſtianity; and yet he heartily imbraced an Hypotheſis, which reconciles two things ſo contrary to one another, as the Square and the Circular Figures, and whereby an Infinite Number of Inconſiſtent Attributes, and all the Variety and Antipathy of the Thoughts of Mankind are true at the ſame time of one and the ſame moſt ſimple and indiviſible Subſtance. We commonly ſay, quot capita tot ſenſus, as many Men ſo many Minds; but according to Spinoza all the Thoughts of all Men are in one head. The bare relating of ſuch things is a ſufficient Confutation of 'em, and clearly ſhews they are Contradictory; for 'tis manifeſt either that nothing is impoſſible, no not that two and two ſhou'd make 12, or that there are as many Subſtances as Subjects in the Univerſe, which cannot receive at the ſame time the ſame Denominations.

ANOTHER PROOF of what has been ſaid, taken from the wickedneſs of Man's thoughts.

IV. But if it be, Phyſically ſpeaking, a prodigious Abſurdity, that a ſimple and only Being ſhou'd be Modified at the ſame time by the Thoughts of all Men, 'tis an execrable Abomination, if it be morally conſidered. According to this Hypotheſis the Infinite, Neceſſary, and moſt Perfect Being will not be ſteady, conſtant and immutable. Nay, it will not be one Moment the ſame; its thoughts will continually ſucceed one another; the ſame Mixture of Paſſions and Sentiments will never be twice. This is what cannot be admitted; but here is ſomething worſe. This continual Mobility will be very uniform in this ſenſe, that for one good Thought the Infinite Being will have a Thouſand Fooliſh, Extravagant, Filthy, and Abominable ones. It will produce in it ſelf all the Fooleries, idle Fancies, lewd and unjuſt Practices of Mankind: It will be not only the Efficient Cauſe of 'em, but alſo the Paſſive Subject, ſubjectum inhaſionis: It will be united to them with the moſt intimate Union that can be conceived; for 'tis a Penetrative Union, or rather a Perfect Identity, ſince a Modification is not really Diſtinct from the Modified Subſtance. Many Philoſophers not being able to apprehend how the moſt Perfect Being can permit that Man ſhou'd be ſo wicked and ſo unhappy, have ſuppoſed two Principles, the one good, and the other bad; but here's a Philoſopher, who does not think it improper to make God the Cauſe and the Subject of all the Crimes and Miſeries of Men. If Men hate and Aſſaſſinate one another, if they Form themſelves into Armies to kill one another, if the Conquerors eat ſometimes the Conquered, 'tis a thing that may be apprehended, becauſe 'tis ſuppoſed they are diſtinct one from another, and that Property produces contrary Paſſions in them. But if Men are only a Modification of one and the ſame Being, to ſuppoſe that there will be Wars and Battles, is to advance a thing more Monſtrous and Chimerical than all the broken Thoughts and Fooliſh Fancies of Men ſhut up in Mad-Houſes. Obſerve, as I have ſaid before, that Modes do nothing, and that Subſtances only act and ſuffer. This Phraſe, the ſweetneſs of Honey tickles the Tongue, is only true, as it ſignifies that the Extended Subſtance of which Honey is made up tickles the Tongue. Thus according to Spinoza's Syſtem, whoever ſays, the Germans have kill'd ten Thouſand Turks, ſpeaks improperly and falſely, unleſs he means God

Modified

(a) See Logica Conimb. in capit. 10. Ariſtotelis de Prædicamentis pag. m. 579. and the Logick of Burgerſdicius lib. 1. cap. 22. pag. m. 127.

(b) That is, the above mention'd Definition of Oppoſite Terms.

(c) Duo contradictoria non poſſunt eſſe ſimul vera: de qualibet re vera eſt affirmatio vel negatio. See Ariſtotle's Metaphyſicks chap. 3. & 4. of the 4th Book.

him, have not been ſucceſsful, confound things: they would have the Difficulties, under which he ſunk, (K) wholly removed; but they ſhould be contented to modified into Germans has kill'd God modified into Ten Thouſand Turks; And therefore all the Phraſes made uſe of to expreſs what Men do one againſt another, have no other true ſenſe but this, God hates himſelf; he asks Favours of himſelf, and refuſes them to himſelf; he Perſecutes, Kills, Calumniates, and Eats (a) himſelf, &c. This would be leſs Unintelligible, if Spinoza had repreſented God as a Syſtem of many diſtinct Parts; but he reduces him to the moſt Perfect Simplicity, to an Unity of Subſtance, and Indiviſibility. And therefore he aſſerts the moſt Infamous and the greateſt Extravagancies that can be conceived, infinitely more Ridiculous than thoſe of the Poets concerning the Gods of the Heathens. I wonder he did not perceive 'em, or if he did, how he came to perſiſt in his Opinion. A Man of ſenſe would rather chuſe to grub up a piece of Ground with his Teeth and Nails, than to Cultivate ſuch an Offenſive and Abſurd Hypotheſis.

V. Here follow two other Objections. Some Philoſophers have been ſo impious as to Deny the Being of a God; but they did not carry their Extravagance ſo far, as to ſay that if he did Exiſt, he wou'd not be Perfectly Happy. The greateſt Scepticks among the Ancients ſaid, that all Men have an Idea of God, according to which he is a Living, Happy, and Incorruptible Being, of a Perfect Felicity, and ſuſceptible of no Evil. (b) Κοινὴν πρόληψιν ἔχουσι πάντες ἄνθρωποι περὶ θεοῦ, καθ' ἣν μακάριόν τι ἐστι ζῶον, καὶ ἄφθαρτον, καὶ τέλειον ἐν εὐδαιμονίᾳ, καὶ παντὸς κακοῦ ἀνεπίδεκτον. Communem anticipatam homines omnes habent de Deo notionem, ex qua eſt beatum quoddam animal, ab interitu alienum, in fœlicitate perfectum, in quod nullum poſſit malum cadere. Happineſs was the moſt inſeparable Property contain'd in his Idea: Thoſe who deprived him of the direction of the World, acknowledged his Felicity and Immortal Beatitude (c). Thoſe who made him ſubject to Death, ſaid at leaſt, that he was Happy all his Life time. It was doubtleſs a horrid Extravagance not to aſcribe Immortality as well as Happineſs to the Divine Nature. Plutarch does very well Confute this Abſurdity of the Stoicks: I ſhall ſet down his Words ſomewhat at large, becauſe they prove a Thought, which I have advanced above, and becauſe they Confute the Spinoziſts; for his Argument is inconſiſtent with the Hypotheſis, according to which God is ſubject to Death, as to his Parts, or Modalities, and is, as it were, the Matter of Generations and Corruptions, and deſtroys his Modalities, &c. (d) Καὶ ἴσως ἐντύχοι τις ἂν ἔθνεσι βαρβάροις καὶ ἀγρίοις θεὸν μὴ νοοῦσι. θεὸν δὲ νοῶν, μὴ νοῶν δὲ ἄφθαρτον μηδὲ ἀΐδιον, ἄνθρωπος οὐδὲ εἷς γέγονεν. οἱ γοῦν ἄθεοι προσαγορευθέντες οὗτοι, Θεόδωροι, καὶ Διαγόραι καὶ Ἵππωνες, οὐκ ἐτόλμησαν εἰπεῖν τὸ θεῖον ὅτι φθαρτόν ἐστιν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐπίστευσαν ὡς ἔστι τι ἄφθαρτον. τοῦ μὲν ἀφθάρτου τὴν ὕπαρξιν μὴ ἀπολείποντες, τοῦ θεοῦ δὲ τὴν πρόληψιν φυλάττοντες. ἀλλὰ Χρύσιππος καὶ Κλεάνθης ἐμπεπληκότες (ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν) τῷ λόγῳ θεῶν τὸν οὐρανὸν, τὴν γῆν, τὸν ἀέρα, τὴν θάλατταν, οὐδένα τῶν τοσούτων ἄφθαρτον οὐδὲ ἀΐδιον ἀπολελοίπασι, πλὴν μόνου τοῦ Διὸς, εἰς ὃν πάντας καταναλίσκουσι τοὺς ἄλλους. ὥστε καὶ τούτῳ τὸ φθείρειν προσεῖναι τοῦ φθείρεσθαι μὴ ἐπιεικέστερον. ἀσθενείᾳ γάρ τινι καὶ τὸ μεταβάλλον εἰς ἕτερον φθείρεται, καὶ τὸ τοῖς ἄλλοις εἰς ἑαυτὸ φθειρομένοις τρεφόμενον σώζεται. Ac fieri ſane poteſt, ut incidas aliquis in homines barbaros & feros, qui deum eſſe nullum putent: deum eſſe qui exiſtimet; ſed eundem non ſecurum interitus, non æternum, inventus eſt ne unus quidem homo. Certè qui athei appellantur quod negarent eſſe deos, Theodorus, Diagoras, Hippo, non auſi ſunt dicere deum eſſe interitui obnoxium, ſed non crediderunt aliquid eſſe ab interitu immune, ac talem naturam aliquam eſſe poſſe negantes, notitiam de deo reliquerunt in medio. Chryſippus verò & Cleanthes, cùm implevisſent (ut ſic dicam) ſuis dictis cœlum, terras, aërem, mare diis; nullum horum ab interitu liberum aut ſempiternum ſtatuerunt: ſolo Jove excepto; in quem reliquos omnes conſumi putant; ut jam is perdat, quod nihilo eſt quam perire melius. Eſt enim imbecilitas ut pereundo in alium tranſire, ita interitu aliorum in ſe tranſeuntium nutriri atque ſervari. But tho' this Doctrine of the Stoicks was never ſo Extravagant, it did not deprive the Gods of Happineſs during their Life. Perhaps the Spinoziſts are the only (e) Men, who have reduced the Deity to a miſerable Condition. His Miſery is ſo great, that he falls into Deſpair, and would Annihilate himſelf if he could; he endeavours to do it; he deprives himſelf of as many things as he can; he throws himſelf headlong into a Precipice, being no longer able to bear the Melancholy that conſumes him. What I ſay, does not ſavour of a Declamation; 'tis an Exact and Philoſophical Language: For if Man is only a Modification, he does nothing: it were an Impertinent and Burleſque Expreſſion to ſay, Joy is Merry, Saltneſs is Salt: 'Tis a Phraſe no leſs Impertinent in Spinoza's Syſtem, to affirm, Man thinks, Man afflicts himſelf, Man hangs himſelf, &c. All thoſe Propoſitions ought to be affirm'd of the Subſtance, whereof Man is only a Mode. How cou'd Spinoza think that an Independent and Self-Exiſtent Nature, endowed with infinite Perfections, is ſubject to all the Miſeries incident to Mankind? If ſome other Nature forced it to vex it ſelf, and to feel Pain, its Unhappineſs would be leſs ſurprizing; one might ſay, it muſt needs obey a ſtronger Power; 'tis likely it torments it ſelf with the Gravel, the Cholick, a Fever and Madneſs to avoid a greater Evil. But it is the only Being in the Univerſe, there is nothing that Commands, Exhorts, or Entreats it. 'Tis its own Nature, will Spinoza ſay, that moves it under ſome Circumſtances, to have a great deal of Vexation, and to feel a violent Pain. But I'll ask him whether he does not find ſomething monſtrous and unconceivable in ſuch a Fatality.

(e) Their Predeceſſors, whom I have mention'd in the firſt Remark, have not clear'd and dived into the Conſequences of their Principle, as Spinoza does.

The ſtrong Reaſons alledged againſt thoſe, who maintain'd that our Souls are a Portion of God, are ſtill more ſolid againſt Spinoza. 'Tis objected againſt Pythagoras in a Piece of Cicero, that Three palpable Falſities reſult from that Doctrine. 1. That the Divine Nature wou'd be torn in pieces: 2. That it wou'd be as unhappy as Men: 3. That Man's Mind wou'd be ignorant of Nothing, ſince it wou'd be God. Nam Pythagoras qui cenſuit, &c. (f).

(f) You'll find the ſequel of theſe words of Cicero in the Article Pythagoras Remark N.

THE SYSTEM of Spinoza makes his whole Conduct, and all his Diſcourſes Ridiculous.

VI. Were it not that I remember I don't write a Book againſt that Man, but only ſome Obſervations by the by, I cou'd find many other Abſurdities in his Syſtem. I ſhall conclude with this. He engaged in an Hypotheſis, which makes all his Labours ridiculous; and I am ſure that every page of his Ethicks affords a wretched Nonſenſe. Firſt, I wou'd fain know whom he has in view, when he rejects ſome Doctrines, and propoſes others. Does he deſign to Teach ſome Truths, and to Confute ſome Errors? But how can he ſay that there are any Errors among Men? Are not the Thoughts of the common Philoſophers, and of the Jews and Chriſtians, Modes of the Infinite Being, as well as thoſe of his Ethicks? Are they not Realities as neceſſary to the Perfection of the Univerſe, as all his Speculations? Do they not ariſe from the neceſſary Cauſe? How then can he pretend that they ought to be rectify'd? In the Second place, does he not ſay that the Nature, whereof they are Modalities, acts neceſſarily, and always follows its Courſe; that it can neither turn aſide nor ſtop; and that being the only Nature in the Univerſe, no outward Cauſe will ever ſtop or rectify it. And therefore nothing can be more needleſs than the Inſtructions of this Philoſopher. Is it fit for him, who is but the Modification of a Subſtance, to preſcribe to the Infinite Being what it ought to do? Will that Being hear him? And if it ſhou'd heard him, could it be the better for what he ſays? Does it not always act according to the whole extent of its Power, without knowing whither it goes, or what it does? Such a Man as Spinoza ſhould not pretend to Write, if he argued well. If it be poſſible, ſhou'd he ſay, for ſuch a Doctrine to take Root, the Neceſſity of Nature will Eſtabliſh it without my Book: If it be not poſſible, all my Writings will be inſignificant.

(K) They would have the Difficulties, under which Spinoza ſunk, wholly removed.] I think it may be ſuppoſed that he run into theſe Abſurdities, becauſe he to ſee his Hypotheſis overthrown, as it has been done even by his (L) weakeſt Adverſaries. I muſt not forget that this Impious Man was not ſenſible of the unavoidable he cou'd not apprehend that Matter is Eternal, and different from God, or that it has been produced out of Nothing, or that an Infinite Mind, perfectly Free, and the Creator of all things, cou'd produce ſuch a Work as the World. A Matter, that neceſſarily Exiſts, and yet is deſtitute of Activity, and ſubject to the Power of another Principle, is a thing that does not ſuit with Reaſon. We ſee no Affinity between thoſe three Qualities; ſuch a Combination is repugnant to the Notions of Order. A Matter Created out of Nothing cannot be conceived, tho' we ſtrive never ſo much to form an Idea of an Act of Will, which changes into a real Subſtance what was nothing before. This Principle of the Ancients, ex nihilo nihil fit, offers it ſelf continually to our Imagination. Laſtly, That an Infinitely Good, Holy and Free God, who cou'd make Creatures always Holy and Happy, ſhou'd rather chuſe the contrary, is a thing that ſtartles Reaſon; the more, becauſe it cannot reconcile Man's (a) Free-will with the quality of a Being created out of Nothing. But unleſs thoſe two things be reconciled, it cannot conceive how Man deſerves any Puniſhment under a Free, Good, Holy and Juſt Providence. Theſe three Inconveniences put Spinoza upon looking for another Syſtem, wherein God ſhou'd not be diſtinct from Matter, and ſhou'd act neceſſarily and according to the whole extent of his Power, not out of himſelf but in himſelf. It reſults from this Suppoſition, that this neceſſary Cauſe, whoſe Power is not limited, and whoſe Actions are not directed by Goodneſs, Juſtice and Knowledge, but only by the Infinite Power of its Nature, muſt needs have Modified it ſelf all manner of ways that are poſſible; ſo that Errors and Vices, Pain and Grief being as real Modifications as Truth, Virtue, and Pleaſure, all thoſe things muſt have been in the Univerſe. Spinoza hoped to reſolve by that means the Objections of the Manichees, againſt the Unity of a Principle. Thoſe Objections have no force but in the Suppoſition that a ſole Principle of all things acts out of choice, and can act or forbear acting, and confines its Power according to the Rules of Goodneſs and Equity, or according to an inſtinct of Malice. This (b) being ſuppoſed, the Queſtion is, if that only Principle be Good, whence comes Evil? If it be Bad, whence comes Good? Spinoza wou'd Anſwer, my only Principle being able to do Good and Evil, and doing whatever it can do, Good and Evil muſt neceſſarily be in the World. But if you conſider the three Inconveniences he intended to avoid, and the extravagant and abominable Conſequences of his Hypotheſis, you'll find that his choice is neither that of a good Man, nor that of a Man of parts. He rejects ſome things, of which, the worſe that can be ſaid is, that the weakneſs of our Reaſon does not allow us clearly to perceive the Poſſibility of 'em; and he admits others, which are evidently impoſſible. There is a great difference between not comprehending the Poſſibility of a thing, and comprehending the Impoſſibility of it. Now ſee the Unjuſtice of the Readers. They require from all thoſe, who write againſt Spinoza, that they ſhou'd remove the Difficulties which perplexed him, and ſet in a clear Light the Truth he could not comprehend; and becauſe they find no ſuch thing in the Writings of the Anti Spinoziſts, they declare they have not ſucceeded. Is it not ſufficient to overthrow the Syſtem of that Atheiſt? Reaſon teaches us that Cuſtom ought to be maintain'd againſt Innovators, unleſs they bring in better Laws; and if their Opinions were not better than thoſe that are commonly receiv'd, they ſhou'd deſerve to be rejected, tho' they were not worſe than the Abuſes they intend to ſuppreſs. It ought to be ſaid to thoſe Men, ſubmit (c) to Cuſtom, or give us ſomething better. Much more ought we to reject the Syſtem of Spinoza, ſince he runs himſelf into greater Difficulties. If they were equal on both ſides, the common Syſtem ſhould be prefer'd to the other, becauſe, beſides the privilege of Preſcription, it promiſes us a great Happineſs for the time to come, and affords us many Comforts in the Miſeries of this Life. How great a ſatisfaction is it in our Adverſity to hope that God will hear our Prayers, and that, if he does not hear 'em, he will however reward our Patience, and indemnify us in a Glorious manner? 'Tis a great Comfort to flatter ones ſelf that other Men will ſome times follow the Dictates of their Conſcience, and be reſtrain'd by the Fear of God. And therefore ſince the Syſtem of Spinoza is not liable to leſſer Objections than the Chriſtian Hypotheſis, it were a ſufficient Reaſon to reject it. So that any Author, who ſhews that Spinoziſm is obſcure, and falſe in its Firſt Propoſitions, and perplexed with impenetrable and contradictory Abſurdities in its Conſequences, does very well confute it, tho' he does not clearly reſolve all the Objections of Spinoza. The whole Matter may be reduced to theſe few words. The common Hypotheſis, if compared with that of the Spinoſiſts in thoſe things that are clear, has a greater Evidence: And if it be compared with the other in thoſe things that are Obſcure; it appears leſs oppoſite to the Light of Reaſon. And beſides, it promiſes us an Infinite Happineſs after this Life, and procures us a Thouſand Comforts in this; whereas the other gives us no proſpect of a future Happineſs, and deprives us of Confidence in our Prayers, and of the Advantage we may expect from the remorſes of our Neighbours: And therefore the common Hypotheſis is to be preferr'd to the other.

(L) As it has been done even by his weakeſt Adverſaries.] I ſhall not ſet up for a Maſter of Ceremonies, to place thoſe Gentlemen in the higheſt or loweſt Ranks, and ſhall only name thoſe (d) who are come to my Knowledge. M. Velthuyſe (e) Publiſh'd a Book againſt Spinoza in 1680. It is Intitl'd, Tractatus de cultu naturali, & origine moralitatis. Four Years after the Sieur Aubert de Verſé put out a Book with this Title, L'Impie convaincu ou diſſertation contre Spinoza, dans laquelle l'on refute les fondemens de ſon Atheiſme (f). M. Poiret inſerted in the Second Edition (g) of his Thoughts de Deo, anima, & malo, a Treatiſe Intitl'd, Fundamenta Atheiſmi everſa, ſive ſpecimen abſurditatis Atheiſmi Spinoziani. In the Year 1690, a Poſthumous Book of M. Wittichius came out, Intitl'd, Anti-Spinoza ſive examen Ethices Benedicti de Spinoza, & commentarius de Deo & ejus attributis. To which I add a Dutch Piece quoted (h) by M Saldenus.

I add in this Second Edition, 1. A Dutch Book Publiſh'd by the ſame Francis Cuperus, whom I have mention'd at the Beginning of the Remark H. This Dutch Book is only a Tranſlation of what Henry Morus ſaid in Latin againſt Spinoza in ſome Paſſages of his Works. It appear'd very ſolid to Cuperus, tho' his Arcana Atheiſmi revelata had been uſed with the utmoſt Contempt by (i) Henry Morus. 2. The Book Publiſh'd at Paris in 1696, by Dom Francis Lami a Benedictin. It is Intitl'd, Le Nouvel Atheiſme renverſé, ou Refutation du ſiſteme de Spinoſa, tirée pour la plupart de la connoiſſance de la nature de l'homme. You'll find an Extract of it in the (k) Journal des Sçavans of the 28th of January 1697. And you may ſee a juſt Encomium upon it in the 101 Page of the Second Part of the Chevræana, Dutch Edition. 3. The Work which (l) M. Jaquelot cauſed to be Printed at the Hague in 1697. It is Intitl'd, Diſſertations ſur l'exiſtence de Dieu, où l'on demontre cette verité par l'hiſtoire Univerſelle de la premiere antiquité du monde; par la refutation du ſyſteme d'Epicure & de Spinoza, &c. You'll find a good Extract of it in the (m) Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Sçavans. 4. The Book Publiſh'd by M. Jens at Dort in 1698. The Title of it runs thus: Examen philoſophicum ſextæ definitionis partis 1. Eth. Benedicti de Spinoza, ſive prodromus animadverſionum ſuper unico Veterum & recentiorum atheorum argumento, nempe avoidable Consequences of his System; for he Laugh'd at the Apparition * of Spirits,

---

(a) That is, the liberty of Indifference.

(b) Deteriora velle, noſtri fuerit fortaſſe defectus: poſſe vero contra innocentiam, quæ ſceleratus quiſque conceperit, inſpectante Deo, monſtri ſimile eſt: unde haud injuria tuorum quidam familiarum quæſivit: Si quidem Deus, inquit, eſt, unde mala? bona vero unde, ſi non eſt? Boëthius, de conſol. Philoſoph. lib. 1. proſa 4. pag. m. 11.

(c) Sin melius quid habes, accerſe, aut imperium fer. Horat. epiſt. 5. lib. 1.

(d) Note, that I ſpeak only of thoſe who have confuted the Poſthumous Works of Spinoza.

(e) Being [illegible] it, and help'd by M. PAETS to whom he Dedicated it.

(f) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for October 1684, pag. 162.

(g) At Amſterdam 1685. See the ſame Nouvelles, for April 1685. pag. 452.

(h) In his Otia Theologica. The Author's Name was Blyenberg: He was a Merchant at Dort, who died in 1696. (i) Oper. Philoſoph. tom. 1. pag. 60 (k) Page 72. of the Dutch Edition. (l) He was Miniſter of the Church of Vaſſy in Champagne, and is now Miniſter at the Hague. (m) For September 1696. Art. 3.

tiva substantia; ubi infirmitas & vanitas argumentorum pro ea evincetur. Accedunt quædam necdum proposita argumenta pro vera existentia Dei. 'Tis a Book of 68 pages in 4to. The Author is a Physician at Dort, and the Father of M. Jens, Rector of the College of the same Town, and a Learned Humanist, and a good Critick, as appears from his Lectiones Lucianeæ, Printed at the Hague in 8. in the Year 1699. I must not forget the Dutch Book Publish'd by M. Van Til in 1696, an Abstract of which may be seen in the (a) Acta eruditorum Lipsiensium. I shall speak (b) hereafter of a Dutch piece, that is just come out.

You'll find that the Principles of Spinoza are overthrown in all those Books; you'll find that at the very beginning of his Work, he advances false Propositions; and therefore, what he concludes from them afterwards can be of no Force. Let him run as much as he pleases: What can he do by running much, if he loses his way the first step he makes? 'Tis to be observed that his greatest Admirers acknowledge that if he had taught the Doctrines laid to his charge, he wou'd be an execrable Man; but they pretend he has not been understood. (c) Si igitur prædicti philosophi intentio vel opinio fuit naturam cum Deo hoc modo tam fœdè confundere, judico illum ab adversariis justè impetitum atque condemnatum, imo & memoriam ejus in omne ævum execrandam esse: attamen quia de alicujus intentione solus potest judicare intimus cordium perscrutator Deus, nobis nihil aliud restat nisi ut judicemus de opinione quæ continetur in scriptis quæ memoratus vir in lucem emisit; & licet inter illius adversarios habeantur etiam perspicacissimi, puto tamen eos horum scriptorum verum sensum minimè assecutos fuisse, quoniam in iis nihil reperio nisi id quod abunde satis indicat hunc virum minimè confundere velle Deum & naturam: saltem ego ita judico ex ejus scriptis, quæ si alii melius intelligant, quæ dixi indicia sunto, patrocinium illius hominis in me suscipere nolo, peto duntaxat ut quod aliis licuit, id & mihi liceat, nempe ut exprimam quem puto horum scriptorum genuinum sensum esse. These words taken from a Book of one of his Followers, Printed at (d) Utrecht in 1684, clearly shew that Spinoza has been so much confounded by his Adversaries, that the only way of replying to them, is like that of the Jansenists against the Jesuits, viz. That his Opinion is not such as it is supposed to be. This is the result of what his Apologist says. And therefore in order to shew that his Adversaries have attain'd a compleat Victory over him, we need only consider that he has actually taught what is imputed to him, or that he contradicted himself wretchedly, and knew not what he said. He is accused of teaching that all particular Beings are Modifications of God This is plainly his Doctrine, since his Fourteenth Proposition runs thus: Præter Deum nulla dari neque concipi potest substantia: And he affirms on the 15th, quicquid est, in Deo est, & nihil sine Deo esse neque concipi potest: Which he proves by this Reason, that every thing is a Mode or a Substance, and that Modes can neither Exist nor be Conceived without a Substance. When therefore an Apologist speaks in this manner: Were it true that Spinoza teaches that all particular Beings are Modes of the Divine Substance, I wou'd not deny that his Adversaries have obtain'd a compleat Victory over him; I only deny the Fact, I don't believe that the Doctrine they have well Confuted, is contain'd in his Book: I say when an Apologist speaks in such a manner, he had as good own that his Hero has been Defeated; for certainly the Doctrine in Question, is in Spinoza's Ethicks (e).

Here I must give an Instance of the Falsity of his First Propositions; it will be of some use to shew how easie it was to overthrow his System. His Fifth Proposition contains these Words, In rerum natura non possunt dari duæ aut plures substantiæ ejusdem naturæ seu attributi: This is his Argumentum Achilleum, and the most steady Foundation he builds upon; but at the same time, 'tis such a wretched Sophism, that no Scholar, who has read what is call'd parva logicalia, cou'd be perplexed with it. All those who teach School-Philosophy, begin with telling their Scholars what Genus, Species, and Individuum are. This Lecture is sufficient to put Spinoza to a stand. The following Distinction will do the business: Non possunt dari plures substantiæ ejusdem numero naturæ sive attributi, concedo; non possunt dari plures substantiæ ejusdem specie naturæ sive attributi, nego. What cou'd Spinoza say against this Distinction? Must he not admit of it with respect to Modifications? Is not Man, according to his Notion, a Species of Modification, and is not Socrates an Individuum of that Species? Wou'd he have us say that Benedict Spinoza, and the Jew, who attempted to thrust a Knife into his Body, were not two Modifications, but one only? It might be proved Invincibly, if his Proof for the Unity of a Substance was a good one; but since it proves too much, for it proves that there is but one Modification in the World, he ought to be one of the first who reject it. He ought therefore to know that the word Idem signifies two things, Identity and Similitude. We say that such a one was Born the same Day as his Father, and died the same Day with his Mother. With respect to a Man Born the first of March 1630, and who Died the 10th of February 1655, whose Father was Born the 1st of March 1610, and whose Mother Died the 10th of February 1655. the Proposition would be true in the two Senses of the Word same. It would signify like in the first Part of this Proposition, but not in the second. Pythagoras and Aristotle, according to Spinoza's System (f), were two like Modifications: Each of 'em had the whole Nature of a Modification, and yet the one differ'd from the other. The same may be said of two Substances: Each of 'em has the whole Nature, and all the Attributes of a Substance, and yet they are not one only Substance, but two. I shall set down what a Spaniard says against those, who, thro' a Sophism like that of Spinoza, thought that the Materia prima did not differ from God. (g) Quis non obstupescat fuisse ullo tempore aliquos adeò despientes, & in clarissima luce cæcutientes, qui Deum esse materiam primam & constanter assevérarent, & pugnaciter defenderent? At qua ratione tam stultam & impiam opinionem confirmabant? Si materia prima & Deus (inquiunt) non sunt idem, ergò differunt inter se: quæcunque autem differunt, ea necesse est aliquo differre, quare composita esse oportet ex eo in quo conveniunt, & ex eo in quo differunt; cùm igitur nec in Deo nec in materia prima ulla sit compositio, nulla quoque differentia inter ea esse poterit; quare necesse est esse unum & idem. Vide quam levi argumento in tam gravem errorem seu potiùs amentiam inducti sunt, non intelligentes discrimen quod est inter differens & diversum, quod etiam traditur ab Aristotele 10. lib. Metaphys. text. 12. Differunt enim inter se, quæcunque in aliquo conveniunt & in aliquo distinguuntur; ut homo & leo conveniunt in genere, quia uterque est animal, & distinguuntur per proprias differentias, alter enim est rationis particeps, alter verò expers: Diversa autem sunt quæcunque seipsis distinguuntur, quoniam sunt simplicissima. There are few Notions in our Mind clearer than that of Identity. I grant that it is Confounded, and very ill applied in the common Language: Nations, Rivers, &c. are accounted the same Nations, and the same Rivers during many Ages; the Body of a Man is accounted the same Body for the space of sixty Years or more: but those Popular and abusive Expressions don't deprive us of the certain Rule of Identity; they don't blot out of our Minds this Idea: A thing of which one may deny or affirm what cannot be denied, or affirm'd of another thing, is distinct from that other thing. When all the Attributes of Time, Place, &c. which belong to a thing, belong also to another thing, they are but one Being. But notwithstanding the clearness of these Ideas, 'tis hard to say how many great Philosophers have erred in that Point, and reduced all (h) Souls and Intelligences to the Unity, tho' they acknowledged that some were United to Bodies, to which others were not United, This Opinion was so

* See his 56 and 58 Letters.

(a) Page 331. & seqq. of the year 1696.

(b) In the Remark X.

(c) Autor anonymus Speciminis artis ratiocinandi naturalis & artificialis, pag. 111.

NOTE, That since the 1. edition of the Dictionary I have seen that Specimen artis ratiocinandi, &c. with the Author's Name and Picture. 'Tis M. Kuffelaer. That Book is ascribed to Spinoza himself, in Micrælius's Historia Ecclesiastica, pag. 1160. edit. 1699. Micrælius thought he was still living in the Year 1684. which is not true.

(d) There is in the Title Hamburgi, as in the Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.

SPINOZA knew not that the word Idem is sometimes used for simile.

(e) The Apologist I have quoted (viz. M. Kuffelaer) maintains with might and main, in the 14 Page, that there can be but one Substance in the Universe.

(f) Note, by the by, that by virtue of this Principle, Quæ sunt idem uni tertio, sunt idem inter se, Spinoza cannot deny that Pythagoras and Aristotle were but one Man: Erant enim idem uni tertio, nempe substantiæ Dei.

(g) Benedictus Pererius de communibus principiis, lib. 5. cap. 12. p. m. 309.

(h) See the Article Cesalpinus, Remark B, and what is said of the Scotists in the Article Abelard, Rema

Spirits, and there is no Philoſopher, who has (M) leſs Reaſon to deny it. Spinoza ought to acknowledge that every part of Nature Thinks, and that Man is not the moſt Knowing and moſt Intelligent Modification of the Univerſe; and therefore he muſt admit the Exiſtence of Demons. The Diſpute of his Followers about Miracles (N) is a meer Quibble, and a further Proof of the Unexactneſs of his Notions. 'Tis ſaid, he died fully perſuaded of his Atheiſm, and ſo common in Italy in the XVI. Century, that Pope Leo X. thought himſelf obliged to Condemn it, and to threaten with ſevere (a) Penalties all thoſe that ſhould Teach it. Here are the words of the Bull, dated the 19th of December 1513. Cum diebus noſtris Zizaniæ ſeminator nonnullos perniciosiſſimos errores in agro Domini ſeminare ſit auſus, de natura præſertim animæ rationalis, quod videlicet mortalis ſit aut unica in cunctis hominibus; & nonnulli temere Philoſophantes ſecundum ſaltem Philoſophiam verum eſſe aſſeverent: Contra hoc, ſacro approbante concilio, damnamus & reprobamus omnes aſſerentes, Animam intellectivam mortalem eſſe aut unicam in cunctis hominibus; aut hoc in dubium vertentes: cum illa——— immortalis, & pro corporum quibus infunditur multitudine ſingulariter multiplicabilis & multiplicata & multiplicanda ſit. This was lopping off a conſiderable Branch of Spinoziſm. I muſt obſerve, that ſome Philoſophers do ſtrangely confound the Idea of Identity; for they maintain,(b) that the parts of Matter are not diſtinct before they be actually ſeparated. Nothing can be more abſurd.

(M) Who has leſs reaſon to deny the Apparition of Spirits.] I have ſaid in another (c) place, that when 'tis ſuppos'd that a moſt perfect Mind has Created all things out of Nothing, without being determin'd to it by its Nature, but by a free Choice, the Exiſtence of Angels may be deny'd (d). If it be ask'd, Why ſuch a Creator has not produced other Spirits beſides Humane Souls? The Anſwer will be, That ſuch was his Will, ſtat pro ratione voluntas: No reaſonable Reply can be made to this Anſwer, unleſs the Fact be prov'd, I mean, that there are Angels. But when 'tis ſuppoſed, that the Creator did not act Freely, and exhauſted all his Power without any Rule or Choice, and that Thinking is one of his Attributes, 'tis a ridiculous thing to aſſert, that there are no Demons. According to this Syſtem, it ought to be believed, that the Thoughts of the Creator have been Modified, not only in the Bodies of Men, but alſo throughout the whole Univerſe; and that beſides the Animals, that are known to us, there is an Infinite number of 'em that are unknown to us, and exceed us in Knowledge and Malice, as much as we exceed in that reſpect Dogs and Oxen: For it were the moſt unreaſonable thing in the World, to fancy that a Man's Mind is the moſt perfect Modification that an Infinite Being, acting according to the whole extent of its Power, cou'd produce. We can conceive no Natural connexion between the Underſtanding and the Brain; and therefore we ought to believe, that a Creature without Brain may as well Think, as a Creature organized as we are. What is it then that cou'd move Spinoza to deny (e) what is ſaid of Spirits? Why did he believe that there is Nothing in the World, that can excite in our Machines the Sight of a Spectre, make a noiſe in a Room, and occaſion all the Magical Phænomena mention'd in Books? Was it becauſe he believed that no Being can Produce ſuch Effects unleſs it has as thick a Body as that of Man; and that therefore the Demons cou'd not ſubſiſt in the Air, nor come into our Houſes, nor ſteal away from our ſight? But ſuch a Thought would be Ridiculous: The bulk of Fleſh of which we are made up, is rather an Obſtacle than a help to Wit and Power. I mean a mediate Power, or the faculty of applying the moſt proper Inſtruments for the production of great Effects. The moſt ſurpriſing Actions of Men ariſe from that Faculty; as it appears from a thouſand Examples. An Engineer as little as a Dwarf, Lean and Pale, performs more things than Two Thouſand Savages, ſtronger than Milo, are able to perform. An animate Machine a thouſand times ſmaller than an Ant, might produce greater Effects than an Elephant; it might diſcover the inſenſible parts of Plants and Animals, and place it ſelf upon the Seat of the firſt Springs of our Brain, and open ſome Valves, by which means we might (f) ſee ſome Phantoms, hear ſome Noiſe, &c. If Phyſicians knew the firſt Fibres, and the firſt Combinations of the parts in Vegetables, Minerals, and Animals, they might alſo know the Inſtruments that are proper to put 'em out of Order, and might apply thoſe Inſtruments in ſuch a manner as to place thoſe parts in a new Order, whereby good Meat would be turn'd into Poiſon, and Poiſon into good Meat. Such Phyſicians would be incomparably more knowing than Hyppocrates; and were they little enough to get into the Brain and the Entrails, they might Cure any body, and alſo produce the moſt ſtrange Diſeaſes that can be ſeen. The whole may be brought to this Queſtion, Is it poſſible that an Inviſible Modification ſhould be more Knowing and Malicious than Man? If Spinoza denies it, he knows not the Conſequences of his Hypotheſis, and acts Raſhly and without Principles. One might make a long Diſſertation upon this Subject, wherein one might prevent all his Subterfuges and Objections. Compare with this what I have obſerved in the Articles of Lucretius and Hobbs.

(N) The Diſputes of the Spinoziſts about Miracles is a meer Quibble.] The common Opinion of Orthodox Divines is, That God produces Miracles immediately, whether he makes uſe of Creatures or not. Thoſe two Means undeniably ſhew that he is above Nature; for if he produces ſomething without the concourſe of other Cauſes, he does not want the help of Nature; and he never uſes them in a Miracle, but after he has diverted them from their uſual Courſe: And therefore he ſhews that they depend on his Will, that he ſuſpends their Power when he pleaſes, or applies it in a different manner from their ordinary Determination. The Carteſians, who make him the immediate Cauſe of all the effects of Nature, ſuppoſe, that when he works Miracles, he does not obſerve the general Laws he has Eſtabliſh'd, and that he applies Bodies quite otherwiſe than he would do, if he follow'd the general Laws. Whereupon they ſay, that if there were any general Laws, whereby God had engaged to move Bodies according to the Deſires of Angels, and if an Angel had deſired that the Waters of the Red Sea ſhou'd be divided, the paſſage of the Iſraelites would not be a Miracle properly ſo call'd. This Conſequence, which neceſſarily ariſes from their Principles, makes their Definition of a Miracle leſs convenient than it ſhould be; and therefore it were better for them to ſay, that all the Effects, contrary to the general Laws we know, are Miracles; and by this means the Plagues of Egypt, and ſuch other extraordinary Actions will be Miracles, properly ſpeaking. Now, in order to ſhew the Unſincerity, and the Illuſions of the Spinoſiſts upon this Head, I need only ſay, that when they deny the poſſibility of Miracles, they alledge this Reaſon, that God and Nature are the ſame Being; ſo that if God did ſomething againſt the Laws of Nature, he wou'd act againſt himſelf; which is impoſſible. Speak plainly, and without any ambiguity: Say, that the Laws of Nature being not made by a free Legiſlator, who knew what he did, but being the action of a blind and neceſſary Cauſe, nothing can happen that is contrary to thoſe Laws. You'll alledge then your own Poſition againſt Miracles: it will be a petitio principii; but however, you'll ſpeak roundly. Let us bring 'em off from this general Aſſertion, and ask 'em what they think of the Miracles mention'd in the Scripture. They will abſolutely deny all thoſe, which they cannot aſcribe to a Cunning Trick.

(a) Omnes hujuſmodi Erroris aſſertionibus inhærentes, veluti damnatiſſimas hæreſes ſeminantes per omnia ut deteſtabiles & abominabiles hæreticos & infideles, Catholicam fidem labefactantes, vitandos & puniendos fore decrevimus.

(b) Sir Kenelm Digby does alſo maintain it, if I am not miſtaken.

(c) In the Article Ruggeri.

(d) I ſuppoſe that the Authority of the Holy Scripture is laid aſide, and that a man declares he only argues like a Philoſopher.

(e) See his 56. 58. 60. Letters.

(f) Hence it is, that nothing can be more improper than to require that the Angels, when they appear, aſſume a Humane Body, or a Corps. They have no need of it. They need only move the Optick and Acouſtick Nerves, as they are moved by the Light, reflected from a Humane Body, and by the Air that comes out of the Mouth of a Man who ſpeaks.

and that he took ſome Precautions to conceal (O) his Inconſtancy, if there ſhou'd be occaſion for it. Had he argued conſequently, he wou'd not have call'd the Fear of Hell a Chimerical Thing. His Friends ſay that out of Modeſty, Teich. Not to inſiſt upon their Impudence in denying ſuch Facts, I ſhall only Argue againſt 'em by their own Principles. Don't you ſay that the Power of Nature is Infinite? But wou'd it be Infinite, if there was Nothing in the whole Univerſe that cou'd reſtore a dead Man to life? Wou'd it be Infinite, if there was but one way of forming Man, viz. that of Generation? Don't you ſay that the Knowledge of Nature is Infinite? You deny that Divine Underſtanding, in which we believe the Knowlede of all poſſible Beings to be re-united; but by diſperſing Knowledge you don't deny its Infinity. And therefore you ought to ſay that Nature knows all things, much in the ſame manner as we ſay that Man underſtands all Languages: One Man does not underſtand them all; but ſome underſtand one, and ſome another. Can you affirm that the Univerſe contains nothing, that knows the Conſtruction of our Bodies? If you affirm it, you Contradict your ſelves; you can ſay no longer that the Knowledge of God is Infinitely divided; the Contrivance of our Organs will be unknown to him. You muſt therefore acknowledge, if you argue conſequently, that ſome Modification knows it; you muſt acknowledge that Nature can revive a dead Body, and that your Maſter confounded his Ideas, and knew not the Conſequences of his Principles, when he ſaid (a), that if he cou'd believe the Reſurrection of Lazarus, he wou'd break his Syſtem to Pieces, and willingly imbrace the Chriſtian Faith.

This is ſufficient to ſhew that the Spinoziſts contradict their own Hypotheſis, when they deny the poſſibility of Miracles; I mean, (to avoid all Ambiquity) the Poſſibility of the Facts mention'd in the Holy Scripture.

(O) To conceal his Inconſtancy, if there ſhou'd be occaſion for it.] I mean that he took care, that in caſe the approach of Death, or his Illneſs ſhou'd make him ſpeak againſt his Syſtem, no ſuſpected Perſon ſhou'd be Witneſs of it. The thing is this; or at leaſt we find the following Account of it in a Printed Book (b). Perhaps it will be ſaid that Atheiſts "are not greedy of Praiſes. But "what can any Man do more than what was "done by Spinoza, a little before he died? The "thing is of a (c) freſh date, and I have it from "a great Man, who had it from good Hands. He "was the greateſt Atheiſt that ever lived, and "he grew ſo fond of certain Philoſophical Principles, that the better to Meditate upon 'em, he "confined himſelf to a cloſe Retirement, renouncing all the Pleaſures and Vanities of the World, "and minding nothing but thoſe abtruſe Meditations. Being upon the Point of Death, he "ſent for his Land-Lady, and deſired her not to "ſuffer that any Miniſter ſhou'd ſee him in that "Condition. His Reaſon for it was, as his Friends "ſaid, that he had a mind to die without diſputing, "and was afraid that the weakneſs of his Senſes "might make him ſay ſomething Inconſiſtent with "his Principles. That is, he was afraid it wou'd "be ſaid in the World that his Conſcience, awakening at the ſight of Death, had made him "renounce his Opinions. Can there be a more "Ridiculous and Extravagant Vanity, and a more "Fooliſh Paſſion for a wrong Notion of Conſtancy?

A Preface, which I have quoted (d) above, and which contains ſome Circumſtances of the Death of that Atheiſt, ſays nothing of this. I find in it that he told his Landlord (e) who was going to Church, come and ſpeak to me when the Sermon is over. But he died quietly before his Landlord return'd, and no Body ſaw him die but a Phyſician of Amſterdam (f). We are told in that Preface, that he was extremely deſirous to Immortalize his Name, and wou'd have willingly Sacrificed his Life to that Glory, tho' in order to obtain it, he had been torn in Pieces by the Mob. (g) Auro plane non inhiabat, aliquot delata ſibi Profeſſoris munera aliquoties non reſpuiſſet homo gloriæ avidior & nimis ambitioſus, qui vel cum Wittiis amicis ſuis crudeliter dilacerari ſubitus optavit, modo vita brevi gloria cujus fieret ſempiternam.

(P) He wou'd not have call'd the Fear of Hell a Chimerical Thing.] Thoſe, who believe that the World is not the work of God, and is not directed by a Being Simple, Spiritual, and Diſtinct from all Bodies, muſt at leaſt confeſs that there are ſome things endowed with Intelligence and Will, and jealous of their Power, which exerciſe ſome Authority over others, and Command and Puniſh them, and ſeverely Revenge themſelves. Is not the Earth full of ſuch things? Does not every Man know it by Experience? It wou'd be an unreaſonable thing to fancy that all Beings of ſuch a Nature are only upon Earth, which is but one Point if compared to the World. Muſt Reaſon, Wit, Ambition, Hatred, and Cruelty be upon Earth rather than any where elſe? Why ſo? Can any Reaſon be given for it? I don't think ſo. Our Eyes move us to believe that thoſe vaſt Spaces we call Heaven, which have ſuch rapid Motions, may as well Form Men as our Earth, and deſerve no leſs than the Globe we Inhabit to be divided into many Dominions. We don't know what paſſes there; but if we conſult only Reaſon, it will appear very probable, or at leaſt poſſible, that there are Thinking Beings in thoſe vaſt Spaces, which extend their Empire as well as their Light to our Globe. Our not ſeeing them is not a Proof that we are unknown or indifferent to them: Perhaps we are part of their Dominions: They make Laws, which they reveal to us by the Dictates of our Conſcience, and are very Angry with thoſe that tranſgreſs 'em. The Poſſibility of it is ſufficient to make Atheiſts uneaſy; and nothing but denying the Immortality of the Soul can make 'em Fearleſs. Otherwiſe thoſe Spirits might appear more dreadful than God himſelf. I explain my ſelf. There are ſome Men, who believe a God, a Paradiſe and a Hell; but they flatter themſelves, that the Infinite Goodneſs of the moſt Perfect Being does not permit him to Torment his own work for ever. He is the Father of all Men, ſay they; and therefore he Chaſtizes like a Father thoſe who diſobey him, and after he has made 'em ſenſible of their Faults, he reſtores them to his Favour. Origen argued in that manner. Others ſuppoſe that God will Annihilate the Rebellious Creatures, and be appeaſed with a (h) quem das finem Rex Magne laborum. They carry their Illuſion ſo far, as to think that the Everlaſting Torments mention'd in the Scripture, are only Comminatory. If ſuch Men were Ignorant of the Being of a God, and by conſidering what paſſes in our World, ſhou'd believe that there are Beings in the Univerſe that concern themſelves with Mankind, they cou'd not be eaſy when they come to die, unleſs they believed that the Soul is Mortal; for if they believed it to be Immortal, they might be afraid of falling under the Power of a Cruel Maſter, angry with them by Reaſon of their Actions; they cou'd not hope to come off after having been Tormented for ſome Years. A limited Being may be deſtitute of all manner of Moral Perfection; it may be like our Phalaris's and Nero's, a ſort of Men who cou'd have left an Enemy in a Dungeon for ever, had they been able to get an Eternal Authority. Will they hope that miſchievous Beings will not laſt for ever? But how many Atheiſts pretend that the Sun had no beginning, and will have no end? This is what I meant, when I ſaid that ſome Beings might appear more dreadful than God himſelf? A Man may flatter himſelf, when he conſiders that God is Infinitely Good, and

---

(a) I have been aſſured that he ſaid ſo to his Friends.

(b) Pre... di... ſes for Come... n. 181, 555, See Hi... re Ou... ges des ...ans, for ...b ...9 pag.

(c) The ...ſens ...les ...meres ...e ...ted in ...3.

(e) In the ...ark ... Ad an... dum ...orem ſacrum horis pomeridianis tendentem, finita, in ... concione, DEO volente, ad ſermones redibis. Sebaſt, ...holtus ubi ſupra pag. 6. (f) Id. ib.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Virgil. Æneid, lib. 1. v. 241.

Modesty, he desired that no Sect (Q) shou'd go by his Name. 'Tis not true that his Followers are very Numerous. Few People are suspected of adhering to his Doctrine, and among those, who are suspected of it, few have studied it; and among the latter, few apprehend it, and most of 'em are discouraged by the Difficulties and impenetrable Abstractions * that attend it. But the thing is this: All those, who have little Religion, and don't much scruple to own it, are call'd Spinozists. Thus in France all those, who are thought not to believe the Mysteries of the Gospel, are call'd Socinians, tho' most of 'em never read Socinus nor his Followers. I must observe, that Spinoza has not avoided what is unavoidable to all those, who frame Impious Systems; they secure themselves from some Objections, but they lie open to others that are more perplexing. If they can't be Orthodox, if they are so fond of disputing, it were better for them not to Dogmatize. But of all Atheistical Systems, none is less capable of deceiving than that of Spinoza; for as I have said before, it is contrary to the most Distinct Notions of our Minds. Objections throng in upon him; and he can make no Answers || but what are more obscure than his Assertions: And therefore, his Poison brings a Remedy along with it. He wou'd have been more dreadful, had he used all his skill to clear (R) an Hypothesis, that

* Which is the Reason why some are of Opinion that he ought not to be refuted. See the Nouvelles de la Rep. des lettres, for June 1684. art. 6. pag. m. 388, 389.

|| Confer Mr. Lo[illegible] You'll [illegible] the [illegible] Answers [illegible] from my Relating to the [illegible] Question.

Infinitely Perfect; and he may fear any thing from an Imperfect Being: He does not know whether its Anger will not last for ever. Every Body knows the choice (a) of the Prophet David.

To apply what has been said to a Spinozist, let us Remember that he is obliged by his Principle to acknowledge the Immortality of the Soul; for he looks upon himself as the Modification of a Being essentially Thinking. Let us Remember, that he cannot deny that some Modifications are Angry with others, put 'em to the Torture, make their Torments last as long as ever they can, send 'em to the Gallies for life, and wou'd make that Punishment last for ever, if Death did not prevent it. Tiberius, Caligula, and many others are Examples of such Modifications. Let us Remember that a Spinozist makes himself Ridiculous, if he does not acknowledge that the Universe is full of Ambitious, Morose, Jealous and Cruel Modifications; for since the Earth is full of 'em, there is no Reason to believe that the Air and the Heavens are not likewise full of 'em. Lastly, let us Remember, that the Essence of Humane Modifications does not consist in being Cloathed with a bulk of Flesh. Socrates was Socrates the day of his Conception, or soon after (b); whatever he had at that time may remain intire, when a Mortal Disease has put an end to the Circulation of the Blood, and the Motion of the Heart, in the Matter wherewith he was inlarged: And therefore he is after his Death the same Modification as he was during his Life, if we consider only what is essential to his Person: Death cannot therefore free him from the Justice or Caprice of his invisible Persecutors. They may follow him wherever he goes, and Torment him whatever visible Form he may assume.

These Considerations might be made use of to induce to the Practice of Virtue, even those who adhere to the Impious Doctrine of such Sects; for it stands to Reason that they shou'd be particularly afraid for having transgress'd the Laws revealed to their Conscience. 'Tis more likely that those Invisible Beings wou'd concern themselves with the Punishment of such Faults.

(Q) That no Sect shou'd go by his Name.] I shall set down the Words of the Preface of his Opera Posthuma, without curtailing them. Nomen Auctoris in libri fronte, & alibi literis duntaxat initialibus indicatum, non aliâ de causâ, quam quia paulò ante obitum expressè petiit, ne Nomen suum Ethicæ, cujus impressionem mandabat, præfigeretur; cur autem prohibuerit, nulla alia, ut quidem videtur, ratio est, quàm quia noluit, ut Disciplina ex ipso haberet vocabulum. Dicit etenim in Appendice quartæ partis Ethices capite vigesimo quinto, quòd, qui alios consilio; aut re juvare cupiunt, ut simul summo fruantur bono, minimè studebunt, ut Disciplina ex ipsis habeat vocabulum; sed insuper in tertiâ Ethices parte Affectuum Definit. XLIV. ubi quid sit ambitio explicat, eos, qui tale quid patrant, non obscurè, ut Gloriæ cupidos, accusat.

(a) Being to chuse either to be overcome by his Enemies or to be afflicted with a Plague sent from God, he answered the Prophet Gad. I am in in a great strait: Let us fall now into the hand of the LORD, (for his Mercies are great) and let me not fall into the hand of Man. II. Sam. XXIV. 14.

(b) Spinoza, who made Microscopes, shou'd have believed that Man is organized and animated in the Seed, and that therefore Socrates was Socrates before his Mother conceived him.

(R) To clear an Hypothesis, that is very much in vogue among the Chinese.] A Father of the Church advanced a thing, which perhaps wou'd not be excused at this day in a Philosopher, viz. that those, who deny the Deity or a Providence, alledge probable Reasons both for their Cause, and against their Adversaries. (c) Deos nonnulli esse abnegant: prorsus dubitare se alii an sint uspiam dicunt: alii vero existere, neque humana curare: immo alii perhibent, & rebus interesse mortalium, & terrenas administrare rationes. Cum ergo hæc ita sint, neque aliter fiat, quin sit unum ex omnibus verum, pugnant tamen argumentis omnes, neque singulis deest id, quod probabiliter dicant, sive cum suas res asserunt, sive cum alienis opinionibus contradicunt. If he was in the right, perhaps it were chiefly with respect to those, who suppose a great Number of Souls in the Universe Distinct one from another, each of which Exists by it self, and Acts by an inward and essential Principle. They are more Powerful one than another, &c. The Atheism so generally spread among the Chinese consists in that Doctrine. The Author of the following Passage tells us how he fancies they have by Degrees obscured true Notions. "(d) God, that "pure and perfect Being, is become at most the "Material Soul of the whole World, or of its fi"nest Part, which is Heaven. His Providence "and his Power became limited, tho' of a much "greater extent than the Power and Prudence "of Men——— The Chinese have in all times "ascribed Spirits to the four Parts of the World, "to the Stars, Mountains, Rivers, Plants, Towns, "and their Ditches, Houses, and their Hearths, in "a word to every thing. They don't say that "all Spirits are good; they acknowledge wicked "ones, which they take to be the immediate Cause "of the Evils and Miseries incident to Humane "Life——— (e) And therefore as the Soul of "Man was, in their Opinion, the cause of all the "Vital Actions of Man; in like manner they as"cribed a Soul to the Sun, to be the spring of "its Qualities and Motion. And because, accord"ing to this Principle, the Souls, that are dis"persed every where, produced in all Bodies the "Actions which appear'd Natural to those Bo"dies, this was sufficient in their Opinion to ex"plain the whole œconomy of Nature, and to sup"ply the Infinite Providence and Power, which "they admitted in no Spirit, no not in that of "Heaven. 'Tis true, that because it seems that "Man, using Natural Things for his Nourishment "and Conveniency, has some Power over Natu"ral Things; the Ancient Chinese, who ascribed in "Proportion a like Power to all Souls, supposed "that the Soul of Heaven acted with a Prudence, "and a Power incomparably greater than the "Prudence and Power of Men. But at the same "time, they acknowledged in the Soul of every "thing an inward Power, independent by its own "Nature of the Power of Heaven, and acting "sometimes against the designs of Heaven. Hea"ven govern'd Nature as a potent King, whom
" the

(c) Arnobius adversus Gentes lib. 1. pag. m. 12.

(d) La Loubere Relation de Siam, tom. 1. chap. 23. n. 2. pag. 503, 504. See the Article Sommona-Codom.

(e) Id. La Loubere ibid. n. 5. pag. 505, 506.

that is very much in vogue among the Chineſe, and very different from that which I have mention'd in the ſecond Remark of this Article. I have been juſt now informed of a curious Particular, viz. that after he had forſaken Judaiſm, he publickly profeſt Chriſtianity, and frequented the Aſſemblies of the Mennonites, or thoſe of the Arminians of Amſterdam *. Nay, he approved a (S) Confeſſion of Faith Communicated to him by a Friend.

What is ſaid of him in the Continuation of the (T) Menagiana is ſo falſe, that I wonder Menage's Friends did not perceive it. M. de Vigneul Marville wou'd have adviſed them to leave it out, had he been concern'd in the Edition of that work; for he has acquainted the Publick, † That there is reaſon to doubt of the Truth of that Fact. The Reaſons he alledges for his Doubt are very reaſonable: He had not been too forward, had he poſitively denied the thing. I ſhall take notice of a miſtake he has Committed in (V) the ſame Page. I muſt ſay ſomething concerning the Objections I have propoſed againſt the Syſtem of Spinoza I might add a very large Supplement to thoſe Objections, were it not that I conſider they are already but too long, conſidering the Nature of my work: This is not a proper place to engage in a formal diſpute; It was ſufficient for my deſign to make ſome general Obſervations in order to undermine the Foundations of Spinoziſm, and to ſhew that 'tis a Syſtem grounded upon ſuch a ſtrange Suppoſition, that it overthrows the Common Notions, which are the rule of Philoſophical Diſcuſſions. Whoever ſhews that this Syſtem is contrary to the moſt Evident, and the moſt Univerſal Axioms we have had hitherto, does certainly go the right way to confute it, tho' perhaps it is not ſo proper to reclaim the Old Spinoziſts, as if they

" the other Souls were to obey, and they were " generally forced to it; but ſome of 'em did " ſometimes diſpenſe themſelves from it ". I confeſs, 'tis an abſurd thing to ſuppoſe many Eternal Beings, independent one of another, and of an unequal Power; nevertheleſs, this Suppoſition appeared true to Democritus, Epicurus, and many other great Philoſophers. They ſuppoſed an Infinite quantity of ſmall Bodies of different figures, uncreated, ſelf-moving, &c. This Opinion (a) is ſtill very common in the Levant. Thoſe, who ſuppoſe the Eternity of Matter, ſay nothing that is more reaſonable than if they ſuppoſed the Eternity of an Infinite Number of Atoms; for if there can be two Beings Co-Eternal and Independent as to their Exiſtence, there may be a Hundred Thouſand Millions, and ſo in infinitum. Nay, they ought to ſay that the Number of 'em is Infinite; for matter tho' never ſo ſmall, contains Diſtinct Parts. And 'tis to be obſerved that all the Ancients denied the Creation of Matter; for they never departed from the Axiom, ex nihilo nihil fit. And therefore they were not ſenſible that 'tis an abſurd thing, to acknowledge an Infinity of Subſtances Co-Eternal, and independent one of another as to Exiſtence. However abſurd that Hypotheſis may be, it is not liable to the great Inconveniencies of Spinoziſm. It wou'd Account for many Pænomena, by aſſigning to every thing an active Principle, a more Powerful one to ſome, and a leſs Powerful to others; or if their Power was equal, it might be ſaid that thoſe, which prevail, make a greater Combination. I don't know whether any Socinian did ever ſay or believe, that the Souls of Men, not Being made out of nothing, Exiſt, and Act of themſelves. Their Liberty of Indifference wou'd manifeſtly flow from thence.

(S) Nay, he approved a Confeſſion of Faith.] One Jarig Jelis his Intimate Friend, being ſuſpected of Heterodoxy, thought himſelf obliged to publiſh a Confeſſion of his Faith for his Vindication. He ſent it to Spinoza, and deſired him to write to him his Opinion of it. Spinoza made anſwer, that he had read it with Pleaſure, and found nothing in it that wanted to be altered by him, Domine ac amice Clariſſime: ſcripta tua ad me miſſa cum voluptate perlegi, ac talia inveni ut nihil in illis mutare poſſim. That Confeſſion of Faith is in Dutch, and was Printed (b) in the Year 1684.

(T) What is ſaid of him in the Continuation of the Menagiana is ſo falſe.] The Story runs thus. " (c) " I have heard ſay that Spinoza died for fear of " being ſent to the Baſtille. He came into France " at the Sollicitation of two Perſons of Quality " who had a mind to ſee him. M. de Pomponne " was informed of it; and being a Miniſter very " Zealous for Religion, he did not think it proper to ſuffer Spinoza in France, where he might " have done a great deal of Miſchief; and to prevent it, he reſolved to have him ſent to the Baſtille. " Spinoza having notice of it, made his eſcape " in the diſguiſe of a Cordelier; but I don't " Warrant the Truth of this laſt Circumſtance. " What is certain is, that many Perſons, who " ſaw him, have told me that he was a little Man, of a Yellowiſh Complexion, that he " had an Ill look, and a Character of Reprobation in his Face ". The laſt part of this Paſſage may be true; for, beſides that Spinoza was originally come from Portugal or Spain, as his Name ſufficiently ſhews, I have heard ſome Perſons, who had ſeen him, ſay the ſame thing of his Complexion. But the firſt Part of this Story is a wretched Falſity: From whence one may judge how many Lies are told in ſuch Aaſſemblies of M. Menage's Mercuriales *, whereof there are many at Paris and in other Cities.

(V) A fault M. de Vigneul Marville has committed in the ſame Page.] " (d) The Jew or rather the " Atheiſt mention'd by M. Huet in the Preface of " his Demonſtratio Evangelica, without naming him, " who occaſion'd his Writing that Learned Book, " is the Famous Benenict Spinoza, with whom he had " ſome Converſations about Religion at Amſterdam ". The Jew, with whom M. Huet had ſome Conferences at Amſterdam, is Manaſſes Ben Iſrael, whom he Names in the Latin Poem of his journey into Sweden.

> Altera (e) lux ſpectare dedit myſteria gentis
> Judææ, ductor Judæum & ipſe Manaſſes.
> Aſt adducta ſecans dirus præputia culter
> Dum tenet attentum, & ſublati inſania ritus,
> Ecce abaci, quo inferre pii cæleſtia Moſis
> Scripta ſolent, ſummo extremum limbum pede tango
> Inſcius; inſueto cuncti fremuere tumultu:
> Diffugio veritus damnoſi vulnera cultri.

The Character M. Huet gives of that Jew in the Preface of his Demonſtratio Evangelica, does not agree with Benedict Spinoza, who never made a figure among the Jews; for he left 'em being very Young, and after many Conteſtations, which made him Odious. Unicum ſelegi de multis argumentum, ſays M. Huet (f), ex Propbetiarum eventu conflatum, quod propoſui hoc Opere, & quo olim ad retundendam Judæi cujuſdam, viri acuti ſane & ſubtilis, contumaciam uſus ſum. Cum enim eſſem Amſtelodami, they were convinced that the Propoſitions of Spinoza are contrary to one another. They wou'd be leſs ſenſible of their Prejudices, were the forced to confeſs that he does not always agree with himſelf, that his Proofs are wrong, that he does not prove what wants to be proved, that his Concluſions are not exact, &c. This Method of confuting him by ſhewing the † abſolute Defects of his Work, and the relative Defects of its Parts compared one with another, has been well managed * by ſome of thoſe, who writ againſt him. I have been juſt now informed that the Author of a ſmall (X) Dutch Book, Printed within theſe few days, makes uſe of it with great Strength and Ability. But to ſpeak of the Supplement I deſign to give: It conſiſts in an Explanation of the Objection (Y) I have grounded on the Immutability of God,

---

* See in Remark ΔΔ.

† Vigneul Marville Mélang. tom. 2. p. 320. Dutch Edit.

(a) See the Anonymous Book Printed in the Year 1690. at Amſterdam, and intitled, Philoſophia vulgaris refutata.

(b) At Amſterdam. The title is A Catholick Chriſtian Confeſſion of Faith in a Letter to N. by

(c) Suite du Menagiana pag. Dutch

* Conferences held in M. Menage's houſe every Wedneſday; which is the Reaſon why they were ſo call'd.

(d) Vigneul Marville Mêlang. tom. 2. p. 320. Dutch Edit.

(e) Petrus Daniel Huetius poem. pag. 53. 54. edit. Ultraj. 1700.

(f) Id. In præfat. demonſtr. Evangelica pag. m. 3.

† I underſtand by this word the Defects, which do not proceed from Spinoza's aſſerting things contrary to the Maxims, which other Philoſophers generally acknowledge to be true.

* See Wittichius's Anti-Spinoza, or the Extracts of 'em in the Acta Eruditor. 1690. pag. 346. & ſeq. and in the 19. Vol. of the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, pag. 123. &c.

dami, & Judæorum, quorum magna eſt hic in locis frequentia, ritus ac myſteria penitius introſpicere vellem, ad eum deductus ſum, qui tum inter illos peritiſſimus, ac totius Judaicæ diſciplinæ conſultiſſimus habebatur. You ſee he ſpeaks of a remote time, and of the moſt famous Rabbies of Amſterdam: And 'tis to be obſerved, that this Paſſage is to be found at the beginning of a large Book in Folio, which came out in the Year (a) 1678, and whoſe Compoſition and Impreſſion took up ſome Years. I think that the time M. Huet denotes by the word olim is the Year 1652. in which he Travell'd into Sweden; but if I was miſtaken in this particular, it were ſtill true that he means Manaſſes Ben Iſrael, who died in the Year 1659, and not Spinoza, who, as I ſaid before, never kept a conſiderable rank in the Synagogue.

(X) The Author of a ſmall Dutch Book, Printed (b) within theſe few days.] He only calls himſelf N. N. Philalethes: The Title of his Book comes to this, A Demonſtration of the weakneſs of Spinoza's Argument, concerning the only abſolutely Infinite Subſtance. He lays down as matter of Fact: 1. That this Propoſition is the Foundation, on which Spinoziſm is built, viz. That there is but one Subſtance, and that it is abſolutely Infinite. 2. That from ſuch a Principle Spinoza drew this conſequence, That particular Beings are only Modifications of that abſolutely Infinite Subſtance. The Author maintains that this Principle being conteſted by every Body, ſhou'd have been proved with all imaginable care, and yet that Spinoza gave no Proof of it. I cou'd give ſome Extracts of that Piece, for I have ſeen a French Tranſlation of it in Manuſcript; but becauſe 'tis but a ſmall Book, and in all Probability it will be Printed in French or Latin, before my Dictionary comes out, it were a needleſs thing to enlarge upon it.

(a) The 1. Edition of the Demonſtratio Evangelica was publiſh'd in 1678. tho' the Year 1679. is in the Title Page.

(b) At Amſterdam for Bernard Viſcher 1701.

(Y) An Explanation relating to the Objection which I have grounded upon God's Immutability.] You'll find that Objection above in the Remark I. Number II. I muſt confirm it, ſince ſome Perſons maintain that the Weakneſs of it ſufficiently appears, if it be conſidered that no Alteration happens to the God of Spinoza, as it is a Subſtance Infinite, Neceſſary, &c. Tho' the face of the whole World ſhou'd change at every Moment, tho' the Earth ſhou'd be reduced to duſt, the Sun darken'd, and the Sea become a luminous Body, there will only be a Change of Modifications: The only Subſtance will always remain a Subſtance Infinite, Extended, Thinking, and ſo with all Subſtantial or Eſſential Attributes. When they ſay this, they ſay nothing but I have (c) already confuted before hand: But the better to ſhew their Illuſion, I muſt obſerve here that they diſpute againſt me, as if I had maintain'd that, according to Spinoza, the Deity is ſucceſſively Annihilated and Produced again. This is not what I Object, when I ſay that he makes God Subject to Change, and diveſts him of his Immutability. I don't confound, as they do, the Notion of Things, and the ſignification of Words: What I underſtand by the word Change is what every Body underſtands by it; not the Annihilation and total Deſtruction of a thing, but its going thro' ſeveral States, the Subject of the Accidents it ceaſes to have, and of thoſe it begins to acquire, remaining the ſame. The Learned, and the Illiterate, the Mythologiſts and the Philoſophers, the Poets and thoſe who ſtudied Phyſicks, never differ'd about this Notion, and the ſignification of this Word. The fabulous Metamorphoſes, ſo much ſung by Ovid, and the true Generations explain'd by Philoſophers, equally ſuppoſed the Preſervation of the Subſtance, and kept it immutably as the ſucceſſive Subject of the old and new Form. Theſe Notions have been only confounded by the unhappy diſputes of Chriſtian Divines: And yet it muſt be confeſt that the moſt Ignorant Miſſionaries come into the right way again, when the Queſtion is no longer about the Euchariſt. If you aſk 'em, upon any other occaſion, what's meant by the Change, Converſion, Tranſelementation, and Tranſubſtantiation of a thing into another; they'll anſwer you, the meaning of it is, for inſtance, that Wood becomes Fire, that Bread becomes Blood, and Blood Fleſh, and ſo on. They don't think then of the improper Expreſſions conſecrated to the Controverſy of the Euchariſt, that the Bread is Converted and Tranſubſtantiated into the Body of our Saviour. This way of ſpeaking does by no means agree with the Doctrine deſign'd to be explain'd by it: 'Tis as if one ſhou'd ſay that the Air of a Cask is Transformed, Changed, Converted, and Tranſubſtantiated into the Wine poured into the Cask. The Air goes ſome where elſe, and the Wine ſucceeds it in the ſame place: One of 'em is not in the leaſt Metamorphoſed into the other. The Myſtery of the Euchariſt, as it is explain'd by the Roman Catholicks, is not a Metamorphoſis neither: The Subſtance of the Bread is Annihilated; the Body of CHRIST takes its place, and is not the Subject of Inherence of the Accidents of that Bread preſerved without their Subſtance. But I repeat it again, this is the only caſe wherein the Miſſionaries make a wrong uſe of the words Change, Converſion, or Tranſelementation of a Body into another: In all other things, they ſuppoſe with the reſt of Mankind, 1. That it is eſſential to a Transformation, that the Subject of the Forms, that are deſtroyed, ſhou'd remain under the New Forms: 2. That tho' the Subject be preſerved, it undergoes an Internal Change, properly ſo call'd, and inconſiſtent with an immutable Being. The Spinoziſts ſhou'd therefore leave off putting a new ſenſe upon words, contrary to the Notions of all Men. If they have any Sincerity left, they muſt confeſs, that according to their Syſtem, God is Subject to all the Viciſſitudes, and Revolutions, the materia prima of Ariſtole is liable to, in the Syſtem of the Peripateticks. But cou'd any thing be more abſurd than to maintain, that ſuppoſing Ariſtotle's Doctrine, Matter is a Subſtance, that never undergoes any Change?

(c) See the 2. Paragraph of the Remark I.

But in order to puzzle the Spinoziſts, 'tis but deſiring them to give a Definition of Change. They muſt define it in ſuch a manner, that it will not differ from the total Deſtruction of a Subject, or will agree with that only Subſtance, which they call God. If they define it in the firſt manner, they'll make themſelves more Ridiculous ſtill than the Tranſubſtantiators; and if they define it in the the ſecond manner, they'll give up the Cauſe.

I add, that the Reaſon they alledge to elude my Objections, proves too much; for if it was a good one, they muſt needs teach that there never was, nor will be any Change in the Word, and that all manner of Change is impoſſible. Let us prove this Conſequence. The Reaſon, ſay they, why God is Immutable, is becauſe, as he is a Subſtance, and an Extenſion, he neither is not

God, and in the Examination of this Queſtion, Whether it be true, that I have not (Z) at all apprehended Spinoza's Doctrine; for I have been told that many Perſons think ſo. It were a very ſtrange thing, ſince I have only undertaken can be ſubject to any Change. He is an extended Subſtance under the Form of Fire, as well as under the Form of Wood, which is converted into Fire, and ſo with other things. I'll prove to them by this very Reaſon, that the Modifications themſelves are Immutable. Man is, according to their Syſtem, a Modification of God; they own that Man is ſubject to Change, ſince he is ſometimes Merry and ſometimes Melancholy; ſometimes he wills one thing, and ſometimes he wills it not. This is no Change, will I ſay; for he is as much a Man when Merry as when Melancholy: The Eſſential Attributes of Man remain immutably in him, whether he be willing to ſell his Houſe, or to keep it. Let us ſuppoſe the moſt inconſtant Man in the World, and ſuch as might fitly apply to himſelf theſe Verſes of Horace:

(a) Mea--- pugnat ſententia ſecum.
Quod petiit, ſpernit: repetit, quod nuper omiſit,
Æſtuat, & vitæ diſconvenit ordine toto.
Diruit, ædificat, mutat quadrata rotundis.

(a) Horat. epiſtol. 1. lib. 1.

Or who might, more than any body elſe, be the true Original of theſe Verſes of M. Deſpreaux:

Mais (b) l'homme ſans arreſt, dans ſa courſe inſenſée,
Voltige inceſſamment de penſée en penſée,
Son cœur toujours flottant entre mille embarras,
Ne ſçait ni ce qu'il veut, ni ce qu'il ne veut pas.
Ce qu'un jour il abhorre, en l'autre il le ſouhaitte.
. . . .
. . . .
Voila l'Homme en effet. Il va du blanc au noir.
Il condamne au matin ſes ſentimens du ſoir.
Importun à tout autre, à ſoi-même incommode,
Il change à tous momens d'eſprit comme de mode;
Il tourne au moindre vent, il tombe au moindre choc.
Aujourd'hui dans un caſque, & demain dans un froc.

(b) Deſpreaux Sat. 8. pag. m. 48.

Let us ſuppoſe a Man, who has ſincerely profeſt all Religions in leſs than two Years: Let us ſuppoſe that he is gone through all the Conditions of Life; that he has been a Merchant, a Soldier, and a Monk, and then a Married Man; that he Divorced his Wife, and then turn'd Regiſter, Financier, and Clergy man, &c. If the Spinoziſts tell him, you have been very Inconſtant: I? Will he ſay; you are miſtaken, I have never changed, I have been as conſtantly a Man ever ſince I was born, as a Mountain has been a Mountain. What could they reply to that Argument ad hominem? Is it not moſt evident that the whole Eſſence of Humane Species remains in Man, whether he wills the ſame things, whether he hates to day, what he loved Yeſterday, and daily changes his Inclinations?

But to make uſe of an Example very proper for a Country, the Inhabitants whereof are uſed to the Sea, let us ſuppoſe that a Spinoziſt, at his return from Batavia, ſhould ſay that his Voyage has been longer than uſually, becauſe the Winds changed almoſt every day. He might be anſwered, you are miſtaken, the Winds never Change. Indeed one may ſay that they blow ſometimes North, ſometimes South, &c. but they always retain the Eſſence of Wind; and therefore they do not Change, as they are Winds, and remain as Immutable as your only Subſtance of the World: For you ſay it is Immutable, becauſe it never changes its State as to its Eſſential Properties. No more does the Wind change its State, as it is Wind, it always retains the whole Nature and Eſſence of it; and therefore it is as Immutable as your Deity.

I go farther, and I ſay, that even when a Man is Burnt alive, no alteration happens to him. He was a Modification of the Divine Nature when alive, and is he not ſo in the Flames, or under the form of Aſhes? Could he loſe the Attributes that conſtitute a Modification? Could he go thro' any Change as he is a Modification? If he changed in that reſpect, may not one affirm that Flame is not a Mode of Extenſion? Could Spinoza affirm it without contradicting it himſelf, and deſtroying his Syſtem? This is ſufficient to ſhew that thoſe are miſtaken, who pretend I have not proved that this Syſtem makes God ſubject to Change. My Argument cannot be denied, without aſſerting that Modifications themſelves are Immutable, and that no Alteration happens in Man's Thoughts, nor in the diſpoſition of Matter; which is a moſt abſurd thing, and contrary to the Doctrines acknowledged by the Spinoziſts; for they dare not deny that the Modifications of the Infinite Subſtance are ſubject to Corruption and Generation.

Let us deſire of 'em to grant us, for a while, by a dato non conceſſo, as the Logicians ſpeak, that Socrates is a Subſtance. They muſt then acknowledge that each particular Thought of Socrates is a Modality of his Subſtance. But is it not true that Socrates proceeding from affirming to denying Changes its Thought, and that it is a real and internal Change? And yet Socrates remains ſtill a Subſtance, and an Individuum of Humane Species, whether he Affirms or Denies, whether he Wills or Rejects a thing. And therefore, tho' he does not Change, as he is a Man, he cannot be ſaid to be Immutable; and one may very well ſay that he is Mutable, and actually Changes, ſince his Modifications are not always the ſame. But let us grant to the Spinoziſts in our turn, by a dato non conceſſo, that Socrates is but a Modification of the Divine Subſtance; let us grant that his relation to that Subſtance is, as in the common Opinion, the Relation of Socrates's Thoughts to the Subſtance of Socrates. Since the Change of thoſe Thoughts is a good Reaſon to maintain that Socrates is not an Immutable Being, but rather an inconſtant and variable Subſtance, it ought to be concluded that the Divine (||) Subſtance does actually undergo a Change and a Variation, properly ſo call'd, whenever Socrates, one of its Modifications, changes his State. 'Tis therefore a moſt evident Truth that the Change of a Being, as to its Modifications, is ſufficient to ſay, that it does actually and really undergo ſeveral Changes; and if it was further required that it ſhould loſe its Eſſential Attributes, Annihilation or a total Deſtruction would be groſly confounded with Change or Alteration. See the Margin (†).

(||) Note, that Ariſtotle de prædicam. cap. 5. reckons among the Properties of a Subſtance, to remain the ſame in number under contrary qualities. Μάλιστα δὲ ἴδιον τῆς οὐσίας δοκεῖ εἶναι τὸ, ταὐτὸν καὶ ἓν ἀριθμῷ ὂν, τῶν ἐναντίων εἶναι δεκτικόν. Maxime vero ſubſtantiæ proprium hoc eſſe videtur, IDEM UNUMQUE NUMERO permanens contrariorum eſſe ſuſceptivum.

(†) One may ſee in the Janua cœlorum reſerata pag. 127. & ſeq. ſeveral Remarks upon what wou'd be ſufficient to infer the generability and corruptability of the Divine Nature, if the Fathers had taught what is imputed to them.

(Z) Whether it be true, that I have not at all apprehended Spinoza's Doctrine; for I have been told, that many Perſons think ſo.] I have it from ſeveral Hands; but no body could tell me the Reaſons of thoſe who make ſuch a Judgment of my Diſpute: And therefore I can neither formally Confute 'em, nor Examin whether they are in the right. All that I can do, is to juſtify my ſelf in a general manner; and I think I may ſay, that if I have not underſtood the Propoſition I undertook to Confute, 'tis not my fault. I wou'd not be ſo poſitive, if I had writ a Book againſt the whole Syſtem of Spinoza. Doubtleſs, I ſhould not have always underſtood him; and 'tis not likely he himſelf underſtood every part of his Doctrine, and could make all the Conſequences of his Hypotheſis Intelligible. But ſince I have confin'd my ſelf to (c) a ſingle Propoſition, expreſs'd in few words, which appear clear and preciſe, and are the Foundation of the whole Structure, I muſt have underſtood it, or it contains ſome Ambiguities altogether unbecoming the Founder of a Syſtem. However it be, I need not be uneaſie upon this Account, becauſe the ſenſe I put upon that Propoſition of Spinoza is the ſame his other Adverſaries have put upon it, and becauſe the beſt Anſwer his (d) Followers can make, is that he has not been underſtood. Notwithſtanding this Objection, the laſt Author (e), who writ againſt him, underſtands the Propoſition in Queſtion as I do; which ſhews that their Accuſation appears very ill grounded.

But to be more particular, what I ſuppoſe in my Objections amounts to this. I ſay, that Spinoza taught, 1. That there is but one Subſtance in the Univerſe.

(c) See the Remark L.

(d) See the ſame Remark.

(e) See the Remark X.

dertaken to Confute the Propoſition, which is the Baſis of his Syſtem, and very clearly expreſs'd. I have confin'd my ſelf to the Confutation of what he clearly lays down as his Firſt Peinciple, viz. That God is the only Subſtance that Univerſe. 2. That this Subſtance is God. 3. That all particular Beings, Material Extenſion, the Sun, the Moon, Plants, Beaſts and Men, their Motions, Ideas, Imaginations, and Deſires are Modifications of God. Now I ask the Spinoziſts whether their Maſter taught thoſe things or not? If he taught 'em, it cannot be ſaid that I did not underſtand the State of the Queſtion; for 'tis this very Doctrine I have confuted. I am therefore ſafe, and whoever ſays that I have undertaken to Confute what I did not apprehend, is miſtaken. If it be ſaid that Spinoza does not teach the three things above mention'd, I ask why he expreſſed himſelf exactly as thoſe wou'd do, who ſhou'd be extremely deſirous to make the Reader believe that they teach thoſe three things? Is it a fair and laudable thing to uſe the common Style, without annexing to the words the ſame Idea's other Men annext to them, and without informing the Reader of the New Senſe put upon 'em? But in order to diſcuſs the matter, let us enquire wherein the Miſtake may lie. I cannot have been Miſtaken as to the word Subſtance; for I have not Confuted Spinoza upon that Head; I have admitted what he ſuppoſes, that a Thing cannot be a Subſtance, unleſs it be independent of all other Cauſes, or have an Eternal and Neceſſary Exiſtence: I don't think I was miſtaken in ſaying, that according to Spinoza, God only has the Nature of a Subſtance; and therefore I believe that if there was any Miſtake in my Objections, it would be only in putting a different ſenſe upon the words, Modalities, Modifications, Modes, from that of Spinoza. But I repeat it again, If I was miſtaken in it, it would be his Fault: I underſtand thoſe words as they have been always underſtood, or at (a) leaſt, as they are underſtood by all the New Philoſophers; and I had all the reaſon in the World to believe he took 'em in that Senſe, ſince he gave no notice of the contrary. 'Tis the General Doctrine of Philoſophers, that the Idea of Being contains two Species under it, viz. Subſtance and Accident, and that a Subſtance ſubſiſts by it ſelf, ens per ſe ſudſiſtens, and that an Accident ſubſiſts in another Being, ens in alio. They add, that ſubſiſting by one ſelf, ſignifies only not depending upon a Subject of Inheſion; and becauſe, according to their Notions, this agrees with Matter, Angels, and Humane Souls; they admit two ſorts of Subſtance, one of which is Uncreated, and the other Created; and they ſubdivide the Created Subſtance into two Species. One of thoſe two Species is Matter; the other our Souls. As for Accidents, they all believed before the Unhappy Diſputes, which have divided Chriſtianity, that they do ſo eſſentially depend upon their Subject, that they cannot ſubſiſt without it. The Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation confounded that Notion, and made the Philoſophers ſay, that an Accident may ſubſiſt without a Subject. They cou'd not avoid ſaying ſo, ſince they believed on the one hand, that after the Conſecration, the Bread of the Euchariſt ſubſiſted no longer, and they ſaw on the other hand, that all the Accidents of Bread ſubſiſted as before. Wherefore, they admitted a real diſtinction between a Subſtance and its Accidents, and a mutual ſeparability between thoſe two ſorts of Beings, by virtue of which, each of 'em could ſubſiſt without the other. But ſome of 'em acknowledged ſtill that there are ſome Accidents, whoſe Diſtinction from their Subject is not real, and which cannot ſubſiſt without it. They call'd thoſe Accidents Modes (b). Carteſius, Gaſſendus, and in general, all thoſe who have forſaken the Scholaſtick Philoſophy, deny that an Accident can be ſeparated from its Subject, ſo as to ſubſiſt after its Separation, and they give to all Accidents the Nature of thoſe that were call'd Modes, and uſe the Words Mode, Modality, or Modification, rather than that of Accident. Now ſince Spinoza was a great Carteſian, 'tis reaſonable to think that he put the ſame Senſe upon thoſe Words as Carteſius did. If it be ſo, he underſtands by the Modification of a Subſtance only a Manner of Being, which has the ſame relation to a Subſtance as Figure, Motion, Reſt and Situation have to Matter, and Pain, Affirmation, Love, &c. to the Soul of Man. For this is what the Carteſians call Modes. They acknowledge no other Modes; from whence it appears that they have kept the old Notion of Ariſtotle, (c) according to which, an Accident is of ſuch a Nature, that it makes no part of its Subject, and cannot Exiſt without it, and the Subject can loſe it without loſing its Exiſtence. All this agrees with Roundneſs, Motion, and Reſt, with reſpect to a Stone, and likewiſe with Pain, and Affirmation with reſpect to the Soul. If Spinoza annexed the ſame Idea to what he calls Modification of Subſtance, my Objections are certainly juſt; I have confuted him according to the true ſignification of his Words, I have underſtood his Doctrine, and Confuted it according to its true ſenſe. In a word, there is no ground for the Accuſation I inquire into. But if he had the ſame Notion of Matter or Extenſion, and of Humane Souls, as Carteſius had, and yet would not give the quality of Subſtance to Extenſion or to our Souls, becauſe he believed that a Subſtance is a Being that depends upon no Cauſe; I confeſs I have aſcribed to him an Opinion which was none of his. This is what remains to be examin'd.

Having once laid down, that a Subſtance is what Exiſts by it ſelf, as independently upon an efficient Cauſe, as upon a material one, or a Subject of Inheſion, he could not ſay that Matter and Humane Souls are Subſtances: and becauſe, according to the common Doctrine, he divided Being only into two Species, viz. into Subſtance and Modification of Subſtance; he ſhou'd have ſaid that Matter and Humane Souls are only Modifications of Subſtance. No Orthodox Man will deny that, according to this Definition of Subſtance, there is but one Subſtance in the World, and that this Subſtance is God. Then the only thing that will remain to be known, is, whether he ſubdivides the Modification of Subſtance into two Species. If he uſes ſuch a Subdiviſion, and if he means by one of thoſe two Species, what the Carteſians and other Chriſtian Philoſophers call created Subſtance, and by the other Species what they call Accident or Mode; there will only be a Diſpute about words between him and them, and it will be a very eaſie thing to make his whole Syſtem appear Orthodox, and to put an end to his Sect: for a Man is a Spinoziſt only becauſe he believes that Spinoza has utterly deſtroyed the Syſtem of the Chriſtian Philoſophers, and the Exiſtence of an immaterial God, who governs all things with a Perfect Liberty. From whence we may conclude by the by, that the Spinoziſts and their Adverſaries do perfectly agree about the ſenſe of the word Modification of Subſtance. All of 'em believe that Spinoza meant by it, a Being of the ſame nature with what the Carteſians call Modes, and that he never underſtood by that word a Being, which has the Properties, or the Nature of what we call Created Subſtance.

Thoſe, who wou'd maintain, by all means, that I am miſtaken, might ſuppoſe that Spinoza rejected only the name of Subſtance given to Beings that depend upon another Cauſe, as to their Production, Preſervation, and Operation, in fieri, in eſſe, & in operari, as they ſpeak in the Schools. They might ſay that tho' he retain'd all the reality of the thing, he avoided the uſe of the word, becauſe he believed that a Being ſo dependent upon its Cauſe, could not be call'd ens per ſe ſubſiſtens, ſubſiſting by it ſelf, which is the Definition of Subſtance. I Anſwer, as I have done above, that if it be ſo, there is only a Diſpute about Words between him and other Philoſophers, and that I ſhall willingly confeſs my Miſtake, if it appears that

Spinoza

(a) I uſe this Reſtriction becauſe of the difference there is between the Doctrine of the Modern Peripateticks, and that of the Carteſians, Gaſſendiſts, &c. about the nature of Accidents. 'Tis a notable difference; but all comes to the ſame with reſpect to the Objections againſt Spinoza.

(b) Such as Union, Action, Duration. and Ubication.

that is in the Univerſe, and that all other Beings are only Modifications of that Subſtance. If we don't underſtand what he meant by it, 'tis doubtleſs, becauſe he put a new Senſe upon his Words, without giving notice of Spinoza was a Carteſian; but that he has been more nice than Carteſius in the application of the Word Subſtance, and that all the Impiety laid to his charge, lies only in a miſunderſtanding. He only meant what is to be found in the Books of (a) Divines, viz. That the Immenſity of God fills up Heaven and Earth, and all imaginary Spaces in Infinitum, and conſequently that his Eſſence locally ſurrounds all other Beings, ſo that 'tis in (b) him we have Life and Motion, and that he has produced nothing out of himſelf; for ſince he fills up all Spaces, he could not place any thing but in himſelf, there being nothing out of him. Beſides, 'tis well known, that no Being can Exiſt without him; and therefore 'tis true, that the Properties of the Carteſian Modes agree with what is call'd Created Subſtances. Thoſe Subſtances are in God, and cannot Exiſt out of him and without him. 'Tis therefore no wonder if Spinoza call'd them Modifications; but on the other hand, he did not deny that there was a real Diſtinction between them, and that each of 'em Conſtituted a particular Principle of Actions or Paſſions, in ſuch a manner, that one of 'em does what the other does not; and that when one denies of one of 'em what is affirm'd of the other, 'tis according to the Rules of Logick, and no body can object to Spinoza, that it follows from his Principles, that two contradictory Propoſitions are True of one and the ſame Subject at the ſame time.

(a) Note, that the Carteſian Divines explain God's Immenſity in another manner.

(b) Ἐν αὐτῷ γὰρ ζῶμεν, καὶ κινούμεθα, καὶ ἐσμέν. In ipſo enim vivimus, & movemur, & ſumus. Act. Apoſtol. cap. 17. v. 28.

This Diſcourſe ſignifies nothing; and in order to reſolve the Difficulty, one ought to Anſwer this Queſtion: Does the true and proper Character of Modification ſuit with Matter with reſpect to God; or does it not ſuit with it? Before you Anſwer it, let me explain by ſome Examples, what the proper Character of Modification is. 'Tis to be in a Subject in the ſame manner as Motion is in Matter, and Thought in the Soul, and the Form of a Porrenger in the Veſſel call'd a Porrenger. A thing cannot be a Modification of the Divine Subſtance, only becauſe it ſubſiſts in the Immenſity of God, becauſe it is penetrated by, and ſurrounded with it on all ſides, becauſe it Exiſts by the Power of God, and cannot Exiſt without him, nor out of him; 'tis further requiſite, that the Divine Subſtance ſhou'd be its ſubject of Inherence, juſt as, according to the common Opinion, the Humane Soul is the Subject of Inherence of Senſe and Deſire; Pewter is the Subject of Inherence of the form of a Porrenger, and Matter is the Subject of Inherence of Motion, Reſt and Figure. Anſwer now: and if you ſay that, according to Spinoza, the Subſtance of God is not in ſuch a manner the ſubject of Inherence of Extenſion, Motion and Humane Thoughts; I'll confeſs that you make an Orthodox Philoſopher of him, that there was no ground to raiſe ſo many Objections againſt him, and that he is only to blame for taking great pains to perplex a Doctrine which every body knew, and to forge a new Syſtem built only upon the ambiguity of a Word. If you ſay that he believ'd that God is the ſubject of Inherency of Matter, and of all the Varieties of Extenſion and Thought, in the ſame Senſe as Carteſius ſays that Extenſion is the Subject of Inherency of Motion, and the Soul of Man the ſubject of Inherency of Senſations and Paſſions, you grant all that I deſire: 'Tis in this Senſe I underſtood Spinoza, and all my Objections are grounded upon it.

The reſult of what has been ſaid, is a Queſtion of Fact concerning the true ſenſe of the Word Modification in the Syſtem of Spinoza. Muſt it be taken for the ſame thing, that is commonly call'd Created Subſtance, or muſt it be taken in the ſenſe Carteſius puts upon it? I believe the laſt ſenſe is the right; for in the other ſenſe, Spinoza would have acknowledged ſome Creatures diſtinct from the Divine Subſtance, and made out of Nothing, or out of a Matter diſtinct from God. But it were an eaſie thing to prove by a great many Paſſages of his Books, that he admits neither of thoſe two things. Extenſion, according to his Doctrine, is an Attribute of God; from whence it follows, that God is Eſſentially, Eternally, and Neceſſarily an extended Subſtance, and that Extenſion is as Eſſential to him as Exiſtence. The reſult of which is, that the varieties of Extenſion, which make the Sun, the Earth, Trees, the Bodies of Brutes, the Bodies of Men, &c. are in God, as the School-Philoſophers ſuppoſe they are in the Firſt Matter. But if thoſe Philoſophers ſuppoſed that the Firſt Matter is a ſimple and ſole Subſtance, they wou'd conclude that the Sun and the Earth are really the ſame Subſtance. And therefore Spinoza muſt needs draw the ſame Concluſion. If he does not ſay that the Sun is compoſed of God's Extenſion, he muſt acknowledge that the Extenſion of the Sun was made out of Nothing; but he denies Creation; and therefore he muſt ſay that the Subſtance of God is the Material Cauſe of the Sun, what compoſes the Sun, Subjectum ex quo, and conſequently that the Sun is not (c) diſtinct from God, but God himſelf, God intirely, ſince, according to his Notion, God is not a Being compoſed of Parts.

(c) Matter, as Ariſtotle ſays, Phyſic. lib. 1. cap. 9. remains in the effect it produces. Λέγω γὰρ ὕλην τὸ πρῶτον ὑποκείμενον ἑκάστῳ, ἐξ οὗ γίνεταί τι ἐνυπάρχοντος. Dico enim materiam quod rei cujuſque ſubjectum eſt primum ex quo inexiſtente fit aliquid.

Let us ſuppoſe for a while, that a Lump of Gold has the power to Convert it ſelf into Plates, Diſhes, Candleſticks, Porrengers, &c. it will not be diſtinct from thoſe Plates and Diſhes; and if it be further ſaid, that it is an uncompounded Lump, it muſt be all in each Plate, and in each Candleſtick; for if it was not all in each of 'em, it would have divided it ſelf into ſeveral Pieces, and therefore it would be compoſed of Parts, which is contrary to the Suppoſition. Theſe reciprocal and concertible Propoſitions would be true, the Candleſtick is the Lump of Gold, the Lump of Gold is the Candleſtick. The Candleſtick is the whole Lump of Gold, the whole Lump of Gold is the Candleſtick. This is an Image of the God of Spinoza: He has the Power to Convert or to Modify himſelf into an Earth, a Moon, a Sea, a Tree, &c. and he is abſolutely one, and without any compoſition of Parts; and therefore it may be affirm'd that the Earth is God, that the Moon is God; that the Earth is wholly God, that the Moon is ſo too; that God is the Earth, that God is the Moon; that God is wholly the Earth, that God is wholly the Moon.

There can be but three ways, according to which, the Modifications of Spinoza are in God: But none of thoſe ways is what the other Philoſophers ſay of the Created Subſtance. It is in God, ſay they, as in its efficient and tranſitive Cauſe; and conſequently it is really and wholly diſtinct from God. But according to Spinoza, the Creatures are in God, either as an Effect in its material Cauſe, or as an Accident in its Subject of Inheſion, or as the form of a Candleſtick in the Pewter it is made of. The Sun, the Moon and Trees, as they are things that have Three Dimenſions, are in God as in the Material Cauſe of which their Extenſion is compoſed; and therefore there is an Identity between God and the Sun, &c. The ſame Trees, as they have a Form, whereby they are diſtinguiſh'd from a Stone, are in God, as the form of a Candleſtick is in Pewter. To be a Candleſtick is only a manner of being of Pewter. The motion of Bodies, and the Thoughts of Men are in God, as the Accidents of the Peripateticks are in the created Subſtance; they are Entities inherent in their of it: Which is an effectual way to become Unintelligible by ones own Fault. If there is any Term that he took in a new Sense, and unknown to Philosophers, 'tis probably the word Modification. But whatever Signification he takes it in, he cannot avoid being confounded, as may be ſeen in a * Remark of this Article. Thoſe who will carefully examin the Objections I have propoſed, will eaſily perceive that I have taken the word Modification in the Senſe it ought to have, and that the Conſequences I have drawn, and the Principles I have laid down to Confute thoſe Conſequences, do perfectly agree with the Rules of Reaſoning. I don't know whether it be neceſſary to obſerve, that that part of Spinoza's Syſtem which I attack, and which always appeared to me very weak, is that which the (AA) Spinoziſts are leſs willing to defend. I ſhall conclude with this Obſervation, that ſeveral Perſons have aſſured

* The Remark P.

Subject, of which they make no part. See the Margin (||).

I am not ignorant, that an Apologiſt (a) of Spinoza maintains that this Philoſopher does not aſcribe a Material Extenſion to God, but only an Intelligible one. But if the Extenſion of the Bodies we ſee and imagine, is not the Extenſion of God, whence comes it? How has it been made? If it has been produced out of Nothing, Spinoza is an Orthodox Man, his new Syſtem ſignifies nothing. If it has been produced out of the Intelligible Extenſion of God, 'tis ſtill a true Creation; for the Intelligible Extenſion being but an Idea, and not having really the Three Dimenſions, cannot form the Matter of the Extenſion, which formally exiſts out of the Underſtanding. Beſides, if we diſtinguiſh two ſorts of Extenſion, one Intelligible belonging to God, the other Imaginable belonging to Matter, we muſt alſo admit two Subjects of thoſe Extenſions diſtinct one from another; and then the Unity of Subſtance will be deſtroyed, and the whole Structure of Spinoza falls to the ground. We may therefore ſay, that his Apologiſt does not reſolve the Difficulty, and raiſes greater ones.

The Spinoziſts may take advantage of the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation; for if they conſult the Writings of the Spaniſh School men, they'll find many Subtilties to anſwer ſomething to the Arguments of thoſe, who ſay, that one and the ſame Man cannot be a Mahometan in Turky, and a Chriſtian in France, ſick at Rome, and well at Vienna; but perhaps they will at laſt find themſelves obliged to compare their Syſtem with the Myſtery of the Trinity, to clear themſelves from the Contradictions that are objected to them. If they don't ſay that the Modifications of the Divine Subſtance, Plato, Ariſtotle, a Horſe, an Ape, a Tree, a Stone, are as many perſonalities, which tho' Identified with the ſame Subſtance, may be, each of 'em a particular, determin'd, and diſtinct Principle of the other Modifications, they'll never be able to anſwer the Objection grounded upon their overthrowing this Principle, Two contradictory Terms cannot belong to the ſame Subject at the ſame time. Perhaps they'll ſay ſome time or other, that as the Three Perſons of the Trinity, without being diſtinct from the Divine Subſtance, as Divines teach, and without having any abſolute Attribute that is not the ſame in number in each of 'em, have nevertheleſs each of 'em ſome Properties that may be denied of others; ſo Spinoza may have admitted in the Divine Subſtance an Infinite Number of Modalities or Perſonalites, one of which does a thing, which others do not. This will not be a true Contradiction, ſince Divines acknowledge a Virtual diſtinction, in ordine ad ſuſcipienda duo prædicata contradictoria, with reſpect to the ſuſceptibility of two Terms that contradict one another. But, as the ſubtil Arriaga judiciouſly obſerves upon Metaphyſical (b) Degrees, which ſome will have to be ſuſceptible of two contradictory Propoſitions, ſhould we tranſfer to natural things what Revelation teaches us concerning the Nature of God, it would intirely deſtroy Philoſophy; for it would make way to prove that there is no real diſtinction between the Creatures. (c) Dices quartò, dari diſtinctionem virtualem inter animalitatem, & rationalitatem, æquivalentem reali, quatenus, etiamſi à parte rei ſint idem, una tamen poteſt terminare cognitionem, altera verò non, quod eſt æquivalere ſubſtantiis [illegible] rebus diſtinctis; ſicut, licet eſſentia divina ſit idem realiter cum Paternitate, tamen eſſentiæ convenit communicari tribus perſonis, Paternitati verò non convenit ea communicatio. Reſpondeo——— explicare res creatas per hoc adeò difficile exemplum, eſt res faciles per difficillimas intelligere, præterquam quòd, ſi ex divinis liceret argumentari ad creata, etiam poſſet inferri, animalitatem poſſe produci, quin producatur rationalitas——— (d) Imo etiam poſſet inferri res omnes creatas eſſe idem realiter inter ſe, & virtualiter ſolùm diſtinctas, & quando una illarum perit, altera producitur, una movetur, altera quieſcit, id fieri ſecundùm diverſas formalitates ejuſdem entitatis——— Cùm ergo Deus ex una parte propter ſuam infinitatem neceſſariò careat compoſitione phyſica, & ex alia parte non poſſit natura divina eſſe multiplex, ſed unica tantum in tribus perſonis, quæ omnia non poſſunt intelligi ſine virtuali diſtinctione in ordine ad ea duo prædicata contradictoria, non licet ponere in creaturis ſimilem diſtinctionem, cùm neque creaturarum perfectio, neque ulla ratio efficax poſſit eſſe ad illam ponendam: imo potiùs (ut jam dixi) ſi ſemel poneretur, non eſſet ullum fundamentum ad diſtinguendas inter ſe realiter creaturas; & conſequenter deſtrueretur tota Philoſophia. How little are we beholden to Spinoza! He deprives us of the moſt neceſſary Principle; for were it true that one and the ſame thing may be at the ſame time what it is, and what it is not, all our Meditations and Reaſonings would be inſignificant. See what Averroes ſaid (e).

(AA) That part of Spinoza's Syſtem, which I attack——— is that which the Spinoziſts are leſs willing to defend.] I have Confuted Spinoza's Suppoſition, that Extenſion is not a Compounded Being, but one Numerical Subſtance, and I have pitch'd upon that part of his Syſtem, becauſe I knew the Spinoziſts ſay the Difficulties don't lie in that. They think they are much more perplexed, when they are ask'd how Thought and Extenſion can be United in one and the ſame Subſtance. There is ſomething odd in it; for if it be certain that Thought and Extenſion have no Affinity one with another, 'tis ſtill more Evident that Extenſion conſiſts of Parts really Diſtinct one from another. And yet they are more ſenſible of the firſt Difficulty than of the Second, and call the latter a trifle if compared with the other. I thought therefore it was neceſſary to give 'em occaſion to Argue thus: If that part of our Syſtem can hardly be defended, which we took to be Proof againſt all Attacks, how ſhall we defend the weak parts of it?

(A) He

(||) Obſerve this difference, that the Accidents of the Peripateticks are really diſtinct from their Subject of Inheſion, and that Spinoza cannot ſay ſo of the Modifications of the Divine Subſtance; for if they were diſtinct from it, without being compoſed of it, they would be made out of nothing. Spinoza would own it: He wou'd not cavil about it, as the Peripateticks do, when they are told that Accidents would be created, if they were diſtinct from the Subſtance.

(a) Kuffelaer ſpecim. artis ratiocinandi pag. 222. Note, That he very much inveighs againſt Blyenberg, who ſaid that Spinoza aſcribed a Material Extenſion to God. Note alſo, that pag. 230. & ſeq. He Confutes one Adrian Verwer, who had ſaid ſomething againſt the Syſtem of Spinoza.

(b) By [illegible] they call the [illegible] Corporeity, Vitality, Animality, Rationality, which conſtitute the nature of a Man. 'Tis agreed that they are not diſtinct one from another, but that they really are one and the ſame Entity.

(c) Arriaga diſput. 5. logica ſect. 2. n. 29. pag. m. 83.

(d) Ibid. pag. 84.

(e) Quo fit ut merito dicat Averroes hoc loco ſine hoc pronunciato non modo poſſibile non eſſe Philoſophari ſed ne diſputare quidem aut ratiocinari. Fonſeca in Metaphyſ. Ariſtot. lib. 4. cap. 3. pag. m. 655.

aſſured me that his Doctrine, even conſider'd without a Relation to Religion, appears very Contemptible to the greateſt † Mathematicians of our days. Which may be eaſily believed, if theſe two things be conſider'd: Firſt, That no Man ought to be more fully perſuaded of the Multiplicity of Subſtances, than thoſe, who apply themſelves to the Conſideration of Extenſion; Secondly, That moſt of thoſe Gentlemen admit a Vacuum. But there is nothing more contrary to Spinoza's Hypotheſis, than to aſſert that all Bodies don't touch one another; and there never were two Syſtems more oppoſite than his and that of the Atomiſts. He agrees with Epicurus in rejecting Providence, but in all other things their Syſtems are like Fire and Water.

SPON (Charles) a Phyſician of Lyons. See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres β.

SPON (Jacob) a Phyſician of Lyons, and an Antiquarian, Son of the Foregoing. See the ſame Nouvelles, γ.

STANCARUS (Francis) a Native of Mantua, lived in the XVI Century. He was one of thoſe, whoſe Endeavours to Eſtabliſh the Reformed Religi- in Poland proved moſt ſucceſsful. He δ had been call'd to (A) Cracow to teach the Hebrew Tongue; but when it was obſerved that he inſinuated the Doctrines of the Proteſtants in his Lectures, he was accuſed to the Biſhop ζ of Cracow, who had procured him that place; the Biſhop being informed that he was a Heretick, had him Impriſon'd η. He was releaſed by the Addreſs or Intereſt of ſome Lords, and θ found a good place of Refuge in the Houſe of Nicolas Oleſnicki, a Gentleman, whoſe Quality, Merit, and || Courage conſpired to make him a conſiderable Man. He propoſed to him to put an end to the Romiſh Worſhip, and to throw down Images; but Oleſnicki having conſulted his Friends, did not think it proper to be (B) ſo haſty, and was contented to have the Sacrament Adminiſtred in his Caſtle with ſuch Ceremonies as Stancarus ſhou'd think fit to appoint. Some time after, the firſt deſign of that Reformer was put in Execution; the Monks ‡, who officiated in the Church of that place, were expell'd, and the Images were Broke, and Burnt to Aſhes. Oleſnicki ʒ Founded a reformed Church at Pinezovia in the Year 1550. whither he call'd many Perſons Illuſtrious for their Piety and Learning. Stancarus ω ſet up there a Noble School, and drew up Fifty Rules of Reformation (C) for the Churches

(A) He had been call'd to Cracow.] John Laetus ſays that the Biſhop of Cracow himſelf call'd him thither to be Profeſſor of the Hebrew Tongue. (a) A Maciejovio Epiſcopo Cracovienſi evocatus erat ut linguam S. Cracoviæ doceret. But others (b) ſay, that being expell'd from Italy as an Heretick, and not being able to ſettle in Germany, he went into Poland, where he was permitted to teach Hebrew in the College of Cracow, becauſe they knew not what he was, but only that he underſtood that Language. Thoſe, who ſay this, being both his Enemies, and the Biſhop of Cracow's Friends, might have omitted ſome Circumſtances. However, I believe that Biſhop did not ſend for him out of Italy, and that he knew nothing of his being qualified to Teach Hebrew, till he ſaw him in Poland.

(B) Oleſnicki——— did not think it proper to be ſo haſty.] A Roman Catholick gives the following Account of it. (c) Capit errorem (Stancarus) inſtaurare Zwinglii, in idque operam dare, ut abduceret Oleſnicium à religione paterna & perſuaderet illi religionem externam. Cujus ad præſcriptum imagines è fano tolli, cœnam pro uſitata peregrinam inſtitui, Sacra quæ Monachi in ejus oppidi fano religionibus vetuſtis adminiſtrabant, explodi jubet. Erat hoc fanum cum adjuncta Monachorum domo, munificentiâ Sbignei Oleſnicii operosè extructum ac liberaliter ditatum, quod profanare Stancarus properabat, cujus conſilium cum Oleſnicio videretur periculoſum eſſe, ne quid inconſideratè faceret, vocat amicos ac in conſilium adhibet, in quo, variatis ſententiis, illa poſtremo vicit, ut imagines cum reliqua ſupellectili ſalvæ in fano manerent: Monachi etiam veteri inſtituto ſacra facerent: quod nihil earum rerum mutari tùm poſſet impunè: adeſſe Regem in proximo, Epiſcopum etiam Cracovii nondum diſceſſiſſe, fore biſce rebus mutandis aliud tempus magis idoneum. In præſentia placere cœnam inſtitui, idque fieret in Arce privatim non in fano publicè, quod in oppido ſubjectum eſt arci. Secundùm hanc ſententiam permittunt Stancaro novæ cœnæ modum præſcribere, ac illius uſum docere. Stancarus's Temper may be known from theſe words. If he had not the gift of Perſeverance, it ought not to be aſcribed to any lukewarmneſs: He was a very fiery Man; his Patron, who was a Sword Man, threw Water upon that great Fire by the Advice of ſome Lay Perſons, who examin'd that Affair. Take Notice of a Negligence of the Socinian Writer, whom I have quoted. He relates the whole Latin Paſſage to prove by the Teſtimony of a Poliſh Annaliſt, that Stancarus cauſed the Monks to be turn'd out, and Images to be thrown down; and yet it appears from the words of that Annaliſt, that no ſuch thing was done: Lubienteiski betrays therefore his want of Judgment. He might have found in Spondanus what he ſhou'd have quoted. (d) Adverſus Stancarum prodiit Orichovii Roxolani elegans libellus titulo Chimæra——— ubi ait ——— (e) eum Pinczoviam Cracovienſis municipii oppidum ſe contuliſſe, ibique punico incitatum furore in templa irruiſſe, imagines ſanctorum ſuſtuliſſe, memorias Martyrum deleviſſe, altaria everiiſſe, ſacra profanaſſe, gazam eccleſiaſticam diripuiſſe, denique ſacerdotes ex oppido exterminaſſe.

(C) Drew up 50 Rules of Reformation for the Churches of Poland.] We ſhou'd wrong him ſhou'd we ſuppoſe that he was a ſedentary Reformer, who keeping in his School at Pinezovia, ſent his Orders and his Counſels every where. 'Tis certain

---

† They have named to me among others, Mr. Iſaac Newton, M. Huygens, M. Leibnitz, M. Bernoulli, and M. Fatio.

β For July 1685. art. 5.

γ For February 1686. art. 9.

δ Laetus, compend. Hiſtor. univerſ. pag. m. 359.

ζ His Name was Samuel Maciejowski.

η Id. ib.

θ Staniſlaus Lubieniecius, Hiſt. reform. Polonicæ lib. 1. c. 5. pag. 31.

|| Id. ib. pag. 31.

‡ De hinc Monachos cambio & imagines templo ejicit, quin & has frangi & comburi facit (Oleſnicius.) Id. ib. p. 31.

ʒ Id. ib. pag. 31.

ω Laetus ubi ſupra.

(a) Jo. Laetus compend. hiſtor. univ. pag. m. 359.

(b) Staniſlaus Orichovius in Chimæra fol. 4. 23.

(c) Orichovius annal. 3. apud Staniſlaum Lubienieccium hiſtor. reformat. Polonicæ l. 1. c. 5. p. 31, 32.

(d) Spondanus ad ann. 1551. n. 22. pag. 538.

(e) Orichovius in Chimæra fol. m. 24. verſo.

Churches of Poland. He was ſent into Pruſſia ſometime after, and was Hebrew Profeſſor γ for a Year at Koningsberg. There aroſe violent Quarrels between him and Oſiander, the conſequences whereof proved fatal to Orthodoxy. Oſiander taught that Man is juſtified by the Eſſential Righteouſneſs of God, and that JESUS CHRIST is our Righteouſneſs according to his Divine Nature. Stancarus being too Zealous in Contradicting him, and departing from that Error with two great a Vehemence, run into the oppoſite extreme; for he maintain'd that JESUS CHRIST is our Mediator only according to his Humane Nature *. 'Tis ſaid that he had this Doctrine from Peter (D) Lombard, whom he admired. He undertook to Eſtabliſh it in Poland, but he met with ſome Obſtacles he cou'd not overcome. It was Condemn'd || in (E) ſome Synods, and that Condemnation was confirm'd in that of Xian, at which fifty Miniſters aſſiſted, with moſt of the great Lords of the Proteſtant Party, and many Gentlemen, in the Year 1560. Nevertheleſs, the Churches of Poland (F) were Troubled with that diſpute during Stancarus's Life. He died † at Stobnitz in the Houſe of γ Micræl. Syntag. Hiſtor. Eccleſ. p. m. 865, 870.

* Id. ib. pag. 865.

|| Lætus ubi ſupra, pag. 411.

† Id. ib.

tain that he travell'd into ſeveral Parts to perform the work of the Reformation. (a) Stancarus Eccleſias a papatu reformavit. L. Canones inſtaurandarum Eccleſiarum conſcripſit. This Proof being too weak, don't mind it, but depend upon this. (b) Stancarus ——— ad reformandas Eccleſias ab Anno 1553. magno ſtudio incubuerat: in quam rem hortatu Jacobi Comitis Oſtrorogii libros conſcripſerat. Cum enim ei, tum Felici Crucigero & aliis piis viris, motâ in ditione Cracovienſi perſecutione ——— aliæ ſedes quietæ quærendæ eſſent, in majorem Poloniam conceſſerat & Oſtrorogii protectu tutus permanſerat. A quo Anno 1553. dimiſſus in Minorem Poloniam cum eodem illo Crucigero reverterat, & reformandis ab idololatria eccleſiis pro tempore operam dederat, favore Staniſlai Stadnicii, Hieronymi Philipovii, Nicolai Oleſnicii & aliorum Patronorum Virorum Nobiliſſimorum & Generoſiſſimorum fretus.

(a) Lætus compend. hiſtor. univerſ. pag. m. 589.

(b) Staniſl. Lubieniecius ubi ſupra lib. 2. c. 6. pag. 116, 117.

(D) That he had this Doctrine from Peter Lombard, whom he admired.] I have read the following Paſſage long ago in Micrælius. (c) Hic homo tanti fecit Magiſtrum ſententiarum, ex cujus lacunis hauſerat errorem, ut dicere non ſit veritus, unum Petrum Lombardum plus valere, quam C. Lutheros, CC. Melanchthones, CCC. Bullingeros, CCCC. Martyres & D. Calvinos: ex quibus omnibus, ſi in mortario contunderentur, non exprimeretur una uncia veræ theologiæ. Florimond de Remond (d), who mentions part of thoſe things, and ſome others, quotes Stancarus's Apology againſt the Divines of Zurich. I have conſulted it, and (e) found in it Micrælius's Words. Note, That the Author pretends to have taken his Doctrine from the Holy Fathers, and not from Peter Lombard, who has only Collected, ſays he, the Authorities of the Fathers, and the Doctrines of the Church.

(c) Micrælius ubi ſupra pag. 890.

(d) Flor. de Remond, Hiſt. de la naiſſ. & progrés de l'hereſie B. 2. ch. 15. pag. m. 222.

(e) Folio k 5. edit. Cracovienſ. 1562. in 8.

(E) It was Condemn'd in ſome Synods.] John Lætus (f) Names three, that of Sendomir, that of Vladiſlavia, and that of Pinczovia. But Lubienietski affirms, that Stancarus's Opinion was (g) ſo carefully diſcuſs'd in the Synod of Pinczovia in November 1558, and ſo well defended and Attack'd, that both Parties broke up without coming to any Concluſion. (h) Æquo tunc Marte ab utrinque diſceſſum eſt, quoque cum ſua Sententia ad ſua, Stancaro Dubietzcum ad Patronum Staniſlaum Stadnicium revertente.

(f) Lætus ubi ſupra pag. 411.

(g) Acrites diſcuſſa fuit. Staniſl. Lubieniecius ubi ſupra pag. 117.

(h) Id. ib.

(F) Were troubled with that diſpute during Stancarus's Life.] We have juſt now ſeen that he had ſome Friends in the Synods. We need not wonder at it: He underſtood the Languages and the Fathers, he was a Man of Parts, he cou'd ſpeak and write well, he grew fond of his Opinion, and diſputed about a very Difficult Subject, which afforded too much Matter to the boldneſs of the Logicians; and therefore had he had no Followers, one might well wonder at it. (i) Stancarus ut multa erat non tantum linguarum ſcientia ſed & eruditione, ex ſcripturis & antiquitate ſententiam ſuam ratione profecto ſuffragante probabat. John Laſcus, Liſmaninus, Gonezius, Crovicius, Blandrata, and many others cou'd never bring him off from his Opinion (k). The Churches of Poland being Alarm'd at thoſe Diviſions, and perplexed with the Subtilties of that Man, conſulted the Conſiſtory of Geneva, who ſent 'em (l) a ſhort and good Inſtruction, drawn up by Calvin in the Year 1560. It wanted to be ſupported by another very accurate Piece, that is to be found among (m) Calvin's Letters. The Author of that Piece ſpeaks very cautiouſly of Stancarus, tho' he complains of his Anger againſt Melancthon. The latter, and Peter Martyr publiſh'd ſomething againſt his Doctrine. The former did it with great (n) Moderation, knowing that he had to do with a paſſionate Man. Stancarus refuſed to ſubmit to the Synods, that Condemn'd him. It appears from the (o) Letter, which the Miniſters of Poland writ to the Church of Strasburg in 1562, that he charged them with Arianiſm, and introduced a kind of Sabellianiſm. He inſtantly demanded a new Conference; but it was denied him, and his Books were Condemn'd and Burnt. (p) Pincovienſes, rejectâ cum Stancaro, quam multum expetebat, diſputatione, in dubium vel in diſputationem trahi communem Eccleſiæ ſententiam, in gratiam unius inquieti, & arrogantis hominis indignum exiſtimantes, libros ejus condemnaſſe, & tradidiſſe rogo, lego apud Staniſlaum Hoſium, in Judicio de Cenſura Heidelbergenſium, ac Tigurinorum de dogmate contra Trinitatem in Poloniâ tum ſparſo. The Schiſm laſted ſtill in the Year 1568, as it appears from a letter of Beza, wherein he exhorts the Schiſmaticks, and Stancarus by Name, to ſubmit to a Confeſſion, not doubting that if they do it, they will be reſtored to the Communion of the Church. I ſhall ſet down his words the more willingly, becauſe they contain a curious Circumſtance, viz. That Stancarus offered ſome formularies of Faith full of Ambiguous Expreſſions. (q) Omnes illos qui à vobis diſceſſionem fecerunt, totque conſequutis malis aditum patefecerunt, ipſumque adeò Stancarum, precor & obteſtor per viſcera miſericordiæ Dei noſtri, ut & ſui & pacis Eccleſiarum majorem habeant rationem, iſtaque abjectâ in defendendo ſemel arrepto dogmate pertinaciâ, in animum inducant cum Eccleſiis in verè fraternam gratiam, abolitis prioribus omnibus, redire, & ſynceris omnium Eccleſiarum orthodoxarum confeſſionibus apertè potiùs acquieſcere, quam novas

(i) Id. ib.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 111.

(l) It is among Calvin's Tracts pag. m. 682.

(m) 'Tis the 152. Letter.

(n) Reſponſionem de Stancari controverſia perſcripſi, quæ multo eſt & brevior & ſummiſſior quam poſtulat magnitudo cauſæ. Sed hominem iracundum & bilioſum non volui accendere. Melancth. epiſt. 309. l. 4. p. m. 925. It is dated in the Year 1553.

(o) 'Tis the firſt among thoſe of Zanchius. See Hornbeeck in apparatu ad controv. Socinianas pag. 29. (p) Hornbeeck ibid. (q) Theod. Beza, epiſt. 28. pag. 241. tom. 3. operum. It is dated the 1. of September 1568.

of Peter Zborow, and then that diſpute was over; but it appeared that (G) Arianiſm had accidently got a new ſtrength by it. 'Tis a Subject, that might afford (H) many Reflections. Stancarus loſt all the Glory of his firſt Actions by pacis & ambiguas conciliationum formulas ſcribendo, ſuſpicionem præbere, quaſi fucare potius manifeſte defenſas errores, quam ſemel abjectis illis veram cum fratribus concordiam inire velint. Id verò ſi fecerint, non dubito quin dextram illis ultro præbeatis, exultent in cælis Angeli, applaudant omnes Eccleſiæ. We ſhall ſee (a) hereafter what he ſaid of the Perſecutions he had ſuffered.

(G) It appeared that Arianiſm had accidentally got a new ſtrength by it.] The chief Argument of Stancarus was this: If CHRIST is our Mediator as he is God, he is Inferior to his Father as to the Divine Nature; and therefore he is not Coeſſential with God the Father; and conſequently thoſe who ſay he is a Mediator as he is God, revive the Hereſy of the Arians. He urged this Conſequence with all the ſubtilties his Wit and the Nature of the ſubject cou'd afford him: Which occaſion'd a third Party; ſome being moved on the one hand with his Reaſons, and on the other with the Arguments of his Adverſaries, laid down that JESUS CHRIST was a Mediator with reſpect to his Humane Nature, and with reſpect to a Divine Nature inferior to that of his Father. Blandrata, and ſome others, who had fled from Geneva for ſome Errors concerning the Trinity, took Advantage of Stancarus's Objections, and pretended that ſince his Adverſaries cou'd not reſolve them, 'twas neceſſary to think of another Syſtem. This gave Birth to Tritheiſm and Arianiſm in Poland, and at laſt to Socinianiſm. Lubienietski ſays, that the Synod of Pinczovia, wherein Stancarus's Cauſe was thoroughly diſcuſs'd, and both Parties had an equal Advantage, made way for the Deſtruction of the Doctrine of the Trinity. (b) Hæc mox, ut illa Serveti de præeminentia Patris, Viros pios & doctos ad hoc argumentum diſcutiendum haud leviter incitavit. Itaque meritò illam Synodum Pinczoviæ Anno 1558. celebratam Andreas Lubieniecius Senior in M. S. de Synodis magnum ingreſſum ad demoliendum dogma Trinitatis feciſſe dixit——— Et certè ex his, quæ ſecuta ſunt in illa Pinczoviana Synodo portam ad diſcutienda vulgò recepta dogmata apertam eſſe, nemo non videbit. Hoc enim ipſo anno cum veniſſet Pinczoviam Blandrata, quem invidia Calvini Geneva expulerat, habitis Pinczoviæ cum Liſmanino multis de hoc argumento ſermonibus, & videns Stancari adverſarios ei non ſatisfeciſſe, tantùm effecit, ut & ille de dogmate Trinitatis dubitare inceperit. Hinc Liſmaninus in ſuſpicionem Arianiſmi apud Miniſtros inolitis erroribus tenacius adhærentes incidit. Calvin had been all along afraid that Stancarus's Adverſaries wou'd run into another Extreme, and ſaw to his great grief that his fear was not groundleſs. Here follows what he writ to the Brethren of that Country. (c) Tabulam nuper in Polonia editam, quæ Chriſtum & Spiritum ſanctum alios à Patre deos facit, non ſine acerbiſſimo mærore inſpexi. Pridem me hæc cura, non abs re anxium tenuit, ne fratres minus in Scriptura exercitatos abriperet Stancari importunitas, ut vitandæ unius abſurditatis cauſa, in aliam fœdiorem laberentur. Accidit ergo quod timui, ac triſti exemplo patefactum eſt quàm noxia ſit peſtis contentio, ubi magis propoſitum eſt, adverſarium vincere, quàm bonam cauſam ſimpliciter tueri. Craſſum Stancari delirium meritò à fratribus Polonicis repudiatum eſt. Sed dum ſibi ab una diaboli aſtutia cavent, obrepſit alter impoſtor Blandrata Stancaro deterior: & hac occaſione abuſus eſt ad errorem non minus deteſtabilem ſpargendum. I ſhall ſet down a very fine Paſſage of a Letter he writ to them in 1563, which ſhews the pernicious effects of Diſputes, and that God ſends a Curſe upon the work of thoſe, who diſpute rather to Triumph over their Enemies, than for the ſake of Truth. (d) Porrò teterrimus hic error, qui apud vos graſſatur, favorem obtinuit ex immodico contentionis fervore. Nam cùm Stancarus inſulſus Sophiſta, & rabula improbiſſimus commenta ſua ingereret, Chriſtum Mediatorem duntaxat eſſe, quatenus homo eſt, ideoque apud totam Trinitatem intercedere, optimum compendium quidam eſſe duxerunt, ſi reſponderent ſolum Patrem verè & propriè eſſe Deum. Ita effugium illud nimis cupidè multi arripuerunt, quod ita putarent nullo negocio refutari Stancari ineptias. Sic ut veteri proverbio dicitur, nimium altercando veritas amiſſa fuit. Equidem non dubito quoſdam inſcitia vel inconſiderata facilitate lapſos eſſe: verùm conjicere ſimul licet, nonnullos aſtutè (e) captaſſe occaſionem, ut execrabile delirium, quod plauſibile fore ſperabant, ſimplicibus impunè obtruderent. That is, "This pernicious Error, "that is ſpread among you, proceeds from "too great a Contention. For when Stancarus, "that ſilly Sophiſt, and wicked Babbler, main"tain'd that Chriſt is our Mediator only as he "is a Man, and that therefore he intercedes "to the whole Trinity; ſome were of Opi"nion that the beſt way was to ſay that the Fa"ther only is truly and properly God. Many "were too fond of this Subterfuge, becauſe "they fancied Stancarus wou'd be eaſily con"futed by that means. Thus, as the Proverb "has it, Truth has been loſt by too much contend"ing. I don't doubt that ſome have been miſled "thro' Ignorance and Inconſiderateneſs; but 'tis "very likely others have cunningly waited "for an occaſion to ſet forth ſuch an execra"ble Doctrine without any danger, hoping it "wou'd be acceptable to the Ignorant". Beza (f) does alſo acknowledge that Tritheiſm and Arianiſm, revived in Poland, were occaſion'd by Stancarus's diſputes.

EXAMINATION of the complaints againſt the multitude of Univerſities and Profeſſors.

(H) Might afford many Reflections.] I ſhall only make a few, and I'll begin with the complaints ſome make againſt Learning. Were it not better to ſuppreſs the Univerſities than to maintain ſo many Profeſſors in all Faculties? They are the Men, who give Birth to Hereſies, or bring up thoſe, who ſpread and Multiply erroneous Doctrines. The People, that is, all thoſe who are not call'd to explain Matters of Religion, preſerve the Faith imparted to them, ſound and undefiled. Teach 'em that they muſt believe the Trinity, the Unity of the Divine Nature, the Incarnation, CHRIST's Mediation, &c. they'll believe all thoſe Myſteries, without altering the Purity of 'em, and raiſing any diſturbance about 'em. But the Doctors take a contrary Courſe: Some are willing to diſtinguiſh themſelves by ſubtil Interpretations, and others will not ſuffer it. Which occaſions diſputes, that Trouble the Spring, and divide it into ſeveral muddy Streams. The firſt Diviſion is quickly followed by a Second, and ſo on: that Fecundity, or rather Contagion, is very ſurpriſing. In a little time you'll hear of many Sectaries, (g) Apollinariſts, Arians, Eutychians, Macedonians, Monothelites, Neſtorians, Sabellians, &c. If any one drew the Genealogy of Hereſies, it wou'd appear that their Filiation is chiefly grounded upon theſe two Cauſes. 1. The diſputants are willing to keep at two great a diſtance from their Adverſaries; and therefore they run into another extreme. 2. The deſire of getting the Victory, makes 'em carry their Objections ſo far, that they may be retorted againſt 'em, or favour a third Party. What do they do to Remedy that Inconveniency? They yield the ground they are not able to defend, and have recourſe to a new Invention. This produces a quite different Syſtem, which another

(a) In the Remark L.

(b) Staniſl. Lubieniecius ubi ſupra.

(c) Calvin. in admonitione ad fratres Polonos ne triplicem in Deo eſſentiam pro tribus perſonis imaginando tres ſibi Deos fabricent, int. pag. 683. tractatuum Theolog.

(d) Idem, pag. [illegible]

(e) He means Blandrata, Gentilis, John Paul Alciatus, whom he Names ſoon after.

(f) Beza, in Apologia altera ad Claudium de Xainctes pag. 345. tom. 2. operum. See alſo what he ſays in Calvin's Life, ad ann. 1560. pag. 381. tom 3. operum.

(g) I follow an Alphabetical order and not a Chronological one.

by the Troubles he raised afterwards, indulging to much † his Vanity and Subtilty. He publish'd (l) several Pieces. Some are strangely mistaken about another Doctor will reform a-new, not finding it so exact as it shou'd be, and so on. Another, who fancies that both Parties have the Advantage and are worsted by turns, as they Act offensively, or stand upon the defensive, thinks himself obliged to pitch upon another Hypothesis. All these disorders appear'd in the case of Stancarus. He fell out with his Collegue Osiander in the University of Koningsberg; and the better to oppose him, he ascribed to CHRIST's Humanity what the other ascribed to the Divine Nature. When he removed from Koningsberg (a) to Francfort upon the Oder, he found there an (b) Antagonist, who run into a new extreme, that he might the better Contradict him; for 'tis (c) said, that he Taught that JESUS CHRIST, our Justification and our Mediator as he is God and Man, died according to his Divine Nature. Stancarus returning into Poland maintain'd his Opinion so warmly, and accused his Adversaries so violently of favouring Arianism, that he gave many Persons occasion to revive the Sect of the Arians, and then that of the Samosatenians. I believe they went upon this: 1. That the Objections of the other Ministers proved, that the sole Humanity of CHRIST was not our Mediation: 2. That his Objections proved that a Coessential Son of God cou'd not be a Mediator. They took a Medium between those extremes: They said that JESUS CHRIST, the Son of God, not Coessential, and Cloathed with our Nature, was our Mediator as to his Humane Nature, and as to the Spiritual Nature he had before he was Born. These are the unhappy effects of Theological Disputes, and Professors Chairs.

There is another thing to be considered. If a Professor advances a new thought, and gives ground to believe that he does it to get some Reputation, an Antagonist does immediately start up, who maintains that it is an ill thought. They grow hot by degrees, and at last hate one another in earnest. To Colour their proceedings, which are so like Humane Passions, the Aggressor must say that the Question is about a thing of great Moment for the good of the Church. He that is Attack'd must say the same, and shew that the Opinion he has altered gives a great Advantage to the Enemies. When things are come to this Pass, there is no going back; the Superiors must intervene. But what is the usual effect of their Decisions? An actual or a Virtual Schism. No such thing wou'd happen, if Men were not over fond of their own Thoughts. Had Stancarus confest, as he shou'd have done, that his Opinion was of little Importance for the good of the Church, he wou'd not have thought himself obliged in Honour to maintain it; he wou'd have been silent, as soon as he perceived that his assertion occasion'd some Troubles. How many disorders might have been avoided in the World, if Men had been contented to dispute about things necessary to Salvation? At this rate Osiander and Stancarus had never writ two Pages one against another. Is there any Body among the People that follows either of those Doctrines, when they put their trust in the Death of CHRIST? Nay, don't those very Divines, who have most disputed about those Questions, Worship him without thinking of those Distinctions between the Humane and Divine Nature?

Here's another Consideration. In all Countries where many Persons are paid to explain a Body of Divinity, some will doubtless be so rash as to start up Questions, which it were better (d) to let alone, as Landmarks that divide Inheritances. The Example of such Men is much to be feared; for every Body thinks he may do what is done by others, that have not more Authority than himself: Hence it is, that new disputes never arise more easily, than when they have been lately preceded by many others. This is what some say against the great Number of Universities.

“I shall answer all those Complaints in a few Words. 'Tis a most certain Maxim, that good things ought not to be suppress'd, because some make an ill use of 'em: And therefore since the improving of ones Mind is very Worthy of Man, and the Appointing of Masters for that end is a good thing, it ought not to be Abolish'd under pretence, that some Learned Men make an ill use of their Knowledge to raise Theological Disputes. To which I add, that the ill consequences of Ignorance are still more to be feared. Ignorance wou'd not prevent Divisions: Some Men less Ignorant than others, tho' they had never been in an University, wou'd be so presumptuous and so vain as to sow new Doctrines, and might Establish 'em the more easily, because their Hearers wou'd be Silly and Ignorant.

I shall conclude with deploring the miserable Condition of Mankind. They can't avoid an Evil but by running into another: If you cure 'em of their Ignorance, you expose 'em to scandalous Disputes, and such as frequently shake and even overthrow the Government.

(l) He publish'd several Pieces.] An Hebrew Grammar at Basil 1546. An Exposition of St. James's Epistle, with the Conciliation of some Passages of the Scripture, at Basil 1547. This Conciliation (e) was taken almost Word for Word from Bullinger's Commentaries; and therefore Stancarus may be placed in the Catalogue of Plagiaries. De decem captavitatibus Judaeorum: De sanguine Zacharia, and many other Tracts, the Titles whereof may be seen in the Epitome of Gesner's Bibliotheque. I shall only transcribe what follows: De Trinitate & mediatore Domino nostro Jesu Christo adversus Henricum Bullingerum, Petrum Martyrem & Joannem Calvinum & reliquos Tigurina ac Genevensis Ecclesia Ministros, Ecclesia Dei perturbatores. De trinitate & unitate Dei, deque incarnatione & mediatione Domini nostri Jesu Christi adversus Tritheitas, Arrianos, Eutychianos, Macharianos, Cerinthianos, Ebionitas & Photinianos. Opus novum de reformatione tum Doctrina Christiana, tum vera intelligentia Sacramentorum, cum matura consideratione & fundamento Scriptura sancta & consilio SS. Patrum, at Basil 1547 in 8. (f). 'Tis observed in the Epitome of Gesner's Bibliotheque, that Stancarus's Book against the Ministers of Zurich and Geneva is full of injurious Words, and that it was confuted by Josias Simler. Here's an Apostrophe of Stancarus: (g) Conclusum est, o Calvine, doctrinam suam de filio Dei esse plane Arrianam, à qua resilias quam primum te oro atque obsecro, & has hareses quam citius fieri potest retractes, & liberes Ecclesiam Dei ab istis blasphemiis quibus eam contaminasti. He says in another place, that he has demonstrated that the Churches, call'd Reformed, were Arian and Eutychian. (b) Omnes Ecclesia quas vos appellatis reformatas per Euangelium filii Dei, Arriana & Eutychiana sunt, nec hoc negari potest, ut supra demon-bout the nature of his Opinions, as I ſhall make it appear, taking notice of (K) Moreri's Faults. The Books he writ againſt his Antagoniſts are full of injurious Words: He alledged for his Juſtification the Law of Retaliation, the importance of the Hereſies he oppoſed, and even the Example of the

---

† See the Remark l.

(a) Melch. Adam in vit. Theol. German. pag. 234.

(b) Call'd Andreas Musculus.

(c) Staphylus apud Prateolum voce Stancarini pag. m. 458.

(d) [illegible]

(e) Epit. biblioth. Gesneri pag. 14

(f) Taken from the Epitome of Gesner's Bibliotheque ibid.

(g) Stancarus contra Ministres Genevenses ac Tigurinos fol. 118, apud Ju ubi infra.

(h) Id. fol. 94.

demonſtrative probavit. Andrew Jurglewski (a), a Canon of Vilna, alledges thoſe two Paſſages in his Bellum quinti Evangelii. From whence it appears that Calvin and Stancarus gave one another the ſame hard Words; each of them accuſed the other of being a Blaſphemer and a Diſturber of the Church; and if Calvin blamed Stancarus's Vanity, I make no doubt that the latter charged him with the ſame Fault. (b) Eſt illud non abſurdum modò, ſed exitiale commentum, quo vir ille faſtu turgidus & novitatis nimium cupidus orthodoxæ fidei principia labefactare conatus eſt. Dolendum ſanè eſt, quòd hominem qui prodeſſe alioqui poterat, mater hæreſeôn ambitio ad nocendum impulit. Adeò enim frivolæ ſunt quas obtendit rationes, ut ſatis appareat, nihil aliud quàm acuti ingenii famam ab aliis diſſentiendo captaſſe ——— (c) Utinam his moveatur Stancarus: quod tunc demum fore ſperandum eſt, ubi ingenium, quod ſua vanitate nimis in ſublime elatum eſt, ad manſuetudinem & modeſtiam ſe flexerit.

(K) Taking notice of Moreri's Faults.] He ſays, "That Stancarus being willing to oppoſe "the Errors of Oſiander, who taught that the "Humane Nature of Chriſt is the cauſe of our "Juſtification, ran into the contrary Extreme, "and wrote againſt the Divinity of Chriſt "like an Arian". He quotes Florimond de Remond, Bellarmin, Onuphrius, and Gualterius. The I. Miſtake of Moreri, is his ſaying that Oſiander taught that the Humanity of Chriſt is the cauſe of our Juſtification; on the contrary, he ſhould have ſaid that Oſiander believed that the Eſſential Juſtice of God, and that CHRIST, as he is God, are our Juſtification. The II. Miſtake, which unavoidably follows from the Firſt, is his ſaying, that Stancarus taught that the Divinity of CHRIST is the cauſe of our Juſtification; whereas his Doctrine was Diametrically oppoſite to that. III. Stancarus was ſo far from oppoſing the Divinity of CHRIST, like an Arian, that on the contrary, the only Reaſon why he grew ſo fond of his Doctrine, was, becauſe he pretended that the oppoſite Opinion was a neceſſary In-let into Arianiſm. Sandius, who put into his Catalogue of Antitrinitarians, as many Men as ever he could, and ſometimes under equivocal Pretences, has omitted Stancarus; which plainly ſhews, that he did not in the leaſt oppoſe the Coeſſential Divinity of CHRIST. Moreri is therefore groſly miſtaken in point of Fact. His wrong conſequence is his IV. Miſtake. He falſly believed that Oſiander aſcribed our Juſtification to the Humanity of CHRIST. How then could he ſay, that Stancarus oppoſing Oſiander, ſo far as to run into another Extreme, oppoſed the Divinity of the Meſſias? For 'tis a natural Conſequence of the direct Oppoſition, which Moreri ſuppoſes between thoſe two Men, that Stancarus rigidly maintain'd the Divine Nature of the Mediator, as he did. V. The Authors quoted by Moreri ſay the contrary to what he aſcribes to them concerning Oſiander's Error. I ſhall only prove it as to Father Gaultier, who has miſled Moreri. Franciſcus Stancarus Mantuanus, ſays he (d), tueri cupiens, ut Oſiandro (e) obſiſteret, Jeſu Chriſti humanitatem eſſe noſtræ juſtificationis cauſam, in oppoſitum extremum eodem circiter tempore ſe præcipitem egit, Jeſu Chriſti nimirùm divinitatem Arianorum more impugnando: ejus enim erat opinio, Chriſtum dominum eſſe juſtificatorem noſtrum ſecundum ſolam humanitatem excluſa divina natura. You may plainly ſee in thoſe words the Third Miſtake of Moreri, and another as near as bad as the Fourth. For tho' a Man aſſerts, that JESUS CHRIST is our Mediator, and our Juſtification, as he is a Man, and not as he is God, it does not follow that he favours Arianiſm: And therefore Father Gaultier made uſe of an enim, unworthy of an Author, who ſhould pretend to Argue right. The greateſt overſight lies in the matter of Fact, that is, in his being ignorant that Stancarus aſcribed the Mediation of Chriſt to the Humane Nature, becauſe he believed that the contrary Opinion favoured Arianiſm. If Father Gaultier had ſaid that Stancarus revived the Doctrine of Neſtorius, there had been ſome appearance of Truth in it, and he would have been a little more faithful in his Quotation; For Florimond de Remond, quoted by that Jeſuit, touches upon Neſtorianiſm. Thus this Author wrongly ſtates the matter of Fact, draws wrong Conſequences, and is not right in his Quotation. He is more faithful in what he quotes out of Prateolus, for what he advances, is to be found in that Author; but becauſe the Words of Prateolus are taken from Lindanus, it had been better to quote Lindanus, tho' an Author of no Authority, who had read nothing of Stancarus, and only goes (f) upon the Teſtimony of one Palladius. I dare ſay that there are few Books that caſt a greater Blot upon the Church of Rome, than thoſe which contain a Catalogue of the Hereſies of the XVI. Century. There are two great Faults in thoſe Catalogues: The Firſt is, That they are ſtuffed with a vaſt number of (g) imaginary Sects; the Second is, That the Authors of thoſe Libels Tranſcribe one another, and it does not appear that any of them read the Books of the Hereſiarchs they ſpeak of. But tho' they be never ſo abſurd in what they ſay of other pretended Party Leaders, I think their Account of Stancarus ſhews their Ignorance as much as any other, ſince on the one hand they aſcribe to him an Hereſy which he oppoſed, and wherewith he continually charged his Adverſaries; and on the other hand, the Opinion, whereby he got many Enemies among the Proteſtants, is a Doctrine which the Roman Catholicks maintain againſt the Proteſtant Divines. Read theſe words of the famous Turretin. (h) An Chriſtus ſit mediator ſecundum utramque naturam? affir. cont. Pontificios & Stancarum. Quæſtio hæc nobis intercedit cum Pontificiis qui ut facilius obtineant plures dari poſſe Mediatores, pertendunt Chriſtum Mediatorem fuiſſe ſecundum naturam humanam tantùm, ut poſt Lombar. lib. 3 diſt. q. 19. l. 9. Thom. p. 3. q. 26. art. 2. Bell. contro. 1. de Chriſto lib. 5. c. 3. Becanus in Manu. lib. 3. cap. 2. & alii aſſerunt. Quos hîc Stancarus ſequitur. I have juſt now conſulted the Summa Theologica of the Jeſuit Becanus, and I find theſe words in it. (i) Secunda concluſio. Chriſtus ſecundum humanitatem eſt Mediator non ſecundum divinitatem. Eſt contra Lutheranos & Calviniſtas qui docent Mediatorem eſſe ſecundum utramque naturam. He confutes their Arguments; he quotes the Fathers for his Opinion, and refers the Reader to Vaſques and Bellarmin.

WHETHER Stancarus was an Heretick.

Perhaps it will be ask'd whether the particular Opinions of Stancarus ought to be accounted Heretical. 'Tis none of my Buſineſs to decide the caſe. I ſhall only ſay, that in order the Apoſtles †. He gloried that he had been Perſecuted (L) and Condemn'd, as Saint Athanaſius was. I know that he taught *, with great Zeal, in Tranſylvania, but I don't know certainly, at what time.

(a) Andreas Jurgievicius, Bell. quinti Evangelii pag. 111, 152. edit. Colon. 1595.

(b) Calvinus in reſponſo ad fratres Polonos pag. 682. Tractat. Theolog.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 683.

(d) Gual-ter. in Tab. Chronogr. c. 16. 21. pag. m. 797. He quotes Prateol. v. Stancariani. orim. lib. 2. de orig. hæreſ. c. 15. n. 1.

(e) He had fore faithfully related the Doctrine of Oſiander.

(f) Lindanus in Dubitantio dial. 2. pag. m. 127.

(g) See the Article Bezanites.

(h) Franciſcus Turrettinus, inſtitut. Theol. Elencticæ, parte 2. loco 14. pag. 411. edit. Genev. 1682.

(i) Martinus Becanus, ſumma Theolog. parte 3, cap. 21, pag. 716. Edit. Pariſ. 1634.

Staniſlaus

der to judge of the nature of a Doctrine, one ought to know the Principles and Deſign of an Author: For inſtance, Stancarus ought to be aſk'd whether he denies the Mediation of CHRIST according to the Divine Nature, becauſe he does not believe that he is both God and Man; or whether he denies it, becauſe he will acknowledge no Inferiority in the Divine Nature of CHRIST, and is afraid it will make way for Arianiſm? If he alledges the firſt Reaſon, he is a Samoſatenian and a Socinian; but if he alledges only the Second, 'tis quite another thing; he is an Orthodox Man as to the Coeſſential and Conſubſtantial Divinity of CHRIST; and his Error, at the worſt, conſiſts only in his ſuppoſing that the Mediation implies an Inferiority inconſiſtent with the Divinity of the Eternal Word. Perhaps, the Circumſtances of the time, and that Man's Haughtineſs, were the true Reaſon why the Miniſters of Swiſſerland and Geneva exclaim'd ſo much againſt him. The Churches of Poland were then in ſuch a Condition, that nothing could be more prejudicial to them than ſuch a Diſpute; and 'twas thought that Stancarus acted more out of Vanity than out of Zeal. Perhaps, his Doctrine would not appear ſo Pernicious at this preſent time; for ſince the Objections of the Socinians (a) have obliged ſome Proteſtant Divines to ſay, that CHRIST is not Adorable, as he is a Mediator; one would think they believe he is not a Mediator, as he is God. He is certanly adorable, as he is God; and therefore if he ought not to be Worſhipp'd, as he is a Mediator, 'tis becauſe he is not a Mediator, as he is GOD. As for the Letter (b) of the Miniſters of Poland to the Divines of Straſburg, I think it ought to be obſerved that it was written by Men, who had Excommunicated Stancarus, and diſputed with him upon ſeveral occaſions. 'Tis an uſual thing to aſcribe to a Man the Conſequences which are thought to ariſe from his Doctrine, whether he owns them or not; for 'tis ſuppoſed he does not fairly diſown them. And therefore Prudence requires we ſhould judge of the Doctrine of that Writer not by that Letter, but by his own Writings: I don't think he was a Sabellian. However, read the following Paſſage: (c) Neque in eo ſolo ſubſtitit Stancari intemperies, quod doceret, Chriſtum Mediatorem eſſe juxta humanam tantum naturam; ſed ultra progreſſus, quoque veram Perſonarum Trinitatem ſuſtulit, unum Deum confuſâ Trinitate, apud quem Chriſtus homo mediatorem ageret, Trinomium, cum Sabellio imaginans, cæteras Eccleſias ut Arianas traduxit: quod patet ex litteris Miniſtrorum Polonorum, è Synodo Pincovienſi ſcriptis A. MDLXII. ad Theologos Argentinenſes, (quæ extat prima inter epiſtolas Zanchii) —— (d) Præterquam de Deo & Chriſto, etiam alia in cæteros fidei articulos movit Stancarus non ſana, de juſtificatione, &c. quod video ex Reſponſione Melanthonis, de controverſiis Stancari ſcriptâ, A. MDLIII. atque extat inter Melanthonis Declamationes, Tom. iv. Mind theſe Words of Melchior Adam: (e) ita diſſeruit (Stancarus) de duabus naturis ut non diſtinguere, verum ſeparare pleriſque ſit viſus. They plainly intimate that Stancarus's Enemies took the liberty to impute to him a Doctrine which he did not teach. Many thought that he divided the Two Natures of CHRIST. Which ſhews that he did not actually divide 'em, and even that ſuch a Diviſion did not neceſſarily reſult from his Principles; for in both caſes all his Adverſaries would have accuſed him of Neſtorius's Hereſy. We may therefore ſay, that Melchior Adam means the Senſe which many put upon Stancarus's Doctrine. But there is nothing more fallacious than to judge of a Man's Doctrine by the Interpretations of his Adverſaries. For a Confirmation of what I ſay, I ſhall quote Stancarus himſelf. The Divines of Zurich made uſe of theſe Words: Videat Stancarus qui noſtram eccleſiam vult gravare ſuſpicione hæreſeos, ne ipſe interea jure convincatur Neſtorianus a quo tam parum abeſt ut difficillimum ſit eum ab illo internoſcere. His Anſwer was, (f) Cum Tigurini non affirment me eſſe Neſtorianum, non opus eſt ut me defendam; quod ſi etiam affirmarent, cum non probent, ſed ſimpliciter accuſent, illis docti viri non crederent, quia ipſimet Tigurini ignorant prorſus quod fuerit dogma Neſtorii, ut jam probabo. Hoc tamen profiteor & coram Deo & hominibus fateor me nihil negotii habere cum Neſtorio, & Neſtorii doctrina. This Proteſtation ought to make us wary in the preſent caſe.

We ought chiefly to miſtruſt Orichovius (g), who ſays that Arius, Macedonius, Neſtorius, and Aerius were revived in Stancarus. What he imputes to him with reſpect to the Euchariſt (h) is ſo extravagant, and even contradictory, that it ought to be look'd upon as a Calumny. It does not appear that the Divines of Zurich and Geneva exclaim'd againſt Stancarus upon this Head. The Writers (i) of the Catalogues of Hereticks, accuſe him of teaching that the Lord's Supper is an Earneſt of the Body of our Saviour. Is it an Opinion contrary to that of Zuinglius's or Calvin's Doctrine? They add, that he was Infected with Rabbiniſm. This Accuſation was only grounded upon his Skill in Rabbinical Learning, and his mentioning ſometimes (k) the Opinions of the Rabbins.

(L) He gloried that he had been Perſecuted and Condemn'd, as St. Athanaſius was.] I have Adviſed, ſays he (l), ſeven times at leaſt, Philip Melancthon, Oſiander, and Felix, the Superintendant of the Poliſh Churches, and the Miniſters of Zurich and Geneva: I have done it Civilly, I diſſembled their Errors, the way I took was to aſk them whether they were ſtill Orthodox as to the Doctrines of the Trinity and Incarnation. They all joined againſt me. The following words contain a particular Account of his Complaints. (m) Omnes inſurrexerunt contra me. Alii enim vitam meam quæſiverunt ut (n) Melancthon per Joachimum Marchionem Brandenburgenſem & Electorem Imperii. Alii carceres præparaverunt perpetuos mihi, niſi admonitus aufugiſſem, ut Oſiander. Alii expulerunt me (o) è domo mea & literas ſcripſerunt ad omnes nobiles majoris & minoris Poloniæ & Ruſſiæ, ut nemo me reciperet, ſed expelleret ut Fælix ille impius & hypocrita cum ſuis Pinczovianis. Alii tam in Germania quam in Hungaria, Tranſylvania & Polonia minori multas Synodos celebraverunt contra me & fidem Catholicam de Trinitate & mediatore, & multos libellos plenos blaſphemiis Arrianis & Eutychianis, conviciis & horendis calumniis ediderunt, ut me tandem cum pura doctrina catholicæ fidei perderent, at nihil facere potuerunt, ſicut, nec poterunt. Durum enim eſt contra ſtimulum, unum Deum Trinitatem calcitrare. Hoc enim modo Conſtantius Imperator Arrianus cum Arrianis noveus Concilia celebravit contra D. Athanaſium, quem miris modis afflixerunt, proſcriptionibus, exiliis & perſecutionibus, ſed veritas tandem vicit.

He

---

† See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Anſwer to the Divines of Zurich and Geneva.

* Stancarus de Trinitate & mediatore adverſus Tigurin. folio 7. of the Sheet F.

(a) Hinc nata quæſtio de adoratione Chriſti qua mediatoris, circa quam in partes itum eſt aliis affirmantibus aliis negantibus --- licet fatendum ſit——— quæſtionem hanc prout inter orthodoxos agitatur problematicam eſſe, & minus principalem, de qua utrinque diſputari poteſt ſalva fidei compage, imo & multum logomachiæ involvat. Turrettin. ubi ſupra quæſt. 18. pag. 539. See alſo M. Saurin, Examen de la Theologie de Mr. Jurieu pag: 749. & ſeq. (b) See the Remark F. (c) Hoornbeeck in appar. ad diſput. Socinian. pag. 29. (d) Id. ib. pag. 30. (e) Melch. Adam. in vita Bullingeri pag. 494.

(f) Stancarus de Trinitate & Mediatore adverſus Tigurinos & Genevenſes folio 6. verſo of the Sheet F. (g) Orichovius in Chimæra apud Spondanum ubi ſupra. See the Folio 5 of that Book of Orichovius. (h) Ibid. See alſo Florim. de Remond. l. 2. ch. 15. (i) Lindanus, Prateolus, Gaultier. (k) One of his Books is Intitul'd, de Rabinorum & Anabaptiſtarum falſa opinione. Another is Intitul'd, de locuſtis juxta ſcripturam & Rabinos. See the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque, pag. 245 (l) Stancarus de trinitate & mediatore adverſus Tigurinos in the laſt Leaf but one of the Sheet K. (m) Id. ib. (n) This is ſo contrary to Melancthon's Genius, that it ought not to be credited. (o) In the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the ſame Book, he ſpeaks thus. Expuliſtis me paralyticum cum familia ex domo mea (non omnes damno) & ex toto regno quantum in vobis fuit.

Stanislaus Orichovius's Book, intit'led Chimæra †, which he wrote against him, contains many Reasons and hard Words: as for his Reasons, the only Design of them is to prove, that his Polish Majesty ought to destroy that Man, and all those who sow new Opinions in the Kingdom. Thus he thinks the Arguments of Sectaries ought to be refuted. He confesses that he had (M) married a Wife being a Priest, but he dissembles the Apostacy which Stancarus reproaches him with.

STEPHANUS Byzantinus was an expert Grammarian, who' liv'd in the Fifth or Sixth Century. He composed a Dictionary, wherein he inserted the (A) Nouns Adjectives derived from the Nouns Substantives of Places, which served to denote the Inhabitants of those Places. This was attended with many Observations borrowed from Mythology and History, which discover'd the Origine of Cities and Colonies, and their Changes and Differences, whereby the Author equally shew'd his Exactness and Learning. We have but a sorry Abridgment of that Work, which the Grammarian Hermolaus thought fit to make ‡, and which he dedicated to the Emperor Justinian. Notwithstanding the Injury this curious Book has suffer'd by the Ignorance of the Abbreviator and Transcribers, it has prov'd very useful to the Learned, who thought that no ancient Book did better deserve to be Corrected and Explain'd in a critical way. Sigonius, Casaubon, Scaliger, Salmasius *, &c. took upon them to Illustrate it; but it did not appear (B) in Latin till 1678. That Edition publish'd at

He adds, That the Ministers of Zurich writ to those of Poland in 1560, to expel him from their Churches. Take notice that he composed this Work at Dubeltz in Russia, in the Year 1561, and had it printed at Cracow the Year following. Stanislaus Matthew Stadnicki (a) had shelter'd him at Dubeltz.

(M) That he had married a Wife being a Priest.] So far he confesses that his Fault was as great as Stancarus's, who had also married being a Priest; but in other respects he clears himself of the Sin whereof he accuses his Adversary. He alledges for his Vindication, that he had kept within the Pale of the Church, and that he abstain'd from the Sacerdotal Functions after his Marriage. Thus he submitted to the Holy Canons, and underwent the Penance impos'd on married Priests; but Stancarus married and forsook the Church of Rome. (b) Do hoc tibi, atque concedo, me inter sacerdotes publicos, tantisper sacrificasse, quoad licuit, & quoad fas fuit: cùm autem sacerdos duxissem uxorem, à sacrificio me funditùs removi, & quod Canon jubet, in ordinem redegi, ita unus de multis factus, offero nunc Deo cor contritum & humiliatum, quod ne despiciat Deus, supplex plebe in media posco. An ego te imitarer arrogantem, atque contumacem? cui parùm erat visum mulieroso sacerdoti uxorem ducere, cum qua tibi connubii jus aliter non erat, nisi si à sacrificio, & à sacris administrandis abstineres: ni etiam sacrilegio status solennesque ceremonias sacerdotii pollueres, atque impiis in Ecclesiam introductis sacris, omnia sacra vetera, unà cum sacerdotio, ex Ecclesia exterminares. . . . . (c) Uxorem ego sacerdos, contra legem duxi: sed idem tamen ejus legis pœnam sustinui: abrogationem nempe sacerdotii. Hac enim mulcta sola sequitur meum factum, legis atque Canonis præscripto. . . . . Cùm factum, Stancare, in ducenda uxore, par sit nostrum, audi, quàm ipsius facti conditio sit inter nos dispar: tibi enim, in dissensione, ac dissidio, per summum Ecclesiæ contemptum, uxor ducta est: mihi verò, summa voluntate, ac judicio ipsius Ecclesiæ, hæc eadem est adjudicata. quid ita? quia pœnam legis sustinui: & quod obedientem decuit, Canonis jussu, à sacris me removi: tu contrà, & pœnam legis contemnis, & sacris te immisces. But we must not depend upon all that he says; he dissembles and suppresses what he thinks disadvantageous in the Accusation. He does not confess that he had intirely broke with the Church of Rome, and that he had disputed against it a long time. Nevertheless this is very true (d): He return'd afterwards into the Pale of that Church; which was the reason why Stancarus call'd him an Apostate.

(A) The Nouns Adjectives . . . to denote the Inhabitants.] The Title, περὶ πόλεων, de urbibus, which is commonly given to that Work, is neither that which the Author, nor that which the Abbreviator put to it. The true Title of the Book was ἐθνικά: hence Hermolaus intit'led the Abridgment he made of it ἐθνικῶν ἐπιτομή. " (e) But because " several Persons have undertaken at several times " to abridge this Abridgment, and to leave out " even the Name and the Epistle Dedicatory of " the first Abbreviator, 'tis no wonder if the anci" ent Titles of the Book are lost. In the room of " which some Smatterers in Learning have substi" tuted this περὶ πόλεων, because they thought the " main Design of the Author was to write a Geo" graphical Book. But they were mistaken, his " real Design was to write a Grammatical Work, " to explain the Names derived from Nations, " Cities, and Provinces, just as if one should ex" plain Grammatically the Words Parisian, French" man, Dutchman, &c. and shew the great Variety " that may be observed in the Formation of these " derivative Terms." This is the Opinion of those who have publish'd Stephanus, as it is related in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres. This Opinion might have been criticized; for there is no appearance that the principal Design of this Grammarian was the Explication of these derivative Terms. It was probably the least Part of his Project, and only an Accessory to his Work. I own he is very careful to observe that sort of Nouns, but that takes up little room, compar'd with the Facts that he relates, and the Testimonies he quotes; which would be more apparent if we had the whole Work. There we should find a Line or two in an Article for the explanation of the Noun Adjective, deriv'd from the Name of a City, and sometimes whole Pages in one Article only. I believe, till I be better inform'd, that the Title ἐθνικά implies all the Observations that can be made upon a Nation, a City, and a Place, in as much as an Author confines himself to the Origin of Places and Geographical History. See in the Remark G the Passage of Father Lubin. " (f) What is very pleasant is, that when they " cite the Author of this Book they call him Ste" phanus de Urbibus, whence it came to pass that " many Persons took de Urbibus to be the Name " of the Author's Family. Father Lubin had a " mind to call him Stephen of the Cities in his " Geographical Tables on Plutarch; but having " consulted the Gentlemen of the French Academy, " he could never make 'em approve his Design. " He seems to complain of their hardness in his " Geographical Mercury (g)." He was much in the wrong to complain of it.

(B) It did not appear in Latin till 1678.] There were three Greek Editions, that of Aldus Manutius, that of Junta, and that of Xylander; but though the latter engaged to publish his Latin Version forthwith, and though the Continuator of Gesner's Bibliotheca affirm'd, that the Book of our Stephanus was publish'd by Xylander in Greek and Latin in 1568, 'tis certain it did not thus appear till the Year I have mention'd. A Portugueze Jew nam'd Pinedo publish'd it at Amsterdam in 1678, with a Latin Translation of his own making, and a Commentary (h). Six Years after M. Rijk Professor at at Amsterdam was follow'd by that of Leyden ten Years after. The Dutch publish'd before-hand some Sheets of those Editions, which hindred Father (C) Lubin from publishing this Author, on whom he had bestow'd much Pains. The Fragment of Stephanus (D) concerning Dodona, plainly shews, that Hermolaus left out a thousand good Things; and because he adds sometimes something of his own, one cannot certainly tell (E) whether Stephanus Byzantinus made Profession of Christianity or not: for who knows whether the Passages wherein he seems to speak like a Christian are his? M. Moreri deserves (F) to be censured. Father Lubin had reason (G) to believe that a great Service would be done to the Readers, if the Nouns Adjectives of Inhabitants were inserted in Geographical Dictionaries. If I might advise, I would have them inserted in the Second Edition of Furetiere's Dictionary. M. Colomies ‡ quotes some Words of Scaliger, (H) which appear very obscure to me.

---

† It was printed at Cologne in 1563, in 8.

‡ Suidas in Ἑρμόλαος.

* See Colomies's Bibliotheque choisie p. 45. & seq. where you'll find the Names of many Authors, who have writ upon Stephanus.

) See the ...ille De... atory of ... Work.

) Stanisl. ...hovius Chimæra ...5.

) Id. ib. ...6.

) See ...n Sta... fcius ...leg. ...um ...rum ...78, 79.

) Nou... s de ...epubl. lettres July ...4. art. ...485.

(f) Nouv. de la Rep. des lettres ibid. pag. 486.

(g) Pag. 62.

(h) See the Judgment that Colomies passes on it in his Bibliotheque, choisie p. 46.

STILPO

at Leyden, publish'd the Notes of Lucas Holstenius on that same Book of Stephanus, which he had from Cardinal Francis Barberini. There was a new Edition of Stephanus printed at Leyden in 1688, in Greek and Latin, as that of Pinedo: the Latin Translation was made by Berkelius (i). This Translator added to it a large and learned Commentary. His Remarks on the last Letters are shorter and not so Learned, because he died before the Work was printed off. M. Gronovius has much contributed to the amendment of this Edition.

(C) Which hindred Father Lubin from publishing that Author.] This Disappointment vex'd him, and made him inveigh against the Dutch. Here I shall transcribe the Words of a Journalist. "(a) Having mention'd Father Lubin, I will not "forget the Indignation he has conceiv'd against "the Dutch, since he has been inform'd that "they were printing Stephanus de Urbibus with "a Latin Translation, and a Commentary. If "you consult the 63 Page of his Geographical "Mercury, you may see with what Anger he "speaks. The occasion of his Grief is, that they "have maliciously supplanted him, as he says, "and deprived him of the Fruit of his long "Studies. He had been ten Years translating that "Book, and had corrected the Faults of three Editions, by the help of two Greek Manuscripts of the "King's Library, which had been very civilly lent "him by M. Carcavi; he had made some Geographical Notes upon it, filled up the empty Spaces, "and compared all the Authorities of the Authors "cited with the Originals that are extant. Those "who saw his Manuscripts were amazed at his "great Labour; and yet the Dutch, all of a sudden "dispersed the first Sheets of their Edition over "all Europe, that no Bookseller might undertake "the printing of that Book. This is certainly a "severe Blow for an Author, and especially for "a Monk of the Order of St. Augustin, who was "going to shew the World his great Skill in the "Greek Tongue and critical Learning, which "People will not easily believe without plain "Proofs for it. It is so true, that People can "hardly believe such a thing, that the Abbot "Baudrand having inform'd the Publick in his "Dictionary that Stephanus de Urbibus had been "translated and adorned with very Learned Notes "by the R. F. Lubin; Pinedo writ on purpose to "Paris to know the truth of it, and was answer'd, that M. Baudrand had given it out in "fide parentum."

(D) The Fragment of Stephanus concerning Dodona.] It was taken from a very ancient Manuscript, which was in the Library of M. Seguier, Chancellor of France. Tennulius, Professor in the College of Nimeguen, was the first that publish'd it. He added to it a Latin Translation with Notes. Berkelius made a Second Edition of it (b) which contain'd a new Translation of his own, and some Remarks. Pinedo made a third Version of it, and publish'd it at the End of his Stephanus with Notes. M Gronovius made a fourth Edition of it (c) in 1681, wherein the three preceding Versions are to be seen: he added to it some Learned Dissertations.

(E) One cannot certainly tell whether Stephanus .... made Profession of Christianity.] The Reflection of a Journalist seems to me very proper to shew what a little Command the Writers of these last Ages have over their Prejudices; for there is hardly any Book wherein their unhandsome way of speaking of other Religions does not discover what Religion they profess. The Reflection is as follows. "(d) Although Lucas Holstenius believed that Stephanus Byzantinus was a "Christian, the thing is still disputable. There "are the same Difficulties concerning Ammianus "Marcellinus: some say he was a Pagan, others "maintain that he was not. I conclude from "thence, that the Writers of this Age are infinitely more passionate or conceited than the "ancient. Are there any Geographical or Historical Dictionaries, or even Histories, that do not "discover the Partiality of the Author for or "against the Church of Rome? It will never "be disputed in future Ages, whether Moreri, "the Abbot Baudrand, &c. were Roman Catholicks "or Protestants. One may know the Sect of a "Grammarian by the very Rudiments of a Grammar." If I was to give my Opinion, I had rather say, that our Stephanus was a Christian (e), than that he was a Pagan, as a very Learned Man (f) will have it; and had he always related the ridiculous Opinions of the Heathens, without criticizing on them it would be no Crime.

(F) Moreri deserves to be censured.] For he refers his Reader to a Book that was never publish'd, and says nothing at all of Pinedo's Edition. Father Lubin, an Augustin, says he, has translated it into Latin, and hath added to it very Learned Remarks. See his Translation. Would any Man doubt, after the reading of these Words, that Father Lubin's Stephanus has been actually publish'd? I believe Moreri thought so, but he deceiv'd his Reader. He had read in M. Baudrand, (g) Quod (opus Stephani) nunc Latinum reddidit, restituit, & notis illustravit doctissimis P. Augustinus Lubin Augustinianus. He did not doubt, after such a Testimony, that he might speak as positively as he did. M. Baudrand made a good use of Pinedo's Reflection; (h) he declar'd in his new Edition, that Father Lubin's Work was not yet (i) printed. Such a Clause should never be forgotten, by those who mention a Work that is still in the Author's Study.

(G) Father Lubin had reason to believe.] Here follows the Passage which I promised above. You'll find in it, among other things, the Author's Thoughts about the Design of Stephanus. The Design of Stephanus de Urbibus was, says he (k), to teach his Scholars the Greek History; and lest in reading they should take the People of one City for that of another, he made it his Business, speaking of Cities, to observe τὰ ἐθνικὰ of them, which we may translate the Familiar Names (l) that are given to those People, derived from the Name of the City where they dwell; for instance, ἀντιόχεια, τὸ ἐθνικὸν ἀντιοχεύς, ἀθῆναι, ὁ πολίτης ἀθηναῖος. We have good Reason to wish, that some Learned Man would undertake the same thing about Latin Names of Towns, adding to them the derivative Name by which the Inhabitants are called; as from Roma, Romanus, from Carthago, Carthaginensis. The same might be done in our own Language, and it wou'd not be unbecoming a Man of Parts to observe how the Inhabitants of our Cities and Provinces are called, how an Inhabitant of Bretagne is called a Breton, of Anjou an Angevin, of Paris a Parisian, and the like of others: the reading of our Histories would be more pleasant, and there would not be so many Faults in our Tongue; those derivative Words should not be wanting in our Geographical Dictionaries.

(H) Of Scaliger, which appear to me very obscure.] "Pinedo does not observe in his Preface that

"Nico-

---

‡ Ubi supra.

(i) He was Rector of the College of Delft.

(a) Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres, ubi supra, pag. 487.

(b) At Leyden, 1674. in 8.

(c) That Edition is in 4.

STILPO, a Native of Megara, was one of the most famous ancient Philoſophers. He was either Diſciple of Euclid himſelf, or of ſome of Euclid's Diſciples; and acquir'd ſuch a Reputation by his Eloquence, and the Acuteneſs of his Wit, that People left the other Schools in Crowds to go to Megara, in order to improve by his Lectures †. In a Journey he made to Athens, Trades-People left their Shops to ſee him *. Being jeſted (A) upon by reaſon of that Curioſity he had an Anſwer ready. Some ſay he kept a (B) Miſtreſs beſides his lawful Wife; but this is not certain. He was naturally very much given to Wine and Women; and yet it did not appear that he made himſelf drunk, or that he lived a lewd Life: He corrected the bad Inclinations of his Temper by (C) the Study of Philoſophy. The Fear of the Gods did not work that Effect in him; for he is reckon'd among (D) Atheiſts, or among thoſe Philoſophers, who had little † Diogen. Laertius, lib. 2. n. 113.

* Id. ib. n. 119.

" Nicolas Sophianus had in his Poſſeſſion an entire " Stephanus: Præter alios codices Græcos, ſays " Scaliger in a Letter to Gruterus, quos Nic. Sophianus habebat, erat & integer Stephanus cum toto K & Λ, quæ hodie imperfecta circumferri non ignoras (m). „ I can't apprehend what he means by an entire Dictionary, with the whole Letters K and L; 'tis a Riddle to me. Juſt as if one ſhould ſay, that a Man has read the whole New-Teſtament, with the Goſpel of St. John and the Acts of the Apoſtles.

(A) Being jeſted upon by reaſon of that Curioſity.] Every Body is eager to ſee you, ſaid one to him, they admire you as a wild Beaſt; ſuch an eagerneſs is like that which People expreſs to ſee a Bear or an Elephant. You are miſtaken, anſwer'd he (a), they admire me as a true Man. This Thought was not unlike that of Diogenes the Cynick, who, with a Lanthorn in his Hand, look'd for a Man in ſuch Places where he ſaw moſt People. The Men he ſaw having not a humane Reality and Perfection, ſeem'd to him Counterfeit Men; they had nothing of the Man but the Name. In this ſenſe Stilpo, a true and real Man, ſhou'd have been accounted by the Athenians a more ſcarce and admirable Animal, for which Trades-People ſhould leave their Work, than the moſt extraordinary Beaſts of the Indies.

(B) That he kept a Miſtreſs . . . but this is not certain.] Diogenes Laertius ſays ſo only upon the Credit of an inconſiderable Author. (b) Καὶ γυναῖκα ἠγάγετο, καὶ ἑταίρᾳ συνῆν Νικαρέτῃ, ὥς φησί που καὶ Ὀνήτωρ: Ac præter uxorem quam duxerat, Nicarete etiam pellice utebatur, ut Onetor ait. Had there been any ground for this Slander, Athenæus wou'd not have forgot to mention it, ſince he makes it his buſineſs to cry down every body upon that Account, eſpecially the Poets, the Wits and the Philoſophers. But he only ſays that Nicarete, a Curtezan, illuſtrious for her Birth and Learning, heard Stilpo's Lectures. Wou'd he not have added, that ſhe was his Concubine, if he had believed what Onetor ſays of it? (c) Νικαρέτη δὲ ἡ Μεγαρεὺς (d) οὐκ ἀγεννὴς ἦν ἑταίρα, ἀλλὰ καὶ γονέων καὶ κατὰ παιδείαν ἐπέραστος ἦν· ἠκροᾶτο δὲ Στίλπωνος τοῦ φιλοσόφου. Megarenſis quoque Nicarete non obſcura & ignobilis meretrix fuit, ſed & natalium ſplendore, & doctrinâ perquàm amabilis. Philoſopho namque Stilponi operam dederat. See in the following Remark the glorious Teſtimony that was given to our Philoſopher's Chaſtity.

(C) Corrected the bad Inclinations of his Temper by the Study of Philoſophy.] This we find in a Paſſage of Cicero. (e) Stilponem Megaricum philoſophum, acutum ſanè hominem, & probatum temporibus illis accepimus. Hunc ſcribunt ipſius familiares & ebrioſum, & mulieroſum fuiſſe: neque hoc ſcribunt vituperantes, ſed potiùs ad laudem: vitioſam enim naturam ab eo ſic edomitam, & compreſſam eſſe doctrina, ut nemo unquam vinolentum illum, nemo in eo libidinis veſtigium viderit. We ſhall ſee hereafter the noble Encomiums beſtow'd upon his Virtue by Plutarch (f) and Athenæus (g).

(D) He is reckon'd among Atheiſts, or among thoſe Philoſophers, &c.] He ſpoke his Thoughts too freely; ſo that he was baniſh'd, notwithſtanding the Subterfuges wherewith he endeavour'd to rectify his Expreſſions in the Areopagus. I ſhall uſe La Mothe le Vayer's Words, and at the ſame time correct 'em when there is occaſion for it. " (h) Stilpo was more cautious; for being ask'd " by Crates, whether our Prayers and Worſhip " are acceptable to God, he anſwer'd, that ſuch " a Queſtion ſhou'd not be ask'd in the Street, " but in Private, and in a Cloſet: which is the " ſame Anſwer that (l) Dion made to another, " who ask'd him, whether or no there were any " Gods. The great Pontiff Cotta gave alſo the " ſame Anſwer to Velleius, who ſuppoſed that it " was a very difficult thing to deny the Exiſtence " of the Gods. Credo, ſays he, ſi in concione quæratur, ſed in ejuſmodi ſermone & conſeſſu faciliimum. But Stilpo found himſelf much more " perplex'd upon another occaſion, being ſummon'd to appear before the Areopagites for ſaying that the Minerva of Phidias was not a God: " nevertheleſs he came off cunningly enough, by " ſaying that ſhe was a Goddeſs, and not a God, " making a diſtinction between a Male and a Female. Which made Theodorus ask him, as he " was going from the Court, whether he had ſeen " Pallas under her Petticoats, ſince he ſpoke ſo " pertinently of her Sex. Nevertheleſs he was " baniſh'd for his Freedom of Speech. „ To ſatisfy every Body I ſhall relate the thing in the words of the Original. (l) Κράτητος αὐτὸν ἐρωτήσαντος, εἰ οἱ θεοὶ χαίρουσι ταῖς προσκυνήσεσι καὶ εὐχαῖς, φασὶν εἰπεῖν, Περὶ τούτων μὴ ἐρώτα, ἀνόητε, ἐν ὁδῷ, ἀλλὰ μόνον. τὸ δ' αὐτὸ καὶ Βίωνα ἐρωτηθέντα εἰ θεοί εἰσιν, εἰπεῖν, Οὐκ ἀπ' ἐμοῦ σκεδάσεις ὄχλον ταλαπείριε πρέσβυ.

Quum rogaſſet illum Crates an Dii precationibus ac divinis honoribus gaudeant, Noli me inquit, fatue, in via de hiſce rogare, ſed ſolum ac ſeorſum. Hoc ipſum & Bionem interrogatum, an ſint Dii, dixiſſe tradunt, Tune ſenex turbam à nobis propellere curas?

Diogenes Laertius means, without doubt, Bion Boryſthenita, one of the boldeſt Atheiſts mention'd by the Ancients. The Conformity of his Thought with that of Stilpo is very diſadvantageous to the latter. Cotta in Cicero was little more Orthodox, ſince he found it no difficult thing to deny the Exiſtence of the Gods, but when there was ground to be afraid of Informers, and of the Fury of the People (m). Thoſe Men would have made a great Alteration in the Maxim mention'd by Balzac (n), De divinis etiam vera dicere periculoſum eſt; they would have put in præcipue inſtead of etiam. They had been right in a certain Senſe; for the Pagans wou'd not allow that the Ideas of the Unity and perfect Simplicity of God ſhou'd take place of their pernicious and ridiculous Opinions concerning the Divine Nature.

A STRANGE Opinion of the Heathens concerning the Statues of their Gods

Here follows an Inſtance of the Blindneſs of the Heathens. Can any thing be more ſtrange than the Opinion of the Athenians, otherwiſe an Ingenious and Learned Nation, concerning the Statues of their Gods? Did they not fancy that the Work of a Sculptor became a God, aſſoon as it was conſecrated to a Deity? Did they not believe that Phidias's Minerva was the very Goddeſs that ſprang out of Jupiter's Head? Doubtleſs they had ſuch a fooliſh Conceit, otherwiſe there had been no neceſſity for Stilpo to uſe ſuch a Diſtinction as he made to vindicate himſelf. He ask'd one Day, whether Minerva, the Daughter of Jupiter, was a God: he was anſwer'd that ſhe was. But, replied he, that Minerva is Phidias's Work, and not Jupiter's Daughter; and therefore ſhe is not a God.

(m) Colomies ubi ſupra, pag. 49.

(a) Θαυμάζουσί σε ὥσπερ θηρίον, οὐ μὲν, ἀλλ' ὡς ἄνθρωπον ἀληθινόν. Admirantur te veluti belluam. Minime, inquit ille, ſed velut hominem verum. Diogenes Laertius, lib. 2. n. 119.

(b) Id. ib. n. 114.

(c) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 596.

(d) He had been ſpeaking of another Nicarete, a Curtezan, page 593.

(e) Cicero de fato, circa init. pag. m. 324.

(f) See the Remark H. at the end.

(g) See the Remark E.

(h) La Mothe le Vayer, Dialogue de la diverſité des Religions, p. m. 358, 359. 'Tis the laſt of the five Dialogues of Oraſius Tubero.

(l) It ſhould be Bion.

(l) Diog. Laert. lib. 2. n. 117. pag. 142.

(m) Quæritur primum in ea quæſtione quæ eſt de natura Deorum, ſintne Dii, necne ſint? Difficile eſt negare credo, ſi in concione quæratur, ſed in hujuſcemodi ſermone & conſeſſu facillimum. Cicero de natura Deorum, lib. 1. pag. m. 85.

(n) Balzac Letter 3. to Chapelain, B. 1. pag. m. 21.

little Religion. Some alledge, as a Proof of his Impiety, a thing which (E) happen'd to him in a Temple, and perhaps they have done him no wrong. He had an extreme Indifference for the good Things of Fortune, and look'd upon the Qualities of his Soul as his only Good. Which appears from the (F) Anſwer he made after the Deſtruction of his Country. Nay, he look'd upon the Infamy of his Daughter as (G) an inſignificant thing; for he cou'd never be brought to own that it was a Diſhonour or a Misfortune. Many Learned Men want ſuch a Turn of the Mind. The Innovations of his Logick cannot be apa God. Whereupon he (p) was cited before the Areopagites, and did not deny what he had ſaid: he pretended that he had expreſs'd himſelf exactly; Minerva, ſaid he, is not a God, but a Goddeſs, for the Gods are Males. 'Tis plain, that if the Pagans had made a real Diſtinction between the Statues and the Gods to whom they were Conſecrated, there had been no neceſſity for Stilpo to alledge the difference between a God Male and a God Female, in order to juſtify himſelf. This way of clearing himſelf was Inſignificant, ſince the Word Θεὸς among the Greeks, and the Word Deus among the Latins, (q) did very properly belong to the Goddeſſes. The beſt Apology had been to ſay, that Minerva, as Jupiter's Daughter, was a God; but that the Piece of Metal out of which Phidias had made a Statue conſecrated to Minerva, was not a God. This Apology wou'd have been a very good one, if Stilpo had been arraign'd before other Judges; but it ſignified nothing in the Court of the Areopagites, and therefore Stilpo did not make uſe of it. He was not ignorant that the Gods were thought to incorporate themſelves in their Statues, and that the Statues were metamorphoſed into Gods by virtue of the Conſecration.

(E) A thing which happen'd to him in a Temple.] All thoſe who eat Garlick were forbidden to enter into the Temple of the Mother of the Gods. Stilpo had ſo little regard for that Prohibition, that he went into the Temple of that Goddeſs after he had eat Garlick, and even lay in it. He dream'd that the Goddeſs appear'd to him, and told him, Stilpo, you are a Philoſopher, and yet you offend againſt the Holy Laws. He thought he had anſwer'd her, Give me ſomething better to eat, and I'll engage to leave off Garlick. Menage alledges this Particular as a Proof (r) that this Philoſopher had no Religion. And indeed this ſavours of a prophane Man, who derided the Law and the Goddeſs. I confeſs that Athenæus, who relates this Adventure, makes a quite contrary Judgment of it; for he alledges it as a Sign of Stilpo's Temperance. (a) Στίλπων δ' οὐ κατεπλάγη τὴν ἐγκράτειαν κατεφαγὼν σκόροδα καὶ κατακοιμηθεὶς ἐν τῷ τῆς μητρὸς τῶν θεῶν ἱερῷ· ἀπείρητο δὲ τῷ τούτων τι φαγόντι μηδὲ εἰσιέναι. ἐπιστάσης δ' αὐτῷ τῆς θεοῦ κατὰ τοὺς ὕπνους, καὶ εἰπούσης ὅτι φιλόσοφος ὢν ὦ Στίλπων παραβαίνεις τὰ νόμιμα, καὶ τὸ δοκεῖν ἀποκρίνασθαι κατὰ τοὺς ὕπνους· σὺ δέ μοι πάρεχε ἐσθίειν, καὶ σκορόδοις οὐ χρήσομαι. Enimverò Stilpo ſua confiſus temperantia, non ideò perterritus eſt, quod cum allium comediſſet in templo matris Deûm obdormierit. Arcebatur enim delubro qui horum quidquam guſtaſſet. Ei porrò ſomnum capienti, adſtans Dea cùm diceret, Philoſophus es, ô Stilpon, & ſacras tamen leges violas, viſum ſibi fuiſſe hæc reſpondere in ſomnis, Præbe mihi quod edam, & allio non veſcar.

(F) The Anſwer he made after the Deſtruction of his Country.] Demetrius Poliorcetes having ſubdued Megara, gave Orders that Stilpo's Houſe ſhould be ſpared, and that whatever was taken from it ſhou'd be reſtor'd. I relate the thing as I find it in Diogenes Laertius (b). Were I to deſcribe it of my own Head, I wou'd add ſomething to it; I wou'd ſay that the Soldiers plunder'd Stilpo's Houſe without any regard to his Orders; but this is not the thing in queſtion: The Queſtion is, that Demetrius writ to Stilpo to know of him what he had loſt in the plundering of the Town. Stilpo anſwer'd him that he had loſt nothing, ſince no Body had depriv'd him of his Reaſon and Learning. He added ſeveral other things to inſpire him with Humanity and a noble Deſire of being Beneficial to Men; and the Prince was ſo mov'd with his Advice, that he conformed to it. I believe ſeveral devout People wou'd do the ſame; but I believe ſome wou'd go by this Maxim, Charity well order'd begins at home. Shou'd a Prince, after the plundering of a Town, promiſe them the Reſtitution of all their Effects, they wou'd certainly take hold of ſuch an opportunity to inſpire him with Clemency, and recommend to him the Welfare of the People; but they wou'd not forget themſelves; they wou'd ſend him an exact Liſt of all their Loſſes, and endeavour to make them up with Uſury. But here's a Philoſopher who was far from being a devout Man, who uſes his Intereſt with a Victorious Prince, to no other end than to perſuade him to put a ſtop to the Diſorders of War, and to beſtow his Favours upon the People; he does not ſend a Liſt of what he has loſt. His Houſe has been plunder'd, they offer him a full Indemnity; but he anſwers that he has loſt nothing, and that his Goods did not conſiſt in ſuch things as the Soldiers might take from him. This is doubtleſs very Generous. I wiſh Seneca had not ſuppoſed that Stilpo had loſt his Wife and Children; for a Man who boaſts in ſuch a caſe that he has loſt nothing, carries his Philoſophy too far. 'Tis probably a falſe Gloſs of Seneca; he is the only Author that (c) mentions ſuch a Loſs. (d) Omne intra ſe bonum terminabit, & dicet quod Stilpon ille dixit, Stilpon quem Epicuri epiſtola inſequitur. Hic enim capta patria, amiſſis liberis, amiſſa uxore, cum ex incendio publico ſolus, & tamen beatus exiret, interroganti Demetrio, cui cognomen ab exitio urbium Poliorcetes fuit, Num quid perdidiſſet? Omnia, inquit, bona mea mecum ſunt. Ecce vir fortis ac ſtrenuus, ipſam hoſtis ſui victoriam vicit. Nihil, inquit, perdidi. Dubitare illum coëgit, an viciſſet. Omnia mea mecum ſunt. Juſtitia, virtus, temperantia, prudentia, hoc ipſum, nihil bonum putare quod eripi poſſit. 'Tis ſaid that (e) Ptolemy, ſurnamed Soter, having taken Megara, offer'd ſome Money to Stilpo, and deſir'd him to take Shipping with him. That Philoſopher accepted of a little Money, and refuſed the Honour of following that Prince into Egypt. He retir'd into the Iſle of Ægina till Ptolemy return'd into his Kingdom. This ſhews a great Diſintereſtedneſs, tho' it falls very ſhort of the preceding Inſtance.

(G) Nay, he look'd upon the Infamy of his Daughter as an inſignificant thing . . . . Many Learned Men want ſuch a turn of Mind.] He married her to Simmias: 'tis not ſaid whether the Husband of that Lewd Woman did patiently bear his Diſgrace; but we are told that the Father expreſs'd an extraordinary Indifference. Your Daughter's Behaviour is a Diſgrace to you, ſaid one to him. Not at all, anſwer'd he, ſhe can no more caſt a Blot upon my Reputation, than I can adorn hers. (f) Ταύτης οὐ κατὰ τρόπον βιούσης, εἶπέ τις πρὸς τὸν Στίλπωνα, ὡς καταισχύνοι αὐτόν· ὁ δέ, ΟΥ μᾶλλον (εἶπεν) ἢ ἐγὼ ταύτην κοσμῶ. Hæc dum laſciviùs viveret, Stilponique à quodam renuntiatum eſſet eam ſibi probro eſſe, Non, inquit, iſta majori mihi probro eſt, quam ego illi ornamento. See in Plutarch (g) how he maintain'd that the Sins of his Daughter were only a Misfortune to herſelf. Happy are thoſe who can give ſuch a turn to their Minds.

A LIST of ſome Learned Men diſgraced by the Lewdneſs of their Families.

Such an Indifference wou'd have been very neceſſary to many Learned Men, in order to make their Lives eaſy; for their Wives or Daughters have been very Unchaſte: and I think there are ſtill ſome Inſtances of ſuch a Diſorder. Fernel (h) and Druſius (i) have been in that Category; and Cujas likewiſe: (k) The Daughter of that Great Man was of ſuch an Amorous Temper, that tho' Preſident de Thou procured her a Husband when ſhe

(p) Ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ εἰς Ἄρειον πάγον προσκληθέντα μὴ ἀρνήσασθαι, φάσκειν δ' ὀρθῶς διειλέχθαι. μὴ γὰρ εἶναι αὐτὴν θεὸν, ἀλλὰ θεάν· θεοὺς δὲ εἶναι τοὺς ἄρρενας. Qua ex re quum in Arium pagum pertractus fuiſſet, nihil inficiatum ferunt, imo recte ſe loquutum aſſeruiſſe: non enim deum eſſe, ſed deam: deos quippe mares eſſe. Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra, num. 116. p. 148.

(q) See Menage's Notes in hunc locum Laertii, pag. 128.

(r) Fuit Stilpon parcus Deorum cultor & infrequens, imo ἄθεος. Narrat Athenæus X. 5. in Templo matris Deûm allium &c. Menagius in Laert. lib. 2. *n.*117. pag. 128.

(a) Athenæus lib. 10. cap. 5. pag. 422.

(b) Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra, n. 115.

(c) Diog. Laertius ſays nothing of it, nor Plutarch in the two Places wherein he mentions Stilpo's Anſwer, viz. in his Tract de educatione puerorum, p. 5. and in the Tract de animi tranquillitate, pag. 475.

(d) Seneca, epiſt. 9. pag. m. 178, 179. See alſo the ſame Seneca de conſtantia ſapientis, cap. 5.

(e) Diog. Laert. ubi ſupra, n. 115.

(f) Id. ib. n. 114.

(g) Plut. de tranquillitate animi, p. 468.

(h) See the Art. Fernel. (i) See the Art. Druſius, Remark O.
(k) Nouv. de la Repub. des Lettres for June 1686. p. m. 722.

approved; he rejected the (H) Universals: And though it were supposed that he did it only to ridicule the Sophists, he shou'd be blamed for his ill Taste and his wrong Subtilties. Instead of improving one's Judgment, they spoiled it.

A

she was but Fifteen Years of Age, having doubtless observed that she was in haste, yet he could not prevent her Anticipating her Marriage, and after she was Married, she carried on her Love Intrigues so openly, that her Husband, who was an Honest Gentleman, died of Grief for it. The Author from whom I have these Words, had been saying, That the Scholars, who did what they pleased with her, called it Commenting upon Cujas's Works, and that some of them, out of Respect to her Father's Memory, abstain'd from such an Infamous Commerce. 'Tis said, That a Collegue of Cujas was not so Discreet, and that he Caress'd his Daughter, even during her Father's Life. Paul Manutius was in the same Case. He put his Daughter into a Convent, hoping by that means to free himself from the Care of looking after her; but even after she had made her Vows, she writ several Letters to him one after another to let him know, that if he did not take her out of that Confinement, she wou'd steal away. That poor Man made several Journeys, and used so many Sollicitations, that he obtained from the Court of Rome the Dispensation his Daughter desired. She quickly got a Husband, and tho' he was a very honest Man, she gave up her self to all manner of Dissoluteness. Her Father did not sink under his Grief, nor under the Indisposition occasion'd from time to time by the Remains of a Venereal Disease; but it made him very uneasy. (l) Sacris in claustris jampridem conjecta filia, eo dementiæ, ac furoris abrepta est impetu, ut inde se clàm egressuram minaretur misero patri, nisi omni studio ipsam extrahere niteretur. Quo factum, ut is plurium itinerum vexatione, morisque apud Romanos judices prehensatione, æger animo, adflictusque corpore, tandem hujusmodi poculum, licet peramarum, tamen justa necessitate quæsitum exorbere sit coactus, insitato exemplo virginem pluribus annis Deo dicatam, mundanis iterum angustiis devovendi, quæ cum postea honesto conjugi nupta, prava se libidinis fœdarit indole, infeliciterque peregerit, intestino is mœrore correptus, reliquum vitæ sollicita cogitatione traduxit. Quùm vero etiam ei accesserint vetusta luis gallicæ inquinamenta, quibus alternatim vel temporum, vel locorum, vel victuum lædebatur mutatione, deterrimam prorsus vitæ conditionem sortitus videri potuit, nisi commoderato semper, infractoque animo, eam se perferre singulis ostendisset. Some Learned Men have had a Lewd Wife and a Lewd Daughter all at once. Barnabas Brissonius was one of 'em, if we believe Scaliger (m). Some others have been so deeply engag'd in one half of that Misfortune, that no mention is made of their Daughters. Such was Paulus Perusinus, that Learned Man, so highly praised by Boccacio, and so well belov'd by Robert, King of Naples. His Wife made him a Cuckold; and when he died, his (n) finest Writings were treacherously destroy'd by his Wife. I cou'd give a List, wherein one might see great Names, besides the Learned of a low Rank, quos fama obscura recondit; but I leave it to those who will undertake to carry on the Subject which Pierius Valerianus (o) began. It will not be amiss to put in one Class, by themselves, all the Learned, who have been Unhappy by their Marriage. All those Men wanted our Stilpo's Indifference.

(H) He rejected the Universals.] Being a sharp (a) Disputant, he rejected the very Species. Who says Man, says nothing of this or that Man; he does not speak of the one more than of the other, and therefore he says nothing of any Body. The Grass that is shown me, is not Grass; for Grass existed a thousand Years ago; and therefore it is not the Grass you shew me. Such was Stilpo's way of Arguing (b). Perhaps 'twill be thought that he proposed those Objections only to play upon an Equivocation, which the Greek construction of the Words afforded him, and to which the Modern Languages are not liable. There is a great difference between these two Propositions, Peter is Man, Peter is a Man. The first is false and not used; the second is true, and generally used: The Greeks and Latins wou'd have made use of the same Terms, to say, That Peter is Man, and that Peter is a Man. Hence it is that Stilpo might suppose that if he ask'd, shewing a Cabbage, What's that? he would be answered, 'Tis Cabbage. But he might have answered, You are mistaken; Cabbage existed a Thousand Years ago; and therefore it is not what I shew you. Such a Cavil wou'd be groundless now-a-days; for the Answer to Stilpo's Question wou'd be, 'Tis a Cabbage, and not 'Tis Cabbage. Is it not then likely that this Philosopher had no other Design than to divert himself with Cavils, grounded upon the turn of the Expression? I believe he had another thought, and that he was altogether against universal Terms, and what they call Predicables in the Aristotelian Schools. There was something real in his Objection; it was more than playing upon Words. I think he meant that the Species is not affirm'd of Individuums, and that therefore the Species are a meer Chimera. Man is not more this Man than that Man, and it does not signify John rather than Peter; and therefore it signifies no body. His Meaning appears more clearly in Plutarch than in Diogenes Laertius. We read in Plutarch that Colotes violently exclaimed against Stilpo, and accused him of overturning humane Life; for how could we live, said Colotes, if we were not allow'd to call a Man Good, and a Captain; and if we shou'd say Man is Man, and then by it self Good is Good. (c) Τραγῳδίαν ἐπάγει τῷ Στίλπωνι, καὶ τὸν βίον ἀναιρεῖσθαι φησὶν ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, λέγοντος ἕτερον ἑτέρου μὴ κατηγορεῖσθαι. πῶς γὰρ βιωσόμεθα, μὴ λέγοντες ἄνθρωπον ἀγαθὸν, μηδὲ ἄνθρωπον στρατηγὸν ἀλλὰ ἄνθρωπον ἄνθρωπον, καὶ χωρὶς, ἀγαθὸν ἀγαθὸν, καὶ στρατηγὸν στρατηγόν. Tragœdiam adversus Stilponem excitat, atque ab eo vitam tolli, quod dixisset, Alterum de altero non prædicari. Quomodo enim, inquit, vivemus, si non dicamus hominem bonum, hominem imperatorem, sed hominem hominem seorsum, bonum bonum, ducem ducem. It appears from this Objection of Colotes, that Stilpo wou'd not allow that a thing shou'd be affirm'd of another, but that every thing shou'd be affirm'd of it self, and that the Attribute of a Proposition shou'd not reach farther then the Subject. Here's the Ground he went upon. That two things may be affirm'd one of another, they ought to have the same Nature; for in every Affirmative and true Proposition, the Attribute and the Subject are really the same. But Man and Good are not of the same Nature; the Definition of the one differs from the Definition of the other; and therefore Good and Man cannot be joyn'd together, one of 'em cannot be affirm'd of the other. In like manner running cannot be attributed to a Horse; 'tis an Action, the Definition whereof is not the same with that of a Horse. Besides, shou'd you affirm of a Man that he is Good, and of a Horse that he Runs, that is, shou'd you affirm that Good and Man are the same thing, and that a Horse and Running are the same thing, (d) how cou'd you affirm that Aliments and Medicaments are good, and that Lyons and Dogs run? These are Logical Subtilties, whereby all Languages wou'd be confounded, and all Men would be oblig'd to be silent or to speak ridiculously; and yet a Sophist train'd up in the Art of Disputing, and used to Cavils about Abstractions, wou'd give a great deal of trouble to his Adversaries, if he undertook to maintain Stilpo's Opinion to the utmost. He wou'd not be immediately silenced by the Distinction of the Attributes in Concreto and in Abstracto, and by the secundum id quod important in obliquo, or in recto; it wou'd be requisite to dispute a long time about this Question, utrum universale maneat in actuali prædicatione. These Trifles, tho' contemptible in themselves, and such as cannot perplex a Man of a solid Judgment, might nevertheless carry a Man into Spinozism: Hæ nugæ seria ducunt in mala: For those who deny Universal Attributes, cannot admit any Individuum's that resemble one another. They must say, that two Beings, of which

(l) Jan-us Imperialis, in
M[illegible] historici,
pag. 108.

(m) In Scaligeranis, voce Biron.

(n) Quem librum maximo hujus operis incom-modo [illegible]ella im-pudica conjugis crimine, eo defuncto, cum pluribus aliis ex libris ejusdem, perditum
comperi.
Boccacius de Genealogia Deor.
lib. 15. c.
[illegible]. apud
Vossium de Hist. Lat.
pag. 526.

(o) He wrote a Book intituled, De Infelicitate literatorum.

(a) Δεινὸς δ' ἄγαν ὢν ἐν τοῖς ἐριστικοῖς, ἀνῄρει καὶ
τὰ εἴδη.
Quum
[illegible]et dis-putator acerrimus, species quo-que tolle-bat. Dio-
gen. La-
ert. ubi supra, n.
115.

(b) Apud Diogen.
Laert. ib.

(c) Plutarch. adversus Colotem, pag. 1119. C.

(d) Εἰ μὲν γὰρ ταὐτόν ἐστι τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ τὸ ἀγαθὸν, καὶ τῷ ἵππῳ τὸ τρέχειν, πῶς καὶ σιτίῳ καὶ φαρμάκῳ τι ἀγαθὸν, καὶ νὴ Δία πάλιν λέοντος καὶ κυνὸς τὸ τρέχειν, κατηγοροῦμεν· εἰ δ' ἕτερον, οὐκ ὀρθῶς ἄνθρωπον ἀγαθὸν καὶ ἵππον τρέχειν λέγομεν. Nam si idem sunt homo & bonum, & equus ac currere, quo pacto bonum etiam de cibo & medicamento dicetur? rursusque currere de leone & cane? Ergo non recte dicemus de homine prædicari bonum, de equo currere, cum diversa sint. Plutarch. ibid. pag. 1120. A.

A Curtezan rallied him about it (I) in Anſwer to a Cenſure of Raillery he uſed againſt her. I muſt not forget a Dream of his, which ſeems to ſignify (K) that he was a Prieſt, and which ſhews, that even in his Sleep, he knew how to Philoſophize.

STOF.

which the Attribute of Subſtance ſhou'd be truly affirm'd, wou'd be one and the ſame Subſtance; which is to ſay in equivalent Terms, that there is but one Subſtance in the whole Univerſe. Common Senſe agrees, in this Point, with the moſt evident Notions of Philoſophy. A Peaſant does clearly conceive, without being miſtaken, that the whole Eſſence of Man belongs to each Man, and ought to be affirm'd of each Man, and yet that each Man is diſtinct from all others. And therefore he clearly conceives that the ſame Eſſence, which is affirm'd of Peter is not affirm'd of Paul; but that the Eſſence, which is affirm'd of the one, is like the Eſſence which is affirm'd of the other. The Scotiſts are pitifully miſtaken in this Point, with their Univerſale formale à parte rei. The moſt perplexing Subtilties will never prevail over theſe Notions in a Man of Solid Parts; and whoever cannot reſolve 'em, may juſtly laugh at 'em. I remember that in a publick Diſputation, one of the Opponents endeavoured to prove that there are no Univerſals; he went about it thus. If there were Univerſals, Genus's wou'd have two Species under them; but it is impoſſible: for a Species cannot differ from another: I prove it. The Difference of a Species is altogether like the Difference of another; therefore there are not two Species. The Conſequence is right, and I am going to ſhew the truth of the Antecedent by an Example. Rationability, the ſpecificial Difference of a Man, does not at all differ from Irrationability, the ſpecificial Difference of Beaſts. Rationability does not differ from a humane Soul; therefore it is a Subſtance: Irrationability (e) does not really differ from a Beaſt; therefore it is a Subſtance. Thus Rationability, as it is a Subſtance, does not differ from Irrationability. How then does it differ from it? Are there ſome Entities or Realities in it that are not in Irrationability? But are thoſe Entities Accidents or Subſtances? If they are Subſtances, they make no Difference between Rationability and Irrationability. If they are Accidents, they have the Eſſence of Being; but Irrationability has it likewiſe, and therefore it perfectly reſembles them; they cannot therefore make it differ from Rationability. If it be ſaid, that they differ from Being, ſince they have the Attribute of Inherence, which Being has not; I reply that Inherence is a Being, and therefore cannot make an Accident differ from Being. And if you Anſwer that Inherence implies ſomething elſe beſides Being, I repeat my Inſtance: That other thing does neceſſarily contain the Eſſence of Being; it is therefore like Being; and you'll always have that Objection in your way, tho' you ſhou'd ſuppoſe in infinitum that the Conſtitutive Character of Inherence contains ſomething that has ſomething beſides Being. This Objection proves that Being has not under it Subſtance and Accident, and that Subſtance has not under it Body and Spirit, and conſequently that there are no Univerſals, Quod erat probandum. The Reſpondent did not apprehend the Difficulty; nor did the Preſident apprehend it much better. The Aſſembly did not apprehend it neither, and the Opponent was like to be hiſs'd. Doubtleſs it was the beſt way to Silence him: His Argument was altogether wrong; for it wou'd prove that there is no difference between White and Black, a Pain and a Pleaſure.

If you conſult Ariſtotle's Metaphyſicks, in that part of his Work wherein he Examines what concerns the Unity of Being, you'll ſee that the Queſtion about Univerſals was ſurrounded with a thouſand perplexing Difficulties. He does not forget this Objection: If Being and Unity are ſomething, how can there be many Beings beſides that thing? How can there be more than one Being? For what differs from Being is nothing; and therefore we muſt conclude, as Parmenides did, that all Beings are but one; becauſe, if there were many, they wou'd be different from Being, that is, they wou'd be nothing at all. (†) εἰ δ᾽ ἔστι τι αὐτὸ ἓν καὶ αὐτὸ ὄν, ἀναγκαῖον οὐσίαν αὐτῶν εἶναι τὸ ἓν καὶ τὸ ὄν. οὐ γὰρ ἕτερόν τι καθόλου κατηγορεῖται, ἀλλὰ ταῦτα αὐτά. ἀλλὰ μὴν εἴ γ᾽ ἔσται τι αὐτὸ ὂν καὶ αὐτὸ ἕν, πολλὴ ἀπορία πῶς ἔσται τι παρὰ ταῦτα ἕτερον. λέγω δὲ πῶς ἔσται πλείω ἑνὸς τὰ ὄντα. τὸ γὰρ ἕτερον τοῦ ὄντος οὐκ ἔστιν. ὥστε κατὰ τὸν Παρμενίδου συμβαίνειν ἀνάγκη λόγον ἓν ἅπαντα εἶναι τὰ ὄντα, καὶ τοῦτο εἶναι τὸ ὄν. Quòd ſi quid eſt ipſum unum, & ipſum ens, neceſſe eſt, eorum ſubſtantiam eſſe unum, & ens: non enim aliquid aliud univerſaliter prædicatur, ſed eadem ipſa. At vero ſi quid erit ipſum ens, & ipſum unum, magna dubitatio eſt, quonam modo aliquid aliud præter hæc erit. Dico autem quomodo entia erunt plura uno. Quod enim aliud ab ente eſt, non eſt. Quare ſecundum Parmenidis rationem, neceſſe eſt accidere omnia entia eſſe unum, & hoc eſſe ens. It does not appear that Ariſtotle was able to Reſolve that Difficulty.

But to return to Stilpo. Colotes is blamed for two Things: one is, that he Exclaimed againſt the Subtilties of that Philoſopher, without reſolving them categorically; the other is, that he pitch'd on a Doctrine, in order to criticize it, which Stilpo advanced meerly out of a witty (f) Conceit, and to ridicule the Sophiſts of that time, by giving them a Bone to pick. Plutarch was the more exaſperated at this Choice of Colotes, becauſe a great many fine things might have been ſaid of Stilpo, of which Colotes did not ſpeak one word. It will appear from the following Paſſage of Plutarch, that Stilpo was a very honeſt Man. (a) Μετὰ δὲ Σωκράτην καὶ Πλάτωνα προσμάχεται Στίλπωνι, καὶ τὰ μὲν ἀληθινὰ δόγματα καὶ τοὺς λόγους τοῦ ἀνδρός, οἷς ἑαυτόν τε κατεκόσμει καὶ πατρίδα καὶ φίλους, καὶ τῶν βασιλέων τοὺς περὶ αὐτὸν σπουδάσαντας, οὐκ εἴρηκεν, οὐδ᾽ ὅσον ἦν φρόνημα τῇ ψυχῇ μετὰ πραότητος καὶ μετριοπαθείας. ὧν δὲ παίζων καὶ χρώμενος πρὸς τοὺς σοφιστὰς λογαρίων προὔβαλλε γέλωτι αὐτοῖς, ἑνὸς μνησθείς, καὶ μηδὲν εἰπὼν πρὸς τοῦτο, μηδὲ λύσας τὴν πιθανότητα, τραγῳδίαν ἐπάγει τῷ Στίλπωνι. Poſt Socratem & Platonem Stilpo oppugnatur. Hujus quidem vera decreta, & ſermones, quibus ſeipſum, patriam, amicos regeſque ipſi operam navantes exornavit, tum animi elationem manſuetudini & affectuum mediocritati conjunctam, Colotes non retulit. Quas vero jocans ille ſophiſtis ridenſque objecit ſententiolas, harum unam allegans, cum neque refelliſſet neque ſolviſſet ipſe probabilitatem, tragœdiam adverſus Stilponem excitat.

(I) A Curtezan rallied him about it.] Athenæus ſays, That Stilpo ſitting at Table with Glycera, upbraided her with Corrupting young Men. To which ſhe anſwered, You are charged with the ſame Fault, for People complain that you ſpoil their Judgment with your needleſs and Sophiſtical Subtilties; and they add, that it ſignifies but little which way they are ſpoiled, whether it be by a Philoſopher or a Curtezan. (b) Μηδὲν οὖν διαφέρειν ἐπιτριβομένοις καὶ κακῶς πάσχουσιν ἢ μετὰ φιλοσόφου ζῆν ἢ ἑταίρας. Nihilque referre iis qui ſic in miſerias incidunt ac pereunt, an apud philoſophum degant, an apud ſcortum. Athenæus had been ſaying that Curtezans took great pride in their Learning, whereby they got the Art of quick Reparteės and witty Sayings; but Glycera's Anſwer alledged by him, is no proper Inſtance to ſhew the juſtneſs of their Railleries. That Curtezan defended her ſelf by advancing a Falſity; for there never was ſo great a Corruption in Ancient Greece, that People ſhou'd have been as unwilling to ſee young Men learn nothing but vain Subtilties of a Philoſopher, as to ſee 'em ingag'd in lewd Practices with Women.

(K) A Dream of his . . . which ſhews that even in his ſleep he knew how to Philoſophize.] Plutarch will afford me the Commentary I want upon theſe words. "It is reported of one Stilpo a Philo-"ſopher,

(e) By Irrationability the Opponent underſtood the poſitive Attributes which conſtitute the Beaſt, conſidered as not having the Faculty of Reaſoning.

(†) Ariſtot. Metaph. lib. 3. c. 4. p. m. 655.

(f) Plutarch is perhaps miſtaken in ſuppoſing this.

(a) Plut. ubi ſupra, pag. 1119. C.

(b) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 584.

STOFLERUS (John) a Famous Mathematician and Aſtrologer, was born at Juſtingen, in Suabia, the 10th of December 1452. Notwithſtanding the Meanneſs of his Birth, he made ſo great a Progreſs in his Studies, that he was admired for it. He particularly minded thoſe things, for which he was naturally beſt Qualified; for being ſenſible that he had a Genius for Mathematicks, he applied himſelf to that Science much more than to any other. He Taught it at Tubingen with ſo good Succeſs, that he got a wonderful Reputation. The Books (A) he publiſhed, kept up and encreaſed the Glory he had acquired by his Lectures †; but he did not ſucceed in the Prognoſtications he had the boldneſs to publiſh. He foretold that there would be a great (B) Deluge in the Year 1524, and ſtruck a great Terror all over Europe: but he was confounded by the Event. I ſhall mention ſeveral Particulars relating to this,

† Taken from Melchior Adam in Vitis Philoſophorum, pp. 73, 74.

" ſopher, that he thought he ſaw Neptune in his " ſleep, and that he ſeemed very much diſpleaſed with him, becauſe he had not (as was uſual with his Prieſts) ſacrificed an Ox in Honour of him; not in the leaſt daunted at the " Apparition, he thus boldly accoſted it. Neptune! What's this Buſineſs you here complain of? You come hither like a Child, and are angry with me, becauſe I did not borrow Money and run in Debt to pleaſe you, and fill the City with coſtly Odours, but privately ſacrificed to you in my own Houſe, ſuch ordinary Victims as I could get. At " this confident reply, Neptune ſmiled, and " (as the Story goes) reached him his Hand, as " an Aſſurance of his good Will to him, and " told him, That for his ſake he would ſend the " Megarenſians abundance of Fiſh that Seaſon."

(A) The Books he publiſh'd.] His Kalendarium Romanum, dedicated to the Emperor Maximilian, was printed (d) in 1518. He publiſhed his Aſtronomical Tables at Tubingen, the Year before. He alſo publiſhed Rationem compoſitionis Aſtrolabiorum; Coſmographicas aliquot deſcriptiones, de Sphæra Coſmographica, hoc eſt, de globi terreſtris artificioſa ſtructura; de duplici terræ projectione in planum, hoc eſt, qua ratione commodius chartæ Coſmographicæ, quas Mappas mundi vocant, deſignari queant. A Latin Commentary upon Proclus's Sphere, and a German Tract about the Dimenſion by the Aſtrolabe and the Quadrant, and the Calculation of Conjunctions and Oppoſitions, with a Cenſure upon the Ancient Cycles, and the Prediction of Eclipſes (e). Voſſius (f) ſays his Ephemerides begin with the Year 1432, and end with the Year 1525; but according to Melchior Adam, they begin with the Year 1532, and reach to the 20 Years following. Voſſius is more credible than Melchior Adam. Doubtleſs the latter took for the whole Work what was only a Continuation of it.

(d) At Oppenheim.

(e) Taken from Melchior Adam in Vitis Philoſophorum, pag. 74.

(f) Voſſius, de Scient. Mathem. pag. 186.

(B) Foretold that there woud be a great Deluge in the Year 1524, and ſtruck a great Terror.] Auguſtin Niphus perceiving the great Amazement of the People after that Prediction, publiſhed a Book to ſhew that there was no Reaſon to fear ſuch a Deluge. (g) Cum ſtatim à publicata Joan. Stoefleri Ephemeride diluvii iſtius prænuncia, Auguſtinus Niphus ut homines à gravi timore liberaret, quem ipſa omnibus incutiebat, libellum ſuum de falſa diluvii prognoſticatione Carolo V. obtuliſſet, non defuit, &c. Princes, and even learned Men were afraid of that Calamity as well as the People; which was doubtleſs occaſion'd in ſome Meaſure by the Agreement of many Aſtrologers in publiſhing ſuch a Prediction, among whom there were ſome of the beſt Aſtronomers. Cirvellus, Profeſſor of Divinity at Alcala, put out a Book in the vulgar Tongue, wherein, without blaming in general the Precautions that were us'd againſt the Deluge, he was contented to blame thoſe, who made great Expences upon that Account: He Propoſed ſome Expedients to preſerve one's ſelf from the Inundation, at a cheap rate. Thoſe, who had their Houſes near the Sea, or near ſome Rivers, left 'em, and ſold their Land and Houſehold Goods at a great Loſs. (h) Simile falſis hujuſmodi, & extremæ dementiæ prognoſticis, fuiſſe illud mihi perſuadeo, quo non vulgarium Ephemeridum conſarcinatores dumtaxat, ſed ex Aſtronomiæ peritiores multi, ſupremam ex imaginaria quadam eluvione, cunctis mortalibus perniciem impendere contendebant; adeoque rumoribus iſtis, vulgarium hominum animos perterruerant, ut metus etiam ad ſapientiores pervenerit. Nam Petrus Cirvellus Hiſpanorum omnium ſui temporis doctiſſimus, cum Theologiæ, in almo Complutenſi Gymnaſio, Lectoris munere fungeretur, & verò multos, ut ipſemet inquit, fluviis, vel mari finitimos populos, jam ſtupido metu perculſos, domicilia ac ſedes mutare vidiſſet, ac prædia, ſupellectilem, bonaque omnia, contra juſtum valorem ſub actione diſtrahere, ac alia loca vel altitudine, vel ſiccitate magis ſecura requirere, ſui officii eſſe putavit, in publica illa conſternatione, quam de nihilo excitari perſuaſum non habebat, Conſilium vernaculo ac materno idiomate conſcribere, ut paſſim ab omnibus legeretur, quo ſingulis modum præſcriberet, impendentis ejuſmodi calamitatis præcavendæ: atque adeò ita rebus ſuis conſulendi, ut minimum ab illa damnum reciperent. The Great Chancellor of the Emperor Charles V. conſulted Peter Martyr about that Conſternation, who told him that the Calamity wou'd not be ſo dreadful as People fancied; but that thoſe Conjunctions of the Planets wou'd certainly occaſion a great Diſorder. The Duke of Urbino ſtood in need of a good Philoſopher, who proved to him in a printed Book, that the fear of ſuch a Flood was ill-grounded. (i) Quod rumor ille non per Hiſpanias modo, ſed longè lateque per Europam diſſeminatus fuerit, teſtem ſiſtere poſſum Petrum Martyrem, qui de illo à Caroli V. magno Cancellario percunctatus, ipſi hunc in modum ex Valleoleto reſpondet Epiſtola 20. libri 34. Quid ego ſentiam de pluviis, in initio anni quarti & vigeſimi prædictis ab Aſtronomis interrogas, veras fore conjunctiones illas omnium Planetarum, & iiſdem locis ſcio, in materiis præcipuè diſpoſitis, & particularibus regionibus aliquid magni parituras arbitror; ſed neque auſim eorum ſententias approbare, qui ore aperto abſolutè fore alluviem ita generalem vociferantur, ut neque mari, aut ulli terrarum parti ſit ignoſcendum, quin horrenda ſint incommoda perpeſſuræ, &c. Neque verò tantùm Cancellarius ille ſe ex eorum numero eſſe oſtendit, quos vaniſſimus diluvii metus percellebat, ſed Urbini Dux non priùs ab eodem liberari potuit, quàm Paulus de Middeburgo Foroſempronienſis Epiſcopus, variis rationibus Mathematicis, & Philoſophicis, quas poſtea typis commiſit, ei liquido demonſtraſſet, inanem eſſe prorſus metum omnem, quem de futuro diluvio conceperat. Guido Rangone General of an Army at Florence, being afraid that the Reaſons alledged by Auguſtin Niphus, wou'd remove the Fear of Charles V. and make him neglect the neceſſary Precautions, ingag'd a Famous Phyſician to write againſt that Book of Niphus, in order to oblige his Imperial Majeſty to provide for his Safety, and to appoint Inſpectors who ſhou'd view the Ground in the Provinces, and mark out the Places where Men and Beaſts wou'd be leſs expos'd to the Waters of the Flood. (a) Non defuit Thomas quidam Philologus patria Ravennas, & celeberrima fama Medicus, qui è veſtigio libellum alium de vera diluvii prognoſticatione, ad eundem Imperatorem miſit, cum Præfatione, quam iſthuc maxima parte referre, non alienum à propoſito duxerim. Ne ex illo conventu tot ſyderum in piſcibus, diſfortunium quodquam patereris, Guido Rangonus Rei Florentinæ armorum generalis gubernator, me monuit, & excitavit, ut de futuro diluvio anni MDXXIIII, exactam ad te compoſitionem dirigeremus; Quatenus amoto Sueſſani Philoſophi, jam impreſſo errore, locis huic maximo diluvio ſubditis, & ab hoc ipſo alienis, dili-

(g) Naudæus, in Judicio de Auguſtino Nipho, pag. 48.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 46. 47.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 47. 48.

(a) Naudæus ibid. pag. 48.

this, whereby it will appear that 'tis no eaſy thing to (BΔ) diſcredit Aſtrologers; for notwithſtanding this Falſe Prediction, they found afterwards a vaſt num-diligentiùs circumſpectis, & annotatis, humanum genus & cætera viventia, vel tu ipſe ad minus (nam ubi imperatoris periculum, hic pro viribus & manu, & corpore, & ingenio utendum) ab eo diſfortunato & horribili aſpectu liberareris. Some (b) other Writers imitated that Phyſician. There was ſo great a Terror in France, that many People were like to grow diſtracted upon that Account. In Gallia parum abſuit quin ad inſaniam homines non paucos, periculi metu (diluvium) adegerit, quemadmodum apud Joannem Bochellum ſcriptorem Annalium Aquitaniæ; Claudium Duretum cap. 27. libri de fluxu & refluxu maris; Spiritum Roterium ordinis ſancti Dominici, & ſacræ apud Toloſates fidei quæſitorem, in refutatione doctrinæ cujuſdam Aſtrologi; Augerium Ferrerium in libro quem ſcripſit adverſus Rempublicam Bodini; Albertum Pighium in Aſtrologiæ defenſione ad Auguſtinum Niphum; Euſtorgium a Bello loco Poëtam vernaculum in Rythmis ſuis, multoſque alios videre eſt (c). Read theſe Words of Bodin. "(d) God has promiſed that there will be no Deluge for the time to come, and has perform'd his Promiſe. For tho' the great Conjunction of Saturn, Mars, and Jupiter happen'd in the Sign Piſces, in the Year 1524, when all the Aſtrologers of Europe, Aſia, and Africa, foretold an univerſal Deluge, and many Unbelievers built up Arches to ſave themſelves, and even Preſident Auriol at Toulouſe, tho' they were told of God's Promiſe and Oath, that he wou'd no more deſtroy Men by a Flood, that Year was indeed attended with Storms and great Floods in many Countries, but there happen'd no Deluge." A Writer who animadverted upon Bodin denied the Fact as to Auriol; but the following Reply was made to him. "I think I have omitted nothing but what is frivolous and inconſiderable, and deſerves no Anſwer. You ſay, pag. 47. that Auriol did not make a Boat to avoid being deſtroyed by the Deluge, which the Aſtrologers foretold, but to go a Fiſhing; and yet you tell us, that the Boat ſtands upon Four Pillars: 'tis not uſual to put Boats upon Pillars. But I have read a Book written againſt Aſtrologers, by a Dominican, call'd Spiritus Roterus, an Inquiſitor of the Faith, when he was at Toulouſe, which was lent me by Raymund l'Eſtonat of Pamiers, who has ſettled in theſe Parts, and told me how that Monk undertook to write that Book againſt an Aſtrologer who was then at Toulouſe, and pretended to tell one's Fortune by the Stars. That Author ſays in that Book, that Auriol cauſed an Arch to be built up, in order to avoid the Deluge; which he cou'd know better than you, ſince you liv'd neither in the ſame Place, nor at the ſame Time with Auriol. As for what you ſay in the ſame Page, that Bodin is very much to blame for ſaying, that Auriol was a Preſident, ſince he was only a Doctor of the Canon Law, whom you call a bold, rich, and learned Man; I confeſs that Bodin was miſtaken in that Point (e)." The Northern Nations were not free from thoſe Alarms, as it appears from this Paſſage. (f) Mali iſtius impendentis metum ad extremum uſque Septentrionem pervaſiſſe, teſtatur manifeſtè Cornelius Scepperus Neoportuenſis, cùm inter cauſas quibus fuit compulſus, ut librum adverſus Aſtrologos de ſignificationibus conjunctionum ſuperiorum Planetarum anni MDXXIV. conſcriberet, eas potiſſimum enumerat. Adde me neque in Aſtrologiam ſcribere, ſed in eos tantùm, qui falſa prædictione totum in ſe orbem converterant. Neque enim ſolùm vulgo eam rem perſuaſerunt, ſed ſummis etiam Regibus, & Principibus. Occurrunt quæ hac de re me percunctatus eſt ſereniſſimus Princeps D. Chriſtiernus Daniæ, Sueviæ, Norvegiæque Rex, occurrunt & crebra vulgi ſuſpiria, tamdiu mala ſibi ominantis: quem autem hominum non impellerent hæ lacrymæ? quem non permoveret impoſtura, incitaret iniquitas?

We have ſeen what Bodin ſays, that Rains and Floods made a great Devaſtation in ſeveral Places, in the Year of that pretended Deluge; but ſome Authors, who are more to be credited than he, affirm, that the Month of February 1524, was very dry and clear. Now this was the time of the Conjunction pointed out by the Aſtrologers for a Deluge; ſo that one would think the extraordinary Dryneſs of that Month happen'd on purpoſe to confound thoſe Men. Cardan and Origan were vexed that Stofferus had brought ſuch a Diſgrace upon their Trade by a Prognoſtication ſo contrary to the Event. Read theſe Words of the Learned Gaſſendus. (g) Memorabile certè eſt, quod in hiſtoriis, (1) ac omnibus penè ſuperioris ſeculi libris legitur; cum Aſtrologi ob plureis Conjunctiones magnas, & nonnullas medioereis in Aqueis Signis celebrandas, prædixiſſent menſe Februario anni MDXXIV. fore Diluvium generale, ac ſtragem tantam, quanta fuiſſet ante id tempus inaudita; adeò ut non paucis conſternatis per Galliam, Hiſpaniam, Italiam, Germaniamque animis, apparaſſent navigia, aut comportatis farinis, aliiſque rebus neceſſariis, petiiſſent loca editiora; contigiſſe tamen, ut totus Februarius ſereniſſimus pulcerrimuſque extiterit; planè, ut ſi opera data comparatus fuiſſet vaticiniis Aſtrologorum refellendis (cùm ſit alioquin inſolitum, abire Februarium impluvium) quod ne ipſis quidem Cardano (2), & Origano (3) diſſimulare licuit; dolentibus illud de futuro Diluvio judicium fuiſſe non ſine Aſtrologiæ infamia à Stœflero prolatum. Take notice that Bodin, a credulous Man, and infatuated with Aſtrology, vindicates Stofferus as well as he can; for, on the one hand, he gives us to underſtand, that if there was not a ſecond Deluge in the Year 1524, 'twas becauſe God prevented it to perform his Promiſe; and, on the other hand, he enlarges upon the Calamities wherewith Chriſtendom was afflicted after that conjunction of the Planets: and the better to mend the buſineſs he has recourſe to ſome Falſities; for he ſpeaks (h) of the War of the Boors in Germany, and of the League againſt the King of France, who was taken, and of the Conqueſt of Rhodes by the Turks. That Iſland had been ſubdued in the Year 1522. I ſha'l have occaſion by and by to mention another Fraud of that Writer.

(BΔ) Several Particulars, whereby it will appear that 'tis no eaſy thing to diſcredit Aſtrologers.] I have mention'd, in the foregoing Remark, ſeveral Facts concerning the Chimerical Prediction of that pretended Deluge; to which I add what follows, "(i) In the ſaid Year 1523, reckoning as they do in Aquitain, where the Year begins in March upon Lady-Day, and ends on the ſame Day, all the Provinces of France were extremely afraid of an univerſal Deluge, becauſe the Aſtronomers had foretold, that in the Month of February of the ſaid Year, and in the beginning of the Year 1524, according to their Computation, (for they begin with the firſt Day of January) there wou'd be Twenty Conjunctions, Sixteen of which wou'd poſſeſs watery Signs, portending to the greateſt part of the World, to Climates, Kingdoms, Provinces, States, and Dignities, and to all Land and Sea Creatures, a certain Change and Alteration, ſuch as our Foreſathers never ſaw, nor read in Hiſtories. Whereupon Men and Women were in great Fear. Many removed from their Low Habitations, went into High Places, provided themſelves with Meal and other Neceſſaries, and made publick Proceſſions and Prayers, that God wou'd take pity on his People; and yet there happen'd no ſuch thing: on the contrary, the ſaid Month of February proved as fine as ever it was, and the Months following finer than they had been Ten Years before. Whereby God made it appear that Aſtronomy is not a certain Science; and whatever the Planets may foretel, God is above it." The Author from whom I have this Paſſage, does not forget the Chicanries which the Aſtrologers alledged to ſave their Honour. However, ſays he, "(a) ſome Aſtrologers alledged in their Vindication, that thoſe Conjunctions had produced their effect the Year before, becauſe there had been many great Floods in ſeveral Places, which had drown'd Houſes and Lands. Others ſaid, "that number of Cullies. Some ſay he foretold that the End of the World would be in the Year 1586. (C) I believe they are miſtaken; and I can't tell whether thoſe are to be credited, who give out, that he made ſome Predictions upon (D) the Year 1588. Authors are not agreed about the Circumſtances

---

(b) Quemadmodum contingit aliquando ut cæcus cæcum ducat, ſic nonnulli alii Philologum hunc licet aberrantem ſequuti ſunt; ex quibus Nicolaus Peranzonus vaticinium de vera diluvii prognoſticatione, cum xx. inundationum hiſtoria, Anconæ edidit. Mihique præterea videre contigit, cujuſdam Michaëlis de Petra ſancta, Ordinis Prædicatorum de Obſervantia, ſacræ Theologiæ Doctoris, Regentis ſtudii in Conventu Minervæ, & Metaphyſicam in Romano Gymnaſio profitentis libellum, in defenſionem Aſtrologorum, judicantium ex conjunctionibus Planetarum in Piſcibus MDXXIV diluvium futurum. Hunc enim veluti conceptis verbis, operi ſuo titulum fecit. Id. ib. pag. 49.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Bodin, de la Republique, B. 4. pag. m. 550.

(e) Renatus Herpin, Apologie pour la Republique de Jean Bodin, in the laſt pa.

(f) Naudæus ubi ſupra p. 50.

(g) Gaſſendus, Phyſic. ſect. 2. lib. 6. Oper. tom. 1. pag. 729. col. 1.

(1) Bochel. in Annal. Aquit. Bodin. 4. de Rep. 2. Duret. de flu. & refl. mar. c. 27. &c.

(2) Lib. 5. aphor. 34.

(3) 2 Par. introd. 3.

(h) Bodin, de la Republique, B. 4. p. 552.

(i) John Buchet, Annales d'Aquitain fol. m. 113. Naudæus & Gaſſendus call him wrong Bochellus in the Paſſages abovequoted.

(a) Id. ib.

of

“ that ſuch Conjunctions wou'd not have their “ Effect till ten Years after, during which many “ great, dreadful, and detrimental things wou'd “ happen; which prov'd true, as will appear “ hereafter. For, that very ſame Year 1523, in “ November, there was a little Froſt, which froze “ up the greateſt part of the Wheat, and moſt Cabbages, and ſhort-ſhank Apple-Trees: and a vaſt “ number of ſmall Treaſurers, who conſumed the “ publick Finances of France, were put out of their “ Places; whereupon this Diſtich was made in a “ bantering way.

“ L'an mil cinq cent vingt & quatre moins ung
“ Le Choux d'yver & Treſoriers tout ung.„

How comes this Author to reckon among the Publick Calamities the turning out of the Treaſurers, who waſted the Finances and devour'd the People? He ſhou'd rather have accounted it a happineſs. As for what concerns the Froſt in the Month of November, which he calls a ſmall one, tho' he aſcribes great Effects to it, the ſame Doubts ariſe in my Mind, which I have propos'd in the Article Berquin. 'Tis a remarkable thing that Beza ſhou'd mention ſuch a Froſt upon the Year 1528, as a Curſe, which the Execution of an Innocent Man brought upon the whole Kingdom. Cunæus, Profeſſor at Leyden, made an Oration about Climacterical Years in 1638, when he left the Rectorſhip, wherein he mention'd the Prediction of a new Deluge in the Year (c) 1524, and laugh'd at it. He added, (d) that according to the Teſtimony of Ludovicus Vives, that Year proved as clear, happy, and plentiful as ever was ſeen. Vives does not ſay all this preciſely; nevertheleſs his Words are ſtill more proper than Cunæus's to ſhew the Falſity of the Prediction. (e) Illud quoque Noë diluvium non ſiderum commiſtionibus aſſignatur, ſed ultioni numinis. Verum iſti (aſtrologi) ſolita temeritate ſub certum horoſcopum reducunt eluviem illam orbis, & ſimilem horoſcopum contigiſſe ferunt anno vigeſimo quarto, qui annus orbem ferè totum inſanis iſtorum prædictionibus terruit, quum nullus annus memoria eorum qui viverent aut mitior aut ſerenior fuerit, aut ſuis omnibus partibus tempeſtivior? Primùm in tanta varietate, tamque incertis iis qui annales ſcribunt, quem annum poſſunt ipſi annotare quo diluvium contigerit? Ita non dicunt hoc eveniſſe, quia hic erat aſtrorum coitus: ſed quia id contigerit, talem affirmant fuiſſe. Hoc verò non eſt ab experimentis ſcientiam colligere, ſed ad tuendam temeritatem aſſertionis confingere ſibi experimenta. Verum irriſit iſtos natura, qui quo tempore natatura in aquis omnia erant minati, ſereniſſimi ut ſi quando antea fulſerunt ſoles, & ver fuit omnium amœniſſimum. A Learned German, who publiſh'd ſome Notes upon Cunæus's Orations, quotes this Paſſage of Ludovicus Vives, and ſays, that Cardan maintain'd that Stoflerus was out for want of a ſufficient Skill in Phyſicks. Cardan endeavours to ſhew, that the ſame Poſition of the Planets which was to produce an Inundation, according to Stoflerus, was really to produce fair Weather (f); but this pretended Juſtification of Aſtrology, by cenſuring thoſe who do not well underſtand it, does not deſerve to be minded upon this occaſion.

(C) The End of the World . . . in the Year 1586. I believe they are miſtaken.] This concerns M. Petit, Intendant of the Fortifications, who uſes theſe Words. “ (g) Did not Stoflerus foretel, “ that in the Year 1524, there wou'd be ſo great “ Inundations, that if the World was not to be “ deſtroyed by Fire, there wou'd be then an univerſal Deluge, by reaſon of the great Conjunctions of the Planets in watery Signs? Which “ frighted all Europe to that degree, that many “ People repair'd to the Mountains with all manner of Proviſions. Others provided Barks and “ Ships to avoid being drowned; and yet the “ Month of February in which all theſe things “ were to happen, proved extremely dry, to the “ ſhame of Aſtrologers. Did not he ſay likewiſe “ that in the Year 1586, after an Eclipſe of the “ Sun in May, and the Conjunction of all the “ Planets, the World wou'd be at an end by the “ Fury of Winds and Storms, which proved ridiculous?„ I believe one might boldly deny what he ſays in his ſecond Queſtion, and affirm, that Stoflerus foretold no ſuch thing for the Year 1586. In the firſt place, his Ephemerides don't reach ſo far. In the ſecond place, that Year is not characterized by an Eclipſe of the Sun in May, nor by the Conjunction of all the Planets. I think I have found out what led that Author into this Miſtake: he had read in Gaſſendus, next to what concerns the Prediction of a Deluge, an Account of a Prediction concerning the Year 1186. Some time after, truſting too much to his Memory, he thought that Gaſſendus upbraids Stoflerus with a ſecond Overſight; and on this Suppoſition he ſet down 1586, inſtead of 1186. What will confirm my Conjecture is, that the Year 1186 has the two Characters abovemention'd, viz. an Eclipſe of the Sun (h), and a Conjunction of all the Planets, as it appears from theſe Words of Gaſſendus. (i) Simile vaticinium fuit, quod ex Rigordo Scaliger (1) refert, ſcribente Aſtrologos tantum portendiſſe exitium, à ventorum, tempeſtatumque vehementia, ob Planetas tam inferiores, quàm ſuperiores coituros menſe Septembri anni MCLXXXVI præeunte Solis defectione XI Kal. Maij, ut rerum finem imminere à nemine dubitaretur, cùm eventus tamen poſtea coarguerit ejuſce Oraculi vanitatem. Naudæus obſerves that the Weather proved very fine, inſtead of the dreadful Storms foretold by the Aſtrologers. (k) Vide ſodes apud Rigordum, quid anno Chriſti MCLXXIX acciderit. Orientales Aſtrologi omnes, literis per totum orbem miſſis, tam ſecurè quàm ſi Regio diplomate res ipſa ſancita fuiſſet, edixerant, anno ſeptimo poſt, qui fuit MCLXXXVI, Planetas omnes tam inferiores, quàm ſuperiores, in unum coituros ineunte Septembri, ſcilicet poſt Eclipſim factam XI Kalend. Mai. Indeque tantùm ex ventorum, & tempeſtatum violentia periculi ſecuturum, ut fermè rebus humanis, extremum finem imminere aſſererent. Quid igitur poſtea factum eſt, niſi ut mortales innumeros, qui per totum illud ſeptennium, vitam ſibi præ metu, & periculorum expectatione acerbam putaverant, ineunte termino ab Aſtrologis illis præſtituto, molles potiùs Favonii, quàm Aquilones, & blanda ſedataque Autumni temperies, quàm nubila vel perturbata exciperet? Bodin has been a Prevaricator upon this occaſion: He ſuppoſes the Aſtrologers did not foretel great Winds, but great Revolutions of State. He had a mind to ſave their Honour by ſuch a Subterfuge; for take the Hiſtory of the World where you will, you'll find ſome Revolutions within the Space of fifteen or twenty Years. We read alſo, ſays he (l), “ that “ in the Year MCLXXXVI. in September, the “ lower and upper Planets were in Conjunction, “ when the Eaſtern Aſtrologers by Letters ſent “ into all Parts, as the Chronicle of Saint Denys “ has it, threaten'd all Nations with a Change of “ Government, which proved true. But it muſt “ be confeſs'd that the Hiſtorian is miſtaken in “ ſaying that there was an Eclipſe of the Sun the “ eleventh of April (m), and the fifth of that “ Month an Eclipſe of the Moon: which is naturally impoſſible.”

(D) Some Predictions upon the Year 1588.] A Year “ (n) which all Judicial Aſtrologers call'd “ a wonderful one, becauſe they foretold ſo many “ ſtrange Accidents, and ſo much Confuſion in “ Natural Cauſes, that they affirm'd, that if the “ World was not then at an End, there wou'd “ happen at leaſt an univerſal Change.„ The Author of the Mercurius Gallo-Belgicus ſays, that Stoflerus found as many Calamities in the Prognoſtications for the Year 1588, as Regiomontanus: which is as much as can be ſaid. Joannes Regio- montanus,

(c) The rinters ut 1504. That Fault has been nded in the Leipſick Edit. 1693.

(d) Prodi- tum me- oria Lu- ovicus Vives, Doctor cer- tiſſimus, reliquit, llum num que ſe- num, llum que fau- n, & ertate otabilem iſſe. naeus at. 4. g. 78. t. Lipſ. 53.

) Lud. ves de itate i Chri- na lib. cap. 10. . 120. t. Baſil. 44.

) Car- n. aphor. rol. mento 7. hor. 34. d Aug. chnerum ras. nai m. 375.

) Petit, ſerta- n ſur la ure des metes, . 337.

(h) Not in May, as M. Petit ſays, but the 21. of April. M. Petit, for want of Attention did not mind the word Kal. in Gaſſendus.

(i) Gaſſendus ubi ſupra.

(1) Præfat. in Manil.

(k) Naudæus ubi ſupra pag. 45. Conſult Calviſius ad ann. 1186. who obſerves that the Arabians in Spain gave notice of that conjunction. Hinc prædixerunt: Tantus, inquiunt, erit ventus, ut pulvere repleturus ſit arbores & turres. Inde ſequentur hæc miracula: Veniet vir ſapiens, Doctor veritatis. Deinde orietur quidam ex Elam, qui magnas ſtrages faciet. Sed nihil annotatum eſt, quod evenerit. He quotes Richardus: 'tis likely he meant Rigordus of his Death: Some ſay † he died of the Plague at Blaubeurs, the ſixteenth of February 1531. Others will have it that he died of a Wound (E) in his Head, which he receiv'd by the Fall of a Board: they add, that he foreſaw that Danger. He had a great Affection for Munſter, his Scholar; which proved very beneficial to the Commonwealth of Learning: for had he not ſuffer'd him to tranſcribe his Writings, they had been loſt for ever, when the Originals were burnt ‡. 'Tis to be obſerv'd, that he was one of thoſe who went about the Reformation of the Calendar; (EΔ) but this Undertaking was not finiſh'd 'till a long time after his Death.

(l) Bodin. ubi ſupra pag. 557. (m) Probably 'tis an Error of the Tranſcriber; for all Authors place that Eclipſe on the 21 of April. (n) Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henri le Grand, p. m. 92.

STRIGELIUS (Victorinus) was born at * Kaufbeir the 26th of December 1524. He loſt his Father † in 1527, and was ſent to Friburg in Briſgaw, in the Year 1538, to continue his Studies. There he went through a Courſe of Philoſophy under John Zinckius, and left that Place in 1542, to go to the Univerſity of Wittemberg, where he made it his Buſineſs to inform himſelf of the Opinions of the Proteſtants. He went to Luther's Lectures, but more frequently to thoſe of Philip Melancthon. After he had taken his Degree of Maſter of Philoſophy in 1544, he betook himſelf to read private Lectures, which procured him a great Reputation, and proved very uſeful to his Scholars. He went on with this Exerciſe till the War forced him to leave Wittemberg, and to go to Magdeburg, and then to Erford. The War being ended he went to Jena in 1548, where he married the Year following; and being a Widower two Years after, he married again in 1553. He aſſiſted at the (A) Conference of Eiſenac in 1556, and had a friendly Diſpute with Menius, upon a Queſtion concerning the Neceſſity of Good Works, about which the Divines were divided. He reduced that Controverſy to ſeven Propoſitions, on which the whole Diſpute run. The Concluſion was, that Menius engaged before the Elector of Saxony, and the whole Aſſembly, not to depart from the Doctrine contain'd in the Seven Propoſitions, which he acknowledged to be very conſonant to the Word of God. Afterwards Strigelius, purſuant to the Prince's Order, drew up a Form of Confeſſion, to which all the Divines ſubſcribed. The Year following he was attack'd montanus, Mathematicus ſummus, aliquantò antequàm Roma anno à partu Virginis 1475, ætatis ſuæ 42 in vivis eſſe deſiit, prognoſticum ſeu vaticinium in hanc ferè ſententiam edidit:

Poſt mille expletos à partu virginis annos,
  Et poſt quingentos rurſus ab axe datos,
Octuageſimus octavus mirabilis annus
  Ingruet, & ſecum triſtia fata trahet.
Si non hoc anno totus malè concidet orbis,
  Si non in nihilum terra fretumque ruet;
Cuncta tamen mundi ſurſum ibunt atque deorſum
  Imperia, & luctus undique grandis erit.

Eadem Joannes Stœflerus, inſignis Aſtrologus, & noſtro ſeculo generoſiſſimus Heros Henricus Rantzovius, in ſuo de annis climactericis & imperiorum periodis libello, vaticinatus eſt (a). That Author imitates Bodin, for he falſifies Hiſtory to ſave the Honour of thoſe Aſtrologers: He places the Execution of the Queen of Scotland (b) in the Year 1588 (c). For the Diverſion of the Reader I ſhall ſet down a Flight of M. Petit, Intendant of the Fortifications. Don't you think, ſays he (d), after having quoted the four laſt Verſes of Regiomontanus's Prophecy, that it was Word for Word the ſame Prognoſtick with that of the Sieur Andreas (e), only Regiomontanus is not ſo poſitive as to the Year, and does not ſo much contradict himſelf. That Coxcomb (Andreas) ſays poſitively, that the World will be at an end in two Years time at fartheſt: and immediately after he affirms, that all the Powers will be deſtroyed, and fall into the Hands of the Turks; that is, after the End of the World, and when there will be neither Men nor Beaſts. Wou'd to God he might be the laſt Beaſt, and the laſt Aſtrological Fool.

(E) Of a Wound in his Head, which he received by the Fall . . . They add, that he foreſaw.] This I find in Sethus Calviſius. Johan. Stofflerus, ſays he (f), Juſtingenſis, Mathematicus inſignis, certo die ſibi periculum ruinâ imminere præviderat, & quia ædes ſuas ſatis firmas noverat, convocat in Muſæum ſuum viros eruditos, quorum conſuetudine & ſermonibus recrearetur: orta inter ſobria pocula diſputatio: ad controverſiam explicandam è ſuperiori loco librum depromit: ſed laxato clavo aſſer, in quo ſtabant libri, in caput ejus decidit, & inſigne vulnus infelici ſeni inſligit, ex quo mortuus eſt die 16 Febr. Tubingæ. Voſſius did not know that this Particular is to be found in Calviſius; for he mentions it only upon the Credit of a (g) quidam.

(EΔ) He was one of thoſe, who went about the Reformation of the Calendar.] After the Neceſſity of that Reformation had been propoſed in the Council of Conſtance, ſome Aſtronomers conſider'd how it might be effected. I need not name here thoſe who began: I ſhall only ſay, that under the Pontificate of Leo X. two Writers publiſh'd their Thoughts about it: one of 'em was Paul (h) of Middleburg, and the other our John Stoflerus, who inſcribed (i) his Propoſitions to the Council of Lateran. I ſay nothing of Joannes Maria de Tholoſanis, whoſe Book De emendatione Calendarii Romani was dedicated to the Council of Trent. That Monk ſays, that Stoflerus propoſed three Expedients, one whereof was to leave out Ten Days, which was pitch'd upon to put an end to that Affair. (k) Frater Joan. Maria de Tholoſanis ordinis prædicatorum de emendatione Calendarii Romani cap. 3. ad Concilium Tridentinum ſic ſcribit: Circa hujus æquinoctii reformationem reperiuntur variæ formulæ: quarum tres ponit Joan. Stoefflerus in ſuo Calendario propoſitione 39. Prima earum inter alias potiſſima eſt & facillima, ſecunda difficilis eſt, & gignens perturbationem magnam, & diſſidium in eccleſia Dei per orbem diffuſa. Ultima abſque difficultate ſervari poſſet. Hæc ille. Secundam autem formulam vocat, qua noſtri temporis correctores uſi ſunt, 10 dies eximentes ex uno menſe.

(A) He aſſiſted at the Conference of Eiſenac in 1556.] George Major, a Divine of Wittemberg, openly declar'd for the Interim (l), and for the Phraſe inſerted in it concerning the Neceſſity of Good Works (m). Amſdorf ran into another extreme, for he maintain'd, that Good Works were pernicious to Salvation (n). This was the fourth Schiſm of the Lutherans (o). Such was the ſubject of the Conference of Eiſenac, in which our Strigilius acted the moſt conſiderable Part. Thuanus (p) confounds the time and the place when he ſays that Strigetack'd (B) by Illyricus, and had a verbal Diſpute with him at Weimar. The Acts of the Conference were publiſhed, but not faithfully, ſo that he complain'd ‡ that ſomething had been left out. He was Impriſon'd (C) with two others in 1559, becauſe they had diſapproved ſome Theological Doctrines, and the Writing which thoſe of Weimar had publiſh'd againſt thoſe of Wittemberg. He was ſet at Liberty three Years after, and betook himſelf again to read Lectures; but becauſe he quickly perceived that (D) the Poſt he was in was not a ſafe one, he left Jena, and did not mind the Remonſtrances which the Univerſity of that Name writ to him to perſuade him to return. He went to Leipſick, where he publiſhed Notes upon the Pſalter. He obtained from the Elector the Liberty of Teaching in the Univerſity of Wittemberg, or in that of Leipſick, and choſe to live in this laſt City. He began his Lectures there the 1ſt of March, 1563, and explain'd not only Divinity, but alſo Logick and Morals. He had carried his Common-Places as far as the Article of the Euchariſt, which he was to begin in February 1567; but the School Door was ſhut up againſt him, and they ſent him word to leave off reading Lectures. He applied himſelf to the Elector of Saxony for Redreſs, and not obtaining the Juſtice he expected, he yielded * to the Odium Theologicum, and retired into the Palatinate. He hoped the Elector wou'd take care of him, and he was not miſtaken, for he was called to Heidelberg to be Profeſſor of Morality, and for ſome other Employments. He worthily diſcharged the Duties of thoſe Places till he died, which happen'd the 26th of June 1569, after a very ſhort Sickneſs, † according to his Wiſhes. He was a good Philoſopher and a good Divine, and he had an admirable Talent to teach Youth. His Life was attended (E) with a thouſand Vexations; he was accuſed of Hereſy; he was Defamed to the higheſt Degree, Anathematized and expoſed to Penal Laws: which was the Reaſon why, like † Melch. Adam ib. pag. 14.

---

‡ Omnibus libris inſtrumentiſque Stoffleri incendio fortuito Tubingæ conſumtis, nihil illarum lucubrationum evaſiſſet, niſi multa Munſterus deſcripta adſervaſſet. Melch. Adam ubi ſupra.

* 'Tis an Imperial City in Suabia near the Alpes. Melch. Adam. ubi infra.

† He was a Native of Memminguen, and Phyſician to the Lords de Fronsberg Id. ibid.

(a) Janſonius Doccomenſis Friſius, in Mercurio Gallo Belgico, ad init. anni 1589. apud Wolfium, Lect. memorabil. to. 2. p. 1028.

(b) Ibid. apud eumdem Wolfium ibid.

(c) She was Beheaded the 8 of Feb. 1587. Old-Stile.

(d) Diſcours ſur l'eclipſe de ſoleil du 12. d'Août 1654. printed at the end of his Diſſertation upon Comets, pag. 338.

(e) Upon occaſion of the Eclipſe of the Year 1654. a Diſcourſe in German and French was handed about under the Name of the Sieur Andreas, ſometimes ſtiled a Mathematician of Padua, and ſometimes of Prague, with an Atteſtation of the Chancery of Meninguen. Id. ib. pag. 326.

(f) Sethus Calviſius, ad ann. 1531. pag. m. 1165.

(g) De morte e ſic conte no, pen quem fides eſt, Voſſius in addit. libr. de ſcien. Mathem. pag. 450.

(h) He was Biſhop of Foſſombrone in Italy.

(i) Henricus Wolphius ubi infra pag. 121.

(k) Henricus Wolphius in tractatu de tempo & ejus mutationibus p. 12

(l) Micræ lius, Synt. hiſtor. Eccleſ. pag. m. 755.

(m) Id. ib. pag. 865.

(n) Id.

(o) Id.

(p) Thuan. l. 45. pag. 941.

‡ See the Remark B

* Ceſſit impotentiæ Theologorum. Melch. Adam ib. pag. 423.

† Conſecutus eſt quod ſæpe in votis habuit, videlicet ne difficili & producto morbi genere ſpiritum edere cogeretur. Id. ibid. pag. 425.

Strigelius aſſiſted at the Conference (q) of Altemburg in the Years MDLXVIII, and MDLXIX. Bochſtadius (r) ſhowed long ago that 'tis a Miſtake.

(B) He was attack'd by Illyricus, and had a verbal Diſpute.] They were both Profeſſors (ſ) in the Univerſity newly founded at Jena. Their Diſpute run upon two Points (t): 1ſt. Whether God creates a new Subſtance, when he Regenerates a Sinner: 2d. Whether the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt leaves any Liberty to Man. Strigelius denied the firſt Point, and affirm'd the Second. (v) Note, that Flacius Illyricus was a rigid aſſertor of Luther's Doctrine de ſervo arbitrio. On the contrary, Strigelius approved the moderate Expreſſions of Melanchthon: And therefore he was look'd upon as one of the Leaders of the Synergiſts, that is, of thoſe who acknowledge that Man's Will co-operates with Grace. This was (w) the 5th Schiſm of the Lutherans. According to Quenſtedt, Strigelius was the Incendiary and Trumpeter of that War, (x) belli ſynergiſtici κορυφαῖ&#8203;ος, fax & tuba. I have mentioned in another ((y) Place the Conference of Weimar: many Authers place it not in the Year 1557, as Melchior Adam does, nor in the Year 1551, as (z) Spondanus, but in the Year 1560; and I think they are in the right.

(C) He was impriſoned.] Falling ſick during his Impriſonment he had leave to get himſelf carried to his Wife, but upon Condition that he ſhould be at home as a Priſoner. Many Princes, and even the Emperor Maximilian interceded for him, and obtained that he might be viſited by his Friends (a).

(D) That the Poſt he was in was not a ſafe one.] He thought he could not continue in it without endangering his Conſcience, his Reputation, and his Life. He perceived that the Peace, ſuch as it was, which the Divines of Jena had concluded between him and his Enemies, was ill obſerved: beſides, he was informed by many credible Perſons, that he ſhou'd uſe all poſſible Diligence to avoid the Snares, or rather the open Violence deſigned againſt him. His Fear was not groundleſs, for he knew that Solomon adviſes us not to truſt to an Enemy, and to keep off from him; and he remembred Menander's Saying, That Reconciliations produce a Wolf's Friendſhip (b). When he Anſwered the Letter of the Univerſity of Jena, he declared, That if his going away was not free from blame, it was rather to be aſcribed to the Inconveniencies of the Time and Place, and the Snares of falſe Brethren, than to himſelf (c), and in a word, that he had rather retire into the moſt dreadful Solitude, than return to Jena. (d) " Paucis ut dicamus: ſumma propoſiti ipſius hac fuit: " nolle ſe redire Ienam: ſed potiùs iturum quocunque Deus vocarit: etiamſi in ea loca migrandum eſſet:

- - - (†) Pigris ubi nulla campis
Arbor æſtiva recreatur aura:
Quod latus mundi nebula, maluſque
Jupiter urget.

If we conſider all thoſe things, we ſhall be leſs ſurprized to ſee that the Diſputes of Divines are now a-days ſo ſcandalous. They were more ſcandalous ſtill at that time. Take notice that Strigelius was diſmiſſed by the Elector (e) for not keeping his Word, and raiſing unneceſſary Conteſtations. He anſwered that he had promiſed to be modeſt only upon condition of doing nothing contrary to Truth and his Conſcience. Strigelio contra affirmante ſe modeſtiam quidem promiſiſſe, ſed duabus adjectis conditionibus ſalva veritate, & ſalva conſcientia. Thoſe two Conditions do certainly deſerve to be underſtood, or expreſly mentioned in all Treaties: but they open a way for reviving old Quarrels; and with thoſe two Pretences, one may break the Bonds of any Engagement.

(E) His Life was attended with a thouſand Vexations; he was accuſed of Hereſy, &c.] Melanchthon having conſidered Strigelius's Horoſcope, ſaid, That the Stars threatned him with all manner of Aſſaults. (f) De ſchemate ejus genethliaco, Melanchthon, ubi id conſideraſſet, ita ex ſiderum poſitu ratiocinatus fait; fore, ut artibus innumeris oppugnaretur; non aliter, Quàm lapis æquoreis undique pulſus aquis.

Perhaps the Man born under ſuch Malignant Conſtellations, explain'd that Prediction by theſe Verſes of Horace, when he found himſelf expos'd to Slanders, and School Diſputes:

(g) Inſtat fatum mihi triſte, Sabella
Quod puero cecinit, divinâ motâ anus urnâ:
Hunc neque dira venena, nec hoſticus auferet enſis,
Nec laterum dolor, aut tuſſis, nec tarda podagra,
Garrulus hunc quando conſumet cunque: loquaces,
Si ſapiat, vitet, ſimulatque adoleverit ætas.

However it be, let's ſee how he deſcribes his Anguiſh: (b) De meis rebus quid multa attinet ſcribere, cùm non ſolum in veteri luto adhuc hæream; ſed etiam ad reliquas moleſtias accedat truncata & mutilata editio diſputationis inter me & hominem

barbarum

(q) It was ld towards the latter end of 1568, nd in the eginning 1569.

) See he Letters ritten to oldaſtus, nd publiſh'd in 688.

(ſ) Hen. Alting. eol. hiſt. g. 298.

) Melch. dam in itis Theolog. pag. 20.

)Alting. id.

) Mia'l. ubi pra.

) Quend de paiis viror. luſtr.pag. 58.

) In the emarkC. f the rticle yricus.

) Sponn. ad n. 1560. 32. pag. 02.

a) Taken om Melior Am, ib. g. 421.

) Id. ib. g. 421, 22.

) Id. ib. g. 422.

(d) Id. ib.

(†) Theſe Verſes are to be found in Horace od. 22. lib. 1.

(e) Quod violaſſet promiſſa, ac certamina moviſſet non neceſſaria. Id. ibid. pag. 424.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 417.

(g) Horatius ſat. 9. lib 1. v. 29.

(b) Strigelius epiſt. ad Wolfangum à Koteritz apud Melch. Adamum ubi ſupra pag. 420. That Letter was written in 1562.

like (F) Melanchthon in a like Caſe, he often beg'd of God that he wou'd take him out of this World *. I ſhall not give a Catalogue of his Works; it may be ſeen in M. ‡ Teiſſier. I muſt obſerve as a remarkable thing, that he made no ſcruple to uſe the Thoughts and Expreſſions (G) of other Writers. It has been ſaid, That he (H) retracted at his Death; but I take it to be a meer Story.

STROZZI (Philip) of an Ancient and Rich † Family of Florence, was one of thoſe, who, after the Death of Clement VII, moſt earneſtly endeavoured to recover the Liberty of their Country, by expelling Alexander de Medicis. When he barbarum (i) agitata, & aliorum ſcriptorum: quibus fama mea atrociſſimè, apud eos, qui vitam & mores meos non penitus perſpexerunt, læditur ac deformatur. Nam inter reliquas criminationes ipſa morte acerbiores tribuitur mihi impia & extrema levitas, vanitas, inconſtantia, perfidia in negocio religionis, & pertinax odium veritatis. Ad hæc convicia, quorum molem vix una navis vehat, accedit fulmen injuſtæ condemnationis, quam Paulus vocat Anathema Maranatha. He adds, that tho' the Teſtimony of a good Conſcience ſerves him for a Shield againſt the Darts of Calumny, yet he could not but reſent the Falſities publiſh'd againſt him. His greateſt Grief was to have his Hands tied, that is, to be forced by the Circumſtances of Time and Place to ſay nothing, tho' his Silence made him ſuſpected by ſeveral Perſons. Such is the Fate of thoſe, who are perſecuted by Enemies whoſe Faction is uppermoſt, and ſupported by the Secular Power. Thoſe Enemies publiſh whatever they pleaſe, and lye impudently to conceal their ſhameful Artifices, and their Iniquity from the Publick. Thoſe, who are calumniated by them, cou'd not make a good Defence without ſaying ſome things that wou'd exaſperate their common Maſter, and expoſe them to new Miſeries. They are therefore ſilent; but ſuch a Conduct produces an ill Effect: The Enemy triumphs at it, and many People, haſty in their Judgments, put a ſiniſter Interpretation upon it. There is nothing more advantageous, according to the Notions of the World, than to be always for the ſtrongeſt Side; and on the contrary, nothing can be more diſadvantageous, with reſpect to one's Temporal Intereſt, than to be for the Party that is in the Right, if it be inferior in Credit and Power. (k) Multis etiam, they are Strigelius's Words, meum ſilentium, quo has calumnias diſſimulare cogor, ſuſpectum eſt, perinde quaſi mihi honeſta oratio deſit ad has labes & maculas detergendas. Sed boni viri, quibus conditio mea, triſtis ſane & luctuoſa, notior eſt, non ignorant, quibus vinculis conſtrictus impediar, quo minus vel cauſam ipſam explicare, vel innocentiam meam à morſibus venenatiſſimis hominum vindicare poſſim. All that I can do, ſays he, is to implore God's Juſtice, and to cry out, as the Prophet David did, (l) O Lord God the avenger, O God the avenger, ſhew thy ſelf clearly. Exalt thy ſelf, O Judge of the World, and render a Reward to the Proud. When he gave the Reaſons why he had left Leipſick, the chief he alledged was the (m) Injury done, not ſo much to himſelf, as to Truth, by forbidding him to mention a Doctrine that was dearer to him than his Life. His Second Reaſon was, That no body offered to aſſiſt him, when his Innocence was oppreſt. The Third, That he had received a threatning Anſwer from the Court; and laſtly (n) That he was oppreſt by the Threatnings of the Divines, and the Anathema's of the Preachers. But the better to know the Unhappineſs of his Fate, and how unfortunate he was in being expoſed to the Injuſtice of a Violent Faction, and more ſtill, in being too ſenſible of the Injuries he received from them; 'tis ſufficient to obſerve that he grew old before his time. He was worn out, and decrepit in Body and Mind at 44 Years of Age. He complain'd of it ſome few Months before he died, as it appears from theſe Words. (a) Cum ante annos decem & corpore & animo vigerem: nunc tot calamitatibus tum victus tum fractus, vix ægra membra traho, & animi alacritatem ſeneſcere comperio. Quare me omni cura & cogitatione præparo ad iter, quod ducit ex hujus vitæ miſeriis ad æternam tranquillitatem. (b) A Verſe of Virgil with a ſmall Alteration in it might have been applied to him.

(F) Like Melanchthon in a like caſe, he often beg'd of God.] I deſire to die, ſaid Melanchthon, firſt that I may enjoy the beatifical Viſion; Secondly that I may be no longer expoſed to the implacable Hatred of Divines. Strigelius ſaid the ſame thing: read theſe Words of Melchior Adam. (d) A Flacio Illyrico, & ejus manipularibus, objectum ei eſt crimen hæreſeos: quod graviſſimè tulit: nominatim accuſatus eſt; quod non recte ſentiret & doceret de ea parte doctrinæ, quæ appellatur, de libero arbitrio. Ab aliis verò aliorum inſimulatus eſt errorum: ut vita ejus perpetua fuerit pugna & dimicatio. Itaque ut Melanchthon ante mortem dixit: cupio ex hac vita migrare propter duas cauſas: primum ut fruar deſiderato conſpectu Filii DEI & cæleſtis eccleſiæ: deinde ut liberer ab immanibus & implacabilibus odiis Theologorum: ita ipſe eaſdem cauſas ſæpè inter precandum uſurpare ſolitus fuit: cum videret ſe hoc fato natum: ut omnibus eorum telis, qui eſſent arguti cives ſine virtute, vita & fama ſua propoſita eſſet. If his Father and Mother had been Witneſſes of his great Trouble, their Grief for it wou'd have proceeded from a Cauſe very different from that which made Iſaac and Rebecca uneaſy. The latter were troubled to ſee how well their Son agreed with Strangers; but the former wou'd have been Afflicted at the War kindled between their Son and his Brethren, a War which grieved him no leſs than the Alliance of Strangers grieved Eſau's Mother. 'Tis to be obſerved that the Church, who is a good Mother, bears her Grief a little better than Rebecca; ſhe is troubled to ſee her Children at War, and is ſo uſed to it, that one wou'd think it is become familiar to her. But what is moſt admirable is the Patience of the People; it may be ſaid that as in ſome Countries they patiently bear all manner of Taxes, they are every where no leſs tame with reſpect to Controverſies.

(G) To uſe the Thoughts and Expreſſions of other Writers.] In this reſpect he ſeem'd to be for a Community of Goods; he did not think that in doing ſo he was a Plagiary, and he was very willing that other Authors ſhou'd deal with him as he dealt with them. If you find any thing in my Books, ſaid he, that fits you, you may freely uſe it; every thing is at your Service. (f) Cùm Victorinus noſter diu multumque verſatus eſſet in lectione eorum Autorum, qui libros Ariſtotelis quaſi in ſuum ſuccum convertiſſent, illorum potiùs veſtigia voluit, ubi & quantum poſſet, conſectari, quàm novam per omnia cudere verſionem. Ac quidem ille vir & factus erat, & natus, ut ſi qua ei de re dicendum eſſet aut ſcribendum, & ipſi, qui de eadem illa ipſa re alii etiam recentiores, & qui viverent adhuc, rectè tradidiſſent, in mentem venirent, non puderet hinc illum verba ab iis & ſententias mutuari. Non enim hoc dicebat plagium eſſe literarium, ſed ingenuam atque candidam doctis atque bonis viris dignam κοινωνίαν. Et faciat, inquit, aliquis idem, ſi ſe cum fructu hoc poſſe ſperat, de meis quoque.

(H) That he retracted at his Death.] We are told that a Gentleman, who ſtudied at Heidelberg, met one day Strigelius in the Street, and told him, Sir, ſome Years ago you did not believe or teach the Calviniſtical Doctrines you teach now. I have been your Scholar at Jena, where you gave other Inſtructions to your Diſciples. Strigelius made no Anſwer, and went home, and finding himſelf very ill moſt humbly entreated the (g) Elector to be ſo kind as to come to him, giving him to underſtand that he wou'd impart to him ſome things relating to Salvation. The Prince went to him, being accompanied by Count he ſaw that their Sollicitations at the Court of the Emperor (A) Charles V. were inſignificant, he took a ſhorter and more Criminal Method, which was (B) to cauſe the pretended Uſurper to be aſſaſſinated. He engaged a Man in this Plot who put it in Execution; but the Succeſs of that Enterprize was more fatal to the Liberty of the Florentines, than the Diſcovery of the whole Conſpiracy wou'd have been. The Death of Alexander de Medicis made room for a Succeſſor better qualify'd than he was, to ſettle a new Sovereignty. He beat the Malecontents: Strozzi was made a Priſoner, and found no better Expedient than (C) to kill himſelf. He had married Clarice de Medicis, nearly

---

* Taken from Melchior Adam, in vitis Theolog. German. pag. 417. & ſeq.

‡ Teiſſier Addit. aux eloges tom. 1. p. 225.

† See the Remark A towards the end.

(i) That is Flacius Illyricus.

(k) Id. ib. apud eundem pag. 421.

(l) Pſalm 94. v. 1.

(m) Melch. Adam. ib. pag. 424.

(n) Ad hæc omnia acceſſerunt minæ Theologorum & fulmina anathematum adverſus ipſum in concionibus edita. Id. ibid.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 425.

(b) The 114 of the 6. B. of the Æneid, Invalidus vires ultra ſortemque ſenectæ. Let us ſay of Strigelius, Invalidus vires infra ſortemque juventæ.

(d) Melch. Adam. ib. pag. 421.

(f) Jacobus Mazonius præf. Nicomacheorum Ariſtotelis cum verſione, argumentis & ſcholiis Strigelii apud Thomaſium de Plagio literario n. 194. pag. 82.

(g) That is Frederick III.

Count George de Hundſruſſen. What I have taught hitherto at Heidelberg in favour of the Calviniſts, ſaid Strigelius to him, does not well agree with the Word of God; but the Doctrines, which the Lutherans have profeſſed till now, are very true. The Elector having heard thoſe Words, went away in Anger. (h) Strigelius quickly expired with a Groan. This Story is taken from the Relation of a Journey to Conſtantinople, made by Gerlach, to whom Andreas Carolus (i) Abbot of St. George, refers the Reader, after having mentioned what you have juſt now read. He doubts whether one ſhou'd ſay that Strigelius had an unconſtant Soul, rather than call it an (k) unhappy one. He had call'd him before (l) a Weather Cock in point of Religion, and a Favourer of the Synergiſts and Zuinglians.

(A) Their Sollicitations at the Court of the Emperor Charles V.] There is ſomething about this in Rabelais's Epiſtles. The Cardinals Salviati and Rodolphus went to Naples with our Strozzi in the Year 1536, to engage the Emperor to ſet up again a Republican Government in Florence: they did not ſucceed in it. "(m) I hear their Affairs "have not had the Succeſs they hoped for, and "that the Emperor told 'em peremptorily that "he had, at theirs, and the late Pope Clement's "Requeſt, appointed Alexander de Medicis, "Duke of the Territories of Florence and Piſa, "which he never thought of, and had never "done, had it not been for them; that if he "ſhou'd depoſe him, it were acting the Part of "a Juggler, doing and undoing; and that there-"therefore they ſhou'd reſolve to Acknowledge "him for their Duke and Lord, and to obey him "as Vaſſals and Subjects ought to do. As for the "Complaints they made againſt the Duke; he "told 'em he would take Cognizance of 'em up-"on the Place". I ſhall add the following Words out of the firſt Letter. "(n) I hear that "'tis (o) about the Affair of Florence, and the "Difference between Duke Alexander de Medicis "and Philip Strozzi, whoſe Eſtate the Duke de-"ſign'd to confiſcate. It is no ſmall Eſtate, for "next to the Fourques of Ausburg, he is accounted "the richeſt Merchant in Chriſtendom. The "Duke had appointed ſome Men in that Town "to poyſon or kill him. Being inform'd of it "he obtain'd the Pope's Leave to bear Arms, "and he was commonly attended by thirty Sol-"diers well armed. The Duke of Florence be-"ing informed that Strozzi and thoſe Cardinals "were gone to the Emperor, and that he offered "him four hundred Thouſand Ducats, if he "wou'd appoint ſome Perſons to inquire into the "Duke's Tyranny and Wickedneſs, ſet out from "Florence, appointed Cardinal Cibo Governor in "his Abſence, and arrived in that Town (p) the "Day after Chriſtmas". In the third Letter Rabelais ſays (q) that thoſe Cardinals, and Strozzi, "with his Money, could not prevail with the "Emperor, tho' they offered in the Name of all "thoſe that were baniſh'd from Florence, to give "him a Million of Gold ready Money, to finiſh "La Rocqua, that was begun in Florence, and to "keep a good Garriſon in it in the Emperor's "Name, and to pay him a Hundred thouſand "Ducats every year, provided he wou'd get their "Eſtates and former Liberty reſtored to 'em". Afterwards the Author mentions the Honours that were done to the Duke of Florence by Charles V. and then he adds: "(r) From that time the ſaid "Cardinals, the Biſhop of Xaintes, and Strozzi "have continued their Sollicitations; the Em-"peror has at laſt refer'd the thing till he comes "to Florence . . . . And the Duke has proceeded "ſo cunningly in his Tyranny, that the Floren-"tines have proteſted to the Emperor No-"mine Communitatis, that they deſire to have "no other Lord but him. 'Tis certain he has "ſeverely puniſhed the Exiles".

Take notice that the Author of the Notes upon Rabelais's Epiſtles, will not believe (a) that Philip Strozzi was a Merchant. But it is hardly conceivable how at that time a Family of Florence could have got ſo much Wealth without Trading. However, if he was not a famous Banker, he deſerved to be accounted one. The Baron de Forquevauls gives him that Title. "Philip Strozzi, "ſays he (b), and Bartholomew Valori, better Ban-"kers than Captains, were forced at Montemurlo. He adds (c), That "he was prodigiouſly rich "for a Citizen. (d) Peter Strozzi, notwith-"ſtanding his Loſſes and Expences, had ſtill "four hundred thouſand Crowns in the Banks "of Venice and Lyons, that remain'd out of his "Father Philip's Inheritance". (e) He went to Francis I. at the Camp of Marolles, with a Troop of two hundred Arquebuziers, which coſt him above fifty thouſand Crowns. This I find in Brantome, who adds: "(f) He was "vaſtly rich, and ſaved a great deal of Money "at Venice, where he kept for ſome time with "M. (g) Strozzi, his Son. That brave Lord "ſpent that vaſt Eſtate in the Service of our "Kings; for, as I have it from his Son, and "his Ancient Servants, whereas he was worth "above five hundred thouſand Crowns, when he "came into the Service of our Kings, he did "not leave twenty thouſand Crowns to his Son "when he died". Here is another Paſſage of Brantome, which fully confirms what I have quoted out of him. "(h) The King gave to M. "Strozzi, Son of the Mareſchal of France, fifty "thouſand Crowns as a Reward for the Office of "Colonel General of the Infantry, of which he "bought Breſſuire in Poitou; and this is all that "he and his Father left of ſo great an Eſtate he "brought into France: for I have heard many "People ſay, That when he came thither, he "had a Million of Gold in Bank, or in Goods "and Jewels, or in Money".

(B) Which was to cauſe the pretended Uſurper to be Aſſaſſinated.] I ſhou'd be very much to blame, ſhou'd I think that I can Comment upon this Text more elegantly, by uſing my own Words than by uſing Balzac's Expreſſions; and therefore I ſhall make no Alteration in the Proof he affords me. "(i) Philip Strozzi, the Husband of Clarice de "Medicis, Siſter (k) to Pope Leo, not being "able to bear the Reign of Duke Alexander de "Medicis, exhorted Laurence de Medicis, his Couſin, "to Conſpire againſt the Life of Duke Alexan-"der, and to reſtore the Liberty of his Coun-"try. Laurence appeared willing to undertake "ſuch a dangerous Enterprize; but he was afraid "that his two Daughters wou'd run the hazard "of loſing their Honour, becauſe his Eſtate "wou'd be confiſcated. Philip told him that "ſuch a Fear ſhou'd not hinder him, and aſſured "him that whatever the Succeſs of his Enter-"prize might be, he wou'd Marry two of his "Sons to his two Daughters. Which he did, "for Laurence having made his eſcape after "Duke Alexander's Murther, without reaping "any Advantage from it, Philip religiouſly per-"formed his Promiſe, and gave Laodamia de Me-"dicis to Peter Strozzi, who was ſince Mareſchal "of France, and Magdalen to Robert Strozzi, "who lately (l) died at Rome."

(C) No other Expedient than to kill himſelf.] I ſhall uſe ſtill Balzac's Words. "(m) The ſame "Philip (h) Mox autem ægrotans Victorinus animam (inconſtantem dicam, an infelicem?) gemebundus exhalavit. Andr. Carolus, memorab. eccleſiaſt. ſeculi xvii. pag. 49.

(i) Andr. Carolus ib.

(k) It ſeems in this place that he means a damned Soul.

(l) Homo varius & verſipellis cum Synergiſtis, cum Zuinglianis addictus. Id. ibid. pag. 34.

(m) Rabelais, Letter 8. pag. 29.

(n) Idem pag. 8. & ſeq.

(o) That is, that the Cardinals Salviati and Rodolphus were gone to the Court of Charles V. at Naples.

(p) That is, at Rome.

(q) Rabelais ibid. pag. 55.

(r) Id. ib. pag. 56.

(a) Obſervat. ſur les epitres de Rabelais, pag. 61.

(b) Francis de Pavie, Baron de Forquevauls, Vies de pluſieurs grands Capitaines pag. 379.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 382.

(d) Ibid. pag. 383.

(e) Brantome, Capitaines etrangers, tom. 2. pag. 287.

(f) Brantome ibid, pag. 289.

(g) Philip Strozzi, Colonel General of the French Infantry. See Moreri, and Father Anſelm, whom he tranſcribes. See alſo the following Article.

(h) Idem Brantome Memoir. des Capit. Francois tom. 4. p. m. 311, 312.

(i) Balzac Entretien 34. ch. 6. p. m. 330.

(k) Balzac ſhou'd have ſaid Niece.

(l) When Balzac writ this, Robert cou'd not but have been dead a long time.

(m) Balzac ibid. pag. 331, 332.

like (F) Melanchthon in a like Case, he often beg'd of God that he wou'd take him out of this World *. I shall not give a Catalogue of his Works; it may be seen in M. ‡ Teiſſier. I muſt obſerve as a remarkable thing, that he made no ſcruple to uſe the Thoughts and Expreſſions (G) of other Writers. It has been ſaid, That he (H) retracted at his Death; but I take it to be a meer Story.

* Taken from Melchior Adam, in vitis Theolog. German. pag. 417. & ſeq.

‡ Teiſſier Addit. aux eloges tom. 1. p. 325.

STROZZI (Philip) of an Ancient and Rich † Family of Florence, was one of thoſe, who, after the Death of Clement VII, moſt earneſtly endeavoured to recover the Liberty of their Country, by expelling Alexander de Medicis. When he

† See the Remark A towards the end.

---

barbarum (i) agitata, & aliorum ſcriptorum: quibus fama mea atrociſſimè, apud eos, qui vitam & mores meos non penitus perſpexerunt, læditur ac deformatur. Nam inter reliquas criminationes ipſa morte acerbiores tribuitur mihi impia & extrema levitas, vanitas, inconſtantia, perfidia in negotio religionis, & pertinax odium veritatis. Ad hæc convicia, quorum molem vix una navis vehat, accedit fulmen injuſtæ condemnationis, quam Paulus vocat Anathema Maranatha. He adds, that tho' the Teſtimony of a good Conſcience ſerves him for a Shield againſt the Darts of Calumny, yet he could not but reſent the Falſities publiſh'd againſt him. His greateſt Grief was to have his Hands tied, that is, to be forced by the Circumſtances of Time and Place to ſay nothing, tho' his Silence made him ſuſpected by ſeveral Perſons. Such is the Fate of thoſe, who are perſecuted by Enemies whoſe Faction is uppermoſt, and ſupported by the Secular Power. Thoſe Enemies publiſh whatever they pleaſe, and lye impudently to conceal their ſhameful Artifices, and their Iniquity from the Publick. Thoſe, who are calumniated by them, cou'd not make a good Defence without ſaying ſome things that wou'd exaſperate their common Maſter, and expoſe them to new Miſeries. They are therefore ſilent; but ſuch a Conduct produces an ill Effect: The Enemy triumphs at it, and many People, haſty in their Judgments, put a ſiniſter Interpretation upon it. There is nothing more advantageous, according to the Notions of the World, than to be always for the ſtrongeſt Side; and on the contrary, nothing can be more diſadvantageous, with reſpect to one's Temporal Intereſt, than to be for the Party that is in the Right, if it be inferior in Credit and Power. (k) Multis etiam, they are Strigelius's Words, meum ſilentium, quo has calumnias diſſimulare cogor, ſuſpectum eſt, perinde quaſi mihi honeſta oratio deſit ad has labes & maculas detergendas. Sed boni viri, quibus conditio mea, triſtis ſane & luctuoſa, notior eſt, non ignorant, quibus vinculis conſtrictus impediar, quo minus vel cauſam ipſam explicare, vel innocentiam meam à morſibus venenatiſſimis hominum vindicare poſſim. All that I can do, ſays he, is to implore God's Juſtice, and to cry out, as the Prophet David did, (l) O Lord God the avenger, O God the avenger, ſhew thy ſelf clearly. Exalt thy ſelf, O Judge of the World, and render a Reward to the Proud. When he gave the Reaſons why he had left Leipſick, the chief he alledged was the (m) Injury done, not ſo much to himſelf, as to Truth, by forbidding him to mention a Doctrine that was dearer to him than his Life. His Second Reaſon was, That no body offered to aſſiſt him, when his Innocence was oppreſt. The Third, That he had received a threatning Anſwer from the Court; and laſtly (n) That he was oppreſt by the Threatnings of the Divines, and the Anathema's of the Preachers. But the better to know the Unhappineſs of his Fate, and how unfortunate he was in being expoſed to the Injuſtice of a Violent Faction, and more ſtill, in being too ſenſible of the Injuries he received from them; 'tis ſufficient to obſerve that he grew old before his time. He was worn out, and decrepit in Body and Mind at 44 Years of Age. He complain'd of it ſome few Months before he died, as it appears from theſe Words. (a) Cum ante annos decem & corpore & animo vigerem: nunc tot calamitatibus tum victus tum fractus, vix ægra membra traho, & animi alacritatem ſeneſcere comperio. Quare me omni cura & cogitatione præparo ad iter, quod ducit ex hujus vitæ miſeriis ad æternam tranquillitatem. (b) A Verſe of Virgil with a ſmall Alteration in it might have been applied to him.

(F) Like Melanchthon in a like caſe, he often beg'd of God.] I deſire to die, ſaid Melanchthon, firſt that I may enjoy the beatifical Viſion; Secondly that I may be no longer expoſed to the implacable Hatred of Divines. Strigelius ſaid the ſame thing: read theſe Words of Melchior Adam. (d) A Flacio Illyrico, & ejus manipularibus, objectum ei eſt crimen hæreſeos: quod graviſſimè tulit: nominatim accuſatus eſt, quod non rectè ſentiret & doceret de ea parte doctrinæ, quæ appellatur, de libero arbitrio. Ab aliis verò aliorum inſimulatus eſt errorum: ut vita ejus perpetua fuerit pugna & dimicatio. Itaque ut Melanchthon ante mortem dixit: cupio ex hac vita migrare propter duas cauſas: primum ut fruar deſiderato conſpectu Filii DEI & cœleſtis eccleſiæ: deinde ut liberer ab immanibus & implacabilibus odiis Theologorum: ita ipſe eaſdem cauſas ſæpè inter precandum uſurpare ſolitus fuit: cum videret ſe hoc fato natum: ut omnibus eorum telis, qui eſſent arguti cives ſine virtute, vita & fama ſua propoſita eſſet. If his Father and Mother had been Witneſſes of his great Trouble, their Grief for it wou'd have proceeded from a Cauſe very different from that which made Iſaac and Rebecca uneaſy. The latter were troubled to ſee how well their Son agreed with Strangers; but the former wou'd have been Afflicted at the War kindled between their Son and his Brethren, a War which grieved him no leſs than the Alliance of Strangers grieved Eſau's Mother. 'Tis to be obſerved that the Church, who is a good Mother, bears her Grief a little better than Rebecca; ſhe is troubled to ſee her Children at War, and is ſo uſed to it, that one wou'd think it is become familiar to her. But what is moſt admirable is the Patience of the People; it may be ſaid that as in ſome Countries they patiently bear all manner of Taxes, they are every where no leſs tame with reſpect to Controverſies.

(G) To uſe the Thoughts and Expreſſions of other Writers.] In this reſpect he ſeem'd to be for a Community of Goods; he did not think that in doing ſo he was a Plagiary, and he was very willing that other Authors ſhou'd deal with him as he dealt with them. If you find any thing in my Books, ſaid he, that fits you, you may freely uſe it; every thing is at your Service. (f) Cum Victorinus noſter diu multumque verſatus eſſet in lectione eorum Autorum, qui libros Ariſtotelis quaſi in ſuum ſuccum convertiſſent, illorum potiùs veſtigia voluit, ubi & quantum poſſet, conſectari, quàm novam per omnia cudere verſionem. Ac quidem ille vir & factus erat, & natus, ut ſi qua ei de re dicendum eſſet aut ſcribendum, & ipſi, quæ de eadem illa ipſa re alii etiam recentiores, & qui viverent adhuc, rectè tradidiſſent, in mentem venirent, non puderet hinc illum verba ab iis & ſententias mutuari. Non enim hoc dicebat plagium eſſe literarium, ſed ingenuam atque candidam doctis atque bonis viris dignam κοινωνίαν. Et faciat, inquit, aliquis idem, ſi ſe cum fructu hoc poſſe ſperat, de meis quoque.

(H) That he retracted at his Death.] We are told that a Gentleman, who ſtudied at Heidelberg, met one day Strigelius in the Street, and told him, Sir, ſome Years ago you did not believe or teach the Calviniſtical Doctrines you teach now. I have been your Scholar at Jena, where you gave other Inſtructions to your Diſciples. Strigelius made no Anſwer, and went home, and finding himſelf very ill moſt humbly entreated the (g) Elector to be ſo kind as to come to him, giving him to underſtand that he wou'd impart to him ſome things relating to Salvation. The Prince went to him, being accompanied by Count he ſaw that their Sollicitations at the Court of the Emperor (A) Charles V. were inſignificant, he took a ſhorter and more Criminal Method, which was (B) to cauſe the pretended Uſurper to be aſſaſſinated. He engaged a Man in this Plot who put it in Execution; but the Succeſs of that Enterprize was more fatal to the Liberty of the Florentines, than the Diſcovery of the whole Conſpiracy wou'd have been. The Death of Alexander de Medicis made room for a Succeſſor better qualify'd than he was, to ſettle a new Sovereignty. He beat the Malecontents: Strozzi was made a Priſoner, and found no better Expedient than (C) to kill himſelf. He had married Clarice de Medicis, nearly

---

(i) That is Flacius Illyricus.

(k) Id. ib. apud eundem pag. 421.

(l) Pſalm 94. v. 1.

(m) Melch. Adam. ib. pag. 424.

(n) Ad hæc omnia acceſſerunt minæ Theologorum & fulmina anathematum adverſus ipſum in concionibus edita. Id. ibid.

(a) Id. ib. pag. 425.

(b) The 114 of the 6. B. of the Æneid, Invalidus vires ultra ſortemque ſenectæ. Let us ſay of Strigelius, Invalidus vires infra ſortemque juventæ.

(d) Melch. Adam. ib. pag. 427.

(f) Jac. Mosanus præf. Nicomacheorum Ariſtotelis cum verſione, argumentis & ſcholiis Strigelii apud Thomaſium de Plagio literario n. 194. pag. 82.

(g) That is Frederick III.

Count George de Hundſruſſen. What I have taught hitherto at Heidelberg in favour of the Calviniſts, ſaid Strigelius to him, does not well agree with the Word of God; but the Doctrines, which the Lutherans have profeſſed till now, are very true. The Elector having heard thoſe Words, went away in Anger. (h) Strigelius quickly expired with a Groan. This Story is taken from the Relation of a Journey to Conſtantinople, made by Gerlach, to whom Andreas Carolus (i) Abbot of St. George, refers the Reader, after having mentioned what you have juſt now read. He doubts whether one ſhou'd ſay that Strigelius had an unconſtant Soul, rather than call it an (k) unhappy one. He had call'd him before (l) a Weather Cock in point of Religion, and a Favourer of the Synergiſts and Zuinglians.

(A) Their Sollicitations at the Court of the Emperor Charles V.] There is ſomething about this in Rabelais's Epiſtles. The Cardinals Salviati and Rodolphus went to Naples with our Strozzi in the Year 1536, to engage the Emperor to ſet up again a Republican Government in Florence: they did not ſucceed in it. "(m) I hear their Affairs "have not had the Succeſs they hoped for, and "that the Emperor told 'em peremptorily that "he had, at theirs, and the late Pope Clement's "Requeſt, appointed Alexander de Medicis, "Duke of the Territories of Florence and Piſa, "which he never thought of, and had never "done, had it not been for them; that if he "ſhou'd depoſe him, it were acting the Part of "a Juggler, doing and undoing; and that there-"therefore they ſhou'd reſolve to Acknowledge "him for their Duke and Lord, and to obey him "as Vaſſals and Subjects ought to do. As for the "Complaints they made againſt the Duke; he "told 'em he would take Cognizance of 'em up-"on the Place". I ſhall add the following Words out of the firſt Letter. "(n) I hear that "'tis (o) about the Affair of Florence, and the "Difference between Duke Alexander de Medicis "and Philip Strozzi, whoſe Eſtate the Duke de-"ſign'd to confiſcate. It is no ſmall Eſtate, for "next to the Fourques of Ausburg, he is accounted "the richeſt Merchant in Chriſtendom. The "Duke had appointed ſome Men in that Town "to poyſon or kill him. Being inform'd of it "he obtain'd the Pope's Leave to bear Arms, "and he was commonly attended by thirty Sol-"diers well armed. The Duke of Florence be-"ing informed that Strozzi and thoſe Cardinals "were gone to the Emperor, and that he offered "him four hundred Thouſand Ducats, if he "wou'd appoint ſome Perſons to inquire into the "Duke's Tyranny and Wickedneſs, ſet out from "Florence, appointed Cardinal Cibo Governor in "his Abſence, and arrived in that Town (p) the "Day after Chriſtmas". In the third Letter Rabelais ſays (q) that thoſe Cardinals, and Strozzi, "with his Money, could not prevail with the "Emperor, tho' they offered in the Name of all "thoſe that were baniſh'd from Florence, to give "him a Million of Gold ready Money, to finiſh "La Rocqua, that was begun in Florence, and to "keep a good Garriſon in it in the Emperor's "Name, and to pay him a Hundred thouſand "Ducats every year, provided he wou'd get their "Eſtates and former Liberty reſtored to 'em". Afterwards the Author mentions the Honours that were done to the Duke of Florence by Charles V. and then he adds: "(r) From that time the ſaid "Cardinals, the Biſhop of Xaintes, and Strozzi "have continued their Sollicitations; the Em-"peror has at laſt refer'd the thing till he comes "to Florence . . . . And the Duke has proceeded "ſo cunningly in his Tyranny, that the Floren-"tines have proteſted to the Emperor Nomine Communitatis, that they deſire to have "no other Lord but him. 'Tis certain he has "ſeverely puniſhed the Exiles".

Take notice that the Author of the Notes upon Rabelais's Epiſtles, will not believe (a) that Philip Strozzi was a Merchant. But it is hardly conceivable how at that time a Family of Florence could have got ſo much Wealth without Trading. However, if he was not a famous Banker, he deſerved to be accounted one. The Baron de Forquevauls gives him that Title. "Philip Strozzi, "ſays he (b), and Bartholomew Valori, better Ban-"kers than Captains, were forced at Montemurlo. He adds (c), That "he was prodigiouſly rich "for a Citizen. (d) Peter Strozzi, notwith-"ſtanding his Loſſes and Expences, had ſtill "four hundred thouſand Crowns in the Banks "of Venice and Lyons, that remain'd out of his "Father Philip's Inheritance". (e) He went to Francis I. at the Camp of Marolles, with a Troop of two hundred Arquebuziers, which coſt him above fifty thouſand Crowns. This I find in Brantome, who adds: "(f) He was "vaſtly rich, and ſaved a great deal of Money "at Venice, where he kept for ſome time with "M. (g) Strozzi, his Son. That brave Lord "ſpent that vaſt Eſtate in the Service of our "Kings; for, as I have it from his Son, and "his Ancient Servants, whereas he was worth "above five hundred thouſand Crowns, when he "came into the Service of our Kings, he did "not leave twenty thouſand Crowns to his Son "when he died". Here is another Paſſage of Brantome, which fully confirms what I have quoted out of him. "(h) The King gave to M. "Strozzi, Son of the Mareſchal of France, fifty "thouſand Crowns as a Reward for the Office of "Colonel General of the Infantry, of which he "bought Breſſuire in Poitou; and this is all that "he and his Father left of ſo great an Eſtate he "brought into France: for I have heard many "People ſay, That when he came thither, he "had a Million of Gold in Bank, or in Goods "and Jewels, or in Money".

(B) Which was to cauſe the pretended Uſurper to be Aſſaſſinated.] I ſhou'd be very much to blame, ſhou'd I think that I can Comment upon this Text more elegantly, by uſing my own Words than by uſing Balzac's Expreſſions; and therefore I ſhall make no Alteration in the Proof he affords me. "(i) Philip Strozzi, the Husband of Clarice de "Medicis, Siſter (k) to Pope Leo, not being "able to bear the Reign of Duke Alexander de "Medicis, exhorted Laurence de Medicis, his Couſin, "to Conſpire againſt the Life of Duke Alexan-"der, and to reſtore the Liberty of his Coun-"try. Laurence appeared willing to undertake "ſuch a dangerous Enterprize; but he was afraid "that his two Daughters wou'd run the hazard "of loſing their Honour, becauſe his Eſtate "wou'd be confiſcated. Philip told him that "ſuch a Fear ſhou'd not hinder him, and aſſured "him that whatever the Succeſs of his Enter-"prize might be, he wou'd Marry two of his "Sons to his two Daughters. Which he did, "for Laurence having made his eſcape after "Duke Alexander's Murther, without reaping "any Advantage from it, Philip religiouſly per-"formed his Promiſe, and gave Laodamia de Medicis to Peter Strozzi, who was ſince Mareſchal "of France, and Magdalen to Robert Strozzi, "who lately (l) died at Rome."

(C) No other Expedient than to kill himſelf.] I ſhall uſe ſtill Balzac's Words. "(m) The ſame "Philip (h) Mox autem ægrotans Victorinus animam (inconſtantem dicam, an infelicem?) gemebundus exhalavit. Andr. Carolus, memorab. eccleſiaſt. ſeculi xvii. pag. 49.

(i) Andr. Carolus ib.

(k) It ſeems in this place that he means a damned Soul.

(l) Homo varius & verſipellis cum Synergiſtis, cum Zuinglianis addictus. Id. ibid. pag. 34.

(m) Rabelais, Letter 3. pag. 29.

(n) Idem pag. 8. & 9.

(o) That , that the Cardinals Salviati and Rodolph were ne to the Court of Charles V. Naples.

(p) That , at ome.

(q) Rabelais ibid. pag. 55.

(r) Id. ib. pag. 56.

(a) Obſervat. ſur les epitres de Rabelais, pag. 61.

(b) Francis de Pavie, Baron de Forquevauls, Vies de pluſieurs grands Capitaines pag. 379.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 382.

(d) Ibid. pag. 383.

(e) Brantome, Capitaines etrangers, tom. 2. pag. 287.

(f) Brantome ibid, pag. 289.

(g) Philip Strozzi, Colonel General of the French Infantry. See Moreri, and Father Anſelm, whom he tranſcribes See alſo the following Article.

(h) Idem Brantome Memoir. des Capit. Francois tom. 4. p. m. 311, 312.

(i) Balzac Entretien 34. ch. 6. p. m. 330.

(k) Balzac ſhou'd have ſaid Niece.

(l) When Balzac writ this, Robert cou'd not but have been dead a long time.

(m) Balzac ibid. pag. 331, 332.

ly related to Leo X. by whom he had many Children, and among others Peter Strozzi, Mareſchal of France, mentioned in Moreri's Dictionary. 'Tis not true that the Nun, who made ſome Latin Hymns, was that Mareſchal's (D) Siſter.

STROZZI (Philip) Grandſon † of the foregoing. You'll find in Moreri that he was born at Venice in 1541; and that he was brought into France at Seven Years of Age. He was bred up with King* Francis II. who was then Dauphin, and began to bear Arms in Piedmont, under Mareſchal de Briſſac. A Sally of Youth moved him to go into Piedmont, without telling his Father of it. We ſhall ſee (A) the Par-

"Philip after the Death of Duke Alexander oppoſed Coſmo, his Succeſſor, firſt Great Duke of "Florence. But having loſt the Battle of Marone, near Florence, he was made Priſoner; and "believing that his Enemy wou'd poiſon him or "put him to an ignominious Death, reſolved to "kill himſelf. Before he executed that ſtrange "Reſolution, he made his Will, the Original "whereof I have ſeen at Rome, among the Papers of the late Signior Pompey Frangipane, in "which among other things, that Man, "whom the Ancients wou'd have adored, orders and entreats his Children to dig up his "Bones out of the Place where they ſhall lie in "Florence, and to get 'em tranſported to Venice, "that ſince he cou'd not be ſo happy as to die in "a Free City, he may enjoy that Bleſſing after "his Death, and his Aſhes may reſt in Peace "out of the Conqueror's Domination. Afterwards he engrav'd upon the Mantle-Piece of "the Chimney with the very ſame Point of the "Dagger wherewith he killed himſelf, this "Verſe of Virgil,

"Exoriare aliquis noſtris ex oſſibus ultor.

"Which was faithfully executed by his Children, "who came into France to ſerve the King againſt "the Emperor Charles V. who had Founded the "Domination of the Medicis at Florence. I muſt "not forget that the ſame Philip Strozzi, at the "Beginning of his Will, expreſſes a great Confidence in God's Mercy, hoping he will forgive "him for killing himſelf, ſince he did it like a "Man of Honour to maintain his Liberty; being "of Opinion that when a Free Man has loſt it "he may lawfully die. But the Goſpel is contrary to ſuch an Opinion, and New Rome calls "Deſpair what Old Rome call'd Greatneſs of "Soul. She Excommunicates now thoſe whom "ſhe formerly Deified."

Note, (n) That one of the Reaſons that mov'd Strozzi to kill himſelf was the Fear of expoſing his Friends to great Dangers by what he ſhou'd confeſs againſt his Will upon the Rack; which appears from a Paper that was found in his Chamber, wherein he "(o) upbraided Cardinal (p) "Cibo, a Friend and a Truſty Counſellor to the "Duke, with his great Cruelty, and exhorted him "to fill himſelf with the Blood he had ſo much "thirſted after. As for me, added he, ſince I "have not been able to help my Friends in my "Life-time, I will do 'em no Prejudice after my "Death . . . . A remarkable Inſtance of Humin Miſery, ſays the Baron de Forquevauls, and "of the Uncertainty of the things of this World! "Philip Strozzi, who few Months before was as "much eſteem'd and honour'd as any Man in "Italy, not only for his Riches, that were prodigious for a Citizen, and for the Antiquity of "his Family, which had continued in Honour "for ſeveral Hundred Years, but alſo for his "agreeable Converſation, Magnificence and Liberality, for his (q) Learning and his great "Knowledge and Experience of the World, "finds himſelf a Captive in that very Town "whoſe Liberty he deſign'd to preſerve, and is "obliged to kill himſelf with his own Hands to "avoid the Cruelty of his ungrateful Citizens."

(D) That the Nun, who made ſome Latin Hymns, was that Mareſchal's Siſter.] Brantome, who ſays ſo, is miſtaken. "He had a Siſter, ſays he (r), "who was a Nun, and an Abbeſs in Italy, a "very honeſt Lady, and very well skill'd in Divine and Human Learning, eſpecially in Latin "Poetry. She made many fine Hymns and ſpiritual Canticles in Latin Verſe, which have been "ſung in the Churches of Italy with great "Admiration and Devotion: Nay, I have heard "ſay that they are ſung ſtill in ſome Churches." Colomies knew not this Miſtake of Brantome: He quotes him (ſ) to confirm what he had quoted out of Thuanus in praiſe of Laurentia Strozzi, a Dominican Nun, who died in 1591, aged 77 Years, and whoſe Hymns were printed at Paris ten Years after (t). That Nun was not Siſter to Peter Strozzi, Mareſchal of France, as Colomies thought upon Brantome's Credit: She was Siſter to Cyriacus Strozzi, (v) Profeſſor of Philoſophy and of the Greek Tongue at Florence, and then Profeſſor at Bologna, and at laſt at Piſa, Son of Zachary Strozzi, deſcended from the ſame Anceſtors with our Philip. There is more Reaſon to ſay that Signior Flaminio's Wife (w) was Siſter to Peter Strozzi, Mareſchal of France. Brantome ſpeaks of her thus. "She had alſo another "Siſter, Signora Magdalena Strozzi, an able, ingenious and very beautiful Woman, whom I "ſaw at Rome in my younger Years. She had "Married Signor Flaminio, Count d'Anguilare, who "commanded ſome Gallies with the Prior of "Capua, his Brother-in-Law. That Count was "the Son of that brave Count d'Anguilare, who "was killed in the Service of King Francis "the Firſt." This Magdalen might very well be the ſame that is mentioned in the Prejugez legitimes contre le Papiſme, on occaſion of a Steel-Box, containing among other Relicks our Saviour's Prepuce. "(a) A Devout Lady, call'd Magdalen "(b) Strotia, was commiſſioned to unfold that precious Treaſure, and put it in order. When "ſhe came to the little Bag, wherein the Prepuce was, ſhe went about to unty the String of "the Bag; but her Fingers grew ſtiff and without motion at three ſeveral times: This was "look'd upon us a Miracle; and another Perſon "was appointed to open the Bag, viz. Clarice, "Daughter of Madam Strotia, who was a Virgin "and young enough to be ſure of her Virginity. "For none but a Virgin cou'd touch that Prepuce". Read the Sequel of this Paſſage in the Original; it is a ſharp Satyr and a pleaſant Ridicule upon many other Things, beſides the Imprudence of thoſe who write ſo many Chimerical things about Relicks.

(A) The Particulars of that mad Prank,] "(c) "Being but a Boy, and bred up with the young King "Francis II. who was then Dauphin, and hearing of the noble War that was made in Piedmont, he ſtole away only with two Horſes, and "a Milan Arquebuſe at his Saddle-Bow, and "went thither, having for his Guide that eſpecial Rogue John d'eſt, a German, who was lately "hang'd at Blois. . . . . That Fellow adviſed "him to ſteal ſome Silver Baſons, Cups and "Ewers from his Mother, in order to make his "Journey. When the Mareſchal his Father came "to know this, and what Reaſon had mov'd him "to it, he ſaid, That if it had been for ſomething "elſe, and not for ſuch a glorious Deſign as that "of going to the War, he wou'd have hang'd "him, but that he forgave him, and wou'd do ſo "for the time to come, if he took more from "him, provided it were upon ſuch a noble Account. M. Strozzi told me ſo himſelf. Afterwards when he ſaw him, tho' he was naturally very ſevere, he laughed at it before his Mother, who deſired he ſhou'd be puniſhed for "it: however he gave him a ſevere Reprimand".

(B) The

---

† He was the Son of Peter Strozzi Mareſchal of France.

* Anſelme, Hiſt. des grans Officiers pag. 386.

(n) See the Baron de Forquevauls, p. 281.

(o) Id. p. 282.

(p) It ſhou'd be Cibo.

(q) 'Tis ſaid that he was a Man of Learning. Fortes non ſunt, qui alicujus deſiderii potiundi ſpe privati, aut calamitate oppreſſi, manus ſibi intulerunt, qualis paucis annis ante Philippus Stroſſius, opibus florens, literis non ineruditus cætera felix, ſi ſua ſorte contentus, partibus adverſis non faviſſet. Rorarius, quod animalia bruta ratione utantur melius homine, pag. 15.

(r) Brantome Capit. etrangers. tom. 2. p. 294.

(ſ) Colomiés, Bibliotheque choiſie, pag. 207.

(t) See an Encomium upon that Nun in Hilarion de Coſte, tom. 2. pag. 57. & ſeq.

(v) See her Encomium among thoſe of Papyrius Maſſo. tom. 2. p. 222. & ſeq. See alſo Mr. Teiſſier Addit. aux eloges tirez de Mr. de Thou, tom. 1. p. 275. & t. 2. p. 188. edit. 1696

(w) Father Anſelme, Hiſt. des grans Officiers pag. 387. calls him Flaminio d'Affaita.

(a) Jurieu, Prejugez legitimes contre le Papiſme, tom. 2. p. 227. He quotes Tolet. in ſecundum Luc. poſt. annotat. 31.

(b) It ſhou'd be Strozzi.

(c) Brantome Memoir. des Capitaines François tom. 4. p. m. 353.

Particulars of that mad Prank, and the Care that was taken of (B) his Studies. He was a very Brave Man, and expreſt upon many occaſions * the utmoſt Intrepidity. He was made ‡ Colonel General of the Infantry, after the Deceaſe of M. Dandelot, in the year 1569. 'Twas he who † did ſo well arm the Infantry, and brought in the uſe of large bor'd Arquebuſes. He reſign'd that Office when they (C) gave him the Command of the Army that was ſent to the Tercera Iſles, to attempt the Re-eſtabliſhment of Dom Antonio, King of Portugal. That Expedition proved very unfortunate; he (D) loſt his Life in it the 26th of July 1582, and was uſed by the Enemies as an infamous (E) Pirate: many Gentlemen

(B) The Care that was taken of his Studies.] “(d) His Father took great care of his Education, “and particularly that he ſhould be inſtructed in “good Learning; he himſelf had made a great “Proficiency in it; his Son cou'd not come near “it; however he had Learning enough. I have “heard him ſay that one day his Father asked “him what he had done that Morning. He told “him that he had rid, plaid at Tennis, and then “breakfaſted. Ah! unhappy young Man, ſaid “his Father, muſt you feed the Body before you “feed the Soul! Do ſo no more; firſt of all fill “your Mind with good Reading and Study, and “then deal with your Body as you think fit. “Such were the wiſe Precepts which that Father “gave to his Son, who made a good uſe of 'em; “for he had as much Knowledge as Valour, tho' “I believe that ever ſince he left his Books to “betake himſelf to the War, he did not beſtow “half an Hour upon Reading”.

(C) He reſign'd that Office, when they gave him the Command of the Army.] Varillas is miſtaken as to the Circumſtances of this Fact. I ſhall make it appear when I have ſet down Brantome's words. “(e) Not long before he undertook that Voyage “by the Queen's Order, he was deſired to lay “down his Office of Colonel, being to'd that he “cou'd not be General of that Army, and Colonel “in France. Such a Propoſal was unacceptable “to him, and he was unwilling to comply “with it. However, becauſe the King had a “mind to raiſe M. d'Epernon, and to gratify him “with that Poſt, of which he was more Ambitious “than of any other, M. Strozzi was forced “to reſign it, to his great Grief; For I know “what he told me then: He added, that if he “did not die in the Enterprize, he wou'd be preferr'd “to a greater Poſt than that was, and “that none ſhou'd ever dare to deprive him of “it. The King gave him fifty thouſand Crowns “as a Reward, wherewith he purchaſed Breſſuire “in Poitou”. It appears from the laſt Words of this Paſſage, that Varillas ſhou'd not have ſaid that (f) Philip Strozzi, going to the Tercera Iſles, “had nothing to loſe in France, ſince he was ſo “far from having made any Purchaſe in it, “that he had ſpent the three Millions his Grandfather “had left”. That Hiſtorian is the more inexcuſable, becauſe he quotes Brantome's Encomium upon Philip Strozzi. Let's ſee his other Miſtakes. “(g) The Court had lately done Strozzi “the greateſt Injury he cou'd receive, for King “Henry III. had depriv'd him without a Cauſe, “and even without a Pretence, of his Office of “Colonel of the French Infantry, to beſtow it “upon the Duke d'Epernon; and becauſe all thoſe “that are out of Favour grow contemptible, tho' “their Merit be never ſo great, 'twas not to “be thought that the French on board the “Queen Mother's Fleet, wou'd have a ſufficient “Eſteem for the General ſhe had given 'em, ſince “they knew that the Court made ſo little Account “of him, that they had taken from him “the moſt important Poſt in the Army, without “making him any amends; which had never “been practiſed in the foregoing Reigns, nor in “that of Henry III. before the prodigious Fortune “of the Duke d'Epernon”. There are two things in this Paſſage, the Falſity whereof appears from the Words of Brantome, above quoted. 'Tis not true that Strozzi was deprived of his Office of Colonel without any Pretence, and without making him any Amends. I am contented with this Criticiſm, though I might proceed farther in my Obſervations againſt Varillas; for the Hiſtory of the French Monarchy may doubtleſs afford ſome Examples of what he affirms to have never been practiſed.

(D) That Expedition proved unfortunate; he loſt his Life in it.] The Marqueſs de Sainte Croix, who commanded the Spaniſh Fleet, obtain'd a compleat Victory over the French; but he caſt a blot upon his Victory, by his cruel Uſage of the vanquiſh'd. A particular Account of his Cruelty may be ſeen in a (h) Book of Varillas, out of which I ſhall only take what concerns our Strozzi. He was forced (i) to ſurrender, after he had made a brave Defence: “(k) Binvile, a Gentleman “of Picardy, who wrote fifty years after “three Volumes des Veritez Francoiſes (l) in Cardinal “de Richelieu's Vindication, with more “Eloquence and Neatneſs than any other Apologiſt “of that firſt Miniſter, relates from the Depoſition “of the French, who made their eſcape “from the Expedition of the Tercera Iſles, that “Strozzi was wounded above his Knee with the “Shot of an Arquebuſs, ſo that he cou'd not “ſtand; and that he was carried in that condition “to the Marqueſs de Sainte Croix, who turn'd “his Head another way with Diſdain, that he “might not ſee him; that being told he was the “General of the French Fleet he ordered him to “be removed, becauſe he did but foul and poyſon “his Ship; that a Spaniſh Soldier, in Obedience “to the Marqueſs, made an end of Strozzi, “by giving him two Stabs, and then they “threw him into the Sea. Other Relations don't “agree about theſe Particulars; and tho' they own “that Strozzi had been wounded in the Fight, “ſo that he cou'd not have recover'd, and yet “that the Marqueſs de Sainte Croix order'd they “ſhou'd make an end of him; they add, that he “kept his Corps to have it hanged with the other “Priſoners, on whom he deſign'd to inflict that “Puniſhment, under pretence that they were “Men whom no body wou'd own, who came to “make War with Spain in the Tercera Iſles, tho' “that Monarchy was at Peace with that of France.” Varillas ſhou'd not have quoted Binvile, for that Author ſays nothing in particular about Strozzi: he only ſays (a) that the Marqueſs de Sainte Croix us'd him barbarouſly; and of all the Facts he relates thereupon, there's none he grounds upon the Teſtimony of the French, who return'd from the Tercera Iſlands. Varillas ſhould have quoted Brantome, who expreſſes himſelf thus: (b) When M. Strozzi “ſaw the Army Commanded “by the Marquis de Sainte Croix making towards “him, he was ſo deſirous of preventing “him, that his Ship being heavy, and a bad “Sailer, he removed into a lighter Ship, on “which was M. de Beaumont, Lieutenant to M. “de Briſſac, whoſe Governor he had been, and “without any further delay came up to the Admiral, “and they fought a long while hand to “hand; but being wounded in the Thigh, near “the Knee, with a Musket-ſhot, his Men being “diſcouraged, left off Fighting: Whereupon “the Spaniards eaſily got in, and carried him to “the Marqueſs de Sainte Croix, who ſeeing what a “miſerable Condition he was in, ſaid, he wou'd “but hinder the Ship, and order'd they ſhou'd “make an end of him; which was done by giving “him two Stabs, and then they threw him into “the Sea”. See the Margin (†).

(E) He was uſed as an infamous Pirate: many Gentlemen, who had followed him, were delivered up to the Executioner as Robbers on the Sea.] “(c) “As ſoon as the Marqueſs de Sainte Croix landed “in the Iſland of St. Michael, he cauſed about “three

* See Brantome in the Encomium upon Strozzi, in the 4th Volume of his Memoirs.

‡ Anſelme ibid. See alſo Brantome ibid. pag. 270.

† Brant. ib. p. 285.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 304.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 311.

(f) Varillas, Hiſt. de Henry III. Book 6. pag. m. 134.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 135.

(h) The Hiſtory of Henry III

(i) Varill. ibid. pag. 145.

(k) Id ib. pag. 146.

(l) Moreri upon the word Barthelemi (Charles) mentions the Author of that Book; he Styles him Sieur de Bienville.

(a) Veritez Francoiſes 2. part. pag. 403.

(b) Brant. ubi ſupra 307.

(†) You'll find in d'Aubigné Hiſt. univ. tom. 2. Book 5. ch. 21. pag 1160. an Account very different from this.

(c) Varillas ibid. pag. 147.

men, who had followed him, were delivered up to the Executioner, like so many Robbers on the Sea. He was † extremely severe; which appeared when he ordered eight hundred Women of Pleasure, who followed the Camp, to be thrown into the River Loire. His Free Discourse about Religion occasioned a Belief that he was little persuaded of the Truth of (F) Christianity; but Brantome affirms he was wrong'd in that respect, and that he was otherwise * a very honest Man. This Testimony proceeding from a Man, who acknowledges on the other hand ‡ that Strozzi plaid him a Trick of a most ungrateful Friend, and that he had the Reputation of being neither a bad Enemy nor a good Friend, is of great Weight: for Men offended upon such a nice Account, don't use to conceal the other Faults that are known to them, and don't say that this was the ‖ only one. 'Tis affirm'd that he gave great Credit to Judicial Astrology, (G) and that it proved very prejudicial to him in his Expedition.

STURMIUS (James) was born at Strasburg (A) in the Year 1489, of one

" three Hundred French Prisoners, among whom " there were fifty two Gentlemen, to be brought " into the publick Place call'd (d) Villa Franca. " They were exposed by his Order upon Scaffolds " to the publick View, or rather to be laugh'd " at by the People; and then they were Sentenced to be Hang'd; as being Enemies of the " publick Peace, and Favourers of Rebels and Pirates, who made bold to come from France in a " body, to serve Dom Antonio against Philip II. " King of Spain, lawful Heir of Portugal, notwithstanding the Peace between the Spaniards " and the French." Thuanus's Words are more energetical. (e) Tum per tubicinem captivis sisti jussis, ex numero procerum XXVIII numerati sunt, ex nobilitate circiter L.; ex omni numero CCC, quos omneis ad mortem damnavit, (Santacrucius) publicato elogio, quod pacem inter Christianissimum & Catholicum reges juratam violassent; Antonio Crati Priori ad classem Indicam intercipiendam insidias struenti operam navassent; insulas R. Catholici, uti jam ad S. Michaelis insulam fecerant, prædaturi venissent; conserta pugna Catholici classem oppugnassent. Proinde tanquam publicæ tranquillitatis ac commercii perturbatores erga majestatem Catholicam perduelles ac piratæ infames utriusque Regis bono, sic Santacrucii sententia ferebat, criminalium causarum judici capite plectendi traduntur. 'Tis affirm'd in some Relations that the Marquess having caused Strozzi to be put to Death, (f) kept his Corps, to have it hang'd with the other Prisoners, on whom he intended to inflict such a Punishment. Henry III. had no satisfaction given him for that bloody Affront, which ought to be reckon'd one of the most shameful Passages of his Reign. The Historian (g) Contestagio . . . tho' he was a Pensionary of Spain . . . . owns that Strozzi acted in Henry the Third's Name, and had a Patent for the Generalship of that Army. The Author, from whom I have these Words, adds, that the Nobility and the Soldiers who followed Strozzi, had engaged in that Journey by the most Christian King's special Command; and that his Majesty had declared to Pope Gregory XIII. by his Ambassador, and to Philip II. by M de Saint Goart, afterwards Marquess de Pisany, that he owned that Sea Army, as being obliged by Ancient Treaties to Protect the Kingdom of Portugal. It was therefore an inexcusable Baseness to express no Resentment for such a Breach of the Laws of War, and such an ignominious Punishment inflicted upon the French Prisoners, as if they had been Pirates and Men whom no body wou'd own. Those who blame that Prince for giving too great a Power to his Favourites, do him no Injustice; but they shou'd blame him much more for being so weak as to approve all the Fancies of his Mother, an Ambitious Woman, who pretended to the Crown of Portugal out of an intolerable Vanity. She was one of those, who laid a Claim to that Kingdom, (h) and made no scruple to produce ridiculous and chimerical Pretensions, that the World might think her Ancestors had been more Illustrious than 'twas reported. Having made such a Step out of meer Vanity, she proceeded to warlike Preparations in order to conquer Portugal; she sent a Fleet into the Tercera Islands, which had the ill Success I have mentioned; she had the confusion to see that those who acted in her Name, and her Son's Authority, were used like Pirates; and France left such an ignominious Affront unpunished. That Queen, who pretended to be so great a Politician, had wrong Notions of Things. Cou'd any thing be more imprudent and impertinent than to engage in such a War, when the Kingdom was full of Factions, and laboured under great Distempers, the curing of which shou'd have been the principal Care of the Court.

REFLECTION upon the Conduct of Catherine de Medicis

(F) His free Discourse about Religion occasioned a Belief that he was little persuaded . . . . but Brantome affirms, he was wrong'd in that Respect, and that he was otherwise a very honest Man.] These last Words are Brantome's: here follows what he adds. " (i) Most People look'd upon him as a Man " who had little Religion; they might think so " if they pleased, but they never sounded the " Bottom of his Soul. 'Tis true he was no Bigot, no Hypocrite, and no Devourer of Crucifixes, and that he little minded Masses and " Sermons; but then he believed what ought to " be believed; and besides he wou'd not have " wronged any body for any thing in the World. " Indeed when he was in a merry Mood, he " wou'd sometimes laugh at Purgatory and Hell; " but no stress shou'd have been laid upon it; for " he did certainly believe Hell Torments, tho' " he laugh'd at the great Dragon represented by " Painters. To conclude, he said many things, " which he might as well have let alone; but " that was more out of Mirth than out of any " ill Design. I have been familiarly conversant " with him about thirty Years, and I may say, " he was no impious Man". 'Tis in vain for Brantome to palliate the thing; what he says is sufficient to shew that Strozzi had infinitely more Virtue than Religion.

(G) Great Credit to judicial Astrology, and that it proved very prejudicial to him.] Read these words of Varillas. " (k) The French plundered and " burnt the Town of Aguna, and caused such a " consternation through the whole Isle of Saint " Michael, that they wou'd have made themselves Masters of it on the same day, if they " had pursued their Victory; but it was Strozzi's " Fault as well as the Queen Mother's, his near " Relation, to be too much addicted to Judicial " Astrology. He was persuaded that there were " fortunate and unfortunate Days for him, and " he had made a kind of a Calendar, which " he observed with all possible exactness. The " Day on which he had been fighting was mark'd " in it with a black Spot; which made a greater Impression upon his Mind than the Victory " he had obtain'd. He fancied that if he pursued " it, he shou'd fall into the Precipice his ill Fate " had prepared for him; and that his ill Fortune " began to favour him, the better to bring him to " it. This was sufficient to stop him, tho' the Circumstances were so favourable, that the Citizens of the two chief Towns of the Isle of " St. Michael, had deserted them, and fled to the " Mountains, where they hoped to be more " safe." There's no body, whom it more concerns to be free from such Superstitions, than the General of an Army.

(A) Was born at Strasburg in the Year 1489.] Melchior Adam (b) places his Birth in the Year 1490; but he mentions his Epitaph (c) wherein it one of the moſt Noble Families of that Town, and made himſelf Illuſtrious by the Services he did to his Country. He exerciſed the moſt conſiderable Offices with great Capacity and Probity, and gloriouſly performed ſeveral Deputations both in the Diets of the Empire, and at the Courts of Vienna and England. He very much (B) contributed to the Alteration that was made in Religion at Straſburg in the year 1528, and to the Erection of the College that was open'd † ten years after, and to Sleidan's Hiſtory. He died at Straſburg the 30th of October 1553 ‡. He had been ſome years without receiving the Sacrament, being offended at the Diſputes of Divines about the Senſe of theſe Words, This is my Body. See the Remark F in the following Article.

---

† Varillas, Hist. de Henry III l. 6. pag. m. 149.

* Brant. ubi supra pag. 305.

‡ Id. ib. pag. 310.

‖ As honest a Man as ever came from Florence: He had but one Fault; he was the coldest Friend that ever was seen. Id. ibid. pag. 311.

(d) Varillas shou'd have said to the publick Place of VillaFranca: Villa Franca is a Town, and not the name of the publick Place of a Town.

(e) Thuanus lib. 75. p. m. 422, 423.

(f) Varillas ibid. pag 146. See also Thuanus, ibid. pag. 423.

(g) Veritez Françoises 2. part. p. 405.

(h) See Mezerai in the 5th. Vol. of his Abregé chronologique p.m. 238.

(i) Id. ib. pag.

(k) Varillas ibid. pag. 137.

(b) Melch. Adam. ubi infra pag. 91.

(c) Ibid. pag.

STURMIUS (John) was born at Sleida in Eifel ß near Cologne * the firſt of October 1507. He Studied firſt in his Native Country, with the Sons of Count de Manderſcheid, whoſe Receiver his Father was. Afterwards he ſtudied at Liege in St. Jerom's College, and then he went to Louvain in 1524, where he ſpent five years, three in being Inſtructed and two in Inſtructing others; and his School-Fellows were John Sleidan, Gonthier Andernac, Chriſtopher Montius, Bartholomew Latomus, Andrew Veſalius, James Omphalius, and ſome others, who became very Famous, and had a great Affection for him. He ſet up a Printing-Houſe with Rudger Reſcius, Greek-Profeſſor, and printed ſome Greek Authors, beginning with Homer, and ſoon after he carried thoſe Editions to Paris in 1529 †. What Melchior Adam ſays, is not true, that he was familiarly (C) acquainted with Conrad Goclenius at Louvain. He was very much eſteem'd at Paris, where he read publick Lectures upon Greek and Latin Authors, and upon Logick. He alſo married there, and kept many Boarders; but becauſe he liked the new Opinions, as they were call'd, he found himſelf in Danger more than once, which doubtleſs was the Reaſon why he removed and went to Straſburg in 1537, to fill up the Place the Magiſtrates offer'd him. The year

† See the Remark D in the following Article.

‡ Taken from Melchior Adam in vita Juriſc. pag. 91. & ſeq.

ß See his Epiſtle Dedicatory in the 2d. Volum of Cicero's Orations.

* Melch. Adam. in vit. Philoſoph. pag. 342.

† Id. ib.

---

it is placed in the Year 1489. I rather chuſe to follow the Epitaph, then the Narrative of that Writer. 'Tis ſaid in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, that our James Sturmius was born at Sleida, near Cologne, according to Verheiden. This is taken from M. Teiſſier (d); but 'tis certain Verheiden does not ſay ſo, for he ſpeaks of John Sturmius, and not of James. What M. Teiſſier adds, That Sturmius, after he had begun his Studies at Liege, went on with them at Paris, and that he had the Direction of the Univerſity of Straſburg, in the Quality of Rector, is a Conſequence of his firſt Miſtake, viz. of his ſuppoſing that Verheiden ſpeaks of James Sturmius. What follows is not better. (e) He died, not 80 years Old, as Verheiden ſays, but in his Climacterical year. Verheiden does not deſerve ſuch a Cenſure; he (f) only ſays that John Sturmius died being above 80 years old, which is true. Thuanus is miſtaken when he ſays that James Sturmius died (g) in his Climacterical year. His Epitaph (h) imports, that he died in his 64th year. Note, that Pantaleon (i), who quotes Sleidan, tells us, that James Sturmius departed this Life in his Climacterical year 63. Sleidan does not ſay ſo; on the contrary he obſerves that Sturmius lived above 63 years. I ſhall ſet down the whole Paſſage, becauſe it contains a juſt Encomium upon the Perſon, who makes the Subject of this Article. (k) Octobris die penultimo, Jacobus Sturmius, vir longè & prudentiſſimus & integerrimus, ac planè decus nobilitatis Germanicæ, propter eximias animi dotes & doctrinam inſignem, è vita decedit Argentorati, cùm ex febri quartana per tempus bimeſtre decubuiſſet. Ætatis annum exceſſerat tertium & ſexageſimum. See how dangerous it is to truſt to Quotations, that have not been compared with the Original.

(B) He very much contributed .... to Sleidan's Hiſtory.] That Hiſtorian acknowledges it. (l) Hiſtoriam nihil magis decet quàm veritas atque candor. Ego certè, ne quid in ea parte poſſet in me deſiderari, diligenter incubui: nec enim ex vano quicquam hauſi, vel auditione levi, ſed ſcribendi materiam mihi ſuppeditarunt acta, quæ ſtudioſè collegi, de quorum fide nemo dubitare poſſit: Intervenit etiam verè nobilis & præclari viri, Jacobi Sturmii, ſubſidium & opera, qui per annos amplius triginta verſatus in publicis & arduis negociis, maxima cum laude, quum ſua me non dedignaretur amicitia, quæ fuit ipſius humanitas, dubitantem & hærentem aliquando in vadis atque ſcopulis, peritus ipſe gubernator, ſubinde reduxit in viam æquabilem minimeque ſalebroſam, & majorem operis partem, ante morbum, quo ſublatus interiit, meo rogatu perlegit, & quorum oportuit, diligenter admonuit.

(C) Not true that he was familiarly acquainted with Conrad Goclenius.] Melchior Adam expreſſes himſelf thus: (m) Ibidem (Lovanii) cum familiariter verſaretur cum Rudgero Reſcio, & Conrado Goclenio, hominibus literatiſſimis, utriuſque linguæ Græcæ & Latinæ Lovanii tum Profeſſoribus, &c. Theſe Words are not clear enough: the plain Meaning of 'em ſeems to be that Conrad Goclenius was Profeſſor of the Greek and Latin Tongues, as well as Rudgerus Reſcius; but it was not ſo. Goclenius was only Profeſſor of the Latin Tongue, and Reſcius of the Greek. The Words I am going to quote out of John Sturmius will inform us of this Diſtinction, and, beſides, that he applied himſelf to Reſcius, who had fallen out with Goclenius, and was little acquainted with the latter. Memini ego, Hermanne princeps Illuſtriſſime, So Sturmius ſpeaks to the Archbiſhop of Cologne in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the 2d Volume of Cicero's Orations, cum Lovanii ante annos quindecim eſſem, præclaram de Comite Schauemburgio, quem tu tibi adjutorem atque ſucceſſorem cooptaſti, ſpem nobis omnibus datam eſſe. Audivit ille tum quotidie in Latina lingua doctorem, diſertum hominem Conradum Goclenium: cum ego Rutgeri Reſcii propter græcas literas, quas ille omnium optime tradebat, eſſem ſtudioſus: ob eamque cauſſam minus ego Conrado familiaris qui a Rutgero diſſentiebat. Sed de Schauemburgio conſentientes noſtri ſenſus erant, maximum aliquando ornamentum atque lumen in ſua Repub. futurum, ſi eum curſum ſtudiorum, in quo tum erat, poſſet conficere. I have ſaid more than once that 'tis a Fault not to date Epiſtles Dedicatory and Prefaces, and I have been confirm'd in this Opinion as I was tranſcribing this Paſſage of Sturmius; for becauſe 'tis not ſaid in my Edition, which is that of Straſburg, apud Joſiam Ribelium 1558, whether it be the ſecond or the third, &c. I ſhou'd have thought that it is the firſt, and conſequently that Sturmius dedicated it in the year 1558: but had I drawn ſuch a Conſequence, I had been miſtaken in ſeveral things; I had falſely believed that he ſtudied at Louvain in 1543, and that Conrad Goclenius was then living. In order to avoid thoſe Miſtakes I have been oblig'd to inquire into the true Date of the firſt Edition of Cicero's Orations, publiſhed by Sturmius, and I have found that it came out in 1540. Is it not a ſad thing to loſe ones time by the negligence of others? Is it reaſonable that the Omiſſion of a (a) thing, which (d) Teiſſier … dit. to … huanus's … gies, … m. 1. … 72.

… Id. ib.

… Ver- … den in … ib. pag.

… Thuan. … d Teiſ- … ibid.

… Apud … lch. … m. in … Ju- … pag.

… Pan- … on in … ie hi- … ie ad … 30. … br. … 327.

… Slei- … Hiſt. … 25. … m. 725 … ann.

… Jo. … lanus … De- … Hiſt. … 2. v.

(m) Melch. Adam. in vit. Philoſoph. pag. 342.

(a) That is, the Date of a Letter

Year following he open'd a School (D) there, which became famous, and by his means obtained of the Emperor Maximilian II, the Title of an Univerſity in the year 1566. He was a good Philologer, and writ Latin with great Purity, and his way of Teaching was very methodical. Upon this Account the College of Straſburg, of which he was Rector, became the moſt flouriſhing in Germany. His Talents were not confin'd within the Bounds of his School; for he was intruſted with many Deputations in Germany, and into foreign Countries, and acquitted himſelf in thoſe Employments with great Honour and Vigilance. He ſhew'd an extraordinary Charity to the Proteſtant Refugees: He was not contented to beſtir himſelf in order to help 'em in their Miſery; but (E) ran into Debt and grew poor for them. He publiſhed ‡ many Books, and lived till the 3d of March 1589, that is, 81 Years, five Months and two Days. Tho' he had loſt his Sight, he minded the publick Good §. He was married three * times, and left no Children behind him. He had many Troubles in his Life-time, the greateſt whereof was his being expoſed to the Perſecutions of the Lutheran Miniſters. When he came to Straſburg he found a moderate Lutheraniſm, which he liked well enough, tho' he was of Zuinglius's Opinion. The Lutheran Miniſters grew angry by Degrees with thoſe, who did not believe the Real Preſence: He was diſpleaſed with their violent Sermons, and 'tis ſaid (F) he abſtained many years from the publick Exerciſes of Religion. He required no more then a Daſh of a Pen, ſhou'd expoſe many Readers to a very great Trouble?

(D) He opened a School in 1538, which became famous.] This ought not to be ſo underſtood as if no publick Lectures had been read in the City of Straſburg, before that year. The contrary is true; for Sturmius ſays, that when he arrived there Capito expounded the Bible, Hedio explained the Goſpels, James Bedrot taught Greek, Michael Delius (b) Hebrew, Chriſtopher Herlin explain'd Euclid, Bucer, who was writing his Retractation without any conſtraint put upon him, and Correcting his Commentaries upon the Goſpels, explain'd in his Houſe Themiſtius's Paraphraſes, and James Sturmius, Nicolas Cniepſius, and James Meyer were Curators of the School (c). The ſame Sturmius ſays, that when he made a Journey from Louvain to Straſburg in the year 1528, he found there a School (d) where Bucer read Lectures upon the Pſalms. What was done in the year 1538 is as follows. The College received an Authentick Form under the Statutes drawn up ſince Sturmius's arrival, and began to be ſolemnly regulated according to the Diviſion of its ſeveral Claſſes, and the Functions aſſign'd to each Teacher and Profeſſor. Read this Inſcription, which is to be ſeen at Straſburg. (e) Anno poſt milleſimum 538, depoſitis armis, & pacata gravi inter Carolum V. Imperatorem Rom. & Franciſcum I. Galliarum Regem, diſcordiâ, S. P. Q. Argentin. juventuti CHRISTIANÆ religione & liberalibus diſciplinis inſtituendæ ludum literarium aperuit.

Præfecto primario Jacobo Sturmio, Rectore Joan. Sturmio.

Thoſe, who ſay (f) that James Sturmius was Rector (g) of the College of Straſburg, wou'd not have confounded that illuſtrious Magiſtrate with our John Sturmius, if they had read that Inſcription. This Confuſion is to be found in a contrary Senſe in the Memorabilia Eccleſiaſtica of Andreas Carolus. That Author ſtyles John Sturmius firſt Senator and Syndic of the City of Straſburg. 'Tis in that Part of his Work where he obſerves that the Academy of that Place was not made an Univerſity till the year 1621. (h) Anno ſuperioris Centuriæ ſexageſimo (i) octavo, Gymnaſium literarium Argentinenſe, à Johanne Sturmio fundatum, qui primarium Senatorem & Syndicum loci agebat, gratiâ Maximiliani ſecundi privilegia Academica accepit, & Sturmius, qui commodam rationem inſtituendæ juventutis monſtraverat, perpetuus Rector creatus eſt; Sed hoc demum anno jus Univerſitatis ei Ferdinandus II impertiit, ac poteſtatem conferendi omnium Facultatum gradus honorarios, dedit. Micræl. Hiſt. Eccleſ. 172. That Writer quotes Micrælius, tho' the latter has not committed that Fault; for he has very well diſtinguiſh'd the two Sturmius's: he ſays that James, a Senator and a Syndic, founded the College, and that John, who taught the Scholars, was made Rector of it for Life. (k) Anno 1568, Argentinenſis ſchola, quam jam ante XXX, annos Jacobus Sturmius, ſenator primarius & ſyndicus, adornari curaverat, privilegia à Maximiliano II. accepit, & Johannes Sturmius, qui rationem inſtituendæ juventutis monſtraverat, perpetuus Rector eſt creatus. Noſtra demum ætate, A. 1621, jus univerſitatis à Ferdinando II. accepit.

(E) He ran into Debt, and grew poor for them.] Read theſe Words of Melchior Adam. (l) Cum domus illius optimo cuique dies ac noctes pateret, eſſetque velut commune quoddam exulum aſylum, peregrinorum ac pauperum hoſpitium, quos omnes fovendo, alendo, foris domique juvando, facultates haud exiguas abſumſit: maxime Gallorum Evangelicorum ſalutem tuendo, in quam omnes ſuas divitias impendit, ipſeque cum ſuis egere maluit, quam communem cauſam deſerere: animo laudabili & perpetua gratitudine digno. Sturmius being call'd Veſpertilio, a Bat, by Oſiander, anſwered (m) that perhaps it was an Alluſion to the Veſpertilio in the Proverb, to ſignify that he was very much in Debt. He does not deny that he was, but he maintains that he never abſconded to cheat his Creditors, and that his Debts, contracted upon a (n) glorious Account, were prejudicial to no Body; that he was the only ſufferer, and that for above Sixteen years (o) that he groaned under that Yoke, and exhauſted himſelf, by paying large Intereſts, and contracting new Debts to pay the old ones, not one Creditor cou'd be produc'd who had loſt a Farthing in his Service. (p) Heus bone vir: quando ego unquam, fraudationis cauſa latitavi? vel potiùs, quandò ego unquam latitavi? vel creditorem nomina, vel indicem produc, qui me fraudationis cauſa latitaſſe dicat, aut qui dicat, me latitaſſe, & quando latitarim: & quo tempore: & propter quem creditorem. Creditorem unum nomina: qui annis jam ſedecim uno nummo in hoc ære alieno fraudatum ſe à me verè poſſit dicere. Sedecim enim annos & eo amplius in hac miſeria verſor; unum creditorem produc, qui unius teruncii, mea cauſa, & meo nomine jacturam feciſſe jure conqueratur, tametſi graviſſimis uſuris & verſuris, tot jam annos exhauriar. Afterwards he declares that he has run into Debt to maintain his Proteſtant Brethren. (q) Cur non iſtud potiùs cogitavit innocentia & caritas, & ſimplicitas tua? Hic homo horum hominum Eccleſias defendit, propter quas eſt ære alieno oppreſſus, & propter quas omne æs ſuum, jam alienum eſt: & propter æs alienum, in extremam egeſtatem dejectus eſt. I don't think Oſiander alluded to that Proverb. I believe he uſed the Word Veſpertilio only to reflect upon Sturmius for being neither a profeſt Lutheran nor a profeſt Calviniſt. Sturmius was ſenſible that it might be Oſiander's Meaning, and (r) vindicated himſelf in that reſpect.

(F) 'Tis ſaid he abſtained many years from the publick Exerciſes of Religion.] Oſiander laid to his Charge that he had never been at Church for the 20 laſt Years. Sturmius made him this Anſwer. (s) Had you been a Preacher 30 years at Straſburg, I had

---

‡ See the Catalogue of 'em in Teiſſier, addit. to Thuanus's Elogies. Tom. 2. pag. 117, 118. Edit. 1696.

§ Taken from Melchior Adam in vitis Philoſoph. pag. 342, & ſeq.

* See the Remark F.

(b) Note that he was married to Anne Mychſnera, who ſpoke eaſily Latin. Abſque hæſitatione latine cum domeſticis loquens. Jo. Sturmius in parte 1. Antipappi quarti pag. m. 17.

(c) Ex Sturmio Ibid. pag. 17, & 18.

(d) Tum ſchola etiam conſtituta erat. Id. Ib. pag. 10.

(e) See Nathan Chytræus in itinerum deliciis p. m. 430.

(f) See the Remark A. in the foregoing Article, and the laſt Remark of this.

(g) See Melchior Adam. ubi ſupra pag. 343.

(h) And. Carolus Memor. ſæculi XVII, ad ann 1621. pag. 526.

(i) According to Melchior Adam ubi ſupra pag. 344 it was in 1566.

(k) Micræl. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 570. Edit. 1699.

(l) Melch. Adam. ubi ſupra pag. 345.

(m) Sturmius in 4. Antipappi part. 3. pag. 148.

(n) Propter æs alienum nemini noxium verſor .... ob æs alienum honeſtiſſima de cauſa conflatum. Id. Ibid.

(o) He ſpoke ſo in the year 1582.

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib. pag. 149.

(r) Id. ib. and pag. 150.

(s) Id. ib. pag. 15

He was preſſed hard, and forced to declare, and was not the Strongeſt; (G) for they turn'd him out of his Place. I have mentioned in another Place

I had never gone to your Sermons. During the laſt 20 years I wou'd have conſtantly avoided to hear you preach, if I had been oblig'd to be ſilent, and to approve your Invectives by my Silence. (z) After I had been ſilent and kept off a long time from the Sermons and Diſputes of your Miniſters, I was preſent at the laſt publick Diſputation of Pappus, and becauſe I ſaid ſomething, which might have remov'd the Perplexity the Opponent had reduc'd him to, I raiſed a Storm againſt me, by which I have been almoſt overwhelm'd: how then can you object to me that I have been twenty years without going to your Sermons? Et mihi objicis viginti annorum neglectas conciones; cum una diſputatiuncula, cui vix interfui, me prope perdiderit! He mentions to him thoſe, who in the primitive Church, put off receiving Baptiſm till the laſt Moment of their Lives; which ſhews that they were a long time without communicating. He alledges James Sturmius, who had been many years without receiving the Communion, and abſtain'd from it, by reaſon of the Diſpute the Miniſters had raiſed about the Euchariſt. (a) Quis Jacobo Sturmio fuit diligentior, in noſtra urbis religione, & Senatus autoritate defendenda? Quàm multos annos ille vir ad menſam Domini non acceſſit? Quam quaſo ob cauſam aliam, quàm propter hoc Theologorum diſſidium? Idcircone aut Eccleſiam, aut Senatus autoritatem contemſit? His other Anſwers give ground to believe that Oſiander accuſed him of hindering his Wife, his Servants, and his Boarders from going to Church. He calls it a Falſity, and defies his Adverſary to produce a Witneſs of his Accuſation. I married, ſays he, my third Wife Seven years ago; I have lived 20 years with the (b) firſt, and as many with the (c) Second. No body can ſay that they have not conſtantly heard Sermons and received the Communion, and been very careful to give Alms. I ſhall ſet down in Latin what concerns his Servants. (d) Tot jam annos, tot ſcribas & famulos, tot ancillas, tantam familiam habui: ex his unum aliquem bonum compares, qui dicat, ſe meo juſſu, aut me autore à concionibus, & à ſacra menſa abſuiſſe. He names ſome of his Boarders, and among others two Grandſons of a Siſter of Martin Luther, who, ſays he, will Witneſs that I never reproved them for hearing Sermons. Hitherto he has ſaid nothing that contains a formal Denial of what was objected to him, that he had been 20 years without hearing any Sermon; but afterwards he calls it a lye, as you may ſee in theſe Words. (e) At viginti jam annos nullas conciones audiviſti: at ſi tu iſtud viginti annos affirmes, totos viginti annos mentieris, quod pace tua dictum velim. Quamobrem, inquis, non venis? tot jam annis. An non reſpondi? ſi tu tot annos conciones tales haberes, cujuſmodi tu & Pappus ſape habetis: tot ego te etiam deinceps, audire nequeam, & cauſam quaris, quam tibi jam expoſui? To find this Part of his Anſwer coherent, we muſt ſuppoſe that he did not avoid all ſorts of Sermons in general; but only thoſe of ſuch rigid Lutherans as Pappus was.

Nevertheleſs 'tis certain that a Divine of the Confeſſion of Augsburg, has given out that John Sturmius was above 20 Years without going to Church and receiving the Sacrament, and that he uſed to play at Cheſs in Sermon time. (f) Venerabile Miniſterium Argentoratenſe non ignorat, Sturmium ultra 20 annos nec templum frequentâſſe, nec ſacra cœna uſum. Retulit mihi M. Frideric. Rhodius, olim Superintendens Arnſtadienſis in Thuringia, gravis Theologus, quique multos per annos Sturmii fuerat domeſticus convictor, ſe illum vidiſſe nunquam in templo, ſed plerumque ludo ſcachorum diebus Dominicis ſub concionis tempus triviſſe. Mr. Crenius, who affords me this curious Paſſage, mentions another, which ſhews what John Pappus anſwered, being accuſed of never Praying for the Reformed Churches of France. How cou'd John Sturmius, ſays he, hear me pray for them? I have ſerved theſe Ten years the Church and Univerſity of Strasburg, and he has never heard my Lectures nor my Sermons. Tu vero audiveris? Ecquam (h) igitur ſcholam meam, aut concionem totis hic decenniis, qui in ſchola & Eccleſia jam miniſtro audiviſti? Afterwards Pappus tells him what he begs of God not only for the Reformed of France, but alſo for all perſecuted Churches. 1ſt. That the Errors which their Miniſters teach them, be not imputed to them. 2d. That God wou'd be pleaſed to diſcover to them the Truths they are Ignorant of. 3d. To ſtrengthen them in their Afflictions, and enable them to ſuffer 'em patiently, and not to relapſe into the Popiſh Idolatry. 4th. To convert or reſtrain their Perſecutors. Atqui ego quotidie, & in Eccleſia, & domi Deum precor, non modo pro Gallicanis, ſed pro omnibus afflictis & perſecutionem patientibus Eccleſiis: & ne neſcias, hæc ipſis precor. 1. Ne Dominus ipſis errores, quibus inſcientes imbuuntur à ſuis Doctoribus, imputet, (i) &c.

I muſt not forget that Sturmius was accuſed of flattering the Roman Catholicks. If this Accuſation was grounded on his Writing againſt 'em in a civil, and not in a paſſionate and injurious Manner, it was very unjuſt. His Moderation was very acceptable to his Popiſh Adverſaries, and (k) Cardinal Sadolet, and John Cochlæus writ very civilly againſt him. He ask'd (l) whether they wou'd alledge as a Proof, a Piece of Poetry, wherein he had lately congratulated the Biſhop of Strasburg upon his coming to Town, and his Agreement with the Magiſtrates; and he maintain'd that it wou'd be a very wrong Reaſon, ſeeing the Friendſhip eſtabliſhed between that Prelate and the Magiſtrates, was a very proper Subject for a Congratulation; and he adds a particular Reaſon, grounded upon the Family of that Prelate. He was a Count of Manderſcheidt, related to thoſe with whom our Sturmius had learn'd the Latin Tongue. He confeſt that many illuſtrious Perſons of the Church of Rome had been his Friends or his Patrons, and he declared that tho' we are diſpleaſed with the Conduct of great Men and Princes in ſome reſpects, yet we ought to eſteem their Virtues and fine Qualities. (m) In magnis autem viris & in Principibus, etiamſi aliqua diſpliceant, tamen virtutes magna ſunt conſideranda, ut in Sadoleto, Bembo, Julio Phlugio, aliiſque doctiſſimis viris. In Carolo V (n) pater tuus, ſi meminiſti, quid improbarit, noſti: tamen qua nobis non placebant in hoc Imperatore, ita non placebant, ut illi in ratione militari gloriam, & in victoriis æquitatem, & fortunam non adimeremus. To this example of Charles V. he adds that of the Guiſes, pretending that the French Proteſtants did not ſcruple to acknowledge their Valour, their Parts, &c. It muſt be confeſt that thoſe Maxims are very reaſonable; but they are little practiſed by Men tranſported with Zeal, or of a fiery Temper.

(G) He was preſſed hard .... and was not the ſtrongeſt; for they turn'd him out of his Place.] He was ſuſpected of Calviniſm in the year 1561, as it appears from the Letter (o) he writ to Melchior Speccer, the 26th of October, of the ſame year; for he informs him of the Reaſons that moved him to expound St. Chriſoſtom, and Anſwers what was ſaid of him, that he was like a Snail, which began to ſhew its Horns after they had been hid for a long time (p). He clearly diſcovered his Thoughts about the Euchariſt, (q) which occaſioned the firſt Perſecution he was expoſed to. He defended Zanchius in the Quarrel, of which I ſhall ſpeak in another (r) Place; which made him more odious ſtill to the Lutherans; and he was ſo much diſpleaſed with their Proceedings, that he had a mind to leave Strasburg and to go to Zurich. I find this Particular in a Letter of Zanchius to Henry Bullinger. (ſ) Sed quid ſi Sturmius quoque me ſequatur, vel potiùs ego ipſum? Is enim conſtituit, ſe ad vos conferre, &, ſi fieri poſſit, prædium aliquod ſibi apud vos comparare, & ibi tanquam in quodam Tuſculano, totum ſe S. literarum ſtudio conſecrare, & contra adverſarios ſuum ſtylum in hac ſenecta pro Chriſto exercere. Sed hoc

cupit

(h) Jo. Pappus defenſ. 4. contra Sturmium pag. 118. apud Crenium ubi ſupra pag. 140.

(i) Id. ib. apud Crenium ibid. pag. 141.

(k) Sturmius in parte 3. Antipappi 4. p. 150.

(l) Id ib. pag. 169.

(m) Id. ib.

(n) He ſpeaks to Andreas Oſiander a Divine of Tubingen.

(o) It is among thoſe of Zanchius in the 2d. Book, pag. 223. & ſeq.

(p) Innuis me limacem eſſe qui annos jam multos latuerim, nunc demum cornua exeram. Epiſt. Zanchii lib. 2. pag. 225.

(q) Ibid. pag. 28.

(r) In the Article Zanchius (Jerôme)

(ſ) Ibid. pag. 17.

Place the Encomium he beſtowed upon (H) Calvin's Inſtitution. I ſhall take notice of ſome Faults (I) in Moreri.

SUETONIUS PAULINUS (Caius) Governor of Numidia, in the year of Rome 794, overcame the Mauri † as far as Mount Atlas; and was * the firſt Roman Captain, who went beyond that famous Mountain. He made a ‖ Relation of that War. He was one of the beſt Warriours in his time, and People did not ſcruple to ſay, that he ‡ contended with Corbulo for Military Glory.

cupit interim celari, donec videat, quem exitum habitura ſit cauſſa. Si igitur, ut antè dixi, aliter cadat cauſſa noſtra quam ipſa meretur: non ſolùm ego ſed etiam Sturmius, libentiſſimè vobiſcum vivemus. Si verò ita controverſia noſtra componatur, ut mihi quoque liceat veritatem tueri: Sturmius quidem manebit, ego verò faciam, quod tu ipſe conſultius gloriæ Dei futurum judicaveris. The Quarrel wherein Zanchius was concern'd, had ſuch an iſſue, that Sturmius did not find himſelf obliged to retire. But he happen'd to have much leſs Credit and good Fortune, when there aroſe ſome Differences between him and Pappus, Doctor of Divinity, and Miniſter of Strasburg. He publiſh'd (t) ſeveral Anti-Pappus's, and many Books were publiſh'd againſt him. You'll find many things relating to this in the 1ſt Volume of M. Baillet's Anti. At laſt Pappus being ſupported by Authority, obtain'd the Victory, and had Sturmius depriv'd of the Rectorſhip of the Univerſity, and the Calviniſts turn'd out of their Places (v). Idem . . . adverſus Pappum Argentinenſem Theologum, turbonem verius, à quo quod loco illo moti ſint Noſtri, initio facto à venerando ſene Johanne Sturmio, cœpit, probavit Michael Beutherus, in Declaratione Agendæ Eccleſiæ Argentinenſis (w). They are the Words of a reform'd Divine, who calls Pappus a ſhuffling and factious Man; but the Lutherans maintain that he was an excellent Servant of God, (x) a very ſtout Champion, and an invincible Combatant in the Spiritual War for the pure Goſpel; and that Sturmius was deprived of his Place for no other Reaſon but becauſe he had raiſed ſome Troubles. (a) Joh. Pappus . . . . inſignis Argentinenſium athleta adverſus Joh. Sturmium, Rectorem Academiæ, Rhetorem Calvinianorum, & ob turbas datas tandem ab officio remotum. Perhaps, not to overwhelm the good old Man, and to make the thing more tolerable to him, the odious Words of Deſtitution and Expulſion were omitted, and they gave him to underſtand that they diſpenſed him from the Rectorſhip of the Univerſity by reaſon of his old Age. I have read a reformed Author, who makes uſe of this Turn, that Heaven declared him emeritus in the year 1583. (b) Uſque ad annum Chriſti 1583 quo Deo placuit eundem rude donare . . . (c) Exiſtimo autem D. Sturmium noſtrum, rude, quo divinitus donatus eſt, contentum, &c. I take this from a Letter, which contains a handſome Parallel between Theophraſtus and Sturmius. Here follows a Paſſage that wants to be rectified. (d) " John Sturmius . . . having continued in his Office till he was 80 years old and above, found himſelf no longer able to diſcharge the Duties of it, and obtained from the Magiſtrates of Strasburg that his Place ſhou'd be fill'd up by Melchior Junius, his Scholar." 'Tis not true that he exerciſed his Office till he was 80 years of Age and above; he loſt it in 1583, which was the 76th year of his Age. He deſired no Succeſſor, becauſe he was no longer able to continue in it; it was taken from him.

(H) I have mention'd in another (e) Place the Encomium he beſtowed upon Calvin's Inſtitutions.] And I ſaid that this Encomium concerns the Edition of the year 1543, which is the third. I went upon two Reaſons: one is, that 'tis certain (f) the ſecond Edition is that of the year 1539; the other is that theſe Words of Sturmius, Inſtitutio Chriſtiana religionis quam primo inchoatam, deinde locupletatam, hoc vero anno abſolutam edidit, ſuit only with the third Edition. But to conceal nothing, I ought to mention here what I have read in the ſecond Anti-Pappus, viz. That Calvin being Miniſter at Strasburg, enlarg'd his Inſtitution, and publiſh'd it in the ſame City, apud Wendelinum Ribelium, and that Sturmius prefixed to that Book the Judgment he made of it. (g) Ego meam ſententiam in fronte ejus libri de Calvini aſſixi. Which does not agree with the third Edition, viz. that of the year 1543, for Calvin was not at Strasburg that year; he returned to Geneva in September 1541. I have a Conjecture upon it: Sturmius knowing that the Book was Reprinting at Strasburg in 1543, inſerted ſome Words in his Judgment, which ſhewed that it was a third Edition. And therefore 'tis true that the Words of Sturmius, which I have quoted in the Article of Calvin, concern the third Edition, and conſequently I have ſaid nothing but what is true; but I think I ſhou'd have obſerved that Sturmius had prefixed the ſame (h) Encomium to the ſecond Edition, 1539. Let thoſe who have this ſecond Edition, judge whether my Conjecture be right or not.

(I) Some Faults in Moreri.] I. 'Tis not true that Verheiden ſays that James Sturmius was born at Sleida near Cologne. See the Remark A in the foregoing Article. II. 'Tis not true that this Sturmius began his Studies at Liege, and went on with them at Paris. III. And that he perſwaded John Sleidan to write the Hiſtory that made him ſo Famous. See in the Remark B of the foregoing Article, how far he contributed to that Hiſtory. IV. 'Tis not true that John Sturmius perſwaded him to undertake the Eſtabliſhment of an Univerſity at Strasburg: The only thing they had in view then was a College, or what thay call in Holland (i) and Germany an illuſtrious School, which is different from an Univerſity: however it be, John Sturmius did not adviſe ſuch an Eſtabliſhment; for he was ſent for from Paris for no other Reaſon but becauſe they had already form'd the Project of that School, that is, they had reſolv'd to introduce into the School that was already at Straſburg, and of which James Sturmius was one of the Curators, the beſt Regulations, and the moſt proper Method to promote Study; and they thought, with great Reaſon, that Sturmius was a Man well qualified both to teach and to have the Direction of the School. V. Moreri ſhou'd not have ſaid that the Deſign of Founding an Univerſity was happily executed; for, I repeat it again, nothing but a School was deſign'd at that time. VI. He ſhou'd therefore have ſaid not that John Sturmius had the Foundation of that Univerſity confirm'd by the Emperor, but that he obtain'd from that Prince that the School ſhou'd be erected into an Univerſity. VII. when Moreri ſays, that from the year 1566, John Sturmius performed . . , ſeveral Embaſſies . . . . and aſſiſted at ſeveral Conferences; he intimates that Sturmius had no ſuch Imployment before that time, which is a Miſtake; for not to mention the other Deputations that preceded the year 1566, 'tis certain (k) that in 1540, he was ſent to the Conferences of Worms with Calvin, Capito and Bucer. VIII. He did not loſe his Sight after he had taught at Strasburg for the ſpace of 51 years. He began to teach there in 1538, and was deprived of his Place in 1583, and therefore he taught but 45 years. IX. If he had taught for the ſpace of 51 years, and then if he had loſt his Sight, Moreri ſhou'd not have diſtinguiſh'd between the time when he died, and the time when he loſt his Eyes; for the year 1589, in which he died, according to Moreri, and according to the Truth, falls in with the 51ſt year ſince he began to teach in that City. X. Moreri ſhou'd not have ſaid that he died at 80 years of Age; for he had ſaid that Sturmius was † Dio lib. 60.

---

* Plin. lib. 5. cap. 1.

‖ Pliny lib. ſays ſome thing of it.

‡ See the Remark A at the Begining.

(t) At Neuſtad, in the Palatinate in the year 1579, and in the year 1580. in 4to.

(v) Which ſhews that the Formulary of Concord had been often altered by the Lutherans.

(w) Hoornbeeck ſumma controverſ. pag. m. 505.

(x) Strenuum ſe præſtitit in bello ſpirituali pro Eccleſia puriore militem atque Athletam invictum. Andreas Carolus ubi ſupra ad ann. 1610, pag. 226.

(a) Micræl. ubi ſupra pag. 785.

(b) Jo. Jacobus Grynæus Epiſt. 9. lib. 1. p. 151.

(c) Ibid. pag. 153.

(d) Thuanus apud Teiſſier addit. to the Elog. tom. 2. pag. 116.

(e) In the Article of Calvin.

(f) This appears by a ſhort Epiſtle of Calvin to the Reader, dated at Strasburg, Aug. 1. 1539.

(g) Sturmius in Antipappo ſecundo pag. 111.

(h) Except the Words, which ſignify that 'tis the 3 Edition.

(i) Note, that in the Illuſtrious Schools there are no Forms that learn Grammar and Rhetorick, but the School of Strasburg had alſo theſe Forms.

(k) See the ſecond Antipappus of Sturmius pag. 112.

Glory. He perform'd very noble Exploits in Great Britain, where he (A) commanded in the year 814, and 815; but having overcome the Rebels, he puniſhed them too ſeverely for the Devaſtations and Slaughter they had made, and therefore he was ſucceeded * by a more indulgent Man. 'Tis thought he was Conſul (B) in the year of Rome 819. He was one of the chief Commanders † of the Troops of the Emperor Otho, and did not keep up in that War the Reputation he had got. The Soldiers openly murmured ‡ at his Conduct; and 'tis certain that his Maxims, which conſiſted in venturing nothing, and was born in 1507, and departed this Life in 1589. Judge whether Moreri had got the Art of Writing, how careleſly does he make uſe of Melchior Adam! I omit his calling James and John Sturmius's Deputations, by the Name of Embaſſies. He ſhou'd have known that an Imperial City has indeed Agents, Reſidents, Envoys and Deputies, but not Ambaſſadors. He knew not that the Latin Word Legatio has a larger Senſe than the Words Embaſſy and Deputation.

(A) He perform'd noble Exploits in Great Britain.] Emulation was no ſmall Help to him; for he endeavour'd to equal the Glory Corbulo had got by recovering Armenia. (l) Sed tum Paullinus Suetonius obtinebat Britannos, ſcientia militiæ, & rumore populi, qui neminem ſine æmulo ſinit, Corbulonis concertator, receptæque Armeniæ decus æquare domitis perduellibus cupiens. Having obſerved that the Iſle of (m) Mona ſerved the Rebels for a Shelter, he reſolved to take it, and ſucceeded in his Deſign with no great difficulty, tho' the Multitude of the Iſlanders, who expected him on the ſhore, and their Wives dreſs'd like Furies, and their Druids lifting up their Hands to Heaven, and uttering Imprecations, ſurpriſed the Roman Soldiers by the Novelty of the Spectacle. He cauſed their (n) ſacred Groves to be cut down, in which the Inhabitants ſacrificed humane Victims, and ſettled Garriſons; but whilſt he was taken up with thoſe things, he was inform'd that the Britains, under the Conduct of the Widow of Praſutagus, King of the Icenians, had roſe up in Arms, and committed great Diſorders. Whereupon he went over, and took ſuch effectual Meaſures to prevent the Progreſs of thoſe Rebels, that he obtained over them a Victory (o) as remarkable as thoſe of former times. 'Tis ſaid that about 80 thouſand Britains were kill'd in that Battle, and that the Romans did not loſe four hundred Men, and had not ſo many Wounded. Suetonius's Courage and Firmneſs, and his Prudence and Experience appeared glorioſly on that Occaſion. You'll find a curious Account of this in (p) Tacitus's Annals, and in (q) Xiphilinus. The vanquiſh'd were ſeverely treated, which was the Reaſon why many Rebels remained in Arms, fearing the Conſequences of their Submiſſion. (r) Tenentibus arma pleriſque, quos conſcientia defectionis, & proprius ex Legato timor agitabat. Hic cum egregius cetera, arroganter in deditos, & ut ſua quoque injuriæ ultor, durius conſuleret; miſſus Petronius Turpilianus tanquam exorabilior, & delictis hoſtium novus, eoque pœnitentiæ mitior. Theſe Words of Tacitus want a Supplement; we muſt add to them the Account he gives in the 14th Book of his Annals. There we find what happen'd before Turpilian ſucceeded Suetonius, viz. that Julius Claſſicianus, who was Intendant in Britain after Suetonius's Victory, fell out with that General, and cried him down as much as ever he could. He aſcribed to him ill Succeſſes, and imputed the good ones to the Fortune of the Romans. He gave out that a General wou'd quickly come, who wou'd uſe Clemency towards the Vanquiſh'd, and he writ to the Court, that the War wou'd never be ended, unleſs Suetonius was recall'd. (a) Julius Claſſicianus ſucceſſor Cato miſſus, & Suetonio diſcors, bonum publicum privatis ſimultatibus impediebat: diſperſeratque novum Legatum opperiendum eſſe, ſine hoſtili ira & ſuperbia victoris clementer deditis conſulturum. Simul in Urbem mandabat, nullum prœlio finem exſpectarent, niſi ſuccederetur Suetonio: cujus adverſa pravitati ipſius, proſpera ad fortunam Reipub. referebat. Nero hearing of this, ſent Polycletus, one of his Freedmen, into Britain, looking upon him as a fit Man to reconcile the Governor and Intendant of the Province, and to make the Rebels accept of a Peace. This Freedman appeared with great Pomp, and Suetonius (b) was obliged to make his Court to him; however he kept his Poſt, till it was thought proper to beſtow it upon Turpilian.

If any one, in order to excuſe Suetonius's Severity, ſhou'd alledge the horrid Barbarities the Britains exerciſed upon the Romans, it might be anſwered that the Britains did not do it till after they had ſuffered prodigious Violences and Extorſions, and that therefore the Roman General ſhou'd not have been ſo implacable towards the vanquiſhed; for there is a vaſt difference between thoſe, who riſe up againſt a new Maſter, whoſe Yoke is pretty eaſy, and thoſe who ſhake off a new Domination the moſt tyrannical in the World. In the firſt Caſe an Inſurrection attended with Cruelty deſerves a ſevere Puniſhment; but in the ſecond Caſe, Clemency ought quickly to ſucceed Severity. Tacitus (c) ſays, that after the Death of a Britiſh King, who had made the Roman Emperor joint Heir with his two Daughters, his Houſe and his States were plundered, his Widow was whip'd, his two Daughters were raviſh'd, the chief Perſons of the Country were turn'd out of their Eſtates, and the King's Relations reduc'd to the Condition of Slaves. The Roman Colony of Camalodunum, made up of Veteran Soldiers, ſeized every body's Goods, and turned People out of Doors, being countenanced by the Roman Soldiers, who hoped to have ſome time or other the ſame Liberty of Plundering the Iſlanders. (d) In coloniam Camalodunum recens deducti, pellebant domibus, exturbabant agris, captivos, ſervos apellando: foventibus impotentiam veteranorum militibus, ſimilitudine vitæ, & ſpe ejuſdem licentiæ. Theſe Proceedings inſpired the Britains with ſuch a Hatred againſt the Romans, and with ſuch a violent Deſire of recovering or preſerving their Liberty, that there happen'd quickly a general Inſurrection, the Effects whereof were bloody and barbarous. The King's Widow (e) put her ſelf at the Head of the Britains, and made 'em a very pathetical (f) Speech. She did not forget the Laſhes ſhe had received, nor the Rape of her Daughters; but alledged them, the better to encourage 'em to ſhake off ſuch a hard Slavery. (g) Solitum quidem Britannis feminarum ductu bellare teſtabatur; ſed tunc non ut tantis majoribus ortam regnum & opes; verum ut unam è vulgo, libertatem amiſſam, confectum verberibus corpus, contrectatam filiarum pudicitiam ulciſci: eo provectas Romanorum cupidines ut non corpora, nec ſenectam quidem aut virginitatem impollutam relinquant. Suetonius's Abſence favoured the Enterprize of the Britains; they (h) deſtroyed 70 thouſand Romans or Allies of the Romans; they gave no Quarter, they killed, hanged burnt or crucified every Man they took. (i) Neque enim capere aut venundare, aliudve quod belli commercium, ſed cædes, patibula, ignes, cruces, tanquam reddituri ſupplicium, ac prærepta interim ultione, feſtinabant. They were no leſs cruel to the Women (k) of the beſt Quality and the greateſt Vertue; they hanged them ſtark Naked, and cut off their Breaſts and ſowed them in their Mouths, that they might ſeem to eat them, and then they laid them at full length on ſmall and ſharp Stakes, that ran into their Bodies. This is what happens when new Subjects are delivered up to the Soldiery; but on the other ſide the Britains paid dear for their Barbarity; for Suetonius puniſhed them cruelly. Note that the Queen, who put herſelf at the Head of 'em, (l) poyſoned herſelf after the Loſs of the Battle.

(B) 'Tis thought he was Conſul in the year of Rome 819.] It plainly appears from a Paſſage of and taking his Meaſures with the utmoſt (C) Circumſpection, prevented h improving favourable Opportunities, and afforded the Enemies a ſufficient Time to take care of their Affairs. The worſt was that he ran away on the Day of a general and deciſive Battle, and that he boaſted to Vitellius that he had (D) betray'd Otho, which probably was not true; but he was believed upon his Word, and that ſaved his Life. It has been ſaid that the Hopes he had of being made Emperor, moved him to adviſe that the War ſhou'd be kept up between Otho and Vitellius; but Tacitus thinks he was too wiſe a Man to have (E) ſuch Thoughts.

---

* See the Remark A.

† Tacit. Hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 87.

‡ Id. ib. lib. 2. cap. 23, & alibi.

(l) Tacit. Annal. lib. 14. cap. 29. ad. ann. 814.

(m) 'Tis thought to be that now called Angleſey.

(n) Exciſi luci, ſævis ſuperſtitionibus ſacri; nam cruore captivo adolere aras, & hominum fibris conſulere deos fas habebant. Id. ib. cap. 30.

(o) Clara & antiquis victoriis par ea die laus parta. Id. Ib. cap. 37.

(p) Lib. 14. cap. 29. & ſeq.

(q) In epitome Dionis in Nerone p. m. 173, & ſeq.

(r) Tacitus in vita Agricolæ cap. 16.

(a) Idem Annal. lib. 14. cap. 38.

(b) Mirabantur (hoſtes) quod dux & exercitus tanti belli confector ſervitiis obedirent. Id. ib. cap. 39.

(c) Id. ib. cap. 31.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Xiphilinus calls her Bunduica: Tacitus in his Annals ibid. calls her Boudicea, & in the Life of Agricola cap. 16, Voadica. 'Tis very likely he always call'd her by the ſame Name, and that the Tranſcribers have ſpoil'd the Original in both Places. I believe the true Name is that we find in Xiphilinus.

(f) See her Speech in Xiphilinus ubi ſupra pag. 169. & ſeq. See alſo Tacitus ib. cap. 35.

(g) Tacit. Ann. lib. 14. c. 35.

(h) Id. Ib. cap. 33.

(i) Id. Ib.

(k) Xiphilin. ubi ſupra. pag. 173.

(l) Tacit. ubi ſupra cap. 37. but according to Xiphilinus Ib. p. 175, ſhe died of Sickneſs.

We

of (m) Pliny that he was Conſul; which is no leſs evident from theſe Words of Tacitus. (n) Atque eo duces Othonianos ſpatium ad moras ſuaſiſſe; præcipuè Paullinum, quod vetuſtiſſimus CONSULARIUM, & militia clarus, gloriam nomenque Britannicis expeditionibus meruiſſet. If it be ſaid that there is no need of this Paſſage of Tacitus, and that it is ſufficient to alledge theſe Words out of the 14th Chapter of the 16th Book of his Annals: C. Suetonio L. Teleſino Conſulibus Antiſtius Soſianus . . . . ſibi conciliat. I anſwer that this Paſſage of the Annals, which is commonly alledged to prove Suetonius's Conſulſhip, does not appear deciſive, if we take notice of a Note of M. de Tillemont (o). We have ſeen that Suetonius was, in the year of Rome 822, the moſt Ancient of thoſe who had been Conſuls. But Lucius Piſo was ſtill (p) living, and had been Conſul in the year 809; and therefore Suetonius muſt have been Conſul before the year 809, and conſequently the Words of Tacitus's Annals do not concern his Conſulſhip, ſince they belong to the year 819, or 818. M. de Tillemont (q) conjectures that Caius Suetonius, who was Conſul with Lucius Teleſinus in the 66th year of the Chriſtian Æra, that is, in the year 818, or 819, of Rome, was the Son of Suetonius, who makes the Subject of this Article. Father Hardouin (r), and all the other Authors I have conſulted, ſay, that our Suetonius Paulinus was Teleſinus's Collegue. You'll find the ſame Opinion in Voſſius, and a Fault in Chronology; for Voſſius ſuppoſes that this Conſulſhip belongs to the year of Rome 811 (ſ). Father Hardouin (t) places it in the laſt year of Nero's Life, and quotes the 6th Book of Tacitus's Annals. He ſhou'd have quoted the 16th, and remembred that Nero died the 2d year after the Conſulſhip of Suetonius and Teleſinus. M. de Tillemont (v) ſuppoſes as a thing undeniable, that Suetonius had been Conſul before he was ſent into Britain; and the Reaſon he goes upon, is, that all thoſe who were ſent thither had been Conſuls. I can't tell whether he is in the right as to this laſt Point, and the Proof he takes from theſe Words, vetuſtiſſimus conſularium, does not appear to me a convincing one; for perhaps the Meaning of 'em is, that Suetonius was older than all thoſe who had been Conſuls, tho' ſome of 'em had exerciſed the Conſulſhip before him; and therefore I don't abſolutely condemn the common Opinion, nor his neither. There may be ſome Reaſons on both ſides: It were ſomewhat ſtrange that Tacitus ſhould never mention the Conſular Quality of Suetonius, if it had belonged to him, when he commanded in Britain.

(C) His Maxims, which conſiſted in venturing nothing . . . . prevented his improving favourable Opportunities.] Cæcina, General of Vitellius's Troops, made uſe of a Stratagem, which did not ſucceed, and was like to be fatal to him, becauſe the Generals of Otho having diſcovered it, avoided the Snare, and laid another which the Enemy did not perceive. By this means they obtained a conſiderable Advantage, but not ſuch as it might have been, if Suetonius had been bolder and leſs cautious. Tacitus gives the following Character of him. (w) Signum pugnæ non ſtatim à Suetonio Paullino pediti datum. Cunctator natura, & cui cauta potius conſilia cum ratione, quam proſpera ex caſu placerent; compleri foſſas, aperiri campum, pandi aciem jubebat, ſatis cito incipi victoriam ratus, ubi proviſum foret ne vincerentur. Ea cunctatione, ſpatium Vitellianis datum, in vineas nexu traducum impeditas refugiendi: & modica ſilva adhærebat; unde rurſus auſi promptiſſimos prætorianorum equitum interficere. He rather choſe to give his Opinion according to the Rules of Prudence, than to obtain an Advantage, by meer Chance. Had he not ſounded the Retreat on that day, the whole Army of Vitellius had been cut in pieces; at leaſt 'twas the Opinion of both Parties: the Reaſons he gave of his Conduct were not approved, and I think Warriors wou'd readily change the Proverb, Too much precaution is cunning, into this, Too much precaution is an overſight. Let us ſtill hear Tacitus. (a) Ceterum ea ubique formido fuit, apud fugientes, occurſantes, in acie, pro vallo, ut deleri cum univerſo exercitu Cæcinam potuiſſe, ni Suetonius Paullinus receptui cecinîſſet, utriſque in partibus percrebuerit. Timuiſſe ſe Paullinus ferebat, tantum inſuper laboris atque itineris; ne Vitellianus miles recens e caſtris feſſos aggrederetur, & perculſis nullum retro ſubſidium foret. Apud paucos ea ducis ratio probata, in vulgus adverſo rumore fuit. But if on the one ſide Suetonius's Circumſpection proved ſometimes prejudicial to Otho, it might on the other have prevented his Ruin occaſion'd by the Raſhneſs of the other Generals. Suetonius was for protracting the War, and his Opinion grounded (b) upon very ſolid Maxims, was alſo that of (c) Marius Celſus, and Annius Gallus, his Collegues. But Titian, Otho's Brother, and Proculus, Prefect of the Prætorium, who had the greateſt Intereſt (d) with that Emperor, adviſed the quite contrary, and brought things into the greateſt danger. The following Paſſage is to Suetonius's Honour. (e) Otho conſultavit, trahi bellum, an fortunam experiri placeret. Tum Suetonius Paullinus, dignum fama ſua ratus, qua nemo illa tempeſtate militaris rei callidior habebatur, de toto genere belli cenſere; feſtinationem hoſtibus, moram ipſis utilem diſſeruit . . . . (f) Otho pronus ad decertandum; frater ejus Titianus, & præfectus prætorii Proculus, imperitia properantes, fortunam & deos & numen Othonis adeſſe conſiliis, affore conatibus teſtabantur, neu quis obviam ire ſententiæ auderet, in adulationem conceſſerant. A Battle being reſolved upon, it was debated whether Otho ſhould be there or not, and it paſſed in the Negative; Suetonius and Celſus not daring to oppoſe it, leſt they ſhou'd be accuſed of expoſing the Prince to Danger (g). They ſent him therefore with very good Troops into a ſafe Place: Which weaken'd the Army, and diſcouraged the Soldiers (h), and after that Retreat (i) Suetonius and Celſus had only the Name of Generals; their Counſels were not followed, every thing depended upon Proculus's Fancy. 'Tis therefore no great wonder if the Battle was loſt, and if Suetonius ran away and durſt not return into the Camp. But he cannot be excuſed for what I am going to relate; 'tis a true Infamy.

(D) He boaſted to Vitellius that he had betray'd Otho.] The Commanders of the victorious Army, and thoſe who had been vanquiſh'd, went to Vitellius at Lyons. He cauſed many Captains of Otho's Party to be put to Death, and left Suetonius and Proculus in the Uncertainty of the Event. At laſt they were heard, and obtained their Pardon, becauſe they made him believe they had betray'd Otho, and gave an Account of the Meaſures they had taken to deſtroy him. (k) Suetonium Paullinum, ac Licinium Proculum, triſti mora ſqualidos tenuit: donec auditi, neceſſariis magis defenſionibus, quam honeſtis uterentur. Proditionem ultro imputabant: ſpatium longi ante prœlium itineris, fatigationem Othonianorum, permixtum vehiculis agmen, ac pleraque fortuita, fraudi ſuæ adſignantes, & Vitellius credidit de perfidia, & fidem abſolvit. Can any thing be more unworthy of the Roman Name?

(E) Tacitus thinks he was too wiſe a Man to have ſuch Thoughts.] He had read in ſome Authors that the Armies of Otho and Vitellius, whether it be that they were afraid of the War, or

our

(m) Plin. lib. 5. cap. 1.

(n) Tacit. Hiſt. lib. 2, cap. 37, ad ann. 822.

(o) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. tom. 1. pag. m. 464.

(p) This plainly appears from a Paſſage in Pliny the younger Epiſt. 7, lib. 3.

(q) Tillem. Ib.

(r) Harduin. in Plin. lib. 5. cap. 1. pag. 526.

(ſ) Hard. Ib.

(t) Voſſius de Hiſt. Latin. lib. 1. cap. 26. p. m. 133.

(v) Tillem. ubi ſupra.

(w) Tacit. Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 25, ad ann. 822.

(a) Id. Ib. cap. 26.

(b) They may be ſeen in Tacitus, Ib. cap. 32.

(c Ib. cap. 33.

(d) Id. Ib. lib. 1. cap. 87.

(e) Id. Ib. lib. 2. cap. 32.

(f Id. Ib. cap. 33.

(g) Id. Ib.

(h) Id. Ib.

(i) Profecto Brixellum Othone, honor imperii penes Titianum fratrem, vis ac poteſtas penes Proculum Præfectum. Celſus & Paullinus, cum prudentia eorum nemo uteretur, inani nomine ducum, alienæ culpæ prætendebantur. Id. Ib. cap. 39.

(k Id. Ib. cap. 60.

We ſhall ſee hereafter * that it was wrong to take him for the Father of Suetonius the Hiſtorian, and to ſay that he wrote the Life of Otho.

SUETONIUS (Caius Suetonius Tranquillus), a Roman Hiſtorian, Son of Suetonius (A) Lenis, flouriſh'd under the Empire of Trajan and Hadrian. He applied himſelf very much to Study, and I think it may be ſaid that he taught † Grammar and Rhetorick. 'Tis certain he pleaded ſome imaginary Cauſes; and I think he alſo pleaded ſome real Ones before the Judges. Pliny, who places him among thoſe β who were call'd Scholaſtici, γ a ſort of Men who never pleaded or made Orations but in a Hall, or by way of Exerciſe, affirms in another δ Place that Suetonius deſired him to procure him a Delay, becauſe a Dream made him afraid of miſcarrying in a Cauſe at the Bar. There was a long and * very ſtrict Friendſhip between thoſe two Writers; and it proved advantageous to Suetonius, for Pliny did him great Services. He procured him an Office of Tribune ‡, and then he had it beſtowed upon another, at Suetonius's Requeſt. He obtained for the latter, whoſe Wife was barren, the jus trium liberorum, that is, the Privileges of thoſe who have three Children. That Favour was ſeldom granted, and Pliny had not obtain'd it for his Friend, had it not been for the great Intereſt he had at the Imperial Court, and for the earneſt Deſire he expreſt to obtain it ζ. He was then ↓ Governor of Bithynia, under the Empire of Trajan. Suetonius raiſed himſelf conſiderably, for he was Secretary to the Emperor Hadrian; but he loſt that Office about the Year 121, when many Perſons were put out of Conceit with both Emperors, whoſe Infamy diſcover'd it ſelf daily, thought of coming to an Agreement, and electing a new Maſter, or intruſting the Senate with that Election, and that this was the Reaſon why the Commanders of Otho's Troops, eſpecially Paulinus, were for prolonging the War (l). Tacitus is willing to believe that ſome few Men wiſh'd in their Hearts the publick Peace and a good Prince; but he cannot perſuade himſelf that Suetonius, who was ſo prudent a Man, cou'd hope that in ſo Corrupt an Age, the Soldiers, who had broke the Peace to have a War, wou'd give over the War out of a Deſire of Peace. Nor can he believe that Armies, whoſe Manners and Languages were ſo different, cou'd agree in ſuch a Deſign, nor that moſt of the chief Officers, being conſcious of their Luxury, Indigence and Crimes, wou'd have been contented with an honeſt Emperor, not beholden to them for his Dignity. (m) Neque Paullinum, qua prudentia fuit, ſperaſſe, corruptiſſimo ſeculo, tantam vulgi moderationem reor, ut qui pacem belli amore turbaverant, bellum pacis caritate deponerent: neque aut exercitus linguis moribuſque diſſonos, in hunc conſenſum potuiſſe coaleſcere: aut Legatos ac duces, magna ex parte luxus, egeſtatis, ſcelerum ſibi conſcios, niſi pollutum obſtrictumque meritis ſuis Principem paſſuros.

(A) Son of Suetonius Lenis.] The Proof of this is contained in the following Paſſage. (p) Interfuit huic bello pater meus Suetonius Lenis, tertiæ decimæ legionis Tribunus anguſticlavius. It appears alſo from theſe Words that Suetonius's Father was Tribune of the 13th Legion, and that he was at the Battle of Bedriacum, in which Vitellius's Troops defeated thoſe of Otho. Had Muretus exactly remembred the Paſſages of Tacitus, alledged by him, he wou'd have made a better uſe of his Critical Learning. He found linus with a little hole before it in a Manuſcript, whereupon he fancied that three Letters were loſt, and that inſtead of Linus, the true reading was Paulinus; from whence he inferr'd that Suetonius the Hiſtorian was the Son of Suetonius Paulinus, who makes the Subject of the foregoing Article. (q) Vidi ego librum, qui cariem & tineas ſenſerat, in quo poſt nomen Suetonius foramen erat exiguum: deinde ſequebatur linus: & ſupra alia manu emendatum lenis: Omnino autem legendum eſt Paulinus; id enim ei verum cognomen fuit. Teſtem in eam rem laudabo Tacitum, qui fortis viri neque nomen, neque virtutem tacitam eſſe ſivit. Ejus enim & ſæpe in annalibus, & in Agricolæ vita perhonorificam mentionem facit. He was ſo fond of his Conjecture, that he did not mind the Teſtimonies of Tacitus, which he made uſe of; for if he had conſidered them with Attention, he might eaſily have perceived that they were wholly inconſiſtent with his Critical Obſervation; and he would have concluded that Suetonius, whoſe Exploits are mentioned by Tacitus, cou'd not be he who was only a Tribune in the War of Vitellius. To which I add, that according to the ſame Tacitus in (r) a Work not quoted by Muretus, Suetonius Paulinus was one of Otho's Generals during the ſame War, which utterly deſtroys Muretus's Correction. Theſe are very ſtrange Faults, and yet a Critick ought never to take notice of 'em in an inſulting Manner, being always mindful that he may want the ſame Indulgence when he commits the like Miſtakes, which is unavoidable. Were I allowed to compare my ſelf with great Men, I would apply to my ſelf the Inference drawn by Lipſius from this Miſtake of Muretus. (ſ) Quid dicam? Non inſector te vir elegantiſſime. ſed bona fide hæc ſcribis? Erras nimis. Suetonius ille Lenis, Tribunus fuit: noſter belli dux. Ille anguſticlavius, id eſt, nondum Senator, ſed inter equites: Ille Conſularis, nec tenue uſquam veſtigium confuſionis ejus quam facis. Hoc mihi in tranſcurſu monitum, non ut carpam (Fidem teſtor:) ſed ut claro ſub exemplo doceam quam fallax hæc Critica, & ignoſcendum etiam nobis eſſe, ſi labimur interdum in proclivi iſtâ viâ.

Perhaps ſome will think that Suetonius Lenis, Father of Suetonius the Hiſtorian, was the Son of Suetonius, who makes the Subject of the foregoing Article; but there is no ground for ſuch an Opinion; for if Suetonius had been the Grandſon of that great Warrior, and of that Roman Conſul, he wou'd not have ſpoken of his Grandfather ſo plainly as he does: (a) Avum meum narrantem puer audiebam, cauſſam operis ab interioribus aulicis proditam, &c. An Hiſtorian may be ſo modeſt as not to inſert in his Work occaſionally the glorious Titles of his Anceſtors; but 'tis hardly poſſible, that when he mentions his Father or Grandfather, he ſhou'd be contented to name 'em without mentioning the important Offices conferred upon 'em. Our Suetonius did not forget his Father's Tribuneſhip; much more wou'd he have mention'd his Father's Generalſhip: the Occaſion neceſſarily required it; for 'tis on Account of the Battle of Bedriacum that he obſerves that his Father commanded a Legion, during the War of Otho and Vitellius: but 'twas in that War that Suetonius Paulinus commanded Otho's Troops.

One Sicco Polentonus ſaid before Muretus that Suetonius Paulinus is the Father of Suetonius the Hiſtorian. Beſides, he aſcribes to him ſome Books that were written by the latter, viz. de Inſtitutione officiorum, de Illuſtribus ſcriptoribus, deque hiſtoria ludicra. 'Tis in a Life of Suetonius, which Pibius inſerted in his Annals (b), and which is of no value. This Polentonus was Secretary of the City of Padua in the Beginning of the XV. Century (c). Voſſius (d) affirms two things: 1ſt. That Geſner ſays that Suetonius Lenis is the ſame with Suetonius Paulinus, and that he was the Father of Suetonius the Hiſtorian, and Author of a Life of the Emperor Otho: 2d. That La Popeliniere ſays the ſame. There is no ſuch thing in Geſner's Bibliotheca quoted by Voſſius; but the following Words are to be found in the Abridgment of it;

---

* In the Remark A of the following Article.

† Suidas in Τραγκυλλος calls him only a Grammarian, and mentions the Titles of many Grammatical Books written by Suetonius.

β Plin. Ep. 24. l. 1.

γ Id. Ep. 3. l. 2.

δ Id. Ep. 18. l. 1.

* Id. l. 1. Ep. 24. l. 10. Ep. 95.

‡ Id. Ep. 8. l. 3.

ζ See the 95th, and 96th Letters of the 10th Book of Pliny.

↓ About the year 104.

(l) Ex e- , Ib. 37.

(m) Id. Ib.

(p) Sueton. in Othone 10.

(q) Muret. iar. l. 15. 11. p. 1144.

(r) The 1ſt and the 2d Book of Tacitus's Hiſtory.

(ſ) Lipſius in Tacit. Hiſt. l. 2. pag. m. 484.

(a) Sueton. in Caligula, cap. 19.

(b) Ad annum 818. See Voſſius de Hiſt. Latinis. p. 134, & 167.

(c) See Voſſius Ib. pag. 864.

(d) Voſſius Ib. pag. 135.

and taking his Meaſures with the utmoſt (C) Circumſpection, prevented his improving favourable Opportunities, and afforded the Enemies a ſufficient Time to take care of their Affairs. The worſt was that he ran away on the Day of a general and deciſive Battle, and that he boaſted to Vitellius that he had (D) betray'd Otho, which probably was not true; but he was believed upon his Word, and that ſaved his Life. It has been ſaid that the Hopes he had of being made Emperor, moved him to adviſe that the War ſhou'd be kept up between Otho and Vitellius; but Tacitus thinks he was too wiſe a Man to have (E) ſuch Thoughts.

We

of (m) Pliny that he was Conſul, which is no leſs evident from theſe Words of Tacitus. (n) Atque eo duces Othonianos ſpatium ad moras ſuaſiſſe; præcipuè Paullinum, quod vetuſtiſſimus CONSULARIUM, & militia clarus, gloriam nomenque Britannicis expeditionibus meruiſſet. If it be ſaid that there is no need of this Paſſage of Tacitus, and that it is ſufficient to alledge theſe Words out of the 14th Chapter of the 16th Book of his Annals: C. Suetonio L. Teleſino Conſulibus Antiſtius Soſianus . . . . ſibi conciliat. I anſwer that this Paſſage of the Annals, which is commonly alledged to prove Suetonius's Conſulſhip, does not appear deciſive, if we take notice of a Note of M. de Tillemont (o). We have ſeen that Suetonius was, in the year of Rome 822, the moſt Ancient of thoſe who had been Conſuls. But Lucius Piſo was ſtill (p) living, and had been Conſul in the year 809, and therefore Suetonius muſt have been Conſul before the year 809, and conſequently the Words of Tacitus's Annals do not concern his Conſulſhip, ſince they belong to the year 819, or 818. M. de Tillemont (q) conjectures that Caius Suetonius, who was Conſul with Lucius Teleſinus in the 66th year of the Chriſtian Æra, that is, in the year 818, or 819, of Rome, was the Son of Suetonius, who makes the Subject of this Article. Father Hardouin (r), and all the other Authors I have conſulted, ſay, that our Suetonius Paulinus was Teleſinus's Collegue. You'll find the ſame Opinion in Voſſius, and a Fault in Chronology; for Voſſius ſuppoſes that this Conſulſhip belongs to the year of Rome 811 (ſ). Father Hardouin (t) places it in the laſt year of Nero's Life, and quotes the 6th Book of Tacitus's Annals. He ſhou'd have quoted the 16th, and remembred that Nero died the 2d year after the Conſulſhip of Suetonius and Teleſinus. M. de Tillemont (v) ſuppoſes as a thing undeniable, that Suetonius had been Conſul before he was ſent into Britain; and the Reaſon he goes upon, is, that all thoſe who were ſent thither had been Conſuls. I can't tell whether he is in the right as to this laſt Point, and the Proof he takes from theſe Words, vetuſtiſſimus conſularium, does not appear to me a convincing one; for perhaps the Meaning of 'em is, that Suetonius was older than all thoſe who had been Conſuls, tho' ſome of 'em had exerciſed the Conſulſhip before him; and therefore I don't abſolutely condemn the common Opinion, nor his neither. There may be ſome Reaſons on both ſides: It were ſomewhat ſtrange that Tacitus ſhould never mention the Conſular Quality of Suetonius, if it had belonged to him, when he commanded in Britain.

(C) His Maxims, which conſiſted in venturing nothing . . . . prevented his improving favourable Opportunities.] Cæcina, General of Vitellius's Troops, made uſe of a Stratagem, which did not ſucceed, and was like to be fatal to him, becauſe the Generals of Otho having diſcovered it, avoided the Snare, and laid another which the Enemy did not perceive. By this means they obtained a conſiderable Advantage, but not ſuch as it might have been, if Suetonius had been bolder and leſs cautious. Tacitus gives the following Character of him. (w) Signum pugnæ non ſtatim à Suetonio Paullino pediti datum. Cunctator natura, & cui cauta potius conſilia cum ratione, quam proſpera ex caſu placerent; compleri foſſas, aperiri campum, pandi aciem jubebat, ſatis cito incipi victoriam ratus, ubi proviſum foret ne vincerentur. Ea cunctatione, ſpatium Vitellianis datum, in vineas nexu traducum impeditas refugiendi: & modica ſilva adhærebat; unde rurſus auſi promptiſſimos prætorianorum equitum interficere. He rather choſe to give his Opinion according to the Rules of Prudence, than to obtain an Advantage by meer Chance. Had he not ſounded the Retreat on that day, the whole Army of Vitellius had been cut in pieces, at leaſt 'twas the Opinion of both Parties: the Reaſons he gave of his Conduct were not approved, and I think Warriors wou'd readily change the Proverb, Too much precaution is cunning, into this, Too much precaution is an overſight. Let us ſtill hear Tacitus. (a) Ceterum ea ubique formido fuit, apud fugientes, occurſantes, in acie, pro vallo, ut deleri cum univerſo exercitu Cæcinam potuiſſe, ni Suetonius Paullinus receptui cecinisſet, utriſque in partibus percrebuerit. Timuiſſe ſe Paullinus ferebat, tantum inſuper laboris atque itineris, ne Vitellianus miles recens e caſtris feſſos aggrederetur, & perculſis nullum retro ſubſidium foret. Apud paucos ea ducis ratio probata, in vulgus adverſo rumore fuit. But if on the one ſide Suetonius's Circumſpection proved ſometimes prejudicial to Otho, it might on the other have prevented his Ruin occaſion'd by the Raſhneſs of the other Generals. Suetonius was for protracting the War, and his Opinion grounded (b) upon very ſolid Maxims, was alſo that of (c) Marius Celſus, and Annius Gallus, his Collegues. But Titian, Otho's Brother, and Proculus, Prefect of the Prætorium, who had the greateſt Intereſt (d) with that Emperor, adviſed the quite contrary, and brought things into the greateſt danger. The following Paſſage is to Suetonius's Honour. (e) Otho conſultavit, trahi bellum, an fortunam experiri placeret. Tum Suetonius Paullinus, dignum fama ſua ratus, qua nemo illa tempeſtate militaris rei callidior habebatur, de toto genere belli cenſere; feſtinationem hoſtibus, moram ipſis utilem diſſeruit . . . . (f) Otho pronus ad decertandum; frater ejus Titianus, & præfectus prætorii Proculus, imperitia properantes, fortunam & deos & numen Othonis adeſſe conſiliis, affore conatibus teſtabantur, neu quis obviam ire ſententiæ auderet, in adulationem conceſſerant. A Battle being reſolved upon, it was debated whether Otho ſhould be there or not, and it paſſed in the Negative; Suetonius and Celſus not daring to oppoſe it, leſt they ſhou'd be accuſed of expoſing the Prince to Danger (g). They ſent him therefore with very good Troops into a ſafe Place: Which weaken'd the Army, and diſcouraged the Soldiers (h), and after that Retreat (i) Suetonius and Celſus had only the Name of Generals; their Counſels were not followed, every thing depended upon Proculus's Fancy. 'Tis therefore no great wonder if the Battle was loſt, and if Suetonius ran away and durſt not return into the Camp. But he cannot be excuſed for what I am going to relate; 'tis a true Infamy.

(D) He boaſted to Vitellius that he had betray'd Otho.] The Commanders of the victorious Army, and thoſe who had been vanquiſh'd, went to Vitellius at Lyons. He cauſed many Captains of Otho's Party to be put to Death, and left Suetonius and Proculus in the Uncertainty of the Event. At laſt they were heard, and obtained their Pardon, becauſe they made him believe they had betray'd Otho, and gave an Account of the Meaſures they had taken to deſtroy him. (k) Suetonium Paullinum, ac Licinium Proculum, triſti mora ſqualidos tenuit: donec auditi, neceſſariis magis defenſionibus, quam honeſtis uterentur. Proditionem ultro imputabant: ſpatium longi ante prœlium itineris, fatigationem Othonianorum, permixtum vehiculis agmen, ac pleraque fortuita, fraudi ſuæ adſignantes, & Vitellius credidit de perfidia, & fidem abſolvit. Can any thing be more unworthy of the Roman Name?

(E) Tacitus thinks he was too wiſe a Man to have ſuch Thoughts.] He had read in ſome Authors that the Armies of Otho and Vitellius, whether it be that they were afraid of the War, or

our

(m) Plin. lib. 5. cap. 1.

(n) Tacit. Hiſt. lib. 2, cap. 37, ad ann. 822.

(o) Tillemont, Hiſt. des Emper. tom. 1. pag. m. 464.

(p) This plainly appears from a Paſſage in Pliny the younger Epiſt. 7, lib. 3.

(q) Tillem. Ib.

(r) Harduin. in Plin. lib. 5. cap. 1. pag. 526.

(ſ) Hard. Ib.

(t) Voſſius de Hiſt. Latin. lib. 1. cap. 26. p. m. 133.

(v) Tillem. ubi ſupra.

(w) Tacit. Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 25, ad ann. 822.

(a) Id. Ib. cap. 26.

(b) They may be ſeen in Tacitus, Ib. cap. 32.

(c) Ib. cap. 33.

(d) Id. Ib. lib. 1. cap. 87.

(e) Id. Ib. lib. 2. cap. 32.

(f) Id. Ib. cap. 33.

(g) Id. Ib.

(h) Id. Ib.

(i) Profecto Brixellum Othone, honor imperii penes Titianum fratrem, vis ac poteſtas penes Proculum Præfectum. Celſus & Paullinus, cum prudentia eorum nemo uteretur, inani nomine ducum, alienæ culpæ prætendebantur. Id. Ib. cap. 39.

(k) Id. Ib. cap. 60.

We ſhall ſee hereafter * that it was wrong to take him for the Father of Suetonius the Hiſtorian, and to ſay that he wrote the Life of Otho.

SUETONIUS (Caius Suetonius Tranquillus), a Roman Hiſtorian, Son of Suetonius (A) Lenis, flouriſh'd under the Empire of Trajan and Hadrian. He applied himſelf very much to Study, and I think it may be ſaid that he taught † Grammar and Rhetorick. 'Tis certain he pleaded ſome imaginary Cauſes; and I think he alſo pleaded ſome real Ones before the Judges. Pliny, who places him among thoſe β who were call'd Scholaſtici, γ a ſort of Men who never pleaded or made Orations but in a Hall, or by way of Exerciſe, affirms in another δ Place that Suetonius deſired him to procure him a Delay, becauſe a Dream made him afraid of miſcarrying in a Cauſe at the Bar. There was a long and * very ſtrict Friendſhip between thoſe two Writers; and it proved advantageous to Suetonius, for Pliny did him great Services. He procured him an Office of Tribune ‡, and then he had it beſtowed upon another, at Suetonius's Requeſt. He obtained for the latter, whoſe Wife was barren, the jus trium liberorum, that is, the Privileges of thoſe who have three Children. That Favour was ſeldom granted, and Pliny had not obtain'd it for his Friend, had it not been for the great Intereſt he had at the Imperial Court, and for the earneſt Deſire he expreſt to obtain it ζ. He was then ‡ Governor of Bithynia, under the Empire of Trajan. Suetonius raiſed himſelf conſiderably, for he was Secretary to the Emperor Hadrian; but he loſt that Office about the Year 121, when many Perſons were put out of Conceit with both Emperors, whoſe Infamy diſcover'd it ſelf daily, thought of coming to an Agreement, and electing a new Maſter, or intruſting the Senate with that Election, and that this was the Reaſon why the Commanders of Otho's Troops, eſpecially Paulinus, were for prolonging the War (l). Tacitus is willing to believe that ſome few Men wiſh'd in their Hearts the publick Peace and a good Prince; but he cannot perſwade himſelf that Suetonius, who was ſo prudent a Man, cou'd hope that in ſo Corrupt an Age, the Soldiers, who had broke the Peace to have a War, wou'd give over the War out of a Deſire of Peace. Nor can he believe that Armies, whoſe Manners and Languages were ſo different, cou'd agree in ſuch a Deſign, nor that moſt of the chief Officers, being conſcious of their Luxury, Indigence and Crimes, wou'd have been contented with an honeſt Emperor, not beholden to them for his Dignity. (m) Neque Paullinum, qua prudentia fuit, ſperaſſe, corruptiſſimo ſeculo, tantam vulgi moderationem reor, ut qui pacem belli amore turbaverant, bellum pacis caritate deponerent: neque aut exercitus linguis moribuſque diſſonos, in hunc conſenſum potuiſſe coaleſcere: aut Legatos ac duces, magna ex parte luxus, egeſtatis, ſcelerum ſibi conſcios, niſi pollutum obſtrictumque meritis ſuis Principem paſſuros.

(A) Son of Suetonius Lenis.] The Proof of this is contained in the following Paſſage. (p) Interfuit huic bello pater meus Svetonius Lenis, tertiæ decimæ legionis Tribunus anguſticlavius. It appears alſo from theſe Words that Suetonius's Father was Tribune of the 13th Legion, and that he was at the Battle of Bedriacum, in which Vitellius's Troops defeated thoſe of Otho. Had Muretus exactly remembred the Paſſages of Tacitus, alledged by him, he wou'd have made a better uſe of his Critical Learning. He found linus with a little hole before it in a Manuſcript, whereupon he fancied that three Letters were loſt, and that inſtead of Linus, the true reading was Paulinus; from whence he inferr'd that Suetonius the Hiſtorian was the Son of Suetonius Paulinus, who makes the Subject of the foregoing Article. (q) Vidi ego librum, qui cariem & tineas ſenſerat, in quo poſt nomen Suetonius foramen erat exiguum: deinde ſequebatur linus: & ſupra alia manu emendatum lenis: Omnino autem legendum eſt Paulinus; id enim ei verum cognomen fuit. Teſtem in eam rem laudabo Tacitum, qui fortis viri neque nomen, neque virtutem tacitam eſſe ſivit. Ejus enim & ſæpe in annalibus, & in Agricolæ vita perhonorificam mentionem facit. He was ſo fond of his Conjecture, that he did not mind the Teſtimonies of Tacitus, which he made uſe of; for if he had conſidered them with Attention, he might eaſily have perceived that they were wholly inconſiſtent with his Critical Obſervation; and he would have concluded that Suetonius, whoſe Exploits are mentioned by Tacitus, cou'd not be he who was only a Tribune in the War of Vitellius. To which I add, that according to the ſame Tacitus in (r) a Work not quoted by Muretus, Suetonius Paulinus was one of Otho's Generals during the ſame War, which utterly deſtroys Muretus's Correction. Theſe are very ſtrange Faults, and yet a Critick ought never to take notice of 'em in an inſulting Manner, being always mindful that he may want the ſame Indulgence when he commits the like Miſtakes, which is unavoidable. Were I allowed to compare my ſelf with great Men, I would apply to my ſelf the Inference drawn by Lipſius from this Miſtake of Muretus. (ſ) Quid dicam? Non inſector te vir elegantiſſime. ſed bona fide hæc ſcribis? Erras nimis. Suetonius ille Lenis, Tribunus fuit: noſter belli dux. Ille anguſticlavius, id eſt, nondum Senator, ſed inter equites: Iſte Conſularis, nec tenue uſquam veſtigium confuſionis ejus quam facis. Hoc mihi in tranſcurſu monitum, non ut carpam (Fidem teſtor:) ſed ut claro ſub exemplo doceam quàm fallax hæc Critica, & ignoſcendum etiam nobis eſſe, ſi labimur interdum in proclivi iſtâ viâ.

Perhaps ſome will think that Suetonius Lenis, Father of Suetonius the Hiſtorian, was the Son of Suetonius, who makes the Subject of the foregoing Article; but there is no ground for ſuch an Opinion; for if Suetonius had been the Grandſon of that great Warrior, and of that Roman Conſul, he wou'd not have ſpoken of his Grandfather ſo plainly as he does: (a) Avum meum narrantem puer audiebam, cauſſam operis ab interioribus aulicis proditam, &c. An Hiſtorian may be ſo modeſt as not to inſert in his Work occaſionally the glorious Titles of his Anceſtors; but 'tis hardly poſſible, that when he mentions his Father or Grandfather, he ſhou'd be contented to name 'em without mentioning the important Offices conferred upon 'em. Our Suetonius did not forget his Father's Tribuneſhip; much more wou'd he have mention'd his Father's Generalſhip: the Occaſion neceſſarily required it; for 'tis on Account of the Battle of Bedriacum that he obſerves that his Father commanded a Legion, during the War of Otho and Vitellius: but 'twas in that War that Suetonius Paulinus commanded Otho's Troops.

One Sicco Polentonus ſaid before Muretus that Suetonius Paulinus is the Father of Suetonius the Hiſtorian. Beſides, he aſcribes to him ſome Books that were written by the latter, viz. de Inſtitutione officiorum, de Illuſtribus ſcriptoribus, deque hiſtoria ludicra. 'Tis in a Life of Suetonius, which Pibius inſerted in his Annals (b), and which is of no value. This Polentonus was Secretary of the City of Padua in the Beginning of the XV. Century (c). Voſſius (d) affirms two things: 1ſt. That Geſner ſays that Suetonius Lenis is the ſame with Suetonius Paulinus, and that he was the Father of Suetonius the Hiſtorian, and Author of a Life of the Emperor Otho: 2d. That La Popeliniere ſays the ſame. There is no ſuch thing in Geſner's Bibliotheca quoted by Voſſius; but the following Words are to be found in the Abridgment of it;

---

* In the Remark A of the following Article.

† Suidas in Τραγκυλλος calls him only a Grammarian, and mentions the Titles of many Grammatical Books written by Suetonius.

β Plin. Ep. 24. l. 1.

γ Id. Ep. 3. l. 2.

δ Id. Ep. 18. l. 1.

* Id. l. 1. Ep. 24. l. 10. Ep. 94.

‡ Id. Ep. 8. l. 3.

ζ See the 95*th, and* 96*th Letters of the* 10*th Book of* Pliny.

‡ About the year 104.

(l) Ex eodem, Ib. cap. 37.

(m) Id. Ib.

(p) Sueton. in Othone cap. 10.

(q) Muret. Variar. Lect. l. 15. cap. 11. p. 1144.

(r) The 1ſt and the 2d Book of Tacitus's Hiſtory.

(ſ) Lipſius in Tacit. Hiſt. l. 2. pag. m. 424.

(a) Sueton. in Caligula, cap. 19.

(b) Ad annum 818. See Voſſius de Hiſt. Latinis. p. 134, & 167.

(c) See Voſſius Ib. pag. 864.

(d) Voſſius Ib. pag. 135.

put out of Favour (B) for not paying a due Reſpect to the Empreſs. He wrote many (C) Books, moſt of which are loſt. We have only his Hiſtory of the firſt twelve Emperors, and part of his Treatiſe concerning the illuſtrious Grammarians and Rhetoricians. That Hiſtory is very much (D) commended by our moſt learned Humaniſts: He ſpeaks much more of the Emperors than of the Affairs of the Empire; and the Diligence wherewith he has collected ſo many Particulars concerning their Actions and Inclinations, cannot be ſufficiently admired. He does not obſerve the Order of Time; and no Hiſtory was ever more different from Annals than this is. He reduces every thing to ſome general Heads, and places together what relates to each Head. He is very conciſe, and frequently touches upon Cuſtoms and Ordinances, ſo that thoſe who read his Hiſtory with a good Commentary, or hear it explain'd by a learned Critick, may learn a vaſt Number of things relating to Antiquity. Some blame him it, made by others: (e) Suetonius Lenis, Suetonii Tranquilli pater, Lucii Othonis imperatoris vitam deſcripſit. Item librum de inſtitutione obſervata, & librum Prætorum. There is nothing in theſe Words, whereby it may appear that the Author of 'em believed that Suetonius Lenis, and Suetonius Paulinus are the ſame Perſon. La Popeliniere expreſſes himſelf thus: "(f) Suetonius Lenis "the Father of Tranquillus, wrote the Life of "the Emperor L. Otho, and a Book concerning "the Prætors." This is all falſe.

Note that Suetonius taking the Sirname of Tranquillus, retain'd the whole Senſe of the Sirname Lenis, which his Father had. But we don't know the Reaſon which made him prefer the one to the other: Perhaps he only conſulted his Ear, and Tranquillus ſounded better to him.

(B) He loſt that Office . . . . when many Perſons were put out of Favour for not paying a due reſpect to the Empreſs.] This is to be found only in a Paſſage of Spartianus. (g) Septicio Claro præfecto prætorii, & Suetonio Tranquillo Epiſtolarum magiſtro, multiſque aliis qui apud Sabinam uxorem, injuſſu ejus, familiarius ſe tunc egerant quàm reverentia domus aulicæ poſtulabat, ſucceſſores dedit. The Senſe of thoſe Words is thus repreſented by M. de Tillemont: (h) "Adrian put out of Favour many Perſons "in England, for having behaved themſelves too "freely, without his Order, towards the Empreſs "Sabina, [which is not farther explain'd in Hiſtory.] Suetonius Tranquillus [who doubtleſs "is the Hiſtorian] loſt his Office of Secretary, "&c." This is very Judicious: We ſhall ſee in the Remark, wherein I take notice of Moreri's Miſtakes, that every Body has not been ſo cautious as M. de Tillemont.

(C) He wrote many Books.] I ſhall uſe ſtill the Expreſſions of the ſame Writer. "(i) Suidas ". . . . aſcribes to him ſeveral Works, which "concern that (k) Profeſſion. Beſides, he obſerves "that he had writ a Book about the Grecian "Games, two upon the Spectacles of the Romans, two upon the Laws and Cuſtoms of Rome, "one upon the Life of Cicero or upon his Books "de Republica, a Catalogue of the Illuſtrious "Men of Rome, and the eight Books [ſtill extant] of the Hiſtory of the Emperors. (1) "He had alſo writ three Books of Kings, of "which St. Paulinus made an Abridgment in "Verſe. (2) The Book of the Inſtitution of "Offices, quoted by Priſcian [perhaps the Book "concerning the Laws and Cuſtoms of Rome.] "The ſame Priſcian quotes eight Books of his "concerning the Prætors. A Book intit'led de "rebus variis, is aſcrib'd to him, wherein he "treated of things that concern Grammar. (3) "It appears by many Authors, who quote his "Works, that they have been very much eſteem'd "even among the Greeks. (4) Tertullian quotes "his Book concerning Spectacles, (5) and St. Jerome that of the Illuſtrious Men, in whoſe Imitation he wrote his. ['Tis likely that what is now "extant of Suetonius about the Illuſtrious Grammarians, Poets and Orators, made part of that "Work. He ſpeaks of ſome Grecians, but they "taught at Rome".]

(D) That Hiſtory of the firſt Twelve Emperors, is very much commended by our moſt Learned Humaniſts.] 'Tis a continued Series of choice and curious Facts, related ſuccinctly without Digreſſions, Reflections and Reaſonings. There is in it a Character of Sincerity, which plainly ſhews that the Author feared and hoped for nothing, and that his Pen was not directed by Hatred or Flattery. He repreſents abundance of Vices, with all their Deformity, without diſcovering any Inclination to Slander, and without omitting (l) the good Qualities of thoſe whoſe Crimes he deſcribes. Which muſt needs pleaſe the Judicious Readers, who are extreamly offended, when they obſerve that an Author loves Slandering, and relates wicked Actions, not ſo much to perform the Part of an Hiſtorian, as to ſatisfy his Satyrical Humour. Many Readers don't much care whether an Hiſtorian diſcovers ſuch a Humour, or appears free from it; 'tis enough for them if he be Satyrical: thoſe Men have doubtleſs wrong Notions of things, and little Honeſty; but all things being otherwiſe alike, I think they wou'd rather chuſe a Hiſtory, wherein wicked Princes are ingenuouſly deſcrib'd, than one that may be ſuſpected by reaſon of the Author's Malignity; and therefore they may agree with Men of a good Taſte in approving Suetonius. He found the Art of perſwading the Reader of his Sincerity; which plainly ſhews that he is no paſſionate Writer. Let us ſee what Judgment has been made of him by ſome Learned Men: I begin with the Eloquent Politian. (a) Hæc ſingula ita Suetonius hic noſter perfectus in ſua Hiſtoria eſt, ut præter explicandi ſcientiam, qua mirifice eſt uſus, etiam diligentiam nobis, fidemque, & libertatem ſuam plane probaverit. Nulla in his libris ſuſpicio eſt gratiæ, nulla ſimultatis, nihil ſtudio dictum, nihil ſuppreſſum metu, rebus ipſis data omnia, veritati in primis ſervitum eſt, ut plane appareat ad perpetuam magis poſſeſſionem (ut Thucydides ait) quam ad intuitum hoc opus, pugnamque præſentem comparatum eſt. Nam qui aut fœdis aſſentationibus, aut malignis obtrectatiunculis, ſupra quam res ipſa poſtulet, quaſi ſervire hiſtoriam cogunt, ii mihi haud minus eam dehoneſtare videntur, atque ii qui Herculem ipſum depingant, Lydiæ Omphalæ in muliebri & crocina tunicula famulantem. . . . . (b) Hanc in primis captare Hiſtoricus laudem debet, ut libertate uſus maxima in ſcribendo, ut neque aſſentationi quaſi obnoxius, neque obtrectationi quaſi offenſus, ſed fidei ſerviſſe atque incorruptæ veritati exiſtimetur, ne quid in eo ſervile, neve quid malignius deprehendatur, ſic ut nec ullis conditionibus ſolicitatus, neque mercedula cuiquam auctoratus, ſed ſui homo juris, rectus, atque intrepidus neutram in partem præponderet. . . . . (c) Tantum abeſt, ut hic noſter quicquam vel metu, vel ſtudio adductus, rebus ipſis detraxerit, ut Nervæ etiam, Trajani, Adrianique ſuæ ætatis Imperatorum vitas tacere præoptaverit, quam aut periculoſe de viventibus male ſentire, aut extollendo potentiores, parum videri liber. I ſhall add the following Words of Lipſius to this noble Encomium. (d) Suetonium Tranquillum non injuria commendo ſæpe juventuti. Verba vides? Pura, terſa, propria. Filum totum orationis? Breve, nervoſum. Rem ipſam? Utilis pariter & jucunda hiſtoria eſt: &, quod mihi caput, plena moris & doctrinæ antiquæ. Quis obſecro, ritus publicus olim privatuſque fuit, quem velut de induſtria non tangat? Quod munus, quis magiſtratus, quem non libet? Tangat & libet, dico. Non enim explicet: quod inſtitutum ejus vetuit & ratio ſcribendi. At viam tamen latam ſternit ad indagandum: & aures atque animum imbuit auditione aliqua, imo cognitione. One Witneſs more: (e) Suetonius vitas aliquot deſcripſit Auguſtorum. Fidem ſi ſpectes, nihil certius. Acumen ſcribentis ſi conſideres, & prudentiam, nihil acutius, nihil prudentius. Verborum, quantam

---

(e) Epitome bibl. Geſner. pag. 769. Edit. 1583

(f) La Popeliniere Hiſtoire des Hiſtoires Book, 6. (and not 5 as Voſſius quotes it) pag. 344.

(g) Ælius Spartian. in vita Adriani cap. 11. p. m. 102. tom. 1. Hiſt. Auguſtæ ſcriptor.

(h) Tillemont Hiſt. des Emper. tom. 2. p. m. 418. ad ann. 121.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 486.

(k) That is, that of a Grammarian.

(1) Auſon. Ep. 19. p. 466.

(2) Suet. prol.

(3) Prol.

(4) Tert. ſpec. c. 5. p. 92. c.

(5) Hier. v. ill. præf. p. 261. a.

(l) See Bodin, Method. Hiſt. cap. 4. pag. m. 55.

(a) Politian. præfat. in Suetonium fol. m. b 3.

(b) Id. ib. fol. b 4.

(c) Id. ib. fol. b 5.

(d) Juſtus Lipſius Elector. lib. 2. cap. 17. p. m. 911. tom. 1. oper.

(e) Petr. Criſc. Robortellus in litteris ad Jo. Bapt. Campegium tom. 1. de Populi Romani vita & [illegible] promiſſi.

him for being ſo particular (E) in deſcribing the lewd Actions and horrid Debaucheries of Tiberius, Caligula, Nero, &c. It cannot be denied that the Inquiries he made into thoſe things are very ſingular, and that he allowed a great deal of Liberty to his Pen; and therefore it has been ſaid that he writ the Lives of the Emperors with the ſame Freedom as they lived. Nevertheleſs he was a Man of very good † Morals, and great Virtue. He made no haſte to publiſh his Works, and wanted to be entreated ß not to keep 'em ſo long in his Cloſet. The beſt Commentaries upon that Writer are thoſe of Torrentius and Caſaubon. They have been inſerted at large, with the Notes of ſome Learned Criticks, in γ the Edition of Utrecht 1672. I have not ſeen the French Tranſlation of Suetonius, printed at Lyons * in the year 1556, in 4to; and therefore I cannot ſay whether quantum ſatis eſt, adhibet; copiam autem rejicit. Formulas fori & curiæ omnes ſervat in loquendo. Mirificus planè vir, & dignus qui ab omnibus ametur & legatur. If any one deſires a greater number of Teſtimonies, he needs only read Hanckius in the 1ſt Volume de Romanarum rerum ſcriptoribus, pag. 112, and 113; and in the 2d Volume, pag. 287, and 288. See alſo Sir Thomas Pope Blount, pag. 104, of the Cenſura celebriorum autorum. But the Reader muſt alſo find here what the Ancients have ſaid of Suetonius's Candor and Sincerity. See the Margin (f).

I muſt not conceal that thoſe, who are willing to know the Date of each Event, are very much diſpleaſed with Suetonius. That Hiſtorian has wholly neglected it; he does not obſerve any Chronological Order: and indeed it was no Part of his Deſign; and 'tis to be obſerv'd that he is excuſable for pitching upon a Method, which diſpenſed him from following that Order. There were Hiſtories enough, which contained an exact Account of the Reign of the Emperors, according to the time in which every thing had been done; and therefore he did not think it proper to compoſe a Work of the ſame Nature, but rather choſe to diſcover the private Actions of the Emperors, and to put together in one Chapter what concern'd their Marriages, and in other Chapters what concern'd their Education, their Friendſhips, their Buildings, &c. He pitch'd upon the moſt difficult Part of Hiſtory; for 'tis much eaſier to collect the Materials of Wars or other publick Affairs, than to give a particular Account of what paſſes in a Palace, I mean of the Inclinations and private Actions of the Monarch; what he was as a Husband, as a Maſter, as a Friend, as a Lover; what Caprices he was ſubject to, what Clothes he wore, what Meals he made, &c. I am ſure that if a Man ſhou'd undertake at this day to write the Hiſtory of the Popes, Emperors, or Kings of France, &c. in Imitation of Suetonius, running back to the laſt 150 Years, more or leſs, as he did, he wou'd meet with great Difficulties; and if he ſucceeded as well as Suetonius, he would be admired, and look'd upon as an excellent Author of a Secret Hiſtory. Oh, how fit wou'd ſuch a Book be to Inrich a Bookſeller!

(E) Some blame him for being ſo particular in deſcribing the lewd Actions.] Muretus exclaim'd with great Eloquence againſt Suetonius upon that Account, ſo far as to ſay that the Reading of that Hiſtorian is as dangerous for young People as that of Catullus and Martial. I ſhall ſet down the whole Paſſage of the Speech he delivered in the College of Rome, the 4th of November 1580. (g) At Suetonium S. Hieronymus laudat. Magnum teſtimonium, ſi laudat. Non enim ſanctitate tantùm Hieronymus, ſed & eruditione & judicio præſtitit. Quomodo igitur laudat? Eâdem libertate ſcripſiſſe eum ait Cæſarum vitas, quâ ipſi vixerunt. Non magna laus, ſi laus eſt: ſed ego laudem eſſe non puto. Quid enim laudis habet, cùm Cæſares in ſumma licentia atque impudentia vixerint, orationis turpitudine, ipſorum flagitia æquaſſe, quæque illi perpetuis tenebris operienda patrarant, ea nudis & prætextatis verbis in lucem & in aſpectum hominum protuliſſe? Itaque nihil apud Suetonium frequentius legas, quàm exoletos, & ſpintrias & cellarios, & nubentem Neroni Sporum, Doryphoro Neronem; voces etiam, quas in illis flagitiis miſerint, quaſi hæc ſcire, poſterorum intereſſet: quorum commemoratione non ſcriptorem modo, ſed ipſas chartas erubeſcere oportebat: cùm hæc interim ita ſubtiliter ac particulatim perſequitur, ut docere voluiſſe videatur. In Tacito nihil ſimile reperias. Talia aut præterit, aut ita ſignificat, ut odiſſe & abhorrere videas, non, ut illum alterum, cupidè in eis immorari. Inter Vopiſcos igitur & Spartianos, & Lampridios & ejuſmodi vitarum ſcriptores Suetonius emineat, illâ ſe jactet in aulâ; hic ceteris melior, quod ætatis beneficio, melius quàm illi latinè loquitur: ad Taciti quidem gloriam aſpirare, aut ſe cum eo conferre ſi voluerit, omnium eruditorum convicio vapulabit. Equidem quod ad me attinet, Suetonii lectionem non minus quàm Catulli aut Martialis adoleſcentibus perniciosam, etiam confirmatæ ætatis viris periculoſam puto. Take notice that he oppoſes Tacitus to Suetonius, in order to ſhew that Tacitus is not to blame, conſidering how cautious he is to ſay nothing of thoſe filthy things, or to mention them only in general, and with Indignation. Bodin made the ſame Obſervation before Muretus, to make it appear that Tacitus is more to be commended than Suetonius, whom he otherwiſe acknowledges to be leſs blameable than Lampridius. (h) Hic fortaſſis improbari poteſt (Suetonius) quòd fœdiſſimas quaſque principum libidines nimis ſtudioſè conſectatur quas Corn. Tacitus omiſit. Sed in eo genere longè à Lampridio ſuperatur, is enim tot portenta novarum voluptatum ab Heliogabalo invecta deſcribit, ut non magis ea narrare, quàm unicuique ad imitandum proponere videatur. But Bodin and Muretus did not conſider what difference there is between the Author of an Hiſtory of the Empire, and the Author of an Hiſtory of the Emperors. The former ought to touch but lightly upon the private Actions of a Prince; he ought to ſay but little of Kings, except when they have an Influence upon the general Affairs of the State. But thoſe, who write the Hiſtory of the Perſon of a Monarch, ought chiefly to dwell on his private Actions. Which is the Reaſon why Suetonius thought himſelf obliged principally to inſiſt upon the perſonal Actions of the Emperors. Beſides, it may be affirm'd that Tacitus did not take ſuch a Method as the Cenſurers of Suetonius aſcribe to him. He expreſſes the Lewdneſs of that time in very plain Words, and perhaps he ſpeaks as much of it in (i) proportion as the other does. We might Judge better of it, if we had all his Hiſtory of Caligula. What Muretus ſays, that the publick is not concern'd to know the Particulars of the Emperors Debauchery, proves too much; for he may be anſwered that the publick is not concern'd to know the Particulars mentioned by Tacitus concerning Agrippina, who inticed her own Son to commit Inceſt with her. What have we to do, may one ſay to Muretus, with the (a) laſciva oſcula & prænuntias flagitii blanditias, which we read in Tacitus? You muſt either condemn that Hiſtorian, or acquit Suetonius, and acknowledge that they are only more or leſs Faulty. Note that Eraſmus, whoſe Authority is as good as that of Muretus, does not think that the Deſcription of the Lewdneſs of the Emperors, whoſe Hiſtory has been written by Suetonius, is unprofitable to the publick. On the contrary he believes it may be a curb to wicked Princes, and that no Tyrant cou'd be at reſt, ſhou'd he conſider that his Memory wou'd be one day as execrable as that of Caligula and Nero is at this Day. It was for the publick Good that he put out an Edition of Suetonius and other Hiſtorians, who give us a particular Account of the abominable Actions of the Roman Emperors. I ſhall ſet down his own Words, which repreſent his Thoughts more fully and more Emphatically than I can do.

† See the Paſſage of Pliny in the Remark E.

ß See the Remark F.

γ Publiſh'd by M. Grævius. It was printed in 1691.

* Du Verdier Vau-Privas, Bib. Franc. pag. 415. La Croix du Maine pag. 118. mentions only the Edition of Lyons, 1569.

(f) Sueto-nius Tran-quillus, emenda-tiſſimus & candidiſ-ſimus ſcriptor, Antonium Vindi-tacu-, con-tentus eo quod eis ſim per-eat . . . . de Sue-tonio non ramur familii- fuit a-re bre-vitatem. Vopiſcus in pag. 691. 1. aug. ipt. See the wri-in obo, 639. ere he ces him ng the rians, non diſer-quam e me-rie s ge-) tra-derunt.

(g) Mure-orat. Vol. 2. 347, Edit. 1672. vo.

(h) Bodin. Method. Hiſt. cap. 4. pag. m. 65.

(i) That is conſidering that he wrote the Hiſtory of the Roman Empire, and that Suetonius wrote the Lives of the Emperors.

(a) Tacit. Annal. l. 14. cap. 2.

whether George de la Bouliere, who is the Author of it, has been as cautious as M. du § Teil. The latter has left out whole Chapters, and in many Places enervated Suetonius's Phraſes; for he was ſenſible that the French Language cou'd not bear the

§ The 4th Edit. of his Tranſlation of Suetonius, is that of Amſterdam, 1699

(b) Ex bonæ fidei ſcriptoribus ſuper alios ſummoperè, hic præcipue capitur utilitas, quod non alia res æque, vel bonorum regum animos ad res cum laude gerendas accendit, vel Tyrannorum cupiditates cohibet ac refrenat, dum utrique cernunt horum literis ſuam vitam omnem, non in totius orbis, imo ſeculorum omnium Theatrum producendam, & quidquid nunc vel in abditis patrant, vel aliis fucis prætexunt, vel metu diſſimulari cogunt verius quàm ignorari, paulo poſt clariſſima in luce ſub oculis omnium traducendum, cum jam metu pariter ac ſpe libera poſteritas, nec ullis corrupta ſtudiis, magno conſenſu rectè factis applaudet, parique libertate his diverſa explodet exſibilabitque. Nec enim arbitror quenquam tyrannum, ſic penitus omnem hominis ſenſum exuiſſe, ut vitam ſibi jucundam ducat, ſi norit ſuum nomen apud poſteros omnium ætatum ac nationum, tam inviſum & execrabile fore, quam eſt Neronis, Caligula, Heliogabali, Commodi, ad quorum mentionem, ceu portentorum verius quàm principum, nemo jam non deſpuit, non abominatur, non deteſtatur. What Eraſmus ſays may be confirm'd by the following Example. The Emperor Commodus (c) cauſed a Man, who had read the Life of Caligula, written by Suetonius, to be devoured by Beaſts; and he uſed him thus, becauſe he was born the ſame Day with Caligula. From whence it may be infer'd that he was more concern'd for the Memory of Caligula, than for that of the other Emperors defamed by that Hiſtorian. But ſince he exerciſed ſo great a Cruelty upon a Reader, by virtue of his Concern grounded on ſuch Frivolous Reaſons, 'tis an eaſy Matter to apprehend that he wou'd not, for any thing in the World, have been uſed as Suetonius uſed Caligula; and therefore 'tis certain that Tyrants are not willing their Infamous Actions ſhou'd be known. Such an Hiſtorian as Suetonius may therefore make 'em uneaſy, and afraid that ſometime or other their Memory will be as Execrable as that of the Emperors, whoſe Debaucheries he lays open.

Politian maintain'd, many Years before Eraſmus, that the lewd and cruel Actions deſcrib'd by Suetonius, might inſpire the Reader with Love for the contrary Virtues; and he alledged the Conduct of the Lacedemonians, who in order to make their Children hate Drunkenneſs, took care to ſhew them Drunken Slaves. Read his Words, wherein you'll find alſo that a Muſician, the better to inſtruct his Scholars, wou'd have 'em hear very bad Singers. (d) Sed neque aut obſcœnitatis apud hunc quiſquam, aut crudelitatis exempla reformidet. Siquidem & Lacedæmonii (ut eſt apud Plutarchum) ſoliti etiam ſunt per feſtos dies bene potos ſervos, atque ex eo parum ſui compotes, quos illi Εἵλωτας vocabant, oſtendere inter convivia, atque illo pacto docere adoleſcenteis, quantum in ſe mali ebrietas contineret. Et Thebanus (e) Giſmenias bonos juxta maloſque tibicines diſcipulis oſtendens, Hoc modo, aiebat, canere oportet, illo non oportet. Videlicet collatæ vitiis virtutes, magis aliquanto, quam ſi ſeorſum inſpexeris, diluceſcunt.

M. de Tillemont is of Maretus's Opinion. "(1) "Voſſius quotes out of St. Jerome, ſays he (f), "that Suetonius is as looſe [and infamous] in his "Narration, as the Princes, whoſe Hiſtory he "writes, were in their Lives: [wherein he contradicts the Praiſes beſtowed upon him by Pliny:] (2) and it may be ſaid of him and Lampridius, that they teach the greateſt Crimes by "relating them". I cannot grant him all the Parts of this Sentence of Condemnation; for I am perſwaded that Suetonius might write after ſuch a manner, without contradicting the Praiſes beſtowed upon him by Pliny. Pliny "ſays, "(g) that the more he knew him, the more he "loved him, by Reaſon of his Probity, Honeſty, "good Conduct, Application to Study, and "Learning." The particular Account Suetonius gives of the Emperors Debauchery is no Proof that he was a Lewd Man, or that he took delight in Deſcribing Lewd Actions, and that there was any thing wanting to his Probity and Honeſty. It ſhews only that he was a very Ingenuous and Sincere Man, and that he believed an Hiſtorian ought faithfully to relate all the Truths he can find out: and thoſe who are never ſo little Qualified to judge of the Character of an Author by his way of Writing, will be of Opinion that Suetonius was only directed by his Sincerity and natural Ingenuity, and not by a Deſire of Indulging his Satyrical Humour. Nay, it ought to be preſum'd that he deſign'd to puniſh Vice as much as an Hiſtorian can puniſh it, and to caſt a Blot upon the Memory of thoſe monſtrous Men, by tranſmitting it to future Ages, attended with all the Execration it deſerves, and that he thought ſuch a Method might in time prevent the like Brutiſhneſs. 'Tis certain that he and Lampridius Inſpire a greater Averſion and Horror for the Princes, whoſe abominable Actions they have written, than the wiſeſt and moſt grave Writers can do. Laſtly, I muſt obſerve that M. de Tillemont did not make a right uſe of his Judgment, when he undertook to invalidate the formal Teſtimony of Pliny the younger, by looſe and uncertain Conſequences. Let us ſtick to the Teſtimony of one of the moſt honeſt Men of that time. It were in vain to ſay that he beſtowed this Encomium upon Suetonius in a Letter wherein he beg'd a Favour of him. I know that in ſuch Caſes 'tis a common thing to uſe Flattery; but Pliny affirms in the ſame Letter, that he and Suetonius had contracted a ſtrict Friendſhip long before: It was not a Lie; for the Truth of it appears from ſome other Letters of Pliny. This great Friendſhip and Familiarity between Suetonius and Pliny had not laſted long, if Suetonius had not been ſuch a Man as Pliny repreſents him to be. I add that there is no Author extant that reflects in the leaſt upon Suetonius's Virtue; for we muſt not mind what Domitius Calderinus a great Romanceer, ſays. Read this Paſſage: (i) Siniſteriora quædam de Suetonii moribus conſectatur, Marii, neſcio cujus, teſtimonium citans. Nos enim adoleſcenteis ipſum meminimus audire Domitium, cum diceret habere ſe peculiarem Marii Ruſtici librum, quem cæteris incognitum ſecum de Gallia attuliſſet, qui tamen codex, ne extincto quidem illo, nunquam comparuit. Atque ego quidem ſtudio incogniti mihi ſcriptoris incenſus, etiam ad ipſius Domitii parentis Benaci lacus accolas acceſſi, omnemque ejus librorum ſupellectilem ſcrutatus, Marium certe hunc ruſticum inveni nuſquam.

I ſhall inſert in this place La Mothe le Vayer's Reflection upon Muretus's Invective. "(k) It "were to be wiſh'd, ſays Muretus, we had not "been informed of ſo many Debaucheries and "horrid Vices of Tiberius, Nero and Caligula; "and, if what an ancient Author ſays be true, "(3) that there is but little difference between "thoſe who carefully deſcribe ſuch things, and "thoſe who teach 'em; we can hardly excuſe "Suetonius for taking ſuch a Method .... (l) "But becauſe I have anſwered ſuch like Objections in ſome other Sections, I ſhall only ſay, "that there will hardly be any Hiſtorian free "from guilt, if it be a Crime to mention wicked "Actions, which make up the greateſt, and often the moſt conſiderable Part of his Narration. Nay, don't we read of Parricides, Inceſts, Idolatries, and a thouſand Profanations "in the Sacred Hiſtory, among good Examples "and holy Inſtructions?" It is a difficult thing to make a good Anſwer to that Remark; and I wou'd fain know what the ſcrupulous Tillemont wou'd have ſaid againſt it. Doubtleſs he wou'd have alledg'd ſpecious things; but it might have been infer'd from them, that the moſt ancient Hiſtorian, and the moſt knowing, ſince he wrote by Inſpiration, ſhou'd not have mention'd the Daughters of Loth. It might alſo be infer'd from the Reaſons alledged by that Author, that Hiſtory in general the Vivacity and Strength of the Deſcription that Latin Hiſtorian gives us of the Emperors Debauchery. I muſt not (F) forget Moreri's Miſtakes.

(b) Eraſm. Ep. Dedic. Suetonii, Dionis Caſſii, Spartiani, Capitolini, Lampridii, &c. He dedicated that Work to Frederick Elect. of Saxony, and to Prince George, Couſin to that Elect. The Epiſtle Dedicatory is dated from Antwerp the 5th of June 1517

(c) Eum etiam qui Tranquilli librum vitam Caligulæ continentem legerat, feris objici juſſit, quia eundem diem natalis habuerat quem & Caligula. Lamprid. in Commodo, cap. 10.

(d) Politian. ubi ſupra fol. 5. B.

(e) It ſhou'd be Iſmenias.

(1) Voſſ. h. lat. l. 1. c. 31. p. 156.

(f) Tillemont ubi ſupra pag. 488.

(2) Ruald. v. Plut. c. 28. p. 51. 2.

(g) Tillem. Ib. p. 486. Theſe are Pliny's Words, Ep. 95. lib. 10 Suetonium Tranquillum, probiſſimum, honeſtiſſimum, erudítiſſimum virum, & mores ejus ſequutus & ſtudia, jampridem, domine, in contubernium adſumſi: tantoque magis diligere cœpi, quanto hunc propius inſpexi.

(i) Politian. ubi ſupra.

(k) La Mothe le Vayer, Jugemens ſur les principaux Hiſtoriens pag. 230. of the 3d Volume of his Works in 12s.

(3) Parum abeſt a docente qui talia narrat.

(l) Id. Ib. pag. 230.

SULACHA ‖ (Simon) a Neſtorian Monk, of the Order of St. Pacomus, withdrew his Obedience to his Patriarch, and united himſelf to the Church of Rome. Thoſe, who ſhook off the Yoke, as he did, made him their Patriarch, and ſent him to Rome, where Pope Julius III. confirm'd his Patriarchate † in 1552. Sulacha made his Confeſſion of Faith at Rome, which was Tranſlated into Latin by Maſius, with the Letter thoſe Neſtorians writ to Julius III, to deſire him to confirm the Election of Sulacha, and to ask his Protection againſt a Family, which had kept the Patriarchate a long time *. This was the Subject of their Diviſion: Many of 'em cou'd not endure that this Dignity ſhou'd always remain in one Family; and that Family, which had enjoy'd it above two hundred years, wou'd not reſign it. Simon Sulacha being return'd into the Eaſt, eſtabliſhed his Patriarchal See at Caramit, a Town of Meſopotamia, took the Title of Patriarch of the Aſſyrians, and ordained many Biſhops and Archbiſhops. The Turks put him to Death at the Solicitation of the Schiſmaticks. They Elected for his Succeſſor a Monk of St. Pacomus, whoſe Name was ‡ Hebed-Jeſu. I have mentioned him under that Name, and that of Abdiſſi: See thoſe Articles. Fra-Paolo † intimates that the Court of Rome out of Policy, made a great Noiſe of that Embaſſy of the Neſtorians, to keep up their Reputation ral ought to be condemn'd, and that the Tryal of the Lady de Brinvilliers ſhou'd not have been publiſh'd at Paris; and that the Relations of Conſpiracies ſhou'd not be made publick, becauſe one may learn from them the Art of Plotting, and avoiding the wrong Meaſures, which made that of the Pazzi, and many others Miſcarry.

(F) Moreri's Miſtakes.] I. Suetonius's Father was not Tribune of the third Legion, but of the thirteenth. II. The Title of Secretary of State is too great for Suetonius; 'tis not at all likely he ever had ſuch an Imployment: doubtleſs his Office was like that of thoſe, who are now call'd Secretaries of the Cloſet. Spartianus calls him (b) Magiſtrum Epiſtolarum, according to the Style of his Time, if we believe the Learned Gutherius, who maintains (c) that the Magiſterium Epiſtolarum was not appointed till after Hadrian's Empire. III. Moreri ſhou'd not have ſaid that Suetonius loſt his Place by reaſon of ſome Privacies he had with the Empreſs Sabina. That Expreſſion does too clearly imply a Notion of Gallantry, which does not appear in the Words of Spartianus, the only Author who informs us of Suetonius's being put out of Favour. We have ſeen (d) above how he expreſſes himſelf. Moreri (e) quotes him, after having ſaid, that the Emperor Hadrian diſcovered ſome Love Intrigues of Sabina, and cauſed her to be poiſoned. 'Tis not true that Spartianus ſays all this; and he is ſo far from giving to underſtand that thoſe, who loſt their Places, had been in Love with the Empreſs, that he clearly ſhews they had treated her with Contempt. Salmaſius juſtly wonders (f) that theſe Words Injuſſu ejus have not been minded, whereby it appears that thoſe Men were turn'd out of their Offices, becauſe they had behaved themſelves too Haughtily and too Familiarly with the Empreſs without Hadrian's Order. If they had been guilty of ſome Love Intrigues, the Hiſtorian wou'd not have ſaid Injuſſu ejus; for it were a very impertinent thing to ſay, that the Emperor deprived the Prefect of the Prætorium, Suetonius and many others, of their Offices, becauſe they had ſome Love Intrigues with Sabina without his Order. Were it not a Piece of Extravagance to ſuppoſe that he gave ſuch Orders upon ſome Occaſions? Don't tell me that on the other Hand it were an extravagant thing to ſuppoſe that he ordered ſometimes his Miniſters to uſe Sabina uncivilly; this Suppoſition is very well grounded. We know that he uſed his (g) Wife as if ſhe had been a Servant Maid; from whence it may be eaſily infer'd that he allowed his Officers to uſe her hardly and very uncivilly. But this Permiſſion was not unlimited; he did not always permit ſuch an Uſage, ſome Perſons were only allowed to treat the Empreſs in that manner, and he told them how far that Permiſſion might go. Thoſe who loſt their Places did not keep within thoſe Bounds; which is the Reaſon why the Hiſtorian made uſe of the Words Injuſſu ejus, which ſhew the true Cauſe of their Diſgrace, and at the ſame time remove all Suſpicion of Gallantry. Salmaſius (h) perfectly unfolds this little Myſtery. What he ſays againſt thoſe, who find ſome Love Intrigues in the matter, might have been confirm'd by a Reaſon, which he did not think of. Spartianus adds immediately after, that Sabina wou'd have been divorced for her ill Humour, if her Husband had been a private Perſon. (i) Uxorem etiam ut moroſam & aſperam dimiſſurus (ut ipſe dicebat) ſi privatus fuiſſet. He does not ſay one Word of her Unfaithfulneſs, and (k) Gallantry. From whence I conclude that the deprived Officers were only guilty of a blunt Proceeding towards Sabina in her ill Humour. Her Vexation made her peeviſh and intolerable; but becauſe the Officers of the Court knew that the Emperor diſpiſed her, and did not much care ſhe ſhou'd be reſpected, they ſcolded at her in their turn, and went ſo far in it without the Prince's Approbation, that they loſt his Favour. The other Particular, mentioned by Moreri, for which he quotes Spartianus, is really to be found in ſome manner in that Author. (l) Sabina uxor non ſine fabula veneni dati ab Adriano defuncta eſt: That is, Sabina died, not without a Report that ſhe had been poiſoned by Hadrian. Nevertheleſs Moreri is miſtaken; for he will have it that the diſcovery of Sabina's Gallantry was the Cauſe of her being Poiſon'd; which wou'd be very falſe, tho' we ſhou'd grant him that ſome Love Intrigues were diſcover'd when Suetonius was put out of Favour. There were 16 Years (m) between the depriving of that Secretary, and the Death of the Empreſs.

I ſhall further Examine Moreri's Narrative. "That Diſgrace, ſays he, put Suetonius upon "Writing for the Publick; he compos'd the "Lives of the twelve Cæſars . . . . Pliny the "younger deſired him to put off no longer the "Publication of that Work, and told him he "found it ſo perfect that the further poliſhing of "it did but ſpoil it." There are many Faults in thoſe Words. IV. It cannot be proved that Suetonius's Diſgrace inſpired him with the Deſire of Writing for the Publick. V. And therefore 'tis a great Piece of Raſhneſs to ſay in expreſs Words, that it moved him to write the Hiſtory of the twelve Emperors; for ſince he compoſed many Books, he might have writ when he was out of Favour, and it cannot be concluded that he wrote preciſely a certain Book. VI. No body knows what Books Pliny the younger deſired him to publiſh. Why then does Moreri affirm that he deſired him to publiſh the Twelve Cæſars? VII. It cannot be ſaid, without helping the Matter, that he found 'em perfect. Which ſuppoſes that he declared he had read 'em; but this Suppoſition does not well agree with theſe Words: (o) Patere, me videre titulum tuum; patere audire, deſcribi, legi, venire volumina Tranquilli mei. 'Tis ‖ See the Remark A in the Article Hebed-Jeſu.

---

† Petrus Strozza de dogmate Caldeor. apud Aubert. Miræum. Pol. Eccl. l. 2. cap. 5.

* See the Hiſt. critique du Levant, by the Sieur de Mony, chap. 7.

‡ Strozza apud Miræum Ib.

† Hiſt. du Concile de Trente, B. 5. at the Beginning.

(b) Spartian. in Adriano cap. 11. p. m. 102.

(c) Gutherius de officiis domus Auguſtæ l. 3. cap. 4. p. m. 438.

(d) In the Remark B.

(e) Upon the Word Sabina.

(f) Qui impudicam familiaritatem intelligunt, nae illi multum falluntur. Ne tale quicquam cogitarent, poterat per illas duas voces fieri, Injuſſu ejus, ſi diligentius paulo attendiſſent. Salmaſ. in Spart. Adr. cap. 11. p. m. 102.

(g) Hujus uxor Sabina dum prope ſervilibus injuriis afficitur ad mortem voluntariam compulſa eſt. Aur. Victor in Adriano.

(h) Salmaſ. ubi ſupra.

(i) Spart. ubi ſupra.

(k) This may ſerve to confute the fabulous Stories publiſh'd by Brantome againſt Sabina in the 1ſt. Volume of his Dames Galantes, pag. 118.

(l) Id. Spart. Ib. cap. 24. pag. 204.

(m) See Tillemont ubi ſupra pag. 418, & 450.

(o) Plin. Ep. 11. l. 5.

Reputation in Europe with Chimera's. I ſhall ſet down in a Remark what (Z) that Hiſtorian ſays.

SULPICIA, or SULPITIA, a Roman Lady, Daughter of Sulpicius Paterculus, and Wife of Fulvius Flaccus, obtain'd a very great Honour, when it was thought fit to ſeek out a Remedy againſt the Lewdneſs that was obſerved among the Women of Rome. The Evil appeared ſo great that Recourſe was had to the Aſſiſtance of Heaven, and to thoſe Religious Helps, which ſupply the want of human Means. The Books of the Sibyls were conſulted, and upon the Report of the Conſultors it was Decreed by the Senate that a Statue ſhou'd be conſecrated (A) to Venus Verticordia, that is, Converter of Hearts, that Women and Maids might be more eaſily reclaim'd from their lewd Practices. It was ordered that a moſt Virtuous Woman ſhou'd Conſecrate that Statue of Venus; and at firſt a hundred Women were choſen among all others, and then ten out of that hundred, and all of 'em unanimouſly nominated Sulpicia to perform that Function: So that this Lady was acknowledged to be the moſt Chaſt of all †. I ſhall true he had been ſaying what Moreri quotes, Perfectum opus abſolutumque eſt; nec jam ſplendeſcit lima, ſed atteritur. But how do we know but he ſaid ſo like a Friend? VIII. However it be, were it true that Suetonius did not write the Lives of the twelve Cæſars till he was turn'd out of Favour, Pliny the younger cou'd not have complain'd (p) of his Slowneſs in publiſhing them; for doubtleſs he writ that Letter to him under the Empire of Trajan. But Suetonius did not loſe his Place till the 4th or 5th Year of Hadrian's Reign. IX. Inſtead of Sicco Polemon, Moreri ſhou'd have ſaid Sicco Polenton.

Some (q) of theſe Miſtakes of Moreri have been committed by La Mothe le Vayer, in his Judgment upon the chief Hiſtorians. I wonder at it; for he was a much more Learned Man than Moreri, and had been directed in that Work by Meſſieurs du Puy, and had the Aſſiſtance (r) of four great Libraries, the King's, Thuanus's, their own, and that of Cardinal Mazarin. With ſuch Helps he might have writ an excellent Book, and even avoided thoſe four Miſtakes without 'em.

(Z) What that Hiſtorian ſays.] We find in his (a) Work that the Pope received with great Magnificence the Patriarch ſent to him by all the Churches between Euphrates and the Indies; that he cauſed him to be conſecrated Biſhop; that he gave him the Pallium with his own Hands in a private Conſiſtory; that he ſent him back into his Country, and had him accompanied by ſome Monks who underſtood Syriack; that at Rome, and all over Italy, the only Talk was about the vaſt Number of Chriſtians that were in that Country, and the great Acquiſitions the Holy See had made in it; that People diſcourſed particularly of the great Number of Churches (b) at Muzal, a Town which was ſaid to be the Ancient Aſſur, ſituate upon the Tigris, not far from Nineve; that they reckon'd the moſt famous Towns under the Juriſdiction of that Patriarch, ſuch as Babylon, Tauris, Arbela where Darius was overcome by Alexander, Ecbatana, call'd by others Seleucia and Niſibis, and many Provinces of Aſſyria and Perſia . . . . that all thoſe things were printed and read with great Curioſity. There was doubtleſs more Oſtentation than Truth in the Matter; and it was a good Piece of Policy to make the Names of thoſe famous Cities ſound ſo high.

(A) That a Statue ſhou'd be conſecrated to Venus Verticordia.] This Particular is to be found in many Authors, but in none with ſo many Circumſtances as in Valerius Maximus, Merito, ſays he (c), virorum commemorationi Sulpitia, Ser. Paterculi filia, Q. Fulvii Flacci uxor, adjicitur. Quæ, cum ſenatus libris Sibyllinis per decemviros inſpectis cenſuiſſet, ut Veneris Verticordiæ ſimulachrum conſecraretur, quo facilius virginum mulierumque mentes à libidine ad pudicitiam converterentur; & ex omnibus matronis centum, ex centum autem decem ſorte ducta, de ſanctiſſima fœmina judicium facerent, cunctis caſtitate prælata eſt. Pliny ſays the ſame in fewer Words, only he does not mention the Cauſe of that Conſecration, nor the Epithet of Venus. (d) Pudiciſſima femina ſemel, matronarum ſententia, judicata eſt Sulpicia Paterculi filia, uxor Fulvii Flacci: electa ex centum (e) præceptis, quæ ſimulacrum Veneris ex Sibyllinis libris dedicaret. Solinus (f) tranſcribes Pliny, as he uſes to do. Ovid ſays nothing of our Sulpicia, and inſtead of a Statue, he pretends that a Temple was built to Venus Verticordia. He does not forget the Cauſe of that new Devotion; he ſays in expreſs Words that it was occaſion'd by the Loſs of Chaſtity.

Roma (g) pudicitia proavorum tempore lapſa eſt:
Cumæam, veteres, conſuluiſtis anum.
Templa jubet Veneri fieri: quibus ordine factis,
Inde Venus verſo nomina corde tenet.

He is to blame for not doing to Sulpicia the Honour ſhe deſerved. The Glory ſhe acquired then, is ſo great, that he ſhou'd not have been ſilent about it. The other Ladies acknowledged that ſhe ſurpaſt them in Chaſtity. Such an Acknowledgement is as glorious to her, as it wou'd be for a brave Man, if a hundred brave Men ſhou'd confeſs that he has more Courage than they. It is a rare thing, ſays Martial (h), to ſee any body that is willing to yield to others in point of Wit. But 'tis ſtill more rare among Soldiers to find any that will yield to another in Point of Bravery: Nay, Compliments are very ſcarce upon that Head; and in general an honeſt Man will ſeldom acknowledge that he has leſs Honeſty than another, and a Virtuous Woman that ſhe is leſs Chaſte than others. Such a Civility is as rare among virtuous Women, as 'tis among gallant Women to acknowledge that their Rivals exceed them in Beauty. However, civil Words and Compliments are far from being look'd upon as judicial and ſolemn Acknowledgments; for if the Queſtion was to chuſe for an honourable Function, appointed by the Magiſtrates, the moſt honeſt Woman or the moſt honeſt Man in a Town, none wou'd be willing that others ſhou'd take Advantage of the Compliments they might have made 'em. Every body wou'd revoke them, and enjoy the Freedom of his Judgment, and would think it a very hard thing publickly to acknowledge, that he is leſs Worthy of being choſen for the appointed Function; and therefore Sulpicia's Virtue muſt needs have been very Shining, ſince a hundred Roman Ladies voted for her upon ſuch an Occaſion. But perhaps it ought to be ſuppoſed that the Senate ordered that no Lady ſhou'd Vote for her ſelf. The Circumſtances of this Fact are not clearly deſcribed by Authors. Their Meaning ſeems to be that a hundred Roman Ladies were firſt of all choſen by Lots, and then that ten of 'em were likewiſe choſen in the ſame Manner, and that all of 'em Acknowledged that Sulpicia deſerved to conſecrate the Statue. The Management of that Affair ſeems to me intricate; for why did they caſt Lots twice, if they had a Mind that the hundred Ladies ſhou'd Vote? I had rather ſay that a hundred Women of the beſt Reputation were firſt of all ſet apart, and then they drew Lots, that ten of 'em ſhou'd Name the Woman, who was to conſecrate the Statue, and it was ordered that none ſhou'd Name her ſelf. Thus Sulpicia by the Votes of ten Ladies was preferr'd to a hundred Women of the beſt Reputation

---

† Taken from Valerius Maximus l. 8. c. 15. You'll find his Words in the Remark A.

(p) Sum & ipſe in edendo hæſitator, tu mora tamen meam quoque cunctationem tarditatemque viciſti. Id. Ib.

(q) The 2d the 3d, the 4th, & the 5th. Moreri had 'em from him.

(r) La Mothe le Vayer's Preface to his Jugement ſur les principaux Hiſtoriens.

(a) Fra-Paolo, Hiſtoire du Concile de Trente, B. 5. at the Beginning.

(b) The Confeſſion of Faith of that Patriarch mentions 18, whereof 15 were poſſeſt by the Neſtorians, and 3 by the Jacobites. Amelot de la Houſſaye, in his Tranſlation of Fra-Paolo, Ib.

(c) Valer. Maximus l. 8. c. 15. n. 12. p. m. 738.

(d) Plin. l. 7. c. 35. p. m. 56.

(e) That is, who had been already choſen. Read præceptis, and not præcipuis as there is in moſt Edit. See Salmaſius in Solinum p. 54, and Father Hardouin in Plin. tom. 2. pag. 56, and 124.

(f) Solin. c. 1. p. m. 12.

(g) Ovid. Faſtor. l. 4. p. m. 74.

(h) Aurum & opes & rura frequens donabit amicus: Qui velit ingenio cedere rarus erit. Mart. Epig. 18. l. 8.

I ſhall Inquire into the Date of this (B) Fact; it has been too much neglected by Authors.

SULPITIUS (John) Surnamed Verulanus, becauſe, if I am not miſtaken, he was a Native of * Verulam, a Town in the Campania di Roma, applied himſelf to the Study of Philology with a good Succeſs. He flouriſh'd towards the End of the XVth Century. His Commentary upon Lucan's Pharſalia was pretty good for that time. He publiſhed Vegetius with two ‡ other Tracts de re militari: He alſo publiſhed ſome Latin Verſes de moribus, and Præludia Grammatica. I think he ought not to be diſtinguiſh'd from Sulpitius, who Taught in the College of Rome, under the Pontificate of Innocent VIII, and who began to reſtore the Uſe of (A) Muſick upon the Stage; ſo that he may be look'd upon as the firſt Author of Opera's. He is alſo the firſt who publiſhed Vitruvius.

* Veroli in Italian.

‡ Ælian & Frontini. See Geſner's Biblioth. fol. 457.

SURENA, General of the Parthians in the War againſt the Romans, commanded by Craſſus in the year of Rome 701, * was for Wealth, Family and Authority, the Second Man in the Kingdom, but for Courage and Prowefs he was the firſt; neither was any one ſo large ſized, or ſo well ſhaped. Whenever he travelled alone he had a thouſand Camels to carry his Baggage, two hundred Chariots full of Concubines, a thouſand completly arm'd Men for his Life-Guards, and a great many more light-arm'd, and at leaſt ten thouſand of his Servants and Retinue. And the Honour had long belonged to his Family, that at the King's Coronation he put the Crown upon his Head; and when this very King Orodes had been exiled, he brought him in: 'twas he that took the great City of Seleucia, was the firſt Man that ſealed the Walls, and with his own Hand beat off the Defendants; and tho' at that time he was not above thirty Years old, he was counted Wiſe and Diſcreet: wherein he had much the advantage of Craſſus, who was eaſy to be impoſed upon, firſt through his overweening Confidence, and afterwards becauſe he was daſtarded and cow'd by his Calamities. Many Stratagems were uſed againſt the Romans, and beſides, the Parthians fought with great Vigour. † Surena was the the talleſt and comelieſt Man himſelf. And the Sweetneſs of his Looks, and

* Plutarch in Craſſo.

† Id. Ib.

tion in the City; and yet none did formally declare that ſhe was leſs Chaſte than Sulpicia. It had been a hard thing to require ſuch an Acknowledgement in ſuch a Conjuncture.

Perhaps it will be ſaid that the Senate did not make a right Application; for, according to the Doctrine of the Heathens, Venus equally preſided over unlawful and lawful Love, and ſhe had occaſion'd the prodigious Lewdneſs they intended to put a ſtop to. This Objection is of no weight: The Senate knew very well what they did, and for this very Reaſon that Venus had occaſioned ſuch a Diſorder, 'twas neceſſary to have Recourſe to her; for, according to Cato's Maxim (i), thoſe who are the Cauſe of great Evils, ought to put an end to them. The Senate might expect that Venus being appeaſed by the Conſecration of that new Statue, and acknowledged to be the Miſtreſs of Hearts, wou'd reclaim the fair Sex, either by ceaſing to Inſpire them with Love, or by fixing it on lawful Objects. The firſt Method is not amiſs; for how many People may uſe the Complaint we read in an Opera?

My Heart had been all along Innocent,
Had it not been for Love.

The ſecond Method is a very good one: the Senate might have told Venus; Inſpire them with Love, we are not againſt it; but let their Love be Lawful. Reclaim them from their ill Courſes; bring 'em back into the right Way. They are like Rivers that run out of their Channels, and overflow the Country; let thoſe Waters return into their Channel; this we beg of you, as you are the Goddeſs Verticordia, Converter of Hearts.

I have read in Pauſanias, that Harmonia, Cadmus's Wife, conſecrated three Statues to Venus at Thebes; the firſt to Venus Urania; the ſecond to Venus Pandemos, and the third to Venus Apoſtrophia. The firſt was for Spiritual Love, the ſecond for Bodily Love, and the third was deſign'd to prevent extravagant Conjunctions, ſuch as Inceſt, &c. (a) Ἔθετο δὲ τῇ Ἀφροδίτῃ τὰς ἐπωνυμίας ἡ Ἁρμονία. τὴν μὲν Οὐρανίαν ἐπὶ ἔρωτι καθαρῷ, καὶ ἀπηλλαγμένῳ πόθου σωμάτων· Πάνδημον δὲ, ἐπὶ ταῖς μίξεσι· τρίτην δὲ Ἀποστροφίαν, ἵνα ἐπιθυμίας τε ἀνόμου καὶ ἔργων ἀνοσίων ἀποστρέφῃ τὸ γένος τῶν ἀνθρώπων. Cognomina impoſuit Harmonia Urania, purum ſignificans, & corporum cupiditate vacantem amorem: Popularis, ob Venerios congreſſus: jam vero Apoſtrophia numen coli inſtituit (id eſt Averſatricis) quo ab exlege cupiditate & inceſtis ſtupris hominum genus averteret. The Romans might have learn'd of other Nations to Honour Venus under the Title of Verticordia; for there is no great difference between this Title and that of Apoſtrophia: one implies the Notion of a Converter, and the other that of a Diſſuader, if I may be allow'd to uſe ſuch a Word.

(B) I ſhall Inquire into the Date of this Fact.] The ancient Authors do continually afford new occaſions of complaining of their negligence in Chronology. Tho' you examine the Words of Ovid, Valerius Maximus, Pliny and Solinus, never ſo narrowly, you'll find nothing in them, whereby you may know at what time the Conſecration of that Statue was performed. It may be known from Julius Obſequens (b), who mentions a certain Prodigy, which happen'd under the Conſulſhip of Marcus Acilius and Caius Portius, that is, according to Sigonius's Faſti, in the Year of Rome 639. The Daughter of a Roman Knight was thunder-ſtruck, and it was found that her Tongue was gone through that part of her Body not proper to be nam'd. The Soothſayers were conſulted; their Anſwer was, that the Maids and the (c) Knights were threatened with Infamy: which proved true; for three Veſtals, who had Love Intrigues with ſome Roman Knights, were puniſh'd at the ſame time. It was then that a Temple was built to Venus Verticordia (d). Note, that from the Year of Rome 539, till Julius Cæſar made himſelf Maſter of the Commonwealth, the Corruption of Manners, and particularly Luxury, increaſed more and more; and therefore the Statue Conſecrated by Chaſt Sulpicia, did no good. See the Margin (‡).

(A) Who began to reſtore the uſe of Muſick upon the Stage.] I ingenuouſly confeſs that I ſhould be Ignorant of this Particular, had I not read it in a Book of the Jeſuit Menetrier. I ſhall ſet down the whole Paſſage. " (e) Thoſe Remains of Dra-" matick Muſick, which had been preſerv'd " in the Church, ſerved to reſtore it two hun-" dred Years ago; and Rome, which had in a " manner loſt it, to beſtow upon the Recitation " and Declamation of Actors, whilſt the Grecians " beſtowed

WHETHER it was a proper Thing to make one's Application to Venus in order to put a ſtop to Lewdneſs.

(i) Τῶν ... αὐτῶν εἶναι καὶ παύειν τὰ μεγάλα κακὰ καὶ ποιεῖν. Illum eorundem eſſe & facere magna mala & comprimere. Plutarch. in Catone Minore p. 784. D.

(a) Pauſan. l. 9. c. 16. p. 742.

(b) Julius Obſequens in libro de prodigiis. n. 97. p. m. 51.

(c) 'Tis to be obſerved that this Maid was on Horſeback when ſhe was thunder ſtruck.

(d) Tres uno tempore virgines Veſtales nobiliſſimæ, cum aliquot equitibus Romanis, inceſti pœnas ſubierunt. Ædes Veneri Verticordiæ facta. Id. Ib.

(‡) The Evil grew worſe and worſe ſince Cæſar, inſtead of growing leſs. See what I quote out of Seneca in the Remark H. of the Article Vayer.

(e) Menetrier, des repreſentations en Muſique, pag. 155, 156. That Book was printed at Paris in 1681.

and Effeminacy of his Habit, could not promiſe ſo much Manhood, as he really was Maſter of; for his (A) Face was painted, and his Hair parted, after the Faſhion of the Medes, whereas the other Parthians look'd more terrible, with their Hair ſhaggy, after the Scythian Mode. The Succeſs of the Battle was glorious to him; but he caſt a Blot upon

" beſtowed upon Singing and Harmony, brought " it upon the Stage towards the Year 1480, as I " find it in the Epiſtle Dedicatory of Sulpitius, " prefixed to his Notes upon Vitruvius, which " preſented to Cardinal Riari, Great Chamberlain " of the Church, and Nephew of Pope Sixtus IV. " . . . . Sulpitius praiſing the Magnificence of that " Cardinal, who had built ſtately Palaces in and " about Rome, begs of him that he wou'd ſet up " publick Theaters for Muſical Repreſentations, " of which he calls himſelf the Reſtorer, having " ſhown at Rome a few Years ſince, what had " not been in uſe there for many Ages. He tells " the Cardinal in that Epiſtle, that Rome expects " from him a Theater for ſuch Performances, " becauſe he has already given ſuch an Enter" tainment to the People upon a moveable Thea" ter, ſet up in a publick Place, and at other " times in the Caſtle of St. Angelo for the Pope's " Diverſion, and in his Palace for ſome Cardi" nals. Tu enim primus Tragœdiæ quam nos juven" tutem excitandi gratiâ & AGERE & CANTARE " primi hoc ævo docuimus, (nam ejuſmodi actionem " jam multis ſeculis Roma non viderat) in medio " foro pulpitum ad quinque pedum altitudinem erectum " pulcherrimè exornaſti. Eamdemque poſtquàm in " Hadriani mole Divo Innocentio ſpectante eſt acta, " rurſus intrà tuos penates tamquam in media Circi " caveâ toto conſeſſu, umbraculis tecto admiſſo popu" lo, & pluribus tui ordinis ſpectatoribus honorificè " excepiſti. Tu etiam primus picturatæ ſcenæ faciem, " quùm Pomponiani (f) comœdiam agerent noſtro " ſæculo oſtendiſti: quare à te Theatrum novum tota " urbs magnis votis expectat." Father Menetrier is miſtaken, when he ſays that this Latin Paſſage is taken from the Epiſtle Dedicatory of Sulpitius's Notes upon Vitruvius. M. du Francaſtel, Keeper of the Mazarin Library, has been pleaſed to inform me of ſome things relating to the Book, wherein that Epiſtle Dedicatory is to be found: 'tis a Vitruvius (g) without any Notes upon the Text, and without any various Readings. It is not Paged and has no Signatures. Neither the Time nor the Place of the Impreſſion, nor the Printer's Name, are to be found in it. There is no Date in the Advertiſment to the Reader, nor in the Epiſtle Dedicatory. That Advertiſment contains theſe Words, among other things: Jo. Sulpitius Lectori ſalutem . . . . Collatis multis id genus libris & imprimis uno noſtri Delii manu ſatis accurate perſcripto, eum mihi laborem aſſumpſi ut quantum per plurimas occupationes meas fieri poſſet, redderem unum imprimendorum archetypum adeo emendatum, ut parvus labor cuivis alteri ejuſdem rei ſtudioſo relinqueretur. Quod ſi fidelis ut ſpero librarius fuerit & cum his impreſſis ſcripti calamis conferentur, facile fides noſtra & diligentia apparebit . . . . Primus hoc in ſtadio curro & ad certamen via jam liberaliter ſtrata reliquos inter ſe excito. The Epiſtle Dedicatory begins thus. Raphaeli Riario Cardinali Sanctæque Ro. Eccleſiæ Camerario, Jo. Sulpitius fœlicitatem. Quidquid curæ, ſtudii, vigiliarum & operæ in emendando & vulgando Vitruvio poſui . . . . tuæ dedico amplitudini. Then follows the Paſſage quoted by Father Menetrier. This Edition of Vitruvius did not come out in the Year 1480; for it was publiſh'd under the Pontificate of Innocent VIII, who reign'd from the Year 1484, till 1492. Here follow ſome Words of the Epiſtle Dedicatory, whereby it appears that it was written towards the laſt Years of that Pontificate. Innocentius impoſito bellis fine, Prætorio ſuburbano peracto, agilitatis certaminibus & equitum concurſionibus, dotalibuſque & ſumptuariis legibus revocatis. . . . Tum floræ campus, tum Circus Flaminius lateribus aptiſſime ſternitur . . . . de Gymnaſio noſtro evertendo & magnifice conſtruendo (quod utinam præoccupaſſes: ibi enim cotidiana omnium diſciplinarum eduntur ſpectacula) prudentiſſimi Reformatores jam iniere conſilium (h).

From what has been ſaid, I conclude that Father Menetrier does not well deſcribe this Work of Sulpitius; for he ſays they are Notes upon Vitruvius publiſh'd about the Year 148[illegible].

Note that this Edition of Vitruvius is little known. The Reader will be convinced of it by this Extract of a Letter, which M. du Francaſtel has done me the Honour to write to me. I inſert it here the more willingly, becauſe I am ſure that thoſe, who love the Hiſtory of Books, will find it very Curious. " (a) To be better in" form'd of the matter, I have read all the Pre" faces, the Epiſtles Dedicatory, and other Pro" legomena, prefix'd to the Vitruvius's of the " Mazarin Library, that have been printed " with and without Commentaries, in Latin, " Italian and French. 'Tis a ſurprizing thing " that none of 'em mentions this Jo. Sulpitius " nor his Edition, which muſt needs be the " firſt. Nay moſt Commentators and Editors " pretend to be the firſt who have gone about it. " M. Perrault, who in the Preface to his French " Tranſlation of Vitruvius, mentions the Names " of thoſe who have publiſh'd, tranſlated, or " commented upon that Author, ſays nothing of " Sulpitius. I have ſeen the Editions of Jocundus, " Philander, Daniel Barbarus, Ceſariano and Caparoli, beſides that of M. Perrault, which are " in our Library. I have found out another " thing concerning one Hiero. Advocatus Am" broſii JCti. F. 'Tis in a Letter of Joannes Bri" tannicus Brixianus, to that Advocatus, wherein " he ſpeaks to him thus. Fuiſti tuâ induſtria, " ſtudio & labore ut Vitruvius de architectura, qui " jam tot ſæculis in lucem caput ſuum proferre non " audebat, qui ex omni parte mancus, lacerus, mu" tilatum ſe ſentiebat, nunc politus, purus, integer " huc & illuc geſtiat meare, omnibus carus occurrat, " omnibus gratus excipiatur. . . . . That Letter is " printed at Venice in 1493. Having read the " Vitruvius's, without finding any thing in them, " whereby one may know who was this Jo. Sulpi" tius, I thought that if I ſhould read all the " Prefaces, &c. of Verulanus's Works, that are " in our Library, I might diſcover ſomething in " them, ſuppoſing he had made the Notes in " Queſtion; but it was to no purpoſe, for that " Author makes no mention of 'em in Seven or " Eight Books which I have ſeen."

(A) The Sweetneſs of his Looks, and Effeminacy of his Habit, cou'd not promiſe ſo much Manhood, as he really was Maſter of; for his Face was Painted.] Generally ſpeaking, thoſe Men, who pretend to be handſome, and who have recourſe to Art to ſet off the Luſtre of their Complexion, and who often conſult their Glaſs, that the Symmetry of their Hair and Curles may charm Women, are not fit for the War. They are meer Beaux and Sparks; the Aſſemblies of Ladies, Feaſts and Balls are the Places where they ſignalize themſelves: The Fatigue of the War does not agree with them; it requires Men who are not afraid of being Sun-burnt: Bravery does rather inſpire a Deſire of frightning the Enemy with a Martial Look, than of pleaſing Women with a foppiſh Way. But here's an Exception to that general Rule: Surena ſhews himſelf a Valiant Man in Battle, he performs all the Duties of a General, with all imaginable Vigour and Application; and yet he paints, and is very careful of his Hair. Which puts me in mind of a common Topick very contrary to Cæſar's Practice. 'Tis a common Maxim in War, that Soldiers ought not to be permitted to enjoy the Sweets of a delicious Life, that 'tis the way to enervate them and make 'em lazy; and among other Inſtances the Fault of Annibal after the Battle of Cannæ is frequently alledged. He quartered his Army in ſeveral Places, where the Soldiers uſed themſelves

to

(f) That is the Scholars of the Academy or College of Pomponius Lætus.

(g) A very ſmall folio Book.

(h) I am beholden for all theſe Paſſages to Mr. du Francaſtel keeper of the Mazarin Library

(a) This Letter of M. du Francaſtel written from Paris the [illegible] of December 1699.

upon his Glory by his Perfidiouſneſs † in demanding an Interview with Craſſus to conclude a Treaty of Peace. He was very civil to that Roman General, he gave him his Word, and aſſured him there was an Agreement concluded between the Parthians and the Romans, and that the only thing that remained to be done was to advance as far as the River to write it down. Craſſus had a mind to ſend for a Horſe, but Surena told him that it was needleſs, ſince King Orodes gave him one. Craſſus got on Horſeback, and ſoon after they to a Voluptuous Life, and Wine, Baths, good Cheer and Women deſtroyed that martial Vigour, which had made 'em ſo Formidable. The Delights of Capua were to him (b) what the Battle of Cannæ had been to the Romans. (c) In hyberna Capuam conceſſit. ibi partem majorem hyemis exercitum in tectis habuit, adverſus omnia humana mala ſæpe ac diu durantem, bonis inexpertum atque inſuetum. itaque quos nulla mali vicerat vis, perdidere nimia bona ac voluptates immodicæ: & eo impenſius, quo avidius ex inſolentia in eas ſe immerſerant. ſomnus enim & vinum, & epulæ, & ſcorta balneaque, & otium conſuetudine indies blandius, ita enervaverunt corpora animoſque, ut magis deinde præterita eos victoria quàm præſentes tutarentur vires: majuſque id peccatum ducis apud peritos artium militarium haberetur, quàm quod non ex Cannenſi acie protinus ad urbem Romam duxiſſet. illa enim cunctatio diſtuliſſe modo victoriam videri potuit: hic error vires ademiſſe ad vincendum. Itaque hercule, velut ſi cum alio exercitu à Capua exiret, nihil uſquam priſtinæ diſciplinæ tenuit, nam & redierunt plerique ſcortis implicitii: & ubi primum ſub pellibus haberi cœpti ſunt, viaque & alius militaris labor excepit, tyronum modo corporibus animiſque deficiebant: & deinde per omne æſtivorum tempus magna pars ſine commeatibus ab ſignis dilabebantur: neque aliæ latebræ quam Capua deſertoribus erant. The Maxim grounded upon ſuch Examples was neglected by Julius Cæſar; and he had no occaſion to repent that he had not followed it. He ſuffered his Soldiers to plunge themſelves into all manner of Debauchery after a great Victory, and uſed to ſay that they cou'd fight ſtoutly, even when they were perfumed. (d) Nonnunquam poſt magnam pugnam atque victoriam, remiſſo officiorum munere, licentiam omnem paſſim laſciviendi permittebat: jactare ſolitus, milites ſuos etiam unguentatos bene pugnare poſſe.

I think our Surena was one of thoſe Men, of whom I have given two Examples in the Life of Henry IV. They give up themſelves to Pleaſures, and intirely abſtain from them according to the ſeveral Junctures: they are Voluptuous and Lazy to the higheſt Degree, when there is nothing to do; and extreamly Vigilant and Laborious, when there is a Neceſſity for it. If we believe Velleius Paterculus, Mæcenas laboured very hard, when 'twas neceſſary; but when there was no preſſing Buſineſs, he gave up himſelf to idleneſs, and lived as deliciouſly as the moſt effeminate Man can do. (f) C. Mæcenas, vir ubi res vigiliam exigeret, ſane exſomnis, providens atque agendi ſciens; ſimul vero aliquid ex negotio remitti poſſet, otio ac mollitiis pæne ultra feminam fluens. What the ſame Hiſtorian ſays of Lucius Piſo, though it falls ſhort of that, may yet ſerve for an Example of the Character I here deſcribe. (g) De quo viro hoc omnibus ſentiendum ac prædicandum eſt, eſſe mores ejus vigore ac lenitate mixtiſſimos, & vix quemquam reperiri poſſe, qui aut otium validius diligat, aut facilius ſufficiat negotio, & magis, quæ agenda ſunt, curet ſine ulla oſtentatione agendi. He ſays much the ſame thing of Sentius Saturninus. (a) Virum multiplicem in virtutibus, navum, agilem, providum, militariumque officiorum patientem ac peritum pariter, ſed eundem, ubi negotia feciſſent locum otio, liberaliter lauteque eo abutentem; ita tamen, ut eum ſplendidum ac hilarem potius, quam luxurioſum aut deſidem diceres.

Tacitus mentions a General (b) of the ſame Stamp. 'Twas he who contributed moſt to raiſe Veſpaſian to the Throne. He was (c) too Voluptuous when he had nothing to do, and very Active in time of Buſineſs. See alſo what Tacitus ſays of one Criſpus Salluſtius in the 30th Chapter of the 3d Book of his Annals. Every Body knows that Demetrius was a diſſolute Man to the higheſt Degree; and yet in time of War that Prince gave over his Pleaſures, and applied himſelf entirely to his great Enterpriſes. Let's ſee how Plutarch relates the Matter. He ſays (d) that Antigonus being uncapable of the Fatigues of the War, by reaſon of his great Age and the Bulk of his Body, "committed the Management of his greateſt Affairs unto the Prince, "whoſe Conduct was very admirably dextrous "in Military Matters; and the old King was "induced to bear with thoſe exceſſive Liberties, wherein he drowned himſelf in the time "of Peace, becauſe he obſerved him to be the "moſt temperate and abſtemious Perſon in the "World, in the time of War and Action. . . . "As for Demetrius, if he devoted himſelf to "his Pleaſures and Luxury, he abandoned himſelf entirely to them; and if the Trumpet "ſounded to Horſe, he was no leſs aſſiduous "in the Fatigues of War; he was, beyond all "doubt, a very great Captain, and moſt notably "dextrous, not only in his Conduct, but in "forming his Levies, and raiſing an Army, "and in making all the neceſſary Preparations "of Stores and Magazines, the very Muſcles "and Nerves of War, which he ever took care "to provide in great abundance."

I ſhall add an Obſervation of the ſame Author, attended with a Fact relating to the Matter I treat of. "(e) Artaxerxes plainly proved that "Cowardice and Effeminacy are the Effects of "a baſe degenerous Nature, guided by erroneous Notions, and not of Niceneſs and ſuperfluous Exceſſes, as moſt Men ſuppoſe. For "notwithſtanding his Jewels of Gold, his Robe "of State, and the reſt of his coſtly Attire, "worth no leſs than twelve thouſand Talents, "with which he was conſtantly clad, his Labours and Toils were no leſs than thoſe of "the meaneſt Perſons in his Army. Nay, turning up his Horſe, with his Quiver by his "ſide, and his Shield on his Arm, he led them "through craggy and ſteep ways, inſomuch that "the other Soldiers obſerving his Chearfulneſs "and unwearied Strength, took Wing, and went "the more ſwiftly along with him, whoſe daily March was above two hundred Furlongs."

I ſhall here apply a Reflection that was made upon the Athenians. An Author who had deſcribed their Luxury and Softneſs, adds, (f) and yet they won the Battle of Marathon. One wou'd think that when the Ancients ſuppoſe that Bacchus did Wonders on the Day of the Battle with the Giants, their Deſign is to give us to underſtand that thoſe who ſeem only fit for Dancing and Amorous Sports, will nevertheleſs ſhew their Bravery in a Battle.

Tu, (g) cùm parentis regna per arduum
Cohors Gigantum ſcanderet impia,
Rhœtum retorſiſti leonis
Unguibus, horribilique malâ:
Quanquam choreis aptior, & jocis,
Ludoque dictus, non ſat idoneus
Pugnæ ferebaris: ſed idem
Pacis eras, mediuſque belli.

I will not reckon great Scipio among the Voluptuous Men, who minded important Affairs. I ſhall only ſay, that his great Cares were attended with innocent Recreations. The Rigid and Auſtere Cato did not approve of it; but he was too ſevere in his Judgment about the Difference that is between an effeminate Life and Gaiety. However it be, he openly complain'd of Scipio's Behaviour, who during the Preparations for the Expedition of Carthage, made merry in Sicily. Cato was to be his Queſtor; but he left him

† Id. ib.

...Titus ...ar all ...s pag. ...p. Fir... ...l. 2. c. 6.

...Titus ...ius l. ...p. m. ...See ...p. 77. ...where ...cellus ...urages ...Soldi... ...rs, re... ...ſenting ...them ...the ...elights ...Capua ...d ener... ...ated the ...ldiers of ...nnibal.

...Sue... ...in Ca... ...re c. 67.

...OME ...xamples ...Volup... ...ous ...en, and ...et very ...aborious.

...) Vell. Patercu... ...l. 2. c. ...

...) Id. Ib. ...p. 98.

...) Id. Ib. ... 105.

...) Lici... ...us Mu... ...anus.

...) Luxu... ...ia, in... ...ſtria, ...mitate, ...rogan... ...a, malis ...niſque ...tibus ...ixtus: ...imiæ vo... ...ptates ...m vaca... ...t: quo... ...ens ex... ...edierat ...agnæ ...rtutes. ...acit. Hiſt. ...l. c. 10.

(d) Plut. in Demetrio.

(e) Id. in Artaxerxe.

(f) Τοιοῦτοι δ' ὄντες τὴν ἐν Μαραθῶνι μάχην ἐνίκησαν. Et ejuſmodi quum eſſent, tamen à prælio Marathonio victores diſceſſerunt. Ælian. var. Hiſt. l. 4. c. 22.

(g) Horat. Od. 19. lib. 2.

they cut off his Head. This Perfidiouſneſs was attended (B) with Inſults and Deriſion: but Surena did not long enjoy the Pleaſure of the Victory; for the King of the Parthians grew Jealous of him †, and cauſed him to be put to Death.

SUS.

as ſoon as he perceived that his Remonſtrances were not acceptable to him. (h) He " return'd " from Sicily, and together with Fabius, made " a huge noiſe in the open Senate againſt Scipio's " laviſhing of unſpeakable Summs, and his childiſh loitering away his time in Wreſtling-Matches and Comedies, as if he were not to make " War, but Holiday; ſo that he cauſ'd ſome of " the Tribunes of the People to be ſent to call " him back to Rome, in caſe the Accuſations " ſhould prove true: But Scipio demonſtrating as " it were to them, an enſuing Victory, and appearing only to live pleaſantly with his Friends, " when there was nothing elſe to do, ſhewing " alſo he was not by his Liberality the more negligent in things of Conſequence and Moment, " he forthwith ſet ſail towards the War". Valerius Maximus mentions this pretended Remiſſneſs of Scipio, and ſays, among other things, that great Souls run in with greater Impetuoſity when they have been at reſt. (i) P. Scipio, cum in Sicilia augendo, trajiciendoque in Africam exercitu opportunum quærendo gradum, Carthaginis ruinam animo volveret; inter conſilia ac molitiones hujus tantæ rei operam gymnaſio dedit, palliòque & crepidis uſus eſt. Nec hac re ſegniores Punicis exercitibus manus intulit: ſed neſcio an ideo alacriores, quia vegeta & ſtrenua ingenia, quo plus receſſus ſumunt, hoc vehementiores impetus edunt. Crediderim etiam favorem eum ſociorum uberiorem ſe adepturum exiſtimaſſe, ſi victum eorum & ſolennes exercitationes comprobaſſet: Ad quas tum veniebat, cum multum ac diu fatigaſſet humeros, & cetera membra militari agitatione firmitatem ſuam probare coegiſſet, conſiſtebatque in his labor ejus, in illis remiſſio laboris. It appears from the End of this Paſſage that there was no Effeminacy in Scipio's Conduct, and that he only mixed ſome Recreation with his moſt important Cares and Labours. All great Men are not capable of ſuch a Variety; ſome deſpiſe Pleaſures, and love an uninterrupted Gravity; others, who are qualified for great Deſigns, can never be fond of Dancing and Drinking. Flaminius, one of the moſt illuſtrious Perſons of Ancient Rome, cou'd not apprehend how a Man can be capable of ſuch a Variety. Here follows what Plutarch ſays of him. " (k) At another time Dinocrates the Meſſenian, " having been Fuddled at a merry Meeting in " Rome, danc'd there in a Woman's Habit, and " the next Day addreſſed to Titus for Aſſiſtance in his Deſign to get Meſſena out of the " Achæan Hands. I ſhall (ſays he) conſider of it, " but can't but wonder that you who are enterprizing Deſigns of that Moment, can find leiſure to Revel and Sing in your Cups." Montagne makes very fine Obſervations upon the Capacity of the Soul, whereby a Man may turn his Mind ſometimes one way and ſometimes another, and is able to do things that ſeem inconſiſtent. " (a) I am well pleaſed to ſee a General of an " Army at the Foot of a Breach he deſigns to attack, talking freely at Dinner time and with " his Friends; and Brutus, againſt whom Heaven and Earth were combined, and againſt " the Roman Liberty, ſtealing ſome Hours in the " Night, as he goes the Rounds, to read Polybius. Little Souls buried under the Weight of " Affairs, know not how to extricate themſelves; " they know not how to lay them aſide, and " reaſſume them.

" - - - - ô fortes pejoraque paſſi,
" Mecum ſæpe viri, nunc vino pellite curas,
" Cras ingens iterabimus æquor."

He alledges many Examples upon that Subject.

It were to be wiſh'd that the general Rule in Queſtion were not liable to ſo many Exceptions; for a young Man well qualified for the War, who is given to Drinking, Gaming and Women, has ſomething to anſwer to thoſe who endeavour to reclaim him by Repreſenting to him the ill Conſequences of ſuch a Courſe. You'll never be able to command an Army, ſay they to him; Such an Employment is Inconſiſtent with an unſurmountable Inclination for a Voluptuous Life. Why ſo? will he ſay: Why ſhou'd not I be in time like ſo many others, who have been debauched and laborious by turns, according to the Poſture of Affairs? Surena painted, and was attended by many Concubines. Was he a worſe General for it? How many ſuch Examples does Ancient and Modern Hiſtory afford? Montgomery, who performed ſo many noble Exploits in the XVI Century, " (b) was extremely careleſs in his Office, for he " loved an eaſy Life and Gaming; but when he " was once got into the Saddle, he was the moſt " valiant and careful Captain that ever was ſeen." Many Generals avoid being ſurprized, and perform Actions that require an extreme diligence, though they love Drinking, and make long Meals; and their Enemies are often miſtaken in the Conſequences they draw from it. Granville, Biſhop of Arras, made a very imprudent Anſwer, as it appeared by the Event. It (c) was repreſented to the Emperor Charles V that Duke Maurice was not to be truſted; " (d) but Granville anſwered that there was no occaſion to " ſuſpect thoſe great Drinkers, becauſe their " Heads being always clouded with thick Vapours, were not clear enough to carry on " a nice Intrigue." Maurice made it appear that he was more cunning than the Italians and Spaniards.

A Voluptuous young Man, who conſiders the Examples I have mentioned, grows more incorrigible, and expoſes himſelf to great Inconveniencies. The beſt Way is to follow the Rule, without truſting to Exceptions.

(B) This Perfidiouſneſs was attended with Inſults and Deriſion.] Surena ſent the Head and the Hand of Craſſus to the King his Maſter; " (e) " but himſelf by his Meſſengers ſcattered a " Report, That he was bringing Craſſus alive " to Seleucia, and made a ridiculous Proceſſion, " which, by way of ſcorn, he call'd a Triumph. " For one Caius Pacianus, who of all the Priſoners was moſt like to Craſſus, being put into " the Habit of the Barbarians, and inſtructed " to take the Title of Craſſus, and Emperor, from " thoſe who ſpoke to him, was brought ſitting " upon his Horſe, but before him went a parcel of Trumpeters and Lictors upon their Camels; the Girdles and Purſes of the Romans " were hung at the end of the Bundles of Rods, " and the Heads of the Slain, freſh bleeding, " at the end of their Axes; after them followed the Seleucian Minſtrels, making abundance of ſcurrilous and abuſive Reflections " upon the Effeminacy and Cowardlineſs of " Craſſus, with a Muſical Cadence: and this " Show was ſeen by every Body. But Surena " calling together the Senate of Seleucia, ſhewed " to them a wanton Book of Ariſtides, called " his Mileſiæ; neither was this a Forgery, for " it was found amongſt the Spoils of Roſcius, " and was a good Subject for Surena to droll upon the Romans, who were not able even in " time of War to forbear ſuch wanton Writings " and Practices. But the People of Seleucia had " reaſon to commend the Wiſdom of Æſop's " Fable of the Sack, ſeeing their General Surena " carrying a Bag full of looſe Mileſian Sonnets " before him, but drawing after him a whole " Parthian Brothel-houſe, if I may ſo call it, " with ſo many Coaches full of his Wenches " which might well be compared to Vipers and " Aſps: for he reſembled that Fable, where " the Front looks Great and Terrible, with " Spears and Arrows, and Darts, and Horſemen; but the Rear conſiſted of looſe Women,

" and

---

† Id. ib. pag. 585.

(h) Plut. in Catone majore. See alſo Livy l. 29. p. m. 532.

(i) Valer. Maximus l. 3. c. 6. n. 1. pag. m. 298, 299.

(k) Plut. in Q. Flaminio.

(a) Montagne, Eſſays, B. 3. in the laſt Chapter, p. m. 595.

(b) Brantome in his Diſcourſe upon the Prince of Condé, tom. 3. of his Memoirs, p. m. [illegible]

(c) The Duke of Alva repreſented it. See Melvil infra.

(d) Melvil's Memoirs, p. 40.

(e) Plut. in Craſſ.

SUSSANNEAU (Hubert) was born at Soiſſons (A) in the Year 1514. He diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his Latin Verſes, and publiſhed ſome ‡ Grammatical Tracts, that met with a good Reception. He taught Philological Learning at Turin, before he had ß a Beard: He taught it alſo at Paris. He Styles himſelf Doctor of Law and Phyſick.

SUTCLIFFE † (Matthew) an Engliſhman, and a Proteſtant Divine, flouriſh'd towards the latter end of the XVI Century, and the beginning of the XVII. He publiſh'd many Controverſial Books, ſome in Latin, and others in Engliſh, and made it his chief Buſineſs to confute Cardinal Bellarmin. He writ alſo ſomething againſt the Presbyterians. He did not (A) put his

" and Minſtrels, and Players on Caſtanets, and " all Inſtruments of Luxury."

This Conduct of Surena plainly ſhews that the Parthians deſerved to be call'd Barbarians, as they were by the Greeks and Romans; for none but bruitiſh People, who are uncapable of Civility, will treat an Enemy in ſuch a manner, much leſs an Enemy overcome by a ſhameful Treachery. Take notice that Plutarch blames that Roſcius, who brought the lewd Books of Ariſtides to the Army. People are not now ſo rigid; and if Boccace's Novels, or La Fontaine's Tales were found in the Baggage of an Officer, no notice wou'd be taken of it. I don't think the moſt Biting and the moſt Burleſque News Writers wou'd Reflect upon him for it. Much leſs wou'd they Cenſure thoſe, who ſhou'd have a Looking-Glaſs among their things. But in Juvenal's time they were more ſevere in that Reſpect: an Emperor was laugh'd at for having a Looking-Glaſs in the Camp. 'Tis true that Glaſs did belong to a Man who painted, and by reaſon of that Circumſtance, it afforded a better occaſion for Railleries and Inſults. I am ſure the Reader will excuſe me for mentioning this Particular, ſince it concerns a Roman like Surena in that part of Effeminate Softneſs, who nevertheleſs ſhow'd (g) a great Courage; ſo that this is a new Example to be added to thoſe, which I have (h) mentioned. Juvenal does very much exclaim againſt Otho's Inequality.

Nimirum (i) ſummi ducis eſt occidere Galbam,
Et curare cutem ſummi conſtantia civis:
Bebriaci campo ſpolium affectare Palati,
Et preſſum in faciem digitis extendere panem.
Quod nec in Aſſyrio pharetrata Semiramis orbe, Mœſta nec Actiaca fecit Cleopatra carina.

The Courage Otho expreſſed, when he killed himſelf, appeared the more admirable, becauſe he took care to paint and trick up himſelf like a Woman. Read theſe Words of Suetonius. (k) Munditiarum vero pene muliebrium: vulſo corpore: galericulo capiti propter raritatem capillorum adaptato & annexo, ut nemo dignoſceret. Quin & faciem quotidie raſitare, ac pane madido linere conſuetum: idque inſtituiſſe a prima lanugine, ne barbatus unquam eſſet. Sacra etiam Iſidis ſæpe in lintea religioſaque veſte propalam celebraſſe. Per quæ factum putem ut mors ejus minime congruens vitæ, majori miraculo fuerit.

(A) Was born at Soiſſons in the Year 1514.] La Croix du Maine (l), who ſays he was born there, was better informed of the Place than of the Time of his Birth. He will have him to have flouriſh'd in the Year 1520; which is not true; for Suſſaneau ſays he was only twenty four Years of Age, in a Book publiſhed by him in 1538. He ſpeaks thus in his Poem upon the Siege of Perone.

Taurinum (m) nuper ſtudiis ignobilis oci
Juriſque & legum florebat: ubi impiger artes
Ingenuas docui, Muſarum gratus alumnis,
Tum cùm nulla genas veſtiret barba decora:
Quæ nunc in flavo pulchrè ſedet hiſpida mento,
Ad quintum quanquàm luſtrum, mihi deficit annus (1).

It appears from thoſe Verſes that he taught Philological Learning at Turin. He was ſent thither when the French had made themſelves Maſters of Piedmont in the Year 1536. He made no long ſtay in that Country: It appears from the Collection of the Latin Poems, which he publiſhed in 1538, that he had already begun again his publick Lectures upon the Æneid at Paris. This Advertiſement is to be found in the 22d Leaf.

Fixit ab Italia Luteciam reverſus.

Venit ab Italia Gallorum redditus oris
Hubertus, ſacri maxima cura chori.
Qui etas doctiloqui repetet compendia vatis,
Unde tibi Ænean Æneadaſque canit.

He obſerves, that in order to make himſelf more capable of explaining Virgil, he had been at Rome to examine the Ancient Monuments of that Place, and had ſuck'd in (ȥ) the Air of Mantua.

(A) He did not put his Name to a Book, which treats of the Conformity of Popery and the Turkiſh Religion.] He publiſhed it at London in 1604. 'Tis the Confutation of a Book printed at Antwerp (a) in 1595, and at Cologne in 1603, with this Title, Calvino-Turciſmus, id eſt, Calviniſtica perfidiæ cum Mahumetana collatio, & dilucida utriuſque ſectæ confutatio. There is hardly any Book more violent than this Calvino-Turciſmus: It was the Work of two Engliſh Catholicks, who left their Country: One of them was William Raynolds or Reginaldus, and the other William Gifford. The firſt died as he was about it; the ſecond put the laſt hand to it, and publiſhed it (b). The latter was a Prieſt, who (c) had ſeveral times encouraged ſome Aſſaſſins to kill Queen Elizabeth, and who (d) was well beloved by the Flemiſh Women. He had fled to Liſle. William Raynolds had been formerly a Miniſter (e) and expreſſed a great Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion; afterwards he turned Papiſt. He was Brother (f) of John Raynolds, Profeſſor of Divinity at Oxford, who writ excellent Books againſt the Roman Catholicks. I have mentioned in another (g) Place what is reported of theſe two Brothers, viz. that they were brought up out of their Country, John in the Church of Rome, William in the Proteſtant Religion, and that meeting together one Day, they diſputed with ſo great force, that both of 'em changed their Religion. I very much doubt (†) of it. William was Profeſſor of Divinity in the Engliſh College of Rheims. He is ſaid to be the Author of a very Seditious Book, dedicated to the Duke of Mayenne, and written according to the moſt furious Maxims of the League, and in a moſt violent Rage againſt Henry III, and the King of Navarre. My Edition is that of Antwerp, apud Joannem Keerbergium 1592, in 8vo. Here's the Title of that Book. De juſta Reipub. Chriſtianæ in Reges impios & Hæreticos Authoritate, juſtiſſimaque Catholicorum ad Henricum Navarræum, & quemcunque hæreticum à regno Galliæ repellendum confœderatione. G. Guilelmo Roſſæo Authore. Sutcliffe (h) affirms that William Raynolds writ that Book. Moreri (i) ſays ſo too, and quotes Pitſeus. But others aſcribe it to William Gifford, or to John Boucher, or to a Jeſuite, or to Genebrard ‡ See the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque, pag. 361.

ß See the Remark K.

* In Latin Sutclivius.

(ȥ) Mox diverſatum laute ſacra Mantua cepit, Plenaque Vergilii mens nova mente fuit. Suſſan. ludor. l. 2. fol. 22.

(a) Sutclivius knew not that Edition.

(b) See the Preface to the Calvino-Turciſmus.

(c) Sutcliffe ubi infra.

(d) Stericus, ut aiunt, comptus & calamiſtratus, & apud mulieres Belgicas gratioſus. Sutcliffe præfat. Turco-Papiſmi.

(e) Id. Ib.

(f) Rivetus in Jeſuita vapulante c. 11. n. 14. p. 531. tom. 3. oper.

(g) In the Nouvelles de la Rep. des lettres for July 1685, art. 6. p. 769.

(†) This ſeems to me Inconſiſtent with a Letter of John Raynolds to his Brother, which is to be found in Whitaker's Anſwer to a Book of William Raynolds.

(h) Sutcliffe ubi ſupra.

(i) Upon the Word Reginaldus.

put his Name to a Book which treats of the Conformity of Popery and the Turkiſh Religion.

TABOR.

heard (I). 'Tis more likely that it was written by the Author of the Calvino-Turciſmus. Boucher's Book has another Title, as you may ſee in his Article.

The Title of Sutcliffe's Anſwer runs thus. De Turco-Papiſmo, hoc eſt, de Turcarum & Papiſtarum adverſus Chriſti Eccleſiam & fidem conjuratione, eorumque in Religione & moribus conſenſione & ſimilitudine, liber unus. Eidem præterea adjuncti ſunt, de Turco-papiſtarum maledictis & calumniis, adverſus Gulielmi Giffordi famoſi Pontificum Rom. & Jeſuitarum aſſeclæ paraſitaſtri volumen illud contumelioſiſſimum, quod ille Calvino-Turciſmum inſcripſit, libri quatuor. In quibus non tantum hujus hominis levitas, ſed etiam aliorum importuniſſimorum ſcurrarum adverſus Orthodoxam Chriſti Eccleſiam continenter latrantium, malitia & petulantia reprimitur, hominumque piorum fama ab eorum calumniis vindicatur.

(I) See Placcius de Pſeudonym. pag. 249, 250. and the Nouvelles de la Rep. des lettres June 1684 art. 2. & Deckherr. de ſcript. Adeſpotis pag. 337, 380. Edit. 1686.

T.

T.

TABOR (JOHN OTTO) a famous German Civilian, born at Bautzen *, the Capital of the Upper Luſatia, the third of December 1603. He began to ſtudy Philoſophy and the Civil-Law at Leipſick; and before he was twenty Years of Age rendred himſelf capable to explain to his Comrades the Paratitles of Weſenbecius. He went from the Univerſity of Leipſick to that of Straſburg, and afterwards he took a Voyage to France at the time of the Taking of Rochelle. He had ſcarce return'd Home, but he undertook to travel into Italy, with two young Gentlemen, to whom he was Governour; but there aroſe ſome Obſtacles to this Voyage. He was admitted Doctor of Law at Straſburg November the 10th 1631. The Wars of Germany deprived him of part of his Patrimony, and reduced his Birth-place to Aſhes, Anno 1634. where he then diſcharged the Office of Advocate and Syndic of the City. He was invited a few Days after this Diſaſter to ſucceed Joachim Clutenius, who had left a Profeſſor of Law's Chair at Straſburg vacant. He accepted of that Profeſſorſhip, and was ſoon after honour'd with the chief Poſt in the Faculty of the Law. He lived in that City till the Year 1656, although many very honourable Employments were offer'd him from divers Places; but about the End of this Year he found himſelf more diſpos'd to remove. The Reſtoration of the ‡ Peace, the Regret of having loſt a Wife, with whom he had lived 22 Years, the Diſtaſte he took at the Place where ſhe died, and ſome other Diſcontents, to which Men of great Merit are commonly expoſed, brought our Tabor to the Country of Mecklemburg, to be Chancellor to the Duke. He ſoon quitted this Poſt, to devote himſelf entirely to his Studies; but before he could re-enjoy the Repoſe of his Cloſet, he was obliged to go to the Court of Saxony, and to that of the Emperor, about the Duke's Buſineſs. He retired to Gieſſen in 1659, and there was Chancellor of the + Univerſity, and Councellor to the Landgrave of Heſſe Darmſtad. Several Reaſons obliged him to remove again, which he did in 1667, to retire to Francfort, where his Son was Advocate. He was not free from Trouble there no more than in other Places. He died the 12th of December 1674. He publiſhed at divers times ſeveral Books on Matters of Law, that ſold very well: Which was the Reaſon they were grown very ſcarce; and therefore a Profeſſor of Leipſick, named Mylius, made a Collection of them as exactly as he could, which he publiſhed in two Volumes in Folio †, Anno 1688. Mr. Praſchius, an ancient Burgomaſter at Ratiſbon, and Son-in-Law to Tabor, printed in 1675, a little Tract β containing a Narrative of the (Z) Life of his Father-in-Law.

TACFARINAS, General of the Army in Africa againſt the Romans in the time of Tiberius, was a Numidian γ. He ſerved firſt amongſt the Auxiliary Troops of the Romans; and having deſerted, got together a Band of Vagabonds and Robbers, and betook himſelf to make Incurſions, and to Plundering. Afterwards he diſciplin'd thoſe Men, and divided them into Companies, according to the Art of War. At length he became General of the Muzulans, a potent Nation near the Deſarts of Africa, and confederated with the Moors of the Neighbourhood. Theſe were commanded by Mazippa, and formed a Flying-Camp, carrying Sword, Fire and Terror on all ſides; whilſt Tacfarinas, with the Choice of the Troops, encamped after the manner of the Romans, and accuſtomed them to Military Diſcipline. The Cinithians, another conſiderable Nation, entered into the ſame Intereſts. Furius Camillus, being then Pro-Conſul of Africa, and inform'd of theſe Motions, march'd againſt the Enemy, and put them to flight: Which procured him the triumphal Ornaments δ. This happened in the Year of Rome ϑ 770. Tacfarinas renewed his Robberies ſome time after, and laid Siege to a Caſtle where Decrius was Commander, and overcame the Garriſon that went out to fight in the open Field. Decrius performed the part of a brave and experienced Warriour: The Wounds he received, one of which put out one of his Eyes, did not hinder him from making Head againſt the Enemies till he was ſlain: His Soldiers had ran away. The Pro-Conſul Apronius puniſh'd them for their Cowardice very ſeverely, for he put every tenth Man to Death. This had ſuch an Effect, that five Hundred Soldiers, having charged the ſame Troops of Tacfarinas, (who beſieged a Place) put them to the Rout. After this Tacfarinas reſolv'd not to ſtay for the Romans; he divided his Men into different Places; and when he was purſued he betook himſelf to flight, and when the Romans retired he charged them in the Rear: But, having ſtopt in a Camp, he was beaten, and forced to fly into the Deſarts *. It was not long before he betook himſelf again to the open Field; and this News being brought to Rome, they ſent Junius Blæſus, Uncle (A) to Sejanus ‡ againſt him into Africa. This new Pro-Conſul acquitted himſelf very well

* In Latin, Budiſſina.

‡ Reſtituta pax, erepta conjux, & hinc innatum loci tædium, tum cauſæ aliæ quæ infeſtari ſolent magnas virtutes. Mauſol. Jo. Otton. Taboris.

+ They give him theſe Qualities in the Title of the new Edition of his Works.

† Lipſiæ apud Joh. Frider. Gleditſchium.

β It is entituled, Mauſoleum Jo. Ottonis Taboris J. C.

γ Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 52.

δ Taken from Tacitus ib.

ϑ It was the 17th of the Christian Æra.

* Ex eod. ibid. lib. 3. cap. 20, 21.

‡ Id. ib. cap. 32, 35.

(Z) A Narrative of the Life.] In ſome reſpects the Account is particular enough; but in thoſe things, concerning which the Publick might have moſt Curioſity, the Author gives but general Notions, and contents himſelf with telling us, Si tantas virtutes aliquo vitiorum confinio læſit, ſi in vita nonnunquam vel doctrina offendit, aut juſtam cauſam paulo acrius defendit, exemplo docuit illuſtri nihil in humanis rebus perfectum, aut ſuperbia conceſſum eſſe, quo maneat SOLI DEO GLORIA. This is the Concluſion of Mr. Praſchius's Account, from which I have taken this Article.

(A) Junius Blæſus, Uncle to Sejanus.... This new Proconſul acquitted himſelf very well in his Office.] The Emperor acquainting the Senate with Tacfarinas's new well § in his Office, and yet Tacfarinas repair'd his Loſſes ſo well, that he had the Boldneſs to ſend Deputies to Tiberius to demand of him to aſſign him a Country; otherwiſe he threatned a War which ſhould be perpetual. The Emperor took this Inſolence ſo ill, that he gave order to Junius Blaſus to take Tacfarinas whatever it coſt. This War was not ended till the Year of Rome 777, and Dolabella, who was then Pro-Conſul, finiſh'd it. The Army of Tacfarinas was beat; they endeavour'd to take the General, but he choſe rather to loſe his Life in fighting courageouſly than to fall alive into the Hands of the Pro-Conſul †. The Faults (B) of Moreri's Supplement ſhall be obſerved.

§ Id. ib. cap. 73.

† Id. ib. lib. 4. cap. 23. & ſeq.

TACHUS, King of Egypt, in the time of * Artaxerxes Ochus. The Dominion of the Perſians was ſo odious to the Egyptians, that it was no hard Matter for Tachus to cauſe an Inſurrection; but he ſtood in need of the Succours of Greece, to maintain him in the Dignity to which he was arrived. He was not ignorant of the Valour and Experience of Ageſilaus, King of the Lacedæmonians; and therefore he took him into his Service. Ageſilaus, although eighty Years of Age, did not refuſe it. He raiſed Troops with the Money which he received from Tachus, and led them into Egypt, without conſidering that he might be blam'd for accepting an Employ ſo inferiour to his Rank and Reputation. He was ſoon diſguſted at Tachus, who, inſtead of giving him the Command of his whole Army, left him only the Command of the Foreigners, and gave the Dignity of Admiral to Chabrias the Athenian, and retain'd the Character of General in all things for himſelf. Ageſilaus waited an Opportunity to ſhow his Reſentment, which was ſoon offer'd to him, and he readily embrac'd it. Nectanabus, the Kinſman of Tachus, commanded Part of the Army; he drew them off from their Obedience to Tachus, and procured himſelf to be choſen King by the Egyptians. This made him ſend Ambaſſadors to King Ageſilaus, to deſire him to joyn with him, and he failed not to make him magnificent Promiſes. Tachus, on the other hand, did not forget any thing to retain him. Each of thoſe Competitors ſent their Deputies to Lacedæmon. Ageſilaus ſent ſome too, but much more to recommend the Intereſt of Nectanabus, than that of Tachus. He received full Power to act as he ſhould think moſt expedient for the good of his Country, and he thought it much more advantageous for

the

* About the 104 Olympiad.

Irruptions, exhorted them (a) to the Choice of a new Pro-conſul, very well skill'd in War, and capable to undergo the Fatigues of it. The Senators declining this Choice (b) referred it to the Emperor's Care. This Prince (c) reproved them for throwing all the difficult Affairs upon him, and named to them two Perſons, Manius Lepidus and Junius Blaſus, that they might chooſe one of them to ſend him into Africa. Lepidus deſired that he might be excuſed from undertaking that Employ; Junius demanded the ſame thing: But they eaſily perceived the difference of their Speeches, and that Lepidus ſpoke his Mind, but Blaſus did not. They underſtood very well the Reaſons which Lepidus alledged, and alſo that which he did not alledge, and which was the chief, viz. the Superiority of Junius Blaſus, who was Uncle to the Favorite. Prudence required him not to be his Competitor in this Affair; and it was better for him not to commit himſelf to the Deciſion of the Suffrages: The Pro-conſulſhip could not fail Blaſus, as if he had been the only Perſon the Emperor had named. I ſay nothing but what reſults from the Words of Tacitus. (d) Tum audita amborum verba, intentius excuſante ſe Lepido, cum valetudinem corporis, ætatem liberum, nubilem filiam obtenderet: intelligereturque etiam quod ſilebat, avunculum eſſe Sejani Blaſum, atque eo prævalidum. Reſpondit Blaſus ſpecie recuſantis, ſed neque eadem adſeveratione; & conſenſu adulantium auditus eſt. This Uncle is an Example which proves, that the Relations of a Prime Miniſter are oftentimes very worthy of the Offices, that are only conferr'd upon them on account of their Conſanguinity. He took the beſt Way that could be (e) taken to ſubdue Tacfarinas; and we read in Tacitus, that the Honours of the Triumph, which were granted him, were his due; although Tiberius declared, that he granted them in Conſideration of Sejanus. (f) Neque multo poſt Cæſar cum Junium Blaſum Proconſulem Africæ triumphi inſignibus attolleret, dare id ſe dixit honori Sejani, cujus ille avunculus erat. Ac tamen res Blaſi digna decore tali fuere. Note, That this Emperor required that the Legions ſhould honour Junius Blaſus with the Title of Imperator. This Title, given by the Acclamations of the Soldiers, was very glorious. This had been a Cuſtom in the Wars of the People of Rome, in the time of the Republick; but it grew almoſt out of uſe under Auguſtus, and was entirely aboliſhed under Tiberius; for Junius Blaſus was the laſt that was honour'd with this Salutation. This whole Matter deſerves to be related in Tacitus's own Words. (g) Tiberius pro confecto (Bello) interpretatus, id quoque Blaſo tribuit, ut Imperator à legionibus ſalutaretur: priſco erga duces honore, qui bene geſta Republica gaudio & impetu victoris exercitus conclamabatur: erantque plures ſimul Imperatores, nec ſuper ceterorum æqualitatem. Conceſſit quibuſdam & Auguſtus id vocabulum; ac tunc Tiberius Blaſo poſtremum. The firſt Words of this Paſſage inform us, That Tiberius thought the War with Tacfarinas to be ended, although Blæsus return'd into Italy before he had rooted out (h) the Seeds that might raiſe it again. Tiberius, thinking the Buſineſs was over, recalled the ninth Legion out of Africa. Tacfarinas gave out, that they were drawn off to another Place, becauſe other Nations laid the Roman Empire waſte; and that therefore, it would be an eaſy matter to hem in thoſe Roman Troops that were left, provided that all thoſe, who preferred their Liberty before Servitude, would readily unite their Forces. He was joined and aſſiſted by many People, and created a great deal of Trouble to the new Pro-conſul, Dolabella, who at length totally vanquiſhed this Enemy (i). He demanded the Honour of a Triumph, but could not obtain it; for Tiberius, out of Complaiſance to Sejanus, refuſed to conſent to what might diminiſh the Glory of Junius Blaſus. This Refuſal added more to the Glory of Dolabella, than to that of the Uncle of the Favourite. Tacitus took care not to ſuppreſs this Obſervation. (k) Dolabella petenti abnuit triumphalia Tiberius Sejano tribuens, ne Blaſi avunculi ejus laus obſoleſceret. Sed neque Blaſus ideo inluſtrior, & huic negatus honor gloriam intendit. Quippe minore exercitu, inſignis captivos, cædem ducis, bellique confecti famam deportarat. It was a great deal of Injuſtice, to refuſe to Dolabella, who had concluded this War, what had been allow'd to the Half-Conquerors (l) of Tacfarinas.

(B) The Faults of Moreri's Supplement.] 'Tis wrong to ſay, I. That Tacfarinas was a Slave. II. That he retired into Africa. III. That out of the Robbers that he aſſembled he formed a powerful Army of Saracens. IV. That he cauſed himſelf to be proclaimed King. V. That he beat the Roman Army, commanded by Decius, Pro-conſul of Africa. VI. That he wounded him in the Eye. VII. That he was afterwards vanquiſhed by Camillus. VIII. And that Tacitus relates all this in his ſecond Book. Here are eight Capital Faults, too many for an Article of ten Lines. Tacitus ſays nothing to make us believe, that Tacfarinas was a Slave, or that he had ſerved out of Africa in the Roman Army. It was in Africa that he bore Arms for them, in all appearance, and by conſequence he did not retire into Africa after he had deſerted. As for this Army of Saracens, I believe I am not miſtaken

in

(a) Judicio patrum deligendum Proconſulem, gnarum militiæ, corpore validum, & bello ſuffecturum. Tacit. Ann. lib. 3. cap. 32.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Id. ib. cap. 35.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) See Tacitus, ib. cap. 74.

(f) Tacit. ibid. cap. 72, 73.

(g) Id. ib. cap. 74.

(h) Fratre ejus (Tacfarinatis) capto regreſſus eſt, properantius tamen quam ex utilitate ſociorum, relictis per quos reſurgeret bellum. Id. ibid.

(i) Ex eod. ibid. lib. 4. cap. 23. & ſeq.

(k) Id. ib. cap. 26.

(l) Priores duces, ubi impetrando triumphalium inſigni ſufficere res ſuas crediderant, hoſtem omittebant. Jamque tres laureatæ in Urbe ſtatuæ, & adhuc raptabat Africam Tacfarinas. Id. ibid. cap. 23.

the Lacedemonians to abandon Tachus, than to maintain him; and ſo he went into the Service of Nectanabus with the Troops that he commanded; which, as his Hiſtorian obſerves, deſerves to be called nothing but Treaſon, though the Publick Good be alledged for it. Tachus, being thus abandoned, fled where he could ‡. I do not believe that Hiſtory ever found him. Some ſay, he retired into Perſia. He muſt needs have been at a loſs where to find a Place of Refuge, ſince he fled to a Prince, who could not but look upon him as a Leader of Rebels. Athenæus aſſigns a very different Cauſe of Ageſilaus's Reſentment from that which has been given ∥: But I had much rather (Z) believe Plutarch than Athenæus concerning it.

TACITUS (* CAIUS CORNELIUS) a Roman Hiſtorian, who flouriſh'd in the firſt Century. There is nothing known concerning his Anceſtors, and the Dignity of his Family did probably begin with his Perſon. His firſt Employ, as it is ſaid, was that of Procurator (A) to Veſpaſian in Gallia Belgica. Being return'd to Rome, he receiv'd from the Emperor Titus a more honourable Degree †. He was Prætor (B) under the Empire of Domitian, and Conſul (C) under Nerva. But all theſe Dignities gave him but ſmall Glory, if we compare it with that which he procur'd to himſelf by the Performances of his Pen. His Annals, and (D) his Hiſtory are admirable, and one of the greateſt Efforts of Humane Mind; whether ‡ Taken from Plutarch, in vita Ageſilai.

∥ Theopompus & Lyceas Naucratites, apud Athenæum, lib. 14. pag. 616.

* Others give him the Sirname of Publius, and are blamed for it.

† See the Remark A.

in my Conjectures, if I ſay, that the Word Muzulani, which Tacitus makes uſe of, made the Continuator of Moreri think that Tacitus meant the Muſulmans; and becauſe the Followers of Mahomet go by that Name, and have alſo been known by that of Saracens, he fancied it was indifferent to ſay an Army of Saracens, or an Army of Muſulmans. Tacitus does not ſpeak of a Pro-conſul named Decius, but of one Decrius, who commanded in a Caſtle; the Garriſon of which conſiſted of a (b) Cohort, which is here converted into an Army of Romans, commanded by the Proconſul Decius. Now, ſince Decrius was killed, Moreri's Continuator ſhould not have been contented to ſay, that Tacfarinas wounded him in the Eye. Camillus's Victory was before the Defeat of Decrius. He ſhould have cited the ſecond, third and fourth Books of Tacitus's Annals; for theſe Words, Tacitus lib. 2. refer you as well to the ſecond Book of his Hiſtory, as to the ſecond Book of his Annals: And after all, whatever ſecond Book you take, you will not find there all the things which you are told of Tacfarinas.

(Z) Believe Plutarch than Athenæus concerning it.] The latter attributes all to a Jeſt: He would (c) have it, that Tachus, deriding Ageſilaus, ſeeing his ſmall Stature, ſaid to him, A Mountain has been in travail, Jupiter has been afraid of it, it has brought forth a Mouſe: ὤδινεν ὄρος, Ζεὺς δ' ἐφοβεῖτο, τὸ δ' ἔτεκεν μῦν. He adds, that Ageſilaus fell into a Paſſion, and anſwered, You ſhall one Day find that I am a Lion. He was as good as his Word; for an Inſurrection happening againſt Tachus, he ſaw himſelf abandon'd by Ageſilaus, and forced to flye into Perſia. I ſee no likelyhood of this. Firſt, Plutarch, who gives a large Account of the Contempt of the Egyptians for Ageſilaus, upon the Score of his mean Equipage and Mien, and for his indifferent Taſte, which they knew by the Choice he made of the Preſents that were ſent him, doth not ſay, that Tachus uſed any ſuch Jeſt. He doth indeed ſay, that that great Concourſe of People that went to the Sea-ſide to ſee this great Captain, ſo much celebrated by Fame, applied to him the Fable of the Mountain that brought forth a Mouſe; but he doth not ſay, that Ageſilaus made any Anſwer to it, and Tachus was not there. The ſharp Saying, which Athenæus aſcribes to this King of Lacedæmon, had no doubt been among thoſe, which Plutarch relates of this Prince, had it been grounded on a good Tradition. Beſides, is it probable, that a Man who wanted ſo much the Aſſiſtance of Ageſilaus, wou'd be ſo impudent as to exaſperate him by ſo biting a Jeſt? I do not deny, but that Plutarch (d) has obſerved, that Tachus's Vanity made Ageſilaus uneaſy: But once more, this Hiſtorian would not have forgot in this Place the Story of the Mountain, and the quick Anſwer of Ageſilaus. I verily believe, that Athenæus's Narrative ought to be reduced to this. It was told this King of the Lacedæmonians, that the Egyptians, after they had ſeen him ſo little, of whom they had form'd ſo great an Idea, ſpoke of the Mountain that brought forth a Rat: he replied, probably, That they ſhould ſoon ſee, that that Mouſe they had ſeen by the Sea-ſide, would fight like a Lion. He did not pretend to threaten Tachus, but to fill him with Hopes. I have heard ſay, that ſome French Generals, being in Germany, and obſerving, that the Germans had no good Opinion of ſome of their Regiments, becauſe the Soldiers were not tall, fat, bulky, and well-cloathed, encouraged them with theſe Words, You ſhall ſee theſe little, lean and meager Soldiers, fight like Lions, and fetch down the great Giants. However that be, one may learn by this account of Athenæus, true or falſe, a very important Leſſon; which is, that Princes ſhould never offend any Body with Railleries (e): They may one time or another pay dear for it.

(A) Of Procurator to Veſpaſian.] You will find theſe Words in the Life of Tacitus, compoſed by Juſtus Lipſius. Initium Dignitatis illi ſub Veſpaſiano fuit, à quo Plinio auctore, procurator datus Galliæ Belgicæ rationes Principis adminiſtravit. I will cite (a) hereafter what Pliny ſays, and there it may be ſeen, that he makes no mention of Veſpaſian; why then is he cited as an Author that informs us, that this Emperor gave Tacitus this Employ? Is it becauſe it is found that Tacitus exerciſed this Office under Veſpaſian? But does this give an Allowance to attribute to Authors what they never ſaid? However it be, there's little doubt but that Tacitus poſſeſs'd this Office under Veſpaſian; which is grounded upon this: (b) Dignitatem noſtram à Veſpaſiano inchoatam, à Tito auctam, à Domitiano longius provectam non abnuerim. They are Tacitus's Words. We ſhall ſee ‡ whether this Opinion be well grounded or not.

(B) He was Prætor under the Emperor Domitian.] Vertranius places (c) this Prætorſhip under the ninth Conſulſhip, of this Emperor; but he ſhould have placed it under the 14th; for it falls in with the Time in which Domitian celebrated the Secular Games: Now it is certain, that he celebrated them, being Conſul (d) for the 14th time. I ſhall cite Tacitus: (e) Is (Domitianus) quoque edidit ludos ſæculares; iiſque intentius adfui ſacerdotio Quindecimvirali præditus, ac tum prætor. Quod non jactantia refero, ſed quia collegio Quindecimvirum antiquitus ea cura, & magiſtratus potiſſimum exſequebantur officia cærimoniarum.

(C) And Conſul under Nerva.] He was ſubrogated in the place of Virginius Rufus, who died in his third Conſulſhip, in the Year of Rome (f) 850, and he honour'd him with a Funeral Oration. (g) Laudatus eſt à Conſule Cornelio Tacito, nam hic ſupremus fœlicitati ejus cumulus acceſſit, laudator eloquentiſſimus.

(D) His Annals and his Hiſtory.] He wrote the Hiſtory before the Annals; for he refers us to his Hiſtory (h) in the 11th Book of the Annals: He refers us thither, I ſay, about ſome things that concern Domitian. Now it is certain that his Hiſtory (i) extended from the Reign of Galba incluſively to the Reign of Nerva excluſively. He deſign'd a particular Work for the Reigns of Nerva and Trajan, and that was the Buſineſs he reſerved for his old Age: But I believe he never was able to put his Deſign in Execution. (k) Quod ſi vita ſuppeditet, principatum Divi Nervæ, & Imperium Trajani, uberiorem ſecurioremque materiam ſenectuti ſepoſui: rara temporum felicitate, ubi ſentire quæ velis, & quæ ſentias dicere licet. Theſe Words ſhew, that he began his Hiſtory, after the Death of the Emperor Nerva, and during the Life of Trajan: And therefore he gives the Title of Divus to the firſt, which he does not give to the ſecond. We have now but five Books of his Hiſtory left, which is but a very ſmall Part of it; for they do not contain above a Year and an half, when the whole ) Which … about … Men.

) Athen. … 14. … 616.

Ἐγγυᾶ … ἔνεν … ὤδινεν … Ζεὺς … ἐφοβεῖτο … ende … qua … ypcii … pentia … vanita- … tiga- … Plu- … in … Age- … pag. … 7.

(e) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres for the Month of March 1684, pag. 47.

(a) In the Remark K.

(b) Tacitus hiſtor. lib. 1. c. 1.

‡ In the Remark K.

(c) Lipſius, in vita Taciti, cenſures him for it.

(d) It was in the Year 848 of Rome, according to Lipſius, or 840, according Calviſius.

(e) Tacitus Annal. lib. 11. c. 11.

(f) 849, according to Calviſius.

(g) Plin: epiſt. 1. lib. 2.

(h) Utriuſque Principis rationes prætermitto, ſatis narratas libris quibus res Imperatoris Domitiani compoſui. Tacitus Annal. lib. 11. c. 11.

(i) See Tacitus at the beginning of his Hiſtory.

(k) Idem hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 1.

whether you conſider the Singularity of the Style, or the Beauty of the Thoughts, and that happy Pencil, with which he knew how to paint out the Diſguiſes and Cheats of Politicks, and the Weakneſs of Paſſions. However, he may be cenſured (E) for the Affectation of his Language, and inquiring into the ſecret Motives of Actions, and rendring them Criminal; but it is a great Elogy for his Wit to ſee the Eſteem which many Princes (F) have had for his Works. A Modern Author has whole Work was to contain about twenty-nine Years. Thoſe who number theſe five Books, as the Continuation of the Annals divided into 16 Books, are to blame; for the Annals ought to be conſidered (l) as a ſeparate Work. The Author compoſed them after he had finiſhed his Hiſtory, beginning them at the Death of Auguſtus, and continuing them to that of Nero. We have but one Part of 'em left, viz. the four firſt Books, ſome Pages of the fifth, and all the ſixth, and from the ninth to the fifteenth, and Part of the ſixteenth: The two laſt Years of Nero, and Part of the foregoing Year are wanting. Theſe were the laſt Books of the Work. The five firſt Books were found in Germany, by a Receiver of Leo X. He carried them to that Pope, and received a Gratification of 500 Crowns. (m) Corbeiæ, quod ad Viſurgim Monaſterium eſt, à quæſtore Pontificis fuere inventi, qui eos ad Leonem X. detulit, ac præmii loco quingentos accepit aureos. Philip Beroaldus had Orders to publiſh them. (n) I remember I heard the late Mr. Faure, Doctor of Divinity of the Faculty of Paris, ſay, that Leo X. having publiſhed a Brief, by which he promis'd not only Indulgences to thoſe that ſhould diſcover Tacitus's Manuſcripts, but alſo Money, and Honour (o), there was a German, who ſearch'd all the Libraries and found at laſt ſome Books of the Annals in the Monaſtery of Corwey. He went and preſented them to the Pope, who received them with great Pleaſure, and ask'd of him what Recompenſe he deſired. The German contented himſelf with being re-imburſed the Charges he had been at in going to ſee thoſe Libraries, and in his Journey to Rome. Leo thought that was too little, and gave him more; and to procure him Honour and Profit, he would leave him the care of publiſhing this Tacitus. But the German excuſed himſelf, by reaſon of his Want of Learning neceſſary thereunto (p).

(E) However, he may be cenſured for the Affectation of his Language, and enquiring into the ſecret Motives of Actions.] Muret has made three Orations (q), in Anſwer to thoſe who have criticiſed Tacitus. Their Criticiſms were too ſharp, and unjuſt in ſome reſpects: Therefore it was no hard matter for the Apologiſt, who was a good Orator, and a ſubtle Rhetorician, to elude them. You may ſee in thoſe Orations what Tacitus is reproached with. You may alſo find it in (r) Strada's Proluſiones. He is one of the moſt profeſſed Enemies of Tacitus: He thereby diſpleaſed (s) Paganinus Gaudentius, who not only criticized (t) many Places of his Hiſtory of the Low-Countries; but alſo went about to juſtify Tacitus. Gaudentius was no very ſtout Champion; he underſtood a little of many Things, but learned nothing perfectly. Magis literis tinctus quam imbutus .... nihil in ingenio ſolidum, cum per artes & diſciplinas peregrinaretur nulli penitus inſiſtens (v). It ſeems to me, that Cardinal du Perron (w) has too much deſpiſed Tacitus.

The Book entituled, Anonymiana, or Miſcellanies of Poetry, Oratory and Learning, which was printed at Paris, anno 1700, contains a Diſcourſe which is not very favourable to our Hiſtorian. See what Judgement the Author paſſes upon his Language. “(x) Tacitus ſpoke Latin very well, but too obſcurely to expreſs what he would write. His hard and contracted Style might be eſteem'd in other things, than in a Hiſtory, the whole of which ought to be clear and well eſtabliſh'd; the Diſtance of the Facts, their Variety, their Epoch's, and their Changes, continually controverted, render it obobſcure enough in it ſelf, without the Style being ſo too .... (y). It is a Miſtake to pretend, that Tacitus's way of Writing is commendable: if ſome Wines are eſteem'd for a little Bitterneſs, it is becauſe of a good Quality; but a harſh and rough way of Writing will never gain Reputation in a Hiſtory. It is ſo far from raiſing the Mind to greater Knowledge, as this Learned Man (z) pretends, that it perplexes and diſcourages it. As for Example; may it be ſaid, that Cæſar had excited more Attention, if he had been more obſcure, and leſs natural? Does not he raiſe the Mind to his own Thoughts, which ought to be always the Rule of ours? Whereas in an obſcure manner of Writing, the Mind of the Reader roves where it pleaſes, and forms Imaginations which oftentimes have no exactneſs or proportion to the things. Cæſar, by his Neatneſs, never gives occaſion to deſire more Light in the Actions he deſcribes.” I could readily ſubſcribe to this Judgment, and it ſeems to me, that what the Author adds concerning the other Affectation of Tacitus, is no leſs (aa) judicious. (bb) “Tacitus was a good Politician, and yet a more judicious Writer. He has drawn very juſt Conſequences about the Tranſactions of the Reigns, of which he wrote the Hiſtory, which he turned into Maxims for the well governing of a State. But if at any time he has given to the Actions or Motions of the Republick their true Principles, if he hath well unravell'd their Cauſes, it ought to be own'd, that he has often ſupplied with too much Nicety and Penetration, thoſe which had none: So true it is, that Men characterize themſelves in whatever they do, and that Hiſtory never is in the Hands in which it ſhould be, when thoſe who undertake to write it, give for the true Cauſe of that which they know nothing of, what they imagine to be leſs ſenſible, and moſt hidden from the Eyes of the People. It falls out oftentimes, that they make a particular Secret of a Prince, an Affair known to all the World: And this is a Fault ſo familiar (z) to Tacitus, that I dare venture to ſay, ſupported otherwiſe by many good Reaſons, that to take him for a very exact Hiſtorian, who has written according to Rules, is to pay him too much Deference .... (a) He has choſen the niceſt Actions, and the moſt ſuſceptible of the Delicacies of Art. Thoſe Reigns that he has principally medled with in his Hiſtory, are no ſmall Proof of it. In that of Tiberius, which is without Diſpute his Maſter-piece, and his beſt Performance, he found a kind of Government more adapted to the Character of his Genius. He lov'd, as I have ſaid, to unfold the Intrigues of the Cabinet, to aſſign their Cauſes, to turn Pretences into Deſigns, and deceitful Appearances into real Things. A Genius too ſubtle, that ſaw ſome Myſtery in all the Actions of this Prince. A ſincere Deference of his Deſigns to the Judgment of the Senate, was ſometimes a Snare laid to their Integrity; ſometimes a nice way of becoming their Maſter; and always the Art of making 'em the Accomplices of his Deſigns, and of executing them without any Reproach. When he puniſhed the Seditious; it was an Effect of his natural Diffidence of the Citizens, or ſome ſlight Marks of Anger ſpread among the People, to diſpoſe their Minds for greater Cruelties. Here the Contrariety of Humours of two Generals, is a ſecret Method of croſſing the Fortune of a Competitor, and the means to leſſen him in the Affection of the People. The Honours conferr'd on thoſe that deſerved them, were general ways of removing a Rival, or of deſtroying an Enemy, and always fatal Recompenſes: In a word, Policy has a hand in every thing, Vice and Virtue are there equally dangerous, and Favours as pernicious as Diſgraces. Tiberius is never natural, he does not do the moſt ordinary Actions of other Men without Deſigns. His Repoſe is never without Conſequence, and his Motions do always contain many ſecret Practices.” The other Things which I have read in this Diſſertation of the Author of the Anonymiana, are more liable, in my Opinion, to a juſt Diſpute.

(F) Which many Princes have had for his Works.] Pope Paul III. wore out his Tacitus by much reading of him. Coſmo de Medicis, the firſt great Duke of Florence, accounted the reading of him a great Pleaſure. Muret tells us this in finer Words, (b) Paulus III. P. M. quo nullum ſapientiorem ſenem noſtra vidit ætas, Tacitum ſæpè relegendo contriverat, neque ullum profanum ſcriptorem æquè libenter legebat. Coſmus Medices, qui primus Magnus Etruriæ Dux fuit, bone has made this Judgment of 'em: "Tertullian accuses him of having put a great many Falshoods upon us. He was not only an Enemy to the true Religion, but it may be seen in several places that he had none at all. His Style is certainly very obscure, it is also sometimes harsh, and has not all the Purity of good Authors in the Latin Tongue. Nevertheless, his Art of comprising a great deal of Sense in a few Words, his Vivacity in painting out Events, the Perspicuity with which he penetrates into the Darkness of the corrupt Heart of Men, the Energy and Eminency of Mind, which appear throughout the Whole, makes him be look'd upon at this Day almost generally as the chief of Historians." There are so many (G) Versions of him, and so many Comments upon him, that this alone is enough to make a pretty large Library. I shall take notice of some (H) Faults

---

(l) See the Proofs which Lipſius gives of it in the Preface to his Commentaries on Tacitus.

(m) Voſſius de hiſt. Lat. lib. 1. cap. 30. pag. 150.

(n) They were printed at Rome, an. 1515.

(o) That is, that their Names ſhould be prefixed with an Elogy to what they ſhould find out.

(p) Note, That Mr. Faure ſaid, that he had read this Narrative in the Preface to the firſt Edition of theſe Books of Tacitus. See an Elogy on Mr. Faure in the Journal des Savans, Nov. 16. 1693. pag. 673. Dutch Edition.

(q) The 16. 17, & 18. of the 2*d Volume*, in the Leipſick Edition 1672.

(r) Lib. 1. proluſ. 2.

(s) Profeſſor at Piſa. He was of the Country of the Griſons, if I am not miſtaken.

(t) See his Book, de Candore Politico, printed at Piſa, an. 1646.

(v) Octav. Ferrarius in proluſione cui titulus, Literatorum tumus.

(w) See the Perroniana at the Word Stiles.

(x) Anonymiana, p. 7.

(y) Ibid, pag. 9.

(z) That is to ſay, La Mothe le Vayer.

(aa) De- deviſed this ge- rally ing.

(bb) Ibid pag. 10.

(z) The Author ſhould not therefore have ſaid, that he was a more judicious Writer, than an able Politician.

(a) Ibid pag. 15. & 16.

(b) Mu Orat. 16 vol. 2. p 342. edi Lipſ. 16

(a) Tillemont History of the Emperors, Tom. I. part 1. pag. 55 of the Brussels Edition.
(b) In the Remark A.

homo factus ad imperandum, qui eam, quæ vulgo fortuna dicitur, in consiliis & prudentiâ consistere docuit, Taciti libros in deliciis habebat; eorumque lectione avidissimè fruebatur. Neque non hodie multi aut Principum, aut eorum, qui de summis rebus à Principibus in consilium adhibentur, eundem studiosissimè legunt, & quasi pro magistro quodam prudentiæ habent. I shall set down a Passage of Balzac after this Latin one. It is taken from a Letter that he wrote to the Sieur d'Ablancourt, the 4th of June 1643. "(c) Tacitus being become yours, my ill Opinion of him can last no longer: I cannot hate a Man that you love; and, to tell you the Truth, I do believe that he is become more sweet, and less thorny, by passing through your Hands. The best of all is, that you have not defiled your self by meddling with dirty Matters, and that among those Excrements of Policy, your Morality is preserved in its Purity. A Stoick Philosopher of the last Age, as you may call Justus Lipsius, has had the same Inclination that you have. A great Captain, as you may call the Marquiss of Spinola, has made a Translation of it into his Language, although it hath not been published; and I inform you of this Secret which I learn'd from one of his most intimate Confidents." Add to this a Passage of Guy Patin: (d) Cornelius Tacitus, who is a State-Breviary, or the first or chief Master of the Secrets of the Cabinet, and whom Mr. de Balzac calls somewhere, the ancient Original of Modern Policy, says, speaking of Tiberius, &c. Remember the forwardness of Leo X. I have spoke of it above (e).

I add Queen Christina to the Examples which I have given. Mr. Chanut says (f), that she used the Greek Tongue only as her Diversion in spare Hours; and that the reading of this Language and others did not keep her from her serious Studies. So she call'd among others the reading of Tacitus's History, some Pages of which she read constantly every Day. This Author, who exercises the most Learned, was very familiar to her.

(G) There are so many Versions, and so many Comments.] Mr. Amelot de la Houssaie, who has translated the six first Books of the Annals into French, has prefixed to his Translation a Critical Discourse, where you may find the Names of many Persons, who have labour'd on this Writer. There you may see the Judgment that is made of their Endeavours, and of Tacitus's Style and Morals. All this is very curious: But this French Translator speaks in general of all those who have written on Tacitus, or who have translated him into other Languages; he only speaks of the principal ones. I wish Peter Andrew Canonheri had named the 11 Commentators that he points at in these Words. (g) Præter hos sunt undecim qui Tacitum notis & commentariis illustrarunt. He gives just before a long List of those, qui ex professo de jure status conscripserunt. That List contains eight Pages in 4°. I know some Persons of good Judgment, who make a great account of the Critical Commentaries on Tacitus, such as is that of Justus Lipsius, and slight very much the Political Commentaries, with which Italy has infatuated Germany: For since the Germans have seen the Dissertations of Scipione Ammirato translated into Latin by Christopher Pflugius, a Gentleman of Misnia, they loved a little too much to comment on Tacitus's Works in that manner. Not but that one may profit by their Writings, chiefly by those of (h) Boeclerus. That which Berneggerus composed on the same Historian, is intermixed with Literature and Politicks; and therefore it is entituled, Quæstiones Miscellaneæ. The French did not bite at the Hook, when John Baudoin added to his Translation of Tacitus (i), printed with Notes, a Translation of Scipione Ammirato.

(H) Some Faults in Justus Lipsius.] I. I have already observ'd (k), that he makes Pliny say more than he should have done. II. He had rather believe, that Tacitus was the first of his Family who enjoy'd any Honours, and that this Family was not very illustrious, than to believe, that his Father had any Office: And nevertheless in another Place he understands of his Father what Pliny says of Cornelius Tacitus, a Roman Knight and Procurator of the Demesns in Gallia Belgica. Let us compare these two Passages of Lipsius together. Here is the first. (l) Pater avusque honores gesserint, & ad remp. accesserint, necne, ut re vetustâ & incertâ nihil adfirmem: propius à vero abest, ipsum primum jus imaginis & honores in familiam non nimis illustrem intulisse. Initium dignitatis illi sub Vespasiano fuit, à quo, Plinio auctore, procurator datus Galliæ Belgicæ, rationes Principis administravit, quæ dignitas equestri ordini diu peculiaris fuit. Here is the other, which serves for a Commentary on these Words of Tacitus, dignitatem nostram à Vespasiano inchoatam. How can this be says Lipsius? (a) Quomodo, quiane Procurator sub illo Belgicæ? E Plinio id suspicâre, sed suspicâre tantum, imo verius id ceperis de hujus patre. Intellige ergo dignitatem ejus inchoatam à Vespasiano, quòd ab eo laticlavius factus, & relatus in ordinem primum. Lipsius will have it in the first of these two Passages, that Pliny says, that Tacitus was honoured with a Commission by Vespasian; and in the other he will have it, that this is meant of Tacitus's Father. According to this last Case, this Historian had for his Father a Knight promoted by the Emperor to honourable Employments; and that which to Lipsius did not appear likely, would nevertheless be very true. No Body can deny, but that this Office of Procurator was very honourable; they attributed to it, under the Emperor Claudius, the Authority of (b) Jurisdiction without Appeal. Consult the Learned (c) Gutherius; and though Augustus had conferr'd this Office on some (d) Freed-Men, Tacitus did nevertheless look upon it as a Dependency of Knighthood; utrumque avum procuratorem Cæsarum habuit (Agricola) quæ equestris nobilitas est (e). III. Lipsius asserts, that Tacitus being grown grey-headed at the Bar, devoted his old Years to the Writing of History. Historiæ scribendæ senex demum vacavit, cum reliquum ætatis in foro & causis orandis egisset. But if it be so, how comes it, that Tacitus declares, that he undertakes to write an History that will extend from the Death of Nero to that of Domitian; and that he reserves for his old Age the Empire of Nerva and Trajan? (f) Quod si vita suppeditet, principatum divi Nervæ, & imperium Trajani, uberiorem securioremque materiam senectuti seposui. One may here apply to Lipsius the Proverb, Sorex suo indicio periit. He tells us (g), that he has, within a very small matter, found out the Year of Tacitus's Nativity, thus. Pliny the younger, much of (h) the same Age with Tacitus, was in his 18th Year when his Uncle died; that is to say, according to Lipsius, the second Year of the Reign of Titus. He was then born in the Year of Rome 816: So that Tacitus being a little older than he, must have been born the last Year of the Emperor Claudius, or rather, the first Year of Nero. Whereupon, I say, that he was therefore but 44 Years of Age when Trajan mounted the Throne; and since nothing obliges us to put back the Beginning of his Work beyond the second, or the third Year of this Prince, it manifestly follows, that he was not old when he began to apply himself to it. It is certain, supposing that he undertook this Work in his 45th Year, that it may be much better conceived that he had time to finish it, and afterwards to go about his Annals, which he carried on from the Beginning of Tiberius's Reign, to the Death of Nero. And observe, that in writing his Annals, he proposed to himself a new (i) Enterprise for the time when he had finished them. Observe also, that his manner of Writing required much time, every thing in it favours of Pains, Meditation, Study, and festina lente. And lastly, observe, that the Letters Pliny the younger wrote to him, either to entreat him to make mention of him, or to communicate to him some

(l) Just. Lipsius in vita Taciti in limine comment. ad Tacitum.

(a) Lipsius in Tacit. histor. lib. 1. init. p. m. 451.

(b) Eodem anno sæpius audita vox Principis, parem vim rerum habendam à Procuratoribus suis judicatarum, ac si ipse statuisset. Ac ne fortuito prolapsus videretur, Senatus quoque consulto cautum, plenius quam antea & uberius. Tacitus Annal. lib. 12. c. 60.

(c) Gutherius de Officiis domus Augustæ, lib. 3. cap. 33.

(d) Dio lib. 53. pag. 506.

(e) Tacit. in vita Agricolæ, c. 4.

(f) Tacit. histor. lib. 1. cap. 1.

(g) Lipsius in vita Taciti.

(h) See the Epistle 20. of the 7th Book of Pliny.

(i) Sed aliorum exitus, simul cetera illius ætatis memorabo, si effectis in quæ tendi, plures ad curas vitam produxero. Tacitus Annal. lib. 3. cap. 24.

Faults in Justus Lipsius, la Mothe (l) le Vayer, and Moreri; and you may, in my some Memoirs concerning the Death of his Uncle (k) seem to be of the 102, or 103 Year; that is, of the 5th or 6th Year of Trajan. Now it is certain, that Tacitus was then writing his History; and since there is great likelyhood that he was not far from the time when the Fire of Mount Vesuvius destroyed Pliny the Naturalist, in the first or second Year of Titus, we may very well judge, that he did not long defer the beginning of his Work after the Installation of Trajan. IV. Lipsius conjectures (l), that Tacitus's History contained 20 Books. The ground he goes upon is this, that it contained an Interval of 21 Years, and that the five first Books mention only the Actions of a Year and some Months. This is a Falsity in Fact, and a prodigious Forgetfulness of what the Rule of Proportion requires. There are more than twenty eight Years between the Death of Nero, and that of Domitian, which are the two Bounds of Tacitus's History: and no Man that understands the Rule of Three would reason after this manner; If fifteen Months take up five Books, twenty-one Years take up twenty Books. Note, That the Years that are lost of the History of Tacitus, are scarce, in the main, less fruitful in Events, than the time that is left. St. Jerom (m) says, that Tacitus composed the History of the Emperors, in thirty Books, from Tiberius to the Death of Domitian. This Testimony can be of no use, because the History of Tacitus does not begin at the Death of Augustus; and there is no appearance that this Work and his Annals contain'd but thirty Books; and so St. Jerom has not well express'd himself. See the Margin (n).

The greatest part of these Mistakes of Justus Lipsius are to be found in the Writings of the most Learned Men, who have spoken of Tacitus historically. I will excuse them: For who could believe, that so great a Writer had committed them in a very short Work, and framed, so as to persuade, that the Author of it had weighed attentively all his Words! I do not think, that his Conjecture concerning the Year of Tacitus's Nativity is amiss; which shews a gross Error of Francis Garasse, who believed, that Lucan's Pharsalia (o) is later than Tacitus's History. His Words are these. (p) The first Objection "may be of those " who imagine, that God takes Pleasure in disordering us, and is delighted to see us exposed to " Tempests, Rebellions and Wars, as though we had " a barbarous and revengeful God, who bathes himself in the Blood of Men. Such are in some " manner the pompous Objections, and Atheistical
" Sentences of Tacitus and Lucan, who was, in his " time, accounted the Father of Atheists: For they " say in express Terms: Tot Romanæ Reipublicæ cladibus
" manifestum est fuisse curæ Diis VINDICTAM, non " fuisse SALUTEM: That is to say, by so many
" Calamities, and by the divers Disorders which have shaken the Republick of Rome, it plainly appears, that
" the Gods take care to be revenged on us, and not to " succour us. These are the Words of Tacitus, in the " first Book of his History; and Lucan, who perhaps had it from him, as an Asp, who borrows Venom from the Viper, says in lofty Terms,

" Felix Roma quidem, civesque habitura superbos,
" Si LIBERTATIS Superis tam cura fuisset,
" Quàm VINDICTA placet, &c.

" Rome, says he, would be the most happy City in the " World, if God studied so industriously our Liberty, as
" he studies particular Revenge."

(l) La Mothe le Vayer, and Moreri.] The first of these two Authors says (q), that the twelve last Years of Nero are wanting in Tacitus's Annals. This is false: There wants but the two last Years, and part of the preceding: This is the Ist. Fault. The IId. is to say, that this Author's History reached to the happy Government of Trajan. A new mistake: It ended at the Death of Domitian. III. It is not true, that, according to the Conjectures of Lipsius, we have lost ten Books of Tacitus's History: For, according to his Conjectures, this Work comprehended twenty Books; therefore, since there remains but five, we have lost fifteen, according to the Opinion of this Critick. IV. This Author should not have said (r), that there are at least 21 Years from Galba to Nerva. This is a Fault of Lipsius which I have refuted, and which Vossius has committed likewise (s). V. (t) It is not to be wondred at, if Tacitus having imitated Thucydides, and both of 'em Demosthenes.... the first has retained I know not what Harshness or Austerity, which have always been observed in the Style of those two Grecians. These Words of la Mothe le Vayer contain an extravagant Anachronism; for Demosthenes was much later than Thucydides. VI. (v) The Emperor Tacitus, in the Supreme Dignity of the World, wherein he was placed, did not omit, almost two hundred Years after the Death of this Historian of whom we speak, to pride himself in the Name that was common to them both, esteeming himself honour'd to have him for his Ancestor, and to be taken for one of his Posterity. He caused his Statue to be set up in all Libraries, and his Works to be written out ten times every Year; to the end that they might pass from hand to hand, and from Age to Age, as they have done even to ours. This Story is not very exact: it supposes, that this Emperor reigned a certain number of Years; or else it would be absurd to say, that he caused such or such a thing to be done every Year: Nevertheless, it is certain, that his Reign lasted only about six Months. Besides, this Account supposes the Event answered this Emperor's Intentions; that is, that the Books of Tacitus did pass from Age to Age down to ours, according to the Design of the Prince who caused them to be transcribed: and yet there remains but a very small part of 'em. I do not much wonder, that the Care of this Emperor has not procured to us the Preservation of the Works of his Ancestor: For, considering the short Duration of his Empire, I believe the Execution of his Orders amounted to a very small Matter. However it be, here is what he ordered: (w) Cornelium Tacitum, scriptorem historiæ Augustæ, quod parentem suum eundem diceret, in omnibus bibliothecis collocari jussit: & ne lectorum incuria deperiret, librum per annos singulos decies scribi publicitus in (a) evicis archiis jussit, & in bibliothecis poni. VII. La Mothe le Vayer concludes this Chapter with these Words: " (b) It is " also well known, that Tacitus did not go about Writing, till he was far advanced in Years, after the " Empire of Nerva, and under that of Trajan, as we " learn from himself." This is to commit two Faults; for in the first place the Historian speaks not of his Age; and in the 2d place it is very wrong to conclude that he was an old Man, because he composed his Work under the Empire of Trajan. See the (c) preceding Remark. VIII. The Clamours of La Mothe le Vayer against two Civilians, who spoke ill of Tacitus's Latin, appear to me to be a great Fault. He accounts those two Persons (d) more worthy of Pity than of an Answer. He adds, (e) If ever a ridiculous Judgment was past, it is without doubt this: And I dare be bold to say, as full of Indignation as I am against such unreasonable Opinions, that in all appearance the meanest Cook or Groom of Tacitus spoke better Latin than Ferret or Alciatus, very learned Men in the Law, but very bad Judges of the thing we speak of.... (f) Who can forbear wondering that some Barbarians at this present time, such as Alciatus and Ferret, with respect to the ancient Romans, should be so rash as to say, that an Author of so great Account, did not know how to speak his own Mother-Tongue! In Truth, one must have a Brazen Fore-head and a great Assurance to advance such Propositions. What a Noise and bustle here is about nothing? For at last all the Fault of those two Civilians consists in having found out in Tacitus's Style many Thorns, and little Brightness and Purity. Here are Alciatus's Words; I take them from a Letter that he wrote to (g) Paul Jovius: Illi porrò qui rerum & locorum notitia gaudent, nec affectatas exornationes admittunt, non reposcent à te rationem, cur lacteam Livii ubertatem non sis assecutus, postquam & te omnino piguerit Salustii sobrietatem imitari, & satis tibi fuerit pauculos tantum flores ex Q. Curtii pratis, sæpius quam ex Cor. Taciti senticetis, arguta manu decerpsisse. Note, by the by, that Vossius had never read this Letter; for had he seen it, he had better represented the Author's Thought: He would not have attributed to him an excessive prepossession, which engag'd him to pretend, that in comparison of the History of Paul Jovius, that of Tacitus was like a Field covered with Brambles. (h) Imo & Alciatus vir sane egregius non dubitat affirmare dictionem ejus præ illa Paulli Jovii esse senticeta. Condonemus tale judicium tanto viro, & cogitemus ex amore Jovii proficisci. This is to speak at the third hand. Alciatus's Letter is not very flattering, if it be well examin'd. Let us proceed to Ferret's Words. (i) Tanto acumine, tantoque judicio res Romanas mandavit litteris Tacitus,

of

(k) Tillemont Hist. of the Emperors, Tom. 2. part. 1. pag. 550.

(l) Lipsius in præfat. Comment. ad Histor. Taciti.

(m) Hieronym. in Zachariam, l. 3. c. 14. apud Vossium de hist. Lat. pag. 159.

(n) Note, That the Book which we reckon the fifth in the History of Tacitus, is cited as the fifth by Tertullian, in libello de Spectaculis.

(o) Lucan died under Nero.

(p) Garasse, Somme Theologique pag. 440, 441.

(q) La Mothe la Vayer, Judgment on the principal Historians, pag. 207. Tom. 3. edit. in 12°.

(r) Ibid. pag. 208.

(s) Vossius de histor. Lat. pag. 159.

(t) La Mothe le Vayer ibid. pag. 209.

(v) Ib. pag. 21

(w) Vopis- cus in Taci- to Imp. cap. 10. p. m. 612. vol. 2. Scripto- rum Hist. Augusta.

(a) The Words without doubt cor- rupted, the Manu- scripts vary much; Ca- saubon and Salma- sius here not conten- ted to de- cide any thing.

(b) La Mothe le Vayer, ubi supra, pag. 219.

(c) Remark III.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 219.

(e) Ibid. pag. 212.

(f) Ibid. pag. 212, 213.

(g) It is prefixed to the first Vol. of the History of Paul Jovius.

(h) Vossius de histor. Latin. pag. 160.

(i) Aemil. Ferretus, in Castigat. ad Taci- tum, apud Petr. An- dream Ca- nonherium, Discurs. polit. in C. Tacitum, pag. 2.

my Remarks, find ſeveral Things, which relate to the Life of Tacitus. He married the Daughter of Agricola, whoſe Life he wrote. Many believe he had a Son, of whom (K) Pliny relates ut nemo certè legatur in ſuo genere illi comparandus; nam quamvis caruerit nitore, & puritate linguæ, abeunte jam Romano ſermone in peregrinam formam, atque figuram, ſuccum tamen, & ſanguinem rerum incorruptum retinuit, idemque tam multa pauciſſimis complexus eſt, ut attenti lectoris in animo aculeos relinquat, indiligentem, ac aliud cogitantem fallat, ac prætereat. The Author, who affords me this Elogy, cites (k) a Paſſage of Alciatus, wherein he beſtows great Encomiums upon Tacitus. If we obſerve it narrowly, I am perſuaded we ſhall find, that theſe two Civilians went not beyond La Mothe le Vayer, (l) who did not deny, that Tacitus had retain'd ſomething of the Harſhneſs or Auſterity of Thucydides, and that his way of Writing is a little rugged. Would he have us find in Tacitus the Model of a pure and elegant Latin Style? Then we muſt burn Cicero and Livy; for as long as we can compare them with Tacitus, this will neceſſarily appear to us very much decayed. He had therefore no Reaſon to fall into ſo great a Paſſion againſt Alciatus and Ferret. He ſhould have not amplified the Murmurs and Invectives (m) of Muret. He neither ſpoke the Truth, nor his own Thoughts, when he ſaid, that the Muleteers of the antient Authors ſpoke, and underſtood the Latin Tongue better, than the moſt learned among the Moderns, either ſpeak or underſtand it. Quorum coqui & muliones multo melius quam omnes nos Latine & intelligebant & loquebantur (n). He would have been offended at this Hyperbole, if another Man had included him in it; and who doubts, but that he believ'd himſelf more learned in the Latin than the ordinary Citizens of antient Rome? He might have Reaſon for it; for it is certain, that there are ſome Foreigners, who without having ſeen France, ſpeak and underſtand our Tongue better than many Frenchmen: And I am ſure, that Caſaubon and Salmaſius wrote better in Latin, than in their own Tongue. If Mr. de Tillemont (o) had been treated at this time, as Alciatus was, there would be found a great deal of Pedantry in ſuch a Cenſure. Balthaſar Bonifacius, a great Admirer of Tacitus, does nevertheleſs own, that his Style is harſh. (p) Stylus magis gravis quam elegans, aſper enim parumque duriuſculus eſt, atque à Latina lingua candore diſcedens.

As for what concerns Mr. Moreri, he may be blamed, I. for having exalted Tacitus's Birth a little too much. II. For having aſſerted, that Tacitus was very old when he began his Hiſtory in the Empire of Trajan. III. And that the Author himſelf obſerves it. He has avoided the Over-ſights of Charles Stephens; for he has not made this Hiſtorian flouriſh (q) from the Empire of Tiberius, the Year of Rome 767, till the time of Veſpaſian, An. 822. He does not ſay that Tacitus (r), an illuſtrious Orator under Hadrian, liv'd to the time of the Veſpaſians, and that they promoted him to Dignities, and that his Hiſtory extends from Auguſtus to Hadrian. Lloyd and Hoffman have adopted all theſe laſt Faults. I believe Charles Stephens copied them from Geſner (ſ), who had copied them from Volaterranus (t).

(K) A Son, of whom Pliny relates a thing very extraordinary.] Here it is, according to Du Pinet's Verſion. “We find in the Chronicles, that at Salamis one named Euthymenes had a Son, who in three Years grew three Cubits: he was very unwieldy and dull in Motion and Underſtanding, and yet he had got a downy Beard, and a ſtrong Voice; but as ſoon as he was three Years of Age, he died ſuddenly with a Contraction of the Nerves. I have ſeen ſomething like this, ſetting aſide that he had no Hair on the Privities, in a Son of Cornelius Tacitus, a Roman Knight, and Receiver and Treaſurer of Gallia Belgica.” I ſet down theſe Words on purpoſe to have room to ſay, That there are ſome People who pretend, that the Tranſlator did not well underſtand his Original. Here are the Words of Pliny, in the Edition of Father Hardouin. (v) Invenimus in monumentis Salamine Euthymenis filium, in tria cubita triennio adoleviſſe, inceſſu tardum, ſenſu hebetem, & jam puberem factum voce robuſta, abſumptum contractione membrorum ſubita, triennio circumacto. Ipſi non pridem vidimus eadem ferme omnia, præter pubertatem, in filio Cornelii Taciti Equitis Romani, Belgica Gallia rationes procurantis. This ſignifies, as ſome would have it, that the Son of Euthymenes, having grown three Cubits in 3 Years, began immediately to decreaſe and was conſumed at the end of three Years. He lived therefore ſix Years. I ſhall not decide on theſe two Verſions; but that of du Pinet does not ſeem to me the worſt (w). It cannot be proved from this Paſſage, that our Tacitus had an Employ in Gaul; for it is not true that Pliny ſpeaks of him. Let us remember, that Tacitus did not marry till after Agricola his Father-in-Law had been Conſul. Here is the Proof of it. (x) Conſul egregiæ tum ſpei filiam juveni mihi deſpondit, ac poſt conſulatum collocavit, & ſtatim Britanniæ præpoſitus eſt. The Conſulſhip of Agricola, according to the moſt probable Opinion (y), falls in the 77th Year of JESUS CHRIST; we muſt therefore ſay, that Tacitus married in the 78th. Now Pliny died (z) in the 79th or 80th Year; therefore he could not have ſeen a Son of Tacitus who had ſuch an extraordinary Growth at three Years. I do not advertiſe you to obſerve, that he makes mention of this prodigious Growth in the ſeventh Book of his Natural Hiſtory, a Work divided into 37 Books: I have no deſign to infer from thence, that there is a great likelyhood, that he had ſeen this ſome Years before he finiſhed this Work; for it may be anſwered me, that he read it over after he had finiſhed it, and that he put throughout the Date of the time when he reviſed his Writing. We find the ſame Date in Chap. 4. of Book 14. and in Chap. 2. of Book 28. The Author in theſe two Places points at the 830 Year of Rome, which is the 77th of the Chriſtian Æra. This is enough to make my Objection good. Beſides he ſays that he had ſeen, a long time before, this extraordinary Growth, nos pridem vidimus. I know very well, that Father Hardouin has corrected theſe Words, and has put non pridem vidimus. I ſhall let this Correction paſs; it can do me no harm, for though it ſhould it be ſuppoſed, that Pliny wrote this Chapter of his Hiſtory a few Days after he had ſeen this tall Child, it is not poſſible, that this Roman Knight, of whom he ſpeaks, ſhould be our Tacitus. And therefore I do confidently aſſert, that the Reaſon for which this Commentator reads non pridem inſtead of nos pridem, is void; he goes upon (a) the falſe Suppoſition that Pliny means the Hiſtorian, whom I ſpeak of. He applies to him (b) the Inſcription inſerted by Reineſius; but he ſhould have taken notice, that it was made by (c) Cornelius Verus Tacitus. Now no Body ever put Verus among the Names of Tacitus. He may have had for his Father, (they are Mr. de Tillemont's (d) Words) Cornelius Tacitus, a Roman Knight, Intendant of Gallia Belgica [that is probably] Cornelius Verus Tacitus, of whom there is an Inſcription found in the Country of Juliers, made when he was going to (1) exerciſe a ſecond Intendance. [Thus he had been Intendant of Gallia Belgica, and the Lower Germany where Juliers is.] This Intendant had a Son, of whom Pliny the Naturaliſt (2) relates ſomething extraordinary, in taking notice, that he was dead at that time: [So that this is not the Hiſtorian.] Thoſe who from henceforward will attribute to Tacitus an Employ in Gaul under Veſpaſian, will do well to look for better Proofs than this Paſſage of Pliny. How many Learned Men have been miſtaken in it? Lipſius (e) and Voſſius are not the only Perſons. Nay, there are ſome, who might be cenſured, though they might reaſonably pretend, that Pliny ſpoke of our Tacitus; for they ſuppoſe he had great Military Offices, and that he govern'd the Lower Germany in the Quality of Pro-conſul. Alſo they will have it, that Learning then the Manners and Laws of the Germans, he wrote concerning them, during his Pro-conſulſhip the Work we now have. Floruit diutiſſime in militari urbanaque diſciplina & Proconſul Germaniam inferiorem obtinuit, quo tempore Germanorum mores, inſtituta, ritus tanta diligentia perſcripſit, ut uni Tacito ſuam antiquitatem Germani acceptam ferant. This is what Bodin ſays, in his Treatiſe concerning the Method of Hiſtory. Balthaſar Bonifacius (f) has tranſcribed him without any alteration. Mr. Pichon meant without doubt that Tacitus was Governor of Gallia Belgica. This Title is too great. However here is what he ſays, in his Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Tacitus IN USUM DELPHINI. Hoc autem oportet eſſe Tibi TACITUM acceptiorem, quod olim in Gallia tua, & quidem Belgica, quæ maximè rectoris impatiens, obtinuit

Imperelates a very extraordinary thing. 'Tis an idle Fancy (L) to pretend, that Domitian banish'd him; and perhaps 'tis another to say that he (M) lived eighty Years.

(w) See Salmaſius in Solinum, Tom. 1. pag. 54.

(x) Tacit. in vita Agricolæ, cap. 9.

(y) See Tillemont, note 4. on the Hiſtory of Titus, p. m. 853, 854.

(z) See the ſame, ib. note 4. pag. 855.

(a) See the Notæ & Emendationes of Father Hardouin on the 7th, Book of Pliny, n. 65. pag. 119.

(b) In his Commentary on thoſe Words of Pliny, pag. 37.

(c) This would make me doubt, whether he was the Father of the Hiſtorian.

(d) Tillemont, Tom. 2. part. 1. pag. 348.

(1) Rationatoris honore uſurus ſecundùm.

(2) It appears, that this Child died aged 3 Years, without Strength or Senſe. Pliny had ſeen him a long time before, pridem. And ſo Tacitus his Father, who had ſome Children, before the Year 77, in which Pliny wrote, is not the Hiſtorian, as Voſſius thinks, de Hiſtor. Lat. l. 1. c. 30. pag. 158.

(e) In the Life of Tacitus. But he judged better of the thing in his Commentary, in Lib. 1. Hiſt. init. See the Remark H. Letter a. (f) Balth. Bonifacius de Scriptoribus hiſtoriæ Romanæ.

TAISNERIUS (JOHN) was of Ath in Hainault §. He was Preceptor to the Pages of Charles V. and follow'd this Emperor in his Expedition to Tunis. He read some Mathematical Lectures at Rome and Ferrara, and after he had travell'd a long time, he devoted himself entirely to the Writing of Books; But chusing a Subject very unworthy of a Man of Judgment, he lost * all his Reputation. He betook himself to Chiromancy; and though he had gain'd the Reputation of being very successful therein, he nevertheless tired, (A) by the great bulk of his Book, those that were desirous to benefit themselves by it. Many Persons were so simple as to send him ‖ the Picture of their Hands, on purpose to learn from him, what their Fortunes should be. Consult Moreri's Dictionary and Bullart's Academie. They speak at large of our Taisnerius; but whether with that Order and Exactness that is necessary, is what I shall examine another time. There is nothing there to be found, concerning his being (B) of a Plagiary, which he was accused of.

TAKIDDIN, a Mahometan Author. I shall mention but one thing relating to him; viz. that he said †, that the Calif Almamon would be infallibly punish'd by God, for having disturbed the Devotion of the Musulmans, by the Introduction of Philosophical Studies. This Thought has nothing singular in it: It has appeared in all the Countries Imperium, & quid hic forsitan ea ipsa meditatus est, & usu didicit, quæ scriptis mandaret ac posteris relinqueret.

(L) To pretend, that Domitian banish'd him.] There are some who do not content themselves with asserting this, but compute also the Duration of this Exile; they make it amount to ten Years, and then they terminate it by the Efficacy of an Intercession that wrought upon Domitian. This Exile in general is not founded on any Proof; and as to the Duration of it, it is invincibly refuted by some Words of Tacitus, related above in the Remark B. They are those wherein he tells us, that he exercis'd the Prætorship at Rome, when Domitian celebrated the Secular Games. They were celebrated in the 7th Year of Domitian's Reign, and after (g) that time this Prince lived not quite eight Years. I praise Lipsius for having observed, that this Mistake owes its Rise to a popular Custom, which makes People fond of representing illustrious Men lying under great Misfortunes. This Error might also proceed from a wrong way of arguing. It was thought, that since Domitian turn'd Persecutor of honest Men, he did not spare Tacitus, who was a Man of Honour, and in great Repute. These Consequences are too popular, and Authors ought not to draw them. (h) Exsulasse sub Domitiano quidam tradiderunt, magis tamen ut opinor, pro more vulgi, qui magnis viris insignes casus adfingere amat, quàm quod ejus rei certus auctor sit. Ego legendo non aliud comperio, quàm abfuisse eum aliquot annis ab urbe, idque eo ipso tempore quo Julius Agricola socer ejus mortem obierit COSS. Pompejo Conlega, & Cor. Prisco, non tam exsilii necessitate, ut arbitror, quàm tædio temporum & cupidine otii. Nam quod iidem, ut omni ex parte tam anxia diligentia constet, decennium in exsilio egisse scribunt, ac demum exorato Domitiano restitutum, Latinè ut loquar, inanis fabula est. I observe, that, though this Historian (i) has very boldly described the Tyranny of Domitian, yet he has not in the least insinuated, that this Storm fell upon him personally: On the contrary, he acknowledges, that he was under some Obligations to that Prince; and (k) he fears least he should be suspected of suppressing the Truth by way of Gratitude. A Man who had been banish'd, would hardly have spoken after this manner.

(M) That he lived eighty Years.] The Testimony that I am going to cite is of no great weight. (l) Vixit annos 80. ut legitur in lib. 3. Thes. Histor.

(A) He tired by the great bulk of his Book.] Consult Jacobus Philippus Tomasinus; there you will find these Words: (m) Uno volumine quæcunque Chiromantiam attingerent complexus est. At crescente illo in vastam molem factum est ut studentium animos defatigarit quos sibi proposuerat erudiendos. If you would know the Credit that this Man acquired by his Chiromantick Boastings, read this Passage of the same Author. (n) Divinandi munere ex manuum lineis temperamenti signa, & animi characteres varios colligebat, &, spretis genituraram laboriosis supputationibus, ignaras curiosorum mentes, rerum suarum sciscitantes eventus, vaticiniis circumducebat. Jamque Viri quoque gravissimi fide prædictionibus illius haberi captâ, ei typos manuum suarum lineis effigiatarum undiquè demandabant, & ab ejusdem ore, ut de privatis rebus statuerent, pendebant.

(B) Concerning his being a Plagiary, which he was accused of.] It is pretended that he did not content himself to steal some Thoughts, but that he appropriated to himself some entire Books, which others had published. Gabriel Naudæus reproaches him with this, with respect to a Book of Bartholomew Cocles, concerning Physiognomy; and with respect to a Book of Peter le Pelerin, concerning the Load-stone. He defames him, as he deserves, for those Thieveries committed with such Audacity. This was not to commit Petty-Larceny, or to be a Cut-Purse in the Republick of Learning, but to act as a notorious Robber, as a Corsair of Barbary: This Case was punishable on Parnassus. See after what manner Gabriel Naudæus exercises Justice. (o) Inter recentiores qui artem ejusmodi (crisim Physiognomicam) scriptis explicarunt, potiores semper habe Augustinum Niphum, & Camillum Baldum, eruditissimos Aristotelis commentatores: Bartholomæumque Coclitem Bononiensem cujus integrum librum convasavit, ac in suum opus mathematicum transtulit, Joannes Taisnerus, plagiarius insignis, & imprudentior longe Horatii Corniculâ, cum præterea tractatum etiam de Magnete, à Petro Peregrino Gallo quondam editum, furto vendicarit. Quod equidem velut per transennam observandum esse duxi, ut suus bene de Republica literaria meritis honos asseratur, & ipse Taisnerus.

Regali conspectus in auro nuper & ostro,
Migret in obscuras furaci mente tabernas.

Thomasius was not ignorant of this publick Accusation, against Taisnerius; he makes mention of it (p) in his Account of Plagiaries: But he did not know, and it may be Naudæus did not know it neither, that in the Year 1574, an Italian Mathematician, published bitter Complaints, and a sharp Invective against the same Plagiary. All that he said about it deserves to be transferred into this Page. There you will see both some universal Instructions, relating to these Thieveries, and some particular Facts concerning the Person we speak of. Moreover, the Book from which I have taken all this is very scarce. (q) Si hos non laudamus qui aliquid ab aliis sunt mutuati, quid de manifestis furibus dicemus, qui vel ipsa integra aliorum volumina sibi imprudentes adscribunt, & quasi steriles ac scelesti plagiarii, viventium filiorum (est enim haud dubiè legitima proles quicquid fecundum ingenium longo studio concepit, & peperit) miserandas infligunt piis parentibus orbitates, & se, summa cum jactantia, eorum operum authores mentiuntur, quæ magna cum infamia rapuerunt, ut fecit impurissimus omnium Joannes Taisnerius Hannonius. Qui opusculum nostrum, demonstrationis proportionum motuum localium contra Aristotelem, & alios philosophos, jamdiu antea à nobis editum, & iterum impressum Venetiis anno salutis 1554. ita integrum sibi desumpsit, ut nihil præter authoris nomen immutaverit, quid enim mutavisset, qui nec percipere poterat, quæ in ea disputatione continerentur? Homo vanus ab omni mathematica facultate alienus, qui merito propter crassissimam ignorantiam verebatur, ne vel aliqua Syllaba sublata, aut addita totius tractationis inficeretur substantia. Credidit (ut opinor) me jam vita functum qui furti nunquam argui posse confidit, & non intellexit suam temeritatem, qui seipsum mille argumentis qualis esset prodidit; dum utre inflato inanior sese juris doctorem, & simul etiam musici sacelli rectorem asseruit, quasi jura docere sit musici, aut jurisperiti sacellum regere, & dum de magnete, & motibus, tractatus emisit, nusquam in titulis se mathematicum nominavit, sed poetam, eo quod crediderit poeta. aut musici,

---

§ Valer. Andreas Desselius, Bibl. Belg. pag. 570.

‡ Jacobus Philippus Tomasinus, elog. virorum illustrium, pag. 161, 162. edit. Patav. 1630.

* Bullart. Acad. des Sciences, Tom. 2. p. 288, 289.

‖ See the Remark A.

† Fieri non posse quin Deus certas de Almamone pœnas sumeret, quod scientiis philosophicis introductis Mohammedanorum pietatem interpellaverit. Sephadius in commentariis ad Tograi poema, apud Pocockium notis in specimen histor. Arabum, pag. 166.

(g) See Lipsius in vita Taciti.

(h) Lipsius ibid.

(i) In vita Agricolæ, cap. 2. 44, 45.

(k) See the beginning of Book I. of his History.

(l) Canonherius in vita Corn. Taciti in limine discursuum politicorum.

(m) Jacob. Philippus Tomasinus, elog. pag. 162.

(n) Id. ib. pag. 161.

(o) Gabri… Naudæ… Bibliogra… phia politi… ca, p. m. 62, 63.

(p) Thoma… sius, de plagio lite… rario, p. m. 246.

(q) Jo. Baptista Benedictus, Patricius Venetus, Philosophus, in præfatione libri de Gnomonum umbrarumque solarium usu. This Book was printed at Turin, ann. 1574, in folio. Vossius says nothing of this Author in his Book de Scientiis Mathematicis. He has been divided into two in the Oxford Catalogue; There he is spoken of first under the Name of Joh. Baptista de Benedictis, and afterwards under that of Joh. Baptista Benedictus.

Countries of the World and in all Ages; and at this very Day a great many People complain of Carteſius, and other modern Philoſophers of the firſt Rank, as having occaſion'd the Contempt which ſo many Perſons expreſs for Devotion, and the Myſteries of Chriſtianity. Which might afford Matter for a (A) large Commentary.

TALAUS, King of Argos, Son of Abas or Bias, and Grand-ſon † of Lynceus, one of the fifty Sons-in-Law of Danaus, loſt the Crown and his Life by Amphiaraus's Contrivances. His Son Adraſtus was forced to fly to Sicyon, where ſome ſay he married the Daughter of King Polybius, and ſucceeded him. But others will have it, that he ſucceeded him, becauſe his Mother was the only Daughter of Polybius. See the Article of Adraſtus. Some tell us, that he, whom Amphiaraus dethroned and put to Death, was Pronax the Son of Talaus. See the Scholiaſt upon the ninth Nemean Ode of Pindar, wherein we are told what the Pretenſions of Amphiaraus were grounded upon: Melampus having cured the Daughters of Proetus King of Argos, who were grown mad, received, as a Reward, one half of the Kingdom of Argos, which he divided between him and his Brother Bias. But Melampus left behind him a Son call'd Antiphates, who was Oicles's Father, and Amphiaraus's Grand-father.

† Schol. Pindari in Od. 8. Pyth. & 9. Nem.

TAMIRAS, was ſent for from Cilicia into the Iſle of Cyprus, to teach the Art of the Haruſpices. The Temple of Venus at Paphos was conſecrated by Cinyras; and 'twas ſaid, that this Goddeſs, conceived and born in the Sea, had landed in that Place; but that Man of Cilicia was made uſe of for the thing I have mentioned. Things had been ſo ordered, that the Deſcendants of Cinyras and Tamiras were to preſide muſici, aut juriſperiti, eſſe de naturalibus motibus corporum diſſerere. Debebat ſaltem & in hoc mentiri infamis impoſtor, ut ſe mathematicum in titulis prædicaret, ut in præfatione ad lectorem ejuſdem uſurpati opuſculi fecit, dum ſe matheſeos publice legiſſe Ferrariæ, & alibi, trecentis, & pluribus auditoribus prædicat, cujus numeri auditorum ne ſextam quidem partem, quiſpiam vidit in Italia, in auditoriis cujuſvis (etiam primi nominis) mathematici: quis inquam hos infames laudaverit in Flaviam legem committentes? ac non potius juxta Conſtantini Cæſaris ſententiam, ad Celſum Aphricæ Vicarium reſcribentis, beſtiis ſubjiciendos cenſeat!

(A) Afford Matter for a large Commentary.] A thouſand Things might be ſaid upon this Subject; however I ſhall be ſhort, for I have already more Copy than I want to make an end of this Volume. As to the Matter of Fact, I ſhall only ſay, that Philoſophers have been at all times charged with Irreligion. The ancient Rhetoricians having ſaid, that among probable Propoſitions, ſome were grounded upon what generally happens, and others upon the common Opinion, alledged immediately theſe two Examples: Mothers love their Children: Philoſophers don't believe the Exiſtence of the Gods. (b) Probabile eſt id quod ferè fieri ſolet, aut quod in opinione poſitum eſt...... In eo genere, quod ferè ſolet fieri, probabile hujuſmodi eſt: SI MATER eſt, diligit filium: SI AVARUS eſt, negligit jusjurandum. In eo autem, quod in opinione poſitum eſt, hujuſmodi ſunt probabilia: Impiis apud inferos pœnas eſſe præparatas: Eos, qui philoſophiæ dent operam, non arbitrari deos eſſe. Apuleius obſerves, that moſt of the ancient Philoſophers were accuſed of denying the Exiſtence of the Gods, or of applying themſelves to Magick. (c) Hæc fermè communi quodam errore imperitorum philoſophis objectantur: ut partim eorum, qui corporum cauſas meras & ſimplices rimantur, irreligioſos putent, eoſque aiant Deos abnuere; ut Anaxagoram, & Leucippum, & Democritum, & Epicurum, cæteroſque rerum naturæ patronos: partim autem, qui providentiam mundi curioſius veſtigant, & impenſius Deos celebrant, eos vero vulgo Magos nominent: quaſi facere etiam ſciant, quæ, ſciant fieri: ut olim fuere Epimenides, & Orpheus, & Pythagoras, & Oſthanes. Our Takiddin would not have condemned the great Almamon, that Protector of Learning, who introduced the Study of Philoſophy, had he not obſerved the ill Effect of that Study. It raiſed many Doubts in the Minds of Men; it diſcovered to many People the Fooleries of the Mahometan Sect: and by that means the Publick Worſhip, Piety, and Devotion, grew weak and languid. Some Doctors (d) maintain, that the Arabian Philoſophers profeſt only Mahometiſm outwardly, and laugh'd at the Alcoran, becauſe they found in it ſome things contrary to Reaſon. Many People are fully perſuaded, that Carteſius and Gaſſendus believed the Real Preſence as little as the Fabulous Stories of old Greece. 'Tis alſo their Opinion, that the Followers of thoſe two Philoſophers are not good Catholicks; and that if they were allowed to teach publickly their Principles, they would quickly undermine all the Foundations of the Romiſh Religion. The Proteſtants have not a better Opinion of Carteſius's Doctrine. Generally ſpeaking, the Carteſians are ſuſpected of Irreligion, and their Philoſophy is thought to be very dangerous to Chriſtianity: So that many People believe, that the ſame Perſons, who have removed in our Age the Darkneſs which the Schoolmen had ſpread all over Europe, have increaſed the number of the Libertines, and made way for Atheiſm, or Scepticiſm, or the Unbelief of the greateſt Myſteries of Chriſtianity. But Irreligion is not only aſcribed to the Study of Philoſophy, but alſo to Philology; for 'tis ſaid, that Atheiſm never appear'd in France before the Reign of Francis I. and that it began to ſhew it ſelf in Italy, when Philological Learning was revived there. (e) The less Foreign Learning we have, ſays a Catholick Writer, the greater Submiſſion we expreſs for the Chriſtian Faith; and the most Learned Ages, ſays Baronius, have often produced moſt Unbelievers. The Aladiniſts appeared only under the Reign of Almanſor, who was the moſt Learned Monarch of his Age; and I find no Atheiſts in France before the Reign of Francis I. nor in Italy till after the taking of Conſtantinople, when Argyropulus, Theodorus Gaza, Georgius Trapezuntius, with the moſt celebrated Men of Greece, retired to the Dukes of Florence. What is certain, is, that moſt of the Wits and Learned Philoſophers, who ſhined in Italy, when the Belles Lettres began to revive there, had but little Religion. But on the other ſide, the Reſtoration of the Learned Languages, and good Literature, made way for the Reformation; as the Monks, and their Adherents foreſaw, who continually inveighed againſt Reuchlin, Eraſmus, and the other Scourges of Ignorance. Thus whilſt the Roman Catholicks deplore the Fatal Conſequences of the Study of good Literature, the Proteſtants (f) have all the Reaſon in the World to praiſe God for it. It is not ſo with the new Philoſophy, which demonſtratively overthrows Tranſubſtantiation, and all its Dependencies; for the ſame Weapons are made uſe of againſt the moſt eſſential Doctrines. In a word, ſuch is the Fate of Man, that the Knowledge which frees him from one Evil, throws him into another. Drive away Ignorance and Barbarity, and you'll put an end to Superſtition, and the Fooliſh Credulity of the People, ſo profitable to their Leaders, who afterwards make uſe of their Gain to plunge themſelves into Idleneſs and Debauchery: But by putting Men in a Capacity of diſcovering ſuch Diſorders, you make 'em deſirous of examining every thing; and at laſt they are ſo much for enquiring and ſcaning, that they find nothing that will ſatisfy their miſerable Reaſon.

However it be, I have heard ſome wiſe Men ſay, that the common Affectation of crying down the Philoſophers, as being guilty of Impiety, is a very imprudent Thing: For how great a Scandal would it be for ignorant People, if they came to know that 'tis the Opinion of many Doctors, that there is but little

) Cicero Inventilib. 1.
m. 29.
) Apu-
s in logia,
m. 291.
) Toſta-
in c.
Ex.
l. 20.
er.
d Phi-phi er Saenos a recint per Alcoum.
em pro-Calixin diſp.
verit.
ligion.
rit. ex
erroe, ſputante ura deuſtiones
gazelis,
Avicen-Metaph.
9. c. 7.
noxata Religiem dici,
1. ſect.
p. m.
6. in verba.
Philohis pa-ntibus.

(e) Clavigny de Sainte Honorine, Diſcernement & uſage des livres ſuſpects, p. 82. Note, that I don't alledge what he ſays as true Matter of Fact.

(f) See M. Jurieu's Reflections, Apolog. pour les Reformat. pag. 66. & ſeq. of the 1ſt Vol. in 4. upon Maimbourg's ſaying, hiſt. du Calvin. pag. 4. that the Courſe Francis I. took to revive Learning in his Kingdom.... proved, by a Misfortune he did not foreſee, an occaſion of bringing in Hereſy into his Kingdom ſide over the Ceremonies, but, that the Royal Family might have ſome Pre-eminence, the Family of Tamiras (Z) did quickly reſign their Share to them; ſo that from that time no other Prieſt was conſulted, but that of the Family of Cinyras §.

TANAQUIL, the Wife of Tarquinius Priſcus King of Rome, was born at Tarquinii in Tuſcany, where ſhe married Lucumon, the Son of a Man who fled thither, being expell'd from Corinth his Birth-place. Lucumon having inherited his Father's whole Eſtate, happen'd to be a very rich Man; and the Family of Tanaquil being one of the nobleſt in the Town, he hoped to raiſe himſelf to ſome Dignities; but being a Son of a Foreigner, he met with great Obſtacles *. Tanaquil, being vexed at the little Account that was made of her Huſband, and being unwilling to loſe the Glory ſhe was born in, reſolved to leave Tarquinii, in hopes of raiſing her ſelf in ſome other Place ‡. She therefore repreſented to her Huſband that their beſt way was to repair to Rome, where Men of Merit might hope for the nobleſt Preferments, whatever Country they might be of. Lucumon follow'd her Advice, and had an Omen of his great Fortune before he got to Rome. That Omen was explain'd (A) to him by his Wife; for ſhe had a great Skill in it. He took the Name of Tarquinius, and got the Eſteem and Affection of the Romans; and inſinuated himſelf into the King's Favour in ſuch a manner, that the Offices he obtain'd from him enabled him to aſpire to the Crown, and to ſucceed in his ambitious Deſign. He was kill'd in his Palace in the 38th Year of his Reign. Tanaquil appeared unconcerned, notwithſtanding this ſevere Blow, and managed things ſo dexterouſly, that ſhe ſettled the Crown upon Servius Tullius her Son-in-Law, whoſe good Fortune (B) ſhe had foretold long before *. Her Memory Religion among great Philoſophers; that Devotion is particularly to be found among the common People; and (a) that thoſe who have moſt carefully examin'd the Characters of Divinity of the Holy Scripture, are commonly leſs pious and devout than others. It were much more edifying to teach, as Plutarch (b) did, that Philoſophy is a Remedy for Impiety and Superſtition; and to ſay, with Origen, that no Man can be truly pious without Philoſophy. Omnino nec pium erga communem omnium Dominum eſſe abſque Philoſophia quemquam cenſebat (c). The Mixture of Good and Evil, that is to be found in all humane Things, appears on this occaſion in a particular manner. The Arabian Philoſophers came to know, by their Philoſophy, that the Alcoran was a falſe Revelation; but on the contrary many Jews forſook their Religion, and embraced the Pagan Philoſophy, which diſcovered to them, as they pretended, that Moſes had preſcribed them needleſs Laws. (d) Multis è Judæorum gente adeo perſuaſa eſt olim hæc opinio, quòd, ſub initia regni Saracenici ad Philoſophiam Ethnicam defectionem fecerint, quod iis leges haud pauca inutiles & ſupervacanea viderentur. Thus the ſame Principle, which ſometimes diſcovers a Falſity, is ſometimes prejudicial to Truth.

(Z) The Family of Tamiras did quickly reſign their Share.] Neverthleſs, Heſychius mentions certain Prieſts of the Iſle of Cyprus, call'd Ταμιράδαι, Tamirada. This Orthography in Heſychius's Manuſcripts gave Meurſius (e) a juſt occaſion to obſerve, that the Word Thamyras in Tacitus, ought to be read, Tamiras.

(A) That Omen was explain'd to him by his Wife.] When they came to the Janiculum, an Eagle lighted gently upon their Chariot, and took off Lucumon's Hat, and having for ſome time hovered over their Chariot, with a great Noiſe, put down the Hat very orderly in its proper Place. Tanaquil, ſitting by her Huſband, embraced him, and foretold him a great Fortune, explaining to him the Circumſtances of that Preſage. Thus they got into Rome, full of mighty Hopes. (f) Ad Janiculum forte ventum erat: ibi ei carpento ſedenti cum uxore, aquila ſuſpenſis demiſſa leniter alis pileum aufert: ſuperque carpentum cum magno clangore volitans, rurſus velut miniſterio divinitus miſſa, capiti apte reponit: inde ſublimis abiit. Accepiſſe id augurium læta dicitur Tanaquil; perita, ut vulgo Etruſci, cæleſtium prodigiorum mulier. Excelſa & alta ſperare complexa virum jubet: eam alitem ea regione cæli & ejus Dei nunciam veniſſe: circa ſummum culmen hominis auſpicium feciſſe: levaſſe humano ſuperpoſitum capiti decus, ut divinitus eidem redderet. Has ſpes cogitationeſque ſecum portantes, urbem ingreſſi ſunt.

(B) She had foretold the good Fortune of Servius Tullius.] He was born and bred up in the Palace of King Tarquin. One Day a Fire was ſeen about his Head whilſt he ſlept: The great Noiſe that was made at the ſight of this Prodigy, obliged that Prince to go and ſee what was the Matter: Some Body had a Mind to throw Water upon the Fire, but Tanaquil prevented it, and ordered that the Child ſhould not be diſturbed, till he awaked. He quickly awaked, and the Fire vaniſhed away. Then the Queen took her Spouſe aſide, and told him that this Child would one Day ſupport the Royal Family in their Adverſity, and that he ſhould be bred up as a very hopeful Subject. The King approved of it: great Care was taken of the Education of that Child, who became ſo accompliſhed that none was thought more worthy of being the King's Son-in-Law, and he ſucceeded Tarquin accordingly (g). Some believe, that his Mother was the Wife of Servius Tullius, who was kill'd in defending his Principality of Corniculum (h). They add, that this Woman was with Child, and that being known among the other Women-Slaves, ſome regard was had to her Quality. Tanaquil ſet her at Liberty, and had her in her Palace, where ſhe was delivered of a Boy. This is likely enough, but not wonderful enough for all ſorts of Hiſtorians: And therefore ſome would have it that the Birth of a King of Rome, of ſuch a mean Extraction, had ſomething more myſterious in it. Wherefore they ſuppoſed, that Ocriſia, Widow of the Prince of Corniculum, was for ſome time a Slave in Tanaquil's Palace before ſhe was made free; and that ſhe perceived in a Chimney the Figure of a Man's Privy-Parts. She acquainted the King and Queen with it. When the King ſaw that Prodigy he was amazed it: The Queen, who (i) was as well skilled in Preſages as the beſt Augur in Hetruria, told her Huſband, that it was decreed by Fate, that a Perſon of a Merit more than Humane, ſhould be born in the Palace; and that the Figure, which appeared in the Chimney, was to be his Father, and that the Woman, coupled with that Figure, would be his Mother. Tarquin being inform'd by ſome Men well-skill'd in ſuch Things, that Tanaquil gave a right Explication of that Prodigy, reſolved to get the Woman, who had ſeen that Member firſt, to lye with it: She was therefore dreſs'd up like a Bride, and brought into the Chamber where that Figure was. They left her alone, and ſhe was known by ſome Genius, whether it was Vulcan, or the Houſhold God. That Figure was never ſeen afterwards. Ocriſia was got with Child, and brought to Bed at the uſual time (a). The ſame thing has been ſaid almoſt of Romulus's Mother (b). If there had been no Annaliſts at Rome a long time before Rhetorick was taught there, I ſhould be apt to think, that the Declamations which the Sophiſts put their Scholars upon, had been converted into Hiſtorical Relations; for 'tis likely enough that the young Rhetoricians had a full Liberty to feign whatever they had a Mind to, in their Panegyrical Eſſays. The Deſign of thoſe Fictions

---

§ Ex Tacit. hiſt. l. 2. c. 3.

* Taken from Livy, lib. 1. pag. m. 23.

‡ Cum divitiæ jam animos facerent, auxit ducta in matrimonium Tanaquil, ſummo loco nata, & quæ haud facile iis, in quibus nata erat, humiliora ſineret ea, quæ innupſiſſet. Spernentibus Etruſcis Lucumonem exule advena ortum, ferre indignitatem non potuit, oblitaque ingenitæ erga patriam caritatis, dummodo virum honoratum videret, conſilium migrandi ab Tarquiniis cepit. Livius ib.

* Excid… ibid.

(a) Jurieu apud Saurin, Examen de la Theolog. pag. 98. See M. Saurin's Reflections upon this, ibid.

(b) See Plutarch de Iſide & Oſiride, pag. 378.

(c) St. Cyran quotes that Paſſage of St. Gregory of Neocæſarea in panegyr. in his Work againſt Father Garaſſe's Somme Theologique, Tom. 2. pag. 33, & 70.

(d) Joan. Spencerus, de Legibus Hebræorum, lib. 2. cap. 3. ſect. 1. ſub. fin. p. 225. edit. Hag. 1686. He confirms this by the Teſtimony of Gulielmus Pariſienſis, lib. de legibus, pag. 3, 4.

(e) Meurſius, in Cypro, pag. 50.

(f) Titus Livius, l. 1. c. 34. p. m. 23. See alſo Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, l. 3. c. 70. where the thing is more particularly related than by Livy.

(g) Tak… from Liv… ibid.

(h) A … of Italy, … beſieged, taken, … ſack'd … burnt by Tarquini… us Priſc… Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. 3. cap. 7…

(i) … quilem, uxorem, & aliom… ſapientem & divina… di ſcienti… nulli Etru… corum … cundam, dixiſſe. Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. 4. … init. pag. 207.

(a) See Plutarch in vita R… muli, pag. 18.

(b) Taken from Dio… nyſius … carnaſſ… lib. 4. …

Memory was in Veneration at Rome for several Ages. They preserved the (C) Works of her Hands, and great Virtues were ascribed to (D) her Girdle. St. Jerome * observes, that Tarquin was not so well known as his Wife: He adds, that the admirable Virtue of that Queen has taken such deep Roots in the Memory of all Ages, that it can never be forgotten. Yet it seems one might infer from some Passages of the ancient Authors, that she was look'd upon as a Woman, who had been too (E) imperious. It is not true that she was alive when Tarquinius Superbus put his Brother to ons was to know whether they had any Invention, and could turn and handle well a common Topick; and therefore they were not blamed for supposing a Divine, Miraculous, and very Surprizing Origine. This would have occasion'd great Abuses, if the most ingenious Pieces of those young Men had been preserved in the Archives, and look'd upon, some Ages after, as Historical Relations. How do we know but that most of the ancient Fables owe their Original to a Custom of making Panegyricks upon the ancient Heroes, on their Festival Days, and preserving the Pieces that seem'd to be the best. See what I shall say about Martyrologies, in the Article Valerius.

(C) They preserved the Works of her Hands.] Varro, Contemporary with Cicero, affirms, that he had seen in Sangus's Temple, Tanaquil's Distaff and Spindle, full of the Wool she spinn'd; and that they kept in the Temple of Fortune, a Royal Robe of her making, which Servius Tullius wore. Pliny, who mentions this, adds, that this was the Reason why the Maids, who married, were followed by a Person, who carried a Distaff and a Spindle, set off with Thread. He also says that Queen was the first who made that sort of Tunicks, which were given to young Boys to wear, when they put on the Toga Virilis, and to Maids when they married. Moreri has committed a gross Mistake; He takes the Tirones in Pliny to be new Soldiers, instead of understanding by that Word the Boys, who had lately left off the Gown of Childhood, the Prætexta. Here follows the whole Passage of Pliny. (c) Lanam in colo & fuso Tanaquilis, quæ eadem Caia (d) Cæcilia vocata est, in templo Sangi durasse, prodente se, auctor est M. Varro: factamque ab ea togam regiam undulatam in æde Fortunæ, qua Ser. Tullius fuerat usus. Inde factum, ut nubentes virgines comitaretur colus compta, & fusus cum stamine. Ea prima texuit rectam tunicam, quales cum toga pura tirones induuntur, novæque nuptæ. I don't know why Father Hardouin prefers Plutarch's Opinion to that of Varro, and Verrius. (e) Verius Plutarchus in quæst. Rom. pag. 271. uxorem ait fuisse (Caiam Cæciliam) unius è Tarquinii liberis: eidemque in templo Sanci statuam priscis temporibus positam cum sandaliis & fuso, quæ domi acta vita industriæque argumento essent. 'Tis more reasonable to think, that this Caia Cæcilia, whose Brazen Statue, Sandals and Spindles, were to be seen in Sancus's Temple, was the Wife of the first Tarquin, than to think she was the Wife of one of Tarquin's Sons. I know Dionysius Halicarnassæus (f) supposes, that the first Tarquin had a Son, who was married, and was the Father of the two Sons-in-Law of Servius Tullius; but neither he, nor any other Historian, mentions the Merit of the Woman, who married that Son of Tarquin; and yet she must have been very illustrious, if the Romans paid her the Honour, mention'd by Plutarch. Was she the Wife of one of the last Tarquin's Sons? But would the Romans have had such a Veneration for the Daughter-in-Law of a Tyrant, whom they had expell'd with his whole Family, and whose Memory was always execrable to them? Was she the first Wife of Tarquinius Superbus? I know she was (g) an honest Woman, but her Merit is not to be compared with that of Tanaquil. She never reigned, and she died young; and therefore she had not the Opportunities of shewing what she could do, as Tanaquil, who reigned a long time. We may therefore say, that the Monuments preserved in Sancus's Temple, belonged to that Queen, and not to the Wife of one of Tarquin's Sons: Festus and Pliny, or rather Verrius and Varro, have been more exact than Plutarch in this particular; it is one of the Mistakes of the last Historian, which are many. Perhaps it will be objected to me, that those Sandals, and that Spindle, don't suit with such an intriguing Queen as Tanaquil was; and that it appears from those Monuments that the Romans intended to honour the Memory of a Woman, who seldom went abroad, but kept much at Home, minding her Distaff: But was it Tanaquil's Character? I answer, that she was indeed an able Queen, and a States-Woman, and that she shewed a great Courage and Resolution upon Occasions; notwithstanding which she might mind her Distaff, and her Needle, as being her usual Employments.

(D) Great Virtues are ascribed to her Girdle.] Had I said that it was kept as a perpetual Cause of Miracles, I had express'd my self wrong; for the Romans had not recourse to it, as to a Moral Cause, but as to a Physical one: They supposed, that Tanaquil had found out excellent Remedies for Distempers, and enclosed them in her Girdle: And therefore those who got some Scrapings of it, believed they would be cured by them; not because the Soul of that Queen would reward their Faith, but because they had some Particles of the Remedies contain'd in that Girdle. Which being so, no exact Comparison can be made between those who had recourse to Tanaquil's Statue, in order to rub her Girdle, and those who endeavour to get a piece of St. Hubert's Stole, or to have their Beads touched by some Relick. There is a great deal of Credulity on both sides. I leave it to those, who are at leisure, to examine whether old Rome equall'd the new in this Respect; and to help 'em a little in their Enquiry, I shall set down the Words of my Author. (h) Prædia Verrius vocari ait ea remedia quæ Caja Cæcilia uxor Tarquinii Prisci invenisse existimatur, & immiscuisse zonæ suæ qua præcincta statua ejus est in æde Sancti qui Deus Dius Fidius vocatur, ex qua zona periclitantes ramenta sumunt: ea vocari ait prædia quod mala prohibeant. What Pliny relates of Pelops's Rib, is much more miraculous. It was shewed as a Remedy, (i) Elide solebat ostendi Pelopis costa quam eburneam affirmabant. Here's a Relick that wrought Miracles among the Heathens: For Pliny had been saying, that the Members (k) of some Persons have the Virtue of curing Diseases; and therefore he means that this Part of Pelops's Body had that Faculty. So that the only thing that Charles Stephens is to be blamed for, is his making no distinction between what he infers from Pliny's Words, and what Pliny himself says. Such a Distinction ought never to be neglected: Those, who take no care to observe it, occasion many Authors to quote, as the Words of an ancient Writer, what is but a Paraphrase, or a Consequence of a Modern. Here are Charles Stephens Words: (l) Ad quem quidem humerum (m) post ejusdem Pelopis mortem varia morborum sanabantur genera, & multiplicia edebantur miracula. Plin. libro decimo nono, capite tertio. Lloyd and Hoffman have not rectified this Passage in the least, nor even the false Citation contain'd in it.

A French Author, who lived in the XVIth Century, tells a Story which he had never been able to prove. The Tarquins, says he (n), caused a Statue to be erected in the middle of their Palace, with Slippers on, a Distaff and a Spindle, that those who followed their Family, might imitate their assiduous Diligence, in minding Domestick Concerns, without stirring abroad. Thus you see how the Passage of Pliny, concerning Tanaquil's Statue, has been strangely misrepresented. Every Body takes upon him to alter some Circumstances in what he quotes: By this means Matters of Fact are quickly spoiled and perverted by those who mention them.

(E) Who had been too imperious.] This is what many Authors infer from these Words of Juvenal: (a) Consulit ictericæ lento de funere matris, Ante tamen de te TANAQUIL tua; and from these Words of Ausonius, (b) Tanaquil tua nesciat istud. Tu contemne alios. This seems to signify, that the Wives, who govern'd their Husbands, were call'd Tanaquil's. 'Tis Scaliger's Opinion. (c) Uxorem sanctissimam Paulini, cujus meminit Ambrosius Epist. XXXXVI vocat Tanaquilem Ausonius, videns scilicet: quia ei erat addictus Paulinus. Et, ut ex eodem loco Ambrosii cognoscimus, videtur secutus uxoris consilium Paulinus in secessu Nolano. Quare vocat eam fœminam Tanaquilem poeta noster: quia illis temporibus ita solerent uxores * Notior est marito suo Tanaquil, illum inter multa regum nomina jam abscondit antiquitas, hanc rara inter fœminas virtus altius sæculorum omnium memoriæ, quàm ut excidere possit, infixit. Hieronym. advers. Jovinian.

---

(h) Sextus Pompeius Festus, de verborum significatione, voce prædia.

(i) Plinius lib. 28. cap. 4. pag. m. 568.

(k) Quorundam partes medicæ sunt sicuti diximus de Pyrrhi regis pollice.

(l) In Dictionario, voce Pelops.

(m) Pliny says costa, and not humerus. But he is the only Author, who mentions the Ivory Rib of Pelops. Another Writer says 'twas a Shoulder. Humeroque Pelops insignis eburno. Virgil. Georg. lib. 3. v. 7.

(n) Franc. Tillier, in his Philogame, pag. 120. Paris 1578.

(a) Juvenal. Sat. 6. v. 563.

(b) Auson. epist. 23. v. 31.

(c) Scalig. in Auson. epist. 23. p. m 678.

to Death, nor that she was (F) the Mother of that Tarquin. The Historian, who shews the Falsity of it, has been more successful in confuting his Predecessors (G) than in avoiding Mistakes.

TANDE

vocare, quæ imperabant maritis. He confirms it by a Passage of Sidonius Apollinaris, wherein Chilperic's Wife, who had a great Ascendant over her Husband, is call'd Tanaquil; she is also compared with Agrippina. (d) Quod principaliter medetur afflictis, temperat Lucumonem nostrum Tanaquil sua, & aures mariti virosa susurronum face completas, opportunitate salsi sermonis eruderat, cujus studio factum scire vos par est, nihil interim quieti fratrum communium apud animum communis patroni junioris Cybiratarum venena nocuisse, neque quicquam (Deo propitiante) nocitura; si modo, quamdiu præsens potestas Lugdunensem Germaniam regit, nostrum suumque Germanicum præsens Agrippina moderetur. Here is a Prince under his Wife's Direction; but because such a Direction proved advantageous to his Subjects, it is to Tanaquil's Honour. It ought to be inferr'd from it, that if the first Tarquin was govern'd by his Wife, it was no Misfortune. Another Commentator upon Ausonius observes, that Paulinus (e) was not well pleased to see his Wife compared with a Queen, ambitious, and addicted to Magick: He could have wish'd she had rather been compared with Lucretia (f).

(F) 'Tis not true that she was living, when .... nor that she was the Mother.] The two Daughters of Servius Tullius and Tarquinia, the Daughter of Tarquinius Priscus and of Tanaquil, were married to Lucius Tarquinius and Aruns Tarquinius. Those two Brothers were not like one another in any thing, no more than their two Wives: One of them was an honest Man, and the other a profligate one: One of the Tullia's was an honest Woman, and the other a wicked one. The latter was married to the honest Man; and the other to the profligate one. The wicked Tullia proposed to the wicked Tarquin to marry him: She promised him to make away with her Husband, and made him promise to kill his Wife: and before they parted, they committed (g) Incest. Aruns Tarquinius was soon after poison'd by his Wife, and the eldest Tullia by her Husband; and then the two Murtherers were not long without marrying together; rather without the King's Opposition, than with his Consent, magis non prohibente Servio quam approbante (h). Fabius Pictor said, in his Roman History, that Tanaquil buried Aruns Tarquinius; for which he is censured by (i) Dionysius Halicarnassæus, who shews, that Tanaquil would have been then 115 Years old. Here is the Proof of it: Tarquinius Priscus (k) was at least twenty-five Years of Age, when he settled at Rome; 'tis very probable his Wife was twenty. But they came to Rome the first Year of Ancus Martius's Reign, according to some Historians, or the eighth, according to others. I keep to this last Opinion; for if they did not come sooner to Rome, they did not come later; since all the Historians are agreed, that Ancus Martius, in the ninth Year of his Reign, gave Tarquin the Command of the Cavalry against the Latins: And therefore, seeing that Prince reigned twenty-four Years, it follows, that when he died Tarquin had attained to his forty-second Year, more or less, and Tanaquil to the thirty-seventh Year of her Age. To which, if you add the thirty-three Years of that Tarquin's Reign, you'll find that he died at eighty Years of Age, and that he left behind him Tanaquil, who was seventy five Years old. But Aruns died the fortieth Year (l) of the Reign of Servius Tullius, who succeeded that Tarquin: If therefore Tanaquil had been then alive, she would have been 115 Years old. Nothing can be more exact than this Computation of Dionysius Halicarnassæus, nor more reasonable than the liberty he takes of censuring Fabius Pictor for his Carelessness. (m) Οὕτως ὀλίγον ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ ἱστορίᾳ αὐτοῦ τὸ περὶ τὴν ἐξέτασιν τῆς ἀληθείας ἀταλαίπωρον. Adeo parum laboris hic scriptor impendit perquirenda veritati historicæ. He takes notice of a like Carelessness in the same Fabius Pictor, and in many other Historians, who affirm, that the two Tarquins, the Sons-in-Law of Servius Tullius, were the Sons of King Tarquin. Those Historians wrote without minding the Absurdities that resulted from their Accounts. (n) [illegible] Omnino enim inconsiderate ac negligenter historiam hanc prodiderunt scriptores Latini, non caventes absurditates impossibilitatibus quibus fides ipsarum elevetur. Let us see Dionysius's Proofs. Since Tanaquil was seventy-five Years old, when she lost her Husband, the youngest of her Sons must have then been twenty-five Years of Age: For Women leave off bearing of Children when they are above fifty Years. The other Son had been twenty-seven Years old. Would they have been so silly as to suffer Tanaquil to deprive 'em of the Crown, in favour of Servius Tullius? Would she have been so foolish and unnatural as to exclude them from it? These Absurdities are fully represented by the Author, who adds, that if Tarquinius Superbus had been twenty-seven Years of Age, when Tarquinius Priscus was kill'd, he would have been above seventy when he dethroned his Father-in-Law, and above ninety-five when he was expell'd from Rome, and about 110 when he left off making War in Person with the Romans: And yet he is represented as a Man, who was in the Flower of his Age, when he usurp'd the Throne. He commanded at the Siege of Ardea, when the Romans dethroned him. He endeavoured for the space of fourteen Years to recover the Throne, being at several (o) Battles, and performing all the Functions of a General. Some Historians, being sensible of these Absurdities, supposed, that he was not the Son of Tanaquil, but of one Gegania, the second Wife of Tarquinius Priscus; but, besides that they have no Proof for it, there being no Monuments extant, wherein Gegania is mention'd, they involve themselves in many Difficulties: They must say, that Tarquinius Priscus being about eighty Years of Age, and having two Daughters married, did nevertheless marry again, and had Children by his second Wife. These last Objections of Dionysius Halicarnassæus are not very strong; for it might be answered, that Gegania was married before Tarquin was so old, and that she would not be the only Woman, that bore Children, being married to a Man about eighty Years old: And that a King, who has only Daughters, is willing, though he be never so old, to try whether he can get a Son. That Historian has forgot one of the strongest Objections; he does not say, that according to the general Tradition, Tanaquil did so cunningly manage the Intrigue, after Tarquin's Death, that she raised Servius Tullius to the Throne: Which shows that what is said of Gegania, is a fabulous Story. This being so, is it not a surprizing thing that Dionysius (p) should have found but one (q) Author, who said that the two Sons-in-Law of Tullius were not the Sons of the first Tarquin, but his Grand-sons. The Opinion of this single Author has been adopted by that great Historian. Livy was not so judicious; he rather chose to follow the Crowd (r), and thereby involved himself in many Difficulties, prejudicial to his Memory. See Laurentius Valla's Dissertation upon that Subject. One can hardly apprehend how so great a Man as Livy could commit so many Faults, in his Account of the Tarquins. The greatest Objection that can be raised against Dionysius Halicarnassæus is this, that Tanaquil would not have endeavoured to place her Son-in-Law, Servius Tullius, on the Throne, had she had two Grand-Sons: But it may be answered, that they were in their Infancy, and that the Posture of Affairs required a Successor, who might reign by himself; and that therefore she was obliged to prefer her Son-in-Law to her Grand Sons.

(G) The Historian .... has been more successful in confuting .... than in avoiding Mistakes.] He fell into his own Snare; for he ascribes to Tanaquil a Daughter, of whom it is no less absurd, that she should be the Mother, than 'tis absurd, that Lucius Tarquinius, and Aruns, should be her Sons. He will have it (s), that Brutus was the Son of Tarquinia, Daughter of Tarquinius Priscus and of Tanaquil; and says, that Brutus was very young, when his Father, and

---

(d) Sidon. Apollinar. epist. 7. lib. 5. pag. m. 138.

(e) Moleste tulisse videtur Paulinus in epistola ad Ausonium prima & secunda: & Lucretiæ illi pudicissimæ matronæ comparari maluit, quam isti Tanaquili, ambitiosæ mulieri, & sagæ. Vinetus in Ausonium, epist. 23. pag. 678.

(f) Nec Tanaquil mihi, sed Lucretia conjux, says he in another place.

(g) Ἀσμένως δέξασθαι τὴν αἵρεσιν ὁ Ταρκύνιος, καὶ αὐτίκα δοὺς αὐτῇ πίστεις, καὶ λαβὼν τὰ προβλήματα τῶν ἀνοσίων γάμων, καὶ διαπραξάμενος, ἀπήρχετο. Libenter conditionem accepit Tarquinius, moxque data & accepta fide, ac delibato incestarum nuptiarum fructu, abiit. Dionys. Halicarn. lib. 4. pag. 234. edit. Lips. 1691.

(h) Livius, lib. 1. p. 29.

(i) Diony). Halicarn. ubi supra.

(k) Idem. lib. 3. pag. 218.

(l) Ἐν ταῖς ἐνιαυσίαις ἀναγραφαῖς εὗρον τῷ τεσσαρακοστῷ ἐνιαυτῷ τῆς Τυλλίου ἀρχῆς τὸν Ἄρροντα τετελευτηκότα παρειλήφαμεν. In annalibus invenimus anno regis Tullii quadragesimo defunctum Aruntem. Id. lib. 4. pag. 234. (m) Id. ib.

(n) Id. pag.

(o) According to Livy, l. 2. p. 48. he drove his Horse against the Roman Dictator at the Head of his Army, and was wounded.

(p) Ubi supra. pag. 213.

(q) Lucius Piso Frugi.

(r) Hic L. Tarquinius, Prisci Tarquinii regis filius neposne fuerit, parum liquet: pluribus tamen auctoribus filium crediderim. Titus Livius, lib. 1. pag. m. 29. A.

(s) Dionys. Halicarn. lib. 4. pag. 264.

TANDEMUS †, an Heretick, who rose in Germany, under the Emperor Henry V. about the Year 1124, and spread his Errors particularly among the Citizens of Antwerp. He was a Lay-Man, who had his Tongue well hung, and exceeded the greatest Scholars of his Time in Subtilty, Eloquence, and many other Things. He was richly (Z) clothed; he kept a good Table, and was attended by three Thousand armed Men; by whose means he brought about what the Charms of his Language could not effect. He had infatuated his Followers to such a Degree, that they drank the Water in which he bathed himself, and kept it as a Relick. One may very well wonder, (though perhaps 'tis no wonder at all) how he could seduce many People with such odious Doctrines and Actions, as his were. He maintain'd, that it was no Sensual Action, but rather a Spiritual One, to lye with a Maid in her Mother's Presence, and with a Wife in the sight of her Husband, and practised that abominable Doctrine. He kill'd those whom he could not persuade. He ascribed no Virtue to the Sacrament of the Eucharist, and acknowledged no Distinction between Lay-men, and those in Orders. A Priest, with whom he happen'd to be in a Boat, gave him a blow on the Head, which kill'd him. His Errors were not quickly extirpated; but at length those erring People were brought back into the Pale of the Church. Norbert * was the chief Instrument of their Conversion, and so moved both Men and Women that they brought back the Hosts they had kept for the space of ten Years in some Holes or Trunks ‡.

T A-

and eldest Brother were put to Death, by order of Tarquinius Superbus. I shall make use of his Reasons against himself. If the Mother of that Brutus was Tanaquil's Daughter, she was twenty-five Years of Age, when her Father was assassinated, and sixty-nine when Tarquinius Superbus usurp'd the Crown; and therefore Brutus would have been then nineteen Years of Age. 'Tis not likely that Tarquin put to Death his Brother-in-Law, and his Nephew, the same Year he took away Servius Tullius's Life. 'Tis probable he had the Policy to leave some Intervals between his great Crimes. We may therefore say, that Brutus was at least twenty Years of Age, when his Father was put to Death; but if he had been of that Age, would he not have had time enough to shew his Wit? Whoever undertakes to conceal a great Courage, a noble Soul, and a great Design under the out-side of a Fool, must needs be a Man of a great Genius not to contradict himself. Brutus did admirably succeed in hiding those things, under the false Appearance of Stupidity; and therefore he had a great Address, and several noble Qualities which he would have discovered before his Father's Death; and therefore he would have had the same Fate with his eldest Brother: The Tyrant would have destroyed both of 'em, lest they should revenge the Death of their Father. It must be said then, that Brutus had not yet shewn his natural Endowments; and therefore he was not nineteen Years of Age, when Tullius was dethroned. I allow him to be fifteen, as I have done in his Article; according to which Supposition he was born in the 54th Year of his Mother's Life, whereby some Objections of Dionysius Halicarnassæus come to nothing.

Laurentius Valla alledges against Livy, the Argument taken from the Age of Tarquin's Son; as if that Historian had said, that Brutus and they were of the same Age: But I don't find that Livy says so, nor that it can be inferr'd from Brutus's going with them to Delphi. This would prove a very strong Argument against Dionysius Halicarnassæus, (b) who tells us, that the Marriage of Tarquin and Tullia falls in the fortieth Year of Servius Tullius's Reign; from whence it follows, that Tarquin's Children were but two or three Years of Age, when their Father invaded the Throne: And therefore, if there was a Necessity that Brutus should be of the same Age or thereabouts, he must have been born in the 65 or 66 Year of his Mother's Life. I would not much insist upon that Proof: For, though that Historian informs us, that Tarquin would have Brutus (c) to be bred up with his Children, one cannot affirm, that he believed they were not much younger than Brutus. A Lad of eighteen or twenty Years may be placed with Princes of seven or eight Years of Age, to be their Companion; especially when such a Familiarity (a vain Shew of Honour) is only design'd for their Sport. When all is done, it must be acknowledg'd, that they were younger than he; for he had some Children old enough to engage in a Conspiracy, when (d) the eldest of Tarquin's Sons was not yet thirty Years of Age. I must take notice of a Mistake in these four Propositions of Dionysius Halicarnassæus: 1. That if Tarquinius Superbus had been the Son of the first Tarquin, he would have been 27 Years old, when the first Tarquin was kill'd: 2. That Servius Tullius had been (e) only three Years older than he: 3. That Servius Tullius was forty Years in possession of the Crown, that was set upon his Head, after the Death of the first Tarquin: 4. And that therefore, Tarquinius Superbus would have been above seventy Years old, when Servius Tullius was dethroned. This is a very wrong Consequence; and rather than ascribe it to the Historian, I had rather say, that the Transcribers skipp'd the Word τέτταρα, quatuor; for he could not be ignorant that Servius Tullius reign'd forty-four Years.

Have you observed, said one to me the other Day, that Henry Glareanus (f), having read Valla's Dissertation, and Dionysius's Arguments against Fabius Pictor's Opinion, does nevertheless adopt that Opinion; and draws up the Pedigree of the Tarquins according to it? He says, that the two Sons-in-Law of Servius Tullius were the Sons of the first Tarquin: He also says, that Brutus's Mother was his Daughter. I don't much wonder, that Stephen (g) Pasquier has committed the same (h) Fault; for perhaps he never heard of Valla's Book, and did not observe the Dispute of Dionysius Halicarnassæus against Fabius Pictor, and the other Roman Historians. I know Glareanus acknowledges, that the Opinion of Dionysius is grounded on good Reasons, multis id ac dignissimis astruens argumentis. Generally speaking, they are the same with those of Laurentius Valla. However, I believe, as Glareanus does, he did not steal them from that ancient Historian: he had read the ancient Authors: But after all, more learned Men than he know not, when they write Books, that such or such things are to be found in Plutarch, or Diodorus Siculus, &c. He protests, he knew not that Dionysius Halicarnassæus had alledged those Arguments, and he is more free than Perottus and Politian in acknowledging from what Authors he takes what is not his own. (i) Nisi quis Dionysium ab eo non lectum, atque eum suopte hoc ingenio expiscatum contendat, quod ipse fatetur in priore defensione adversus Benedictum Morandum quendam. Nam ut de Valla aliud suspicer ejus candor obstat. Liberè enim ac ingenuè ubique fateri solet, per quos profecerit, & unde habuerit quod scripserit: secus certè atque Perottus in suo cornu aut in suis operibus Politianus, gloriola ac popularis aura captatores, ut mihi quidem visum est, etsi bonæ literæ eis multum debent. I heard that Man patiently, and then I shewed him, that Glareanus declares plainly enough against Livy, and acquaints his Readers, that he gives the Genealogy of the Tarquins only according to the Plan of that Author. I further alledged a probable Reason against those, who charge Valla with Plagiarism in this particular; viz. that he did not make use of an Observation (k), which might have strengthen'd his Arguments, and which he might have found in Dionysius Halicarnassæus.

(Z) Richly cloathed.] This is a killing Blow for Moreri, who says (l), that Tandemus revived the Heresy of the Adamites. The latter were particularly distinguish'd by their Doctrine about Nakedness

† He is also call'd Tanchelin

* The Founder of the Order of the Premonstratenses.

‡ Pratealus voce. Tandemus ex Sigeberto.

(b) Dionys. Halicarn. lib. 4. pag. 2[illegible]

(c) [illegible]

...Verique in... liberos ...os patie... ...ur, non ...onoris ...usa, ut ...deri vo... ...ir, quasi ...gnarum; ...d ut ridi... ...lis dictis ...stisque ...lecta... ...ento es... ...t adole... ...entibus, ...emad... ...odum ...lent veri ...ui. Id. ...d. pag.

(d) The ...r in ...ich Tar... ...n was ...ll'd. ...t he was ...ll'd the ...th Year ...his ...ign an ...began ...four ...ars af- ...he mar- ...d Tul... ...; for ...rvius ...llius ...n de- ...ned the ...th Year ...his ...ign.

(e) Τρισὶ μόνον ἔτεσιν [illegible] προγενέστερος ἦν. Triennio tantum eorum alterum antecederet. Ibid. pag. 212.

(f) Glareanus in annotationibus ad lib. 1. T. Livii, pag. m. 40.

(g) In the 7th Letter of the 9th Book, pag. m. 546.

(h) Except that he says, pag. 548. that Brutus was Tarquin's Cousin-German; wherein he is mistaken.

(i) Glareanus, ubi supra.

(k) Dionysius Halicarnassæus shews, that Lucumon went to Rome the 8th Year of Ancus's Reign at the farthest; from whence it follows, that he lived 16 Years at Rome before he was a King. But Valla says he lived there only ten Years.

(l) At the Word Adamites.

TAPHIANS, a People situate towards Acarnania, the same with the Teleboes. See the Remarks in the Article TELEBOES.

TAPPERUS (RUARDUS) a Native of Enchuysen in Holland, lived in the XVIth Century. He studied Philosophy and Divinity at Louvain, where he was Professor of Divinity thirty-nine Years, and Dean of St. Peter's Church about twenty-four Years. He was also Chancellor of that University. He followed sometimes the Court of Charles V. and was consulted by that Prince upon several important Occasions *. Some say, that those Avocations hindred him (A) from throughly studying the Doctrine of Grace; and that for want of reading St. Augustin carefully, and out of a desire of keeping at too great a distance from the Protestants, he came too near (B) Pelagianism. He was deputed to the Council of Trent †, as the Emperor's Divine, in the Year 1551; where he discovered a great ß Capacity: And at his Return he set up for a Party-Leader γ against Michael Baius, who strictly adhered to St. Augustin's Doctrine about Predestination and Free-will. He ‡ died at Brussels the second of (C) March 1559, at seventy-one Years of Age, and was buried at Louvain. He left his Estate to the Poor, and his Books to the Faculty of Divinity ↓. I'll give a (D) Catalogue of his Works, and (E) some Extracts of that Doctor's ness: But no Body observes, that Tandemus would have every one to shew his whole Body, as Adam and Eve shewed it before their Fall. On the contrary, he lov'd to be finely dress'd. (m) In pretioso habitu, & vestibus deauratis incedens.

(A) Those Avocations hindred him from throughly studying the Doctrine of Grace.] "He would not "have departed from the common Doctrine of the "(a) University, were it not that his Attendance at "Court, and his extraordinary Occupations, took "away from him the time he should have spent in "reading St. Augustin, before he fill'd his Head with "the Notions of a new Divinity." This is what I find in Page 48 of a Book, printed in 1688, with this Title, Apologie Historique des deux censures de Louvain & de Douay sur la matiere de la Grace.

(B) Out of a desire of keeping at too great a distance from the Protestants, he came too near Pelagianism.] "(b) The Desire of being always, and in every "thing, of a contrary Opinion to the new Hereticks, "was a common Temptation at that time, which "made some great Men depart from Tradition. "Tapperus was one of 'em.... Peter Soto, that "Learned Dominican, Confessor to Charles V.... "wrote a long and learned Letter to Tapperus, "wherein he shewed him, that he could not follow "those new Opinions, without running into Pelagianism." Soto was in the right; for Tapperus taught in express Words, that Man can do many good Actions by the meer Strength of Nature, and without the Assistance of Grace, (c) Sine gratia ex viribus natura multa bona ab hominibus fieri posse, and that impious Men and the Infidels might have glorified and worship'd God, and avoided Sin, only by the help of Nature. (d) Quòd Impii & Infideles per solam natura legem, sicut Deum cognoscere, ita eum solum adorare & glorificare potuerunt: & quòd Impius & Infidelis solis natura talentis naturalibusque viribus relictus possit vitare peccata: quia, inquit, discernit inter multa licita atque illicita, ita pro tempore & loco potest non peccare, nolle fornicari, ex eo quod judicat illa esse illicita. OMNE ENIM QUOD MALUM ESSE NOVIT, ODISSE ATQUE ABOMINARI POTEST. He asserted, that a Man would not be guilty for not converting himself, if he wanted a Grace necessary for his Conversion. (e) Si igitur deest gratia, quâ opus est, ut ad Deum cor converti possit, NEC PECCATUM EST quòd quis non convertitur; quia non potest pro tunc ad Deum converti, & necessariò non convertitur, & per consequens non liberè. Some other Propositions of this Nature, extracted out of Tapperus's Book, may be seen in the new Edition of Michael Baius's Works, at Page 218 of the 2d Part.

(C) He died the 2d of March 1559, at 71 (f) Years of Age.] Perhaps some will say, that Moreri has committed two Faults: I. in putting 1559 instead of 1558. II. In affirming, notwithstanding this, that Tapperus died at his Return from the Council. Would he have said so, if he had known, that Tapperus return'd from Trent to Louvain in the Year 1552? He found the first Mistake in Valerius Andreas; but why did not he take notice of a thing in that Author, whereby that Mistake is rectified? The two Latin Verses, wherein the Numeral Letters point out the Day and the Year of that Doctor's Decease, give us the Year 1558. Moreri quotes them after Valerius Andream, and therefore he should have concluded from them that 1559 was a Fault of the Press. Besides, Valerius Andreas observes (g), that Tapperus's Apotheosis was printed in the Year 1558. This is what may be objected to Moreri: But I have something to say in his Vindication, as to the first Head; for he was in the right to place Tapperus's Death in the Year 1559: And because the Nature of his Work did not oblige him to make any Criticisms, he may be excused for keeping to the Bibliotheca Belgica, without entering upon the Discussion of the Faults. The Author of that Bibliotheque is not exact enough, he puzzles and confounds his Reader. He acquaints us, that the two Verses mention'd by him, point out the Year in which Tapperus died; but they point out the Year 1558. I add, that the Apotheosis of that Doctor was printed in the Year 1558, how can those things be reconciled with the Year 1559, in which he says Tapperus died? Why does he not remove such a Difficulty? Should he not have acquainted us, that the Author of those two Verses began the Year at Easter? At this rate the second of March 1558, mention'd by him, is truly the second of March 1559. I think Valerius Andreas knew nothing of this Solution. Note, That the Author of Tapperus's Apotheosis supposes (h), that Tapperus died after Charles V. 'Tis certain that Emperor departed this Life in September 1558: Which proves, that the second of March, on which Tapperus died, belongs to the following Year, and that the Apotheosis was not printed (i) till the Year 1559.

(D) A Catalogue of his Works.] He publish'd in two Volumes in Folio, at Louvain 1555. Explicationes in articulos circa Ecclesiastica dogmata hoc sæculo controversa, à Facultate Theologica Academia Lovaniensis Caroli V. Imp. jussu collectos. His Orationes Theologica una cum corollario de veris calamitatum Belgii causis atque remediis, were published by Lindanus at Cologne in the Year 1577, in 8vo. An Edition of his Works in Folio came out in the same Town, in the Year 1582. The Original of his Treatise, de Providentia Dei & Predestinatione is kept at Louvain; but 'tis such an ugly hand that no Body can read it (k).

(E) Some Extracts of his Apotheosis.] My Edition is that of Basil 1567, in 8vo. The (l) Title of it runs thus. D. Ruardi Tappart Enchusani, hereticæ pravitatis primi & postremi per Belgicum inquisitoris, Cancellarii Academia Lovaniensis, Apotheosis: Gratiano Vero Autore. Lege lector funestissimam Ecclesiasticorum tyrannidem, qua quid profecerint demonstrabit, nisi Deus avertat, totius tandem inferioris Germania excidium: liber ante octo Annos primum editus fuit, sed ita ut omnia ista, qua nunc præsentibus motibus gliscunt, tanquam in speculo ostenderit. Tuum igitur est collatis omnibus inter se, judicium facere quàm nihil autorem præsagientem fefellerit. 'Tis a Dialogue between Tapperus, a Genius, and St. Peter. I find in it, that Tapperus had a Mind to be made Bishop of (m) Louvain; that when he delivered, in the same Town, a Panegyrick upon Maximilian King of Bohemia, that Prince silenc'd him with these Words; I have heard what he will say, as well as what he has already said; that he could not endure those, who said, that the Clergy should be allow'd to marry, and exhorted the latter to beg of

---

* Valer. Andreas Bibl. Belg. pag. 802.

† Opera Baii part. 2. p. 191. edit. 1696.

ß Valer. Andr. ib. pag. 803.

γ Opera Baii ibid. pag. 207, 217.

‡ Valer. Andr. ib.

↓ Id. ib.

(m) Prateol. in elencho heres. voce Tandemus.

(a) The University of Louvain.

(b) Gery, Apologie histor. des censures, pag 49.

(c) Ruard. Tapper. in art. 7. contra Protestantes apud opera Mich. Baii part. 2. pag. 218. edit. 1696.

(d) Oper. Baii ibid.

(e) Ibid.

(f) This does not agree with his Apotheosis, where 'tis affirm'd, that he was born the fifteenth of February 1485.

Doctor's Apotheoſis. Notwithſtanding his violent Zeal againſt the Proteſtants, he gave out * that what is ſaid in the ſixth Chapter of St. John's Goſpel does not concern the Lord's Supper, though the Fathers adapted it to that Myſtery in their Sermons. This Opinion of his † was confuted. He thought, that Penſion Regenſis of God, that he would be pleaſed to deliver them from the Temptation of the Fleſh by ſome Dreams; or, if ſuch a Remedy was not ſufficient, to be prudent, when they could not be Chaſte. Ad cœlibatum ſervandum, vitandumque conjugium ſoles noſtris orgiis initiatos hortari ut quoties ſentirent deſiderio humanitatis intumuiſſe venas, orarent Deum, ut ab ea imbecillitate liberaret ipſos per ſomnia, & nocturnas pollutiunculas. Si ne hoc quidem prodeſſet, quod non poſſent caſtè, facerent cautè, nec admitterent ullo pacto in animos ſuos flagitioſam cogitationem de conjugio ſacerdotum: That the firſt thing he did againſt the Sectaries, was to cauſe John Vordenat to be burnt at the Hague, who maintain'd, that he had done well to marry, though he was a Prieſt: That the City of Antwerp, being afraid of loſing their Trade, did not approve that the Hereticks ſhould be perſecuted; and that he adviſed the King of Spain to get it burnt, that the other Towns might be frighted by ſuch a ſevere Puniſhment: That he was deputed to Trent, where he ſpoke, as being the eldeſt of his Collegues: That the Spaniards themſelves laugh'd at his Speech: That he loſt many Books in his Return to Louvain: That, after his Return, He and his Collegues cauſed all the Tranſlations of the Scripture to be condemn'd, except the Vulgar: That they endeavoured to deſtroy all the Works of Eraſmus, but could not ſucceed in it, being thwarted by the Preſident of Brabant, and the Biſhop of Arras: That Sleidan's Hiſtory proved a moſt pernicious Poyſon, which every Body greedily ſwallowed: That it was tranſlated into all ſorts of Languages: That the Emperor (a) commended that Hiſtorian for his Faithfulneſs, and was ſurprized to find in it ſo many unknown Truths: That it could not be put into the Catalogue of prohibited Books, before it had been read over and over by every Body: (b) Tunc demum (ſi diis placet) Sleydani nomen ridiculè adjectum eſt catalogo noſtro, cum omnes (inquam) ut ungues ſuos tenerent, aut potius ſatietate nauſearent. Antè nihil impetrari potuit: That, notwithſtanding the great Care that was taken to get the Books of the Proteſtants condemn'd, the Bookſellers continu'd to ſell 'em: That by altering or leaving out the Names of the Authors, many dangerous Books were put off, and the Inquiſitors impoſed upon; and that it fell out ſometimes, that they condemn'd a Book, which they had before approved of. (c) Quanquam ne ſic quidem cavere potuimus quin typographi, homines verſutiſſimi impoſuerint nobis: mutatis autorum nominibus vel omiſſis, vel inverſis, vel etiam Græcè redditis quæ erant Latina, & è contrà: ut ſæpe coacti ſimus quæ antè approbaveramus, ea damnare poſt, vix auſi profiteri apud Regem noſtram ſimplicitatem. Nam ex titulis librorum æſtimanda nobis omnia erant, cùm non vacarit perlegere quæ intus erant, quorum quædam ita etiam erant obſcura & ingenioſa (qua fraude ſemper hæretici abundarunt) ut quid ſcriberetur, non aſſequeremur. Ad quem modum turpiter nos decepit Philippi Melanchthonis libellus de Theologia Chriſtiana, qui titulo Hippophili Melangæi paſſim ſenatorum, præſidum & noſtrorum etiam Baccalaureorum manibus tritus eſt: donec amici, qui in Germania adhuc ſynceri erant, admonuerunt, ut habita ſynodo conſuleremus lexica noſtra, fore enim ut idem eſſe Philippum & Hippophilum deprehenderemus...... (d) Idem accidit in Cœlii Secundi de providentia libello quidem non magno, ſed peſtilentiſſimo: quem ille nebulo tum primum innoteſcens Araneum inſcripſerat. Nos enim vati eſſe poeticum, aut grammaticum figmentum, non ante olfaciebamus fucum quàm omnia exemplaria eſſent Lovanii diſtracta. Taceo de Hutteno, Calvino, Urbano Rhegio & aliis (prò dolor) multis, quos nobis oſcitantibus neſcio quibus titulis, ex metamorphoſi opinor Ovidiana petitis, inſinuaverunt. Afterwards Tapperus tells us, that he forced many Students in Louvain to recant, and pay a Fine: That he cauſed ſome of 'em to be burnt and be-headed: That he cauſed ſome (e) Women of good Families to be buried alive: That he proſecuted Perſevald, a Rhetorician, who abuſed the Inquiſitors: That, fearing the accuſed Perſon would prove his Innocence, being proteſted by ſeveral People, he brought againſt him (f) an Action for Pederaſty, whereby he loſt moſt of his Protectors: That he privately condemn'd him to perpetual Impriſonment; but, to avoid the Charges of maintaining that Priſoner, and leſt it ſhould be thought he had ſtarved him to Death, he delivered him to a Gentleman, who interceeded for him: That afterwards he forced that Gentleman to clear himſelf on account of that Interceſſion, and condemn'd him to forfeit his whole Eſtate. I omit a long Account of the Proceedings againſt Angelus Emphlitius, a Paris Divine, wherein Fraud and Violence had an equal ſhare. 'Tis obſerved, in the Preamble to that Narrative, that Bartholomew Latomus compared the Chriſtian Church to a young Bear, which could not have its due Shape, till it had been lick'd up for many Ages. (g) Perinde ac ſi religionem Chriſtianam urſa aliqua peperiſſet, quam non una mater tamen lambendo detergeret atque efformaret, ſed mille quingentorum annorum ſomnia. Here follows a Reflection of the Author of the Apotheoſis. O cæci! Chriſti lex æterna eſt, nec eget maturatione temporum, ut ſtabilitatem conſequatur. Alioqui primis Eccleſiæ membris magna fuiſſet injuria facta, ſi quid ad illorum inſtitutionem defuiſſet cujus percipiendi edentula iſta mundi ſenecta demum capax fuiſſet.

I muſt here take notice of the Fate of Controverſies. At that time the Objections of the Proteſtants forced Latomus to maintain, that the beginning of Chriſtianity (h) was a Chaos, which had been cleared by degrees. The Proteſtants were continually ſaying, that things ſhould be brought to the firſt Inſtitution; and that whatever was not preſcribed in the Scripture ſhould be aboliſhed. What Courſe did he take to anſwer 'em? He bethought himſelf of this Hypotheſis, that the Church had attain'd to Perfection only by degrees. The above-mention'd Reflection, which was the Proteſtants Reply, is the Foundation of a Book (i), which the Biſhop of Meaux wrote againſt 'em, an hundred and forty Years after. What Courſe did M. Jurieu take to anſwer him? He revived (k) Latomus's Hypotheſis. What a Change is this! Sors omnia verſat.

'Tis to be obſerved, that the Author of the Apotheoſis ſuppoſes, that Tapperus confeſſes he had perform'd the part of a Mid-wife in a Boat, without knowing what he did, and that Children came into the World in ſuch a manner; believing ſtill what his Mother had told him, that they came from Places thick-ſet with Reeds. (l) Ecce auditus vagitus eſt (ut ſit verbo venia) neſcio quo loco...... Dii talem terris avertite peſtem: ego inde prodire infantulos putaſſem?...... Mater mihi perſuaſerat apud nos è proximis arundinetis dari mulieribus. I further obſerve, that, though the Author of the Apotheoſis brings him in, confeſſing, that he felt (m), ſince that time, the Motions of Luſt, and look'd upon his Servant-Maids, with a kind of Temptation; Yet he does not contradict him, when he proteſts (n), that he never knew, or ſo much as kiſs'd, a Woman. He did not come off with being inſtrumental in the Delivery of one: For at his coming out of the Boat, he was ſurrounded with many Country-Women, who hurried him into a Tavern, and forced him to be God-Father to the Child, and to pay for the Wine. He had not one Penny left, when he had paid the Entertainment that was made at his Coſt. (o) Emunctus ſum omni pecunia: nec potui redimere ubi navem appuliſſemus quin fierem compater hominis quem nunquam vidi. Pertrahebant me in diverſorium paluſtres mulierculæ bibaciſſimæ, vocatus ſacrificus æque ſobrius.... omnes certatim paſcebantur tanti compatris largitate.... nunquam nudior, nec ſordidior redii domum. His Exploits againſt the Anabaptiſts are not forgotten in the Apotheoſis, nor his pernicious Maxims, or Methods of Inquiſition. Take notice, that Valerius Andreas confeſſes, that this Piece does plainly diſcover Tapperus's Conduct. Cæterum, ſays he (p), Apotheoſin R. Tappero ſcripſit Henr-Geldorpius, editam an. 1558. in 4°. Verum

ſannis

---

* [illegible] Tom. 2. p. m. 138.

† Id. ib.

(f) Hominem cæco & deformi maſculi amoris infamiam affinxi, ſtatimque ocius Euro à favore cauſæ pleroſque deterrui. Ib.

(g) Ibid. fol. E 4.

(h) Ne vacillent argumenta Latomi quum rudem indigeſtamque molem vocat primitivam Eccleſiam, Ibid.

(i) See the Preface to his Hiſtoire des Variations.

(k) See his Paſtoral Letters, wherein he deſcribes the Doctrine of the antient Fathers.

(l) Apotheoſ. fol. G. 2.

(m) Ab eo die nunquam carui neſcio quo pruritu, nec æquis oculis aſpexi famulas meas. Ibid.

(n) Ibid. fol. G verſo. See hereafter the Paſſage of Lindanus.

(o) Ibid. fol. G 2 verſo.

(p) Valer. Andr. ubi ſupra, pag. 803.

Regienſis (F) was an Orthodox Man. The Praiſes beſtowed upon him by Lindanus are very ſingular: That Author believed, that Tapperus was endowed (G) with a Prophetical Gift.

TARPA (SPURIUS METIUS, or MÆCIUS) was a Cenſer, or a Critick of the Poems, that were to be recited on the Stage. He had four Collegues, and one of 'em (T) was to approve thoſe Pieces before they were produced in publick. In order to it, the Poets were appointed to meet in the Temple of Apollo Palatinus, where they read their Works, and then the Criticks paſs'd their Judgment upon 'em. Good Judges were not always pleaſed with Tarpa's Approbation, as it appears from a Paſſage of Cicero; which may be ſeen at the End of the laſt Remark of this Article. However, Horace, who was no Flatterer, ſays (Z) nothing of that Critick but what is more to his Honour than to his Diſpraiſe.

TARRUNTIUS* (LUCIUS) ſir-named Firmanus, becauſe he was a Native of Firmum, a Town of Italy, in the Country of the Picentini, flouriſhed at the ſame time with Cicero, and was one of his † Friends. He was a ‡ Mathematical Philoſopher; I mean, that he pretended to a great Skill in judicial Aſtrology. He would be little known, had he not drawn up two Horoſcopes, mention'd by the Ancients, viz. that of (A) Romulus, and that of Rome. Thoſe Horoſcopes ſanis & ſcommatibus plena gentum auctoris ſui prodit: ex qua alioqui ſummi illius viri ACTA DILUCIDE PATENT.

This Article being ready for the Preſs, I found a Copy of the firſt Edition of the Apotheoſis. I ſhall ſet down the Title of it, that it may be compared with the Title of the ſecond. Clariſſ. Theologi D. Ruardi Tappart Enchuſani, hereticæ pravitatis primarii & generalis inquiſitoris, Cancellarii celeberrimæ Academiæ Lovanienſis, pridem inconſolabili ſuorum luctu vita functi, Apotheoſis: Gratiano Vero Theologiæ Baccalaureo autore. Reperies in hoc ſcripto, Lector, non parum multa ſcitu digniſſima, & paucis hactenus cognita, Inquiſitorum hæreticæ pravitatis Conſilia atque Secreta: quæ omnibus tandem cognoſcenda ſproponi, in primis intereſſe Reipublicæ duximus.

(F) He thought that Fauſtus Regienſis was an Orthodox Man.] (q) He quoted him, "calling him a "venerable Man: Whereupon, being inform'd by "one of his Brethren, that Fauſtus had been con"demn'd, as being full of Errors; he was very "much ſurprized at it, and could not believe it, as "Eſtius relates in a Theological Diſcourſe, pro"nounced at Douay, in 1609. He had it from the "Doctor himſelf, who gave that Information to "Tapperus." Here is another Authority for it: (r) Ut quantùm Pelagianis faverit, neminem lateret, Fauſtum Regienſem Epiſcopum, qui Semipelagianorum fuit anteſiganus, & cujus libri à Sancto Gelaſio Papa in Concilio Romano è Catholicorum albo deleti ſunt, paſſim commendat & inter Patres adducit.

(G) The Praiſes (ſ) beſtowed upon him by Lindanus ... believed, that Tapperus was endowed with a Prophetical Gift.] Theſe are his Words: (a) Hoc ipſum certè tam vita, quam voce, cum apud nos mortalis ageret, magis præ ſe ferebat, diſerte tantum non prophetans, quæ modo peccatorum noſtrorum cauſa Belgici patimur, ſicuti & his ipſis Orationibus perſpicuè prædixiſſe cernitur. It was an eaſy thing to gueſs, that the Conduct of the Romaniſts, againſt the new Religion, would occaſion great Diſorders; and that a Civil War would be the Conſequence of their tiring out the Patience of the Reformed.

(T) One of 'em was to approve.] This Particular is to be found in one of the Scholiaſts upon Horace, on theſe Words of the tenth Satyr of the firſt Book.

——— Hæc ego ludo
Quæ nec in æde ſonent certantia judice Tarpa,
Nec redeant iterum atque iterum ſpectata theatris.

Metius Tarpa, ſays he, fuit judex criticus, auditor aſſiduus poematum & poetarum in æde Appollinis ſeu Muſarum, quo convenire poetæ ſolebant ſuaque ſcripta recitare, quæ niſi à Tarpa aut alio critico, qui numero erant quinque, probarentur, in ſcenam non deferebantur. This Office might be compared with that of the Cenſurers of Books, in the Countries where there is an Inquiſition. It was very troubleſome, both becauſe ſo many Readers were to be heard, and becauſe the Cenſurers were expoſed to a double danger: For the Pieces, which they rejected, made the Authors, (b) genus irritabile vatum, very angry with them; and thoſe, that were approved, might have been ſlighted by the People, or Men of Judgment.

(Z) Says nothing of that Critick.] Horace mentions that Critick again in his De Arte Poetica.

Si quid tamen olim
Scripſeris, in Meti deſcendat judicis aures,
Et patris, & noſtras.

Voſſius (c) having obſerved, that Achilles Statius (d) confeſſes he does not remember to have read any thing concerning that Metius Tarpa any where, except in the tenth Satyr of the firſt Book of Horace, ſays, that he is alſo mention'd in the tenth Satyr of the firſt Book, and repeats what Horace ſays there about Tarpa. This is plainly an Effect of a great Diſtraction. Voſſius remember'd, that Horace mentions that Critick twice; viz. in the tenth Satyr of the firſt Book, and in his de Arte Poëtica: But he forgot, that the Paſſage known to Statius is that of the tenth Satyr; which is the Reaſon why he refers him to it. I don't know whether he perceived that Miſtake when the Book was printed off; for, though there are many things in his Addenda to be inſerted in the Page, where Achilles Statius is mention'd by him, and though the Paſſage concerning Metius, in Horace de Arte Poetica, is one of thoſe things; yet the Reader is not told, that there is any Correction to be made in that Page. Here is the Paſſage of Cicero, which I have promiſed to ſet down. (e) Reliquas partes diei tu conſumebas his delectationibus quas tibi ipſe ad arbitrium tuum compararas: nobis autem erant ea perpetienda quæ ſcilicet Sp. Mecius .... probaviſſet.

(A) The Horoſcope of Romulus, and that of Rome.] Plutarch gives the following Account of it. "(f) In the times of Varro the Philoſopher, a "Man very well read in Roman Hiſtory, liv'd one "Tarrutius, his familiar Friend and Acquaintance, "both a good Philoſopher and ſkillful Mathematician, "and one too that out of Curioſity of Speculation, had "ſtudied the way of drawing Schemes and Tables, and "ſeem'd to be excellent in the Art. To him "Varro propounded to caſt Romulus's Nativity, even "to the firſt Day and Hour, and to make his "Deductions from the ſeveral Events of the Man's "Life, which he ſhould be inform'd of, as the "Solutions of Geometrical Problems do re"quire; for it belongs to the ſame Science both "to foretell a Man's Life, by knowing the time "of his Birth, and alſo to find out his Birth by "the knowledge of his Life. This Task Tarru"tius undertook, and firſt looking into the Acti"ons and Caſualties of the Man, together with the "time of his Life, and manner of his Death, and "then comparing all theſe Remarks together, he "very confidently and poſitively pronounc'd, that "Romulus was conceiv'd in his Mother's Womb, "the firſt Year of the ſecond Oympiad, the twen"ty-third Day of the Month, the Ægyptians call Chaac "(which may be ſaid to anſwer our December) and "the third Hour after Sun-ſet; that he was born the "twenty-firſt Day of the Month Thoth, (which is "September) about Sun-riſing; and that the firſt "Stone of Rome was laid by him the ninth day of the ſcopes were retrograde, and there are few Examples of 'em; for there are very few (B) Aſtrologers, who pretend to find out the Moment of one's Birth, by knowing the Hiſtory of his Life. Tarruntius, at Varro's Requeſt, took that Courſe, and boldly mark'd out the Hour of the Birth. There is good Reaſon to believe that (C) he was quoted by Pliny.

---

* Some call him Tarrutius, being deceived by the Greek Word Ταρρούτιος. See Salmaſius in Solin, pag. 15.

† See the Remark A. Letter g.

‡ See the Remark C. Letter m. and the Remark A, Letter f.

(q) Gery, ubi ſupra, pag. 50.

(r) Opera Mich. Baii ubi ſupra, pag. 218, 219.

(ſ) Ornamentum hujus ſæculi noſtri ſingulare ... ſobrietatis perpetuæ exemplum, inviolatum caſtitatis & ejus virginalis ſpeculum, prudentiæ norma, eximiæ pietatis in pauperes ſpecimen, ... jejuniis frequentioribus aſſiduiſque deditus... modeſtiæ regula, temperantiæ amuſſis, tolerantiæ, patientiæ, charitatis Chriſtianæ, omnis denique virtutis magiſter abſolutiſſimus. Lindanus, ubi infra, pag. 27.

(a) Lindanus in præfat. Orationum Theolog. Ruardi Tapperi, pag. 26. He has alſo theſe Words: A Prophetarum gratia minime vacuus pleriſque piis viris crederetur .... alienum à vero dixiſſe non videatur qui cum ſpiritu prophetiæ divinitus præditum fuiſſe pronunciet.

(b) Horat. epiſt. 2. lib. 2.

(c) Voſſius, de imitat. & initat. veterum, pag. 55.

(d) Not. ad Hor. lib. i. ſat. i. 8.

(e) Cicero, ep. 1. l. 7. ad famil.

(f) Plutarch, in the Life of Romulus.

TASSO

" the Month Pharmuthi, (April,) between the ſecond " and third Hour; for as to the Fortune of Cities, as " well as Men, they think they have their certain Pe- " riods of time prefixt, which may be collected and " fore-known from the Poſitions of the Stars at their " Foundation." Cicero relates more particularly what concerns the Horoſcope of the City of Rome, and is in the right to laugh at it. (g) L. quidem Taruntius Firmanus familiaris noſter, in primis Chaldaicis rationibus eruditus, urbis etiam noſtræ natalem diem repetebat ab iis Parilibus, quibus eam à Romulo conditam accepimus: Romamque in jugo quum eſſet Luna, natam eſſe dicebat, nec ejus fata canere dubitabat. O vim maximam erroris, etiam ne urbis natalis dies, ad vim ſtellarum & lunæ pertinebat! Fac in puero referre ex qua affectione cæli primum ſpiritum duxerit, num hoc in latere, aut in cæmento, ex quibus urbs effecta eſt, potuit valere? I obſerve a notable Difference between Cicero's and Plutarch's Narratives. According to Cicero, Rome was founded on the Day of the Palilia, that is the 21ſt of April, and (h) therefore Tarruntius followed the common Opinion: But according to Plutarch, he did not follow it; for he placed the Foundation of that Town on the ninth (i) Day of an Egyptian Month, which Day, according to (k) ſome Learned Chronologers, anſwered the fourth of October. Some Chronologers (l) conjecture, that the Year which Romulus, and the Inhabitants of Alba, made uſe of, was out of order; that the Month of April correſponded with the Autumn; and that King Numa having given a new form to the Roman Year, the Feſtival of Pales, which was celebrated the twenty-firſt of April, correſponded with the Spring. According to this Conjecture, it might be true at the ſame time that Rome was founded the twenty-firſt of April, of the Year of the Albans, and the ninth of an Egyptian Month, which correſponded with the Month of October. However, Varro would not have exactly followed Tarruntius, if he had ſaid poſitively that Romulus began to build Rome the twenty-firſt of April, that is, in the Spring. I further obſerve, that Plutarch does not ſay in what Year the City of Rome was founded, according to Tarruntius. However, 'tis ſaid that this Aſtrologer mark'd out the third Year of the ſixth Olympiad. I think this Opinion is grounded upon Tarruntius's placing the Conception of Romulus in the firſt Year of the ſecond Olympiad; and upon a Suppoſition, that, according to the common Opinion, he ſaid, that Romulus built the City of Rome at eighteen Years of Age. Beſides, 'tis ſuppoſed that Varro followed Tarruntius's Opinion; which is a further Reaſon why 'tis commonly believed, that he placed the Foundation of that Town in the third Year of the ſixth Olympiad.

I ſhall obſerve by the by, that Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, after many Chronological Computations, (m) aſſigned the firſt Year of the ſeventh Olympiad for the Epoch of the Foundation of Rome: And therefore Father Labbe expreſſes himſelf very ill, when he ſays, (n), that ſome aſcribe that Epoch to Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus. An eminent Divine (o) tells us, that he was followed therein by Tarruntius and Velleius Paterculus; but Varro, adds he, pitched upon an Epoch later than that by two Years, viz. the fourth Year of the ſeventh Olympiad. He'll give me leave to obſerve three or four things. I. Tarruntius wrote before Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus; for Cicero ſpeaks of the Horoſcope of Rome in ſuch a manner as ſhews that Tarruntius was already dead; and we know that Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus (a) went about his Hiſtory after he had been twenty Years at Rome: but he came thither ſoon after the entire Defeat of Mark Antony. II. Tarruntius's Opinion does not agree with that of Dionyſius; for, as we have already ſeen, he placed the Foundation of Rome in the third Year of the ſixth Olympiad. III. Velleius Paterculus (b) places it in the ſame Year; and therefore is of a different Opinion from Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus. IV. The moſt Learned Chronologers ſay, that Varro's and Tarruntius's Hypotheſes are the ſame, and therefore Varro's Epoch is not later by two (c) Years than that of Dionyſius.

(B) There are very few Aſtrologers, who pretend . . . by knowing, &c.] I don't underſtand how M. Dacier could ſay, (d) that the ſureſt way is to draw up Retrograde Horoſcopes; for an Aſtrologer may boldly infer from known Actions the time of one's Conception and Birth. Who will contradict him? I anſwer, that there is nothing more eaſy than to contradict him. In moſt Families the Birth-Day of each Perſon is well known; and as for Men of Note, one may eaſily come to the Knowledge of it, by conſulting the publick Monuments. So that a miſtaken Aſtrologer would be quickly convicted of his Over-ſight; which is the Reaſon why thoſe Cheats will not venture upon it. They may ſafely determine at what Hour a modern King was born, for they know it and may read it in Hiſtory; and therefore they are not conſulted about ſuch Things. I ſhall occaſionally take notice of a Miſtake of Amyot, which M. Dacier has not avoided. Plutarch ſays there was an Eclipſe of the Sun on the Day that Rome began to be built. (e) Σύνοδον ἐκλειπτικὴν ἐν αὐτῇ γενέσθαι σελήνης πρὸς ἥλιον. Xylander is wrong in tranſlating thoſe Greek Words thus: quo ſubiens ſolis orbem luna defecit. Amyot has not been more ſucceſsful, on which Day, ſays he, there was an Eclipſe of the Moon. M. Dacier renders it, and that there was an Eclipſe of the Moon. There is no Obſcurity in the Original, which is to be underſtood of a Conjunction of the Sun and Moon; at which time the Moon cannot be Eclipſed. An Obſervation ſhould have been made upon the Parentheſis, immediately following the Greek Words, juſt now quoted out of Plutarch. That Parentheſis runs thus: (ἣν ἔτει τρίτῳ τῆς ἕκτης ὀλυμπιάδος συμπεσοῦσαν εἰδέναι καὶ Ἀντίμαχον οἴονται τὸν Τήϊον ἐποποιὸν,) that is, 'tis thought, that the Poet Antimachus, a Native of the Iſle of Peos, ſaw that Eclipſe of the Sun, which happen'd in the third Year of the ſixth Olympiad. The whole Note of M. Dacier (f) amounts to this, that the Poet Antimachus, mention'd by Plutarch, is the ſame, whom others will have to be a Clarian or a Colophonian, and who lived in Plato's time. If this Note was right, Plutarch would have been groſly miſtaken; for how could Antimachus, contemporary with Plato, obſerve an Eclipſe ſo long before he was born? That Hiſtorian could not be juſtified but by ſuppoſing that he mentions an Antimachus different from him, who was Contemporary with Plato; or that the only meaning of his Parentheſis is, that Antimachus, Contemporary with Plato, ſpeaks of an Eclipſe, which is the ſame with that of the third Year of the ſixth Olympiad. 'Tis certain this is not the ſenſe of his Greek Words. Perhaps it had been better for Father Labbe to cenſure Plutarch upon this account, than upon ſome other things. He (g) obſerves, after Petavius, that not only in the Month Pharumthi, but alſo in the whole Julian Year 3961 of the Julian Period there was no Eclipſe of the Sun, that might have been obſerv'd in Aſia, and leſs ſtill in Italy, by that Poet, Antimachus of Teos. And then he adds: " Plutarch is miſtaken in this; for having ſaid that " Tarruntius affirm'd that Rome was built when the " Sun and Moon were in conjunction, he adds, of " his own Head, that that New Moon was truly E- " cliptick." This Cenſure is falſe in ſome reſpects; for Plutarch does not ſay, that Tarruntius affirm'd that the Sun was eclipſed on the Day of the Foundation of Rome. Tarruntius ſays this only of the Day of Romulus's Conception. And therefore (h) Petavius ſhould not have affirm'd, that Tarruntius ſaid ſo both with reſpect to that Day, and that of the Foundation of Rome.

(C) There is good reaſon to believe that he was quoted by Pliny.] There is in moſt Editions, (i) L. Arruntio qui Græce de aſtris ſcripſit, Cæſare dictatore qui item. Which might make one think that Pliny ſpeaks of Arruntius, a celebrated Hiſtorian; but becauſe there is in the beſt Manuſcripts, L. Taruntio, 'tis eaſie to gueſs at the true reading; which is,

Dacier Month
mouan ye-the th of
. But
vius is different.
See next tion.
) Petain ra-ario porum
2. lib.
p. 2.
m. 157.
See Fa-
Lab-
French
nology
1. in Intro-
ion. ch.
5.
) Dionyſ.
lic. lib.
m. 60.
) Labbe,
ſupra ) Jaque de iſtence
Dieu
11.
) Dionyſ.
licarn.
1. pag.
6.
) Sexta mpiapoſt
s & vi.
an-quam ma ſtituta at Rolus . . .
mam em ilibus Palatio
didit.
. Pa-cul. lib.
c. 8.

(c) M. Jaquelot ſhould have ſaid three Years.

(d) Dacier Remarks upon the Life of Romulus pag. m. 178.

(e) Plutarch. in Romulo pag. 24.

(f) Dacier ubi ſupra pag. 178.

(g) Labbe, ubi ſupra n. 6.

(h) See his Rationarium temporum parte 2. lib. 3. c. 2. p. m. 159. where he refers to the 48*th Chapter of the* 9*th Book of his Work* de doctrina temporum.

(i) Plin. lib. 1. in indice autorum lib. 18.

TASSO (TORQUATO) an Italian Poet, and one of the greateſt Wits of the XVIth Century. See his Life written by the Abbot Decharnes. 'Tis a very curious * Piece, and it may be eaſily had. I have obſerved many Faults committed by ſeveral Authors who ſpeak of that Poet. You will find an Abridgment of his Life prefixed to his Moral Treatiſes, tranſlated into † French by Francis Baudoin.

TAVERNIER (JOHN BAPTIST) Baron (A) d'Aubonne, one of the greateſt Travellers of the XVIIth Century, was born at Paris β in the Year 1605. His natural Inclination to travel did very much increaſe, by what he daily ſaw (B) and heard in his Father's Houſe. He began ſo early to ſatisfie his Curioſity in that reſpect, γ that at twenty-two Years of Age he had ſeen the fineſt Countries in Europe, France, England, the Netherlands, Swiſſerland, Poland, Hungary, and Italy. He travell'd ſix times δ in Turkey, Perſia, and the Eaſt-Indies, during the ſpace of forty Years, and ſteered his Courſe all manner of ways. He was making a ſeventh Voyage when he ‡ died at Moſcow in July 1689. He got a great Eſtate by dealing in Jewels; and yet he found himſelf in low Circumſtances towards the latter end of his Life, by reaſon of the Miſdemeanour of one of his Nephews +, who had in the Levant the direction of a Cargo made in France, amounting to two hundred twenty-two thouſand Livres; which ſhould have brought in above a Million of Livres. 'Tis thought he undertook his laſt Voyage in hopes of making up that loſs. He had collected a great many ‡ Obſervations; but he could neither ſpeak nor write good French, and his (C) Relations were drawn up by another Hand. In one of 'em he ſpeaks very is, Lucio Tarruntio. (k) There is a quite contrary Miſtake in Solinus's Manuſcripts, where we find L. Aruntius inſtead of L. Tarruntius (l); for 'tis plain Solinus meant the Mathematician, who drew up the Horoſcope of Rome at Varro's requeſt. (m) Ibi Romulus manſitavit qui auſpicato fundamenta murorum jecit duodeviginti natus annos undecimo Kalendas Majas hora poſt ſecundam ante tertiam plenam: ſicut Lucius Tarruntius prodidit Mathematicorum nobiliſſimus. Note, that Pliny places our Tarruntius before Cæſar; which confirms what I have ſaid, that this Aſtrologer lived before Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus.

(A) Baron d'Aubonne.] Being made Noble by the King of France, he bought that Barony, ſituated in that part of the Canton of Bern call'd le pais de Vaud, near the Lake of Geneva. He was obliged to part with it, either to pay his Debts, or to make the neceſſary Preparations for his laſt Voyage into the Eaſt Indies. M. du (n) Queſne bought it, and retired thither after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He is ſtill in poſſeſſion of it, preferring that Retirement to the great Employments he might have pretended to by changing his Religion.

(B) By what he daily ſaw and heard in his Father's Houſe.] His Father, a Native of Antwerp, ſettled at Paris, where he dealt in Geographical Maps. The Curious, who bought 'em of him every day, uſed to diſcourſe very much of Foreign Countries. Thoſe frequent Diſcourſes, and the ſight of ſo many Maps, raiſed in young Tavernier a greater Deſire of travelling.

(C) His Relations were drawn up by another Hand.] They came out (a) in two Volumes in the Year 1679, and contain his ſix Voyages. He publiſh'd (b) afterwards a Relation of the Inſide of the Seraglio, and ſome particular Tracts, viz. A Relation of Japan and the Kingdom of Tunquin; the Hiſtory of the Conduct of the Dutch in Aſia, &c. 'Tis in this laſt Tract that he violently inveighs againſt the Directors of the Eaſt-India Company: And 'tis reaſonable to obſerve, that he declares at the very beginning, that he (c) does not blame the Conduct of the Dutch in general; on the contrary he commends them very much. What I ſay, adds he, does not concern the States-General, for whom I have a due reſpect: I ſpeak only of private Men, for whom I am not obliged to have any regard, ſince they have been ſo unjuſt to me upon ſeveral occaſions. If the Reader deſires to know who put his Memoirs into order, he needs only read the following Words of M. Chappuzeau. " (d) At his Return in the Year 1668, having a great Eſtate, he (e) thought fit to buy the " Barony d'Aubonne in the Canton of Bern: To that " end he came to Geneva, and lodged for ſome time " in my Houſe. Our Friendſhip was then renewed, " but upon a very heavy condition; which was, to " give a Form to his Chaos, as you rightly call the " confuſed Memoirs of his Voyage; part of which " he had from one Father Raphael a Capuchin, " who had been a long time at Iſpahan. I put him " off above two Years, and he hoped all the time " that I would write for him; but at laſt his Patience was tired out. I happened to be at Paris, " whither I went upon private occaſions: and tho' " I was never ſo unwilling to grant him his requeſt, " having many reaſons for not doing it, as ſeveral of " my Friends knew, he at laſt found out the way of " engaging me in that Work by a Superior Power. To that end he applied himſelf to the firſt " Preſident de Lamoignon, who having ſpoke to the " King about it, as he gave me to underſtand, " told me, that His Majeſty deſired to ſee Tavernier's Voyages; and that, ſince that Traveller " could not find any Body but me that he liked " for ſuch a Work, I ſhould not put it off any " longer. M. de Lamoignon, and M. de Baville his " Son, loved to hear him tell Stories of his Voyages; " and the firſt being beſides curious of Medals, had " received many from Tavernier, as the latter often " told me, which obliged him in Gratitude to eſpouſe his Intereſt. Thus, Sir, if you knew how " much I was mortified and vexed above a Year " that this wretched Work laſted, by the Bluntneſs " of the Husband, and the ridiculous Humour of " the Wife, doubtleſs you would not have been ſo " cruel as to inſult me about a thing which I did " againſt my Will, and without any Profit. This " is what many honeſt Men may ſtill witneſs. Beſides, I muſt acquaint you, Sir, that when I came " to that part of his Voyages, relating to the Conduct of the Dutch in Aſia, the Friends to whom " M. Tavernier communicated his Memoirs, (which " he had moſt of 'em in his Head, and dictated to " me in bad French, having nothing in Writing but " what he had from the Capuchin,) did whatever " they could to diſſuade him from harping upon " that String. I did the ſame, and when I ſaw that " neither they nor I could prevail upon that Man, " whom you have well deſcribed, I told him plainly, that he might look for ſome Body elſe to " write down ſuch a Diſcourſe. Having twenty " Years ago beſtowed great Encomiums upon the " Dutch Nation, no leſs out of a Senſe of Gratitude, " than out of Juſtice, in the firſt Volume of my " Europe vivante, which has been printed twice " in French, and tranſlated into the German " Language: I ſay, after ſuch Encomiums, ſo ſincere and ſo well-grounded, ſhould I have been " ſo baſe as to contradict my ſelf, and be guilty of " ſuch a ſhameful Complaiſance? Upon my Refuſal, " which occaſion'd our falling out for ſome Days, and " was

---

* Printed at Paris in the Year 1690, and reprinted in Holland. See the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans for December 1690, pag. 160.

† They were printed at Paris in the Year 1632, in 8vo.

β It appears from his Cutt, prefixed to the firſt Vol. of his Travels, that he was 74 Years old in 1679.

γ Tavernier's Preface to the firſt Vol. of his Travels.

δ See the Title of the ſame Volume.

‡ Mercure Galant for February 1690. The Author is miſtaken, when he ſays that Tavernier was 89 years old in July 1689.

+ Ibid.

‡ Some of which are meer Stories, which they made him believe to laugh at his Simplicity. See Doctor Gio. Franceſco Gemelli Careri, pag. 138, 139, of the 2d Tom. of his Giro del Mondo, printed at Naples in the Year 1699. in 12°.

(k) See Voſſius de ſcient. Mathem. pag. 447.

(l) See ib. See alſo Salmaſ. in Solin. pag. 15.

(m) Solin. cap. 1. pag. 2. edit. Salmaſ.

(n) Eldeſt Son to M. du Queſne, the greateſt Seaman that ever was in France.

(a) At Paris in 4°. they have been reprinted in Holland in 12°.

(b) At Paris in 4°. in the Year 1681. reprinted in Holland, in 12°.

(c) Tavernier, Hiſtoire de la conduite des Hollandois en Aſie, chap. 1. pag. 241. of the 3d. Volume of his Relations, Dutch Edition.

(d) Defenſe du Sr. Samuel Chappuzeau contre une ſatire intitulée l'Eſprit de Mr. Arnaud, pag. 7.

(e) Tha

very ill of the Dutch †. In some others he shews himself a (C Δ) down-right Plagiary. He was strangely abused in a Book entitled L' Esprit de Mr. Arnauld: And 'tis thought he would have made his Application to the Civil or Ecclesiastical Courts of Holland, in order to have satisfaction for that Affront, had he not considered that his Adversary would alledge in his Vindication that he had revenged the Country and Religion. Those, who approved this Reason of his Patience, wondred that he did (D) not pay some Author to revenge him. M. Chappuzeau, who was abused in the same Book upon his Account, has not (E) been altogether silent.

TAULERUS

" was like to set us at Variance for ever, M. Tavernier made his Application to M. de la Chapelle, Secretary to M. de Lamoignon. That Secretary " undertook to write for him; and 'tis he, who, " after my Return to Geneva, wrote the third Volume of Tavernier's Relations, which contains the " History of Japan, and wherein, out of Imprudence or Malice he brings in a Protestant " speaking like a Roman Catholick. I can easily " prove that I was at Geneva with my Family, and " not at Paris, when that Volume was written and " printed."

It will not be improper to acquaint the Reader, that the Jesuits complain'd (f) of Tavernier's Relations. See what Mr. Arnauld answered to them (g).

(C Δ) He shews himself a down-right Plagiary.] Dr. Hyde having quoted a long Passage of the Relation of that Author informs us, (†) that Tavernier took it, like a down-right Plagiary, out of a Book printed at Lyons, in the Year 1671, in 8vo. and written by a Man, who had been thirty Years in Persia. (‡) Sciendum est Tavernierum ad instar Plagiarii hocce de Gavris paragraphum (& forte multa alia) desumpsisse ex alio Itinerario Gallico ed. Lyons 1671, in 8vo. cujus autor est P. G. D. C. i. e. Father Gabriel de Chinon, qui 30 annos in Persia transegit.

(D) Wondred that he did not pay some Author to revenge him.] Though Tavernier had not writ the Books that came out under his Name, yet he was obliged to look upon himself as an Author, and to act accordingly against those who should criticize him. I mean, that, according to the Laws of the Commonwealth of Learning, he was only to write against those who should write against him. The Censure of a Book, is, properly speaking, an Action brought against an Author before his Judges. He is summon'd to appear before the Publick to be told that he argues wrong, or that he puts a wrong Sense upon certain Things. He is therefore cited before a Lawful Tribunal; for it belongs to the Publick to give a final Judgment about such Accusations without further Appeal. He ought not therefore to have recourse to other Judges; for if he does he plainly betrays his Weakness; he alters the usual Course of Things, and is willing to supply his want of Knowledge by the Favour he hopes to find with the Magistrates, by his many Intrigues (b). But I except out of this Rule the Authors, who are wounded in their Reputation: For if a Critick is not contented to censure a Writer for a wrong Version, a false Principle, a wrong Consequence, an unfaithful Quotation, &c. if, besides, he reproaches him with a Blot in his Family, a Robbery, an Adultery, a State-Crime, &c. he may be sued before Secular Judges. The accused Person, though never so learned, and without mistrusting his Ability, may very well remove the Cause from one Tribunal to another, decline the Jurisdiction of the Publick, and have recourse to the Magistrates and the Laws establish'd by Sovereigns against Defamatory Libels. I don't say that he is obliged to have recourse to them; for he may be contented with the short way of giving the Lye, in imitation of Father Valerian (l): He may with a mentiris impudentissime, confound his Accusers, and fully justify himself, unless they make out their Accusations. So that any Author in such a case will be accounted a publick Calumniator by all equitable Judges, if he does not clearly prove what he advances against the Honour of his Neighbour. His Silence is a full Vindication of those whom he accuses, actore non probante absolvitur reus. And therefore, as the Insult offered to Tavernier in the Book entitled, L' Esprit de Mr. Arnauld, went beyond a Criticism, and did very much savour of a Defamatory Libel, that Author might have made his Application for Redress to the Magistrates or Consistories. He was not necessarily obliged to it, but he might have done it without breaking the Rules which a criticized Author ought to observe. He made a Noise (k) in the Taverns and Streets, he threatned, and even named the Day and Hour when he would go to the Wallon Consistory of Rotterdam, to demand that the Canonical Laws shou'd be executed against the Minister who had dishonoured him: But his Threatnings came to nothing; he retired peaceably, and did not prosecute his Adversary. And indeed, it had been a difficult thing for him to obtain the Satisfaction he desired, whether we consider M. Jurieu's great Interest, or the Pretence he might have alledged in his Vindication. He would, undoubtedly, have exaggerated the injurious Reflections contain'd in the Tract concerning the Conduct of the Dutch. This Circumstance would have made his Cause less odious, though judicious Men know what difference there is between an Author who reflects upon the Dutch in general, or the Supreme Power of the Seven United Provinces, and an Author who blames the Conduct of some few Dutch-Men, trading in another World, Two Thousand Leagues from their Masters. Tavernier did only (a) the last of these two Things; and therefore the Fits and Spurts of the Author of L' Esprit de Mr. Arnauld, against that famous Traveller, were scarce approved by any Body. How comes the Writer of that Satyr to meddle with such a thing? said most People; who required it at his Hands? Had he a Special Commission to answer? If he undertook to do it of his own Motion, why didn't he confute Tavernier, instead of heaping up personal Injuries? What is most strange, is, that what he says of the Dutch in a few Words, is scarce less scandalous than Tavernier's Account, as M. Chappuzeau (b) has made it appear. 'Tis to be observed, that Tavernier being in Holland since the Publication of his third Volume, met with a very civil Usage. See what M. Leti (c) says upon it; the thing is curious enough. See also the (d) Entretiens sur la Cabale chimerique, concerning this Question, whether Tavernier was a patient Man

But if he may be excused for not prosecuting the Author of L' Esprit de Mr. Arnauld, before Civil or Ecclesiastical Judges, one cannot but wonder that he did not make use of another Hand to vindicate himself, since he was not able to write three Lines without frightful Barbarisms. For ten Pistoles he might have found a Man, who would have revenged him to the full. No Book was ever more liable to Censure than L' Esprit de Mr. Arnauld, and the Author of it might have been easily confounded: And yet that Work has not been answered; which is an Instance of Impunity that never was, and perhaps will never be seen. Many curious Things might be said upon this Subject: I had a Mind to dwell upon it; but the remaining Sheets of this Volume are too few in proportion to the Materials more important still, which I would make use of; and part of which I am obliged to lay by till another time for want of room. I therefore suppress whatever I had collected concerning this Article.

(E) M. Chappuzeau .... has not been altogether silent.] He was defamed in a most bloody and cruel manner in the Book entitled, L' Esprit de Mr. Arnauld, and yet he made no answer for the space of seven Years, though he might have said very good things in his Vindication, as he made it appear at last in 1693 by two Letters (e) publish'd at the Hague, and written to the Sieur Peter Jurieu the Author of the Libel: He proves him guilty of many Falsities; and though he is pretty sharp upon him, he keeps within the Bounds of Moderation: Nay, he represents to him the Gospel-Duties in a charitable and Christian-like manner. In a word, one would think that he is an honest Minister, not in

---

† See the Remark C.

(f) In the d Volume
the Dense des uveaux rétiens.

) At the d of the d Voe of the rale tique.

) Hyde
Religivetem Per-um in pendi-
pag.
5. &

) Id. ib.
545.

) See the marks
the Arle Thos.

) See the ticle gni.

(k) See the Entretiens sur la Cabale Chimerique, pag. 202. & seq.

(a) See above, Remark C. Letter c.

(b) Chappuzeau, ubi supra, pag. 8.

(c) In his Differtation prefixed to la Monarchia Universale del Re Luigi XIV printed at Amsterdam 1689.

(d) Pag. 201, & seq.

(e) These two Letters contain but ten Pages in 4°. with two Columns. I have set down above the Title of those Letters.

TAULERUS (JOHN) a famous Author among the mystical Votaries, flourished in the XIVth Century. The Year and the Place of his Birth are not known: For those who say that he was born at Cologne could not prove it; but we know that he was a Native of Germany. He turn'd Dominican, and made a great Progress in School-Philosophy and School-Divinity; but he applied himself particularly to Mystical-Divinity: And because he was thought to be gratified with Divine Revelations, he was firnamed the Inlightened Divine. He was endowed with great Talents for Preaching, and no Preacher in his Time was more resorted to than he. He reproved with great Zeal and Freedom every Body's Faults, whereby he became odious to some Monks, whose Persecutions he bore patiently and courageously. He submitted with the same Patience and Constancy to the Trials which God brought him under for the Space of two Years, though they were so great that his very Friends look'd upon him as a ridiculous Object. 'Tis thought he was thus visited by God, lest he should be puffed up with the extraordinary Gifts Heaven had bestowed upon him. Cologne and Strasburg are the chief Towns where he preached. He died in the last after a long Sickness, where he had a decent Burial in the Academical College, near the Winter-Auditory. His Tomb is still to be seen there. If his Epitaph had been carefully read, there would not be so many different Opinions (A) about the Year in which he died: All Authors would be unanimous in placing it on the 17th of May 1361 †. He wrote (B) many Books about which there are different Opinions: They are blamed (C) by some Catholicks, the least offended, who speaks to a Lay-Man; and not a Lay-Man offended who speaks to a Minister, by whom he has been offended.

(A) So many different Opinions about the Year in which he died.] Some (f) say he died in the Year 1355. Others (g) will have it that it was the 15th of July 1379. Others (h) think that he departed this Life in the Year 1380.

(B) He wrote many Books.] He wrote them in his Mother-Tongue: The most considerable were translated into Latin by Surius, and publish'd at Cologne, in the Year 1548, in the following Order. Historia vitæ & conversionis Joannis Tauler. Conciones de Tempore. Conciones de Sanctis. De veris virtutibus, institutionibusque divinis. Epistola devotionem, divinumque amorem spirantes. Prophetia de plagis nostri temporis. Cantica quædam spiritualia animæ Deum impendio amantis. De novem rupibus sive gradibus Christianæ perfectionis. Speculum lucidissimum & exemplar Domini nostri J. Christi. Convivium M. Eckardi jucundum & pium. Colloquium Theologi & Mendici. Oratio fidelis præparatoria ad mortem. Præparationes quatuor notabiles ad mortem felicem. Notabilis alia ad mortem felicem præparatio. De decem cæcitatibus, & quatuordecim divini amoris radicibus libellus. 'Tis to be observed, that all the Works, whose Titles I have set down, except the Sermons, are Collections out of Taulerus, and intermixed with the Writings of some other Authors (i). 'Tis also to be observed, that the Work entitled, Sermones quibus explanatio Evangeliorum quæ diebus Dominicis ac festis Sanctorum enarrari solent, comprehenditur, was printed at Augsburg, in the Year 1508 in Folio, at Basil in 1521 and 1522 in Folio, at Francfort in 1681 in 4o. and that the Augsburg Edition does not contain all the Sermons that are to be found in the other Editions (k). Some will have it, that Taulerus is the Author of a Book entitled, Theologia Germanica, printed in 1518, 1519, 1528, 1681, &c. No Body doubts that Sebastian Castalio, translated it into Latin, under the Disguise of Johannes Theophilus. Many are of Opinion, that Taulerus is not the Author of that Book: For, say they, he is quoted in it, and the Author styles himself Priest and Warden of the Order of the Knights of the Teutonick Order, in their House of Francfort (l). James Thomasius (m) has made a Collection of many Encomiums bestowed upon that Book. But see particularly the Preface to the French Edition (n) of Theologia Germanica, and the Letter concerning Mystical Authors at the end of that Edition. You'll find in the Preface many Particulars concerning the Book translated into Latin by Castalio, and the following Passage may be seen in the Letter. " (o) Taulerus wrote in old German, which is rarely to be met with. Surius made a Latin Translation of it, printed several times at Paris, and " at Cologne, till the Year 1615, which now serves " instead of the Original. There are many German " Editions of it, publish'd both by the Roman Catholicks and the Protestants. The Dutch have also " printed it several times; but the old Dutch Edition of Francfort in 1565, is altered, as well " as that which M. Serrarius publish'd at Hoorn, " about forty Years ago, though the latter contains more Pieces of the Author than any other. " The best is that of Antwerp 1685: However, his " Institutions, his Letters, and his Exercises upon the Passion, are wanting in it; but they are to " be found by themselves, the two first with this " Title Medulla Animæ, of which there is an old " French Edition, but inferior to a new and very " fine Translation, both of his Institutions, printed " at Paris in 1668, and of his Exercises upon " the Passion, printed in the same Place the next " Year, with the Exercises of the pious Eschius, " upon the Purgative, Illuminative and Unitive " Life, added to it. Father Mabillon, in the Catalogue inserted at the end of his Traité des Etudes Monastiques, places Taulerus's Works among the Spiritual Books, translated into French. " I never saw his Sermons among his Works, tho' " they are the most considerable part of 'em: And " I am sure that his Treatise concerning the poor Life of Jesus Christ is still less to be found there, " since it is wanting in Surius's Latin Translation, " and is only to be had in German and Dutch."

(C) They are blamed by some Catholicks, and commended by some Protestants.] Eccius said that Taulerus was a doating Man, suspected of Heresy, and that he should not have appeared in Publick. (a) Vocavit Eccius Taulerum somniatorem, hæreseos arguit, & ut prorsus lateret, & nunquam in monasteria involaret optavit. Blosius did by no means approve this Censure. (b) Eccio strenue se opposuit Ludovicus Blosius Abbas Latiensis qui Taulerum Catholicæ fidei integerrimum cultorem appellavit, dixit ea quæ scripsit sana & plane divina esse, optavitque in nomine domini, ut Taulerus ubique gentium cognitus esset, & à pluribus diligentissime legeretur: addit minus circumspectum Eccium, Taulerum nondum satis à se lectum damnasse. This Judgment of Blosius is mention'd and approved by (c) Possevin. Spondanus takes Taulerus's part, and says he foretold Wickliff's Heresies, and praises Blosius his Apologist. (d) Cujus (Tauleri) extant sermones, & alii tractatus unctionem divini spiritus referentes: prædixitque hæreses contra Sacramenta & Dogmata Ecclesiæ Catholicæ brevi ab Wickliffo orituras. Contra cujus obtrectatores apologiam scripsit Ludovicus Blosius, recentior ejusdem Spiritus Sancti devotissimus discipulus. (e) Sixtus Senensis highly commends the Devotion of our Dominican. I have read in Hottinger (f), that some Catholicks call Taulerus an Heresiarch, and say that several People doubted of his Salvation; but an Apparition removed their Doubts. Luther was one of those, who bestowed great Encomiums upon Taulerus. Hunc doctorem, says he (g), scio quidem ignotum esse Scholis Theologorum, ideoque forte contemptibilem, sed ego plus in eo (licet totus Germanorum vernacula sit conscriptus) reperi Theologiæ solidæ & synceræ quam in universis omnium universitatum Schola-

† Taken from a publick Thesis maintain'd at Wittemberg the 31st of March, 1688, intitled. Memoria Joh. Tauleri instaurata, &c. composed by Georgius Fridericus Heupelius, Argentoratensis.

(f) Teste Spondano ad ann. 1355. n. 17. pag. m. 534.

(g) Hottinger. hist. Eccles. part. 3. pag. 707.

(h) Stratemannus theatr. hist. Eccles. pag. 847. apud Georg. Frider. Heupelium in memoria Joh. Tauleri restaurata, pag. ult.

(i) Taken from Peter Labe differt. de scriptor. Eccles. Tom. 1. pag. 608, 609.

(k) Georg. Frider. Heupelius. ubi supra, fol. B.

(l) Ex eod. ibid.

(m) Thomas. Schediasm. histor. de Philosophia gentili, Gnosticorum hæresi & Theologia mystica, pag. 75, apud eund. ibid.

(n) Amsterdam 1700, for Henry Wetstein.

(o) Lettre touchant les Auteurs mystiques, pag. 12, 13.

(a) Georg. Frid. Heupelius fol. B. verso. He cites Possevin. apparat. sacr. Tom. 1.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Spond. ubi supra.

(e) Sixtus Senensis, lib. 4. biblioth. sanctæ, pag. 335, edit. Colon. 1626. apud Heupelium ubi supra, fol. B. 2.

(f) Hottinger, ubi supra: He cites Baronius ann. Christ. 1355. §. 21, 22.

(g) Luther Tom. 1. Latin Jenens. pag. 85. 6. apud Heupelium fol. B. verso.

licks, and commended by ſome Proteſtants. It cannot be denied that he ſpoils many Readers by (D) leading them to Fanaticiſm. We ſhall ſee the Character (E) which a Man well-skill'd in thoſe things gives of him. We ſhould do him wrong, did we not diſtinguiſh him from thoſe myſtical Men, who have taught ſomething like the Errors (F) of the Eaſtern Philoſophers, mention'd in the Article of Spinoza.

TAURELLUS (NICOLAS) a Phyſician, and a Philoſopher, was born at Montbelliard, the 26th of November 1547. He was admitted Maſter of Philoſophy at Tubingen in the Year 1565, and when the Magiſtrates of Nuremberg founded an Univerſity at Altdorf, in the Year 1581, they made him Profeſſor of Phyſick †. He diſcharged the Duties of that place with great Ability: But becauſe he departed from the Opinions commonly received, he had ſome Enemies, and fell out with the Divines.

† Taken from Melchior Adam, in vitis medicorum, pag. 403.

ſticis Doctoribus repertum eſt, aut reperiri poſſit in ſuis ſententiis. He wrote the following Words to Spalatinus. (h) Si te delectat puram ſolidam antiquæ ſimillimam Theologiam legere in Germanica lingua effuſam, Sermones Joh. Tauleri prædicatoriæ profeſſionis comparare tibi potes. Neque enim ego vel in Latina vel in noſtra lingua Theologiam vidi ſalubriorem, & cum Evangelio conſonantiorem. Luther's Encomiums upon Taulerus have been prefixed more than once to (i) the Work of that Myſtical Divine. Some affect to ſay, that Luther commended him either before he ſet up againſt Popery, or during the firſt Years of his Reformation, and afterwards grew more reſerved in praiſing that Writer. (k) Poſt illa tempora ubi B. viro datum fuit tenebras papales magis magiſque ſuperare, & negotium cum novis prophetis interceſſit in Taulero ejuſque Theologia commendandis cœpit eſſe parcior. Nay, they quote a Sermon, wherein he cenſures him for a pernicious Doctrine, viz. that God ought not to be prayed to. (l) Taulerus exemplo neſcio quo docere vult eſſe à precibus deſiſtendum: ſed hac doctrina nihil eſt pernicioſius: nimis enim ad intermittendas preces jam antea propenſi ſumus. However it be, Michael Neander, Nicolas Hunnius, Dorſcheus, Quenſtedt, Spener, Arndius (m), and ſome other Lutherans, have beſtowed fine Encomiums upon Taulerus; and (n) Flaccus Illyricus places him among the Witneſſes of Truth. I ſhall conclude this Remark with the Words of a Myſtical Man. “(o) Every good Man that knows him muſt needs “like and approve him. Hence it is, that the “wiſeſt Proteſtants, Dr. Arndius, Dr. Mullerus, “and many others, without excepting Luther and “Melanchthon, have no leſs commended him than “the Roman Catholicks. Their Commendations “have been prefixed to the German Edition of his “Sermons, procured by the pious Arndius, and to “the Edition of all his Works, publiſh'd by the “famous Dr. Spener, and re-printed (1) ſeveral “times at Francfort.”

(D) That he ſpoils many Readers, by leading them to Fanaticiſm.] Beza deſpiſed him very much: Sainte Aldegonde look'd upon him as an Enthuſiaſt: Voetius took him only for a Man, who, without being a down-right Enthuſiaſt, ſaid many things that made way for the Enthuſiaſm of ſome Sectaries (p). Here follows a Paſſage of Hoornbeeck. (q) Fuerunt ſub Papatu, qui vel inſcii, vel imprudentes viam multùm ſtraverunt Enthuſiaſticis illis, ſuâ Theologiâ myſticâ, quemadmodum loquuntur, & libellis pietatis, quibus terminis & phraſibus duris, myſticis & allegoricis, tum inſpirationis, tum deificationis, &c. utebantur, & ab aliis pro enthuſiaſmis ſuis habiti vel accepti poſtea fuerunt. Quales, Johannes de Schoonhovia, Joh. Taulerus, quem inter Pontificios, Eckius; inter noſtros Marnixius carpunt: defendit autem Lud. Bloſius, ſingulari pro eo apologia. Nicolas Hunnius, and ſome other Lutherans, had the ſame Opinion of Taulerus. (r) Ex quibus & permultis ſimilibus …. proclive eſt judicium ferre, annon Taulerus per ſe, minimum per accidens, Schwenckfeldianorum, Anabaptiſtarum, & Weigelianorum figmenſis anſam dederit. Heupelius, ſo often quoted by me, brings his whole Diſputation to theſe two Propoſitions: 1. That Taulerus deſerves to be recommended to the Students in Divinity: 2. That he ought to be read with Caution; For, ſays he, there are ſome falſe Doctrines in his Works, and ſome Phraſes that ſeem to favour the Enthuſiaſts and Quietiſts. (ſ) Quod non ſolum haud pauci in eo reperiantur errores approbati, qui in ſermonibus edit. Francof. 1621, & 1681. diligenter ſunt annotati, ſed etiam non raro dictionibus & formulis loquendi utatur, quæ videntur Enthuſiaſtis nominatim Weigelianis, & quos non ita pridem D. Michael de Molinos in Italia excluſit, Quietiſtis favere.

(E) The Character, which a Man, well-skill'd in thoſe things, gives of him.] “(t) In my Opinion, “this is the Character of that Inlighten'd (v) Author. “That the Soul, by the Mortification of her Paſ-“ſions, and Vices, by the Practice of Virtues, and “the Abnegation of her ſelf, her Deſires, her Will, “Self-love, and her whole Activity, and that of all “Creatures, ought to return into her internal Re-“ceſs, looking for God there, and finding him at “laſt, who manifeſts himſelf there, by the Birth “of his Divine Word and the Spiration of his Holy “Spirit: And that afterwards, by a laſting and “continual Introverſion, ſhe ought to continue in “that State of Interiority, in which God may “work in her his Will, his Wonders, and his “Special Conduct; of which nevertheleſs that Au-“thor ſpeaks but generally.” Theſe are the Words of the Author of the new Edition of the Theologia Germanica.

(t) Lettre ſur les Auteurs myſtiques, pag. 11, 12.

(v) That is, Taulerus.

(F) Something like the Errors of the Eaſtern Philoſophers.] It is a ſurprizing thing that thoſe Myſtical Chriſtians, and thoſe Heathen Philoſophers, ſhould have had ſo exactly the ſame Notions, that one would think they had agreed among themſelves to vent the ſame Follies, ſome in the Eaſt and ſome in the Weſt. What a wonderful Agreement between People who never ſaw, and never heard of one another! I ſhall ſet down a Paſſage, whereby it will appear that ſome Myſtical Men have taught the Transformation of all Things into God, and an Identification, which would reduce the Creator and the Creatures to a kind of Nothingneſs, that is, to an eternal Inaction. This is very like the Nireupan of the Siameſe. Thoſe Myſtical Men ſuppoſed the Doctrine of the Trinity, and aſcribed the whole Action to the three Perſons, and ſo they believed that the Divine Eſſence did nothing; and that when the Soul is transformed into God's Eſſence, and raiſes her ſelf above the three Perſons, ſhe enjoys as great a reſt as if ſhe were annihilated. Itaque, ſays he (x), ne quis aliquo implicetur ac ſeducatur errore, diligenter falſos hoſce Prophetas, me eos depingente, animadvertat. Qui primi generis ſunt, Dei eſſentiam ſe eſſe ajunt ſupra divinitatis perſonas, adeoque ſe eſſe ocioſos, ac ſi non eſſent: quandoquidem Dei eſſentia non agit, ſed Spiritus Sanctus operatur. Putant ergo ſe ipſo Sancto Spiritu eſſe ſuperiores, & ſe neque ipſo, neque ejus gratia habere opus: dicunt enim non modo nullam creaturam, ſed nec ipſum quidem Deum quicquam eis vel conferre vel auferre poſſe. Quidam etiam ejus ſunt ſententia, ut animas ſuas ex Dei ſubſtantia creatas affirment, cumque mortui fuerint, rurſum ſe futuros eſſe id quod antea fuerant: perindè ut ſcyphus aqua hauſtus ex fonte, ſi in ipſum fontem refundatur, idem eſt quod fuit prius. Ajunt præterea, ſi quis per cœlum omne pervagetur, nullum eum neque angelorum neque animarum, neque ordinum, neque gloriæ, neque præmiorum diſcrimen diſtinctionemque reperturum; ſi quidem nihil illic, niſi ſimplicem quandam beatamque eſſentiam, omni actione vacantem, eſſe arbitrantur: Addunt his, poſt extremum judicii diem omnes omnino homines, malos æque ac bonos, & ſimul Deum ipſum, non niſi unam eandemque Dei eſſentiam, quæ in omnem æternitatem abſque ulla actione ſemper ocio vacatura ſit, eſſe futuros. Atque eam ob rem nihil neque ſcire, neque cognoſcere, neque velle, nec amare, nec cogitare, non gratias agere, non laudare, ſed nec deſiderare, nec habere volunt. Nam ſupra Deum & ſine Deo eſſe, nec in ulla re Deum quærere nec invenire, atque demum ab omnibus prorſus immunes

(x) Ruyſbrochius in libro de vera contemplatione, cap. 19. pag. 445. apud Giſb. Voetium in exercitiis pietatis cap. 3. pag. 86.

Divines. Those of Heidelberg cried him down as (A) an Atheiſt. He β died at Altdorf in September 1606. It was a time of Peſtilence; and as ſoon as γ he ſaw that one of his Servant-Maids had got the Plague, he left his Houſe in the Night time, but came Home again ſoon after, and died the ſame Day. He publiſh'd ſome Books which made (B) a Noiſe.

He was a little Man; hence it was that a Poet, alluding to the Word Taurellus, a Diminutive of Taurus, beſtowed this Encomium upon him; Corpore Taurellus, Taurus et ingenio. 'Tis one of the Verſes of an Elegy, that was made in his Praiſe when he was admitted Doctor of Phyſick in the Univerſity of Basil δ.

TECMESSA, the Daughter of a Phrygian (A) Prince, was made a Priſoner when the Grecians laid waſte all the Countries adjacent to Troy. Ajax liked her ſo well that he made a Concubine of her. She forgot, by Degrees, the Fall of her Family, and conceived ſuch an Affection for Ajax, who promiſed to * make her a Queen, that ſhe was extremely (B) afflicted at his Death. He had by her a Son call'd Euryſaces, who reigned in Salamis, after the Deceaſe of Telamon, Ajax's Father. Teucer, the ſecond Son of Telamon, had a Mind to return into Salamis, after he had ſettled in the Iſle of Cyprus; but † Euryſaces hinder'd him. The Athenians had a particular Veneration for Ajax and his Son. Pauſanias ſays ‡, that the Honours, which had been decreed to them, continued in his time, and that the Altar of Euryſaces was ſtill to be ſeen at Athens. I find nothing concerning the other Son of Ajax, mention'd by β Dictys Cretenſis, whom he calls Aiantides. His Mother's Name was Glauca. He was put into Teucer's Hands, as well as Euryſaces, when β Id. ib.

γ Paulus Freherus in Theatro virorum illuſtrium, pag. 1320.

δ Taken from Scioppius in Scaligero hypobol. fol. 198, verſo.

* Quintus Calaber, l. 5. v. 548.

† Juſtin. l. 44. c. 3.

‡ Lib. 1. pag. 33.

β Dictys. Cret. lib. 5. See hereafter the Remark C.

immunes eſſe volunt. Et hoc ipſi perfectam appellant ſpiritûs paupertatem. Verum ejuſcemodi paupertas in cælo minimè invenitur neque in Deo, neque in angelis, neque in ſanctis, ſed nec in hominibus bonis toto orbe terrarum. Itaque non niſi diabolica & tartarea paupertas eſt. Our Taulerus was never like thoſe doating Men, and very ſolidly confutes thoſe who fancy they are only a meer Paſſive Inſtrument in God's Hands (a).

(A) Cried him down as an Atheiſt.] Voetius tells us what was the Occaſion of it. This Queſtion being put to him: (b) Cur Theologi Heidelbergenſes ante annos aliquot Nicol. Taurellum philoſophum non ignobilem dixerint Atheum Medicum, in (c) literis ad Deputatos Synodi Holland. ſuper libro & cauſâ Conr. Vorſtii perſcriptis? Et an non falcem miſerint in alienam meſſem, & indignè traduxerint iſtius aliorumque ſimilium magnorum virorum inventa ad illuſtrandam & perficiendam philoſophiam? He anſwers it thus: Arbitror eos reſpexiſſe paradoxa non pauca quæ imprimis compendio Metaphyſico, & Triumpho Philoſophiæ inſpargit; & ad divina ac Thelogica paſſim applicat: quibus limites communes hodierno Chriſtianiſmo Theologiæ tranſiliri, & dogmata nonnulla conquaſſari, atque adeo Scepticis, Libertinis, aliiſque fanaticis & ſecundi generis Atheis cauſam nimis tradi non immeritò metuendum eſt. De intentione illius viri nolumus judicare, nec cætera ejus inquirimus. Aliter etiam judicamus de ingenioſis ipſius diſputationibus, in naturalibus contra Piccolomineum, Cæſalpinum, aliosque phyſicos: ubi omnem libertatem Socraticam tollere nolimus: nec Theologici hoc fori eſt, ſed medici, phyſici, mathematici: quomodo vice verſa, metaphyſica, pneumatologica, & theologica naturalia non tam, nedum ſolius, phyſico-medici & mathematici fori ſunt, quam theologici. Videant ergo juniores, ut cum judicio legant philoſophemata ejus, quæ naturalia tranſcendunt. Though that famous Author does not plainly condemn the Heidelberg Divines, he gives us ground to believe that they were too haſty. Such Accuſations ought not to be ſo common. It appears, on the other hand, that he does juſtice to that Profeſſor, who was certainly a Man of great Parts, and a ſubtil Diſputant. I have quoted in (d) another place a Paſſage, wherein 'tis ſaid, that the ſame Divine charged him with Atheiſm: But I muſt obſerve here, that he call'd him only an Aſſertor of Paradoxes, (e) Aſſertio παραδοξολογίας Taurelli.

(B) He publiſh'd ſome Books.] A Method of Prognoſtications, relating to Phyſick; Notes upon the Works of Arnaldus à Villanova: Diſcuſſiones Phyſicæ de mundo contra Piccolomineum: Diſcuſſiones Phyſicæ & Metaphyſicæ de cælo adverſus eundem: Alpes cæſæ, 'tis a Book againſt Cæſalpinus: de infiniti continui ſectione: de rerum æternitate. I have quoted (f) in another place a Book, wherein he has a particular Opinion, concerning the Souls of Beaſts. See the Titles inſerted in a Paſſage out of Voetius, in the foregoing Remark.

He had begun a Book de Uſiis per ſe ſubſiſtentibus, ſome Pieces whereof were Printed after his Death, with a new Edition of the Tract de Cælo & Mundo. Picart his Collegue, took care of that Edition at Amberg, in 1611, in 8vo. It appears from theſe Fragments that Taurellus underſtood very well the Nature of Subſtance, and wherein it is diſtinguiſh'd from Accidents. 'Tis ſomewhat ſtrange that the Liberty he took to confute Ariſtotle ſhould have made him ſo odious to the Divines: For he chiefly confuted the Doctrines of Ariſtotle that are contrary to Religion. This one may ſee particularly in a Book of his, printed at Marpurg, in 1604, in 8vo. and intitled, De Rerum æternitate: Nicolai Taurelli Mutbelgardenſis, Med. & Phyſices in Altdorffenſi Noricorum Academia Profeſſoris, Metaphyſices Univerſalis partes quatuor. In quibus placita Ariſtotelis, Valleſii, Piccolominei, Cæſalpini, Societatis Conimbricenſis, aliorumque diſcutiuntur, examinantur atque refutantur. He therein clearly and ſolidly confutes Ariſtotle's Opinion, concerning the Eternity of the World. He was certainly one of the beſt Metaphyſicians of that time.

(A) Daughter of a Phrygian Prince.] Dictys Cretenſis (g) calls him Teuthrantes, and ſays, that Ajax kill'd him ſolitario certamine. Every Body will tranſlate theſe Words as he thinks fit, and perhaps ſome Readers will underſtand 'em of a Duel. Afterwards Ajax took, plunder'd and burnt the Town of that Phrygian, whoſe Daughter Tecmeſſa was carried away, with the reſt of the Booty, and adjudged to Ajax, when the Booty was divided. Poſt paucos dies expugnata atque incenſa civitate magnam vim prædæ abſtrahit, abducens Tecmeſſam filiam regis ….. At deinde Ajaci ob egregia laborum facinora Teuthrantis filiam Tecmeſſam concedunt. If we believe (h) Horace, the Priſoner moved Ajax's Heart by her Beauty. Sophocles (i) does not agree with Dictys in every particular: For he ſays, that Tecmeſſa's Father (k) was already dead, when his States were laid waſte by Ajax: and that 'twas his Widow, who was kill'd when the Town was taken. Tecmeſſa ſpeaks to Ajax in theſe Words:

> Σὺ γάρ μοι πατρίδ' ᾔστωσας δορὶ
> Καὶ μητέρ' ἀλλ' ἡ μοῖρα (l) τὸν φύσαντά μοι
> Καθεῖλεν ᾅδου θανασίμους οἰκήτορας.
> Tu enim mihi patriam vaſtaſti bello,
> Matrem ſuſtuliſti, mors verò patrem
> Abripuit ad manes qui apud inferos ſunt.

(B) Extremely afflicted at his Death.] Sophocles and Quintus Calaber bring her in, uſing very moving Expreſſions. The firſt ſuppoſes that ſhe uſed many Intreaties to prevent his killing himſelf; and that ſhe begg'd of him not to leave her expoſed to a Thouſand Misfortunes by his Death, putting him (m) in mind of the Pleaſures he had enjoy'd by her.

> Ἀνδρί τοι χρεὼν
> Μνήμην προσεῖναι, τερπνὸν εἴ τί που πάθοι.
> Decet enim virum
> Memorem eſſe, ſi quid illi ſuave accidit.

The

(a) See the Paſſage of Taulerus, quoted by Voetius, ubi ſupra. p. 78, 79.

(b) Giſb. Voetius, diſput. ſelect. Tom. 1. pag. 200.

(c) That Letter is dated from Heidelberg, the 26th of Auguſt 1610. 'Tis the 149 among thoſe publiſh'd by the Remonſtrants in the Edition of the Year 1684.

(d) In the Article of Gorlæus.

(e) Voetius in Theologico philoſophicis Corollariis.

(f) In the Article Sennertus.

(g) Lib.

(h)

4. l. 2.

(i) In Ajax.

(k)

(l)

(m)

Ajax. l. 4. v. 517.

when the Grecians took Shipping in order to go Home γ. Some said δ, that Teucer grew angry with Telamon, because he did not bring back with him Tecmessa and Eurysaces. He went on Board a Ship which made more haste than the rest. Pausanias observes ζ, that Ajax's Posterity was not very illustrious, and the private Life of Ajax is the Reason he gives for it; which, I think, is a (C) wrong one. In my Opinion, Lescaloperius should not have said, that Julius Cæsar writ a Tragedy (D) intitled, Tecmessa.

TELAMON, the Son of Æacus (A) and Endeis, is one of the principal Heroes of the fabulous History. He had two Brothers, viz. Peleus and Phocus; but the latter η was his Brother only by the Father's side. There arose such a Jealousy between Phocus and the two others, that the latter plotted to kill him. They took their Time as they were playing together at Quoits. Some θ say, that Peleus kill'd Phocus, by throwing his Quoit at his Head; others say ι Telamon did it: and 'tis generally agreed that he who did not kill him, was nevertheless κ an Acomplice in that Action. Æacus (B) thought so, for he turn'd out μ Peleus, as well as Telamon. The latter retired into the Isle of Salamis, where Cychreus reigned, who * married him to his Daughter Glauca, and made him his Successor. Others say, that † having no Children he appointed Telamon for his Heir. What is certain, is, that Telamon reigned in the Isle of Salamis. Glauca being dead, he married (C) Periboea, the γ Dictys, ubi.

δ Read Servium in Æn. l. 1. v. 619. where instead of Theomissam read Tecmessam, and instead of Turisacen read Eurysacen.

ζ Lib. 1. pag. 71.

η Apollodor. l. 3. p. m. 240.

θ Pausanias, lib. 2. pag. 72. Note, That according to Diodorus Siculus, Peleus did it out of Inadvertency.

ι Apollod. ib. Plutarch. in Parall. c. 25.

κ Appollodor. ibid.

μ He reign'd in the Isle of Ægina.

* Diodor. Sical. l. 6. c. 10.

† Apollod. ibid.

The Scholiast observes upon this, that Tecmessa (a) puts Ajax in Mind of what had pass'd in their Bed; and that she does it modestly, and like a chaste Woman, and not so plainly as Hecuba in Euripides. Ὁ δέ γε Εὐριπίδης [illegible] εἰπὼν τὴν Ἑκάβην λέγουσαν ποιεῖ· Ποῦ τὰς φίλας δῆτ' εὐφρόνας δείξεις ἄναξ; Ἢ τῶν ἐν εὐνῇ φιλτάτων ἀσπασμάτων χάριν τίν' ἕξει παῖς ἐμή, κείνης δ' ἐγώ; What will my Daughter get by the amorous Embraces she will afford you in her Bed? The French Stage is more nice than that of Athens. The best Pieces of Racine would be hiss'd at for such a plainness.

(C) Which, I think, is a wrong Reason.] I will not object to Pausanias, that he says (b) Ajax succeeded his Grand Father (c) by the Mother's side, who was King of Megara: I am willing to grant him, that Ajax lived always a private Life, because he died before his Father Telamon: But I deny that this is the Reason why his Descendants were less illustrious than those of Teucer, the second Son of Telamon: The Posterity of Teucer reigned in the Isle of Cyprus till Evagoras; and therefore some Descendants of Telamon made a great Figure for many Ages. Why? Because Teucer reigned; but because Ajax did not reign, his Descendants were not very illustrious. This is Pausanias's way of arguing. I repeat it again, this is a wrong way of reasoning; for Eurysaces, Ajax's Son, succeeded to the Kingdom of Salamis after the Death of Telamon, as if (d) he had been a King's Son. But here is the Reason why his Descendants made no great Appearance in the World. He had a Son call'd Philaus, who parted with the Kingdom of Salamis to be made Citizen of Athens: This we find in Pausanias (e). And therefore the Posterity of Ajax, being divested of the Supreme Authority, could not make so great a Figure as that of the other Son of Telamon. They had in the Person of Miltiades, descended from that Son of Eurysaces, all the Glory that a Family, not possess'd of a Kingdom, can have; but after all, they did not sway the Scepter as Teucer's Posterity did. I must observe, that Philaus, who, according to Pausanias, was Eurysaces's Son, and Ajax's Grand-Son, was Ajax's Son, according to (f) Herodotus. He was, according to the same Historian, the Stock of the Athenian Æacides, from whom Miltiades descended. Plutarch (g) will have it, that Phileus and Eurysaces, both Ajax's Sons, resign'd the Property of the Isle of Salamis to the Athenians, in order to be made Citizens of Athens. He adds, that Eurysaces made his Abode at Brauron in Attica, and Philaus at Mileta (h); and that Philaus gave his Name to the Philaides, a People of Attica, from whom Pisistratus derived his Original. Stephanus Byzantinus ranks the Philaides under the Tribe call'd Ægeis (i), and says, that Philaus, from whom that People had their Name, was the Son of Ajax and Lyside, the Daughter of Coronus, the Son of Lapithus.

(D) A Tragedy entitled, Tecmessa.] This Jesuit observes, that the Romans inserted the Vowel u in many Greek Words; which was practised to the time of Julius Cæsar, who was the first Author of a Tragedy intitled, Tecmessa. These are his Words (k). In Alcumena, Alcumaon, Tecumessa, Hercules, Æsculapius, & aliis ejusmodi Græcis nominibus, vocalis u à priscis Latinis interjecta est, non tantum ubi carmen exigeret, ut ait ille; sed ubique passim, quod ita mos ferret, etiam in salutatione. Atque ille mos tenuit usque ad Julium Cæsarem, qui Tragædiam de Tecmessa primus scripsisse fertur, & ita pronunciari jussisse. Itaque post Tecmessam cæptum est dici, uti hodieque dicimus, Alcmena, & Alcmæon*: verùm* Hercules & Æsculapius prævaluere, & adhuc intercalariam retinent vocalem. The Grammarian Victorinus was contented to say, that Julius Cæsar began to contract those Words. If Lescaloperius had read the Book of one of his Brethren, he would have found the following Passage in it. (l) Scribit Victorinus, lib. 1. veteres nunquam c, & m conjunxisse, usque ad Julium Cæsarem, qui primus Alcmaon Alcmena, Tecmessa, quos prius Alcumenam, Tecumessam Alcumaonem scribebant. I don't think Suetonius would have forgot this Dramatick Piece of Julius Cæsar, if it had been composed by him.

(A) The Son of Æacus and Endeis.] The Children of Telamon had a Divine Original upon several Accounts. Æacus was Jupiter's Son. Endeis was the Daughter of the Centaur Chiron, Son of Saturn. Periboea, the Wife of Telamon and the Mother of Ajax, was the Daughter of Alcathous. The latter was the Son of Pelops, whose Father was Tantalus the Son of Jupiter.

(B) Æacus thought so.] It will not be improper to mention what Pausanias (m) says of it. Some time after the Flight of those two Brothers, Telamon sent a Deputy to Æacus, to assure him that the Murther had been committed out of Inadvertency. Æacus made Answer, that he should take care not to come into the Island; but that, if he had a Mind to justify himself, he might speak on Board a Ship, or upon a Causey made for that end. Telamon pitch'd upon the last Expedient, and made a Causey near the Port, where he pleaded his Cause; but not being found innocent, he retired a second time.

(C) He married Periboea the Daughter of Alcathous.] Though the Story, which Plutarch (n) had from Aretades, concerning Telamon, is miserably disfigured; yet one may perceive he meant that Telamon, having too much sported with Periboea, thought fit to make his escape. The Father of that young Woman, thinking that one of his Subjects had debauched her, ordered one of his Guards to throw her into the Sea. The Guard, moved with Compassion, chose rather to sell her: The Ship, on Board which she was, landed at Salamis, where Telamon bought Periboea, who was brought to Bed of Ajax. A Learned (o) Man is of Opinion, that instead of Εὔβοιαν, we ought to read Μέγαραν in that Passage of Plutarch, since most Authors are agreed, that Ajax's Mother was the Daughter of Alcathous, King of Megara. They are not so unanimous as to the Name of that Lady: Some call (a) her Periboea, and others (b) Eriboea. 'Tis plain this Difference proceeds only from the Fault of a Transcri-

(k) Lescaloperius, commentar. in Ciceron. de nat. Deor. l. 3. p. 624.

(l) Martin. del Rio Syntagmat. tragici parte ultima. Mr. du Rondel has acquainted me with this Passage.

(m) Lib. 2. pag. 72.

(n) In Parallelis, pag. 312. n. 27.

(o) Meziriac upon Ovid's Epistles, pag. 275.

(a) Apollodor. l. 3. Pausanias, l. 1. p. 15. & 40.

(b) Sophoc. in Ajace, Pindarus Isthm. od. 6. Diodor. Siculus, l. 4. Hyginus c. 97.

the Daughter of Alcathous, Son of Pelops, and King of Megara, by whom he had (D) Ajax that great Warriour; of whom I speak in its proper place. We are told of a third Wife of Telamon, who brought him a Son call'd Teucer. That Wife is Hesione ¶, the Daughter of Laomedon King of Troy, and Priamus's Sister: That Marriage happen'd in this manner. Telamon follow'd Hercules, when Laomedon was to be puniſh'd for refuſing to pay to Hercules what he had promis'd him. He was forced in his chief Town; and becauſe Telamon was the firſt who ſcaled the Walls of Troy, Hercules preſented him with Heſione. Telamon ſignaliz'd himſelf upon ſeveral other Occaſions in his Attendance upon that General, as in the War * with the Amazons and Meropes, and β in the Fight with the Giant Alcyoneus. He was one of the γ Argonauta, and probably 'twas only old Age that prevented his going to the Siege of Troy. He ſent thither his two Sons. In Pauſanias's time they ſhewed ſtill near the Port of Salamis, the Rock on which δ he ſat, to ſee, as far as his Sight could reach, the Ship on which they went to the ζ General Meeting of the Grecian Fleet. He was ſtill alive when the Grecians return'd from Troy, and doubtleſs very ſorry for the Death of his Son Ajax; but he appear'd more diſpleaſed with Teucer η his other Son, for not having prevented or revenged it. He would not receive him, and ſhamefully expell'd him. It has been obſerv'd θ of him, as well as of his Brother Peleus, that he had a Son that ſurpaſs'd him. See what was the Fate of Ajax's Deſcendants in the Article Tecmeſſa, and of Teucer's Poſterity in the Article of that Name.

TELEBOES, a People who inhabited an Iſland near Acarnania, of whom perhaps no mention had been made long ago, had they not indirectly a great Relation with the Birth of Hercules; but by Reaſon of that Relation they are known in the loweſt Forms of the Schools. Is there any School-Boy who does not know that Alcmena conceived Hercules, whilſt Amphytrion, her Huſband, was making War with the Teleboes, &c? The Reaſon why he made War with 'em, is, that Alcmena had promis'd to marry the Man, who ſhould fight 'em. But in order to know why ſhe hated that People, the thing muſt be fetch'd a little higher. Meſtor, the Son of Perſeus, had by his Wife ‡ Lyſidice, a Daughter named Hippothoe, whom Neptune carried away into the Iſlands called Echinades ¼, where ſhe brought him a Son, (A) whoſe Tranſcriber, who left out, or added a Letter to the Name of Ajax's Mother. Thoſe who tranſcrib'd his Copy, took in that Fault, which occaſion'd a different reading; and then the Authors followed the Copy they had bought. The Name Meliboea, which we find in Athenaus, proceeds from the ſame Cauſe. That Author ſays ſhe was married to Theſeus in (c) due Form. He names ſome other Women, whom Theſeus took by Force; he names two other Wives of that Prince that are mention'd by Heſiod; and at laſt he ſays, that, according to Pherecydes, he had alſo another Wife call'd Phereboea. Thoſe four Women ought to be reduced to one; Periboea, Eriboea, Meliboea and Phereboea, are four Names of one and the ſame Woman, who hath been multiplied by the Fault of the Tranſcribers. If Theſeus's Polygamy was not more certain, with reſpect to the other Women, than as to Meliboea, mention'd by Athenaus, and Phereboea, mention'd by Pherecydes, I ſhould poſitively aſſert, that he was a Monogamiſt in Tertullian's Senſe. There is more Difficulty in what follows. Ajax's Mother was the lawful Wife of Theſeus; but when? Was it after Telamon's Death, or before ſhe married Telamon? If the firſt, it muſt be ſaid, that Theſeus ſurvived the Deſtruction of Troy, which is falſe; and that he had a very extravagant Deſire of marrying, ſince he pitch'd upon ſo old a Woman, which is very improbable. Wherefore I had rather ſay, that he married Periboea before ſhe was Telamon's Wife. But then what ſhall we do with the Story, mention'd by Plutarch? Inſtead of a young Woman, whom Telamon thought he had debauched, he would have had only another Man's Leavings, a Widow or a divorced Woman: Which does not agree with Plutarch's Narrative, and cannot be proved by other Authors. It appears by a Paſſage of Pindar (d), that Telamon was married to Periboea, when Hercules deſir'd him to follow him in his Expedition againſt Laomedon. At this rate Theſeus muſt needs have divorced his Wife ſomewhat early. However it be, we ought to remember, that (e) Periboea was one of the Virgins, whom the Athenians were obliged to deliver to Minos. Theſeus was delivered to him at the ſame time, and boldly oppoſed Minos's Attempt upon Periboea's Honour. Which may make one believe, that Theſeus fell in Love with that Maid during his Journey, for ſhe was very handſome; and that he married her ſoon after. I cannot tell whether he contain'd himſelf till after his Return; for the Heroes of antient Greece were very dangerous Fellow-Travellers for a Maid, they got Children a-pace. They were very well qualified to preſerve the Fair Sex from the Violence of a fierce Tyrant: But Women ran no leſs Danger in the Hands of ſuch Deliverers; and one might have ask'd this Queſtion, (f) ſed quis cuſtodiet ipſos cuſtodes? Let us ſee how Theſeus ſpoke to Minos. (g) Dicitur cum Theſeus Cretam ad Minoa cum ſeptem virginibus & ſex pueris veniſſet, Minoa de virginibus Periboeam quandam nomine, candore corporis inductum comprimere voluiſſe, quod cum Theſeus ſe paſſurum negaret, ut qui Neptuni filius eſſet, & valeret contra tyrannum pro virginis incolumitate decertare, &c. Hyginus tells us afterwards how Theſeus proved his Divine Original. 'Tis a curious thing: There never was ſo difficult a Proof of one's Nobility.

(D) By whom he had Ajax.] I think Dares Phrygius is the only Author, who ſays, that Heſione, Laomedon's Daughter, was Ajax's Mother, and that Ajax and Hector, by reaſon of their Kindred, were very civil, and made Preſents to one another, after they had fought ſtoutly together. Authors are generally of a quite different Opinion, viz. that Periboea or Eriboea, was Ajax's Mother, and Heſione, Teucer's Mother. I don't mind what Sophocles (h) ſays, that Ajax's Mother was alive, when that unfortunate Prince kill'd himſelf; for a Poet does not pretend to much exactneſs in writing a Tragedy: Beſides, Telamon might have been married at the ſame time to Periboea and Heſione. 'Tis certain Sophocles (i) ſays, that Teucer was a Baſtard, born of a Woman who had been taken in the War. 'Twas Heſione, as Servius informs us. Ejus (Laomedontis) filia Heſione, ſays he (k), belli jure ſublata, comiti Telamoni tradita eſt qui primus aſcenderat murum, unde Teucer natus eſt, nam Ajacem ex alia conſtat eſſe procreatum. The Scholiaſt upon theſe Words of Homer's (l) Iliad, καί σε νόθον περ ἐόντα. & te ſpurium licet exiſtentem, ſays, that Heſione, a Priſoner of War, was given to Telamon, who had Teucer by her; and that this Trojan Original was the Reaſon why the Child had that Name.

(A) A Son, whoſe Name was Taphius.] We read in the Scholiaſt (m) upon Apollonius, that the Son of Neptune and Hippothoe, was call'd Pterelaus, and had two Sons, viz. Teleboas and Taphus, who went to Electryon and demanded of him the Eſtate of their whoſe Name was Taphius. This Taphius ſettled a Colony in Taphos, and call'd the Inhabitants (B) Teleboes, becauſe he thought he had gone a † great way. He had a Son named Pterelaus, who was the Father of ſix Sons, and one Daughter. Thoſe ſix Sons going to Mycena to demand Meſtor's Kingdom, obtain'd nothing from Electryon the Son of Perſeus, and Brother of Meſtor; wherefore they plunder'd his Country. The Sons of Electryon, endeavouring to oppoſe them, were all kill'd. Their Father was making the neceſſary Preparations to revenge their Death, when he was kill'd by a ſtrange * Accident. His Daughter Alcmena was forced to retire to Thebes, and being not willing to let the Death of her Brothers (C) go unpuniſhed, ſhe promis'd to marry him, who ſhould revenge it. Amphitryon offered to do it, and got together as many Troops as ever he cou'd, and made a Deſcent in the Country of the Teleboes. He laid waſte ſome of their Iſlands, but could not take Taphos before Comatho, who fell in Love with him, had pluck'd out (D) the Golden Hair of her Father Pterelaus, which made ¶ Apollod. ubi ſupra.

---

* Pindar. Nem. od. 4.

β Id. ib. od. 4. & Iſthm. od. 6.

γ Apollon. & Valer. Flaccus Argon. paſſim.

δ Pauſan. l. 1. p. 34.

ζ 'Twas at Aulis in the Iſle of Euboea.

η See the Article Teucer.

θ Vinceris ut Ajax Praeterit Telamonem, ut Pelea vicit Achilles. Juven. Sat. 14. v. 213.

‡ The Daughter of Pelops (and of Hippodamia.) Apoll. l. 2. p. 97.

¼ They are at the Entrance of the Gulph of Lepanto.

(c) Νομίμως δ' αὐτὸ γῆμαι Μελίβοιαν τὴν Αἴαντος μητέρα γυναῖκα. Juſtam vero illius conjugem fuiſſe Meliboeam Ajacis matrem. Iſter. lib. 14. rerum Atticarum apud Athen. lib. 13. p. 557.

(d) Iſthmior. od. 6.

(e) Pauſanias, l. 1. pag. 15. See alſo pag. 40. where he concludes from Periboea*'s being ſent to* Minos, that Megara made in former times part of the State of Athens. Diodorus Siculus ſays, Alcathous was an Athenian.

(f) Juven. Sat. 6. v. 345.

(g) Hygin. Poet. Aſtron. lib. 2. c. 5.

(h) In Ajac.

(i) Ibid.

(k) In Æn. l. 1. v. 61

(l) Lib. 8. v. 284.

(m) In Argonaut. l. 1. v. 74

† [illegible] Teleboas vocavit, ideò quod procul à patria iverit. Apollod. ib.

* See the Article of Amphitryon.

their Grand-Mother Hippothoe; and not being able to prevail upon him, they had recourſe to forcible means, and kill'd many People. By this Account we get a whole Generation, and therefore this Narrative is fitter to be admitted. 'Tis an abſurd Thing to find in Apollodorus, that Electryon was attack'd by the great Grand-Sons of the Daughter of his Brother Meſtor. There is another thing in Apollodorus, concerning Taphius, which is not well cleared. This Author ſays (a), that Taphius reigned at Mycenæ with Electryon, when the ſix Sons of Pterelaus went to Electryon and demanded of him Meſtor's Kingdom for their Grand-father by their Mother's ſide. That Grand-father was Taphius himſelf, who reigned at Mycena with Electryon: Electryon had no other Kingdom; and therefore what Kingdom could they demand of him for Taphius? Obſerve, that, according to the (b) Scholiaſt upon Apollonius, the whole Kingdom of Perſeus was poſſeſt in common, after his Death, by his four Sons, Alcæus, Sthenelus, Meſtor and Electryon. According to this Account, no juſt claim could be made to Meſtor's Kingdom, in favour of Taphius, ſince Taphius was already in poſſeſſion of it. However it be, we read in that Scholiaſt that Taphius, the Son of Pterelaus, call'd the Iſle of Taphos by his Name; and that his Brother Teleboas call'd by his the People I ſpeak of in this Article, whoſe chief Habitation was in the Iſle of Taphos. This is one of the Etymologies: I have already mention'd another; the reſt may be ſeen hereafter. 'Tis certain, that the ſame People were indifferently call'd (c) Taphii and Teleboes.

(B) And called the Inhabitants Teleboes.] Stephanus Byzantinus informs us, that the Country of the Teleboes, or Telebois, was part of Acarnania, and had its Name from Teleboas, being formerly called Taphion. Ariſtotle (d) ſays partly the ſame; for he tells us, that the Teleboes were poſſeſt of part of Acarnania. He further ſays (e), that one Lelex, a Native of Leucadia, had a Daughter, whoſe Son, call'd Teleboas, had 22 Sons of that ſame Name. What I have juſt now mentioned out of Stephanus Byzantinus, is directly contrary to Strabo (f), who affirms, that the Iſles of the Taphians, one of which was call'd Taphos, were at firſt called the Iſles of the Teleboes. He adds, that Amphytrion ſubdued them, and gave 'em to Cephalus an Athenian Fugitive, who help'd him to conquer them. It has been ſaid (g), that the Iſle of Cephalonia was then given to Cephalus, who call'd it by that Name, and (h) became afterwards Maſter of Acarnania. We read, that the Teleboes (i) were great Robbers. See the Proofs of it in Bochart's Geographia Sacra (k), and the Remark F of this Article. I ſhall ſet down the Words of the Scholiaſt of Apollonius upon a Paſſage wherein that Poet calls the ſame People Teleboes and Taphii. 'Tis in the 747th Verſe of the firſt Book. The Iſle of Taphos is one of the Echinades: It was inhabited by the Teleboes, who before lived in Acarnania; they were great Robbers (l). They went into the Kingdom of Argos to carry away the Oxen of Electryon, Father of Alcmena. There happen'd a Fight, in which Electryon, and his Sons were kill'd. Wherefore Alcmena declared ſhe would be the Reward of him, who ſhould revenge Electryon; and becauſe Amphitryon undertook it, ſhe married him. 'Tis commonly ſaid in our Dictionaries, that Amphitryon revenged the Death of Alcmena's Brother: Which is a Fault, for ſhe loſt ſeveral Brothers; and in Apollodorus ſhe declares, that whoever has a Mind to be her Husband, muſt undertake to revenge her Brothers. In the Scholiaſt upon Apollonius ſhe deſires her Father ſhould be revenged. Through a Fault of the Preſs the Authors, conſulted by Charles Stephens, ſaid Patris inſtead of Fratris; and that Fault remains ſtill. Here follow two Etymologies. (m) Τηλεβόαι [illegible] οἱ Τάφιοι, ἤτοι τῆλε [illegible] ἢ ἀπὸ Τηλεβόου τοῦ [illegible] βασιλέως υἱοῦ. Lloyd aſcribes many things to the Scholiaſt upon Apollonius which I don't find. 1. That Herodotus ſays, that Perſeus left four Sons behind him. He ſhould have ſaid Herodorus. 2. That one of 'em was call'd Aſarus: He ſhou'd have ſaid Alcæus. 3. That another was call'd Neſtor: He ſhould have ſaid Meſtor. 4. That Electryon was bound for a Sum of Money for Hippothoe: The Scholiaſt ſays no ſuch thing. 5. That Alcmena married Amphitryon, a very powerful Theban Lord: The Scholiaſt could not call him a Theban; Amphitryon was not a Theban. 6. That the Kingdom of the Teleboes, that was given to Cephalus, devolved to Ulyſſes by Inheritance: I find no ſuch thing in the Scholiaſt. See Lloyd at the Word Taphia. His Article is the ſame with that of Charles Stephens. I muſt not forget, that the Teleboes ſettled in one part of Great Greece, in that Iſland which Tiberius's Retreat made ſo famous. This we find in Tacitus: (n) Græcos ea tenuiſſe, Capreaſque Teleboïs habitatas fama tradit. Virgil (o), Auſonius, and Statius ſay the ſame.

Quem generaſſe Telon Sebethide Nympha
Fertur, Teleboum Capreas cum regna teneret.

They are Virgil's Words. As for Auſonius, he expreſſes himſelf thus: (p) Virideſque reſultant Teleboæ. He ſpeaks of the Iſle of Caprea. Statius (q) ſays

Seu tibi Bacchei vineta madentia Gauri,
Teleboumque domos, trepidis ubi dulcia nautis
Lumina noctivaga tollit Pharus æmula lunæ.

(C) To let the Death of her Brothers go unpuniſhed.] I have ſhewn in the foregoing Remark that the ſingular Number ought not to be uſed here, and that ſome Authors, contrary to Apollodorus's Account, ſay, that Electryon was kill'd with his Sons; ſo that Alcmena mention'd her Father and not her Brothers, when ſhe deſired to be revenged by him, who was to be her Husband.

(D) Of her Father Pterelaus.] Plautus ſuppoſes, that Amphitryon (r) kill'd Pterelaus with his own Hand; and that he had for his ſhare of the Booty the Golden (s) Cup of that Prince. Poets are allowed to ſuppoſe ſuch things, though they be never ſo falſe. But I don't think, that the Learned Mrs. le Fevre is well grounded in charging Plautus with a ſmall Anachroniſm. It is certain, ſays ſhe (t), that Pterelaus was not contemporary with Amphitryon, ſince he was the Son of Taphius, who was the Son of a Niece of Alcæus, Father of Amphitryon; and conſequently the Couſin-German of Amphitryon was Pterelaus*'s Grand-Mother*. This Genealogy is taken out of Apollodorus: I have already ſaid, that this Author is not ſo clear as the Scholiaſt upon Apollonius. Nevertheleſs Plautus ought not to be cenſured upon this Head; for ſince Apollodorus ſays, that Pterelaus was alive when Amphitryon went to attack him, Plautus does not advance of his own Head that thoſe two Men lived at the ſame time; he might have found it in ſome Hiſtorical Monuments: And therefore he is not guilty of that Anachroniſm. 'Tis much more ſurprizing, that the Sons of Pterelaus ſhould make War with Electryon, Amphitryon's Uncle by the Mother's ſide, as we read in Apollodorus.

I muſt ſay ſomething of Pterelaus's Cup: Jupiter made a preſent of it to Alcmena; and then when the true Amphitryon look'd for it among his Things, to know whether it had been given to his Wife, as ſhe affirm'd, it occaſion'd a very ſurprizing and divert-

Xxxx

(m) Schol. Apollon. in lib. 1. v. 747. See alſo Euſtath. in l. 1. Odyſſ.

(n) Tacit. annal. l. 4. c. 67.

(o) Virgil. Æn. l. 7. verſu 734.

(p) Apud Lipſium in Tacit. Ann. l. 4. c. 67.

(q) Silv. 5. l. 3. v. 100.

(r) Ipſuſque Amphitruo Regem Pterelam ſua obtruncat manu. Plaut. Amphitr. Act. 1. ſc. 1. v. 95.

(s) Poſt ob virtutem hero Amphitruoni eſt patera donata aurea. Quî Pterelea potitare Rex ſolitu'ſt. Ib. v. 104.

(t) Remarks upon the Amphitryon, pag. 251.

made him immortal. Amphitryon did not keep thoſe Conqueſts for himſelf, but left 'em to Cephalus and Eleus, who aſſiſted him in that War. This is what we find in Apollodorus *. What I have found in other Authors, that may ſerve to rectify or clear him, or to give a more diſtinct Account of the Matter, may be ſeen in the Remarks, where you'll find ſome Obſervations (E) upon ſome Paſſages of Plautus's Amphitryon, and upon Mrs. (F) le Fevre's Notes.

TELLIER

vering Incident in Plautus's Comedy. It was not a meer Invention of the Poet, for (v) "Charon of Lampſacus an Hiſtorian, who lived in the 75th Olympiad, that is, 478 Years before Chriſt, ſaid, that the Cup beſtowed upon Alcmena, was ſtill to be ſeen in his time in the Academy; that it was long, ſomewhat hollow'd in the middle, with the Edges a little turn'd down." Charon's Works are not extant, and therefore I have conſulted Athenæus (w), who quotes him. He ſays Charon of Lampſacus affirm'd, in one of his Books, that the Cup, which Jupiter preſented to Alcmena, when he put on the ſhape of Amphitryon, was ſtill to be ſeen in his time at Lacedæmon. I don't find that Charon made a Deſcription of that Cup: 'Tis Macrobius (a) who deſcribes it, building upon what was ſaid by (b) Pherecydes, that the Veſſel which Jupiter preſented to Alcmena, was a Carcheſium. Athenæus tells us, that Pherecydes, and Herodorus of Heraclea ſaid ſo; and mentions Callixenus's Deſcription of the Carcheſium. Doubtleſs Macrobius had from Athenæus what he ſays of it, and his Words ought to be mended by thoſe of that Greek Author, as Caſaubon obſerves. (c) Plautus inſuetum nomen reliquit, atque in fabula Amphitryone pateram datam: cum longe utriuſque poculi figura diverſa ſit: patera enim ut & ipſum nomen indicio eſt, planum ac patens eſt: carcheſium vero procerum & circa mediam partem compreſſum, anſatum mediocriter, anſis à ſummo ad infimum pertinentibus. Now ſee the Text of Athenæus. Καλλίξενος ὁ Ῥόδιος ἐν τοῖς περὶ Ἀλεξανδρείας φησὶν, ὅτι ποτήριόν ἐστιν ἐπίμηκες συνηγμένον εἰς μέσον ἱκανῶς, ὦτα ἔχον μέχρι τοῦ πυθμένος καθήκοντα. Callixenus Rhodius tradit in ſuis libris de Alexandria, carcheſium eſſe poculum oblongum, in medio leniter compreſſum, auribus utrinque ad fundum uſque deſcendentibus. 'Tis plain the Adverb Mediocriter in Macrobius, refers to compreſſum, and not to anſatum. A Copiſt, who thinks that an Adverb belongs to a certain Adjective, does hardly ſcruple to put it before, or after that Adjective. No Body thinks that there is any harm in writing anſatum mediocriter, rather than mediocriter anſatum. But ſometimes 'tis a thing of great Moment, not to take ſuch a Liberty; for Inſtance, when the Adverb does not belong to anſatum.

(E) Some Obſervations upon ſome Paſſages of Plautus's (d) Amphitryon.] I. This Poet ſuppoſes, that 'twas Creon King of Thebes, who made War with the Teleboes, to revenge the Thebans, who had been very ill uſed by them.

(e) Victis hoſtibus legiones reveniunt domum,
Duello extincto maximo, atque internecatis hoſtibus,
Qui multa Thebano populo objecerunt acerba funera.
Id vi & virtute militum victum atque expugnatum opidum 'ſt,
Imperio atque auſpicio heri mei Amphitruonis maxime.
Præda atque agro adoreaque affecit populares ſuos,
Regique Thebano Creonti regnum ſtabilivit ſuum.

Plautus overturns this Hiſtory; for Authors are agreed, that Amphitryon undertook this Expedition only to puniſh the Teleboes, who had kill'd Alcmena's Father, or at leaſt her Brothers. He could not marry Alcmena without revenging her of the Teleboes. This was the occaſion of the War, in which Creon engaged merely out of Complaiſance to Amphitryon, or in Acknowledgment of a Service he had received from him (f). This Hiſtorical Argument would have afforded many Ornaments, if the Poet had been willing to improve it. He makes his Hero a leſſer Man than he was: He repreſents him as commanding only the Troops of another Prince, in a War undertaken for the Intereſt of that Prince; whereas, according to Hiſtory, Amphitryon acted in chief for his own Intereſts, and had with him none but Auxiliary Troops, whoſe Commanders he gratified with the Countries conquered by him. II. Plautus ſays, the Troops took ſhipping in the Port of Euboea, which he calls Perſicus by a Licentious Anticipation. But this is not the worſt: 'Tis a great deal more ſtrange that he does not find a Port more convenient for People, who were to ſail towards the Echinades. What a great Compaſs muſt one fetch to go thither from the Iſle of Euboea! III. The Lying in of Alcmena is an ill-contrived Incident, whereby the Poet is obliged to contradict Tradition. All thoſe, who mention Hercules's Birth, ſuppoſe, that Jupiter, having put on the Shape of Amphitryon, lay with Alcmena, in a Night which he took care to make longer than others are. Plautus ſhould have built upon this Ground, and adorn'd it; but he ſhould not have ſuppoſed a ſecond Viſit, Jupiter ſhould not have appeared again under the ſame Shape the Night before the Lying-in. This is contrary to Tradition, and beſides the Hearers and Readers are offended at it. 'Tis no longer a tender Love but a Piece of Brutiſhneſs. A Woman, ready to be deliver'd of two Boys, is not an Object fit to be produced upon the Stage; much leſs ought the greateſt of the Gods be repreſented ſo greedy of ſuch an Object, that the uſual length of the Night is not ſufficient for him to ſatisfy his Paſſion. If the Charms he found in the Embraces of that Lady made him wiſh for a ſecond Interview, he ſhould not have put it off till the Day before her Lying-in. So great a Patience is highly improbable. This Objection cannot be anſwered; for none can ſay, that Plautus makes his Play laſt nine Months, without running himſelf into greater Difficulties, and being ignorant of theſe Words of Mercury (h).

HODIE illa pariet filios geminos duos.

This Hodie refers to the ſame Day that he turn'd out Soſia in the firſt Scene. IV. I don't approve what ſome ſay, that Alcmena's Delivery, without any pain, is too plainly contrary to what we are told by the Greeks of Juno's Artifices: And 'tis a thing, ſay they, which ought not to be ſuppoſed, without an extreme Neceſſity. A Poet, who pitches upon the Death of Polyxena for the Subject of his Tragedy, may be allowed to alter many Things in the Tradition: But if he ſuppoſed, that Achilles did not deſire ſhe ſhould be ſacrificed to him, if he neglected the moſt material Paſſages of that Hiſtory, he would act againſt the Rules. What ſignifies it to Plautus if Alcmena feels no pain?

Dum (i) hæc aguntur, interea uxorem tuam
Neque gementem, neque plorantem noſtrum quiſquam audivimus.
Ita profecto ſine dolore peperit.

This ſeems to me a wrong Objection; for it was neceſſary, in order to unravel the Plot, that there ſhould be ſomething miraculous in Alcmena's Delivery. Her Chaſtity was to be juſtified, and a jealous Husband was to be pacified; and therefore there was a neceſſity for the Poet to bring in Jupiter in the Caſe. He might therefore, nay, he was obliged to lay aſide what was ſaid of Lucina (k).

(F) And upon Mrs. le Fevre's (l) Notes.] She (m) thinks, that Plautus made uſe of the Word Nepos to ſignify a Nephew in theſe Words of the 4th Scene of the 4th Act. Ego idem ille ſum Amphitruo, Gorgophones nepos, Imperator Thebanorum. I can hardly believe it. 'Tis true, that, according to the Genealogy mention'd by Apollodorus, this was the only degree of Kindred between (n) Gorgophone and Amphitryon; but, ſince Plautus did not follow Apollodorus in ſome things, 'tis reaſonable to think that he had ſeen ſome other Genealogies, wherein he found that Gorgophone was Amphitryon's Grand-Mother. There is more Senſe in boaſting of being the Grand-Son of an illuſtrious Lady, than in boaſting of being her Nephew: 'Tis therefore probable, that the Poet took the thing in the moſt advantageous Senſe. I proceed to another Fact. He ſuppoſes, that the Teleboes deſtroyed Electryon. I ſhall quote the whole Paſſage, which contains a Proof of what has been ſaid above concerning the Robberies of that People.

Ego (p) idem latrones hoſtes bello & virtute contudi.
Electryonem perdiderant, noſtræ & germanos conjugis,
Achaiam, Ætoliam, Phocidem, per freta Ionium &
Ægeum, & Creticum
Vagati, vi vortebant piratica.

Mrs. le Fevre (q) will have it, that he has altered Hiſtory in this Point; "for Electryon was not kill'd by his Enemies. 'Twas Amphitryon himſelf who kill'd

---

* Biblioth. l. 2. p. 97. & 98.

(v) They are Mrs. le Fevre's Words, ubi ſupra. pag. 275. If you compare 'em with the Words of Macrobius, you'll ſee whether ſhe hath render'd them well.

(w) Lib. 11. p. 475.

(a) Meminit carcheſii Pherecydes in libris hiſtoriarum, atque Jovem Alcmenæ precium concubitus carcheſium aureum dono dediſſe. Macrob. Saturn. l. 5. c. 21.

(b) Apud Athen. pag. 474.

(c) Macrob. ubi ſupra.

(d) Confer quæ ſupra, Remark D.

(e) Act. 1. ſc. 1. v. 33. Mercury had been ſaying in the Prologue. Is nunc Amphitruo præfectu'ſt legionibus Nam cum Telebois bellum 'ſt Thebano poplo.

(f) See Apollodorus, l. 2. pag. m. 97. & ſeq.

TELLIER (MICHAEL LE) Chancellor of France, who died the 30th of October 1685. See an Encomium upon him in Moreri's Dictionary. He left behind him two Sons, one of which was very much ſpoken of in Europe, under the Name of (A) Marquis De LOUVOIS: The other is one of the moſt illuſtrious Prelates of the Gallican Church for his Learning, and the Vigour wherewith he always maintain'd † the Pre-eminencies and Rights of his Dignity, and rectified the falſe Steps of the (*A*Δ) Monks in his Dioceſe. He is Arch-biſhop of Rheims. He has collected one of the fineſt Libraries in France. See the Catalogue of it, which he publiſh'd ‡ in the Year 1693. He β increaſes it every Day with all ſorts of Books, and all the Curious have a free Acceſs to that noble Repertory of Learning.

TELMESSUS, γ a Sea-Town in the utmoſt part δ of Lycia, at the Foot of a Mountain of the ſame Name, which makes part of Mount Cragus. That Town was beſtowed upon Eumenes * by the Romans, when they defeated Antiochus; but the Lycians recovered it ǂ when the Kingdom of Eumenes was deſtroyed. The Inhabitants of that Town had naturally a Prophetical Spirit, which is the Reaſon why it has been much talk'd of. Every Body (A) was born there with a Gift of Prophecy; Women and Children received that Favour from Nature. Gordius (B) went thither to know the Meaning of a Prodigy that made him uneaſy: He had it explained to him without being obliged to get into the Town; for meeting a handſome Maid at the Gate, he ask'd her who was the beſt Diviner he could apply himſelf to. The Maid immediately deſired to know what he had to propoſe, and being told of it, gave him the Interpretation he wanted: It was a very good Piece of News, ſhe anſwered, that the Prodigy meant that Gordius would be made King. At the ſame time the Propheteſs offered to marry him: He accepted of her Offers, as a beginning of the good Fortune that “ kill'd him by Accident, throwing his Club at an “ Ox.” I confeſs, that Plautus departs from Apollodorus in this; but ſome Authors (r) ſay, that Electryon was kill'd by the Teleboes. I ſhall conclude with this Remark: “ (ſ) I have pitch'd upon Am- “ phitryon, becauſe 'tis one of the fineſt Pieces of “ Plautus; and it was ſo highly eſteem'd by the “ Ancients, that under Diocletian's Reign it was ſtill “ acted in a time of a publick Calamity to appeaſe “ Jupiter's Anger. Arnobius ſays in his 7th Book; po- “ nit animos Jupiter, ſi Amphitryo fuerit actus, pronun- “ tiatuſque Plautinus? What, will Jupiter be appeaſed, “ if Plautus's Amphitryon be acted?” I don't think Arnobius meant that the Heathens pitch'd upon a time of a publick Calamity, ſuch as an Irruption of Barbarians, a Plague, or a Famine, to act Amphitryon: But this ſeems to be his Meaning. He thinks it ſtrange that the Pagans ſhould make the Solemnity of their publick Games, one of their religious Performances; and that they ſhould conſecrate them to a Deity. He asks what may be the Reaſon of it, and ſuppoſes that he is anſwered, that the Celebration of thoſe Games was a means to be reconciled with the Gods, and to make 'em forget the Injuries they might have received. Whereupon he asks, by way of Reply, Whether Jupiter ceaſes to be in an ill-humour when Plautus's Amphitryon is acted? 'Tis certain, that the Inſtitution of the Publick Games was occaſion'd by ſome publick Calamity, and a Deſign of worſhipping, for the time to come, in a ſolemn manner, the Deity whoſe Anger they dreaded: But afterwards the Anniverſary Celebration was not perform'd during a publick Calamity: Thoſe Games were exhibited in time of Plenty, as well as in time of Scarcity; nay, they were more ſumptuous and magnificent during the Proſperity of the State, than during its Adverſity.

(A) Under the Name of Marquis de LOUVOIS.] He died at Verſailles the 16th of July 1691 in his 51ſt Year. He was Miniſter and Secretary of State, and had many Employments. The greateſt Encomium that can be beſtowed upon him, is to ſay, that all Europe was perſuaded, that his Death would be more advantageous to the Allies, than a complete Victory, or the Conqueſt of two or three Places. M. de Barbeſieux, one of his Sons, ſucceeded him in the Office of Secretary of State, and died the fifth of January 1701. The Abbot de Louvois, his other Son, is a great Lover of Learning. He was admired in his younger Years by the Anſwers he made to the Difficulties propoſed to him about Homer, in the preſence of many People, as it appears from this Paſſage of the Continuation of the Menagiana. (a) The Abbot de L.... who, though ſo young, ſhews ſo great a Skill in the Greek Tongue, has been pleaſed to quote me upon that Subject, and to praiſe me for the Application of thoſe two Verſes in an illuſtrious Aſſembly, that was held at his Houſe not long ago, in the Preſence of the moſt learned Men in the Kingdom, who propoſed to him ſome Difficulties upon Homer, which he anſwered with a wonderful Preſence of Mind. One of the moſt conſiderable was propoſed by the Abbot Faydit, viz. whether Homer had mentioned the Jews in his Iliad or his Odyſſey. He anſwered, that he had made no mention of 'em, and that the Word Ἰουδαῖοι was not to be found in Homer, &c. You may ſee in the Original what was further urged by the Abbot Faydit, and the Reply made to him. I need not acquaint the Reader, that the Book publiſh'd in Holland with this Title, Teſtament politique du Marquis de Louvois, is a ſuppoſititious Piece: But every Body does not know that the Author of that Piece lives at Paris, and is a Roman Catholick.

(*A*Δ) And rectified the falſe Steps of the Monks in his Dioceſe.] I could give many Inſtances of it; but I ſhall only refer the Reader to what I have ſaid in the Remark M of the Article Francis of Aſſiſi, and in the Remark *I*Δ of the Article Mariana. See alſo the Lettres hiſtoriques for July 1697.

(A) Every Body was born there with the Gift of Prophecy.] I ſhall quote a conſiderable Hiſtorian for it. (b) Τὸν δὲ (γόρδιον) ἐκπλαγέντα τῇ ὄψει, ἰέναι κοινώσοντα ὑπὲρ τοῦ θείου παρὰ τοὺς Τελμισσέας τοὺς μάντεις. εἶναι γὰρ τοὺς Τελμισσέας σοφοὺς τὰ θεῖα ἐξηγεῖσθαι, καί σφισιν ἀπὸ γένους δεδόσθαι αὐτοῖς καὶ γυναιξὶ καὶ παισὶ τὴν μαντείαν. Gordium ſpectaculo attonitum, Telmiſſenſes vates communicandæ rei cauſa adiiſſe, (eſſe enim Telmiſſenſes peritiſſimos prodigiorum interpretes, & vaticinandi ſcientiam ipſis pariter atque uxoribus & liberis ab ortu inſitam eſſe.) (c) Pliny ſeems to ſay, that the Town of Telmeſſus, which he calls moſt religious, had been one of the principal Seats of Magick, and does not ſcruple to joyn it with Theſſaly in that reſpect. But there never was a Country more cried down for Witchcraft than Theſſaly.

Somnia, terrores magicos, miracula, ſagas, Nocturnos lemures, portentaque THESSALA rides?

Horace, who ſays this in the 2d Epiſtle of the 2d Book, does often uſe the like Expreſſion; and it appears by Lucan, that (d) Theſſala or Theſſalis, without any Addition, denoted a Witch. If the thing be rightly conſidered the Paſſage of Pliny expreſſes the Character of the Telmeſſians, as fully as that of Arrianus. See what I ſhall quote out of Cicero hereafter.

(B) Gordius went thither to know the meaning of a Prodigy.] This Story is to be found in Juſtin (e), if we change the uſual reading, and put Telmiſſi urbis, or Telmiſina urbis, inſtead of vicinæ urbis, according to the (f) Correction of the beſt Criticks. The Paſſage runs thus: Gordius cùm in his regionibus bubus conductis araret, aves eum omnes generis circumvolare cœperunt. Profectus ad conſulendos augures vicinæ urbis, obviam in porta habuit virginem eximiæ pulchritudinis; percontatus eam quem potiſſimum augurem conſuleret, illa audita cauſa conſulendi, gnara artis ex diſciplina parentum, regnum ei portendi, reſpondit, polliceturque ſe & matrimonii & ſpei ſociam. Tam pulchra conditio, prima

---

† See the Memoirs publiſhed by him, about the Cardinals ſitting in Parliament, and againſt the erection of Cambray into a Metropolis.

‡ With the Title of Bibliotheca Telleriana, in fol.

β I write this in June 1701.

γ Ptolemy l. 5. c. 3. calls it Τελμησσός, Strabo, l. 14. p. m. 457. & Stephanus Byzantinus Τελμισσός.

δ Quæ Lyciam finit urbs Telmeſſus, Plin. l. 5. c. 27. Mela l. 1. c. 15. Vide ibi If. Voſſium.

* Livius l. 37.

ǂ Strabo, pag. 458.

(r) Schol. ollon. Argon. l. 1. 97.

(ſ) Mrs Fevre her Preface.

(a) Suite de Menagiana pag. 94. Dutch Edition.

(b) Arrian. de expedit. Alex. l. 2. pag. m. 85, 86.

(c) Nec poſtea quiſquam dixit quonam modo veniſſet Telmeſſum religioſiſſimam urbem, quando tranſiſſet ad Theſſalas urbes. Plin. lib. 30. c. 1. Father Hardouin, going upon the Authority of good Manuſcripts, reads Matres inſtead of Urbes.

(d) Lib. 6. verſ. 451. vide Harduin. in Plinium, tom. 4. pag. 771.

(e) Lib. 11. c. 7.

(f) See Grævius's Juſtin, pag. 230.

that was foretold him. Cicero (C) thought that the Inhabitants of Telmessus and the adjacent Country applied themselves mightily to the Observation of Prodigies, because they inhabited a fruitful Country, that produced many Singularities. Others fetch the thing higher, and speak of one Telmessus [†] a great Diviner, who founded that Town, and whose Relicks were in great Veneration among the Inhabitants. They lay under the Altar of Apollo, who [ε] was his Father. The Prophetical Spirit, so eminent in that Place, was to proceed from thence, according to the prejudicated Opinions of the Heathens. Telmessus taught the Art of Prophesying in his Life-time, and was to inspire his Votaries with it after his Death. To which I add, that his Mother, Antenor's Daughter, was possest with the same Spirit: She had it from Apollo [γ], when he lay with her, under the Shape of a little Dog. If the Work of Stephanus Byzantinus was not curtail'd, we might find some Particulars in it about Telmessus. It appears [δ] from the broken Remains of that Author, that Telmessus founded the Town I speak of, being come from the Country of the Hyperboreans, to the Oracle of Dodone, with a Fellow-Traveller, who founded a Town, whose Inhabitants were all Diviners. Which is a great Presumption, that the like Virtue was bestowed upon Telmessus, both for him and those, who should build about the Altar he erected, as he had been directed by the Oracle. 'Tis likely that Altar was in the Temple of Apollo [*] Telmessium. The Inhabitants of Telmessus gave great (D) Credit to Dreams. Aristander, a Native of that Town, and one of the most expert Diviners of his Time [χ], wrote a Book upon that Subject. Probably 'twas he who negociated a Treaty between his Country and Alexander: Arrianus speaks of it in his first Book. I don't think the Town of Termessus (E) ought to be confounded with that of Telmessus: They seem to me to be two distinct Towns; and in my Mind, that, which was situated on the Frontiers of Lycia, ought to be (F) call'd Telmessus.

TENEDOS

prima regni felicitas videbatur. That Correction may be mightily confirm'd by Arrianus (g), who positively says, that Gordius applied himself to the Diviners of the Town of Telmessus. What follows in Arrianus does not agree in all the Circumstances with Justin's Narrative; but this is of no great Moment. However, I shall observe, that the Translator of Arrianus has put Telmissensium in a wrong place. It was not to the Assembly of the Inhabitants of Telmessus that the Chariot carried Midas, attended by his Father and Mother, but to that of the Phrygians.

(C) Cicero thought.] I shall set down two Passages of Cicero to prove this. The first runs thus: (h) Licet videre & genera quædam & nationes huic scientiæ deditas. Telmessus in Caria est, qua in urbe excellit Aruspicum disciplina. Here follows the other: Tum Caria tota præcipueque Telmessenses quos ante dixi, quod agros uberrimos maximeque fertiles incolunt, in quibus multa propter fœcunditatem fingi gignique possunt, in ostentis animadvertendis diligentes fuerunt. Telmessus being in the utmost part of Lycia, it was very near Caria; which is the Reason why Cicero places it in this last Province. Stephanus Byzantinus places it there also; but he adds, that Philo and Strabo place it in Lycia, and that it is on the Frontiers of those two Countries.

(D) Great Credit to Dreams.] This we find in Tertullian. Telmessenses, says he (a), nulla somnia evacuant, imbecillitatem conjectationis incusant. The Meaning of which seems to be, that the Inhabitants of Telmessus believe that all Dreams signifie something; that none of 'em is vain; and that the Imperfection of our Knowledge does not allow us to understand the Signification of each Dream.

(E) I don't think the Town of Termessus ought to be confounded with that of Telmessus.] Strabo does so plainly distinguish 'em, that he leaves no room for any doubt about it. His way of describing the Situation (b) of Termessus, shews that it was a Town of Pisidia, near the Streight where one went over Mount Taurus in the way to Mylias; and therefore Alexander being willing to clear that Passage, which was commanded by the Town of Termessus, caused it to be demolished. As for (c) Telmessus, that Geographer places it in the entrance into Lycia on this side of the River Xanthus, and even of Phaselis, a Sea-Town, which he places near Mount Solymus, and Termessus (d) a Town of Pisidia, says he. I shall confirm this by the Authority of Arrianus. Having mention'd Alexander's Entry into Lycia, he says (e), that Conqueror got the Town of Telmessus by a Treaty; and then, that he went over the Xanthus; that he took the Town of that name, and several others which surrender'd to him; that he advanced towards the Province of Mylias; that he secured the Place, from whence he sent part of his Troops to Perga through the Mountains, and marched with the rest along the Sea; that he advanced as far as Side; that he went back to Aspendus, because the Inhabitants of that Place had not perform'd their Promise; that he forced them to surrender; that he went to Perga, and from thence into Phrygia; but the Town of Telmessus, inhabited by Barbarians, who were Pisidians, being in his way, he was obliged to take it; that it proved no easie thing, because that Town stood upon a steep Hill, and the Inhabitants had posted themselves upon a Neighbouring Hill, so that they were Masters of the Streight or Defile between those two Hills. This is exactly the Town, which Strabo calls Termessus; and 'tis manifest Arrianus speaks of two different Towns, when he says (f), that his Hero made a Treaty with Telmessus when he entred into Lycia; and that he besieged (g) Telmessus as he was marching from Perga towards Phrygia. What remains to be inquired into, is, whether those two Towns ought to be call'd Telmessus, as they are in Arrianus, or whether that of Lycia ought to go by the Name of Telmessus, and that of Pisidia by the Name of Termessus, as in Strabo, Stephanus Byzantinus, and Suidas: For the Opinion of some Learned Men, who call 'em both Termessus or Telmessus, cannot be maintain'd. Bochart, who (h) read Telmessus in Strabo for Termessus, may be confuted by a (i) Medal, in which there is on the one side ΤΕΡΜΕΣΣΕΩΝ, and on the other ΣΟΛΥΜΟΣ: Which plainly shews, that the Town of Pisidia, call'd Τερμισσὸς by Strabo, is rightly named; for since the Hill (k) on the Promontory of Termessus, was call'd Solymus, and the Termessians were also call'd Solymi, 'tis plain, that the People who have this great Affinity with the Solymi, ought to have the Name express'd in the Medal: But 'tis the Name of the Termessians; and therefore Bochart is in the wrong to read Telmissus and Telmissenses in that Passage of Strabo; and thus one of his Etymologies comes to nothing. He says, that Casaubon found in the Manuscripts Τελμισσέως instead of Τερμισσέως; but they ought to be mended by the Medal. He adds, that Eustathius, who quotes Strabo, says Τελμισσὸς; but he might have found in Salmasius, that Eustathius should not (l) have made use of that Name; and besides, that he did not (m) understand the Passage quoted by him.

(F) Ought to be call'd Telmessus.] There being many Medals (n) with the Inscription ΤΕΡΜΗΣΣΕΩΝ, what remains to be known is, whether the Town of Lycia, which makes the Subject of this Article, ought to be call'd Termessus. I beg leave to say, that I think it ought to be call'd Telmessus; otherwise we must suspect not only the Passages (o) of Polybius, Arrianus, Aristides, St. Gregory Nazianzen, Cicero and Livy, but also many others of Plutarch, Ælian, Lucian, Ptolemy, Stephanus Byzantinus, Pliny, Pomponius Mela, Tertullian, Arnobius, &c. At this rate it must be said, that a Fault crept into all the Places, where Aristander is sir-named of Telmessus; which [†] Sub Apollinis arula quæ Telmessi apud oppidum visitur, Telmessum esse conditum vatem, non scriptis constantibus indicatur? Arnob. l. 6. p. 193. See Suidas ubi infra.

---

[ε] Dionysius in Originibus apud Suidam v. Τελμισσεῖς.

[γ] Idem Dionys. ib.

[δ] In voce γαλεῶται. It is called there Τελμισσός.

[*] Τελμισσὸς ἐς Καρίαν ἦλθεν, ἔνθα Ἀπόλλωνος Τελμισσέως ἱερόν. Telmissus in Cariam venit, ubi Apollinis Telmissii templum. Steph. Byzant. in Τελμισσός.

[χ] See his Article

(g) Ubi supra.

(h) Cicero, libro 1. de divinat.

(a) Tertull. de anima

(b) Strabo, l. 13. sub fin. p. 434. & l. 14. pag. 458.

(c) Idem l. 14. pag. 457, 458.

(d) Τέρμισσος Πισιδικὴ πόλις. pag. 458. Τερμισσὸς ἐστὶ Πισιδικὴ πόλις. pag. 434.

(e) De expedit. Alex. l. 1. pag. 69. & seq.

(f) Pag. 57.

(g) Pag. 75, 76.

(h) Bochart Geograph. Sacr. l. 1 c. 6.

(i) Apud Erizzo, Sponium, de usu & præst. numism. pag. 477, 478.

(k) [illegible] cumulus qui supra Termessum jacet promontorium, Solymus appellatur: ipsi Termessii vocantur Solymi. Strab. l. 13. pag. 433.

(l) Male Τελμισσὸς vocat Eustathius. Salmas. Exercit. Plinian. pag. [illegible]

(m) Mira heic supinitas Eustathii in Strabonis verbis referendis. Ibid.

(n) Spanhem. ubi supra.

(o) Id. ib. pag. 478.

TENEDOS, an Iſle of the Ægean Sea, near the Continent of Aſia, over againſt Troy. Some ſay, † it was uninhabited, and call'd Leucophrys before Tenes, the Son of Cygnus, landed in it; and therefore 'twas he who firſt brought Inhabitants into that Iſland. He reigned over them with ſo much Equity, that great Honours were paid to him in his Life time, and after his Death he was placed among the Gods, as I ſhall ſay when I come to ſpeak of him. He built a Town, and the Iſland was call'd Tenedos from him ‖. In proceſs of time People rather choſe to ſay, that he had not brought the firſt Colony thither; but that he landed there as (A) by a Miracle, and that the Inhabitants expreſſed immediately ſo great a reſpect for a Man, who was ſo manifeſtly protected by the Gods, and afterwards ſo great an Admiration for his noble Qualities, that they † made him King. Thus all Nations have aſcribed ſomething marvellous to their old Traditions. However it be, what is related of Tenes, did not happen before the Time of Priamus, ſince Tenes loſt his Life β when Achilles ranſack'd Tenedos, during the Trojan War. That Iſland was then particularly (B) conſecrated to Apollo Smintheus. The Grecians hid their Fleet behind that Iſland, when they made a Shew of giving over their Enterprize; for which reaſon Tenedos has been more talk'd of (C) than for any thing elſe. Nevertheleſs that Iſland was remarkable upon a better account: For the Adminiſtration of Juſtice was very ζ ſevere in it; it produced the beſt Origan in the n World; the Inhabitants made Earthen Veſſels π that were very much eſteem'd; the Grapes and Ears of Corn and Ceres, that are to be ſeen on its Medals *, ſhew that it abounded with Wine and Corn, as it does (D) to this Day; and the Women of that Iſland were (E) the moſt beautiful in the World. Their Crevices (F) were very remarkable. Some ſay ‡ that Paris landed at Tenedos, after the Rape which is highly improbable. 'Tis therefore better to admit of two Names; that of Termeſſus for the Town of Piſidia, and that of Telmeſſus for the Town of Lycia, where People were all inſpired. The Paſſage of Arrianus, wherein the Town of Piſidia is call'd Τελμισσὸς, ought to be mended, as it has been by Salmaſius. Male, ſays he (p), apud Arrianum Τελμισσὸς vocatur quæ eſt Τερμισσός.

(A) As by a Miracle.] His Father being impoſed upon by his Wife's Calumnies, put him into a Cheſt, and threw him into the Sea. I ſhall ſpeak of it hereafter (q). I don't find in the Authors I have conſulted the Circumſtances of his Preſervation; but I find in Muretus (a) that Neptune, Tenes's Grand-father, came to the Aſſiſtance of his Grand-ſon; and that the Cheſt, being carried to the Iſle of Leucophrys, was open'd by the Inhabitants, who no ſooner knew what it was, but they made Tenes King, &c.

(B) Particularly conſecrated to Apollo Smintheus.] Homer does plainly intimate it, when he brings in the Prieſt Chryſes uſing this Prayer;

> Κλῦθί (b) μευ ἀργυρότοξ' ὃς χρύσην ἀμφιβέβηκας
> Κίλλαν τε ζαθέην, Τενέδοιό τε ἶφι ἀνάσσεις > Σμινθεῦ.
> Audi me argenteum arcum gerens, qui Chryſam tueris
> Cillamque valde divinam, Tenedoque fortiter imperas > Smintheu.

Strabo (c) confirms by this Paſſage what he had been ſaying, that there was a Temple of Apollo Smintheus in the Iſle of Tenedos. There were ſome ſuch Temples in ſome other Neighbouring Towns (d); and 'tis a common Opinion, that Apollo was worſhipp'd by that Name, becauſe he kill'd the Rats, that deſtroyed the Fruits of the Earth. There was a Rat under the Feet of his Statue at Chryſa. Σμίνθος ſignified a Rat in the Dialect of that Country. Some other Reaſons were alledged, beſides that which I have mention'd: See the Learned Collections of Cuperus upon this Subject in his ancient Monuments (e).

(C) More talk'd of than for any thing elſe.] All School Boys learn by Heart the ſecond Book of the Æneids; and therefore every Man, that is a Scholar, knows theſe Verſes:

> Eſt (f) in conſpectu Tenedos notiſſima fama
> Inſula, dives opum, Priami dum regna manebant,
> Nunc tantum ſinus & ſtatio maleſida carinis.
> Huc ſe provecti deſerto in litore condunt.
>
> . . . .
>
> Et (g) jam Argiva Phalanx inſtructis navibus ibat
> A Tenedo, tacitæ per amica ſilentia lunæ.

The Beginning and the End of the Story of the Wooden Horſe are more minded by School-Boys than any other part of that Romance, and conſequently make more laſting Impreſſions.

(D) As it does to this day.] M. Spon, who has been there, ſays (h) that the Iſle of Tenedos is fruitful in good Wines, wherewith it ſupplies Conſtantinople, and that its Muſcadine Grapes are excellent; that there is a great deal of Game, eſpecially Hares and Partridges. Sir George Wheeler, his Fellow Traveller, ſays, (i) it abounds with Corn and Wine, and eſpecially Muſcadine Wine, the greateſt part whereof is exported to Conſtantinople. See the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary.

(E) The Women of that Iſland were the moſt beautiful in the World.] One may very well wonder that a thing of this Nature ſhould not be mention'd by many Authors: Athenæus, who had read ſo much, and who quotes ſo many Writers, would have quoted ſome other Author beſides Nymphodorus, had he known of any other, who had made the ſame Obſervation. However it be, theſe are his Words: (k) Καὶ Νυμφόδωρος δ' ἐν τῷ τῆς Ἀσίας περίπλῳ, καλλίονας φησὶ γίνεσθαι γυναῖκας τῶν πανταχοῦ γυναικῶν ἐν Τενέδῳ τῇ πρὸς Τροίᾳ νήσῳ. Nymphodorus autem in Aſia circumnavigatione Tenedias fœminas (ea Trojæ vicina inſula eſt) omnes alias ubivis terrarum mulieres pulcritudine ſuperare tradit. A Writer who went round Aſia, or made a Deſcription of it, is more credible than a hundred, who never Travelled or Studied Geographical Hiſtory. Though Theophraſtus does not affirm what Nymphodorus advances, yet his Teſtimony may be alledged, becauſe he ſays (l), that as the Barbarians had appointed ſome Judges to inquire into the Virtue and Husbandry of Women, in order to declare which of 'em exceeded the Reſt in that reſpect; there were likewiſe ſome Judges in the Iſles of Tenedos and Lesbos, who did the ſame in relation to the Beauty of Women: For it was thought that the very Gifts of Fortune and Nature ought to be honoured and reſpected. Thoſe Judges of Tenedos had a very niceOffice The Gods themſelves refuſed it; and it had been well for Paris if he had to imitated them: He paid dear for the Device (m) of which he bethought himſelf, and for the Poſſeſſion of Helena, whom he obtained as a Reward for his Sentence. But that Fabulous Story made no great impreſſion; for there were ſome Perſons, who deſired to Judge of Beauty, not only in Lesbos and Tenedos, but alſo in a Town of Peloponneſus, where there was every Year a Diſpute about Beauty, (n) and ſhe who overcame her Competitors, carried the Prize. This Cuſtom was ſtill practiſed in Athenæus's time. Such an Emulation was excuſable in Women; but 'tis very ſtrange that Men (o) ſhould have alſo contended for the Prize of Beauty.

(F) Their Crevices were very remarkable.] Their Shells repreſented a Hatchet; for which reaſon, according to Plutarch (p), the Inhabitants of Tenedos conſecrated a Hatchet in the Temple of Delphi. I ſhould rather think that they conſecrated it, becauſe the Forms obſerved in their Tribunals, which occaſion'd the Proverb (q) about the Hatchet of Tenedos, moved them to pitch upon a Hatchet for the Arms of their Country. It appears by their Medals, that it was their conſtant (r) Symbol. Suidas (ſ) mentions thoſe † Diodor. Siculus, l. 5. c. 83. Servius in Æn. l. 2. v. 21.

---

‖ Quaſi Τενέδος, that is, Tenni ſedes. Stephan. in Τένεδος.

† See Diodorus Siculus ib.

β Plut. quæſt. Gr. pag. 297. Pauſan. l. 10. p. 340.

ζ See the Article Tenes.

n Antiphanes apud Athen. l. 1. c. 22. See alſo Julius Pollux l. 6. c. 10. & Euſtathius in Il. λ.

π Plutarchus, init. tractat. de vitando ære alieno p. 828 & Scholiaſt. Ariſtoph. in nubib. act. 4. ſcen. 3.

* Vide Spanhem. epiſt. ad Laurent. Beger.

‡ In portum Tenedon pervenit, ubi Helenam mœſtam alloquio mitigavit. Dares Phryg. de excid. Trojæ.

Sal-
, ubi

In the ticle es.

Variar.
l. 1.
12.

Homer.
Il. lib.
v. 37.

Lib. 13.
415.

Id. ib.

Ad em pperæedit.
7. pag.

Æn.
2.
21.

Ibid.
254.

Spon.
g. tom.
153.

(i) Wheeler voiag. pag. 103.

(k) Athen. l. 13. pag. 609.

(l) Apud Athen. pag. 610.

(m) He made the three Goddeſſes pull off their Shifts.

(n) Nicias in Arcadicis apud Athen. pag. 609.

(o) Theophraſtus, apud Athen. ib. ſays it was practiſed at Elea. (p) De Pythiæ oraculis pag. 399. (q) See hereafter the Remark H & the Article Tenes. (r) Vide Ez. Spanheim. epiſt. ad Laur. Beger. (ſ) In Τενέδιος ξυνήγορος.

Rape of Helena, and cajolled her in that Island to ease her (G) Grief. The Inhabitants of Tenedos not being able to preserve their Independency, submitted ς to the City of Alexandria situated in Troas. They were rich in Cicero's time, as it appears from his Orations †. Their Cause concerning their Immunities was determined at Rome with too great (H) a Rigour; Cicero protected them, but he was not seconded. That Island is about ten Leagues round β, and lies only two Leagues and a half from the Continent of Asia. The Turks have a Fortress in it, which is only a Tower, with a Bulwark having about 12 Pieces of Cannon. The Venetians made themselves Masters of it, during the War of Candia, but the Turks retook it by means of a Tun of Zechins, with which they gained the Commander γ. Aristotle δ wrote a Book concerning the Republick of the Tenedians. Zoilus ζ composed an Encomium upon them, wherein he vented a great Fallity, viz. that the Spring of the River Alpheus was in the Isle of Tenedos. That Island was often mentioned in the Gazettes, whilst the Venetians were possest of Chio, which they took in the Year 1694.

TENES or TENNES, the Son of Cygnus, gave his Name to the Isle of Tenedos, where he landed, when his Father exposed him to the Mercy of the Sea in a Chest. Cygnus used him so severely, having too rashly believed his Wife, Step-mother (A) of Tenes. That Woman complained that Tenes had (B) ravished her, and she made use of θ a Piper, who brought in a false Evidence. Which occasion'd the Law, that was observed in the Isle of Tenedos, that no Man of that Profession should be admitted into the Temple. Tenes, who κ probably was the Author of that Law, very proper to preserve the Memory of the Hatred he had conceived against that false Witness, shewed himself worthy of the Command by some other Laws, which he Enacted, and caused to be Executed without any distinction of Persons. He condemn'd Adulterers to be beheaded; and being asked, what should be done with his Son, who was Guilty of that Crime, he answered, Let the Law be put in Execution. Which occasion'd the stamping of (C) Medals, having on one side the Figure of an Ax, and on the other the Faces of a Man those Crevices of Tenedos, and says they were to be found in a Brook in that Part of the Country call'd Asserina. Bochart (t) rightly observes it should be 'Αστέριον, and not 'Ασσερίνα, because Plutarch says in express Words, that the Crevices of Tenedos, whose Shell was like a Hatchet, were to be found in a Place call'd 'Αστέριον. Besides, according to Hesychius, the first Inhabitants of that Island were call'd 'Αστέριοι, a Name that might very well proceed from the place, which afforded those Crevices. This Conjecture of Bochart, and the Corrections he makes in that Passage of Suidas, are a great deal better than all his Etymological Fancies, stuffed with Hebrew, to derive the Tenedians from Phœnicia.

(G) Cajoll'd her .... to ease her Grief.] Nothing can be more modest than the Words of the pretended Dares Phrygius, alloquio mitigavit. The Author, who (v) made a Paraphrase upon him in Verses, did not confine himself within such narrow bounds: He carries the thing as far as it can go, leaving nothing to be supplied by the Reader. 'Tis true he leaves two Stumbling-Blocks in their way. 1. He supposes that Paris did not lye with Helena before they landed in the Isle of Tenedos; which is neither likely, nor consistent with the Iliads wherein the Isle of Cranae, less distant than Tenedos from the place, where the Rape was committed, is the Scene of the last (w) Favour. 2. The second Difficulty is taken from the Rich Presents Paris is obliged to make, in order to obtain his Wishes. Which is contrary to Decorum, in the opinion of those, who know the Character of Helena: The Author was sensible of it, and therefore he breaks out into an Exclamation immediately after the Verses, wherein he describes the Presents (a) and the Enjoyment.

Proh scelus! an tantis potuisti pessima votis
Indulsisse moras? expectabatque voluptas
Emptorem? O teneri miranda potentia sexus!
Præcipitem in lucrum suspendit femina luxum,
Nec nisi conducto dignatur gaudia risu.

(H) Was determin'd at Rome, with too great a rigour.] Cicero (b) wrote the following Words to his Brother about it. Tenediorum igitur libertas securi Tenedia præcisa est, cum eos præter me & Bibulum & Calidium & Favonium nemo defenderet. The Proverbial Expression of Cicero may be explain'd by Pausanias or Stephanus Byzantinus. Tenedia Securis, says the latter (c), de iis qui vel asperè vel etiam magis concise abscidunt quæstiones & alias res. Pausanias having said that Tenes broke with a Hatchet the Rope, wherewith the Ship of his Father Cygnus was fastened, adds (d) Ex eo in Proverbii consuetudinem venit ut quidquid quis præfracte negaret, id Tenedia bipenni præcidisse diceretur.

(A) Step-Mother of Tenes.] We read in Pausanias (e) that Cygnus, the Son of Neptune, reign'd at Colonæ in Troas, and had two Sons by Proclea, the Daughter of Clytius, and Sister to Caletor, who was kill'd at the Siege of Troy by Ajax, as it appears from the Iliad. Those two Children of Cygnus were, a Son call'd Tenes, and a Daughter call'd Hemithea. After the Death of their Mother, Cygnus married Philonome, Crangasus's Daughter. This Philonome accused Tenes of having attempted to ravish her, whereas she on the contrary fell in Love with Tenes, who refused to comply with her Desires. Thus, here is an Example, which may be added to those of Theseus and Constantin. Muretus has Collected some others in the 12th. Chapter of the first Book of his Variæ Lectiones. See the Article Fausta.

(B) That Tenes had ravish'd her.] I follow my Author, who says, καταψευσαμένης αὐτοῦ τὸ βιάζεσθαι ταύτην. But because we have only some Fragments of that Work of Heraclides, which savour of the Carelesness and Precipitation of a Man, who is in haste to make an end of an Abridgment, I make no doubt that some Words are wanting in this place. A Wife will not complain to her Husband that she has been ravish'd; she will only tell him that there was such a Design. Though Stephanus Byzantinus has been strangely used by his Abbreviator, yet he (f) informs us, that Philonome, Cygnus's Wife, complain'd only of Tenes's ill Design, and that the Evidence of the Piper went no farther. Pausanias makes no mention of that Evidence: He will have it that Cygnus was persuaded by the bare Complaints of Philonome; but he observes that she complained only of the ill Design of her Son-in-Law. (g) Ψευδομένη πρὸς τὸν ἄνδρα ὡς αὐτὴ μὲν ἐκ ἐθέλουσα, τὸν δὲ αὐτῇ Τέννην συγγένεσθαι θελήσοντα; that is, she falsely complain'd to her Husband, that Tenes attempted to lye with her against her Will. The Latin Translation of Romulus Amasæus seems to me to go beyond the Original, quod ille invitam & repugnantem constuprare conatus esset. The Latin Words signifie great Endeavours; but the Greek may be understood of a bare Sollicitation.

(C) Which occasion'd the stamping of Medals.] Mr. Beger (h) has publish'd one stamped at Tenedos having on one Side two Faces upon one and the same Neck, and on the other an Ax between a Lyre and a Bunch of Grapes. Those two Faces represent a Man and a Woman: That Author says, that the Design of this Medal was to denote the Union, which ought to be between married People. The Medal of Tenes, mention'd by the Ancients (i), was not stamp'd with such an intent; but rather to denote the Capital Punish-ς Pausanias l. 10. pag. 330.

---

† In Verrem l. 3.

β Wheeler voiage pag. 103. Strabo l. 13. p. 415. says it is 80 Stadia in compass, and the Canal that divides it from Asia, 40.

γ Spon, voiage tom. 1. p. 153. Dutch Edit.

δ Stephan. in Τένεδος.

ζ Strabo l. 8. p. 187.

θ Plutarch Quæst. Græc. n. 28. p. 297. calls him Molpus.

κ See the Remark G.

(t) Geograph. sacr. parte 2. l. 1. c. 9.

(v) Josephus Iscanus, Anglus, who lived in the XIII. Century. See his Dares Phrygius de bello Trojano lib. 3. pag. m. 52, 53.

(w) See the Remark I in the Article Helena.

(a) Hæc faciles emere toros, domuere rebelles Amplexus, pepigere fidem, non jam oscula reddit Non reddenda negat Helene, sed pectore toto Incumbens, gremium solvit, premit ore, latentem Furatur Venerem, jamque expirante Dione Conscia secretos testatur purpura rores. Proh scelus, &c. (b) Cicero ad Q. fratrem lib. 2. (c) Τενέδιος πέλεκυς ἐπὶ τῶν ἤτοι πικρῶς ἢ καὶ μᾶλλον συντόμως ἀποκοπτόντων τὰ ζητήματα, καὶ τὰ ἄλλα πράγματα. Steph. Byzant. voce Τένεδος.

a Man and a Woman upon the same Neck. This likewise, and what shall be said hereafter, was the reason why the Ax of Tenedos became a Proverb †, to denote a great Severity *. Tenes ordered another thing, that was very remarkable, viz. that a Man holding an Ax in his Hands should ‡ always stand behind the Judge, to cut off the Head of any one, who should be convicted of Falsity. Others say he ordered that the Executioner should stand behind the Accusers holding up an Ax, (C Δ) to put to Death immediately those, who should be Guilty of a false Accusation. Aristotle, says in general * that the King of Tenedos Administring Justice with an Ax, made a quick dispatch of those, who had wronged some Body. And therefore 'tis no wonder if the Proverb §, He is a Man of Tenedos, denoted a Man, who had a terrible Look. Tenes shewed himself inflexible even to his Father. Cygnus having discovered his Wife's Calumny, went into the Isle of Tenedos, to give his Son satisfaction for the injury he had done him ω. He fasten'd his Ship to a Tree or a Rock, but Tenes in a fit of Passion cut the Ropes with his Ax: We are not told how he (D) used Cygnus after this blunt Action; but we read that the Father and the Son were kill'd by Achilles, during the Trojan War: The first, when the Grecians § landed, and the second, when Achilles ‡ laid waste the Isle of Tenedos. Tenes came to the Assistance of his dear (E) Sister Hemithea, who was pursued by Achilles; but he got his Death by it. This Action was attended with many (F) Consequences.

† See the Remark [illegible] in the Article Tenedos.
* Ex Heraclide in Politia.
‡ Suidas in Τενέδιος ἄνθρωπος.
* Apud Suidam in voce [illegible].
§ See Erasmus in the Proverbs Tenedia bipennis. Tenedius homo. Tenedius patronus. Tenedius Tibicen. ω Pausanias l. 10. pag. 340.
§ Ovidius Metam. l. 12.
‡ Plutarch. quæst. Gr. pag. 297.

Punishment of a Man and a Woman, who had committed Adultery, and to be a perpetual Monument of the Execution of the Law upon Tenes's own Son. You may see what a (k) learned Man answered to M. Beger. There are some Medals of Tenedos, in which one of the Faces represents an Old Man, and the other a young Woman; in others, the two Faces represent young People, &c. 'Tis inferred from those Variations, that those Medals were not stamp'd according to the first intent; but some for one Design, and some for another: Unless it be said that whenever the Law was put in Execution, a new Medal was stamp'd, and that the two Heads upon one Neck differ'd as to the Age, or some other Ornaments, according to the Personal Qualities of those, who had been punish'd. It would be no wonder if an Old Beard had been found in the Fact with a young Woman.

(C Δ) That the Executioner should stand behind the Accusers holding up an Ax, to put to Death immediately.] Suidas says so: Ἐνομοθέτησε, says he (l), τῶν τὰ ψευδῆ κατηγορούντων ὄπισθεν παρεστάναι τὸ δήμιον πέλεκυν ἐπηρμένον ὡς ἐλεγχθέντας παραχρῆμα ἀναιρεῖσθαι. Legem tulit ut carnifex securim sublatam tenens à tergo astaret illis qui falsa crimina objicerent, ut convicti ex tempore occiderentur. Which puts me in mind of a Maxim commented upon by a French Civilian of the XVIth Century. It imports that a Man, who goes about to oppose the prevailing Religion, ought not to be heard, but upon this Condition, that he shall be punish'd with Death, if he does not convince others, that his private Opinion is more certain than the Doctrine commonly received. (m) Qui antiqua, legitima atque ordinaria sacra audet in controversiam adducere, eum non audiendum esse, nisi periculo sui capitis, si non persuadeat veriorem esse suam sententiam. Whereupon he alledges a very remarkable Example taken from Josephus, in the 6th Chapter of the 13th Book of his Jewish Antiquities. The Jews, and the Samaritans having a quarrel in the City of Alexandria about this Question, Whether the Temple of Jerusalem was to be preferred to that of Garizim; the Cause was brought before the Council of the (a) King of Egypt, and before the Case was argued, it was determined, that the Advocates of the Party cast should be condemn'd to Death. The Advocate of the Jews spoke first (†), and so clearly made out the Justice of his Cause, that he obtained such a Sentence as he desired; so that Sabbeus and Theodosius, the two Advocates of the Samaritans, were condemn'd to lose their Lives. The same Civilian (b) alledges Zaleucus's Law, by Virtue of which, whoever proposed any Innovation, was to do it with a Rope about his Neck, that he might be strangled immediately, if he could not make it appear, that there was a Necessity to abrogate the old Customs; and the Result of his Discourse is, that he wishes the same were practised in France. He fancies that the Factions and Troubles, occasion'd by Innovations in the Kingdom of France, would have been prevented by that means. (c) Quibus omnino rationibus atque conditionibus si nos, præsertim hoc tempore uteremur, quo is demum nihil scire & illiberalis esse dicitur, cui non placent absurdissima quæque, modo recentissima: non ita planè res incerta essent ac turbulenta, neque tam multi multarum partium, factionum, opinionum auctores evaderent: cùm suo saltem periculo ex discerent amare, colere, pacem patriamque, leges ac magistratus, quæ illis sanè prosequuntur. 'Tis plain he could have wish'd that the Disputes between the Romish Priests and the Protestants had been determin'd like that of Alexandria: But was there in France a Tribunal like that of the King of Egypt? The latter was composed of Men, who were neither Jews nor Samaritans; and therefore the contending Parties might expected to be tried without any Partiality. Luther, and Calvin, and their Followers, could not expect the same, since the same Persons would have been both Judges and Parties: And therefore, neither Zaleucus's Law, nor that of the King of Egypt, can reach Matters of Religion.

(D) We are not told how he us'd Cygnus.] I have kept to Pausanias's Narrative, which is the Reason why I have left the Account of that Voyage very imperfect. 'Tis plain, the main Design of that Author was to describe Statues and Pictures, and that he did not much consider whether the Stories he mention'd, by the by, were lame or not. He says, that Cygnus landed in the Isle of Tenedos, that he fasten'd his Ship to a Tree or a great Stone; and that Tenes cut the Cable. He should at least have told us whether the Son permitted his Father to live in Tenedos, or to go Home. This Adventure is better related by Conon (d), tho' we have but an Abstract of his Book. Cygnus, says he, fasten'd his Ship, but did not land; he desired his Son to forget what was past, but he did it on board his Ship. Tenes cut the Cables with his Hatchet to prevent his Landing. Any Body may see what became of Cygnus; he went Home.

(E) His dear Sister.] 'Tis not without reason that I use this Epithet, since Hemithea was (e) so afflicted at her Brother's Misfortune, that Cygnus shut her up in the same Chest, in which he committed his Son to the Mercy of the Sea. What Suidas says of her is still more glorious, for he tells us (f) that she resolved to run the same Hazard with her Brother. 'Twas very reasonable, that Tenes should expose his Life to prevent her being ravish'd; and yet he died in so just a Cause: 'Tis said (g), that Hemithea was swallowed up by the Earth; and that it was the only thing that put a Stop to Achilles's Attempt. The Remedy was somewhat Violent, and few People would think it more tolerable than the Evil it self. (h) Hemithea was a very handsome Woman.

(F) Attended with many Consequences.] When Achilles came to know that he had kill'd Tenes, he was sorry for't, and took care to get him buried. He kill'd a Servant he had from Thetis, because he did not well perform Thetis's Orders. She had not only strictly charged her Son not to kill Tenes, but besides she had enjoyned that Servant to put him in Mind of her Orders, when there should be occasion for it, lest he should disobey her through Inadvertency. (i) Plutarch gives no other Reason for this Care of Thetis, but that Tenes was beloved by Apollo: Others (k) say, that he was his Son, and that Cygnus was only his reputed Father. Now, according to the Destinies, Achilles was to dye assoon as he should kill one of Apollo's Sons. The Inhabitants of Tenedos conceived so great an Indignation against Achilles, that they order'd that no Body should

(d) Apud Photium pag. 437.

(e) Conon ubi supra.

(f) Ἑλομένης δὲ τῆς ἀδελφῆς συγκινδυνεῦσαι τῷ ἀδελφῷ, ἐμβληθῆναι τοὺς δύο. Cum autem Hemithea cum fratre periculum idem subire voluisset utrumque conjecit in mare.

(g) Tzetzes in Lycophr.

(h) Plut. quæst. Gr. ubi infra.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 297.

(k) Tzetzes ibid.

quences. He was honoured like a God (G) in the Isle of Tenedos. See the Article of that Island.

TEOS, one of the twelve Cities of Ionia. Athamas (A) was the first Founder of it §. This Athamas, Grand-Son to another Athamas, the Son of Æolus, conducted a Colony of Orchomenians to Teos: That Colony was, in Process of Time, increased by some other Colonies of Athenians and Bœotians. Herodotus says *, that Teos was in the middle of Ionia; and that it was the Reason why Thales advised the Ionians to make it the Seat of their General Assemblies. Strabo, who places it in a Peninsula, is not so faulty as Pliny, who makes an Island of it; for 'tis certain that Teos stood ß on the Southern Side of the Isthmus (B) over against Clazomenæ, which was on the Northern Side. The Inhabitants of Teos being no longer able to hold out against the Troops of Cyrus, commanded by Harpalus, put γ to Sea in the 59th. Olympiad, and settled a Colony at Abdera in Thrace. Suidas ε speaking of Anacreon, (C) who was a Native of Teos, seems to say that it was in the Reign of Darius the Son of Hystaspes that the Teians went to Abdera; for he says, that Anacreon retired thither, being expell'd from Teos, on Account of Histiæus's Revolt. Some Teians ξ return'd into their Country in Process of Time. That Town produced not only Anacreon, but also the ‡ Poet Scythinus, the Historian † Hecatæus, and Apellicon, who collected so many Books. Stephanus Byzantinus mentions another Town call'd Teos, which he places in the Country of the Dirbæ in Scythia; but because 'tis a Nation altogether unknown, and it must be different from those, whom he calls Dyrbai, that Passage is thought to be faulty.

TERMESSUS, a Town of Pisidia. See the Remark E in the Article TELMESSUS.

TETTI

should mention his Name in the Temple of Tenes. (l) The Pipers were also forbidden to enter into it. Diodorus Siculus (m) does not say, that those two Prohibitions concern'd the Temple of Tenes, though he observes, that the Inhabitants of Tenedos built a Temple to him, and worship'd him as a God. He tells us, that Tenes himself ordered that the Pipers should not enter into the Temple. He adds, that the Temple, which was re-built, when Achilles had destroyed the Town, was that, in which it was not lawful to mention Achilles. He, and Plutarch are therefore of a quite contrary Opinion as to the Place, which those two Prohibitions concern'd. 'Tis certain, that no Temple was built to Tenes during his Life.

(G) Was honoured like a God.] I have quoted two Authors who say so. Cicero may be added to them: Jam vero, says he, (n), in Græcia multos habent ex hominibus Deos Alabandum Alabandi, Tenedi Tenem. It was one of the Deities which Verres Stole. (o) Tenedo, præterea pecuniam quam eripuit, Tenem ipsum qui apud Tenedios sanctissimus deus habetur, qui urbem illam dicitur condidisse, cujus ex nomine Tenedus nominatur, hunc, inquam, ipsum Tenem pulcherrimè factum, quem quondam in comitio vidistis, abstulit magno cum gemitu civitatis. It may be inferr'd from thence, that the ancient Deity of Tenedos, viz. Apollo Smintheus, was in a manner forgotten, since Tenes was placed among the Gods: For it was not objected to Verres, that he had made an Attempt upon the Statue of Apollo; which plainly shews, that it was not to be compared with that of Tenes. Men seem to act in Point of Religion, as they do in Point of Friendship: None but wise and reasonable Men prefer old Friends to new ones. 'Tis an usual thing to imitate wanton Women; the last Comers are the most acceptable. In like manner the new Saints make People forget the old ones. Some grave Writers have complain'd of it.

(A) Athamas was the first Founder of it.] Ortelius (p) is mistaken when he says, that, according to Strabo and Stephanus Byzantinus, Anacreon call'd it Athamas, before it went by the Name of Teos. Those two Authors do only say, that Anacreon call'd it Ἀθαμαντίδα, because it was founded by Athamas. One ought to make a great difference between the proper Names of a Town, and the Epithets bestowed upon it in Poetry; which shews, that Ortelius would have committed a Mistake, though he had said that Teos went by the Name of Athamantis. It will appear, by a right Computation, that he is guilty of three Faults. 1. He confounds Athamas with Athamantis. 2. He takes an Epithet for a proper Name. 3. He thought the Native Country of Anacreon was not call'd Teos, when that Poet call'd it Athamantis. Charles Stephens has committed the same Mistakes.

(B) Of the Isthmus over against Clazomenæ.] Here follows a Passage of Pomponius (a) Mela, which I must examin. Super angustias, hinc Teos, illinc Clazomenæ, & quia terga jungunt confinio adnexa maris, diversis frontibus diversa maria prospectant. Pintianus makes the following Correction, quæ terga agunt, confinibus adnexa muris diversis frontibus diversa maria prospectant. Salmasius not liking it, reads thus (b), Quæ terga agunt confinio adnexa maris, adversis frontibus diversa maria prospectant. Isaac Vossius always ready to find fault with that Critick, will have (c) the Words to be read in this manner, quæ terga agunt confinio adnexa muri diversis, &c. He calls the reading adversis, instead of diversis, a very great Mistake; for, says he, if those two Towns had frontes adversas, they would not look towards the Sea, but would Face one another: Manifeste, Vossius goes on, hic tergum pro fronte, & frontem pro tergo accepit vir doctissimus. Vossius must needs have read the Passage of Salmasius very carelesly, since he raises such an Objection against him. How could Salmasius take the Front for the Back-side, since he expresly observes, that the Teians had the Sea of Clazomenæ before them, as the Clazomenians had the Sea of Teos before them? He will have it, that each of those two Towns had the Sea before and behind; that each had behind it the Sea near which it was built, and before it the Sea on which the other Town was built. And therefore, the Objection of Vossius is altogether wrong in that respect. The Reason on which it is grounded is not better, viz. that those two Towns would have faced one another, if Salmasius's Correction was right; for Salmasius did not pretend to deny that they faced one another; on the contrary, he supposes it (d), or rather manifestly declares it: But for that very Reason he pretended, that each of those two Towns look'd towards the Sea on which the other was built. Besides, it seems to me, that Vossius should not have asserted, that Teos and Clazomenæ had the Sea only on the fore-side; and that there was a Wall between them, which took up the breadth of the Isthmus. This Particular wanted to be proved, and would not have been forgotten by all the ancient Authors, if it had been true. And therefore, notwithstanding Pincianus's reading Muris, instead of Maris, a Correction partly adopted by Vossius, we ought to keep to Salmasius's Correction till we have a better.

(C) Anacreon, who was a Native of Teos.] (e) Moreri tells us, that some say Anacreon was a Native of Teios, a Town of Paphlagonia. One would think that Strabo and Ovid, quoted by him at the end of his Artick, should be the Authors who say so; but 'tis not to be expected he should be so exact. Yet Moreri did not invent that Particular; he found it in these Words of Charles Stephens: (f) Teium, urbs in Paphlagonia (ut Sallustius scribit) in qua ortus fuit Anacreon. Properly speaking, there is no Quotation in those Words for what concerns the Native Country of Anacreon; for Sallust seems to be alledged only to prove, that there was a Town call'd Teium (g) in Paphlagonia. And therfore we are never the better for what Charles Stephens says than for what we read in Moreri. Lloyd and Hofman don't help us in the Matter: They have left out the Quotation of Sallust in the Article of Teium, thinking, doubtless, that it was false; and yet 'tis certain, that Charles Stephens is right in that respect: They affirm, without quoting any § Pausanias l. 7. pag. 208. Strabo l. 14 circa init.

---

* Lib. 1. c. 170.

‡ Lib. 5. c. 31.

ß Strab. ib. Pompon. Mela l. 1. c. 17. & ibid. Il. Vossius.

γ Herod. l. 1. c. 168. Strabo. l. 14. pag. m. 443.

ε See the Remark I in the Article Anacreon.

ξ Strabo ibid.

‡ Stephanus in Τέως.

† Strab. ib. & l. 13. pag. 419.

(l) Plutarch. ib.

(m) Lib. 6. c. 17.

(n) Cicero, lib. 3. de natura Deor. pag. m. 619.

(o) Id. in Verr. l. 3.

(p) In Thesauro Geograph. v. Teos.

(a) Lib. 1. c. 17.

(b) Exercit. Plin. pag.

(c) In Melam, pag.

(d) Ita a tergo mare [illegible] circum cui adjacent sunt, & frons diversa maria prospectant. Teos enim adversa fronte prospectat mare in quo sita Clazomena (as says Salmasius instead of saying Clazomenæ) & Clazomenæ mare Teium. Illa contra Teon respiciunt & frons cui adjacet est Teos.

(e) Upon the Word Teos.

(f) Upon the Word Teium.

(g) Strabo lib. 12. pag. m. 374, 375 mentions it, but does not say it was in Paphlagonia.

TETTI (SCIPIO) in Latin Tettius, a Learned Man of the XVIth Century, was born at Naples. He came to an unfortunate End; for he was prosecuted, as having some ill Opinions concerning the Deity, and sent (A) to the Galleys. He wrote a Tract de Apollodoris, publish'd at Rome (B) by Benedictus Ægius in the Year 1555. He was very much (C) esteem'd by the Learned.

TETTIX, was a Native of the Isle of Crete, and went with a Fleet to Peloponnesus. He landed at the Promontory call'd Tænarium, where he built a Town. He made his Residence near a Place call'd Ψυχοπομπεῖον, by Reason of the Ceremonies performed there to appease the Manes. He, who kill'd the Poet Archilochus (Z), was sent thither by the Priestess of Delphi.

TEUCER, the Son of Telamon and of Hesione †, Sister to Priamus, went with twelve Ships to the Siege of Troy ‡, where he gave noble Proofs of his Courage; but he did not revenge § the Affront put upon his Brother Ajax; nor prevent * his killing himself. Which made him (A) so odious to Telamon, that he received an Order from him not to set Foot in Salamis. Whereupon he went to seek his Fortune; and having landed in the Isle of Cyprus, he built a Town which he call'd (B) Salamis, the Name of his Father's Kingdom. When any Author for it, that Teium a Town in Paphlagonia, on the Euxine Sea, was the Native Country of Anacreon; and they say, upon the Word Teos, that some make him a Native of Teium. So that they quote no Author that may be consulted. I have enquired into the thing, and find that one of the (b) Scholiasts upon Horace has these Words: Teia dicta est à Teio Anacreontis poetæ lyrici oppido, quod in Paphlagonia esse Sallustius indicat, cum de situ pontico loquitur. I would not affirm, upon the Authority of that Passage, that Sallust said, that Teium, upon the Euxine Sea, was Anacreon's Native Country. It might be a Gloss of the Scholiast, grounded upon what he had read in Sallust, concerning the Town of Paphlagonia. But, though Sallust, and other Writers should say, that Anacreon was born in that Town of the Euxine Sea, we should not doubt that he was a Native of Teos in Ionia.

(A) He was sent to the Galleys.] If Thuanus had not mention'd this Particular, I fancy we had never known it: For the curious Nicodemo, who made so many Inquiries concerning the Neapolitan Writers, acknowledges that he knew nothing of it, but what he had read in Thuanus. Questo luogo del Tuano, says he (i), qui si e trascritto volentieri perche oltre alla lode che si da al Tetti in esso, si ha una notizia anche curiosa intorno al medesimo Tetti. These are Thuanus's Words: (k) Ab eo (Mureto) de Scipionis Tettii Neapolitani casu cognovit, hominis undecunque, ut ille ajebat, doctissimi, qui delatus quod male de numine sentiret, remo mancipatus fuerat, & tunc an adhuc in vivis esset, incertum erat. Thuanus speaks of the time (l) when he was at Rome, and of the frequent Conversations he had with Muretus. What we read in the Thuana has a Relation to this: "The Inquisition was very severe "under the Pontificate of Sixtus V. Muretus told me, "we don't know what becomes of People here. I "am amazed, being told when I rise in the Morning, "that such a one is not to be found, and yet none "dares speak of it. The Inquisition made a quick "Dispatch of 'em." I find a Slip of Memory in this Passage Muretus died soon after the Election of Sixtus V. in 1585. Thuanus was in France all that Year; and therefore Muretus told him nothing in that Pope's Reign. I think I may say, without being mistaken, that Thuanus, remembring on one hand what Muretus had told him concerning the Executions of the Inquisition; and knowing on the other hand, that Sixtus V. was very severe, confounded the time in which Muretus spoke to him, with the time when Sixtus V. was Pope. People don't use to be so exact in Conversation, and Memory is not then quick enough to make one avoid Anachronisms.

(B) Publish'd at Rome by Benedictus Ægius.] He added it to his Edition of Apollodorus, translated by him into Latin, and printed with his Notes, wherein he often mentions Tetti, and speaks of him as of a very honest and learned Man. (b) Sic habet exemplar Scipionis Tetti Neapolitani, viri nobilissimi & summa doctrina & modestia & humanitatis incredibilis. M. Baillet makes mention of him in the 403. page of the 1st. Volume of the Jugemens des Savans. "Scipio Tetti, says he, a Neapolitan, bestowed many "Years upon his small Tract de Appollodoris, before "he was sent to the Gallies. 'Tis a Work of two "Sheets; but notwithstanding its Smallness, and the "Author's Misfortune, it is still esteem'd by the pub"lick." Colomies (c) thought that Tetti had only writ that Tract, and a Catalogue of Manuscripts publish'd (d) by Father Labbe; but he should have known that the same Father ascribes to him (e) Bibliotheca scholastica instructissima Latinè, Gallicè, Italicè, Hispanicè, Anglicè, & Græcè, Printed at London in the Year 1618, in 8vo. Nicodemo knew nothing of it, but what he found in Father Labbe.

(C) Very much esteem'd by the Learned.] He himself informs us, that he had contracted Friendship with many illustrious Men. Testes, says he (f), conscii que nostrum utriusque laborum celeberrimi rerum antiquarum conservatores, nedum rei literariæ acerrimi patroni ac defensores, Achilles Maffeus, Gentilisque Delphinius. Testes amici alii literis & ingenio præstantissimi Carus Hannibal, Baptista Sigicellus, Antonius Augustinus, Alexandri duo, Picolominus & Corvinus, Marcus Casalius. Testes item alii quos longum esset enumerare. Denique & Fulvius Ursinus juvenis imprimis honestus & ornatus, & supra quam par sit ejus ætati Latinè & Græcè eruditus.

(Z) Was sent thither.] Plutarch, who supplies me with the Matter of this Article, expresses himself thus: (g) Ε'κελεύσθη πορευθεὶς ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ Τέττιγ☉ οἴκησιν ἱλάσασθαι τὴν τοῦ Ἀρχιλόχου ψυχήν. He was ordered to go to Tettix's House, in order to appease the Soul of Archilochus. According to Suidas, he was ordered to go to Tænarium, where Tettix was buried, and to offer a Propitiatory Sacrifice to the Soul of Telesicles's Son (h). Goropius Becanus (i), who consulted no other Author but Suidas, thought, that Tettix was Archilochus himself; which is a great Falsity. Had he consulted Plutarch, he would have avoided that Mistake, and the Misapplication of (k) Archilochus's Words against a Man, who had abused him. Τέττιγα τοῦ πτεροῦ συνείληφας, cicadam ala apprehendisti. See the Remark C in the Article Archilochus.

(A) Which made him so (l) odious to Telamon.] Sophocles brings in Teucer foretelling that Misfortune, and foreseeing that his Father would call him (m) Bastard and a Coward, and even accuse him of having deceitfully contributed to the Death of his Brother, in hopes of being the only Heir; and that he would turn him out of his House. He observes, that Telamon never laugh'd, no, not in a time of Mirth; and that he would be much more angry and peevish, hearing, in his old Age, of the unhappy Death of his Son. It appears from the following Words of Cicero, that he admired the Verses, wherein Pacuvius represents how Teucer was received by his Father. (n) Quid potest esse tam fictum quàm Versus, quàm scena, quàm fabula? Tamen in hoc genere sæpe ipse vidi quum ex persona mihi ardere oculi hominis histrionis viderentur spondalia illa, dicentis,

> Segregare abs te ausus, aut sine illo Salamina ingredi,
> Neque paternum aspectum es veritus.

Nunquam illum aspectum dicebat, quin mihi Telamon iratus furere luctu filii videretur. Ut ille inflexa ad miserabilem sonum voce, > ——— Quem ætate exacta indigem

> Liberum lacerasti, orbasti, extinxisti, neque fratris > necis,
> Neque gnati eius parvi qui tibi in tutelam est traditus.

Flens ac lugens dicere videbatur? Quæ si ille Histrio quotidie cum ageret, tamen recte agere sine dolore non poterat, quid Pacuvium putabis in scribendo leni animo ac remisso fuisse?

(B) Which he call'd Salamis.] An (o) Oracle of Apollo had promised him that the new Salamis, built by

---

(m) Agamemnon in the 8*th Book of the Iliads v.* 284. tells him, that Telamon had carefully bred him up, though he was a Bastard. (n) De Oratore l. 2. fol. 80. (o) Euripides in Helena mentions that Oracle.

† See the Remark D, in the Article Telamon.

‡ Hygin. c. 97.

§ Teucer non receptus à patre Telamone ob segnitiam non vindicatæ fratris injuriæ, Cyprum appulsus cognomine patriæ suæ Salamina constituit. Vell. Paterculus init.

* Ἐδιώχθη [illegible] ὑφ' αὐτοῦ. Ejectum Salamine eo quod Ajacem fratrem manus sibi illaturum minime prohibuisset. Scholiast. Æschil. in Persic.

(e) In biblioth. bibliothecarum.

(f) In tractatu de Apollodoris.

(g) De iis qui sero à numine puniuntur, pag. 560.

(h) He was Archilochus's Father

(i) Orig. Antwerp. l. 4. apud Schottum biblioth. Hispan. pag. 378.

(k) Apud Lucianum in Pseudolog.

(l) See in Servius in Æn. lib. 1. v. 619. all the reasons that are given for Telamon's Anger.

When he heard of Telamon's Death, he went to take Possession of his Kingdom; but Eurysaces, Ajax's Son, opposed him. This Resistance raised in him a desire of turning Adventurer; he Sailed towards Spain, and having landed in the Place where new Carthage was built, he went as far as Gallicia, where he settled. Justin ‖ says so, but 'tis more likely (C) that Teucer settled in the Isle of Cyprus. He built a Temple to Jupiter in Salamis, and ordered (D) that a Man should be Sacrificed to that God. That cruel Sacrifice lasted till the time of the Emperor Hadrian. Teucer's Posterity reigned there for many Ages. Pausanias † says they reigned there till the time of Evagoras; but he is not exact, for they reign'd (E) longer. They reign'd also in Cilicia, as I have shewn speaking of Ajax, the Son of Teucer. It might be inferr'd from a Passage of Pausanias *, that Teucer married a Daughter of Cinyras. He was assisted by the King of the Tyrians, to secure his new Domination: Virgil § says so, and Servius does not deny that it was the Opinion of many Writers. Others said that Teucer made himself Master of the Country without such an Assistance. According to Homer ‡, he was the best Archer in the Grecian Army.

THAIS, a Greek Curtezan, followed Alexander's Army, and occasion'd the (A) Destruction of Persepolis. She was so well beloved by Ptolemy King of Egypt, that he ¶ married her. Those who say that Menander was one of her Gallants, can give no good by him, would be as famous as the other:

Certus (p) enim promisit Apollo
Ambiguam tellure nova Salamina futuram.

The Passage, wherein Horace says this, is very well known, because 'tis a piece of a drinking Song.

Teucer Salamina patremque
Cum fugeret, tamen uda Lyæo
Tempora populea fertur vinxisse corona,
Sic tristes affatus amicos;
Quo nos cunque feret melior fortuna parente,
Ibimus ô socii, comitesque:
Nil desperandum Teucro duce & auspice Teucro.

. . . .

O fortes pejoraque passi
Mecum sæpe viri, nunc vino pellite curas,
Cras ingens iterabimus æquor.

Teucer does not say in Horace, where he would build the new Salamis; but he says in Euripides that he would build it in the Isle of Cyprus: All the Historians observe that he built it there, except Messala Corvinus, who is reproved for it by Meursius. (q) Itaque manifestus est error Messalla Corvini, qui in Sidonia conditam à Teucro dicit lib. de Augusti progenie. Teucer qui patria profugus in Sidonia alteram Salaminam condidit.

(C) 'Tis more likely that Teucer settled in the Isle of Cyprus.] If he had settled in Spain, Asclepiades of Myrlea, who taught Grammar in that Country, would not have forgot to say so in his Description of the Nations, who inhabited it; since he (r) observed that some of those who bore Arms under Teucer, settled in Gallicia: His Silence is a very good Proof.

(D) That a Man should be Sacrificed.] Tacitus, who (s) mentions the Construction of that Temple, says nothing of that Sacrifice, & Jovi Salaminio Teucer, Telamonis patris ira profugus. Lactantius (t) informs us of it. Apud Cypri, says he, Salaminem humanam hostiam Jovi Teucrus immolavit, idque sacrificium posteris tradidit, quod est nuper Hadriano imperante sublatum. What puzzles me is, that Porphyrius (a), who owns that Men were Sacrificed in Salamis for a long time, does not say that any of 'em were Sacrificed to Jupiter; and he tells us, that this Custom was suppressed under the Reign of Diphilus, Contemporary with Seleucus the Theologian. That Prince ordered that for the time to come, an Ox should be Sacrificed instead of a Man. That Sacrifice was offered to Agraule, the Daughter of Cecrops and of the Nymph Agraulis.

(E) For they reigned longer.] It appears from one of Isocrates's Orations that it was not without interruption; for he introduces Nicocles, who having said that Teucer the Founder of their Family had built Salamis, he adds, that his Father Evagoras had recovered the Kingdom which had been lost by others; and that he had so ordered things that Salamis was no longer Tyrannized by the Phœnicians, and had no other Kings but those, to whom the Kingdom did belong at first. Thus Teucer's Posterity sway'd the Scepter after the Death of Evagoras. 'Tis certain that his Son Nicocles reigned at Salamis: Some (b) say that Demonicus reign'd also in that Town, and that he was his Son. Isocrates inscribes some Orations to them. I find also one Nicocreon King of Salamis, (c) descended from Teucer. The learned Meursius takes him to be the same Man, whom Ptolemy (d) made Governour of Cyprus, in the first Year of the 117 Olympiad, 62 Years after the Death of Evagoras (e): For which he gives no other reason but a Passage of Antoninus Liberalis. It is a wrong Proof, since the Greeks did not apply their Metamorphoses to an Age so far distant from the fabulous times as that of Alexander's Successors was: And therefore Nicocreon mention'd by Antoninus Liberalis is not the same with that of Ptolemy. I omit that Nicocreon reigned (f) before the Olympiad mention'd by Meursius; notwithstanding which the King of Egypt might have given him the Government I speak of.

(A) And occasioned the Destruction of Persepolis.] M. Guillet rightly observes that Thais form'd that design out of a Principle of Ambition. "(g) She "proposed to Alexander to burn the Royal Palace of "Persepolis, and plainly told him that she long'd to "set it on Fire first; that it might be said in time to "come all over the World, that the Athenian Ladies, "who followed Alexander into Persia, had revenged "the Athenians, whose City had been formerly burnt "by Xerxes. Her Beauty and Eloquence occasion'd "the Success of her Ambition, and the Royal Palace "was burnt that very Night." The thing is related more at large in the following Words. "(h) From "hence designing to march against Darius, before "he set out, he diverted himself with his Officers "at an Entertainment of Drinking, and other Pastimes, and indulg'd so far as to have every one "his Mistress sit by and drink with them. The "most celebrated of them was Thais an Athenian, "Ptolemy's Mistress, who was afterwards King of "Ægypt. She sometimes cunningly prais'd Alexander, "sometimes play'd upon him and rally'd him, and "all the while drank so freely, that at last she fell "to talk extravagantly, as those of her Country us'd "to do, much above her Character or Condition. "She said it was indeed some Recompence for the "Pains she had taken in following the Camp all "over Asia, that she was that day treated in, and "could insult over the Stately Palace of the Persian "Monarchs: But she added, it would please her "much better, if while the King look'd on, she "might in sport, with her own Hands, set Fire to "Xerxes his Court, who reduc'd the City of Athens to Ashes; that it might be recorded to Posterity, that the Women who followed Alexander, "had taken a sharper Revenge on the Persians for "the Sufferings and Affronts of Greece, than all his "Commanders could do by Sea or Land. What she "said was receiv'd with such Universal liking, and "murmurs of Applause, and so seconded by the Incouragement and Eagerness of the Company, that "the King himself, persuaded to be of the Party, started from his Seat, and with a Chaplet of Flowers on "his Head, and a lighted Torch in his Hand, led "them the way, who went after him in a Riotous "manner, Dancing, and making loud Noises about "the Place." Diodorus Siculus * observes that Thais set Fire to the Royal Palace, next to the King, and that all the Houses round it were burnt down. He calls her ἑταίραν, a Word that may be rendred Curtezan. According to Plutarch nothing was burnt but the good Reaſon for it, as I ſhall make it appear in (B) taking notice of Moreri's Miſtakes. Whores were commonly call'd by the Name of that Curtezan in † Comedies, and other Pieces of Poetry. 'Tis ſaid, that Paphnutius (C) who flouriſh'd in the IVth Century, converted in Alexandria a famous Woman of Pleaſure, call'd THAIS.

‖ Justin. l. 44. c. 5.

† Lib. 2. pag. 71.

* Lib. 1. pag. 9.

§ Æn. l. 1. v. 620.

‡ Τεῦκρος θ', ὃς ἄριστος Ἀχαιῶν τοξοσύνῃ, ἀγαθὸς δὲ καὶ ἐν σταδίῃ ὑσμίνῃ. Teucerque qui præstantissimus Achivorum arte sagittandi, strenuus autem & in stataria pugna. Homer. Iliad. l. 13. v. 313. See also l. 8. v. 266. & seq. & Horace od. 9. l. 4.

¶ See the Remark A, towards the end.

(p) Horat. od. 7. l. 1.

(q) Meursius in Cypro p. 58. In the foregoing pag. he corrects Acron, who says upon the 7 ode of the 1. Book of Horace, that one of the two Salamis's was in Thraciæ regione (he should have said in Atticæ regione) and the other in the Isle of Cyprus.

(r) Apud Strabonem l. 3. pag. m. 108.

(s) Tacit. Ann. l. 3.

(t) Lact. divin. inst. lib. 1. c. 21.

(a) De abstinentia l. 2. Eusebius de præpar. Evang. l. 4. c. 16. S. Cyril in Julianum l. 4. quote the whole Passage of Porphyrius, teste Meursio in Cypro, pag. 61.

(b) See Meursius in Cypro, pag. 113.

(c) Anton. Liberalis, Metam. c. 39.

(d) Diodor. Sicul. l. 19.

(e) See Meursius in Cypro l. 2. c. 12 & 15.

(f) He assisted a Tragedy before Alexander, Plut. in Alex. pag. 681. Isocrates died at his House, Idem in Isocr.

(g) Guillet, Athenes ancienne & nouvelle p. m. 238.

(h) Plutarch in the Life of Alexander, pag. 687. of the Francfort Edition 1620.

* Lib. 17. c. 72.

THALES, One of the ſeven Wiſe Men of Greece. Moreri ſpeaks of him at large. I add to what he ſays, that this Philoſopher believed (AΔ), that the World was the the Royal Palace: But according to Quintus Curtius, the whole Town was conſumed to Aſhes, and was never rebuilt. I wonder he does not mention the fineſt Paſſage of Thais's Diſcourſe: It does not appear, from his Account of it, that ſhe earneſtly deſired it ſhould be ſaid in future Ages, that ſhe and her She-friends, had more contributed to revenge the Grecians than the greateſt Captains. (i) De die inibat convivia (Alexander) quibus feminæ interant: non quidem quas violari nefas eſſet; quippe pellices licentius quam decebat cum armato vivere adſueta. Ex his una Thais & ipſa temulenta, maximam apud omnes Græcorum initurum gratiam adfirmat, ſi regiam Perſarum juſſiſſet incendi, expectare hoc eos, quorum urbes barbari deleſſent. Ebrio ſcorto de tanta re ferente ſententiam, unus & alter, & ipſi mero onerati, adſentiunt, rex quoque fuit avidior, quam patientior: quin igitur ulciſcimur Græciam, & urbi faces ſubdimus. Omnes incaluerant mero: itaque ſurgunt temulenti ad incendendam urbem, cui armati pepercerant. Primus rex ignem regiæ injecit, tum convivæ & miniſtri pellicesque. Multa cedro ædificata erat regia: quæ celeriter igne concepto, late fudit incendium. Quod ubi exercitus, qui haud procul ab urbe tendebat, conſpexit, fortuitum ratus, ad opem ferendam concurrit. Sed ut ad veſtibulum regiæ ventum eſt; vident regem ipſum adhuc adgerentem faces. Omiſſa igitur, quam portaverant aqua, aridam materiam in incendium jacere cœperunt. Hunc exitum habuit regia totius Orientis .... ac ne longa quidem ætate, qua excidium ejus ſequuta eſt, reſurrexit. It does not appear from thoſe two Accounts that Thais was at that Entertainment in the Quality of Alexander's Miſtreſs; nay, it appears, that ſhe had not that Character. Quintus Curtius ſays only (k), that ſhe was one of the Concubines, who followed the Army: Plutarch affirms in expreſs Words, that ſhe was the Concubine of Ptolemy, one of Alexander's Captains. Yet 'tis a common Opinion, that ſhe was one of Alexander's Miſtreſſes; but it may be falſe, though it be ſupported by a Paſſage of Athenæus. That Author ſays, that Alexander had that Curtezan with him; and that after his Death ſhe married Ptolemy, King of Egypt, by whom ſhe had two Sons and one Daughter, who was the Wife of Eunoſtus, King of (l) Soli, in the Iſle of Cyprus. (m) Ὁ δὲ μέγας Ἀλέξανδρος Θαΐδα εἶχε μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἑταίραν· περὶ ἧς φησὶ Κλείταρχος ὡς αἰτίας γενομένης τοῦ ἐμπρησθῆναι τὰ ἐν Περσεπόλει βασίλεια. αὕτη δὲ ἡ Θαῒς καὶ μετὰ τὸν Ἀλεξάνδρου θάνατον, καὶ Πτολεμαίῳ ἐγαμήθη τῷ πρώτῳ βασιλεύσαντι Αἰγύπτου. καὶ ἐγέννησεν αὐτῷ τέκνα Λεοντίσκον καὶ Λάγον, θυγατέρα δὲ Εἰρήνην, ἣν ἔγημεν Εὔνοστος ὁ Σόλων τῶν ἐν Κύπρῳ βασιλεύς. Thais Athenienſis meretrix cum Alexandro magno fuit, eumque precipuè impulit, ut Cleitarchus autor eſt, ad comburendam regiam Perſepolidis. Poſt obitum Alexandri, Ptolemæo, qui primus Ægypti regnum adeptus eſt, illa nupſit, ex eoque liberos concepit, Leontiſcum, & Lagum mares: Eirenen fœminam, quæ Solonis Eunoſti regis Cypriorum uxor fuit.

(B) In taking notice of Moreri*'s Miſtakes.*] I. He ſays ſhe was a Native of Alexandria, and that being gone to Athens all the Youth of that Country flock'd to her. This Falſity is confuted in the following Paſſage. (a) "Don't believe what is ſaid in five or ſix ſorry "Hiſtorical Dictionaries, that Thais was a Native of "Alexandria. There was ſo ſhort an Interval between "the Time when Alexander laid the Foundation of "that City, and the Time when he burnt Perſepolis, "that Thais could not have ſeen the burning of that "Town, unleſs ſhe had been quickly ſnatch'd away "among the Firſt-Born of Alexandria, and tranſported in her Cradle: For you know that after the "Battle of Arbela, fought in the ſame Year that "Alexandria was built, In Oriente victoriis magis quàm "paſſibus omnia peragrabat Alexander. But laying "aſide Chronology, Plutarch and Athenæus ſay ſhe "was born at Athens (b)." II. Moreri adds, that the Poet Menander made her famous by his Verſes, which was the reaſon why ſhe was call'd Menandrea. This is taken from Charles Stephens's Dictionary, and cannot be ſo well confuted as Guillet's Paraphraſe upon it. It was there, ſays he (c), ſpeaking of Athens, that Thais had an Intrigue with Menander, that famous Poet, who was ſo tender-hearted, and ſo much given to Love, that he committed extraordinary Follies for his Miſtreſſes. In order to confute this Account, I alledge what Plutarch (d) ſays, that Thais was Ptolemy's Concubine during Alexander's Expedition, and what Athenæus obſerves, that ſhe married the ſame Ptolemy after the Death of that Conqueror. Which ſhews that, if ſhe had an Intrigue with Menander, it was before that Expedition. Nay, 'tis probable, that ſhe was Ptolemy's Miſtreſs ſometime before the War of Aſia: 'Tis probable, that this great Lord of Macedonia got her out of Athens, and kept her in his Houſe for ſome time, before Darius was attack'd. But this Expedition of Alexander began when Menander (e) was not above eight Years of Age; and therefore he could not be in Love with Thais before the Perſian War. In what Time then ſhall we place his Love for that Curtezan, ſince after the Death of Alexander, ſhe married the King of Egypt, I mean the ſame Ptolemy whom ſhe had followed every where, whilſt that Conqueror was ſubduing Aſia? I think the beſt Proof that can be alledged for that Love of Menander is grounded upon theſe Verſes of Propertius,

Turba (f) Menandreæ fuerat nec Thaidos olim Tanta, in qua populus luſit Erichthonius;

or upon theſe,

Non (g) te Medeæ delectent probra ſequacis,
Nempe tulit faſtus auſa rogare prior:
Sed potius mundi Thais pretioſa Menandri,
Cum ferit aſtutos Comica mœcha Getas;

or upon this Inſcription of Martial, under Menander's Thais,

Hac (h) primum juvenum laſcivos luſit amores,
Nec Glycere, vere Thais amica fuit.

But 'tis certain, that Menander's Thais, mention'd by thoſe two Latin Poets, ſignifies a Comedy of Menander, intituled Thais, and not the Curtezan, who occaſion'd the burning of Perſepolis. See the Obſervations (i) of Gronovius the Father. I would not deny, that our Thais was, in the Poet's Mind, the Original of the Comedy that went by her Name; but this does not prove, that there was an Intrigue between Menander and the Curtezan who makes the Subject of this Article.

(C) That Paphnutius .... converted in Alexandria.] Charles Stephens, and many Lexicographers after him, have mention'd this Converſion: They all quote Volaterranus, who relates it in this manner. Paphnutius, ſays he (k), going incognito to (l) Thais of Alexandria, thought that the Place ſhe carried him to was never private enough; and at laſt being told by her, that none but God could know what paſſed between 'em in the Place they were in, he took from thence occaſion to exhort her to fear God, who ſees and puniſhes the moſt private Actions. She was ſo ſenſibly moved with his Exhortation, that ſhe gave over her Trade, and became a holy Woman.

(AΔ) That Thales believed that the World was the Work of God, and that God knew the moſt ſecret Thoughts of Men.] I mention this as I find it in Diogenes Laertius, without affirming, that it was really the Opinion of that Philoſopher. The following Apophthegms are aſcribed to him among others. 1. (m) God is the moſt ancient thing of all, for he is uncreated. 2. The World is the fineſt thing of all, for it is God's Work. 3. Thoſe who commit a ſin, are ſo far from being able to conceal it from God, that they cannot ſo much as prevent his knowing their Thoughts. You may ſee in the Margin the Greek Words of Laertius: Valerius Maximus mentions alſo the third Sentence. (o) Mirifice etiam Thales. Nam interrogatus an facta hominum Deos fallerent: Nec cogitata, inquit. Ut non ſolùm manus, ſed etiam mentes puras habere vellemus; cùm ſecretis cogitationibus noſtris cæleſte numen adeſſe credidiſſemus. What Valerius Maximus ſays, that Thales taught this Doctrine, that Men being perſuaded the Work of God, and that God knew the moſt Secret Thoughts of Men. Some ſay that he married; but others deny it, and relate, that he diſappointed his Mother, who earneſtly deſired he ſhould get a Wife, by telling her when he was Young, there is time enough for that, and when he was in a declining Age, 'tis too late *. 'Tis ſaid he believed, that Life and Death are the ſame thing; and that being ask'd why he did not dye, he made an Anſwer, which others aſcribe to Pyrrho †. An old Woman bantered him, becauſe going abroad with her to look upon the Stars, he (A) fell into a Ditch. 'Tis thought he lived above (B) ninety Years.

---

† See Juvenal ſat. 3. v. 93. where he ſays an melior cum Thaida ſuſtinet; & Martial in ſeveral places.

(d) See the foregoing Remark.

(e) He was born about the 3d Year of the 109 Olympiad. See Voſſius de poetis Græcis p. 57. and Alexander began his March the 3d Year of the 111. Olympiad.

(f) Propert. eleg. 6. lib. 2.

(g) Id. lib. 4. eleg. 5.

(h) Martial. epigr. 187. lib. 14.

(i) Upon the Eccleſiaſtical Writers in the 2d Chapter pag. 25. & ſeq.

(k) Volaterr. lib. 20. circa init. pag. m. 718.

(l) Thaidis nomen nobilitatum in primis à Thaide Alexandrina. Id. ib.

(m) Πρεσβύτατον τῶν ὄντων, θεός· ἀγέννητον γάρ. κάλλιστον, κόσμος· ποίημα γὰρ θεοῦ. Antiquiſſimum eorum omnium quæ ſunt, deus; ingenitus enim. Pulcherrimum, mundus; à deo enim factus eſt. Diogen. Laert. lib. 1. n. 35.

(n) Ἠρώτησέ τις αὐτὸν εἰ λάθοι θεοὺς ἄνθρωπος ἀδικῶν. Ἀλλ' οὐδὲ διανοούμενος, ἔφη. Interrogatus, lateretne deos homo male agens: Ne cogitans quidem, inquit. Id. ibid. n. 36.

(o) Valer. Maxim. lib. 7. cap. 2. n. 8. ext. pag. m. 602.

Thoſe, who are not unacquainted with the Doctrine of the moſt ancient Philoſophers of Greece, know, that he aſſerted, that Water was the Principle of all (C) the Bodies, which that God knew their moſt ſecret Thoughts, ſhould preſerve their Hearts pure as well as their Hands, does very well agree with a Paſſage of Cicero, concerning the ſame Philoſopher. If you carefully examine the Sequel of Cicero's Argument, you'll find, that the Ground of Thales's Maxim, was the moral Advantage that might accrue to Man by it. (p) Melius græci atque noſtri, qui ut augerent pietatem in deos, eaſdem illos urbes quas nos incolere voluerunt. Affert enim hæc opinio religionem utilem civitatibus. Siquidem & illud bene dictum eſt à Pythagora doctiſſimo viro, tum maxime pietatem & religionem verſari in animis, cum rebus divinis operam daremus: & quod Thales qui ſapientiſſimus inter ſeptem fuit, homines exiſtimare oportere deos omnia cernere, deorum omnia eſſe plena: fore enim omnes caſtiores, veluti quo infans eſſet maxime religioſus. Take notice of a Difference between Cicero and Diogenes Laertius. The latter ſays abſolutely, that, according to Thales, the World was animated and full of Genii: (q) Τὸν κόσμον ἔμψυχον καὶ δαιμόνων πλήρη, animatum mundum ac demonibus plenum: but Cicero ſeems to reſtrain Thales's Words; for he ſays, that, according to that Philoſopher, it was proper or requiſite, that Men ſhould believe every thing to be full of Gods. Ariſtotle thought, that perhaps Thales meant only what was ſaid by others, that all Beings have a Soul: Καὶ ἐν τῷ ὅλῳ δέ τινες αὐτὴν (ψυχὴν) μεμῖχθαί φασιν· ὅθεν ἴσως καὶ Θαλῆς ᾠήθη πάντα πλήρη θεῶν εἶναι (r). Sunt & qui in toto univerſo permiſtam ipſam (Animam) inquiunt eſſe. Quocirca forſitan & Thales omnia plena deorum eſſe putavit. Here follow ſome other Variations. Plutarch does not ſuppoſe that Thales alledged the Reaſon above mention'd, why the World is the fineſt Thing of all: He ſays, that Thales being to reſolve this Queſtion, Which is the fineſt Being of all? Anſwered, the World; for every thing that is according to order, is part of the World. (ſ) Τί κάλλιστον; κόσμος· πᾶν γὰρ τὸ κατὰ τάξιν, τούτου μέρος ἐστί. Quid pulcherrimum? Mundus. omnes enim ejus partes ordine aptæ ſunt. As for the Anſwer to the Queſtion, whether God knows the wicked Actions of Men, ſome aſcribe it to Pittacus, and not to Thales. See Theon in the 5th Chapter of his Progymnaſmata pag. 66 and 77 of the Leyden Edition 1626.

I obſerve all theſe Variations to ſhew, that the Reaſons, which might be alledged againſt what I have ſaid in another (t) place, that Thales did not bring in the Power of God into his Syſtem concerning the Production of things, are not very convincing. But I ſhall touch upon this hereafter. See the Remark C.

(A) To look upon the Stars, he fell into a Ditch.] How can you know what paſſes in Heaven, ſaid that good old Woman to him, ſince you do not ſee what is before your Feet? (a) Λέγεται δ᾽ ἀγόμενος ὑπὸ γραὸς ἐκ τῆς οἰκίας, ἵνα τὰ ἄστρα κατανοήσῃ, εἰς βόθρον ἐμπεσεῖν, καὶ αὐτῷ ἀνοιμώξαντι φάναι τὴν γραῦν, Σὺ γὰρ, ὦ Θαλῆ, τὰ ἐν ποσὶν οὐ δυνάμενος ἰδεῖν, τὰ ἐπὶ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ οἴει γνώσεσθαι; Fertur, quum domo exiret contemplandorum ſiderum cauſa, in ſubjectam foſſam incidiſſe, petulantique probro dictum ab anu domeſtica, Qua ratione, ô Thales, quæ in cœlis ſunt comprehenſurum te arbitraris, qui ea quæ ſunt ante pedes, videre non vales? This Thought has been turn'd ſeveral ways. See the Commentaries upon the 105. Emblem of Alciatus, wherein you'll find the Verſes which Sir Thomas Moor made upon an Aſtrologer, who was a Cuckold. Sometimes he excuſes him for not ſeeing in the Stars his Wife's Gallantry, and ſometimes he banters him for it.

Saturnus procul eſt, jamque olim cæcus, ut ajunt,
Nec propè diſcernens à puero lapidem.
Luna verecundis formoſa incedit ocellis,
Nec niſi virgineum virgo videre poteſt.
Jupiter Europam, Martem Venus, & Venerem Mars,
Daphnen Sol, Herſen Mercurius recolit.
Hinc factum, Aſtrologe, eſt, tua cum capit uxor amantes, Sidera ſignificent ut nihil inde tibi.

You ſee he alledges ſome Reaſons why the Planets cannot diſcover to that Aſtrologer his domeſtick Misfortune: But here are ſome other Verſes, wherein he pretends that ſince the Stars ſee every thing, they ſhould have acquainted him with his Wife's unfaithfulneſs.

Aſtra tibi ætherea pandunt ſeſe omnia vati,
Omnes & quæ ſint fata futura monent.
Omnibus aſt uxor quod ſe tua publicat, id te Aſtra, licet videant omnia, nulla monent.

There being ſome Aſtrologers every where, who are not free from that Misfortune, no more than Men of other Profeſſions, a French Author, who knew ſome of 'em, preſented them with a French Tranſlation of the firſt Verſes of Sir Thomas Moor. Theſe are his Words. (b) Now, ſince this Man (c), intent upon a high Contemplation, and pretending to great Knowledge, did not ſee what was before him, you may be ſure he is not the only Perſon of that Character. Many Aſtrologers are like him; for, though they pretend to foretell the Fate of other Men, they cannot foretell their own; as I do certainly know of ſome of that Profeſſion, who are extremely Jealous, and .... you know what I mean, with due Reſpect to the Ladies. I made formerly the following Epigram upon them, in imitation of Sir Thomas Moor.

Tu cognois aſtrologue eſtoilles etherees,
Dont à chacun predis futures deſtinees:
Mais de ce que ta femme eſt à pluſieurs commune,
Par les aſtres n'en peux cognoiſtre choſe aucune.
Saturne eſt trop loingtain, aveugle eſt en apres,
Le blanc d'entre le noir ne diſcernant de pres.
Ayant les yeux honteux la Lune fait ſon cours,
Puis la vierge ne veut voir laſcives amours.
Les autres affaire ont, Mars ſa Venus regarde,
Venus Mars, Jupiter à Europe prent garde.
Ainſi donc tu ne peux ta femme apercevoir,
Quand ſon amant l'embraſſe, & moins tes cornes voir.

See what I quote (d) out of the Menagiana.

(B) 'Tis thought he lived above ninety Years.] (e) He was born in the 1. Year of the 35th Olympiad, and died in the 58th Olympiad: Which makes at leaſt ninety two Years. And therefore Diogenes Laertius argues wrong when he ſays (f) Τελευτῆσαι γὰρ ἐπὶ τῆς πεντηκοστῆς ὀγδόης Ὀλυμπιάδος: quinquageſima QUIPPE & octava Olympiade eſſe defunctum; and yet Aldobrandinus (g) does not find fault, with the Computation of that Author. Moreri is wrong in his Calculation; for he ſays, that Thales, who was born in the 36th Olympiad, died in the 58th about the Year of Rome 209 in the 95th Year of his Age. The Year of Rome 209 is the laſt of the 58th Olympiad; but which way ſoever you reckon, you'll never find ninety five Years in the Hypotheſis of that Writer.

(C) That Water was the Principle of all Bodies.... Many Reflections might be made.] There is very good reaſon to believe, that he was not the firſt, who advanced that Doctrine; and that he had it from the Egyptians, or the moſt Ancient Poets of Greece. See the Diſſertation de dogmate Thaletis, quod aqua ſit principium omnium rerum, Printed with ſome (h) others at Hall in Saxony in the Year 1700. Some Authors ſay, that the Chaos of Heſiod is, in the main, the ſame Principle, which Thales call'd Water: Which I can hardly believe; for the Water of Thales muſt needs have been an Homogeneous thing, whereas the Chaos was an odd Mixture of all ſorts of Principles. Ovid gives us that Notion of it, at the Beginning of his Metamorphoſes; and when the other Poets ſpeak of a certain Infernal Chaos, they mean a dark and frightful Place, wholly deſtitute of the Beauty that is to be ſeen in things well ordered, or deprived of the Simplicity of a firſt Principle.

Di

---

* Diog. Laert. l. 1. n. 26.

† See the Article Pyrrho.

(p) Cicero de legib. lib. 2. fol. 334. B.

(q) Diog. Laert. ib. n. 27.

(r) Ariſt. de anima lib. 1. cap. 5.

(ſ) Plut. in convivio ſeptem ſapient. p. 153. C.

(t) In the Remark D of the Article Anaxagoras.

(a) Diog. Laert. lib. 1. n. 34.

which make up the Universe. Many Reflections might be made upon that Supposition: I shall set down a Passage, whereby it appears, that he made very fine Discoveries in Astronomy,

Di (k), quibus imperium est animarum, umbræque
silentes,
Et Chaos, & Phlegethon, loca nocte tacentia late.

Servius understands by the word Chaos, in these two Verses, the first Principles as they were in the confusion of the Elements. But perhaps he is too subtil; for 'tis likely Virgil intended to speak only of Hell in general, or of part of it. These words of Ovid ought to be understood in the same Sense:

(l) Per ego hæc plena timoris,
Per chaos hoc ingens, vastique silentia regni
Eurydices oro, properata retexite fata.

'Tis a Prayer of Orpheus to Pluto and Proserpina. See (m) Grævius's Notes upon Hesiod, wherein he proves, that the Word Chaos does frequently signifie Hell. I know that another Sense has been put upon the Chaos, which was, according to Hesiod, the first of all Beings: It has been said, that this Chaos signifies the Space wherein all Bodies have been placed. Simplicius (n) tells us, that it had been a very common Opinion: It is mention'd by Sextus Empiricus: (o) Εἶναι γὰρ φασι Χάος τὸν τόπον ἀπὸ τοῦ χωρητικὸν αὐτὸν εἶναι τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ γινομένων. Dicunt enim Chaos esse locum, eo quod comprehendat illa quæ in ipso sunt. But, if we admit of this Sense, 'tis impossible that Thales should have taught the same Doctrine with Hesiod; for Water wants a Place as well as other Bodies; and therefore Space must have existed before Water, and consequently Water would not be the first Principle. I don't think, that Hesiod meant what is ascrib'd to him: Certainly, by the Word Chaos, he did not understand the Space or the Place which contains Bodies. Doubtless, he meant by it the State of Confusion, that things were in before the Earth, the Sea, the Air, the Heaven, &c. had their proper Situation. He did not intend to speak of the Space, which, if it be distinguish'd from Matter, is necessarily an Homogeneous Body, and uncapable of being the Subject of the Composition of any Element or mix'd Body. This shews, that the Water of Thales was not the Space, though he must have look'd upon it as a Whole perfectly Homogeneous in actu, but Heterogeneous in potentia. I make use of a Distinction very famous in the Schools of the Peripateticks; by which I mean, that, according to Thales, Water considered in it self, and before the particular Formation of all Bodies, ought to be actually Water in each of its Parts, and yet capable of becoming Air, Fire, Earth; and then a Tree, a Metal, Blood, Wine, a Bone, &c. according to the several Degrees of Rarefaction and Condensation that it goes through. Those are in the wrong who object that there would be no Difference in Bodies, if there was but one sole Material Principle. This Objection can be of no force but against those, who should suppose, that this sole Principle is immutable: But if they suppose, that it is susceptible of several Qualities one after another, like the Materia prima of Aristotle, any sort of Body might arise from it. The Objection proposed by Lactantius, either against Thales, or against Heraclitus, who admitted nothing but Fire for the Principle of all Things, is not a good one. Fire, says he (a), cannot be produced from Water, nor can Water proceed from Fire. He is mistaken: Any particular Body may proceed from Fire, Earth or Water, provided there be some Causes that know how to modify Matter according to its alterability, or mutability. But I must observe, by the by, that neither Thales, nor Heraclitus, nor any of the ancient Philosophers, who took only one of the four vulgar Elements for the general Principle of all Bodies, equall'd Aristotle in Penetration of Wit: They were not sensible that none of the four Elements is Matter in general, and that they are a kind of determin'd Matter. Which is the Reason why Aristotle, who was more judicious than all of 'em, pitch'd upon Matter, in general, for the first Principle of all Things.

The great Difficulty of Thales's Hypothesis lies in this, that he did not say how Water began to alter, and to put on the particular Forms of Air, Fire, Earth, &c. Was it rarefied, was it condensed by its own Virtue? Did that Virtue arise all of a sudden in the beginning of the World, or did it always exist in Water? One cannot apprehend how Water could exert that Virtue, if it had not been always in it; and how it could have been from all Eternity without Condensation and Rarefaction, if that Virtue had been always in it. Some are of Opinion, that Thales supposed that God was the efficient Cause, which produced all particular Bodies out of Water. They alledge two Passages of Cicero, and one (c) of Lactantius: But Lactantius had from Cicero what he says upon this Point, and therefore his Testimony is insignificant. As for Cicero, the Reasons (d) that may be alledged against him, are so strong, that his Testimony cannot be depended upon. If any should alledge the Words of Diogenes Laertius, above quoted (e), I answer, that Plutarch does not make use of 'em, when he mentions the same Answer made by Thales. If it be replied, that Plutarch and Diogenes Laertius agree in another Point, viz. that Thales giving a Reason why God is the most ancient of all things, alledged, that God was not made, or had no beginning; I'll answer, that it is not a positive Proof that he ascribed to God the Generation of the World. Were there not some Philosophers, who, acknowledging on the one hand the Existence of the Gods, denied, on the other, that the Gods had made the World? If it be further replied, that Thales attributed to the Gods a Knowledge of the most secret Thoughts of Men; I'll answer, 1. That 'tis not certain he said so, since some Writers (f) ascribe that Saying to Pittacus: 2. That he might have believed, that the Gods concern themselves with our Affairs, and know our secret Thoughts; but it does not follow from thence, that he ascribed to them the Production of the World; and that he did not believe, that they themselves proceeded from Water, as from their Cause and Principle: 3. That the true Philosophical Opinions of Thales, the Naturalist, ought not to be look'd for in the Conversation of Thales, one of the seven Wise-Men of Greece. He might have said many Things under this last Notion, which he did not say in his School of Philosophy. He mention'd nothing but Water, when he explain'd the Formation of the World, like a Philosopher; he did not add the Power of God to that of Water. But when he look'd upon himself as a Sage, whose sententious Discourses should tend to promote Virtue, and would be spread among the People, he thought himself obliged to conform to Theological Notions. Take notice, that the Opinions of the Heathen Philosophers were so incoherent, that, from their Hypothesis concerning the Existence of God, it did not follow, that he had a share in the Production and Government of the World; and that, from their Hypothesis concerning his Providence, it did not follow, that he had cleared the Chaos, or formed the Universe. Their Hypothesis allowed them to say, that the Gods govern'd the World, though they had been produced and form'd out of the Chaos, as well as Bodies. When a Man believes, that Humane Souls are formed of the most subtil Parts of Blood, he may say, that Jupiter, Venus and Mercury, have been produced out of the most subtil Parts of the Chaos. Now, as the Soul governs the Body, which it has not made, and whereof it (h) is but a kind of distilled Water; and as we govern Beasts, and even some Men who were not produced by us; so the Gods govern the World which they have not made, and which made 'em of its refined Parts.

I wish the Learned Men of Hall (i), who have said such fine Things of the Ionick Sect, had saved me the Trouble of reconciling St. Augustin with Cicero. One of 'em says, that Thales acknowledged no Divine Influence in the Production of the World; the other says the quite contrary. Those Gentlemen say nothing of the Arguments (†) above-mentioned; whereby it seems, that one may prove, that this Founder of the Ionick Sect, was Orthodox in his Notion of the Deity. I wish they had examin'd that Objection, for I would have made use of their Answers. They positively affirm, that from Thales inclusively, to Anaxagoras exclusively, the Ionick Sect has been guilty of Atheism in the second Degree. To understand this, I must observe, that they admit of three (k) Degrees of Atheism. The first is to maintain, that there is no God: The second is to deny, that the World was made by God, whose Existence is acknowledged: The third is to say, that God has created the World necessarily, and not with a Free-will. Thales, Anaximander, and Anaximenes, are guilty of the second Degree of Atheism, as well as Epicurus. (l) Hi tres universi convenerunt in eo, quod principium omnium rerum sit aliquid similare, quod orta res fuerint nulla Dei opera, solius naturæ sponte, qui est gradus Atheismi Epicureus (sic enim vocare liceat) quod orta sint condensando & rarescendo. Quod Atheismi illos tres postulavi, de singulis probatu non difficile est ex Augustino, qui ubi, &c. Anaxagras, Aristotle

(c) Lactant. lib. 1. cap. 5. pag. m. 15.

(d) You'll find them in the Article Anaxagoras, Remark D and E.

(e) In the Remark A.

(f) See above the Remark A.

(h) That is according to the hypothesis of the Heathens.

(i) See the first Volume Observationum selectarum ad rem litterariam spectantium, Printed at Hall in the Year 1700. pag. 445. & seq.

(†) In the Remark A.

(k) Ibid. pag. 448.

(l) Ibid. pag. 450.

Astronomy, and that he was so well pleased, because he had found the Proportion (D) of the Sun's Diameter to the Circle it describes round the Earth, that having imparted it to a Man, who was willing to give him any Reward for it, he † only desired, that he would be so ingenuous as to declare, that the Glory of that Invention was due to him.

THAMYRAS, who invented the Science of the Haruspices. See TAMIRAS

THAMYRIS, a Poet, and one of the most excellent Musicians of his time, was born at Odrysa in Thrace, whither his Mother † retired to hide her shame. She had the Imprudence to lye with a Man ‡, who would not marry her. Doubtless she often desired it of him, as her big Belly encreased; but he gave no Ear to it, which made her leave her Country, which was (A) Mount Parnassus. The Son, of whom she was delivered at Odrysa, was call'd Thamyris, and was endowed with many Perfections, whereby he might have got a great Glory, had it not been for his Vanity, which made him run into a thousand Extravagancies. He trod in his Father's Steps, for he learn'd Musick so perfectly, that the Scythians β made him their King, though he was a Foreigner. He had the finest γ Voice of any Man in his time, if we believe Plutarch, who adds, that he composed a Poem concerning the War of the Titans with the Gods. He is said to have made some other Poems, five thousand Verses δ about the Creation of the World, and a System of Theology consisting of three thousand Verses, which was still extant when Suidas was writing his Dictionary. 'Tis likely those two Poems are not wholly different. He was more ancient than Homer ζ by eight degrees according to some, or five according to others; and he was the first τ, who gained the Prize of Singing at the Pythick Games. He is said to have been the first Man guilty of the (B) unnatural Sin. He gave a vain and insolent Challenge to the Muses: Proud of his Beauty and Skill in playing upon Instruments, he Challenged them to a Trial of Skill, in Musick, upon this Condition that if he got the Victory, he should deprive them of their Virginity; and that if he was overcome, they might use him as they should think fit. The Muses, who probably did not doubt of a good Success, accepted the Condition, and after their Victory deprived him of his Sight and of his Skill in Musick. Homer, who (C) mentions this Challenge of Thamyris, and the Punishment inflicted upon him on that account, says nothing of his Pretension, in case he had not been worsted; a Pretension like that of Male * Partridges, when they fight in the presence of their Females: But Apollodorus and the Scholiast upon Homer affirm it positively ┼. Natalis Comes stotle, (m) and the Stoicks, are guilty of the third Degree: (n) Anaxagoram & duos ejus socios (Diogenem Appolloniatem & Archelaum) tametsi à Thaletico atheismo, qui Deo plane nihil vult esse cum fabricatione rerum negotii, adeo excuso, ut ejus comparatione religiosus ipse, qualem & vulgo habent quidam, videri queat, atheorum tamen catalogo minime expungendum statuo. Fuit autem atheismus ejus in eo gradu quem minimum vocavi.

(D) A Passage, whereby it appears, that he made very fine Discoveries in Astronomy, and .... the proportion of the Sun's Diameter.] I find that Passage in Apuleius. Thales Milesius, says he (o), ex septem illis sapientia memoratis viris facile præcipuus: fuit enim geometricæ penes Grajos primus repertor, & naturæ rerum certissimus explorator, & astrorum peritissimus contemplator, maximas res parvis lineis reperit: temporum ambitus, ventorum flatus, stellarum meatus, tonitruum sonora miracula, siderum obliqua curricula, Solis annua reverticula: idem Lunæ vel nascentis incrementa, vel senescentis dispendia, vel delinquentis obstacula. Idem sane jam proclivi senectute divinam rationem de Sole commentus est: quam equidem non didicit modo, verum etiam experiundo comprobavit: quotiens Sol magnitudine sua circulum quem permeat metiatur. Id à se recens inventum Thales memoratur edocuisse Mandraytum Prienensem, qui nova & inopinata cognitione impendio delectatus, optare jussit quantam vellet mercedem sibi pro tanto documento rependi. Satis, inquit, mihi fuerit mercedis Thales sapiens, si id quod à me didicisti, cum proferre ad quospiam cœperis, tibi non adsciveris; sed ejus inventi me potius quam alium repertorem prædicaveris. It seems to me that the true Sense of these Words, quotiens sol magnitudine sua circulum quem permeat metiatur, is this, that Thales found out the Sun's Diameter, and the Circle it seems to describe round the Earth. We are told, that he computed how many times the whole Body of the Sun was to change its Situation to make an end of that Circle; but we are not told how many times it was. The modern Astronomers suppose, that the Sun's Diameter is about thirty Minutes: From whence it follows, that, by changing its place 720 times, according to the whole extent of its Globe, it describes the whole Circumference of its Circle. Some infer from thence, that its daily Swiftness would not be very considerable, if it were true that it moves, as 'tis supposed in Tycho Brache's System; that is, as an Arrow in the Air, and not as the Nails of a Wheel. Cannot Oxen, with a slow Pace, go in a few Hours through a Space seven or eight hundred Times greater than they are? Observe how the Inventers of Things are sensible to the Glory of a first Discovery. Thales, that wise Man of Greece, was old, and enjoyed a glorious Reputation: He did not care for any Reward in Money, or any Gain; but he could not have endured the Injustice of those, who should have appropriated his Discovery to themselves, or deprived him of the Glory of it, by an unkind Silence. See what Tacitus says, speaking (a) of Helvidius Priscus, that the Desire of Glory is the last thing the wisest Man can part with.

(A) Which was Mount Parnassus.] (b) Others say, she retired from Peloponnesus, and that Philammon, a handsome young Man, on whom she had bestowed too many Favours, was born at Thoricum in Attica.

(B) The first Man guilty of the Unnatural Sin.] (c) Πρῶτος ἀρξάμενος ἐρᾶν ἀῤῥένων. Mascula Venere primus usus dicitur. The Boy, he loved, was the same Hyacinthus, who was afterwards beloved by Apollo, and kill'd by him with a Quoit, against his Will. He was the Son of the Muse Clio, and of Pierus (d) the Son of Magnes. This we find in Apollodorus; but Suidas calls the Boy Himneus, and says he was the Son of Calliope and Magnes. I have not read in any Author what Lloyd and Hofman have taken from Charles Stephens, viz. that Thamyris, the most beautiful of all Men, fell in Love with Boys at first, and then took another course, and loved the Muses. This is to pervert and confound what the Ancients have said.

(C) Homer, who mentions this Challenge.] 'Tis in the second Book of the Iliads, in the List of the Grecian Fleet, on occasion of the Town Dorion, near which he says, Thamyris was met by the Muses. It is evident, by what follows and goes before, that this Town was not in Thrace, as Lloyd will have it, but in Peloponnesus. (e) Lucan, who places it in Thessaly, was little better acquainted with its Situation. (f) Beroaldus, who quotes Lucan to prove, that it was in Bœotia, has committed two Faults instead of one. Diodorus Siculus, in the third Book, and Dion Chrysostome, in his third Oration de Fuga, mention that Challenge of Thamyris,

---

† See the Remark D.

† Her Name was Arsinoe, according to Suidas; and Argiope, according to Pausanias and Apollodorus.

‡ His Name was Philammon, and he was a good Musician; See Pausanias l. 4. p. 143. & l. 10. pag. 322. Plut. de musica pag. 1132.

β Conon apud Photium n. 186. pag. 428

γ De musica pag. 1132. Natalis Comes Mythol. l. 6. c. 14. says that Plutarch values that Poem more than all the others; but 'tis certain he neither praises nor dispraises it.

δ Tzetzes Chil. 7. histor. 108.

ζ Suidas.

τ Pausan. l. 10. pag. 322.

* Tunc inter se dimicant mares desiderio feminarum, victum ajunt Venerem pati. Plin. l. 10. c. 33.

┼ See the Remark D.

(m) Infimum (atheorum gradum faciunt) quia produxerit quidem Deus, (mundum) sed necessitate naturæ coactus, non voluntate sua libere motus, quæ fuit Aristotelis & Stoicorum sententia.. Interim qualicunque providentiæ Divinæ confessione factum est, ut Aristoteles & Stoici pro nonatheis vulgo haberenter. Esse tamen ipsorum eandem sortem debere cum physicis Ionicæ Sectæ, quos pro atheis habitos monstrabimus, sectarum convenientia edocebit. Ibid. pag. 448, 449. (n) Ibid. pag. 453. (o) Apuleius Floridor. pag. m. 361.

(a) Opus contemp- tur, reli pervers, conflans adversa menta; Etiam bus sap- ientior ma vide- retur, quando etiam sa- pientibus cupido gloriæ no- vissima exuitur. Tacit. hist. lib. 4. cap. 5 & 6.

(b) Conon apud Photium n. 186. pag. 428.

(c) Apollodor. lib. 1. pag. m. See also Suidas and the Scholiast upon Homer in Il. lib. 2. v. 102.

(d) Apollodor. lib. 1. pag. m.

(e) Quæ terræ Phylace Peleos & Dorion ira Flebit Pieridum. Lucan. Pharsal. l. v. 352.

(f) Beroald. in Propert. eleg. 22. v. 2.

Comes (D) should have quoted them. I wonder Lucian (E) did not show his bantering Wit upon it, and was contented to represent Thamyris as an ungrateful Man, who turn'd against the Muses the Talent he had received from them. Some Authors have * said, that the Punishment of his Presumption was put off till the time when he should be in Hell. Pausanias † says, he believes that Thamyris lost his Sight, not as Homer says, for having contended with the Muses, but thro' Sickness. 'Tis ‖ observed, that this Poet left off making Verses when he was blind, and that he threw his Lyre into a (F) River: Hence it is, that when he was painted Blind, he was represented ‖ with a broken Lyre. He invented (FΔ) the Musick called Dorick. Plato ‡ feign'd, according to the Principles of the Metempsychosis, that the Soul of Thamyris removed into the Body of a Nightingale.

THEON, a Greek Sophist, of whom we have still a † Rhetorical Book, written with great Politeness and Judgment. His Rules are neat and short, and he makes a good choice of the common Topicks, from which Arguments are to be fetch'd. There is no Subject, wherein he has been more successful, than in that which concerns (A) God's Providence. He passes a right Judgment upon the fine Passages, and the Faults of the most illustrious Historians and Orators. I shall give an Instance of (B) his Niceness about the Thamyris, and how he was punish'd for it. (g) Barthius finds in that Oration, that Thamyris lost his Sight and his Skill in Musick, by reason of his Wealth: But this is not the Author's Meaning.

(D) Natalis Comes should have quoted them.] He (h) gives a right Account of that Adventure; but he quotes only Asclepiades of (i) Myrlea; which is a wrong way of quoting, and a Remainder of the vain Affectation of some Learned Men of Italy, when good Literature was revived. Some quoted a Greek Author only in general; others call'd him by his Name, but they took care not to say, that what they cited out of him, was only to be found quoted in some known Authors. The Scholastick Divines and Philosophers are not so unfair in their Quotations: They don't scruple to refer the Reader for a Passage of an Author, whose Works are in every Body's Hands, to a modern Writer who quotes it. Thus Father Terillus in his Book upon the Prima Regula Morum, does seldom quote the Fathers, or Thomas Aquinias, but upon the Credit of Sanches, Vasques, and other Jesuits, as it is observed by the Author of the IVth Denonciation du peché Philosophique. I give here an Example of such Quotations. However it be, Natalis Comes should have told us, that there are some Authors extant, who may be quoted about the Conditions of the Challenge. Συνθέμενος, says Apollodorus, ἂν μὲν κρείττων εὑρεθῇ πλησιάσειν πάσαις. The Scholiast upon Homer has the same Expression upon the Passage of the second Book of the Iliads: Συνέθετο, ἂν μὲν κρείττων εὑρεθῇ πλησιάσαι πάσαις.

(E) That Lucian did not shew his bantering Wit upon it, and was contented to represent Thamyris, as an ungrateful Man.] (k) Ἐκ τῆς οἱ μὲν ᾐτιῶ τὸν Θάμυριν, ἢ τὸν Εὔρυτον οἷα τὴν φύσιν, ὡς ταῖς μούσαις ἀντᾴδειν, παρ᾽ ὧν εἴληφε τὴν ᾠδὴν, ἢ τῷ Ἀπόλλωνι ἐριδαίνειν, ἐναντία τοξεύειν, καὶ ταῦτα, δοτῆρι ὄντι τῆς τοξικῆς. Nisi ejusdem naturæ, cujus Thamyris, vel Eurytus, ut musis occinat, à quibus canendi normam acceperit, vel Apollinem, idque jaculationis præceptorem, jaculando provocet. Perhaps Lucian forgot that Circumstance, or never observed it in his reading. 'Tis well he didn't; for this seems to be the true Reason why he did not jest upon it in any of his Books, by falsly and maliciously supposing, that the Muses did not sing well that Day, either because they pretended to have got a Cold, or happen'd to be troubled with one, which they were not sorry for, or by some other Trick, like those of Courtiers and ambitious Men (a) when they play; and that therefore Thamyris, &c. But I must not forget, that, according to some Authors (b), the Prize annexed to the Victory was not a transient Favour, but an actual Marriage to be contracted between him and the nine Muses: 'Twas a lasting Business.

Connubio (c) jungam stabili propriamque dicabo.

(F) That he threw his Lyre into a River.] Caseneuve, in his French Commentary upon some Epistles of Philostratus, says, that Thamyris, after he had been punished, threw his Lyre against Mount Parnassus, and that the Blow produced a Brook, which was called Balyra for that very Reason. This is a strange Alteration of Pausanias's Words, wherein (d) we find, that at the distance of thirty Stadia from the Gate of Messena in Peloponnesus, there was a River call'd Balyra, because Thamyris had thrown his Lyre into it.

(FΔ) Invented the Musick call'd Dorick.] He was so great a Master in that Art, that he could not rest satisfied to leave it as he found it, without adding some new Ornaments to it. (e) Lydios modulos Amphion (invenit) Doros Thamiras Thrax: Phrygios Marsyas Phrix.

(A) Wherein he has been more successful than in that which concerns God's Providence.] Read the 12th Chapter of his Book, where you'll find many and the best Proofs that a Pagan could think of; which shews, that Theon was a Man of great Parts. You'll find there among other Things, that those, who believe that God does continually see what they do, live in great Safety, and practise their Duty; and that those, who are persuaded that the Gods take care of 'em, spend their Lives with a wonderful Pleasure. (f) Εἶθ᾽ ὅτι ἀσφαλέστατα ἂν ὅτι, καὶ προσηκόντως τὸν βίον διάγοιεν, νομίζοντες ἔχειν ἐπισκόπους ἀεὶ πάντων τῶν κατὰ τὸν βίον πραξέων. καὶ ὅτι μάλιστα ἡδέως ζῶσιν, οἱ ἡγούμενοι ἐπιμελητὰς ἔχειν τοὺς θεούς. Quemadmodum & omnium tutissime ac diligentissime eos vivere contiet, qui omnium suarum in vita actionum inspectores se habere existimant Deos. Sed & jucundissime ætatem agere, qui à Diis respici se credunt. 'Tis certain, that if Men lived according to their Principles, the Doctrine of God's Presence would be the most effectual Means to keep them from Evil, and to excite 'em to good Actions. The most Profligate can hold their Hands and refrain their Tongues, when they think they are seen or heard by some Persons whom they fear or respect. Much more should the Persuasion, that God sees every thing, keep Men to their Duty (g). Which is the Reason why the Authors of pious Books do so much inculcate the Necessity of meditating upon God's Presence. 'Tis likewise for the same Reason that these Words, GOD SEES THEE, SINNER, use to be posted up, even in the Corners of the Streets. 'Tis also true, that those who believe, that God takes care of them, have a plentiful Stock of Comfort and Pleasure. The profane Poets were not ignorant of it; but 'tis a just Cause of Scandal to see, that they made use of that Maxim (h) to gain a Mistress.

I shall set down here a Thing, that is to be found in a Book, intitled, Pratiques de Pieté pour honorer le S. Sacrement. The Author of it mentions (i) " this Saying of " Marshal de Gassion. If I believed the Real Presence I " would be all the time of my Life in a Church prostrated to " the Ground; and I cannot believe that many Catholicks " are persuaded of what they say concerning that Mystery, " when I consider how little respect they express at " Church." If that Marshal had believed the Real Presence, he would have done as others do: He would have been used to that Doctrine, and a long Habit would have made him insensible to it, as he was to the Doctrine of God's Presence in every part of the World. A visible Presence of CHRIST's Humanity would doubtless be more efficacious than God's Presence; but a Presence of CHRIST's Humane Nature, as invisible as that of the Divine Nature, will soon come to the same thing. Those who believe it are not more powerfully affected with it, than the Protestants with the Doctrine of God's Presence.

(B) His Niceness about the placing of Words.] When he shews, that the Expression ought to be clear (k), he mentions several Causes of Obscurity, that are to be avoided. He says, among other things, that the Readers or Hearers ought not to be uncertain what a certain part of a Period relates to; and therefore he blames this Expression: (l) Δῆμον Ἐρεχθῆος μεγαλήτορος, ὅν ποτ᾽ Ἀθήνη θρέψε Διὸς θυγάτηρ, τέκε δὲ ζείδωρος ἄρουρα. Populum præstantis Erechthei, Pallas quem Jove nata aluit, terra edidit alma. One cannot tell, says he, whether it be the People, or Erechtheus, whom Pallas bred, and the Earth produced. He adds, that Heraclitus's Books were grown very obscure, by reason of such a frequent placing of the Words, whether the placing of Words. Here is another Proof of his good Taste: He would, not have Maxims or Sentences to appear like Flourishes in a Narrative, but to (C) be incorporated with it, in an imperceptible manner. His Book was printed at Basil, with the Latin Translation of Joachim Camerarius in the Year 1541: But the best Edition is that of Leyden 1626, in 8vo. Daniel Heinsius, who procured it, carefully revised the Latin Translation, and mended it in a great many Places.

---

* Prodicus Phocaensis apud Pausaniam l. 4. p. 159.

† Pausan. ibid.

‖ Ibid.

‖ Id. l. 9. pag. 304. & l. 10. pag. 347.

‡ Plato, de repub. lib. 10. pag. 755.

† Intitled προγυμνάσματα, Progymnasmata.

(f) Theon in progym. cap. 12. p. m. 135.

(g) Confer quæ supra in the Remark AΔ. of the Article Thales.

(h) See the 17 Ode of the 1. Book of Horace, and mind these words, Di me tuentur: Dis pietas mea, Et Musa cordi est.

(i) See the Bibliotheque Universelle tom 1. pag. 313.

(k) Theo cap. 4. pag. 46. & seq.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 47.

THEOPOMPUS, an Orator and an Historian, born in the Isle * of Chios, flourish'd in the time of Philip (A) King of Macedonia, Father of Alexander the Great. He was the most famous † of Isocrates's Scholars, and carried the ξ Prize above all the Panegyrists sent for by Mausolus. There was no considerable Town in Greece; but he harangued in it with a general Applause. It was one of the Reasons he alledged, to justify the good Opinion he had of his Merit, when, having represented the Orators of the foregoing Age as very much inferior to the Modern, he gave himself for one of the best of his Time ‡. After he had signalized himself as an (B) Orator, he began to write Histories; and made it appear, that the Study of Eloquence is a (C) good Preparative for it;

for-

ther it be that the Author was not sensible of it, or was willing it should be so. (m) Περὶ ταύτην δὲ τὴν ἀμφιβολίαν, τὰ Ἡρακλείτου τοῦ φιλοσόφου βιβλία σκοτεινὰ γέγονε, κατακόρως αὐτῇ χρησαμένου, ἤτοι ἐξεπίτηδες, ἢ καὶ δι' ἄγνοιαν. Ex hujusmodi ambiguis locutionibus Heracliti philosophi libri obscuritatem contraxere: qui ad fastidium illis, sive gnarus sive ignarus, usus est. When I consider Theon's Niceness about ambiguous Expressions, I don't know how he could find any Authors, who writ as he desired; for the greatest Masters of the Greek and Latin Tongue are full of such Ambiguities. 'Tis true, they are not so perplexing in a Piece of History or Eloquence, as in a Tract of Physicks; and that therefore the Philosopher, censured by Theon, was particularly obliged to avoid them. I have said, in another place, that the French Language is not so faulty in that respect as the Greek and Latin: But it must be confest, that even some excellent Writers do very much neglect, in that respect, the strict Rules of our Grammar. A new Theon would find many wrong Periods in their Writings.

(C) But to be incorporated with it in an imperceptible manner.] This is, without doubt, the true Sense of these Words: (o) Ὅταν μέν τι συνεχῶς ἐγκαταπλέκηται, καὶ λανθάνῃ ταῦτα γνωμικὰ, ἐπιχαρίτως πως ἡ διήγησις γίνεται. Quæ sententiosa quidem quamvis sæpe inferantur modo ne emineant, mirifice amœnam ac venustam efficiunt orationem. Petronius was of the same Mind. Read these following Words, which I take out of the Preface of a Book of M. Corbinelli. Those, who have read Livy, will be surprized to find so many Maxims in an Historian, who has but few, or scarce any, but such as those mention'd by an (1) Ancient Author, which are incorporated with the Discourse, without having a turn or appearance of Maxims. That Historian is praised in those Words for a very noble thing. Moral and Political Sentences or Reflections, not interwoven with the Thread of the Discourse, do not much deserve to be commended. 'Tis no very difficult thing to scatter 'em in that manner; but the inserting them, in the very Body of the Narrative, requires a great Art. They ought to be there like a flat Picture, and not like an Imbossed Piece of Work.

(A) Flourish'd in the time of Philip .... Father of Alexander the Great.] The Anonymous Writer, who described the Olympiads, says he flourish'd in the 93d. 'Tis a Mistake, to be found likewise in Suidas, and adopted by (a) Meursius, and (b) Vossius. It has been solidly confuted by (c) Jonsius. He quotes Diodorus Siculus (d), who observes, that the 41, 42 and 43d. Books of Theopompus's History, contain'd what pass'd in Sicily from the 3d Year of the 93d Olympiad, to the 2d Year of the 109. Is it likely, that an Author, who flourish'd in the 93d Olympiad, should have been alive (e) in the 110 Olympiad? Here is a more solid Proof. Theopompus publish'd a Letter, and some Counsels he wrote to Alexander, who did not begin to Reign till the 111 Olympiad. I pass by several other Proofs alledged by Jonsius: They might be eluded, and after all they are not more cogent than those which I have mention'd. He might have found in Photius a better Argument than any thing he alledges; for, as I have said in the Text of this Article, we read in Photius, 1. that Theopompus was but 45 Years when Alexander caused him to be re-establish'd at Chios; 2. That Ptolemy King of Egypt, was like to put him to Death. Which shews, that, far from flourishing in the 93d Olympiad, he was not born till towards the hundredth at the soonest.

(B) After he had signalized himself, as an Orator, he began to write Histories.] Quintilian makes that Observation. (f) Theopompus .... ut in historia prædictis (Herodoto & Thucydide) minor, ita Oratori magis similis, ut qui antequam est ad hoc opus sollicitatus, diu fuerit Orator. Cicero does not clash with Quintilian, when he says, that Theopompus did never plead any Cause; for many Orators of Greece never pleaded any. 'Twas Isocrates (g), who advised Theopompus to apply himself to History. The Passage quoted by me out of Cicero, might make one believe, that Theopompus and Ephorus were two Men of a like Genius, since their Master advised them to apply themselves to the same Study; but be not deceived by it: They were Men of a different Character; one wanted a Curb, and the other a Spur: Theopompus was too vehement, Ephorus wanted Activity; and therefore Isocrates used different Methods with them. (h) Hoc doctoris intelligentis est, videre quo ferat natura sua quemque, & eo duce utentem sic instituere, ut Isocratem in acerrimo ingenio Theopompi, & lenissimo Ephori dixisse traditum est, alteri se calcaria adhibere, alteri frænos. Cicero expresses this in another place better still for my Purpose; for he says, that these two Scholars were never alike. (i) Dicebat Isocrates .... se calcaribus in Ephoro, contrà autem in Theopompo frenis uti solere: alterum enim exultantem verborum audacia reprimebat, alterum cunctantem, & quasi verecundantem incitabat. Neque eos similes effecit inter se, sed tantum alteri affinxit, de altero limavit, ut id confirmaret in utroque, quod utriusque natura pateretur. Quintilian (k) relates the same thing. Others (l) make a like Observation concerning Plato, with respect to Aristotle and Xenocrates, and concerning Aristotle, with respect to Theophrastus and Callisthenes.

(C) That the Study of Eloquence is a good Preparative to write History.] 'Twas Cicero's Opinion, as it appears from these Words of Pomponius Atticus to him: (m) Potes tu profecto satisfacere in historia quippe cum sit opus, ut tibi quidem videri solet, unum hoc oratorium maxime. Nevertheless, it seems, that a Man, who has been used to compose Orations, is not well qualified to observe, in his Expressions, that grave Simplicity, which becomes the Character of an Historian. 'Tis to be feared, that his Style will be too lofty, and too full of Metaphors. But this is a much stronger Objection against those, who say, That none can be a good Historian, unless he has been a good Poet (n); which is the Opinion of some great Men. However it be, Theopompus's Style was thought to favour more of an Orator, than of an Historian, and to be like that of Isocrates, whom he had imitated. (o) Veterum hoc commune judicium est dictionem ejus oratoriæ ac imprimis Isocrateæ similiorem esse, quam historiæ. Those, who, in order to justify him, say, in a general manner, that he came nearer the Strength of Demosthenes, do not wholly remove the Difficulty; for that very thing shews, that an Oratorial Eloquence prevailed in his Historical Writings. The best thing that can be said for him is what we find in Dionysius Halicarnasseus. I shall set it down in Latin: It will appear from it, that Theopompus added to the Character of Isocrates the Strength which his Subject required, and that his Censures were as sharp as those of Demosthenes. (p) Ea forma quæ in elocutione cernitur, maxime ad similitudinem Isocrateæ accedit. Pura enim dictio, vulgaris, simplex, perspicua, sublimis, magnifica, & summam pompam præ se fert, & quadam harmonia temperata est, jucunde & suaviter fluens. Differt autem ab elocutione Isocratis in austeritate & vehementia in aliquibus; nimirum cum se in affectus concitandis dederit, & vel maxime cum urbibus & ducibus improba consilia & res gestas exprobrat atque vitio dat. Multus enim est in iis, & à Demosthenis acrimonia ne paululum quidem abest. Cicero observes, that Theopompus eclipsed the Glory of Philistus, and Thucydides, by the loftiness of his Style. (q) Ut horum concisis sententiis, interdum etiam non satis apertis cum

---

* Strabo lib. 14. pag. 444.

† [illegible] Clarissimus omnium Isocratis discipulorum. Dionys. Halicarn. epist. ad Pompeium sub fin. pag. m. 262.

ξ Aulus Gellius, lib. 10. c. 18.

‡ Photius, Biblioth. cod. 176. pag. 392.

‡ Id. ib. See the end of the last Remark.

(m) Ibid.

(o) Id. ib. pag. 63, 64.

(1) Curandum est, ne sententiæ emineant extra corpus orationis expressæ, sed intexto vestibus colore niteant. Petr. Satyric.

(a) Meursius de Archont. Athen. apud Jonsium ubi infra.

(b) Vossius de hist. Græc. lib. 4. cap. 8. pag. 459.

(c) Jonsius de script. hist. philos. pag. 45.

(d) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 16. c. 72.

(e) Theopompus's History consisted of 58 Books.

(f) Quintil. lib. 10. cap. 1. pag. m. 469.

(g) Ecl... rissim... Rhetor... efficit... duo pr... stante... genio T... pompu... Ephoru... ab Isoc... magist... impulsi... ad hist... riam co... tulerat... endo... ... Cicero de Orat. lib. 2. fol. ... D.

(h) Cicero in Brut... pag. ...

(i) Cicero de Orat. lib. 3. ... 9. C.

(k) Quintil. lib. ... cap. ... pag. ...

(l) Diog. Laertius ... Xenocr... & Theo... phrastus...

(m) Cicero de legib. lib. 1. ... init. ... 328. C. See also Cicero ... 1. de Oratore.

(n) See ... Pensées ... verses ... les Com... tes ...

(o) Vossius de hist. ... cis, p. ...

(p) Dionys. Halicarn. epist. ad Pompeium in fine, p. m. 264.

(q) Cicero in Orat... p. m. 11...

for he acquired the Reputation of a good Hiſtorian. He was beſides, very well qualified to write Hiſtory; for he boldly ſpoke (D) the Truth, and was not ſparing of his Money, when an exact Enquiry into Matters of Fact required great Expences. He is blamed for (E) his Digreſſions: And 'tis very likely, the Cenſure paſt upon him on that Account is very reaſonable, though perhaps it is not in all Reſpects ſo exact and equitable, as it ſhould be, and the Plan he laid down has not been duly conſidered. If we had his Preface, perhaps we ſhould find ſomething in it, whereby he might be juſtified in ſome meaſure; but I don't think he can be fully excuſed; no, not by ſuch Readers as have the greateſt Indulgence for the Epiſodes of Hiſtorians. Much leſs could he expect to have the Approbation cum brevitate, tum ſimilis acumine, efficit Theopompus elatione atque altitudine orationis ſuæ, quod idem Lyſiæ Demoſthenes: ſic Catonis luminibus obſtruxit hæc poſteriorum quaſi exaggerata altius oratio. But there is one thing, in which he ſhewed himſelf too much an Orator: He carefully avoided the meeting of Vowels, and was extremely fond of the Turn and Cadence of his Periods, and of the Correſpondence of Grammatical Figures. 'Tis a Fault, for which Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus blames (r) him; and there is ſomething mean in ſuch an Affectation, when the Sublimity and Majeſty of the Subject ought to take up the whole Attention of the Writer. However, it may be ſaid, as to what concerns the meeting of Vowels, that he did not amiſs in avoiding it, and that he was only to blame for diſcovering to the Reader that he avoided it too ſcrupulouſly. I obſerve, that when Cicero ſays, Theopompus was blamed upon that Account, he does not ſay he was juſtly blamed: Nay, he ſeems to ſay, that there was no occaſion for it. Ut in legendo, ſays he (ſ), ſic animus in dicendo proſpiciet quid ſequatur, ne extremorum verborum cum inſequentibus primis concurſus, aut hiulcas voces efficiat, aut aſperas. Quamvis enim ſuaves, graveſve ſententiæ, tamen ſi inconditis verbis efferuntur, offendent aures, quarum eſt judicium ſuperbiſſimum. Quod quidem latina lingua ſic obſervat, nemo ut tam ruſticus ſit, qui vocales nolit conjungere. In quo quidem etiam Theopompum reprehendunt, quod eas literas tantopere fugeret, & ſi id magiſter ejus Iſocrates, at non Thucydides...... In ea eſt crebra iſta vocum concurſio, quam magna ex parte, ut vitioſam, fugit Demoſthenes. Duris Samius ſpoke of Theopompus's Style with great contempt; but, as Photius (t) obſerves, he was far from equalling him. Conſult Longinus in two Places of his Tract de ſublimi dicendi genere: He commends and juſtifies him in the one, and cenſures him in the other. Which may be further ſeen, ſays he (v), "in a Paſſage of Theopompus, which Cæcilius blames I "know not why. I think on the contrary that it ought "to be praiſed for its juſtneſs, and becauſe it is very ex"preſſive. Philip, ſays that Hiſtorian, eaſily puts up all "the Affronts, which the Neceſſity of his affairs obliges him "to ſuffer." There is in the Greek δεινὸς ὢν ὁ Φίλιππος ἀναγκοφαγῆσαι πράγματα. Tanaquillus Faber renders theſe Words: Philippus rerum neceſſitatem devorare callidus. The other Paſſage of Longinus begins thus: "(a) In "like manner, the Hiſtorian Theopompus made a Deſcrip"tion of the King of Perſia's Deſcent into Ægypt, which "is otherwiſe wonderful; but he ſpoils all by the mean "Words he intermixes with it. Is there any Town, and "Nation in Aſia, ſays that Hiſtorian, but what ſent Am"baſſadors to the King? &c." Longinus, having mention'd the remaining part of the Deſcription, adds: "From "the higheſt Elevation he falls into the loweſt Meanneſs, "in the very Place where he ſhould have been moſt lofty: "For the Buſhels, Ragoo's, and Sacks, which he impro"perly mentions in the pompous Deſcription of thoſe "Preparations, would make one think that he deſcribes "a Kitchin." The Jeſuit Cauſſin, who was a good Judge of Rhetorick, does not approve that Cenſure. Theſe are his Words. (b) Dionyſ. Longinus, mordax Criticus, eum irridet, quod ubi dona Regi Perſarum ab Aſiaticis oblata commemorat, poſt ſtragulam veſtem, purpuram, tabernacula aurea, periſtromata, emblemata, carnes etiam victimarum ſalſas, regi oblatas ad alendum exercitum, commemoret. Debebat, inquit, iſta minuta, aut omittere, aut initio collocare, ut à minoribus ad majora aſcenderet: ſed in eo frigidus eſt, & fruſtra mordax Longinus. Erat enim fidelis hiſtorici, & prudentis, poſt opulenta principum dona, tenuiorum quoque in colendo rege ſtudia commemorare, & rem, ut geſta eſt, deſcribere. Quod ſi tantopere petaſonem averſatur, quin Homerum, ſuum numen, reprehendit, qui tam ſimpliciter rem coquinariam à principibus obitam deſcribit: & quid hoc eſt, niſi μαγειρεία, quod inſectatur in Theopompo, φαντασία eſt? This ſeems to me to be the moſt plauſible thing that can be ſaid in Theopompus's Vindication; but if I was to chuſe, I ſhould rather ſide with Longinus than with Father Cauſſin: For the Faithfulneſs of an Hiſtorian does not oblige him to give a particular Account of all the Preſents that were made to a King. But what is ſaid againſt Longinus in the laſt part of Father Cauſſin's Words, ſeems to me a Home-Argument. You cannot, ſays he, find Fault with Theopompus, without blaming Homer your great Deity. 'Tis certain, that Homer has given a particular Account of Things relating to a Kitchin, &c. more frequently than Theopompus.

(D) He boldly ſpoke the Truth, and was not ſparing of his Money.] See hereafter the Remark H. I ſhall only ſet down here theſe Words of Athenæus. (c) Εἰ δὲ τις τοῦτο ἀπιστεῖ, μαθέτω καὶ παρὰ Θεοπόμπου τοῦ Χίου, ἀνδρὸς φιλαλήθους καὶ πολλὰ χρήματα καταναλώσαντος εἰς τὴν περὶ ἱστορίας ἐξέτασιν ἀκριβῆ. His fidem ſi quis non adhibeat, diſcat Theopompum Chium veritatis ſtudioſum hominem, & qui hiſtoriæ exactâ inquiſitione, magno pecuniarum impendio, perſcrutatus eſt.

(E) He is blamed for his Digreſſions.] The Sophiſt Theon (d) ſays they were ſo long, that any one who read them, did quite forget what went before. It muſt be confeſt, that it is an unpleaſant thing to thoſe who read a Work of that Nature. Photius, intending to ſhew how Theopompus launch'd into Matters foreign to his Subject, tells us the following Particulars. His Hiſtory of Philip, King of Macedonia, contain'd 58 Books, which were reduced to 16; when every thing, that had no relation to the Hiſtory of that Prince, was left out. (e) Πλείσταις μὲν παρεκβάσεσι παντοδαπῆς ἱστορίας, τοὺς ἱστορικοὺς αὐτοῦ λόγους Θεόπομπος παρατείνει. διὸ καὶ Φίλιππος ὁ πρὸς Ῥωμαίους πολεμήσας, ἐξελὼν ταύτας, καὶ τὰς Φιλίππου συνταξάμενος πράξεις, αἳ σκοπὸς εἰσὶ Θεοπόμπῳ, εἰς ἑκκαίδεκα βίβλους μόνας, μηδὲν παρ' ἑαυτοῦ προσθεὶς ἢ ἀφελών, πλὴν (ὡς εἴρηται) τῶν παρεκτροπῶν, τὰς πάσας ἀπήρτισε. Digreſſionibus itaque variæ hiſtoriæ quamplurimis, hiſtoricos ſuos implet libros Theopompus. Quamobrem & Philippus, ille qui cum Romanis bellum geſſit, digreſſionibus hiſce ſublatis, & Philippi rebus geſtis, quas Theopompus ſcribendas potiſſimum ſuſceperat, collectis, in ſedecim eas dumtaxat libros (nihil de ſuo addens, aut præter digreſſiones, ut diximus, detrahens) redegit. If you mind the Extracts, which the ſame Author gives us (f) of the 12th Book of Theopompus's Hiſtory, you'll be fully convinced that he loved to depart from his main Subject. I muſt obſerve, that if any thing can make us believe, that the Roman Name was ſcarce known to the Greeks in Alexander's Time, 'tis this, that Theopompus (g) ſays nothing of Rome, except, that it had been taken by the Gauls. Rome would have afforded him Matter for a long Digreſſion, had it been known never ſo little at that time.

Perhaps we may juſtly ſuſpect, that Photius's Account is ſomewhat fallacious. Theopompus began his Hiſtory with the Reign of King Philip, and his main Deſign was to relate the Actions of that Prince; but perhaps he intended at the ſame time to give an Account of the moſt remarkable Tranſactions in the other Parts of the World during that Reign. If it be ſo, that Work would have been an Univerſal Hiſtory of that Time, and not that of Philip in particular; and conſequently what was left out, when it was reduced to ſixteen Books, ſhould not be look'd upon as Digreſſions, properly ſo called. The Wars of Cyprus and Sicily, and many others were left out, which perhaps he did not mention occaſionally, and by way of Digreſſion, but as an eſſential part of his Deſign. 'Tis impoſſible to decide the Matter, ſince we have neither his Preface, nor any other Part of his Work. However, I believe, that Photius ſtretch'd the thing too far; and if I was to complain of Theopompus's Digreſſions, I would not inſiſt, as Theon (h) does, upon his relating many things, wherein neither the King of Macedonia, nor any of his Subjects, had a hand. Can it be denied, that the main Deſign of Thuanus was to write the Hiſtory of France? And yet how many Things does he relate, that have no relation to the French? I would therefore blame Theopompus for putting a wrong Title (i) to his Work; but if he had acquainted his Readers that he intended likewiſe to write the Hiſtory of other Countries, I would not call his Account of the Wars of Evagoras, and of the Tyrants of Syracuſa, a Digreſſion. In order to paſs a right Judgment upon his Epiſodes, I would not compare them with Philip or Macedonia, I would go no further than this: His twelfth Book, for Inſtance (k), was deſign'd for the Wars of Cyprus; He goes back as far as the Siege of Troy; he ſpeaks of Agamemnon, and Mopſus the Soothſayer, &c. Does what he ſays of 'em carry me too far from

(c) Athen. lib. 3. c. 8. pag. 85. Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, ubi ſupra, pag. 264. praiſes that Author for the Pains and Charges he was at in collecting Materials.

(d) Theo. in progymnaſmatis: I have quoted his Words in the Remark E of the Article Philiſtus.

(e) Photius ubi ſupra, pag. 393.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 390, 391.

(g) Theopompus ante quem nemo mentionem habuit (de Romanis) urbem duntaxat à Gallis captam dixit. Plinius lib. 3. c. 5. pag. m. 324.

(h) Theo. in progymn. cap. 4. pag. 44, 45.

(i) It was intitled, τὰ Φιλιππικά. Res Philippi.

(k) Photius ubi ſupra.

bation of (F) those Criticks, who cannot bear any thing in History that is Foreign to the Subject. He is also blamed for his many Fabulous Stories, and long (G) Speeches, and (H) for being too Satyrical. They put a base Trick upon him by publishing in his Name, and in a Style altogether like his, a History wherein the most considerable Republicks of Greece from Evagoras King of Cyprus? If it be so, I blame him, but I would not approve those who should complain, that Mopsus and Agamemnon carry them too far from the Court of Macedonia. I am of Opinion, that this Restriction would not be sufficient to justify that Historian. Doubtless, he ran too frequently into Episodes, wherein he forgot himself. That Fault is a new Reason for us to lament the Loss of his History; for since the only Design of his Digressions was to explain Antiquities, to relate the Origine of Things, and different Traditions, how many Curiosities should we find in it, that are now unknown to us, and which we could not have found in a close History?

(F) Of those Criticks, who cannot bear any thing in a History that is Foreign to the Subject.] How could Theopompus appear before their Tribunal, and expect any Favour from them, since they have past a Sentence of Condemnation upon Tacitus? The first thing they do, is to lay down these Rules, That an Historian ought to make it his only Business to tell the Truth, and to distinguish Matters of Fact; that he ought to renounce his own Taste, and to neglect Foreign Ornaments, which neither contribute to make things clearer, nor occasion a greater Knowledge of Matters concealed.... that his Narratives ought to be coherent, his Computations exact, and his Reflections short and few; that History ought to contain the Prince's Actions, and the Alterations that happen'd in his Dominions, during his Reign; that Foreign Digressions and study'd Discourses are not proper for it, and ought to be laid aside. Afterwards they pretend, "(b) That if Tacitus were examined "according to these Rules, it will not appear that "he intended to write an History: Any one may easily "observe, as well as the Learned, that he frequently "leaves the Thread of his Narration without resuming it, to describe a Battle, or to introduce his Heroes making long Speeches. Being affected with the "Excellency of this sort of Performances, he sometimes "leaves his own Country to make Excursions into a Foreign one, on purpose to describe the Beauties of it. "Wherein I think he shows himself an Orator more "than any thing else, and that he did not so much design to write a faithful History, as to exercise his Eloquence..... (d) I am therefore of Opinion, that Tacitus touch'd upon History occasionally; and that "his only Design was to exercise his Eloquence several "ways.... (e) Indeed every thing in Tacitus speaks "his Character, and not that of History. He seldom "relates Events; he makes long and frequent Digressions, and his Carelesness and Affectation are too apparent. He acts the Part of an Orator who is resolved "to applaud himself, and who turns and handles different Facts to his Advantage.... (f) Dying Men make "Speeches in their very Tents with the Niceness, and "all the Presence of Mind of a Man in Health, who "writes in his Closet: Nay, he has such an Itch of "Speaking that he does not stay till a General of an "Army is at the Head of his Troops to harangue them, "but makes him write Orders like a School-Master, full "of Antitheses and Rhetorical Figures."

I believe this Judgment upon Tacitus will appear unjust and extravagant to good Judges; and it had been well for Theopompus, if all those, who criticized him, had been like the Author of these Passages. He would have been condemn'd without Mercy, and in a very insulting Manner; but he might have answered, that his Judges went upon strain'd Maxims, and he might have come off by saying, that all Historians were involved in the same Censure, as well as he, and that consequently it is false and over-nice.

(G) He is also blamed for his many Fabulous Stories, and long Speeches.] As to the Fabulous Stories, which Theopompus inserted in his Work, I shall quote Cicero's Testimony. (h) Intelligo te alias in historia leges servandas putare, alias in poemate: quippe quum in illa ad veritatem quæque referantur, in hac ad delectationem pleraque: quamquam & apud Herodotum patrem historiæ & apud Theopompum sint innumerabiles fabulæ. Dionysius Halicarnasseus mentions two absurd Tales of that Historian. (i) Multas ineptias præ se fert ex quo genere illa sunt quæ de Sileno commemorat qui in Macedonia apparuit, & quæ de dracone ad triremem pugna navali contendente & alia nonnulla iis similia. I cannot tell whether what is said of Silenus's Apparition, is the same thing with the Dialogue of Silenus and Midas. It is to be found in Ælian (k), as taken from Theopompus. 'Tis an Adventure, which appears so fabulous to Ælian, that he concludes the Recital of it with these Words. (l) Καὶ ταῦτα εἴ τῳ πιςὸς ὁ Χῖος λέγων, πεπιςεύσθω. ἐμοὶ δὲ δεινὸς εἶναι δοκεῖ μυθολόγος, καὶ ἐν τούτοις, καὶ ἐν ἄλλοις δέ. Hæc si cui fide dignus videtur Chius, (that is, Theopompus) credat. Mihi egregius fabulator tum in his, tum in aliis videtur. It may be question'd whether Dionysius meant that Dialogue, for he speaks only of the Fables inserted in Theopompus's History, and Servius (m) informs us, that Theopompus had related that Story in a Book intitled, Thaumasia, Wonderful things. But this doubt is not built upon a solid Foundation; for that Historian might have repeated in his History what he had said in another Book, or might have adorned his Thaumasia with some Pieces of his History.

We must not reckon among Theopompus's Fables his (n) Geographical Mistakes, or the Falsities grounded upon some Relations, which it was a hard Matter for him to rectify. The Falsities vented by him concerning the Ægyptians (o), ought to be placed in this last Class.

Here is a Touch upon the Length of his Harangues. "(p) But as for those Rhetorical Flourishes and Harangues of Ephorus, Theopompus, and Anaximenes, "which they made after they had arm'd, and set in "order the Battalions, it may be said of 'em, None talks thus foolishly so near the Sword.

(H) He is also blamed.... for being too Satyrical.] Vossius (q) quotes three Authors for it, viz. (r) Cornelius Nepos, Lucian and Josephus. The latter (s) observes, that Theopompus defamed the Athenians. The Words of the second deserve to be set down. He says, that the Historians, who insert Speeches in their Histories, ought to be sparing of their Praises and Censures, and remember they are not at the Bar; otherwise they will be guilty of Theopompus's Fault. (t) Τὴν αὐτὴν Θεοπόμπῳ αἰτίαν ἕξεις, φιλαπεχθημόνως κατηγοροῦντι τῶν πλείςων, καὶ διατριβὴν ποιουμένῳ τὸ πρᾶγμα, ὡς κατηγορεῖν μᾶλλον, ἢ ἱςορεῖν τὰ πεπραγμένα. Alioqui in eadem eris culpa qua Theopompus, qui plurimos odiosè nimis accusat, & eam rem in studium quoddam vertit, ut accuset magis, quam res gestas historia tradat. Vossius might have also quoted Plutarch, who (v) says, that Theopompus is more to be credited when he praises than when he censures. Dionysius Halicarnasseus takes Theopompus's part on this Head: He compares him with Physicians, who launce and cauterize the infected part to the Quick, but without hurting the Parts that are sound. (w) Proinde etiam obtrectator videtur esse, dum nonnullos debitis convitiis afficit, & facta virorum illustrium non necessaria perstringit: simile quiddam faciens ac medici, qui corruptas corporis partes secant & urunt, quam profundissime cauteria & sectiones immittentes, non tamen sanas corporis partes & bene affectas attingunt. Take notice, that Theopompus did not spare the Divine Plato (x): Which can be no wonder, since he gave a very ill Character of Philip of Macedonia. The Description he made of the Court of that Prince (y) contains more Abominations than were ascribed to that of Henry III. King of France by the anonymous Writers of Libels. 'Tis further said, that after he had very much praised Alexander the Great, he contradicted it by some injurious Writings. (z) Pulsus è patria quum supplex in Dianæ Ephesiæ templum confugisset multa contra Chios scripsit ad Alexandrum in quibus illum laudavit: sed postea παλινῳδίαν cecinit. Nam dicitur in eundem postea scripsisse quamvis quod scripsit in manus hominum non videatur venisse. The sharp Style of Theopompus is hinted at in the following Words of Cicero: (aa) ἀνέκδοτα quæ tibi uni legantur, Theopompino genere aut etiam asperiore multo pangentur. That Writer began to set up for a Critick in the very Preface (bb) of his History, for he censured in it the other Historians.

If what I have read in an Epistle Dedicatory be true, viz. that King Philip was very liberal to Theopompus, it must be acknowledged that he made an ill use of his Money. (cc) Celebratur multorum literis ac libris principum quorundam benignitas in viros literatos, ut Dionysii in Platonem, Philippi in Theopompum, Alexandri in Aristotelem, Severi in Oppianum. I could easily believe, that Philip made some Presents to Theopompus; for 'tis certain, Theopompus composed a Panegyrick upon that King; and that, among other Praises, he bestowed this upon him, That King needs only go on as he has begun,

to

(l) Anonymiana, pag. 13.

(b) Ibid. pag. 14, 15.

(d) Ibid. pag. 22.

(e) Ibid. pag. 23.

(f) Ibid. pag. 24.

(h) Cicero, de legibus lib. 1. circa init. fol. m. 328. C.

(i) Dionys. Halicarn. ubi supra in fine pag. m. 264.

(k) Ælian var. histor. lib. 3. cap. 18. pag. m. 200. See Casaubon upon Strabo, lib. 7. pag. m. 112.

(aa) Cicero, epist. 6. lib. 2. ad Atticum, pag. m. 209. (bb) D Halicarn. in Præfat. Histor. (cc) Francisc. Duarenus epist. ad garitam Valesiam Henrici II. sororem præfixa commentariis in Tit. matrimonio.

Greece (I) were reflected upon. 'Tis (K) pity none of his Books should be extant; for the Notion a great † Critick gives of 'em, shews, that the Loss of 'em is to be lamented. He says, that Theopompus enquired into the secret Causes of Things, and into the Motives of those who perform'd them; that he β was very lucky in his Guesses, and γ unmask'd those who concealed real Vices under the appearance of Virtue: So that his History was a Tribunal where every Man's Conduct was examin'd with all the Exactness ascrib'd by the Poets to the Infernal Judges. I omit the other Praises bestowed upon him by the same Critick. You'll see in the Remark C what Judgment has been made of Theopompus's Style. What is quoted out of his Works by Athenæus is sufficient to make us lament the Loss of 'em. It has been ♁ observed, that there were some Things in that Author not to be found in any other Writer. All that I can say concerning his Life is only this. He ξ fled from Chio with his Father, who was convicted of favouring the Lacedemonians. He was recall'd into his Country after the Death of his Father, by Virtue of a Letter, which Alexander writ in his behalf: He was then 46 Years of Age. He found himself obliged, after the Death of Alexander, to wander up and down like a Fugitive; and being gone into Egypt, he found no Refuge there, and even would have lost his Life had not his Friends interceeded for him with King Ptolemy, who design'd to put him to Death, because he * concern'd himself with too many Things. He was ‡ an Eye-Witness of several Events related by him, and he insinuated himself into the Favour of many Persons, who commanded Armies, or managed State-Affairs: Which he did, looking upon it as a thing that would very much contribute to the Perfection of his Work. He had some Contestations ↓ with his Countryman Theocritus about the Government of the Town. I don't find that he deserv'd the Encomium of being a Peripatetick (L) Philosopher, bestowed upon him by † Dionys. Halicarn. ubi supra, pag. 263, 264. See also pag. 101.

β Idem, pag. 101.
γ Idem, pag. 264.
♁ Plutarch in Agesilao, p. 614. C.
ξ Photius, ubi supra.
* Ὡς τὰ πολυπράγμονα ἀνελεῖν θέλοντα. Velut nimis curiosum de medio tollere voluisse. Id. ibid.
‡ Dionys. Halicarn. ubi supra, pag. 263.
↓ Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 444. See also Athenæus, B. 6. pag. 230.

to make himself Master of all Europe. (dd) Καὶ ὡς Θεόπομπος ἐν τῷ Φιλίππου ἐγκωμίῳ. ὅτι εἰ βουληθείη Φίλιππος τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἐπιτηδεύμασιν ἐμμένειν, καὶ τῆς Εὐρώπης πάσης βασιλεύσει. Et quemadmodum in Philippi Laudatione Theopompus, Philippum, si pergere, ut instituisset, suique esse similis vellet, totius Europæ imperio mox potiturum. Theon, from whom I have those Words, says in another Place (a), that Theopompus's Panegyricks upon Philip and Alexander were still extant. Those two Pieces made no part of his History: Doubtless he writ 'em as an Orator; and though he had been rewarded for 'em, he altered his Note in his History; he spoke ill of the same Prince, whom he had so much praised. The Orator had acted his Part; the Historian succeeded him and kept up his Character. The Discourses of a Panegyrist have no Influence upon his Conversation, or upon the Moral and Historical Books he writes. Such a Difference may be observed even at this Day. A Man, who, on a Solemn Day, as, for Instance, when Prizes are distributed, bestows noble and magnificent Encomiums, will not spare his Censures sitting by the Fire-side; and, though he enjoys still his Pension, he will say many unacceptable Things, if he is an Historian. I don't say that every Body does the same. There are but too many, who prove as great Flatterers in their Histories as in their Panegyricks. But Theopompus took another Course, and some others are like him in that respect.

(I) By publishing in his Name, and in a Style .... a History, wherein the .... Republicks .... were reflected upon.] Anaximenes, his Enemy, put that Trick upon him, as we read in Pausanias, who, if I am not mistaken, is the only Author that mentions it. These are his Words: (b) Φαίνεται δὲ καὶ ἄνδρα ὁ Ἀναξιμένης ἐχθρὸν ἐκ ἀμαθέστατα, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπιφθονώτατα ἀμυνάμενος. Ἐπεφύκει μὲν αὐτὸς σοφιστὴς, καὶ σοφιστῶν λόγους μιμεῖσθαι. ὡς δὲ οἱ διάφορα ἐς Θεόπομπον ἐγεγόνει τὸν Δαμασιστράτου, γράφει βιβλίον ἐς Ἀθηναίους, καὶ ἐπὶ Λακεδαιμονίους ὁμοῦ καὶ Θηβαίους συγγραφὴν λοίδορον. ὡς δὲ ἦν ἐς τὸ ἀκριβέστατον αὐτῷ μεμιμημένα, ἐπιγράψας τοῦ Θεοπόμπου τὸ ὄνομα τῷ βιβλίῳ, διέπεμπεν ἐς τὰς πόλεις. καὶ αὐτός τε συγγεγραφὼς ἦν, καὶ τὸ ἔχθος τὸ ἐς Θεόπομπον ἀνὰ πᾶσαν τὴν Ἑλλάδα ἐπηύξητο. Idem etiam Anaximenes inimicum suum non minus vafre quam invidiose ultus dicitur. Nam qui ingenio sophista esset, quum sophistarum orationem aptissime imitaretur, suscepta cum Theopompo Damasistrati filio simultate, historiam conscripsit maledictorum in Athenienses, Lacedamonios, & Thebanos plenissimam. Ad unguem vero quum Theopompi stylum expressisset, supposito ejus nomine, per Græcia civitates librum divulgandum curavit: quæ res Theopompo magnam apud omnes plane Græcos invidiam concitavit.

(K) That none of his Books should be extant. He publish'd many (c) Orations, and (d) Letters. He writ one to Alexander (e), and another to the Inhabitants of Chio (f), which are quoted by Athenæus. He also wrote (g) some Counsels to that Prince. His Treatise (h), περὶ τῶν συληθέντων ἐκ Δελφῶν χρημάτων: de rebus quæ sacrilegio ex Delphis surrepta sunt; and that (i) κατὰ τῆς Πλάτωνος διατριβῆς: de exercitationibus Platonis, are quoted by the same Author. His Dissertation περὶ εὐσεβείας, de Pietate, is quoted by the Scholiast (k) upon Aristophanes. Others (l) quote his Θαυμάσια, admiranda; but his chief Works were two Histories: One was that of Greece (m) in twelve Books, containing the Transactions of seventeen Years, beginning where Thucydides left off. It ended with the Sea-fight at Cnidus. The other was intitled Φιλιππικά, because it was design'd to represent the Reign of Philip King of Macedonia. It (n) contain'd fifty-eight Books, whereof the sixth, seventh, ninth, twentieth and thirtieth, had been lost for a long time, when Photius read the rest. He gives us some Extracts of the twelfth, though Menophanes, an ancient Author, thought it was lost. (o) Diodorus Siculus, and the anonymous Author, who described the Olympiads, mention the Loss of five Books of Theopompus. It were in vain to alledge against 'em, that the fifty-fifth and fifty-seventh Books are quoted by Stephanus Byzantinus, and the fifty-sixth by Athenæus. Those (p), who raise this Objection, would not urge it, if they knew what Photius observes, that most of the five Books, not extant, were nearer the Beginning than the End of the Work.

Vossius (q) says, that Harpocration quotes a Letter of Theopompus to Tisamenes. 'Tis a Mistake: Harpocration quotes a Dramatick Piece written by Theopompus, the Comick Poet, and intitled Tisamenes (r).

(L) The Encomium of being a Peripatetick Philosopher, bestowed upon him by Grotius.] The Resurrection of a dead Body, says he, ought not to be accounted an impossible thing, since some Learned Men, Zoroaster among the Chaldeans, and the greatest part of the Stoicks, and Theopompus among the Peripateticks, believed the Possibility of it, and that it would effectually happen. This is what he says in the Text of the second Book (s) of his Treatise de veritate religionis Christianæ. His Note concerning Theopompus runs thus: (t) De quo Diogenes Laertius initio (v) libri. Καὶ Θεόπομπος ἐν τῇ ὀγδόῃ τῶν Φιλιππικῶν ὃς καὶ ἀναβιώσεσθαι κατὰ τοὺς μάγους φησὶ τοὺς ἀνθρώπους καὶ ἔσεσθαι ἀθανάτους, καὶ τὰ ὄντα ταῖς αὐταῖς διακλήσεσι διαμενεῖν. Theopompus vero etiam octavo Philippicorum, qui revicturos homines ex magorum sententia tradit, immortalésque futuros, & omnia in suis iisdem semper mansura nominibus. Grotius means Theopompus the Historian, who makes the Subject of this Article. But I don't remember I ever read, that he was placed among the Philosophers; and I think he was too proud to learn of Aristotle in an Age so far advanced. But if this Fault of Grotius could be excused, he would be liable to Censure upon another Account; for what he quotes out of Diogenes Laertius signifies only that Theopompus mention'd in his History the Opinion of the Magi, concerning the Resurrection. Let us suppose Theopompus to have been a very illustrious Peripatetick, will it follow from his Passage, alledged by Diogenes Laertius, that a famous Disciple of the great Aristotle believed, that Men would rise again. Do Historians believe what-Christ. pag. m. 381. (v) Pag. 7. of the Amsterdam Edition, 1692.

---

d) Theon.
supra,
. 8.
. 103.

) Theon.
supra,
. 2.
. 19.

) Pausan.
. 6. pag.
6. edit.
96.

) Photius
supra.
. 392
) Dionys.
licarn.
st. ad
mpeium, fine.
) Athen.
. 13.
. 595.
) Id ib.
. 586.
) Id. lib.
p. 230.
) Id. lib.
p. 604.
) Id. lib.
p. 508.

(k) Schol. Arist. in aves.
(l) Apollonius histor. commentit. cap. 10. Laertius in Epimenide & Pherecyde. Servius, ubi supra.
(m) Anonym. in descript. Olymp. apud Vossium, ubi supra, pag. 32.
(n) Photius ubi supra, pag. 389.
(o) Diodor. Siculus, l. 16. c. 3.
(p) Jonsius de script. hist. philos. p. 46. raises it.
(q) Vossius ubi supra, pag. 31.
(r) See Maussac's Notes upon Harpocration, voce καταπλήξ.
(s) Pag. m. 64, 65.
(t) Hugo Grotius in annotatis ad librum 2. de veritate relig.

by Grotius. I ſhall ſay nothing of the Puniſhment mention'd by Ariſteas; Moreri ſpeaks ſufficiently of it. To conclude, Theopompus was accuſed of (M) being a Plagiary.

THERON (VITAL) a French Jeſuit, was born at Limoux in Languedoc in the Year 1572. He turn'd Jeſuit in 1587. He taught Rhetorick, Philoſophy, and Moral Divinity, and profeſs'd the fourth Vow. He preach'd in the moſt conſiderable Towns of France for the ſpace of fifty Years. He was Rector of the Colledge of Montauban, and Provincial of the Province of Toulouſe *. He publiſh'd at ſeveral times many Latin Verſes, that were very much eſteem'd; and thoſe he made in his old Age were ſo good, that his (A) Poetical Vein did not ſeem to be weaken'd. Balzac commended him mightily for it: He was miſtaken as to the Age (B) he aſcribed to him. That † Jeſuit died at Toulouſe the 25th of February 1657.

THES.

whatever they relate? If M. de Cordemoi, who was a Carteſian, had inſerted in his Hiſtory a Doctrine of the ancient Druids, might it be concluded from thence, that this Doctrine was believed among the Carteſians? This is certainly a very weak Paſſage in the Learned Commentary, which Grotius added to his excellent Book concerning the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion.

(M) Theopompus was accuſed of being a Plagiary.] 'Tis ſaid (a), that he inſerted Word for Word in the Eleventh Book of his Φιλιππικῶν, a long Paſſage of an Oration of Iſocrates; that upon other occaſions, in order to hide his Robberies, he changed the Scene and the Names of the Perſons; that, for Inſtance, he related, that Pherecydes having drunk of the Water of a Well in a Town of Syria, foretold an Earthquake which happen'd three Days after; and that he took that courſe becauſe he was ſenſible, that if he had mention'd that Earthquake, as a thing foretold by Pythagoras, in the Town of Metapontum, the Readers would have known that he had it from a Book (b) of Andron. 'Tis further ſaid, that he ſtole many things from Xenophon, and ſpoiled them: For intending to inſert in the Eleventh Book of his Hiſtory of Greece the Conference of Pharnabazus and Ageſilaus, ſo well deſcribed by Xenophon, he deprived it of its Energy. He would not uſe the Words of Xenophon, becauſe he was willing to conceal his Pilfering, and beſides to adorn the Matter in his own way; but he miſcarried in it: His Narration was languiſhing, dull and heavy, whereas that of Xenophon was bright and lively. (c) Τὰ γοῦν περὶ τὴν Φαρναβάζου πρὸς Ἀγησίλαον σύνοδον ..... εἰς τὴν ἑνδεκάτην τῶν Ἑλληνικῶν μεταθεὶς ὁ Θεόπομπος, ἀργά τε καὶ ἀκίνητα πεποίηκε καὶ ἄπρακτα. λόγου γὰρ δύναμιν, καὶ διὰ τὴν κλοπὴν, ἐξεργασίαν ἐμβάλλειν, καὶ ἐπιδείκνυσθαι σπουδάζων, βραδὺς καὶ μέλλων, καὶ ἀναβαλλομένῳ ἐοικὼς φαίνεται, καὶ τὸ ἔμψυχον καὶ ἐνεργὸν τὸ Ξενοφῶντος διαφθείρων. Nam illum ſane Pharnabazi cum Ageſilao congreſſum .... in Græcarum hiſtoriarum undecimum tranſtulit Theopompus: verum ita quidem, ut omnia ſine vi, ſine motu, habere prorſus ac jacere videantur. Dum enim is, ut plagium diſſimulet, dicendi facultatem oſtentare geſtit, & elaboratæ dictionis cultum aſſuere, tardus, cunctabundus, ac procraſtinanti ſimilis videtur, adeoque vivam illam ac ſpirantem Xenophontis efficacitatem elidit. Laſtly, we are told of a Book (d) intitled ἰχνευταὶ, indagatores, which contain'd many ſuch things concerning Theopompus.

I muſt obſerve, by the by, that if Theopompus falſified what he ſtole from Andron, it affords us an Example of what is ſaid, that Falſhood makes a greater Progreſs than Truth. Many grave (e) Writers aſcribe the Prediction to Pherecydes.

I muſt not forget, that Porphyrius accuſes him alſo of preferring himſelf to Iſocrates, and of boaſting that he had the better of him in a Trial of Eloquence upon Mauſolus's Tomb. (f) Καίτοι ὑπερφρονεῖ τὸν Ἰσοκράτην καὶ νενικῆσθαι ὑφ' ἑαυτοῦ λέγει, καὶ τὸν ἐπὶ Μαυσώλῳ ἀγῶνα, τὸν διδάσκαλον. Iſocratem interea deſpicit, eoque certamine, quod in Mauſoli honorem inſtitutum eſt, victum abs ſeſe Magiſtrum. Photius ſhould have mention'd this Particular among thoſe of the ſame Nature related by him. I can't tell why he has omitted it. He ſays, Theopompus relates, that Iſocrates, Theodectes, Naucrates, and himſelf, were (g) at that time four of the greateſt Orators in Greece; that Iſocrates and Theodectes, being Poor, made Orations for Money, and kept School to get a Lively-hood; but that He and Naucrates, having wherewithal to live handſomely, ſpent all their leiſure Time in Study. The Tranſlator does not well expreſs the Senſe of theſe Words: (h) καὶ ὡς οὐκ ἂν εἴη αὐτῷ παράλογον, ἀντιποιουμένῳ τῶν πρωτείων. He pretends the Meaning of it is, (i) It ought not be thought ſtrange that I ſhould place my ſelf in the firſt Rank. Theopompus was not ſo proud; he only ſays, that he may reckon himſelf among the firſt without being guilty of Raſhneſs. This is a great Piece of Vanity, and it needs not be encreaſed by an unfaithful Tranſlation.

(A) That his Poetical Vein did not ſeem to be weaken'd. Balzac commended him mightily for it.] Here follow ſome Thoughts of Balzac, taken from a Letter written by him to Father Theron, the fourth of March 1643. (k) The Winters of Naples, full of Light, and crown'd with Roſes, are a lively Image of your old Age. That of Maſſiniſſa was not ſo briſk and vigorous; and the Child he got at Fourſcore Years of Age was not a Production comparable to the Poem you have made at Seventy-five. Which ſhews, that the Fire that comes down from Heaven, by way of Inſpiration, is not extinguiſh'd by the Abatement of Natural Heat, and if Art has found out the Invention of inextinguiſhable Lamps, the Maſter of Art may no doubt preſerve the igneous Part of our Minds, and the Quickneſs of their Motion .... I muſt contradict a wrong Propoſition, which I advanced formerly as a certain Truth, That there is no fine old Age. I deſire you would excuſe this raſh Saying. I did not know then your Muſe, which ſhews the Falſity of my Propoſition, and runs down a Proverb I expected to put in Vogue. The old Age of your Muſe is not the Decay, but the Confirmation of her Beauty .... Had I the Courage of the Authors of your Country, I would ſay a great deal more upon it: I would ſay, at leaſt, of that admirable old Woman, that, though ſhe is as old as Hecuba, ſhe has as many Lovers as Helena had in the Flower of her Youth. I could name a great many, who burn in Paris, and ſigh on this ſide of the Loire. In order to give ſome Weight to thoſe Encomiums, I muſt obſerve, that Balzac praiſed Father Theron very much in the Letters which that Jeſuit did not read. He writ the following Paſſage to his Friend Chapelain. " (l) Since you deſire to know the Chara" cter of Father Theron, whom I thought you knew " better than I do, I muſt tell you that he is a Poet
" above Seventy-five Years old. Soon after the " King's Birth he made two Poems in ſhort Verſes,
" which I take to be Glyconick; and the late King,
" to whom they were praiſed, ordered Motin to " tranſlate them. They are intitled, les Couronnes &
" les Dauphins, and have been printed in Latin and " French. They are two valuable Pieces, and I am
" ſure you'll be pleas'd with them I have ſeen ſome o" ther things of his, wherein I have obſerved an ex" cellent Genius; but I know he is lazy, and " one that loves his Trade the leaſt of any Man in the " World." M. Baillet does not ſpeak of that Poet.

(B) Balzac was miſtaken as to the Age he aſcribed to him.] We have juſt now ſeen, that he ſaid on the 15th of February 1641, that Father Theron was then above Seventy-five Years old. At this rate that Jeſuit muſt have been born in 1566. But 'tis not true; for Alegambe and Sotuel ſay he was but Fifteen Years of Age when he was admitted among the Jeſuits in the Year 1587. Such Miſtakes are commonly diſobliging; for few People deſire to be accounted older than they are. I don't except thoſe who will not marry. I know that ſome old Men, who, as it was ſaid of the firſt Duke d'Eperon, have paſs'd the Age of dying, are as willing to make themſelves five or ſix Years older than they are, as they were formerly deſirous to make themſelves younger by ſo many Years. Vanity finds its account in it, it being a more admirable thing that a Man of Ninety or a Hundred Years ſhould ſtill have ſome Vigour, than if he enjoyed his Health pretty well at Eighty or Eighty-five Years of Age. Other old Men are well pleaſed with a right Computation; they are afraid that a wrong reckoning, which brings 'em nearer the end of their Race, will make 'em leſs reſpected. However it be, Balzac's Miſtake was of another Nature: It was not diſobliging, but rather advantageous to Father Theron: The older he was thought to be, the more he was admired for the Livelyneſs of his Poems.

---

* Taken from Sotuel in Biblioth. ſcriptor. Societatis Jeſu pag. 794.

† Id. ib.

(a) Porphyrius lib. 1. τῆς φιλολόγου ἀκροάσεως de erudito auditu apud Euſebium præpar. Evangel. lib. 10. c. 3. pag. m. 464.

(b) Who collected Pythagoras's predictions in a Book intitled Tripos. Id. ib.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 465.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 467.

(e) Cicero lib. 1. & 2. de divinat. Plinius lib. 2. c. 79. Apollonius hiſtor. memor. l. 5. Diogen. Laert. lib. 1. n. 116.

(f) Porphyrius ubi ſupra pag. 464.

(g) Τούτους ἅμα αὐτῷ τὰ πρωτεῖα τῆς ἐν λόγοις παιδείας ἔχειν ἐν τοῖς Ἕλλησιν. Hos ſecum in dicendi facultate principatum in Græcia tenuiſſe. Photius bibl. n. 176. pag. 392.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Neque vero temere ſe aut præter rationem primas ſibi vindicare.

(k) Balzac, lettres choiſies 2. Part. B. ... Letter ... pag. m. 313.

(l) Idem, lettres a Chapelain B. 6. Letter 5. p. m. 283, 284. It is dated the 15th of February 1641.

THESMOPHORIA, were the Feſtivals celebrated in Honour of Ceres, conſider'd as (A) a Law-giver; for there were other Feſtivals conſecrated to her, as Inventreſs of the Products of the Earth. The Men were utterly excluded from the Theſmophoria, and only Women of the better rank were admitted *. They ſolemniz'd a Proceſſion at Eleuſis, in which they cauſed the † ſacred Volumes to be publickly carried by Virgins of unſpotted Reputation. This Feaſt laſted three or four days, tho' 'tis affirm'd by others that it continu'd nine, during which, the Women were not permitted to lie with their Husbands. To render this Abſtinence more ſupportable, we are told they uſually lay upon certain (B) Anti-venereal Leaves: It is indeed ſtrange, generally ſpeaking, they ſhould want ſuch a Remedy;

(A) Conſider'd as a Law-giver.] It was the common opinion of the Antients, that Mankind were oblig'd to this Goddeſs for the two great Benefactions, of teaching them Agriculture, and giving them Laws.

Prima (a) Ceres unco glebam dimovit aratro;
Prima dedit fruges, alimentaque mitia terris:
Prima dedit leges. Cereris ſumus omnia munus.

Conſult the Commentators on the words of Virgil; (b) Mactant lectas de more bidentes Legiferæ Cereri. It is therefore very probable (c) that two ſorts of Feaſts were dedicated to her, and that the Theſmophoria were chiefly inſtituted with regard to her Character of Law-giver. The word it ſelf leads us to this Opinion; for according to Heſychius, θεσμὸς ſignifies a Divine Law, νόμ☉ θεῖ☉. Sacra ipſius Theſmophoria, id eſt, legum latio vocatur, are the words of Servius on the mention'd paſſage of Virgil; but this did not hinder the practice of ſome Ceremonies in alluſion to her Character of Inventreſs of Husbandry. (d) Pauſanias and (e) one of Gruterus's Inſcriptions teſtify, that one of her Epithets was θεσμοφόρ☉. The following Citation may ſerve as a proof of what is advanced in the Article; that the ſacred Volumes were carried by Virgins of untainted Reputation. (f) Παρθένοι γυναῖκες, καὶ τὸν βίον σεμναί, κατὰ τὴν ἡμέραν τῆς τελετῆς, τὰς νομίμους βίβλους καὶ ἱερὰς ἐπὶ τῶν κορυφῶν αὐτῶν ἀνατιθεῖσαι καὶ ὡσανεὶ λιτανεύουσαι ἀπήρχοντο εἰς Ἐλευσῖνα. Virgines mulieres, vitaque honeſtæ; quæ per ſolemnitatis diem legales libros & ſacros vertice geſtantes, tanquam ſupplicantes Eleuſinem contendebant.

(B) To render this Abſtinence more ſupportable—they lay upon certain Anti-venereal Leaves.] Ovid doth not mention this, but only their ſeparation from their Husbands.

Feſta (g) piæ Cereris celebrabant annua matres
Illa, quibus nivea velata corpora veſte
Primitias frugum dant ſpicea ſerta ſuarum:
Perque novem noctes Venerem tactuſque viriles
In vetitis numerant.

I am not at all ſurprized at his Omiſſion of this circumſtance, becauſe it was impertinent to his Deſign. Tho' I cou'd here alledge ſeveral Authors, I ſhall only make uſe of Pliny and the Scholiaſt on Theocritus. (h) Græci lygon vocant, alii agnon, quoniam matronæ Theſmophoriis Athenienſium caſtitatem cuſtodientes, his foliis cubitus ſibi ſternunt, are the Words of Pliny, ſpeaking of the vitex, which our Botaniſts call agnus caſtus. Whence by the Way, 'tis obſervable, that they have changed an Epithete into a proper Name. The Greeks pretended that thoſe who eat or drank this Plant, or laid it under them in their Beds, would thereby be preſerved from Impurity; and therefore gave it the Sirname of ἄγν☉, from the word ἁγνὸς, which ſignifies Chaſte: and it became the proper word to expreſs vitex, tho' not alone, but with the Latin word of the ſame import. The Scholiaſt on Theocritus his words are, (i) τὴν κονύζαν, κνύζαν εἶπεν. ἔστι φυτὸν ψυκτικώτατον. ἔνθεν καὶ ἐν τοῖς θεσμοφορίοις ὑποστρωννύουσι τὸ φυτὸν τὴν θερμότητα τὴν κατὰ τὰ Ἀφροδίσια ἐκκόπτοντες. Conyzam dixit Cnyzam. Planta refrigerandi ſumma vi pollens, quam propterea in Theſmophoriis lecto ſubſternunt, calorem ad res venereas extirpantes. 'Tis here to be obſerv'd that he ſpeaks of Conyza or Cunilago, a Plant of a different Species from that mention'd by Pliny; as alſo on what occaſion this Remark was made, which was to explain a place in Theocritus, where a Shepherd is brought in telling what he would do, if his dear Friend made a proſperous Voyage to Mitylene. "I will, ſays he, place a Crown "of Flowers on my Head, I'll drink of the beſt "Wine, and ſtrew Herbs on my Bed up to my El-"bows.

Χ' ἁ στιβὰς ἐσσεῖται πεπυκασμένα ἔς τ' ἐπὶ πᾶχυν
Κνύζᾳ τ' ἀσφοδέλῳ τε πολυγνάμπτῳ τε σελίνῳ (k).
Et torus denſatus erit ad cubitum uſque
Cnyza, aſphodelo & flexibili apio.

This recited by the Scholiaſt, was one of the Herbs ſtrewed on the Womens Beds during the Theſmophorian Rites, to preſerve their Chaſtity. It will be granted me that thoſe who by ſplendid feaſting, and ſuch other emphatical Signs expreſs their great joy that their Vows are accompliſh'd, have no recourſe to thoſe Remedies which ſtifle all Amorous Thoughts. 'Tis not then likely that the Cunilago had any ſuch effect; and the Scholiaſt's Aſſertion contradicts the very Text on which he comments: and perhaps we ſhould not be at all in the wrong to affirm, that the ſtrewing of Leaves on the Womens Beds during this Feſtival, was only a bare dependency on it. 'Tis no uncommon thing, in great Solemnities, to ſtrew the Streets with Flowers and Leaves, and to affix Feſtoons on the Gates; and frequently the Chambers participate of theſe Ornaments: Nor is it unlikely that the Greeks might extend this Cuſtom to the Beds of thoſe who celebrated the Feſtival of Ceres; and ſome inquiſitive Perſons, fond of diſcovering Myſteries, at laſt imagin'd that the Experience of ſage Antiquity had pronounced this a Remedy againſt Incontinency. Nor can I tell whether the Wits and Satyriſts were not the Authors of this Suppoſition, which might in a long tract of time come to be ſeriouſly aſſerted as a reality. 'Tis certain, a more diſobliging Reaſon for this Cuſtom could not be produced; nor can I imagine the Grecian Women ſo ſervile as tamely to ſubmit to a Remedy which ſo publickly proclaimed their Laſciviouſneſs. Their conſent was not ſtay'd for, will ſome ſay: But did Greece ever ſo enſlave the Sex, as to ſubject them to ſhameful Cuſtoms? 'Tis not very eaſie to find a ſlip of Land in the whole Map of the World, where things are eſtabliſh'd on this miſerable foot; and if we would find ſuch a place, we ought not to look for it in Attica, Peloponneſus, or the Iſles of the Ægean Sea. In order to come the neareſt to truth, it ought to be laid down that the Honour of the Women was not in the leaſt concern'd in theſe Strewings of Agnus Caſtus. But who would believe it? muſt not one have a very mean Opinion of their Virtue, who can imagine that Married Women could not lie five or ſix Nights, (or nine (l) if you pleaſe) in a ſeparate Bed without being expoſed to thoſe Temptations, and impure advances, which render'd them unworthy of participating in a Chaſte Feſtival? But I expect in anſwer, that all Countries are not alike, and that in Climates leſs hot than Greece, Wine or Brandy, tho' plentifully drank, would not produce the ſame venereal Irritations that the meaneſt Food would elſewhere occaſion; and that conſequently we ought not to judge of the Ceremonies of the Feaſts of Ceres by the Deſires of the Northern Nations. But admit we do not ſtir out of Greece, I perſiſt in my Opinion, that theſe Motives for the uſe of Agnus Caſtus are not very probable: For if the Women, of their own accord, had recourſe to this Remedy, they acknowledged a very great fault, and confeſſed a ſcandalous Infirmity, which Modeſty and Prudence would by no means permit them to reveal. Prudence, I ſay, becauſe ſuch a Confeſſion might fatally diſturb and alarm their Husbands. The commerce of one of which might occaſionally oblige him to ſeveral Weeks abſence; as a Law-ſuit might detain another as long: Some went to the Wars, others engaged in Foreign Voyages; thoſe at home were not always in good health, and thoſe who were well could not tell how ſoon they might be ſick. What ground was there to rely on their Wives Chaſtity, at the Theſmophorian Feaſt, if they had profeſſed their Incontinence? This was a very Auguſt Feſtival, a great act of Religion; the Women participated in the principal Functions of this Holy Ceremony, in the performance of which, the Ritual obliged them to an untainted Chaſtity: they had therefore the moſt

* [illegible]

† [illegible] Remark B at the End.

(a) Ovid. Metam. lib. 5. v. 341.

(b) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 4. v. 58.

(c) See Caſaubonus de Satirica Græcor. pag. 168.

(d) Pauſan. lib. 1. pag. 212.

(e) Gruteri Inſcript. p. 309.

(f) Scholiaſt. in Theocrit.

(g) Ovid. Metam. lib. 10. v. 431.

(h) Plinius lib. 24. c. 9. pag. m. 327. Father Harduin ſays on this paſſage, Hæc totidem verbis Dioſcor. lib. 1. cap. 135. & Galenus lib. 6. de fac. ſimp. med. pag. 145. Ælianus item lib. 9. Hiſt. animal. cap. 26.

(i) Scholiaſt. Theocriti in Idyll. 7. He alſo ſaith the ſame on the 4th. Idyll. Κνύζα φυτὸν χαμαίζηλον ᾧ αἱ Θεσμοφοριάζουσαι διὰ τὴν ἁγνείαν ἐστιβάζοντο. Cnyza, planta graminis forma, qua Cereris ſacra celebrantes fœminæ lectos ad ſervandam caſtitatem inſternunt.

(k) Theocrit. Idyll. 7. pag. m. 53, 54.

(l) Ovid in the former citation, Letter g, makes this Feſtival laſt nine days.

remedy, and yet more ſurprizing, they ſhould acknowledge the neceſſity of it. The principal Object of their Adoration in this Feſtival, was that part (C) which diſtinguiſhes them from Men. You may very well imagine the Antient Fathers did moſt engaging Motives to Continence. The Divine Worſhip, Conſcience, the publick Proſperity, the honour of Ceres, and the Sanctity of her Myſteries abſolutely requir'd it: and nevertheleſs we are told, they owned themſelves unable to contain during the ſhort duration of this Feſtival. What was then to be expected from their Virtue, when on other occaſions 'twas put to longer tryals? 'Tis then undeniable, that by having recourſe to Agnus Caſtus on this occaſion, they had betray'd a great Imprudence, becauſe this muſt neceſſarily fill their poor Husbands with uneaſie Fears and Jealouſies. But what will you ſay, if their Husbands Eſtabliſhed this Cuſtom? Says an Objector? I anſwer, that if by Advice or Order they were the Authors of it, the Women would not have ſubmitted to it as a neceſſary, or at leaſt uſeful Remedy; for in accepting of it they had confeſſed a natural Infirmity, which would have ſcandalouſly tainted their Honours, and rendred them ſuſpected of Infidelity in the Abſence or Sickneſs of their Spouſes. All the Husbands who had been ſo raſh as to propoſe or approve of this Counſel, would have expoſed the Reputation of their Wives. The Wits would not have failed to cry out, Alas poor Wretches! a dire experience has obliged them to hunt after Expedients; they never have a Nights quiet except that which Religion provides for them: But when the Theſmophorian Rites are ſolemniz'd, the remembrance of what is paſt, makes them rely on the Virtue of Agnus Caſtus. Would what they made uſe of to inſure their Wives Virtue during this Feſtival, appeaſe the Alarms of him who was gone a long Voyage? Could this ſatisfie the uneaſie Mind of the Sick man? 'Tis undeniable that whoever ſhould have introduced this Cuſtom, deſerv'd to paſs for a Diſturber of the publick repoſe.

A hundred other Reaſons convince me that the uſe of Agnus Caſtus in the Womens Beds in the Theſmophorian Rites, was not founded on the alledged Motive. The ſame Reaſon which preſcribed this Remedy, during the Feſtival, would oblige the uſe of it in caſe of the abſence or indiſpoſition of the Husband; and young Virgins as well as young Widows would be expoſed to a perpetual Neceſſity of this preſervative; and ſince the latter was not done, it ſtrongly concludes againſt the former. If there had been as much occaſion for Agnus Caſtus, as I have remarked, we ſhould find in ſome Author or other, that no Plant was more common than this in all Greece; every perſon would have had a dozen of them in his Garden; whole Foreſts had been fill'd with it, and expert Planters purpoſely employ'd to cultivate it, becauſe the Virtue of its Leaves laid them under a perpetual neceſſity of keeping it alive. It would have been the firſt care of all thoſe, who in their declining Years married young Women, to plant ſeveral of them, that they might continually have a Remedy at hand, in order handſomely to aſſwage thoſe Deſires they could not ſatisfie. The Leaves of this Shrub would have been celebrated as the tutelar God of married Men, and a Deus averruncus, or alexicacus, the protecting Deity againſt Cuckoldom. A Juvenal (a) would have felicitated Greece about it; he had probably ſaid of theſe Leaves what another doth of Frogs (b). But we find no Tract of any thing like it in antient Monuments.

Perhaps it may be objected, that the Theſmophorian Rites exacted an extraordinary Purity, an Imagination exempt from what the Caſuiſts call unruly Thoughts, an uninterrupted Application to the excellency and ſublimities of Chaſtity; which was utterly unneceſſary at other times. All the Anſwer I ſhall make to this is, to ask what Proofs there are of this extraordinary Property of the Theſmophoria: I am ſure this Character of them is only imaginary (c). I would alſo add, that neither Agnus caſtus, nor cunilago, nor Willow-leaves, &c. (d) are capable of inſpiring ſuch a Purity. The Athenians were too ſenſible a People, to believe that a few Leaves between the Sheets were ſufficient to mortifie Incontinence. I will readily own that there are ſome Herbs which at length may refrigerate thoſe who eat them; but as to the external Application of them, I cannot tell whether it may not fitly be ſaid of Luſt as of Death, Contra vim mortis non eſt medicamen in hortis. I don't forget the Anſwer of Theano, Pythagoras's Daughter, who, when asked, How many days reſpite, after having to do with a Man, were requiſite to qualifie a Woman to aſſiſt at the Theſmophoria? reply'd, She was qualify'd the minute ſhe came from her Husband's embraces, but never if from thoſe of another Man. (e) Apud Theodoretum lib. 12. Græcarum affectionum, Pythagorica Theano, rogata quoto ſummum die mulieri liceret a complexu viri Theſmophoriis intereſſe: Α'πὸ μὲν τῦ ἰδίε παραχρῆμα, ἔφη, ἀπὸ δὲ ἀλλοτρίε οὐδέποτε. Et quæ a proprio viro ſurrexerit, ſtatim licere reſpondit; quæ ab alieno nunquam. This moral Deciſion of Theano doth not in the leaſt ſavour of Rigour. Such a Lady as ſhe would not if now alive, condemn a frequent communion under pretence of too ſhort an Interval after the Conjugal Duty. What may further be inferred from her Anſwer is, that in order to a due performance of the Theſmophorian Functions, a preparation of ſome days Continence was neceſſary. But as this prolonged the time of Abſtinence, it may be objected that I ought not to be ſurpriz'd, that they ſhould have had recourſe to Agnus Caſtus. But this is indeed too weak an Objection to alter my Opinion; I refer the Reader to my laſt Remark but one.

It would be unjuſt to condemn my Criticiſms on this head, for Equity will not permit us to ſacrifice the Reputation of an infinite number of Grecian Women, to Evidences brought from Pliny and others, if they have not deſerved ſuch an Affront.

(C) That part which diſtinguiſhes them from Men.] Faſoldus, who wrote a ſmall Tract of the Grecian Feſtivals, cites Theodoret concerning this Circumſtance. (f) In hoc quoque feſto pudenda muliebria mulieres illæ initiatæ honore divino afficiebant. Theodoretus lib. 3. Græcan. Affection. He doth not cite the words of Theodoret, tho' he found them in Caſtellanus in the manner following (g) Καὶ τὸν κτένα τὸν γυναικεῖον (οὕτως δὲ τὸ γυναικεῖον ὀνομάζουσι μόριον) ἐν τοῖς Θεσμοφορίοις, παρὰ τῶν τετελεσμένων γυναικῶν θείας τιμῆς ἀξιούμενον. Nec minus muliebrem pectinem (ſic enim pudenda mulieris vocant) in Cereris feſto, mulieres initiatæ divino honore dignum habent. Faſoldus alſo informs us, that at Syracuſa they carried a repreſentation of this part, formed with a ſort of Meal and Honey, in a proceſſion on the laſt Day of the Feaſt, in Honour of Ceres and Proſerpina. This he grounds on the Authority of Athenæus, lib. 14. Athenæus, ſaith he, (h) refert muliebria pudenda, μυλλοὶ appellata, quæ ex ſeſamo & melle facta erant, ultimo die hujus feſti apud Syracuſanos, qui hæc ſacra etiam obſervarunt, Cereri & Proſerpinæ circumlata fuiſſe. Perhaps he hath not rendred the Senſe of Athenæus exactly, and inſtead of the Laſt Day of the Feſtival, he ought to have tranſlated it at the great Theſmophoria. The Greek runs thus: (i) Ἡρακλείδης ὁ Συρακούσιος ἐν τῷ Περὶ θεσμῶν, ἐν Συρακούσαις φησὶ τοῖς παντελείοις τῶν Θεσμοφορίων ἐκ σησάμου ϗ μέλιτος κατασκευάζεσθαι ἐφήβαια γυναικεῖα, ἃ καλεῖσθαι κατὰ πᾶσαν Σικελίαν μυλλοὺς, ϗ περιφέρεσθαι ταῖς θεαῖς. Dalechampius renders it thus: Heraclides Syracuſius libro de vetuſtis & ſancitis moribus, ſcribit, apud Syracuſios in perfectis Theſmophoriis (k), ex ſeſamo & melle fingi pudenda muliebria, quæ per ludos & ſpectacula (l) circumferebantur, & in tota Sicilia vocabantur Mylli. Montagne abounds with paſſages on a like Subject. I have not ſeen this in the place where he obſerves, (m) that in the greateſt part of the World this part of our Bodies was deify'd; that in certain places, the chief Magiſtrates were reverenc'd and diſtinguiſh'd by this part; and in ſeveral Ceremonies inſtituted in Honour of divers Deities, the repreſentation of it was carried about in Pomp. The Egyptian Dames in their Bacchanalian Feaſts, wore a well carved Wooden Image of it about their Necks, proportioned in ſize and weight to their ſtrength; beſides the Statue of their God was furniſh'd with one of a ſize far ſurpaſſing the other parts of his Body (n). The married Women, not far from hence, adjuſt the upper part of their Head-dreſs to that ſhape; thereby boaſting of the Pleaſure receiv'd from it; and when they become Widows they turn'd it behind, and hide it under their Head-dreſſes. It is probable that the reaſon why the part proper to the did not ſpare the Heathens on account of ſuch Ceremonies as theſe. Thoſe who Celebrated this Feſtival were alſo obliged to (D) watch the whole Night.

(a) O ſanctas gentes quibus hæc naſcuntur in hortis numina. Juv. Sat. 15. v. 10.

(b) See the Paſſage of Pliny cited in the Article Democritus.

(c) See the following Remark.

(d) Salicem habere vim perimendi ſeminis, & libidinis extinguendæ, author eſt Theophraſtus. Ælianus Α'φροδισίας κώλυμα nuncupat. Alii ἄγνον caſtam appellant. Homerus Odyſſ. κ. ὠλεσίκαρπον, id eſt ut exponit Plinius lib. 16. cap. 26 frugiperda. Ad quem locum Euſtathius: Διότι οἱ πίνοντες τῦ καρπ' αὐτῆς ἄνδρες ἐκλύουσι τὸν καρπὸν, ἢ τῦι ἄγονοι γίνονται. Caſtellanus de feſtis Græcorum pag. 171.

On this occaſion Brantome's miſtake is obſervable, who Erroneouſly Aſſerts, that according to Pliny the (E) Veſtal Virgins made uſe of Beds of Leaves to preſerve their Chaſtity.

THIBAUT,

---

the other Sex had ſuch Honours paid to it in the Theſmophoria, was in Remembrance of the Good Service it had done Ceres. This Goddeſs after a vain ſearch of Proſerpina, arrived very Diſconſolate at Eleuſis: Where Baubo an old Country Woman uſed all endeavours to perſuade her to Refreſh her ſelf, and drive away Melancholy; but all to no purpoſe. Ceres utterly refuſed to eat and drink any thing, and would not admit of any Conſolation. Baubo changed the Scene and indeavoured to Divert the Goddeſs with a new invented Spectacle. She retired into another Chamber, where ſhe tricked up a certain thing which had been long neglected as a piece of waſte Ground; after which ſhe return'd to the Goddeſs, to whom ſhe ſhewed her nudity, putting her Body in the moſt extravagant Poſtures ſhe poſſibly could (a). Ceres fixing her Eyes on this Object could not help Laughing, and ſoon after accepted of the proffered Refreſhments. I cannot deſcribe this in our Language ſo naturally as an Ancient Father of the Church, whoſe words are theſe. (b) Rogat illa (Baubo) atque hortatur contra, ſicut mos eſt in hujuſmodi caſibus, ne ſollicitum ſuæ humanitatis aſpernetur: obſtinatiſſime durat Ceres, & rigoris indomiti pertinaciam retinet. Quod cum ſæpius fieret, neque ullis quiret obſequiis ineluctabile propoſitum fatigari, vertit Baubo artes, & quam ſeriis non quibat allicere, ludibriorum ſtatuit exhilarare miraculis: partem illam corporis, per quam ſecus femineum & ſubolem prodere, & nomen ſolet acquirere generi, tum longiore ab incuria liberat: facit ſumere habitum puriorem, & in ſpeciem levigari nondum duri atque ſtriculi puſionis: redit ad Deam triſtem, & inter illa communia, quibus moris eſt frangere ac temperare mœrores, retegit ſe ipſam, atque omnia illa pudoris loca revelatis monſtrat inguinibus: atque pubi affigit oculos diva, & inauditi ſpecie ſolaminis paſcitur. Tum diffuſior facta per riſum, aſpernatam ſumit atque ebibit potionem: & quod diu nequivit verecundia Baubonis exprimere, propudioſi facinoris extorſit obſcœnitas. Hence with very good Reaſon he vigorouſly Attacks the Pagans on the Ridiculous Abſurdity of their Feſtivals; what, could this Object afford ſo extremely diverting to Ceres, who could at all times ſee the ſame in her ſelf? (c) Ut animum commodare alimoniis poſſint, victuique ſumendo, non ratio, non tempus, non ſermo aliquis adhibetur gravis, aut affabilitas ſeria, ſed propudioſa corporum monſtratur obſcœnitas, objectanturque partes illæ, quas pudor communis abſcondere atque naturalis verecundiæ lex jubet: quas inter aures caſtas ſine venia nefas eſt, ac ſine honoribus appellare præfatis. Quidnam, quæſo, in ſpectu tali, quid in pudendis fuit verendiſque Baubonis, quod feminei ſexus Deam, & conſimili formatam membro, in admirationem converteret atque riſum? quod objectum lumini conſpectuique divino, & oblivionem miſeriarum daret, & habitum in lætiorem repentina hilaritate traduceret? Is it not very probable that in Commemoration of this Adventure, divine Honours were paid to that Object which had ſo opportunely diverted the Goddeſs Ceres? Hence ariſes an Objection againſt the Aſſertion laid down in the precedent Article: For, will ſome ſay, the Grecian Women ought to be more than ordinarily Fortified, when they not only lay alone, but were employed in the Contemplation of a Subject ſufficiently apt to taint their Imagination, and excite immodeſt Thoughts. I confeſs this may ſomewhat weaken my Arguments; but all things well weighed, they remain ſtill ſtrong enough to keep me in the ſame Opinion.

(D) To watch the whole Night.] This might furniſh my Adverſaries with another Objection. The Huſbands, will they ſay, conſidering, 1. That their Wives were ſeparated from them, whilſt they were employed in Celebrating the Memory of a tickling Adventure, and in worſhiping a tempting Object, of which (d) they were alſo obliged to make Images in Paſte: 2. That they watched all Night, might well have ſome diſagreeable Suſpicions; for Watchings have always afforded lucky Opportunities. 'Tis then not unlikely, that they had recourſe to effectual Preſervatives, which were the Leaves of agnus caſtus. Theſe difficulties are very inconſiderable: For beſides that all Men were abſolutely Excluded from the Theſmophoria, which might afford a plenary Satisfaction to the Jealous Huſbands, is it poſſible to believe the Grecians Fooliſh enough to rely on the feeble Aſſiſtance of Leaves, when they diſtruſted their Wives Virtue, notwithſtanding the engaging Obligations laid on them by the neceſſary Circumſtances of the Feſtival? Such were the utter Excluſion of Men, the Chaſtity enjoyned, the Watchings in the Temple, &c. If it be asked on what Authority I found the Text of this Remark, I alledge the Words of Arnobius: (e) Velitis enim conſideremus myſteria & illa divina, quæ Theſmophoria nominantur a Græcis: quibus genus ab Attica ſimilis illa protolis conferens ſunt & (f) pannychiſmi graves. I don't deny but ſeveral Diſorders were occaſioned by theſe Watchings. Plautus's Aulularia runs upon the Marriage of a young Woman got with Child on a like occaſion (g). The Romans never attempted the Abolition of ſeveral Nocturnal Feaſts, till they diſcovered their Irregularities. Several Grecian Cities alſo Aboliſhed the ſame Ceremonies: And the following words inform us how Ariſtophanes rail'd at thoſe Devotional Watchings: (h) Diligentiſſime ſanciendum eſt, ut mulierum famam multorum oculis lux clara cuſtodiat, initienturque eo ritu Cereri, quo Romæ initiantur. Quo in genere ſeveritatem majorum ſenatus vetus auctoritas de Bacchanalibus; & conſulum exercitu adhibito quæſtio animadverſioque declarant. Atque omnia nocturna, ne nos duriores forte videamur, in media Græcia Diagondas Thebanus lege perpetua ſuſtulit. Novos vero Deos, & in his colendis nocturnas pervigilationes ſic Ariſtophanes facetiſſimus poeta veteris comœdiæ vexat, ut apud eum Sabeius, & quidam alii dii de peregrinis judicati è civitate ejiciantur. A certain Journaliſt informs us alſo in his Extract of a Diſſertation of Mr. Rainſſant, (i) That the ſecular Games were not only Celebrated for three Days, but alſo three Nights together; for they Aſſembled in the Temples, where they Watched, Prayed, and performed their Sacrifices: This was what they called Pervigilium; and to prevent all Immodeſties in theſe publick Aſſemblies, the Youth of both Sexes aſſiſted at them under the Conduct of their Parents or elder Relations, who could anſwer for their Deportment, as Auguſtus had decreed. The Precaution was neceſſary and the Law very wiſe; the tender Paſſion is too diligent in queſt of favourable Opportunities, to forget its Intereſts in theſe Nocturnal Aſſemblies. But it was ſomewhat late when the Emperour Auguſtus apply'd this Remedy. Præſtat ſerò quàm nunquam. Better late than never. 'Tis not to be doubted but before this the three Nights of the ſecular Games were a very happy time for the Amorous Youth, and that they made the beſt uſe of it, ſince they knew 'twas impoſſible to Enjoy it twice. The Devotional Watchings of the Primitive Church were not intirely free from Abuſes of this kind; for which reaſon St. Jerome adviſes the Young Virgins (k) when they aſſiſted at theſe Rites, not to ſtir ſo much as a finger's breadth from their Mothers. This Father had much better have acquieſced in the juſt complaints of Vigilantius, who Condemned theſe Nocturnal Meetings (l) on account of the Impurities there committed. The truth of which at laſt the Church was obliged to own and ſuppreſs them, as Cardinal Bellarmin acknowledges. (m) Quoniam occaſione nocturnarum vigiliarum abuſus quidem irrepere cœperant, vel potius flagitia non raro committi, placuit Eccleſiæ nocturnos conventus, & vigilias proprie dictas intermittere, ac ſolum in iiſdem diebus celebrare jejunia.

Doubtleſs the Mandate of the Arch-Biſhop of Paris in the Year 1697. againſt the Cuſtom of viſiting Mons St. Valerien in the Holy Week, was Founded on like Reaſons.

(E) Brantome's miſtake —— according to Pliny the Veſtal Virgins made uſe of Beds of Leaves.] This Author's words at large are: " (n) I have read a " ſmall fooliſh Italian Pamphlet, which pretends to " give Receipts againſt Concupiſcence, of which ſort " it

Aaaaa 2

(a) Sic effata, ſinu veſtem contexit ab imo, Obſcœnaque oculis formatas inguinibus res: Quas cava ſuccutiens Baubo manu, nam puerilis Ollis vultus erat, plauſit, contrectat amice. Orpheus apud Arnobium lib. 5. p. 175. See Clemens Alexandrin. in Protrept. pag. 13.

(b) Arnob. ibid. pag. 174. 175.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 176.

) This is ſidered n a ſſage of theneæ- ; but the ng is not rtain, r we n't find whom eſe Ima- s were ade.

(e) Arnobius ubi ſupra pag. 175.

(f) This word ſignifies to Watch the whole Night, as appears by the Gloſſaries, pervigilium, παννυχισμὸς ἡ διὰ νυκτὸς ἀγρυπνία.

(g) Is adoleſcentis illius eſt avunculus Qui illam ſtupravit noctu, Cereris vigiliis. Plaut. in prologo Aululariæ.

(h) Cicero de legibus l. 2. fol. 335. A.

(i) Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres, March 1685. art. 2. pag. 259. 260.

(k) Vigiliarum dies & ſolemnes pernoctationes ſic virguncula noſtra celebret, ut ne tranſverſum quidem unguem à matre diſcedat. Hieronymus ad Lætam de inſtitut. filiæ.

(l) Vide Hieronym. adverſus Vigilantium c. 4. Conſult Mr. Van Dale, de oraculis pag. 232. of the 1ſt Edition, and p. 60 of the 2d. See alſo one of the Remarks in the Article Vigilantius. (m) Bellarminus, de Eccleſia triumph. l. 3. c. ult. (n) Brantome Dames galantes tom. 2. p. m. 163. 164.

THIBAUT, Earl of Champagne, the Vth of that Name, rendred himſelf Famous by his Paſſion (A) for Queen Blanche, St. Lewis's Mother: In which if he was unhappy, as moſt Hiſtorians believe; yet that did not protect this great (B) Queen

" it [illegible] ſo Ridiculous that I will " not adviſe the Women to the uſe of them, leſt " they ſhould bring themſelves too low; and this " is the reaſon why I would not Tranſcribe them " here. Pliny alledges a Remedy which the Veſtals " and Athenian Ladies uſed during the Feaſts of " Ceres called Theſmophoria, to refrigerate and extin- " guiſh all the ardent Deſires of Love, that they " might Celebrate this Feſtival with the utmoſt " Chaſtity; in order to which they made uſe of " Beds of Leaves of agnus caſtus. 'Tis natural to " imagine that they thus Mortified themſelves du- " ring the Rites; but at the Expiration of them " they ſcattered their Beds in the Air. I have ſeen " one of theſe Trees at the Houſe of a very fine and " honourable Lady in Guienne, which was fre- " quently ſhewed to Strangers for its Rarity, and " every Body was told its Virtue; but I could ne- " ver obſerve or hear that any of the Sex had ſtuffed " the leaſt corner of their Bed with its Leaves, or " plucked ſo much as one Branch, nor even the Lady " her ſelf, who owned it, and conſequently could " diſpoſe of it at Pleaſure. See the Margin (†).

(A) By his Paſſion for Queen Blanche.] Claudius Fauchet mentions our Earl of Champagne and his Amours, when he treats of the ancient French Poets. Blanche, ſays he, (a) " who was a Young, Beauti- " ful, and beſides a Spaniſh Lady, managed Thibaut " ſo artfully, that he abandoned the other Barons: " And what was yet more, he diſcovered the deſign " to ſeize the King in his return from Orleans to Paris. " But Thibaut's Amours diſpleaſing ſeveral Lords, " (ſays a certain good Manuſcript Chronicle which I " have,) He happening one Day to enter the Hall " where Queen Blanche was, Robert Earl of Artois, " the King's Brother threw a ſoft Cheeſe in his " Face. The Earl of Champagne being aſhamed of " it, took occaſion to retire from Court, to avoid " a greater Diſgrace. The Great Chronicle of France " tells us, that the Earl again took up Arms a- " gainſt the King; but being informed of the great " Preparations made againſt him, he ſent ſome of the " Wiſeſt of his Council to deſire a Peace, which was " agreed to. But the King had been at a great Ex- " pence on this account, and therefore the Earl was o- " bliged to quit Montereau-faults-yonne, and Bray on the " Seine to him. On this occaſion (ſays the Great " Chronicle) Queen Blanche told the Earl that he ought " never to have taken up Arms againſt the King her " Son; but ſhould remember that he came even to his " own Country to aſſiſt him againſt the Barons " when they Attacked him. The Earl earneſtly " looking at the Wiſe and Charming Queen, re- " plyed, On my Faith, Madam, my Soul, my Body, " and all my Lands are at your Command: No- " thing can pleaſe you which I would not freely Un- " dertake: Nor will I ever engage againſt you " or yours. He departed very Penſive, often Recol- " lecting the Queen's languiſhing Eyes and charm- " ing Air. Sometimes the tender Paſſion ſeized his " Heart, but was ſoon checked by the remembrance " of her high Character, and ſtrict Virtue, which " utterly deprived him of all Hopes of Enjoying " her, and ſerved only to perplex him. Deep " Thoughts begot Melancholy; to divert which he " was adviſed by ſome Wiſe Men, to apply him- " ſelf to Poetry and Muſick, in which he ſucceeded " ſo well, that he Compoſed the moſt Melodious " Songs that ever were either ſung or plaid on In- " ſtruments, and cauſed them to be Ingraved in the " Halls of Provins and Troyes, and they are called " the King of Navarre's Songs.

(B) Did not protect this great Queen from ill (b) Tongues.] Several things gave occaſion to it. Thibaut had rendred himſelf Odious by his Precipitate Retreat from the Camp at Avignon, and became more ſo on account of the Suſpicions he lay under of having Poyſoned Lewis the VIIIth; which were increaſed, when ſo good an Underſtanding was obſerved betwixt him and the Queen Dowager, that he diſcloſed to her all the Deſigns of the Confederate Princes, tho' ſeveral Injuries had ſo enraged him, that he engaged himſelf as one of the Chiefs of the League. This looked very like a hearty Engagement betwixt them (c), without which it was not probable that a Widow ſhould ſuffer the Approaches of a Man, ſuppoſed to be her Husband's Murtherer. Beſides, the Confederate Princes marching into Champagne, met Queen Blanche on the way; and ſhe would not abandon the Earl, tho' they purſued him as the Poiſoner of her Husband. This Conduct appeared ſo Suſpicious that they laugh'd at the Offers ſhe made of Puniſhing Thibaut if he was Guilty: To which purpoſe is the following Paſſage in a Modern Author, who has conſulted very good Manuſcripts. (d) The Queen ſent a ſecond Order to the Princes of the League to quit Champagne; aſſuring them, that if they had any Complaint againſt Thibaut, ſhe was ready to do them Juſtice. But all ſhe could obtain from them, we are told, was an Inſolent as well as Barbarous Anſwer: " That they had taken up Arms to do them- " ſelves Juſtice, and not to wait for it from a Woman, " who declared herſelf the Protectreſs of her Hus- " band's Murtherer. As for the Songs Compoſed by the Earl, moſt Hiſtorians tell us they proved the ill ſucceſs of his Amours. The paſſage of Claudius Fauchet already cited, ſhews that this Unfortunate Galant was adviſed to drive away by Songs the Melancholy which Preyed upon him. Common Senſe obliges us to believe, that if Blanche had favoured the Earl's Paſſion, he had much better concealed his Flame; and that the deſpair of any tender returns from the Queen, occaſioned the Exhalation of ſuch crowds of Sighs and languiſhing Verſes Ingraved on the Walls of his Palace. We are told 'twas a ſort of Folly and Extravagance, which a Compaſſion in the Queen would have entirely prevented. To this purpoſe a Modern Author informs us that " (e) whether his Preſumption e- " qualled his Love; or his Paſſion degenerated into " Folly; or he was prepoſſeſſed that concealing " would rather encreaſe than cure his Diſeaſe; " or the Queen's Virtue had at laſt thrown him in- " to Deſpair: 'Tis certain he was ſo little ſollicitous " to conceal the conſuming Fire; that he affected to " diſcover it by all means which the moſt wretched " Extravagance could ſuggeſt to a Man of his Qua- " lity. He wrote ſeveral Amorous Songs, in which " he diſcovered more Wit than Elegance: He found " Opportunities to hand them to the Queen; they " were ſet to Tunes; they were fitted to all " ſorts of Inſtruments, and to keep up the Idea of " them when they ſhould loſe the grace of Novel- " ty, or to preſerve the Memory of them when the " Author and the Princeſs ſhould be no more, he " cauſed them to be Engraved in Braſs, and expo- " ſed to the view of all the World in the Galleries " of his Palaces at Troyes and Provins: As if he " was afraid that future Ages would not be ſuffici- " ently informed of his Folly, or that the Age he " lived in was very Barren of Satyriſts". Varillas is here miſtaken in his Chronology; he ſuppoſes Thibaut guilty of all theſe Extravagancies before the Death of Lewis the VIIIth. But I rather ſubſcribe to the Hiſtory cited by Fauchet, (f) which places all theſe Songs after the loſs of Montereau and Bray. This agrees with the Chronology of one of our beſt Hiſtorians (g): This loſs, ſays he, did not make him Wiſer; he ſtill perſiſted in the fooliſh paſſion for the Queen which had ruined him, and retired to his Caſtle of Provins to indulge his amorous Madneſs, by making Verſes and Songs. He was obliged to ſurrender theſe Towns in the Year 1235, according to Mezerai (b).

I ſhall conclude this Remark with the words of the Modern Hiſtorian of St. Lewis, which are an exact Recapitulation of what hath been ſaid. (i) " The " Author who hath collected moſt of theſe Detra- " ctions, perpetually Praiſes Blanche to a degree of " exceſs, and tho' an Engliſh Man, ſpeaks of theſe " Detractions as meer Rumors, to give credit " to which would be the higheſt Injuſtice. He alſo " aſſures us, as well as another Author born at Liege, " when theſe reports were yet freſh, that they only " proceeded from the Animoſity of the Nobles a- " gainſt the Regency and the firm Reſolution of this " Princeſs; and indeed every Age furniſhes Exam- " ples of this kind. Beſides, of the four Authors " who have related this Story, no one has ſo much as " inſinuated that the Queen encouraged in the leaſt the (†) 'Tis no wonder, becauſe if a Woman had gathered thoſe Leaves, ſhe would have conſeſt her Infirmity.

---

(a) Des anciens poetes François Book 2. pag. 117.

(b) See other Scandalous reports concerning this Queen in the remark E.

(c) The Modern Hiſtorian of St. Lewis l. 2. n. 6. pag. 51. tells us that the Eaſineſs which Blanche diſcovered to be reconciled to Thibaut, tho' ſhe knew he paſſionately loved her, occaſion'd ſeveral ill reports.

(d) Hiſtoire de S. Louis l. [illegible] n. 11. pag. [illegible]

(e) Varillas, Minorité de S. Louis pag. 12.

(f) See the remark A.

(g) Mezerai ubi infra.

(h) Mezerai abregé Chronol. tom. 2. pag. 71[illegible]

(i) Hiſtoire de S. Louis, [illegible] pag. [illegible]

Queen from ill Tongues. Some Authors † pretend that he diſcovered his Paſſion, (C) whilſt her Husband Lewis the VIIIth was alive, who, they add, was obliged to diſſemble the Affront, by reaſon of the Wars in which he was engaged. That the Earl furniſhed him with conſiderable Auxiliaries, and behaved himſelf very bravely; but freely declared, that if he was obliged to Winter out of his Territories, he would withdraw his Aſſiſtance. Which the King imagining to proceed only from an impatient deſire of ſeeing the Queen, tho' he was not ignorant of the ill conſequences of this Lord's Retreat, yet he not only treated him ill, but threatned him. That Thibaut enraged at the Affront, reſolved to Revenge himſelf, and cauſed the King to be Poyſoned. That finding the Queen full as inſenſible in her Widow State as before, he engaged with the Princes who deſigned to remove her from the Regency; to which they eaſily perſuaded him, by alledging that the Queen's indifference proceeded from the Paſſion ſhe had entertain'd (D) for the Cardinal Legate, who had reſided for ſome time at the Court of France. That it was equally eaſy for the Queen to oblige him to abandon the Confederates, which he did when the Queen acquainted him that ſhe ſhou'd not be Diſpleaſed to ſee him. That his greateſt hopes of ſucceeding in his Amours were Founded on this bare Compliment. That he Deſerted the Princes of the League, and diſcovered their Deſigns to the Queen, at a juncture which was very favourable to her Intereſts. That they turning all their Rage againſt him, Entred into and Ravaged Champagne. That the Queen Regent aſſiſted him, and ſo Compoſed the difference, that they were deprived of all pretences for an Invaſion. That they endeavoured to Ruin him another way by accuſing him of the King's Death. That the Queen brought him off, obliging them to lay down their Arms on condition that he ſhould immediately ſerve in the Wars againſt the Infidels, accompanied with one hundred Knights, which he was to Maintain at his own Expence a. This whole Relation mentions nothing of the Crown of Navarre: Which obliges me to ſay in this place, that Thibaut Aſcended that Throne in the Year 1234. immediately ſucceeding Sanche *. who died Childleſs. Two Years after, he undertook a Cruſade againſt the Infidels, of which he was alſo the Chief: But for the common Reaſon, I mean the Miſunderſtanding of the Princes engaged in that Enterpriſe, the Expedition came to nothing. He died in the Year ‖ 1253. leaving his Territories to Thibaut his Son. In his latter Days he was ingaged in ſeveral Broils with his Clergy, and drew an Interdict on the Kingdom of Navarre for the ſpace of three Years, for having Baniſhed the Biſhop of Pampelona ‡. The Remarks (E) will inform you that he was a great Poet. He was a Man ſuſpected on eaſy grounds of the greateſt Crimes. 'Twas thought he Poiſoned (F) Philip Earl of Boulogne, Uncle to St. Lewis.

† Varillas, Minorité de S. Louis Printed at the Hague 1685.

a Id. Ib.

* Father, or according to others, Uncle to Blanche of Navarre, Thibaut's Mother.

‖ And not 1277, as la Croix du Maine ſays pag. 465.

‡ See the Hiſtory of St. Lewis by Monſ. de la Chaiſe l. 21. n. 4. p. m. 172.

THO-

" the Earl of Champagne's Paſſion, if it be true that " he had any ſuch Tenderneſs for her: But one of " the four poſitively avers, that Thibaut only ſcribbled " his Ditties on the Walls of the Palaces of Troyes and " Provins, to charm the Deſpair into which Blanche's " Virtue had caſt him. That if amongſt the reſt " of thoſe excellent Works, ſome Verſes appear which " ſeem liable to be wreſted to this purpoſe; 'tis a " ſtrange thing to alledge the Evidence of ſuch a " Man as Thibaut, a Poet tranſported by a warm " Imagination, who may as probably entertain the " Publick with ſuch Adventures as never happened, " to him, as others of his Character tire the Reader " with the Paſſions which they never felt.

(C) Whilſt her Husband was alive.] It is very likely that his Paſſion did not ſtay for the King's Death: Nor is it much leſs probable that ſuch a vain, inconſtant, daring Prince, ſhou'd have had a ſufficient command over his Paſſions, to Love the Queen a long time, without betraying any Marks of his Tenderneſs. Note, that the Queen was at leaſt forty, and perhaps older, when ſhe loſt her Husband: For ſhe was Married to him in the Year 1200, and he died in 1226. It is very rare for a Man to ſee a fine Woman of thirty Years of Age without any concern, and to fall in Love with her all at once when ſhe is forty, after ſhe has had above ten Children. This was the caſe of Queen Blanche in the Year 1226. One of our Hiſtorians imagins that there was a greater ſhare of Vanity than Love in this action of Thibaut. The Earl of Champagne ſays he (a) was the perſon who gave this advice to the Queen. This young Prince was touched with a ſort of Gallantry for her, rather owing to the vanity of a Courtier, than to the charms of a Woman above forty. He is thus far in the right, that Vanity is capable of obliging a Man to act the part of a Lover: But he doth not in the leaſt conſider, that the Earl's Paſſion might have began long before the Queen's Age was ſo far advanced. And at that Age it was much eaſier for her to keep alive a great Fire long ſince lighted than to begin to kindle one.

(D) She had entertained for the Cardinal Legate.] An (b) Author whom I have often Cited, obſerves that the Cardinal's Perſon was very agreeable; that his charming Mien was equalled by none; that he had a Delicacy of Wit which was extremely ſurpriſing, and that Europe never produced ſuch a compleat Courtier. He adds that Blanche had a very particular value for him; that ſhe conſulted him on important Emergencies: that ſhe frequently preferred his Advice to that of others, and that ſhe never denied any of the ſmall Favours he asked for his Friends. There needed no more, to kindle a Jealouſy in Thibaut, or to furniſh Detractors with a fair Pretext, to ſpread injurious reports againſt the Honour of the Regent: Which accordingly they did not fail to do; and what was yet worſe, the Men of Letters were the chief promoters of thoſe Slanders; for the Scholars of the Univerſity of Paris, (c) all of them of an Age at that time ſo far advanced, that it would at preſent appear ſcandalous for a Man to be leſs than Doctor, being diſguſted at the Proceedings on occaſion of their Quarrel (d) with the Citizens, left the City, after having publiſhed Licentious Songs and Verſes to blacken the Reputation of the Queen Regent, and the Cardinal Legate. (e)

(E) He was a great Poet.] Preſident Fauchet aſſures us that (f) the Italians formerly ſo well eſteemed the Odes of Thibaut King of Navarre, and other French Poets, his Contemporaries, that they imitated them, as Dante has ſhewn us, who in his Book de Vulgari Eloquentia, cites this King as an excellent Maſter of the Art of Poetry. Several of this King's Poetical Fragments are extant in Fauchet's Book (g)

(F) He Poiſoned Philip Earl of Boulogne.] This Earl was the Son of Philip Auguſtus. He was the Chief of the League formed againſt the Regent Blanche, ſoon after the Death of Lewis the VIIIth. As " (h) " his Death was very ſuddain, the People always " prone to Calumny, were very willing to aſcribe it " to a violent Cauſe, and by dark hints charged it " on the Queen her ſelf. But to attempt to defend her

(a) Mezerai abregé Chronol. tom. 2. pag. 710. ad ann. 1227.

(b) Varillas, Minorité de St. Louis pag. 22.

(c) Hiſt. de S. Louis, l. 2. n. 16. pag. 71.

(d) These Quarrels began in the Year 1229. See a ſhort Deduction of 'em in the Hiſt. de S. Louis ubi ſupra.

(e) Mezerai, abregé Chronol. tome 2. pag. 715.

(f) Fauchet, des anciens poetes François, Book. 2. pag. 118.

(g) Du Verdier Vau-Privas has inſerted in his Bibliotheque Françoiſe what Fauchet ſays of Thibaut Earl of Champagne.

(h) Hiſt. de S. Louis, l. 3. n. 20. pag. 140.

THOMÆUS (Nicolas Leonicus) a famous Professor at Padua in the XVIth Century. He was a Venetian †, Originally of Albanian Extract. He studied the Greek literature at Florence under Demetrius Chalcondylas, and was the first of the Latins who Explained Aristotle in Greek at Padua. He recurred to the Source in order to Re-establish Philosophy, which he found miserably Disfigured (A) by the vain Subtilties of the Schoolmen, and the Speculations of the Arabian Commentators. As he was a great Humanist, we have no reason to be surprised at his dislike of the manner of Philosophizing customary at that time, nor that he adventured to Explain the Greek Text of Aristotle. His manner of living was truly Philosophical: He was fond of a studious Repose *, without suffering himself to be disturbed by the Commotions which Emulation and Ambition usually inspire. He was content (B) with a moderate Fortune, lived Frugally and never Married. He took the Death of a Crane which he had kept Forty Years (C) for a Presage of his own approaching End, and considering the Age he lived to, any thing might have furnished him with such a thought. He succeeded very well in Poetry ||. He died at Padua, ‡ in the Year 1533, aged 75 Years. I shall speak of his (D) Writings in one of my Remarks. He had a (E) Brother whom Pierius Valerianus ranks amongst the Unfortunate Learned.

THOMAS

“ her would be to injure her: They let loose in quite “ another manner against Thibaut, either because he “ had been the greatest Gainer by it, or because being “ persuaded that he had already made a Bloody Essay “ on Lewis the VIIIth, they did not think that he “ would make any scruple of this second Murther. “ But no proof was ever given of his being guilty “ of either, tho' his unconcernedness at the Death of “ the latter was sufficiently liable to a Suspicion that “ it was procured by him. Thus we see how Queen Blanche was represented by the discontented Parties; so hard it is to have a great Reputation, and not be exposed to the Malice of Calumniating Tongues.

(A) Which he found miserably Disfigured.] Paul Jovius happily expresses the sad Condition to which the Schoolmen had reduced Philosophy. They never enquired after Truth; but studied the art of raising and answering Objections, with the help of a hundred new-fangled Terms which they did not themselves understand. (a) Philosophiam ex purissimis fontibus, non ex lutulentis rivulis salubriter hauriendam esse perdocebat, explosa penitus sophistarum disciplina, quæ tum inter imperitos, & barbaros principatum in scholis obtinebat, quum doctores excogitatis barbara subtilitate Dialecticorum figmentis, Physicas quæstiones non ad veritatis lucem, sed ad inanem disputandi garrulitatem revocarent; & juventus in gymnasio Arabum, & Barbarorum commentationes secuta, a recto, munitoque itinere in confragosas ignorantiæ crepidines duceretur.

(B) He was content with a moderate Fortune.] His Chast and Innocent Life, is very well expressed in the following Citation. (b) Pervenit veneranda barbæ canitie ad septuagesimum (c) tertium ætatis annum, mediocri substantia, ipsaque civili frugalitate, & cælebs & felix, quòd nemo vel innocentiæ, & doctrinæ conscientia, vel munditia corporis, vel animi nitore, beatior ætate nostra fuerit.

(C) Death of his Crane for a presage of his own.] For which Paul Jovius is also my Authority. Aluerat domi gruem, de manus ipsius senili oblectamento cibaria capientem, per quadraginta annos. Is senio tabefactus quum periisset, & ejus desiderio triste omen concepit, prædixitque nullo lacessitus morbo, se non multò post adamati gruis fatum, maturo vitæ exitu secuturum.

(D) I shall speak of his Writings.] He Composed ten Dialogues in Imitation of the Academicks on curious or Important Subjects, as de divinatione, de nominum inventione, de ludo talario, de precibus, de animorum immortalitate, &c. He Translated or Paraphrased several (d) tracts of Aristotle and Galen, and Published a Miscellany of very Fine Collections entituled Varia Historia, in which he followed the fashion of the Age he lived in, which was never to cite those Ancient Authors who furnished him with Materials. Mr. Huet gives him the following good Character, (e) Emendatus interpres, ad auctoris normam totum se fingens. It is observable of his Work called de Varia Historia libri tres, that he wrote it when Young, but did not Publish it till he was very Old in the Year 1531, as he himself informs us in his Epistle Dedicatory to Cuthbert Tonstal Bishop of Durham. Commentariolos de Varia Historia quos alias juvenis admodum multiplici cum Græcorum tum Latinorum lectione confeceram sepsueramque nunc edendos excudendosve curavi: ut quando maturioris ætatis pleraque jam à me de omnimoda philosophia exierunt opera ex Academicarum peripateticorumque fontibus hausta, hæc quoque juvenilia studia nostra sua aliquando mercede non defraudarentur. Here is an Author who had the prudence not to Publish his Juvenile productions before he had acquired a great Reputation by his Works Composed in his Riper Years. A very wise Conduct; for there are scarce any Authors, but Repent the Precipitation with which they Hurry their first Essays into the World, even before the soft Down begins to grow on their Chin. Grotius who perhaps had less Reason to Repent of it than all others, was in Extreme Confusion on this Account; as he complains in a Letter, wherein he praises Scriverius for the contrary Conduct. (f) Quo rependam non habeo, ex quo tandem resipiscere cœpi ab ea insania, quæ mihi cum aliis nonnullis communis fuit, ut cæca quadam innotescendi libidine nihil nisi infamiam meam publicarem, daremque ea mundo spectanda, quæ nunc ne solus quidem apud me sine magno pudore & acri doloris sensu conspicio. Tu vero (dicam non ut blandiar, sed ut raram animi fortitudinem, quam, si possim, imitari velim, sane, quod possum, probem atque commendem) in annos non doctrina tantum, sed & sapientiæ capaces, tibi te & publico servasti; & quo nullum maturæ mentis certius esse signum potest, ausus es ita utilitati aliorum studere, ut appareret priorem tibi hujus esse quam gloriæ tuæ rationem. Those Authors who are not quite so hasty run a greater risque; because the World is more naturally enclined to excuse the faults of Writers of 15 than those of 20. or 25 Years of Age. These are then obliged to take special Care of their First Book; for if it be worth nothing they will find a Thousand Difficulties to retrieve their Reputation, and Cure the Publick of their prejudices. If they with Thomæus keep their juvenile Composures by them till they have established a good Reputation, they may then easily pass an indifferent Piece upon the World. They must not follow the Italian fashion, where the Lacqueys go before their Masters; but clap the finest of their Equipage in the Van, to prepossess the Spectators in Favour of them, and the remainder will come in time. They would not lose their Labours, they may expect with Thomæus that they also shall meet with a Reward. 'Tis unquestionable that at a certain pitch of Reputation, Authors may put off indifferent Performances that meet with a good Reception; and wou'd undoubtedly be laugh'd at, if Published by an unknown Writer. But those who make an ill use of this Prepossession of the Publick are very often deceived. They gather their Papers; even their most trifling Manuscripts, Written by way of Diversion from more serious studies, or their Juvenile Exercises for their degrees; all these they send to the Printer; they disgust all their Readers, and are often more Blamed for their last Books, than they were Praised for their first.

(E) He had a Brother which Pierius Valerianus.] He would not have been at all inferior to our Thomæus, if he had lived as long; but he died Young, and yet he lived long enough to suffer too great a Load of Miseries: Short and Evil were his days as Valerianus says. (g) Bartolomæum Leonicum cognominato Fuscum agnovistis, cujus ingenium, & absolutissimam † Epirotâ patre Venetiis genitus. Paulus Jovius Elog. cap. 91.

|| Petrus Bembus in.

‡ Spondan. ad ann. 1533. n. 20.

* [illegible]

(a) Paulus Jovius in Elogiis, cap. 91. p. m. 213.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Spondan. ad ann. 1533. n. 20. makes him live till 75.

(d) De animalium motione ac ingressu: quæstiones mechanicæ: Liber primus de partibus animalium: Argumenta in aliquos libros Aristotelis parvorum naturalium ex Michaele Ephesio fere translata. Gesner. in biblioth. fol. 521. Paul Jovius says Scripsit erudite & luculenter commentarios in parva naturalia Aristotelis.

(e) Huet. de claris Interpret. p. m. 222. See Vossius de hist. Lat. pag. 677.

(f) Grotius's Epistle in which he thanks Scriverius for a Copy of the Authors de re Militari, dated June 8. 1607. In my Remarks at the beginning. To the example of Grotius add those alledged by Monf. Baillet, in the first Tome of the Jugemens des Sçavans pag. 384.

(g) Pierius Valerianus de Litteratorum Infelicitate, lib. 2. pag. m. [illegible]

THOMAS (Paul) Sieur de Girac, Son of Paul Thomas, Sieur (A) de Maiſonnette, was a very Learned Man, a good Neighbour, and hearty Friend to Balzac. The ſame of his Wit and Learning had perhaps never extended beyond the Walls of Engoulême his Native place, if he had not Criticiſed Voiture's Works: But this Cenſure, tho' but a ſmall Diſſertation, made way for a long Controverſy which made a great Noiſe in the World. Voiture's Friend Coſtar had no ſooner ſeen this Diſſertation, but he attempted to Refute it. This deſign which he Executed very (B) ſlowly, and with abundance of Artifice, as 'tis ſaid, ſucceeded him. He publiſh'd a Defence of Voiture, which (C) was very much Eſteem'd. Girac who thought himſelf obliged to reply, did it not in Latin, as in his firſt Diſſertation; he defended his Tract in French, the Language in which Coſtar had Publiſhed the Apology for his Friend. † Girac's Anſwer not only defended his Cenſures on Voiture; but alſo Criticis'd ſome Faults of Coſtar. For which reaſon the latter replied in two Tracts, one of which was an Apology for himſelf, and the other a continuation of his defence of Voiture. His Adverſary return'd to the Charge, and Publiſhed a large Volume againſt the continuation of the Defence. Here the Controverſy ſtopt; being carried to the laſt Extremities, which our Language can poſſibly bear on ſerious Subjects. Coſtar was a railing Satyriſt, who when he began to ſtrike gave heavy Blows: Of the weight of which Balzac and Girac were ſenſible in his firſt Defence. An Author ſenſibly touched, commonly imagines that he does not Revenge himſelf to ſome purpoſe, if the ſhocks he returns are not ruder than thoſe he received. Girac form'd himſelf on this Principle in his Anſwer, as did Coſtar alſo in his laſt Defences; which Girac Anſwering with the ſame Spirit, carried the Invective to the utmoſt height. In order to find more Injurious Books than this Reply, we ought to have recourſe to ſome Authors who write in Latin, or to ſome who have ſometime paſt Written in French in ſome Cities in Holland which I will not name. Girac had the advantage of ſtriking the firſt and the laſt Blow. Another thing which † He Publiſhed it in 1655, adding to it his Latin Diſſertation already Printed in the 3d Edition of his Defence of Voiture. I have an Edition of this Defence Printed at Paris in the Year 1654, in which we are aſſured that the World was preſented the firſt time with Mr. Girac's Latin Diſſertation. How Ridiculous it is to affirm this in 1655.

---

abſolutiſſimam eruditionem omnes admirabamur. Is cùm Pictavinum bellum, & totius ejus regionis deſolationem, incendiaque devitaſſet, Romæ aliquamdiu fuit, ſed, cùm neque hic otium, quod ſibi propoſuerat, reperiſſet, in Caſſinatem receſſit ſolitudinem, facta illi a loci illius monachis, quieſcendi copia; ſed, dum hic ſperat ſcripta ſua incuientiſſima maturare, & immortalem ſibi gloriam comparare, paucis poſtquam illuc ſeceſſerat diebus, rapidiſſima correptus febri, cùm ægrotaſſet graviſſime, valetudinis ejus violentia ſublatus eſt: futurus dubio procul Leonico Thomeo germano fratri non inferior, ſi fata eum diutius in vita eſſe voluiſſent.

(A) The Son of Paul Thomas Sieur de Maiſonnette.] Monſ. de Girac's Father was born at Jarnac (b), but Lived at Engouleme. He underſtood Hebrew very well as appears by the Words of Jarrige; (1) Father Beautes having laſt Year received a Hebrew Letter, travelled all Night from Ruffec to Angouleme, to obtain an interpretation and anſwer of Mr. Thomas de Maiſonnete a learned Man perfectly acquainted with that Language. This Honeſt Gentleman cannot deny the truth of what I ſay. Mr. Colomies (a) cites this paſſage of Jarrige, and ſays (b) that he has read Mr. de Maiſonnette's Poetry with a great deal of pleaſure, and that Balzac praiſed him in his Latin Letters, (c) as did alſo Nicolas Bourbon.

(B) Very ſlowly and with abundance of artifice, as is ſaid.] A little after the Impreſſion of Voiture's Works, Balzac (who perhaps could not obſerve the good Reception they met with without Chagrin) deſired Mr. Girac to Write him his Opinion concerning that Book. In complaiſance to his Friend's requeſt he Wrote a Latin Diſſertation on that Subject; which Balzac communicated to Coſtar to have his Opinion of it. Coſtar took this as a favourable Opportunity of Signalizing himſelf, and as he believed that Balzac was not diſpleaſed that ſome faults were found in Voiture, he reſolved to apologize for the latter by counter-blows at the former. But in order to take the ſurer meaſures, (d) He immediately excuſed himſelf as not capable of giving his Opinion on Girac's remarks, urging a thouſand affairs which depriv'd him of all leiſure. At laſt after ſome Years he ſent his defence in Manuſcript to Monſ. Balzac, conjuring him, that if he found any lines which diſpleaſed him, to blot them out, to commit them to the Flames or throw them into the Water, for he abſolutely abandon'd them to him. In the mean time this Book, which indeed is nothing but a Satyr againſt the Reputation of the Perſon to whom it was addreſſed, notwithſtanding all the profeſſion of Loving and Honouring him, was Printed, and in every Body's Hands, before the Manuſcript reach'd him. A paſſage in the Menagiana makes me doubt whether the laſt part of Girac's Relation is true. I don't believe that the defence of Voiture was Printed before the Author ſent the Manuſcript Copy to Mr. de Balzac. I find in the Menagiana "(e) that M. de "Balzac —— after having obliged M. de Girac "to Write againſt Voiture's Letters in Latin, engaged alſo Mr. Coſtar to undertake the defence "of them, and to Write againſt Girac; this was "deſigned to make ſure of the praiſes of both Parties. I went through Mans in my return to "Paris, when the Defenſe was finiſhed. Mr. Coſtar "gave me two Copies, one of which to be ſent to "Mr. Pinchêſne, Mr. de Voiture's Nephew, and the "other to Mr. Conrart. He told me he freely ſubmitted it to all manner of Alterations that his "Friends would pleaſe to make, whether it were "to add or retrench. One of the Copies was communicated to Mr. de Balzac who ſent his corrections while the work was under the Preſs; but "they not arriving till the Sheets were wrought "off, he was adviſed that they came too late, and "the Book appeared as it was, at which he was "ſomewhat Angry. Compare this with Mr. Coſtar's account (f) and a Letter (g) of Balzac to Conrart, and you will plainly ſee that Balzac received the Manuſcript, before the Book was Printed. This will not hinder ſeveral People from believing that Balzac was impoſed upon, and that all the excuſes grounded on Voiture's Nephew cauſing this Book to be Printed unknown to Coſtar, are but ſo many affronts. The Wars of Authors have their Stratagems as well as thoſe of Princes; and that this was a Subtilty of the Pen combatants, which was on this Occaſion practiſed againſt Balzac, is very apparent. The impreſſion went on and was finiſhed maugre the ſtrong Oppoſitions of Mr. Conrart (h).

(e) Pag. 15 of the Dutch Edition.

(f) Suite de la Defenſe, pag. 20. and the following.

(g) The 15th of the 4th Book, dated the 15 of June, 1653.

(C) Coſtar —— Publiſhed a Defence of Voiture which was very much eſteemed.] It may indeed be ſaid that this Book Proclaim'd him to the World; after this his Name flew every where, and what is much more conſiderable, by Virtue of this Book he obtain'd a Penſion of 500 Crowns. He cou'd not help, ſays Mr. Girac (i) evincing on all Occaſions his mighty Satisfaction and Joy that he had been acquainted with me. And indeed in what Corner of France has he neglected to publiſh, that he is infinitely obliged to me for an Opportunity to introduce him to the World; that by my means the Eyes of all the Learned and polite are fixed on him, and that he is indebted to me for the Glory and applauſe which flows on him from all Parts; and what he ſets a greater Value on, That I have been the cauſe that he has gained 500 Crowns? I have ſeen a great many of his Letters which ſing no other Tune, and I have not met one of his Friends who has not thankt me on his behalf, for adminiſtring an occaſion to this happy Book, which his Eminence has thought worthy of his Liberality. (1) Theſe are his own Words in his Epiſtle Dedicatory.

(h) Ubi ſupra.

(i) Replique a Coſtar pag. 3. and the 4th Edit. in Holland. See alſo the Menagiana pag 368. 369

(1) Epiſt. ded. to the ſuite de la Deff.

(D) Uſed

which plainly decides the Victory on his ſide was, that Coſtar uſed his utmoſt Intereſt (D) to obtain of the Magiſtrates, that his Antagoniſt's Reply might be ſuppreſſed. The Pretext he alledged (E) that his Morals were attackt, tho' ſomething ſpecious, generally ſpeaking, was nevertheleſs invalid; for he was not accuſed

(D) Uſed his utmoſt intereſt to obtain of the Magiſtrates.] It is leſs Scandalous for a Logician to be Guilty of the Fault which they they call μετάβασις εἰς ἄλλο γένος, to ſhift, to abandon the Queſtion, to ramble about in order to catch at another difficulty, than for a polite Genius after it has been ſomewhat worſted by the Pen, to quit that weapon in order to have recourſe to the Arms of the Magiſtrate. This is viſibly to loſe ground, to quit the Field, to lay down one's Sword and Buckler, that one may the eaſier get into a Place of Refuge, and make all poſſible haſte to hide one ſelf behind an Altar. I am ſurpriz'd that a Perſon of the penetration of Mr. Coſtar, did not fore-ſee that this Conduct would meet with this Interpretation, and be compar'd to that of a Gentleman who in a Quarrel where his Honour is concern'd, ſhould apply himſelf to a Judge inſtead of his Sword. He anſwer'd and reply'd to the Criticiſms on Voiture, he treated his Adverſary as he pleaſed, and after having enjoyed the utmoſt liberty the Republick of Letters could give, he applied himſelf to the Lieutenant Civil, to hinder his Adverſary from defending himſelf, and to prevent his making uſe of the ſame liberty. This was a loud Injuſtice, tho' the fear which this ſort of proceeding betrayed, was yet plainer than the Wrong. Girac does not ſpare him on this account, he plentifully inſults him. "What's become, ſaith he (z) of the generous Sentiments of this Bravo, who, not long ſince, call'd himſelf a Gentleman of Pomerania, and the younger Orondates (1); who was hectoring, and who boaſted of having the ſacred Laws of Antient Chivalry always deeply engraved in his Mind, ſo that it was not poſſible for him to Violate or Infringe them! If thoſe ridiculous and frivolous Imaginations are evaporated, and Mr. Coſtar's Brain is no longer troubled with ſuch Extravagancies, does he not ſee, (to expreſs my ſelf plainer) to what Confuſion and Scandal a man of Letters, as he is, renders himſelf liable; who when accuſed of a thouſand Errors, a thouſand Inſtances of Ignorance, and as many Abſurdities, applieth to the Magiſtrate to ſuppreſs the Book which convicts him, inſtead of defending his Opinions, or acknowledging his Errors?" He makes another advantageous uſe of the great Confuſion and diſorder which he diſcover'd in the conduct of his Adverſary. "This Diſorder, ſays he, (a) appear'd very plainly in all his Proceedings; but nothing publiſh'd it more effectually, than the Proteſtation he made ſo publickly, that (2) as long as he liv'd he would never read any thing which went under my Name. For if his Hatred or Contempt of me were ſo great, that he would never look on any of my Writings, why doth he give himſelf ſo much Trouble to hinder their publication? Why does he ſo loudly proteſt, (3) that being in the purſuit of a vaſt Deſign, he will not be diverted from the way; that the Stones which I ſhall throw will never reach him; and that tho' I ſhould continue perpetually flinging at him, he would not ſo much as turn his Head towards me? When at the ſame time the ſacred Obligation of an Oath, nor ſuch a ſolemn Proteſtation could not hinder him from Reading my Book, and that by the baſe means of corrupting my Printer, and getting all the Sheets of my Book as faſt as work'd off. But, to continue his fine Allegory, I had ſcarce taken this fatal Sling into my Hand, but this intrepid, terrible, and haughty Goliah was ſo ſcandalouſly ſtruck with fear, that he cried out for help, and implor'd the aſſiſtance of Juſtice, which I hope will always be in vain; and I deſire no other Proofs of his flight and of my Victory, if I may ſo call the Defeat of ſo inconſiderable an Enemy, who runs away at the ſight of a blow.

(E) The pretext he alledged——was nevertheleſs invalid.] Let us hear Girac a little further. (b) "By what Law then doth he aſſume the liberty of proſcribing Authors, and act the Tyrant in an Empire which has always maintain'd the Poſſeſſion of an intire and perfect liberty? It is indeed an unprendented Attempt, and worthy of the Arrogancy of my Adverſary: for tho' he dreſs'd his Deſign with a more ſpecious pretext, and took other meaſures to obtain that Sentence, in which he at preſent triumphs; it was to impoſe on the Judge and the World, to perſuade them that he was conſtrain'd to take theſe meaſures, by reaſon of the pretended Calumnies, levell'd at his Religion and Morals. Indeed he would be a very nice Man to complain of two or three Letters, which I have made uſe of, ſince he cannot deny the writing of them; and indeed he ought to own that what he has himſelf Printed, is much more ſcandalous: Beſides, they were in the hands of all the Curious, and publickly read in all the Provinces where Mr. Coſtar is known." After having alledged ſeveral other Reaſons to juſtifie the uſe he made of thoſe Letters, he goes on. "(c) Is it then becauſe he bluſhes to have his fraud, breach of Truſt, falſe Parts, and miſunderſtanding of Authors detected? He is concern'd that any ſhock ſhould be offer'd to that fine, long eſtabliſh'd, and general Reputation, which he fancies he enjoys without any interruption; and that the Inchantments and Illuſions with which he made an ill cauſe appear good, will no longer be efficacious. He knows very well that his fucus of fine words, the only inviting thing in his Writings, will no longer impoſe on the Ignorant. He is apprehenſive that inſtead of the lofty Epithets of Illuſtrious, the Ornament of France, and the glory of our Age, he ſhould be taken for an ignorant and inconſiderate Man, and for a Plagiary. Theſe are the true Motives which oblige him to have recourſe to Law-quirks, as the laſt Refuge of a deſperate Cauſe amidſt all the trouble, confuſion and diſorder to which he is reduced." Some may perhaps urge, that Coſtar was not ſo unjuſt as ſome others (d), to deſire that he might have leave to write againſt his Adverſary, and that the latter might be depriv'd of the Liberty of anſwering: No, he was very willing that the Judge ſhould include him in the Prohibition, and make an Order that Mr. Coſtar and Mr. Girac ſhou'd not for the future, write againſt one another: but this is to ſay very little in favour of Coſtar, for he having Publiſh'd all he had to ſay, could be very little injur'd by the prohibition of a future Publication. His advantage was to have his Adverſary's Hands ty'd up. "To ſpeak truly, ſays Mr. de Girac (e), It is not eaſie to conceive what could oblige the Lieutenant Civil to order that Mr. Coſtar and I ſhould not for the future write againſt one another; when I had not yet (f) begun to defend my ſelf, and my Adverſary had Publiſh'd three large Volumes, in which he had treated me in an opprobrious manner, and ſo loaded me with Calumny, that of neceſſity I muſt either refute him, or ſuffer my Reputation to be ſcandalouſly wronged. I muſt allow a School-maſter, who ſcarce knows the common Principles of Sciences, to raiſe himſelf on my Ruins, and put a value on himſelf at my expence. Notwithſtanding the Reſolution which I have taken to ſtifle my juſt Complaints againſt this Injuſtice; I cannot help ſaying of that Sentence, what an excellent Perſon (4) long ſince ſaid of a certain Emperor. This Sentence deſtroys it ſelf, it confounds and overturns all things, and under the pretext of a fallacious Humanity, covers an unparallel'd and extreme rigour. It binds the Hands of the Accuſed, in order to deliver him up as a Prey to his Enemies; it is a violation of oppreſſed Innocence, and a Cruelty which the ſevereſt Laws never exerciſed againſt the moſt profligate Criminals, to deprive them by a forced ſilence, of the privilege of juſtifying themſelves. It forbids Mr. Coſtar's writing any more, after he hath ſo long abus'd my patience, and tired his Cruelty and rage with mangling my Reputation. Was ever a more captious, more unjuſt, or more illuſory Trick heard of?" I ought to advertiſe my Reader, that Girac doth not forget the Paſſage of Tacitus concerning Cremutius Cordus. For he is not contented to convince his Adverſary's Conduct of a great deal of Injuſtice; but with Tacitus, he obſerves the Imprudence of it, ſince the Prohibition of a Book advances its Reputation.

It is evident that an Author who employs the Magiſtrates Authority, for the ſuppreſſion of Books written againſt him, loudly proclaims his Defeat, and inability to anſwer, and increaſes the curioſity

---

(z) In his 1ſt. Letter to Mr. de Montauſier at the beginning of his Reply, fol. * 4. verſo.

(1) Continuation of the Defence, p. 12. l. 336.

(a) Girac. Ibid.

(2.) Continuation. pag. 424.

(3.) L. 334.

(b) Ibid. fol. * 5.

accuſed without Proof (F), and that ſhould rather have engaged (G) the Judges to rioſity of the Publick for the very Books which he would ſtiſle. Whence then can it proceed that ſo many Authors, when their credit is come to that paſs, have recourſe to this Method? Is it very agreeable to declare to the whole World, that they are not able to reſiſt an oppoſing Author? Can Self-love find its account in raiſing a deſire to read thoſe Books in thoſe People, who would never buy them, upon any other account, than a Curioſity to be informed what it is the Magiſtrates have forbidden? Can Self-love, I ſay, which is ſo angry at the Contents of theſe Books, and ſo greedy of ſuppreſſing their Memory, be gratify'd by taking ſuch meaſures as directly tend to a clearer Information of the Publick in their moſt particular Contents? What Charm is there in inſerting the Sentence of prohibition of ſome Books in the Gazettes? Is it not the direct way to convince all Europe of the Scandalous neceſſity a man lies under of imploring the aſſiſtance of the Civil Magiſtrate for what he ought only to be obliged to his Pens (a)? I am apt to think that the Authors who take theſe Meaſures, don't at the bottom find them very ſatisfactory: 'Tis only a laſt ſhift to which they give the moſt conſolatory turn they poſſibly can. They endeavour to regain by virtue of their Credit, what they have loſt by their Adverſaries Pen: They would retain the Populace on their ſide; the Populace are always prone to judge the ſtrongeſt Party in the right: They would alſo prevent the Attacks of others; for how many are there who are ſilent at a Man's Injuſtice, only in proportion to the Good or Injury he is able to do by his Credit? Not to ſay that they hope a great many ignorant Readers will conclude a Book ſtuffed with Falſities, whoſe publication is forbid. It is true indeed, that ſeveral People are capable of this wretched Reaſoning; for want of conſidering that the Magiſtrates themſelves, even when they ſuppreſs a Book for Political Reaſons, do not pretend to prejudice the Publick againſt the Contents of it; they take no cognizance of them, nor do they ſet up for Judges. This ſeems one of the principal Motives which influences certain Authors to follow the ſame Conduct with Coſtar; a Conduct very diſhonourable, to ſay no worſe of it, and intirely Sophiſtical. Is it not a Sophiſm to change the ſtate of the queſtion? Was the Diſpute more or leſs betwixt Coſtar and Girac, concerning their reſpective Power with the Judges of the Chatelet? Did Mr. Girac, confined within his Province, pretend to have more Friends, or greater Intereſt in the Capital City, in order to ſolicite a Proceſs? The Queſtion was, whether Voiture's Thoughts were juſt or no, and whether he had been juſtly cenſur'd and ill defended. What does it avail to this Queſtion, to have intereſt enough with the Lieutenant Civil to ſuppreſs a Book?

(F) He was not accuſed without Proof.] It is very indecent for a Paſtor, a Prieſt, a Miniſter to exerciſe his Pen on Subjects of Gallantry and Raillery. Wherefore Mr. Coſtar who was a (b) Prieſt preferred to a Benefice, and alſo Arch-Deacon, forgot his Character, and all the Laws of Decency, when he employ'd his Wit in too licentious Gaieties with the other Sex, and in ſeveral places interſperſed his Letters with amorous Stories. His Adverſary has indeed cruelly perſecuted him on this Head, if a War ſo juſt deſerves that Name. On this Paſſage in a Letter of Coſtar to a Maid, Your nimble Feet dance to that degree of Perfection, that they mount above your Head, and help to ſhew the forked Tree, and repreſent a thouſand other diverting Sights; Girac ſays, (c) that when the Arch-deacon ſaw this young Gentlewoman in this pleaſant poſture, he was not ſo hard hearted as that Anachoret (d), who turned the Hair of ſome young Girls perfectly grey, becauſe they told him in raillery, that he durſt not ſee them naked. Mr. Coſtar, ſays he, is too gallant a Man to impoſe ſuch ſevere Penances on the Ladies; and if ſuch an Adventure ſhould happen to him, I dare ſwear for him that he had rather never have a gray hair himſelf than cover the Heads of thoſe unhappy Wretches with any ſuch (e). He will not pardon this Prieſt for ſaying in a Letter to a Lady, where he repreſents himſelf at the point of Death: (f) I cannot tell where I ſhall ſuffer my Purgatory: 'twou'd be a moſt agreeable conſolation, if I might be permitted to ſuffer it in your Chamber; I ſhould be ſtruck with ſuch an inexpreſſible joy to ſee you ſo charming, &c. Nor will he pardon the Pity he beſtows on one of the Graces on account of the impotence of her Husband. (g) He rails againſt the Poets for their Cruelty and Impertinence in marrying one of the Graces to Vulcan, and another to Sleep. Nevertheleſs (he goes on) the firſt was not wholly diſconſolate, if what a Queen of the Amazons ſaid be true, that lame Men liſe the beſt, ἄριστα χωλὸς οἰφεῖ. But " he deplores the miſerable condition of the ſecond, " ſince Virgil has told us that Sleep is ſoft, Et ſomno " mollior herba. An excellent quality in the Husband " of a Goddeſs perpetually young. 'Twas a mighty hap- " pineſs for him that Paſithea (ſo ſhe is called) was ſoluta " Zona, as were all the Graces, & ſoluti Gratiæ Zonis, " or elſe

" Quærendum aliunde foret (nervoſius illud)
" Quod poſſet zonam ſolvere virgineam. "

His Explication of theſe words in Horace, (h) Bacchum in remotis carmina rupibus vidi docentem, was not forgotten. I have cited it in the Article Sicyone. He is charged with groſſer Impurities (i) extracted from his Works in print: He is alſo cenſured for a Letter he wrote to his Phyſician, which indeed was not printed; but as he (k) diſtributed Copies of it in all parts, he was without ſcruple publickly blamed for it. He had ſtill ſome remains of a Fever on him, and finding two Nights ſucceſſively that Nature was very briſk, he wrote this agreeable News (l) to his Phyſician, deſiring to be inform'd whether he might rely on an old Proverb, which repreſents this Symptom as a good ſign of convaleſcence. This Letter being but ſhort and in Latin, I ſhall make no difficulty to Print it at large. (m) Febris mea longe remiſſior fuit quam fuerat hactenus, hac nocte placidiſſime quievi, haud ſcio an uſquam melius. Sub ortum Solis (neque enim tibi & medico & amiciſſimo viro quicquam reticere æquum eſt) valida tentigine, & ſatis diuturna & non inſuavi, quod & heri acciderat, correptus ſum. Luſit animus aliquantulum in umbra voluptatis, ſed ne de Teologo male ſentias, dormiebam. Vides mi colendiſſime, ſeu potius mi jucundiſſime ſenex, nondum in m funeratam eſſe eam partem corporis, cui apodixim defunctoriam ſcribere paratus eram. Vetus verbum eſt, id jam jam redituræ ſanitatis argumentum indubitatum eſſe. Verum uni tibi plus credo quam univerſis adagiis. Si commodum eſt ad me reſcribas velim hac de re quid ſentias, hoc eſt quid ſentire debeam. Ride, vale, & me ama, alioquin nec ridebo, nec valebo. Balzac having read this Letter, wrote to Coſtar amongſt other things (n): " Now that I ſee by your Billet to Mr. le Gouſt, " that you are not contented with Health alone, " but pretend to ſtrength, and look rather like a " vigorous Wreſtler than a Man that is barely well, " I don't know, &c. " We ought indeed to confeſs, that theſe Reproaches regarded Mr. Coſtar's Morals; but this was no reaſon why the Chatelet ſhould ſuppreſs Mr. Girac's Reply; ſince it could by no means be taken for a Libel, becauſe the Author put his Name to it, and proved his Accuſations.

(G) Rather engage the Judges to licenſe.] A Critical Book which pathetically repreſents to a Prieſt, the ill uſe he makes of his Time and Wit, is no unprofitable work. On the contrary, the publick good ſeems neceſſarily to require that ſome Men ſhould be bold enough to cenſure thoſe Eccleſiaſticks, whoſe life is not conformable to their Profeſſion. But this is to lead a life very incompatible with the Character of a Beneficed Prieſt and Arch-Deacon as Mr. Coſtar was, to ſet up for a Wit, and to ſpend the beſt part of ones time in reading Books of Gallantry, and writing to Ladies and Gentlemen on gay Subjects. One ought to leave this to the Voitures and Sarazins, and in general to thoſe whoſe Profeſſion does not reſtrain them from thoſe Trifles. Or if the Inclination be ſtrongly bent, and the Perſon have a happy Talent that way, he ought to keep in a lay-Capacity, and then he is free to Write Verſes and Letters of Gallantry at pleaſure. He may jeſt and trifle in his Books at diſcretion, and laugh at the ſour Cenſurer who is diſpleas'd at it. But if he enters on an Eccleſiaſtical ſtate, and takes on him the charge of Souls, or is only a Prieſt without Benefice, he ought to reſtrain his Tongue and his Pen from all thoſe freedoms. Nay, I think it were to be wiſhed, that the Rewards which the Voiture's, the Sarrazin's and other fine Wits have a juſt Title to, were not aſſign'd on the Revenues of the

Bbbbb Church

(b) Girac's Reply, Section 7. pag. 15.

(c) Ibid. pag. 19.

(e) Ibid. pag. 20.

(g) Girac, pag. 21.

(h) Od. 19. Lib. 2.

(i) See the Entretiens de Coſtar de Voiture pag. 200. Girac's Reply, pag. 23, 24. and the news Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſt. of Calviniſm; pag. 748.

(k) Girac, pag. 21.

(l) His Name was Mr. le Gouſt; a Phyſician of Niort.

(m) Girac, ibid.

(n) Balzac's choice Letters part. 2. l. 3. pag. 562. apud Girac, ibid.

to licence that to prohibit Girac's Book; Patin misrepresents this Controversie (H). One cannot sufficiently wonder at the niceness of Voiture's Friends, who pretended that Girac, for criticizing on him, deserv'd (I) Military Execution. The Passage which proves this, informs us that this Author was rich: As doth also a place (K) of Balzac. What I have said concerning Mr. de Girac in the Project of this Dictionary, shall be (L) one of the Remarks of this Article. You'll find in it the time of his Death, and with what Restriction one ought to understand an Elogy on him, concerning his Knowledge of the Oriental Tongues. The Judgment Church, (a) as they are but too often. It certainly never was the design of those who enriched the Church, that the Estates which they bestowed on it, should serve as a Recompence for amorous Poetry, Romances or Plays. Is it credible that those who pinch'd their Families, to bestow an estate upon such as serve at the Altar, ever design'd the maintenance of those who turn their studies the same way as Costar, and employ their Pen as he did? Is it possible to believe that they intended to give these sorts of Authors wherewithal to (b) keep a publick Table garnished with all sorts of Dainties? All things well consider'd, it cannot be deny'd, that such a Book as Girac's Reply was very proper to correct the Abuses, and for the future, to prevent a Clergy-man's distributing Copies of a Letter in which he acquaints his Physician with the resurrection of a thing, the mortification of which should have been one of his principal cares. It appears by Balzac's Reflection, that the Author of the Letter desired to be congratulated on the return of his Amorous Dreams. What an exorbitant indecency! Had he only desir'd to be praised for his imitation of Petronius in that Letter, he had justly deserved a Censure.

(H) Patin misrepresents this Controversy.] His Words, are—— "(c) A Second Tome of Mr. Costar's Letter is under the Press. Mr. Paul Thomas, "Sieur de Girac, Counsellor (d) of the Presidial of "Angoulême, and an intimate Friend of Mr. Balzac, "had a Dispute with Mr. Costar, in defence of Balzac against Voiture. There is something of it "Printed. Mr. de Girac has answer'd him, and sent "his Copy hither. Mr. Costar was advised of it "and has presented a Petition to hinder the Impression of the Book, and obtained an Order against the Printing of it: And what was already "begun was seiz'd; and yet Balzac is better than "Voiture." Who would not infer from these words, that Voiture was engaged in a Controversy with Balzac, and that Girac appear'd as Protector of the latter against the former? which is utterly false. Voiture never had any Dispute with Balzac: Balzac, after Voiture's Death, criticis'd his famous Sonnet of Uranie; but this was not the subject of the Quarrel betwixt Costar and Girac. If Guy Patin was not better informed in his other News from the Common-wealth of Learning than in this, unhappy are they who rely on him. Sorel had much better Intelligence, he (e) relates the Affair exactly as it was, and doth not forget to tell us, (f) That Girac*'s last Reply, tho' the Impression was stopp'd, was not long since Publish'd. Some are of Opiontion, adds he, that Mr.* Girac does very well to defend himself; others say, he ought not to have extended this quarrel beyond the death of Costar, who consequently cannot reply. These last words are liable to censure. Sorel speaks of Girac as of a Man who was alive in the Year 1667, when he had been dead four Years. He speaks of his Reply as of a Work just Published; and yet it was Printed (g) in the Year 1660. He ought to have blamed those who censured Girac for continuing this War after Costar's Death. Such Censures were very unreasonable, since Girac's reply was Printed in Costar's life time; and if it was not Sold, 'twas because Costar had Interest enough to hinder it. Was it then just under pretence that he was dead, that is to say, that he could no longer oppress his Adversary by his Interest with the Chatelet, to deprive the Author of his right of Publishing his Vindication, and the Bookseller of the means to recover the Mony spent for the Impression?

(I) Deserved military Execution.] It is Costar who informs us of it. "(h) To speak truth, a Man of "this Humour is very liable to be beaten, (I "mean with the Tongue and Pen) for we "don't live in an Age so licentious as that, when "the young Roman Gentlemen walked in the "Streets the whole day, with long Rods conceal'd "under their Robes, (i) to chastize the insolence "of those who dislik'd the Poet Lucilius, if they "were so unhappy as to fall in their way. Nevertheless Mr. Girac is in danger of quartering some "Gens d'Armes, if they pass through Angoulême; "and I wonder that he who is not used to neg"lect his Interest, but has always been very care"ful of his Affairs, should forget what a certain "Captain told him two or three years ago: out of "respect to the Marquis de Montausier, I will pre"vent my Company quartering upon you; he is a Lord "to whom I owe every thing: But 'tis on this condi"tion, that for the future you write no more against "Voiture (k). I can scarce imagin what could so effectually put Mr. de Girac in heart, notwithstanding "those menaces, unless he fancied that being a cele"brated Author, he had no occasion for the "recommendation of any body, and that his Book "alone would prove an inviolable safeguard against "the Soldiers." He afterwards alledges the consideration Alexander shew'd for Pindar's House, and that of Alfonsus King of Arragon for a Seat of Cicero; and concludes with these words: I know all this and something more; notwithstanding all which, if Mr. de Girac was my Friend, I would not advise him to depend on those great Examples; but to take care of better Security against the Captain Protector and Avenger of the Wits. Can any thing be more extravagant than this Captain's Pretension? He would have every body like Voiture; none must find any fault in that Author; and he who presumes to criticise on this Wit, is threatned of having his Company quarter'd in his Village. Is not this to prepare a fine Vengeance on account of a Friend? Is not this to introduce a Military Government in the Republick of Letters, the most free state in the World? These are the effects of prepossession: Voiture's Relations and Friends had a mind to make him the Pope of Wit, and to constitute him an Infallible and Orthodox Rule on that Subject. They should at least have been contented with the Excommunications of Parnassus against those who should dispute the infallibility of such a Pontif. But they threatened the quartering of Soldiers. A strange way of converting Hereticks in Wit? Does not this resemble the French Dragooning?

(K) As doth a place in Balzac.] Girac answering his Adversary on the Threats of this Captain Revenger of the Wits, declares; (m) That he had hitherto been so happy as to have no Soldiers quarter'd in his Village. He was then Lord of a Village (); and by what follows, it appears that his Lands were very well Wooded: (n) The Place in the Dissertation, which you desire should be clear'd, is a piece of his History. Those Silvæ which now employ (o) Mr. de Girac, are not Metaphorical ones, of the same nature with those of Statius or Politian. But in the common Language, it is a Wood which he has caused to be felled, and which he has sold for 1500 Pistoles. But if Diana and the Nymphs, the Dryades, and Hamadryads, Pan and the Sylvans; if this whole Train of petty Gods could but find a Poet at their Devotion, what Elegiacal Complaints, what Iambick Imprecations should we see levelled against another Poet, who has so cruelly chased them from their ancient Abode, who has wounded and murder'd the Nymphs with the hard blows of the Ax, which has given them the last fatal stroke, by felling the sacreed Trees in which they inhabited?

Non sine Hamadriadis fato, prostrata bipenni
Alta cadit quercus: clausam sub cortice Nympham
Mors eadem plantamque manet.

(L) Shall be one of the Remarks.] I freely declar'd that I thought Mr. Girac was in the wrong to blame Costar on account of the Lions Marrow, wherewith several Authors say that Achilles was fed: And thereupon I made the following Remark. By this we do not pretend to derogate from his Merit, or adjudge the Victory to his Adversary. It

---

(z) See the Article of [illegible] Remark. (a) See the Art. of [illegible] Remark M.

(b) The Menagiana of the 1st Dutch Ed. See this of Costar.

(c) In a Letter, dated [illegible] being the [illegible] of the last Edit. and the [illegible] of the [illegible].

(d) This doth not at all agree with Girac's Letter to Mr. de Montausier of the 6th of Mar. 1660 Printed at the beginning of his Reply, where he saith: Having all my Life profess'd my Hatred of Law-suits, and that I would as much as possible endeavour after that tranquility and ease of Mind, which are incompatible with the Fatigues, the Tricks and Quirks of the Bar; I heartily renounce the prosecution of Injuries which I have receiv'd. See also his Reply. Sect. 12. pag. 93.

(e) Bibl. Françoise, chap. 7. last Section

(f) Ibid. pag. 142. Edition of 1667.

(g) At Leiden, in 8.

(h) Suite de la Defense. p. 40, 41.

(i) [illegible] Lucilius, [illegible]

(k) [illegible]

(l) [illegible] Dissertation [illegible]

(m) In his Dissertation against Voiture, he says, Qui enim [illegible] in illis occupatus [illegible] plenus & infinitis [illegible] mine.

(n) Balzac, [illegible] p. [illegible] Says: My Friend, tho' as great a Poet, and of a Genius as highly elevated as the best Poets, is at present employ'd in greater Thoughts. For a small triple of five thousand Crowns, he has made a Complaisance of clearing the Shades, &c.

(o) Chevreau, Oeuvres meslées p. 350.

The Judgment of Mr. Chevreau concerning theſe two Celebrated Combatants, Girac and Coſtar, decides intirely for the former (M). I doubt not but the moſt Intelligent would agree with Chevreau, if they would take the pains to examine all the pieces of this Controverſy: Thoſe who ſhould ſearch to the bottom of this Diſpute, would find a new Reaſon to paſs Sentence againſt Coſtar, for uſing Mr. Balzac very Ill. On which account he is ſeverely Cenſured in the Preface to the Diſcourſes of the latter. Monſ. du Rondel, who when Young was a great admirer of Balzac, and is ſo ſtill as much as ever (N), was ſo incenſed at this Conduct of Coſtar, that he hardly forbore Writing againſt him.

THORIUS (Raphael) a Phyſician and Latin Poet, who Flouriſhed in England in the Reign of King James the Iſt. * A Letter of his is Printed de cauſa morbi & mortis Iſaaci Caſaubon. His complaint in Verſe on occaſion of Caſaubon's Death was alſo Publiſhed. His Poem on Tobacco (A △) is very much eſteem'd. I am of Opinion that he did not in the leaſt doubt the Truth of the Maxim, † that Water drinkers never make good Verſes. The Circumſtance of his Life, which gave him the greateſt Trouble, was perhaps Monſ. de Peireſc's Obliging (A) him to drink a large Glaſs of Water. King James deſired to hear the Story, which is very diverting.

TIBARENIANS,

If on the one ſide Coſtar's thoughts ſeem more ſhining and higher Coloured by the Sun of the Capital City, as Mr. de Balzac would ſay, it appears on the other ſide that Monſ. de Girac had more depth, and it was a great loſs that he died ſo Young. In a Word I readily ſubſcribe (m) with Monſ. Colomies, but with the reſtriction hereafter mentioned, to the fine Elogy which Monſ. de Balzac beſtows on Mr. de Girac in one of his Latin Letters, and which Mr. Colomies (n) cites, as well as to the praiſes which Balzac gives him in French (o); and to thoſe of Father Gaudin in the Preface to his Dictionary (p). According to that Preface Monſ. de Girac died the 2d. of January, 1663. Mr. Colomies makes him dye in April following. However his Death ſhould not have been wholly unknown, as it was to Sorel, when he Publiſhed his Bibliotheque Françoiſe, in 1664. and when he renewed and inlarged it in 1667, where he treats of the Controverſy betwixt Coſtar and Girac ſomewhat at large. On which Head alſo ſee Guy Patin's 74th Letter. The difference amongſt Authors concerning the Death of Illuſtrious Men is incredible: And yet that Subject doth not ſeem liable to many Variations.

The Reſtriction I promiſed is as follows. Mr. de Balzac writing to Scipio le Gaillard (ſo Mr. Coſtar (r) explains this Author's Scipioni jucundi) averts that Mr. Girac underſtood Latin, Greek and Hebrew to an incredible degree. (s) Habeo jam certe quicum non ſolum ſuaviſſimo ſermone horas conſumo, ſed etiam a quo recedo ſemper & melior & doctior. Paulum Thomam à Giraco, paternâ virtute, ſua virtute clariſſimum; rerum divinarum & humanarum cognitione inſtructum, à prima adoleſcentia: litteris Latinis, Græcis, Hebraicis ſupra quam credibile eſt, ornatum; omnibus denique & naturæ & artis præſidiis ad dicendum, ad ſcribendum paratum. From which Character Mr. Coſtar takes occaſion to Rally his Adverſary. He repreſents (t) him ſo deeply engaged with the Bulky Volumes of the Latins, Greeks, Hebrews, Arabians, &c. that he was leſs ſenſible of the Beauties of Modern Authors, than of thoſe that appear in ſome dead or oriental Language, and ſpending the beſt of his time on a Scholiaſt on Lycophron, or perhaps on Rabbi Nepthalim. On which account Monſ. Girac tells him: Perhaps you think (b) that you have odiouſly Reproached me, with what, if it were true, I ſhould take for a great Honour; but as I always act with ſincerity and truth, you may if you pleaſe be informed, that my Studies are not yet much advanced beyond the Greek and Latin Tongues; that I ſcarce underſtand the Principles of the Holy Languge, and am intirely Ignorant of the Arabick and Oriental Languages, which you mention to cry me down. This was acting like a Man of Honour who would not take advantage a of the flatteries of his Friend, to impoſe on the publick; he doth not deſerve that theſe words of Horace ſhould be applied to him, (c) Sed vereor ne cui de te plus quam tibi credas. This is properly to make a good uſe of this Diſtich of Cato:

Cum te aliquis laudat, judex tuus eſſe memento:
Plus aliis de te quam tu tibi credere noli.

If Mr. Colomies had obſerved Girac's Anſwer, he had not mentioned him in his Gallia Orientalis.

(M) The Judgment of Mr. Chevreau---decides intirely for Girac.] The particulars of this deciſion are theſe. "(d) I dare aver——that there is a very conſiderable difference betwixt Mr. de Girac, and Mr. Coſtar: "The firſt puſhes with all his Force; and the other "Shuffles and does not Pary at all; Or to ſpeak "plainer, Mr. Coſtar does his utmoſt to reſiſt truth "and reaſon by dint of common Places; and Contents himſelf with denying what the other proves. "To re-aſſume the former Figure. The one charges home and puts by every Paſs in his way: The "other Rallies as well as he can, and diſputes what "he is aſſured never to obtain. The Victor is aſtoniſhed at the Weakneſs of his Enemy; and the "Vanquiſhed rails at him with a good Grace.

(N) And is ſo ſtill as much as ever.] On his reading the firſt Tome of the Melanges of Vigneul Marville he wrote to me: "(e) Several other things "(f) pleaſe me in this Miſcellany: but there are two "or three which I do not like; particularly amongſt the reſt what he ſays of Balzac. Such a "Man ſhould not be mentioned without Reſpect and "Veneration. Without him our Language at this "time had been Wavering and Uncertain; and we "are obliged to him for being able to Speak and "Write. It is true that in the Examples he has left "us he ſeems to brave rather than Inſtruct us His "Elevation is ſo Lofty, ſo Nervous, ſo Majeſtical, "and he maintains himſelf ſo well in his extent and "height, that he is perfectly Inacceſſible. But it is not "his fault if no body has followed him: This cannot detract from his extraordinary Merit, the vigour of his courſe, and the beauty of his carrier; "he is rather the more Conſpicuous for it. Let the "Voitures be allowed to write handſomly, naturally "and in the common Style; herein they ſucceed very "well, and they cannot do better. But let us not be "angry with Balzac, for being exalted above "Mankind, by the moſt Charming, moſt Noble, "and moſt Glorious Attempt that was ever made. "Before him the ſublime Style was unknown in "France, and our Language was thought uncapable "of it. But he has plainly evinced the contrary; "and becauſe in opening our Eyes he has diſplayed "his Addreſs and Courage, we cannot pardon him "the diſcovering our Stupidity and Sloth. This is "the conſequence of Converſing with inſenſible "Wretches; we awake them to our prejudice, and "becauſe they cannot deſpiſe us, they will not fail to "hate us.

If you find here ſome lively Marks of the Admiration of Balzac, you may alſo obſerve the fertile effect of an Admiration ſo juſt. Mr. du Rondel clearly diſcovers that he is able to imitate what he ſo much values in this great Model of Majeſtick Eloquence.

(A △) His Poem on Tobacco is very much eſteemed.] The Oxford Catalogue, mentions an Engliſh and Latin Edition of it at London 1651. in 8. Hymnus Tabaci, or a Poem in Honour of Tobacco. Mr. Paſch, Philoſophy Profeſſor at Kiel, cites an Edition of Utrecht 1644. in 12. in the 6th Chap. (g) of his Treatiſe de inventis nov-antiquis. Mr. Konig (h) ſpeaks of an Edition of 1628. in quarto at Leyden. But this is not the firſt; for Mr. de Zuylichem, in the Year 1625 wrote ſome Verſes in Patologiam Raphaelis Thorii, which are at the end of momenta deſultoria. Where you will alſo find ſome Latin Verſes compoſed by the ſame Author and Thorius, one againſt the other by way of an Amicable Combat.

(A) Monſ. de Peireſc's obliging him to drink a large Glaſs of Water.] Mr. Peireſc dining at London with ſeveral

† Nulla placere diu nec vivere carmina poſſunt, Quæ ſcribuntur aquæ potoribus. Horat. epiſt. 19. lib. 1.

(e) Monſ. du Rondel's Letter from Maeſtricht, dated July 10. 1700.

(f) He Remarked to me ſeveral places which he liked in that Book.

(g) Pag. 475. of the 2d. Edit. at Leipſick, 1700.

(h) Konig Biblioth. pag. 805.

TIBARENIANS, † an Aſiatick People bordering on the Euxin Sea. They were Famous for two very remarkable Cuſtoms, the latter of which ſeems conſequential of the former. They * were extremely addicted to Sporting, and Laughing, in which they placed their chief Good; and when their Wives were Delivered, they kept their Beds, played the Sick Perſons, and received from their Spouſes all the Nurſing attendance which in other places is rendred to Child-Bed Women. It is plain this Cuſtom was only owing to their prevalent buffooning Humour, which extracted matter of Diverſion from every thing. Several Authors (Y) mention this laſt Cuſtom, which was alſo in uſe α in the Iſle of Corſica. Lancelotti of Perugia (Z) unjuſtly inſults Diodorus Siculus on this Subject. Theodoret β obſerves that after the Tibarenians had received the Goſpel, they abrogated a Cruel Law obſerved amongſt them, which obliged them to throw their Old People head-long from a Precipice.

TIBUR, a City of Italy near to, and older than Rome, called at preſent Tivoli. It was Built on the River γ Anio, either by the Aborigines, according to ‖ Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, or by a parcel of ‡ Peloponneſian Greeks, as ſeveral Authors believe. It was in a very Flouriſhing Condition (A) when Æneas Landed in Italy, if we may believe Virgil, and we find that it made a long and vigorous Reſiſtance † [illegible] Aſperia.

* [illegible] Ephorus lib. 4. inquit Tibarenos ſtudio ludendi & ridendi teneri & maximam felicitatem hoc judicare. Id ib. See alſo Pomponius Mela lib. 1. c. 19. who ſays Tibareni Chalybas attingunt quibus in riſu luſuque ſummum bonum eſt.

α Diodor. Sicul. lib. 5. c. 14.

β Theodoret. de Græc. affect. ſerm. 9. p. 615.

γ Now called Teverone.

‖ Dionyſ. Halicarn. antiq. Roman. l. 1. c. 16. p. m. 14.

‡ See the remark A.

ſeveral Learned Men, could by no means obtain a Diſpenſation from a Health which Dr. Thorius impoſed. The Glaſs was extraordinary large, for which reaſon Mr. Peireſc excuſed himſelf a long while, and alledged a thouſand reaſons; but all in vain, he was obliged to drink it: But before-hand he contracted with the Doctor that he ſhou'd drink a Health in his turn. After which he filled the ſame Glaſs with Water, drank it, and named the Health to Thorius. At which thunder-ſtruck, and finding no way to avoid it, after ſeveral profound ſighs he put his Mouth a thouſand times to the brim of the Glaſs and as often withdrew it: He call'd to his Aſſiſtance all the Sentences of the Greek and Latin Poets, and was almoſt all day at ſeveral times in emptying this accurſed Cup. You will find it more agreeably related by Gaſſendus, in the following words. (k) Contigit ut in quodam virorum doctorum convivio, Doctor Thorius ipſi Peireskio ingenti Scypho præbiberit: Ac ille quidem ſe excuſare, ob vaſtitatem pateræ; ob merum inſolitum; ob imbecillem ſtomachum; ob compotandi infrequentiam: verum cùm nihil admitteretur, petiit, ut ſaltem ſibi liceret, poſtquam Thorio feciſſet ſatis, ſuo arbitrio præbibere. Annuerunt omnes, ac tum aſſumptis, quaſi adigente neceſſitate animis, fœcundum hauſit calicem, eodemque mox aquâ oppleto, Thorio intentans præbibit, totumque rurſus (tanquam inſolitum temperaturus merum) abſorpſit. Ille quaſi fulmine ictus, delapſuſve è nubibus, vix tandem ad ſe rediit, & quia ex condicto agebatur, neque reſilire fas erat, tam longa ſuſpiria è pectore duxit, toties admovit, removitque ora, tot interea carmina ex omnibus Græcis, Latiniſque Poetis profudit, ut diem penè contriverit inſtillandæ aquæ in inſuetum guttur. Atque id ipſum eſt, quod Rex cùm audiiſſet ex aliis, ex Peireskii ore accipere voluit.

(Y) Several Authors mention this —— Cuſtom.] I ſhall content my ſelf with citing theſe Verſes of Appollonius.

(a) Σώοντο πάρεξ Τιβαρηνίδα γαῖαν:
Ἔνθ᾽ ἐπεὶ ἄρ κε τέκωνται ὑπ᾽ ἀνδράσι τέκνα γυναῖκες,
Αὐτοὶ μὲν στενάχουσιν ἐνὶ λεχέεσσι πεσόντες.
Κράατα δησάμενοι· ταὶ δ᾽ εὖ κομέουσιν ἐδωδῇ
Ἀνέρας, ἠδὲ λοετρὰ λεχώϊα τοῖσι πένονται.

Eruperunt ad Tibarenorum terram.
Ibi, cum è viris gravidæ mulieres reddiderunt fœtum,
Ipſi verſantur in gemitu, & puerperio cubant,
Capitibus circumvinctis: illæ rurſus molliter curant eſcis
Præbitis viros, & puerperæ ipſis lavacra calfaciunt.

Valerius Flaccus ſays (b) the ſame of them; and if the Teſtimony of two Poets be inſufficient, the Reader may beſides find that of an Hiſtorian in the Remark A of the Article Nymphodorus.

(Z) Lancelotti of Perugia unjuſtly Inſults.] He Publiſhed a Treatiſe entitled, Farfalloni de gli antichi Hiſtorici, where he treats (c) Diodorus Siculus very ill "becauſe in the 14th Chap. of his 5th Book, "he affirms that the Corſican Women as ſoon as delivered, quitted their Beds to their Husbands who "lay in in their ſtead. Nothing is more common in "the greateſt part of America; or what is reported "of Canada, and ſeveral other places, ought to paſs "for Impoſture: Which is very unlikely, conſidering "the Character of the People who inform us of it, and "that they cannot all agree to deceive us. I wonder that la Mothe le Vayer doth not mention the Tibarenians and the Antient Spaniards. (d) Γεωργοῦσί τε γὰρ αὗται, τεκοῦσαί τε διακονοῦσι τοῖς ἀνδράσιν ἐκείνους ἀνθ᾽ ἑαυτῶν κατακλίνασαι. Mulieres enim agros colunt, & cum pepererunt, ſuo loco viros decumbere jubent, iiſque miniſtrant. Mr. Colomies (e) believed that this pleaſant Cuſtom which formerly obtained in Bearn, that when a Woman was Delivered ſhe did riſe, and put her Husband to Bed, was derived from the Spaniards. He adds, that it was practiſed by the Tartars, according to the Teſtimony of Paulus Venetus, chap. 41. of the 2d Book of his Voyages. Note, that various cauſes might engage theſe Nations to this Cuſtom; for it is not probable that the Humour of turning Humane Life into Ridicule, in order to attain the Felicity which they placed in Laughter, engaged the Antient Corſicans and the American Nations to agree with the Tibarenians in this practice. I wou'd willingly be informed on what reaſons the Nations of Canada &c. found this uſage. Would they by the hopes of a delicious Food excite a Man to get more Children; or do they believe that playing the Nurſe would make him leſs willing to get his Wife with Child? But perhaps we ſhou'd find our ſelves very much puzzled to diſcover a reaſon for ſuch a ridiculous Uſage.

(A) In a very flouriſhing Condition when Æneas Landed in Italy.] Virgil reckons it amongſt the great Cities which Armed againſt the Trojans.

Quinque (f) adeò magnæ, poſitis incudibus, urbes
Tela novant, Atina potens, Tiburque ſuperbum,
Ardea, Cruſtumerique & turrigeræ Antemnæ.

Leandro Alberti ſo wretchedly miſunderſtood this place, that he aſſures us that Tibur was one of the Cities which forged Arms for Æneas. N'e fatto anche memoria, ſays he (g), d'eſſa città da Vergilio nel ſettimo libro annoverandola fra quelle cinque città che fabricarono l'armi ad Enea coſi, Quinque adeo, &c.

Virgil in the ſame Book mentions their two Chiefs who went to the War againſt Æneas:

Tum (h) gemini fratres Tiburtia mœnia linquunt,
Fratris Tiburti dictam cognomine gentem, Catillusque, acerque Coras, Argiva juventus.

Lloyd makes uſe of this paſſage to prove that Catillus and Coras built Tibur; but he Falſifies the Text, by reading mœnia condunt inſtead of mœnia linquunt. This is a way to make Citations prove whatever we pleaſe, and to deceive the poor Reader. But we ought not to look for an Authority for the building of this City in theſe words of Virgil, but in thoſe of his Commentator Servius. De Græcia, ſays he (i), tres fratres venerunt ad Italiam: Catillus, Coras, Tybur vel Tyburnus. Hi ſimul omnes unam fecere civitatem & eam de fratris majoris nomine Tybur appellaverunt: licet & alias fecerint ſinguli. Pliny aſcribes the Foundation of this City to one of theſe three only, who he tells us was Tiburtus the Son of Amphiraus. I have elſe where (k) cited his words, which affording ſomething very particular, I would adviſe the Reader to turn to them. Others pretend that the three (k) Gaſſendus in vita Peireskii, lib. 2. ad ann. 1606. Operum tom. 5. pag. 263. col. 2.

---

(a) Apollonius, Argonaut. lib. 2. v. 1012. p. m. 242.

(b) Valer. Flaccus, Argonaut. lib. 5. v. 148.

(c) La Mothe le Vayer, Obſervations ſur la compoſition des Livres tom. 15. of his Works p. 50. edit. of Paris, 1681. in 12. he cites the 9th Fartalloni.

(d) Strabo lib. 3. pag. m. 114.

(e) Colomies, mélanges hiſtoriques pag. 11.

(f) Virgil. Æneid. l. 7. v. 629.

(g) Leandro Alberti, deſcritt. di tutta l'Italia fol. 147. verſo, edit. Venet. 1561.

(h) Virgil. ib. v. 670.

(i) Servius in Virgil. Æn. 7. v. 670.

(k) In the Remark M of the Article Amphiaraus.

ſtance againſt the Roman Arms †, before it ſubmitted to that Victorious Republick. To which it was at laſt Conſtrained in the Year of Rome * 403. It is reported of this City, that they ſo haughtily Upbraided the Romans with their Services to that Republick, that their Deputies could obtain no other Anſwer than, a you are Proud. This City diſcovered a particular Devotion (B) for Hercules, in Honour of which God, they built a moſt Magnificent Temple. She alſo Zealouſly Worſhipped the God (C) Tiburnus. The Romans built ſeveral Country Houſes in the Territories of this City, which hath alſo been cuſtomary in the latter Ages. The Inhabitants of Tibur were put to the ſword by Totila's Soldiers in 545. as Procopius informs us. The German Wars ruined this City: Frederick Barbaroſſa ‡ cauſed the Walls to be re-built, and enlarged it. Pope Pius the IId, ordered a Fortreſs to be built there, at the Entrance of which is the following Inſcription of Giovanni Antonio Campani.

Grata ‖ bonis, inviſa malis, inimica ſuperbis
Sum tibi Tibur enim ſic Pius inſtituit.

Lloyd

three Brothers mentioned by Servius were Amphiraus's Grandſons, and the Sons of Catillus. (l) Tibur, ſicut Cato facit teſtimonium, a Catillo Arcade præfecto claſſis Evandri: ſicut Sextius, ab Argiva juventute. Catillus enim Amphiarai filius poſt prodigialem patris apud Thebas interitum Oeclei (m) avi juſſu, cum omni fœtu ver ſacrum miſſus tres liberos in Italia procreavit, Tiburtum, Coram, Catillum, qui depulſis ex oppido Siciliæ veteribus Sicanis, a nomine Tiburti fratris natu maximi urbem vocaverunt. Salmaſius's Cenſure on this paſſage of Solinus is very unjuſt. He ſtrangely exclaims againſt this Author. (n) Sanum putamus fuiſſe Solinum cum hæc ſcriberet? Quis Siciliam pro Italia ſanus dixit? ——Scio Sicanos Italiam olim tenuiſſe —— Sed Italiam dictam fuiſſe Siciliam, nemo, quod ſciam, prodidit; falſiſſimum igitur, & abſurdiſſimum eſt, quod heic narrat Solinus. But preſently he grows ſomewhat cooler, he ſuppoſes the Fault is owing to ſome wretched Pedant who foiſtered a Gloſs into the Text of this Author. (o) Sed fortaſſe ita ſcripſerat: qui depulſis veteribus Sicanis, a nomine Tiburti fratris natu maximi urbem vocaverunt, cum ſciolus aliquis heic Sicanos legeret, ad oram videtur addidiſſe, ex oppido Siciliæ quia ſcilicet putaret Sicanos non alibi quam in Sicilia fuiſſe. He did not obſerve that what he cites nine or ten Lines after confounds all his Criticiſms. (p) Quinimo Siculos illos veteres Tibur oppidum tenuiſſe ſcribit Dionyſius lib. 1. περὶ οἷς, inquit, καὶ ἐς τόδε χρόνου, μέρος τι τῆς πόλεως ὀνομάζεται Σικελιών. That is, part of the City Tibur is yet called Sicilia or Sicilium. Is not this a manifeſt Evidence that this place was ſo called before Tiburtus and his Brothers drove out the Sicanians? Why then doth Salmaſius declame againſt either Solinus or the preſent Text of his Book? Obſerve that Catillus paſſed for the Principal Founder of Tibur. (q) Hinc Tibur Catille tuum, as Silius Italicus hath it: To which we may add theſe two lines of Horace:

Nullam (r), Vare, ſacrâ vite priùs ſeveris arborem
Circa mite ſolum Tiburis, & mœnia Catili.

That this City was was of Greek Original, is unanimouſly confirmed by a vaſt crowd of Authors.

Tibur (ſ) Argeo poſitum colono
Sit meæ ſedes utinam ſenectæ!

And Ovid as clearly:

(t) Jam mœnia Tiburis udi
Stabant, Argolicæ quæ poſuere manus.

See alſo (a) Strabo, (b) Martial and Artemidorus cited by Stephanus Byzantinus (c).

Nor ought we to forget Servius's Commentary on theſe Words, Tiburque ſuperbum in the 7. Æneid. Aut nobile, ſays he (d), aut per tranſitum tetigit illud, quod cum aliquando a Senatu auxilia poſcerent Tyburtes ſub commemoratione beneficiorum, hoc tantum a Senatu reſponſum acceperunt, ſuperbi eſtis.

(B) A particular Devotion for Hercules, in Honour of which God they Built a moſt Magnificent Temple.] Statius ranks Tibur amongſt the Four Places where this Deity was principally Worſhipped.

Nec (e) mihi plus Nemee, priſcumque habitabitur Argos, Nec Tiburna domus, Soliſque cubilia Gades.

This Temple was one of thoſe Repoſitories where the Richeſt Treaſures were laid up. Auguſtus on occaſion drew large Sums from thence as well as from the Capitol, the Temple of Antium, and that of Lanuvium, for which he obliged himſelf to pay Intereſt: And Appian (f) who relates this, adds, that in his time a great quantity of holy Treaſures were kept there. The following Lines evince that the Oracles were frequently conſulted in the Temple of Tibur:

Quod (g) ni templa darent alias Tirynthia ſortes,
Et Prœneſtinæ poterant migrare ſorores.

This verſe is part of a Silva written by Statius in Praiſe of Manlius Vopiſcus's Country Seat near Tibur. The Oracle of Prœneſte ſaith Statius, would be induced to leave its reſidence, and remove to this charming Place, if the Temples of Hercules were not already occupied by other Oracles. The Commentators on this Place are very much puzled. Sabellicus owns (h) that he hath never met with any thing relating to the Herculean Oracle of Tibur, and is inclined to believe that this paſſage rather hints at the Oracle of Albunea, a Deity, Worſhipped in conjunction with Hercules. And to this purpoſe are applyed the following Words, (i) quodque Albuna ſacras Tiberis per flumina ſortes, portarit: tho' with very little Reaſon, for this place hath no Relation to a Tiburtine Oracle, but to the Books which a Sybil brought to Rome. Another Commentator imagines that the following Lines of Propertius afford an Authentick Teſtimony.

Nam (l) quid Prœneſtis dubias, ô Cynthia, ſortes,
Quid petis Ææi mœnia Telegoni?
Curve te in Herculeum deportant eſſeda Tibur?
Appia cur toties te via ducit anum?

From hence it clearly appears, ſays Barthius (l), that Cynthia went to Tibur to conſult the Oracle, and was it not the Oracle of Hercules? I anſwer that Propertius doth not found this Voyage to Tibur on this motive. What he hints concerning the Oracle is only in the firſt Verſe, and Tibur is no more concerned in it, than the Walls of Telegonus, that is Tuſculum, and the only inference that can be made with regard to Tibur is that here it hath the Epithet of Herculeum: Which we may alſo be informed of by Silius Italicus.

Quoſque (m) ſub Herculeis taciturno flumine muris Pomifera arva creant Anienicolæque Catilli;

and by ſeveral Epigrams of another (n) Author. Leandro Alberti has converted this Epithet into a proper Name, and to compleat his miſtake, he cites Strabo as well to prove this, as that the City of Tibur was alſo called Cataracta. (o) Fu altreſi nominata queſta citta (ſecondo Strabone) Herculeum —— era anche nominata Caterratta. When in truth Strabo only ſaith that there was a Temple of Hercules and a Cataract there; that is, that the River Anio fell there with a rapid Force from the Precipice of a Hill into a Valley. (p) Τίβυρα μὲν, ἐν ᾧ τὸ Ἡράκλειον καὶ ὁ καταῤῥάκτης, ὃν ποιεῖ -- ὁ Ἀνίων ἀφ᾽ ὕψους μεγάλου καταπίπτων εἰς φάραγγα βαθεῖαν. Tibure fanum eſt Herculis & preceps aquæ dejectus (cataractam vocant) quem facit Anio——ab excelſo loco in convallem dejiciens ſeſe profundam.

Aulus Gellius informs us of a very fine Library in this Temple. (q) Promit è bibliotheca Tiburti, quæ tunc in Herculis templo ſatis commode inſtructa libris erat, Ariſtotelis librum.

(C) They alſo zealouſly Worſhipped the God Tiburnus.] Conſult Cluverius in the 4th Chap. of the 3d. Book of his Italia antiqua, and the Commentators on theſe Words of Horace: (r) Et præceps Anio, & Tiburni lucus.

(D) Several Country-Houſes.] The Air all about this place was Healthful, good and very Temperate: The Land being watered by an infinite Number of

Rivulets

† See [illegible] Trellius [illegible]
* According to Calviſius, p. m. [illegible] According to Sigonius in Faſt. in the Year 399.
a See the Remark A at the end.
‖ Leandro Alberti deſcritt. di tutta l'Ital. f. l. m. 249.
‡ Id. eod. ind.

(l) Solin. cap. 8. p. m. 13.
(m) Leandro Alberti [illegible] ſupra [illegible]
(n) Salmaſ. exercit. Plin. in Solin. p. 61.
(o) Id. ib.
(p) Id. ib.
(q) Sil. Italic. l. 8. p. m. 345.
(r) Horat. ode 18. l. 1.
(ſ) Id. od. 6. lib. 2.
(t) Ovidius l. 4. Faſtor.
(a) Strabo lib. 5. pag. 165.
(b) Mart. epig. 57. lib. 4.
(c) Steph. Byzant. voce Τίβυ-ρις.
(d) Servius in Virgil. Æneid. 7. v. 630.
(e) Statius Silva 1. lib. 3. ſub fin. pag. m. 55.
(f) Appian. lib. 5. de bell. civili. pag. m. 339.
(g) Statius Silv. 3. lib. 1. v. 79. p. m. 55.
(h) See Barthius in Statium Silv. 3. lib. 1. p. 107.
(i) Tibullus eleg. 5. lib. 2.
(l) Propert. lib. 2. eleg. 32. pag. m. 476.
(l) Vides clare & Tibur petiiſſe Cynthiam, ad capiendas ſortes: quæ autem illæ niſi Herculeæ cum hujus præcipue numen hic jungatur. Barth. ib. pag. 108.
(m) Silius Italicus lib. 4. pag. m. 172.
(n) Martial. epig. 13. lib. 1. & epig. 62. l. 4. &c.
(o) Leandro Alberti ubi ſupra.
(p) Strab. lib. 5. pag. 164.
(q) Aul. Gellius lib. 19. c. 5.
(r) Horat. ode 7. lib. 1.

Lloyd is extremely miſtaken when he talks of the Mountain of Tibur, as of a place Famous (E) for the Ivory found there. He had better have been ſilent on this Head, and have mentioned the (F) Quarries with which thoſe parts abounded. We muſt not forget the Fountain and (G) Goddeſs Albunea, one of the moſt Memorable things in the Neighbourhood of Tibur.

TILLI

Rivulets was very fertile. 'Tis then no wonder if the Romans Built there ſo many Country Seats, planted ſo many Orchards, and made this place ſo much the Seat of their rural Diverſions. The Emperor Auguſtus from time to time retired thither. (s) Ex ſeceſſibus præcipue frequentavit maritima, inſulaſque Campaniæ, aut proxima urbi oppida, Lanuvium, Præneſte, Tibur, ubi etiam in porticibus Herculis templi perſæpe jus dixit. The Emperour Hadrian (t) Built a Magnificent Palace there; in the Neighbourhood of which Zenobia had a Solitary retirement. (v) Manlius Vopiſcus had a very fine Houſe in this Territory, which Statius (w) hath pompouſly deſcribed. Cetronius who was Guilty of ſuch enormous Extravagancies in Building, had a Palace here which diſgraced the Temple of Hercules.

Ædificator (x) erat Cetronius, & modo curvo
Littore Cajetæ, ſumma nunc Tiburis arce,
Nunc Præneſtinis in montibus, alta parabat
Culmina villarum, Græcis longeque petitis
Marmoribus vincens Fortunæ, atque Herculis ædem.

Shall we forget Horace, who had a Houſe there which he frequently reſided at, and ſo earneſtly deſired might be (y) the fixed retreat of his Old Age? (z) Vixit plurimum in ſeceſſu ruris ſui Sabini aut Tiburtini: domuſque ejus oſtenditur circa Tiburtini lucum. He informs us that Munatius Plancus had a very Beautiful Houſe (aa) there. What I Advanced in the beginning of this Remark might be proved by a Crowd of Witneſſes, but I ſhall content my ſelf with a few only.

Cum (bb) Tiburtinas damnet Curiatius auras
Inter laudatas ad Styga miſſus aquas.
Nullo fata loco poſſis excludere: cum mors
Venerit, in medio Tibure Sardinia eſt.

Theſe Verſes are made on the Death of a Man, whoſe Life the reſtorative Air of Tibur could not ſave: And the following were by the ſame Author addreſſed to Fauſtinus, who enjoyed the refreſhing Breezes of this Country in the Dog Days.

Herculeos (cc) colles gelida vos vincite bruma,
Nunc Tiburtinis cedite frigoribus.

I have already cited Silius Italicus, who calls the adjacent Lands pomifera arva; to which may be added theſe Verſes of Horace.

Et (dd) præceps Anio, & Tiburni lucus, & uda Mobilibus pomaria rivis.

Chriſtian Rome hath not been leſs Charmed with the Pleaſures of Tivoli; for Leandro Alberti (ee) relates that the Prelates of the Court of Rome, anciently paſſed the Summer in this refreſhing Air. Cardinal Hippolyto d'Eſte, as Moreri obſerves, Built a very fine Palace there adorned with the moſt Magnificent Gardens in the World. Uberto Folietta hath Publiſhed a deſcription of it which well deſerves Reading. See alſo the Itineraries of Italy, particularly thoſe of Andreas Schottus, and Geronimo Capugnani.

(E) Lloyd is extremely miſtaken when he talks —— as of a Place Famous for the Ivory found there.] He may juſtly be accuſed of two groſs Faults. Tiburtinus mons, ſaith he, locus ebore notiſſimus; and immediately after he cites two Verſes of Martial, one (a) out of the 12 Epigram of the 7th Book, and the other (b) out of the 28th of the 8th Book. He plainly means that the Mountain of Tibur produced Ivory: whereby it appears that he was Ignorant that Elephants Teeth are the only Ivory in the World. For what Theophraſtus (c) ſaith on this Head amounts to nothing, and can by no means concern our Tiburtine Mountain. This is Mr. Lloyd's firſt error. His Second is that the firſt Verſe of Martial does not mention Ivory; and that the ſenſe of the Second is not what he ſuppoſes. He could make no manner of uſe of the firſt Verſe without citing the Poet's whole thought; which if he had done, all his Readers would have diſcovered that he had produced a very ill proof. Let us by the way from hence infer, that 'tis good to diſtruſt all paſſages cited by halves under the ſpecious pretext of avoiding prolixity. Is it not better to be prolix than to deceive the Readers? It is my Maxim, for which Reaſon I have generally taken care that my Citations ſhould take in the Authors whole thought. An example of the ill-effects of imperfect quotations is Mr. Lloyd, who only cites the firſt Verſe, and that falſly, of the whole Epigram, which runs thus,

Dum (d) Tiburtinis albeſcere collibus audit
Antiqui dentis fuſca Lycoris ebur,
Venit in Herculeos colles: quid Tiburis alti
Aura valet? parvo tempore nigra redit.

Martial's thought is that Lycoris having heard that old Ivory whitened on the Mountain of Tibur, went thither; but inſtead of bleaching her Tawny Complexion, ſhe turned Black in a ſmall ſpace of time. He had made uſe of the ſame raillery before.

Tibur (e) in Herculeum migravit nigra Lycoris
Omnia dum fieri candida credit ibi.

Ramirez de Prado (f) from Pliny aſſures us, that the Cool Air of Tibur improved Ivory to a purer White. He cites alſo Propertius and Silius Italicus, one of which ſaith.

Ramoſis (g) Anio qua pomifer incubat arvis,
Et nunquam Herculeo numine pallet ebur;

And the other.

Quale micat (h) ſemperque novum eſt, quod Tiburis aura
Paſcit (i) ebur.

It plainly appears that Mr. Lloyd hath impertinently cited the Second place of Martial, ſince it doth not ſignify that the Tiburtin Mountain furniſhed Ivory; but only that the Air there had the Virtue to blanch and brighten it as well as to repair it.

(F) The excellent quarries with which thoſe parts abounded.] Strabo (k) obſerves that they Furniſhed Stone for the greateſt part of the Edifices of Rome. The Tiburtin Stones were in great eſteem; they were proof againſt all Injuries of the Weather; but the Fire ſoon deſtroyed them. (l) Tiburtini (lapides) ad reliqua fortes, vapore diſſiliunt. Theſe Words of Pliny will become more intelligible by a Compariſon with theſe: (m) Tiburtina vero & quæ eodem genere ſunt omnia, ſufferunt & ab oneribus & a tempeſtatibus injurias: ſed ab igni non poſſunt eſſe tuta: Simulque ut ſunt ab eo tacta, diſſiliunt & diſſipantur, ideo quod temperatura naturali parvo ſunt humore. Pliny relates as a witty repartee what Cicero ſaid to the People of Chios, who out of oſtentation ſhewed him their Walls of party coloured Marble. I ſhould much more admire them, ſaid Cicero, if they had been Built with Tiburtine Stone. (n) Primum, ut arbitror, verſicolores iſtas maculas Chiorum lapicidinæ oſtenderunt, cum exſtruerent muros, faceto in id M. Ciceronis ſale: omnibus enim oſtentabant ut magnificum. Multo, inquit, magis mirarer, ſi Tiburtino lapide feciſſetis. A very Learned Man tells us that if (o) theſe Stones had been tranſported to the Iſle of Chios, they would perhaps have been more eſteemed becauſe far fetched; which is not unlikely: But I do not believe that Cicero's raillery turned on this; he ſeems rather to have meant this: You buy your Marble very Cheap, your Iſle produces it, don't brag therefore of the ſumptuouſneſs of your Buildings. Your Riches and Expences would appear more magnificent, if your Materials were brought from Tibur.

(G) We muſt not forget the Fountain and Goddeſs Albunea.] Let us begin this Note with a paſſage of Virgil.

At (p) rex ſollicitus monſtris, oracula Fauni
Fatidici genitoris adit, lucoſque ſub altâ
Conſulit Albuneâ: nemorum quæ maxima ſacro
Fonte ſonat, ſævumque exhalat opaca mephitin.
Hinc Italæ gentes, omniſque Oenotria tellus,
In dubiis reſponſa petunt.

I omit the remainder of this Paſſage, and ſhall only hint that it informs us, that thoſe who conſulted this Oracle ſlept on the Skins of their Victims, and ſleeping received their Anſwer. It doth not clearly appear from theſe words of Virgil, whither the God Faunus reſided in the Albunean Grove; for the Laws of Grammar will very well allow us to believe that King Latinus conſulted the Oracle of Faunus, and the ſacred Albunean Groves, that is to ſay, that he Informed himſelf of the Pleaſure of the Gods in two different places: But yet the moſt reaſonable meaning

(s) Sueton. in Aug. c. 72.

(t) See the Remark I. on the Article Hadrian.

(v) See the Remark C. of the Article Zenobia.

(w) Stat. Silva. 3. lib. 1.

(x) Juven. ſat. 14. v. 86.

(y) See the Remark A. Letter. f.

(z) Sueton, in vita Horatii.

(aa) Seu te fulgentia ſignis Caſtra tenent, ſeu denſa tenebit Tiburis umbra tui. Horat od. 7. lib. 1.

(bb) Martial. epig. 60. lib. 4.

(cc) Idem epig. 57. lib. 4.

(dd) Horat. ubi ſupra.

(ee) Leandro Alberti ubi ſupra fol. 148.

(a) De Tiburtinis albeſcere collibus audit. Mart.epig. 12. l. 7.

(b) Et Tiburtino monte quod albet ebur. Id. epigr. 28. lib. 8.

(c) Theophraſtus auctor eſt & ebur foſſile candido & nigro colore inveniri. Plin. lib. 36. c. 18.

(d) Martial. epigr. 12. lib. 7.

(e) Idem epigr. 62. lib. 4.

(f) Evenire itaque cum ſciret ebur credidiſſe fieri [illegible] gidiſſima Tiburis aura ut Plin. refertur. Lau. Ramirez de Prado in Mart. epig. 62. lib. 4.

(g) Propert. eleg. 7. lib. 4. ſub fin.

(h) Silius Italicus lib. 12. p. m. 490.

(i) Paſcit, dixit pro ſuſtentat & conſervat. Ramir. de Prado ubi ſupra.

(k) Strab. lib. 5. pag. 164.

(l) Plin. lib. 36. c. 22. pag. m. 314.

(m) Vitruvius lib. 2. cap. 7.

(n) Plinius ubi ſupra cap. 6. pag. 2[illegible].

(o) Rem vulgaris in eam advectus inſulam accepiſſet fortaſſis ab loci unde peteretur intercapedine pretium. Harduin. in Plin. ib.

(p) Virgil. Æn. lib. 7. v. 81.

TILLI or THILLI, a Lordſhip (D △) in Brabant, which afforded a Title to John Count de Tilli, who was Born there, and has been one of the greateſt Captains of the XVIIth Century. He is mentioned in Moreri's Dictionary, under the word Tferclas the name of the Family of this Famous General. His Eldeſt Brother's Grand-Sons * at preſent make a very conſiderable Figure. There are three Brothers of them, all called Counts de Tilli. One is Canon of Liege; and the two other bear Arms. One of which is General of the Troops of Liege, and has been raiſed to the Dignity of a Prince (Z △ △) by the King of Spain. The other by his long Services hath been advanced to the firſt Employments in the Dutch Army. He Married a Siſter of the Count of Reckheim, Biſhop of Chur, and Canon of Cologne and Saltzburg, a Lord who by his vaſt Merit and Exalted Genius ſupports the Illuſtrious Nobility of his Houſe.

* The Letters of 1696. Mention him continually.

TIMÆUS,

ing of theſe words ſeems to be, that the King conſulted the Oracle of Faunus in the Sacred Albunean Grove. Againſt which a ſmall difficulty ariſes, which is, that no Perſon (that I know) has hitherto informed us that there was any Oracle of Faunus at Tibur. This City adored Hercules as their Chief Divinity. Their other Deities were Tiburnus and Albunea: Faunus was not talked of here. If we ſhould urge that Virgil was not here concerned to Accommodate his Fictions to Tradition, it would perhaps be more true than probable. However we may obſerve that Albunea was at the ſame time the Name of (q) a Grove, a Fountain and a Deity of the (r) Mountain of Tibur. She only appears under the Notion of a Fountain in theſe Words of Horace, (ſ) & domus Albuneæ reſonantis: In the above quoted Words of Virgil ſhe appears under the Notion of a Wood as well as of a Fountain; and the following place of Lactantius elevates Her to a Goddeſs: (t) Decimam Tiburtinam, nomine Albuneam, quæ Tiburi colitur, ut dea, juxta ripas amnis Anienis: Cujus in gurgite Simulachrum ejus inventum eſſe dicitur, tenens in manu librum, cujus ſacra Senatus in Capitolium tranſtulerit. That is, Albunea was the tenth of the Sibyls and Worſhipped at Tibur as a Goddeſs; and her Image was reported to have been found with a Book in her Hand in the Gulf of Anio. 'Tis alſo to be Noted that ſome are of Opinion that the Fountain Albunea was only another Name for thoſe Mineral Waters called Albula or Albulæ. Strabo (u) ſays they were Cold, that they ſprung from ſeveral Sources, and either drank or bathed in, Cured ſeveral Diſeaſes. Pliny (w) aſcribes to them the Virtue of Healing Wounds: But Suetonius (x) does not mentions them with this reſtriction. Cluverius (y), who believes them to be the Fountain Albunea, may alledge this reaſon for it: This Fountain according to Virgil ſtinks, (z) Sævamque exhalat opaca Mephitim. But according to Martial and ſeveral others this Quality agreed very well with the Mineral Waters called Albula or Albulæ. (aa) Canaque ſulfureis Albula fumat Aquis. Therefore, &c. Note, that Albula was a ſmall River which diſcharg'd it ſelf into the Anio, whoſe principal Source according to Cluverius was the Fountain Albunea. This Author believes that the Image of the Tiburtine Sibyl was reported to be found in this Fountain. He adds that the Ancients erected this Spring into a Divinity, and conſecrated to it a Grove, a Temple and an (bb) Oracle, and that it appears (cc) by an Epigram of Martial that there was a Grove conſecrated to the Muſes in this Place. But the laſt is utterly falſe, and Cluverius read too haſtily the following Words of Martial.

Itur (dd) ad Herculei gelidas quà Tiburis arces,
Canaque ſulfureis Albula fumat aquis.
Rura, nemuſque ſacrum, dilectaque jugera Muſis
Signat vicina quartus ab urbe lapis:
Hic rudis æſtivas præſtabat porticus umbras,
Heu quam, &c.

If he had conſidered them with the leaſt Attention, he would have found that they did not in the leaſt concern Tibur but another place in the Road thither, about four Miles from Rome. Nay, it is not certain that there was in this place a Grove Conſecrated to the Muſes: Perhaps Martial deſign'd only to repreſent Regulus's Lands (a) beloved by theſe Goddeſſes. By the way we ought not to forget that the ſame Author has put a diſtance of 20 Miles betwixt Rome and Tibur.

(D △) A Lordſhip in Brabant.] Which Gramaye informs us belonged to the Houſe of Warfuzè, and that Robert de Warfuzè transferred it to Gerard Marbais in the Year 1389. In proceſs of time it fell into the Hands of John le [illegible], and was afterwards poſſeſſed by Sanſon de Lalain, who on the 11th of June 1458. Conferred the Dominium altum & baſſum, on John Serclaes, deſcended from one of the moſt Noble Patrician Families of (c) Bruſſels. The Lordſhip of Tilli was then intirely Independant, but afterwards became a Fief to the Dukes of Brabant, by virtue of the following Inſtrument: "(d) John Lord of Thilly transfers into the Hands of my Lord Duke, his Houſe and Lordſhip of Tilly, with all its Rights and Appurtenances as by him Enjoyed, and our ſaid Lord the Duke hath again Transferred the ſaid Houſe and Lordſhip, and all the Lands thereto Appertaining to the ſaid John, his Heirs and Succeſſors, to hold it in perpetual Fief of our ſaid Lord and his Heirs and his Succeſſors the Dukes and Dutcheſſes of Brabant. And the ſaid John held his ſaid Houſe and Lordſhip of Thilly of our ſaid Lord, and therefore pledges his Fealty, Homage, and Oath of Allegiance, as cuſtomary in the Court of the Fiefs of Brabant. And our ſaid Lord received his Homage with a Salvo to the Rights of each. Done May 16. in the Year 1449." This John Serclaes was the Father of James t'Serclaes, who was the Father of Martin t'Serclaes, Father of John T'Serclaes Member of the Council of War to the Emperour, who Married a Daughter of the Count of Friſeland (e). From which Marriage proceeded John t'Serclaes (f) created Count by the Emperour Ferdinand the II. and one of the greateſt Generals of the XVIIth Century.

(Z △ △) Raiſed to the dignity of a Prince by the King of Spain.] The Abridgement of the Letters Patents to this purpoſe as publiſhed by the Baron le Roy and dated at Madrid the 22. of December, 1697. runs thus. "(g) Charles by the Grace of God King of Caſtile, &c. Being informed that ſeveral Anceſtors of our moſt Dear and Loyal Lord Albert T'Serclaes de Thilly, Count of the Holy Roman Empire, Gentleman of our Chamber, Sergeant General in our Armies in the Low Countries, and at preſent by our permiſſion and conſent, General of the Troops of the Prince and Biſhop of Liege, our Ally, and others of his Family have with the utmoſt Bravery *and Reſolution done ſeveral important Services to the Emperours, Kings and Princes our Auguſt Predeceſſors. As alſo that the ſaid Albert T'Serclaes de Thilly, hath ſerved in our Armies from the Year one Thouſand Six Hundred and Sixty Six, as Captain, Lieutenant Colonel, Colonel of Horſe, and Serjeant General, and that on all occaſions which have offered in our Service he hath neither ſpared his Life or Eſtate, of which we have received the utmoſt Satisfaction which we can deſire. As well as of the Services he continues at preſent to perform in the quality of General of the Forces of the Prince and Biſhop of Liege, for the common cauſe, with a Zeal, Bravery and experience ſo well known to the whole World. Very well knowing beſides that the ſaid Albert T'Serclaes de Thilly is deſcended from a very Illuſtrious and Ancient Family, which hath always maintained its Honour, by ſeveral high and very conſiderable Alliances, and that beſides he poſſeſſes ſeveral Lands, Lordſhips, and Eſtates ſufficient to ſupport his Honour, as Montigny, Farciennes, Prelle, and others; and being willing for this Reaſon to raiſe and advance him to the greateſt Honours, Rights, Prerogatives, and Pre-eminences; We have of our certain Knowledge, &c. Made and Created, as we do by theſe Preſents Make and Create Albert Count de T'Serclaes de Thilly, Prince of T'Serclaes, conſenting and granting

(c) Patricia imprimiſque nobili apud Bruxellam ſtirpe ortu. Le Roy in topograph. Gallo Brabantiæ pag. 99.

(d) Id. ibi

(e) Ex eod. ibid.

(f) Id. ib

(g) Idem. Erection de toutes les terres Seigneuries & familles titrées du Brabant pag. 106.

T I M Æ U S.

TIMÆUS, a Greek Historian, the Son of an (A) Illustrious Father, was of † Tauromenium in Sicily, and Flourished in Agathocles's time, who Died in the Fourth Year of the 129 Olympiad. He wrote several (B) Books, and amongst others, the History of his own Country. All his Works are intirely lost. He was very much addicted to Detraction (C), and his (D) Veracity was very much doubted of. His violent Resentment against Agathocles, and his (E) Affectation to do him so little Justice displeas'd some Persons. He was too strongly biassed † Athen. lib. 6. p. 27[illegible] & alibi.

“ granting that he may bestow the said Title of “ Prince upon the Seat and Lordship, which he “ shall name, under our Obedience and Ju“ risdiction in our said Low Countries: Which “ Seat and Lordship we have to that end erect“ ed, and do by these Presents erect into the Dig“ nity, Name, and Pre-eminence of Principality of “ T'Serclaes, &c.

(A) The Son of an Illustrious Father.] He was the Son of Andromachus, who was very Famous for his Riches and excellent qualities, and in a manner the Founder of one of the most considerable Towns in Sicily; for he assembled all the Fugitives of Naxus, a City which Dionysius the Tyrant had ruined, and Setled them on a Hill call'd Taurus. This was the Original of Tauromenium (a) in the Second Year of the 106 Olympiad (b). Long before which Dionysius had destroyed Naxus (c). Andromachus reigned very mildly in his New City, and on all occasions shewed himself an Enemy to all Tyrants. He received Timoleon's Troops, and animated his Subjects to his assistance in order to deliver all Sicily From the Yoke of Tyranny. (d)

(a) Diodorus Siculus, lib. 16. c. 7.
(b) Id. ib.
(c) Id. lib. 14. c. 16.
(d) Taken from Plutarch in the Life of Timoleon. p. 240.

(B) He wrote several Books.] Three of Syria, Sixty Eight de Argumentis Rhetorica: Ὀλυμπιονῖκαι ἢ Χρονικὰ πραξίδια, Olympionicas seu alia Chronica. Ἰταλικὰ καὶ Σικελικὰ libris 8. Ἑλληνικὰ καὶ Σικελικά. In the first of these two last Works, he writ the History of Sicily, as far as it was coincident with the Roman History, and in the other he describ'd the Sicilian Gests, which fell in with the Grecian History (e). He wrote the History of Pyrrhus, by it self, as we are inform'd by Dionysius Halicarnassæus (f), and these words of Cicero: (g) Deesse mihi nolui quin te admonerem ut cogitares conjunctène malles cum reliquis rebus nostra contexere, an, ut multi Græci fecerunt, Callisthenes Troicum bellum, Timæus Pyrrhi, Polybius Numantinum: qui omnes a perpetuis suis historiis ea quæ dixi bella separaverunt. We have already seen Timæus's History represented in two Parts, the first whereof we are told was in Eight Books, but the number of the Books of the Second is not handed to us. 'Tis necessary to add, that several cite this work without observing this division; expressing in general such or such a Book of his Histories. The highest number, quoted by Athenæus (h), is the 28th Book. Diogenes Laertius (i) cites none beyond the Eighteenth.

(e) Vossius de Hist. Græcis, p. 82. See Suidas.
(f) Dionys. Hal. lib. 1. cap. 6.
(g) Cicero Epist. 12. lib. 5. ad Familiar. p. m. 255.

(C) He was very much addicted to detraction.] For which reason his strong Inclination to Censure was signify'd by some additional Letters to his Name. (k) Τίμαιος μὲν ὖν μεγίστην πρόνοιαν πεποιημένος, τῆς τῶν χρόνων ἀκριβείας, καὶ τῆς πολυπειρίας πεφροντικὼς, διὰ τὰς ἀκαίρους καὶ μακρὰς ἐπιτιμήσεις εὐλόγως διαβάλλεται, καὶ διὰ τὴν ὑπερβολὴν τῆς ἐπιτιμήσεως Ἐπιτίμαιος ὑπό τινων ὠνόμασται. Timæus sane, & in temporum notatione exquisitam adhibuit diligentiam, & ut varia rerum cognitione abundet, sollicite laborat. At propter intempestivas, & verbosas reprehensiones, jure etiam ipse reprehenditur. Quare ob nimiam taxandi libidinem, & acerbitatem, Epitimæus (id est, taxator) a quibusdam nominatus fuit. The Historian who hath given him this Blow, still praises the exactness of his Chronology, and his great Learning. All those who have criticised on him have not been so just; one of them has only drawn his worst side, to which purpose he hath employed a Parenthesis. (l) Τούτων δὲ μαρτυρία ἐςὶ τὰ γραφέντα τότε ψηφίσματα ἅπερ ἀγνοῆσαί φησιν ὁ Ἀρτεμίδωρος τὸν Ταυρομενίτην Τίμαιον, καὶ ἄλλως βάσκανον ὄντα, καὶ συκοφάντην (διὸ καὶ Ἐπιτίμαιον κληθῆναι) λέγειν ὡς ἐκ τῶν Περσικῶν παρακαταθηκῶν ἐποιήσαντο τοῦ ἱεροῦ τὴν ἐπισκευήν. Testantur hoc quæ tum facta sunt decreta: quæ ignorantem ait Artemidorus Timæum Tauromenitam, hominem alioqui invidum & calumniatorem, ac cui propterea nomen Epitimæi, id est reprehensoris factum sit scripsisse, id templum eos è depositis Persarum condidisse. To elucidate this Passage, I add, That it relates to the Refutation of a Falsity, which our Timæus had divulged concerning the Ephesians. He had, said that they made use of the Persian Treasure deposited in their Hands, to Build the Temple of Diana. Here is a third Censure who touches to the quick. (m) Διὸ δὴ καὶ τῶν ἡμεῖς εἰκότως ἂν ἐπιτιμήσαιμεν Τιμαίῳ κατὰ Δημοχάρους εἰρηκότι. ἐκεῖνος δὲ ἂν ἐκ ἄξιος συγγνώμης, ἀλλὰ πίστεως ὑπ' ἐδενὸς [illegible] φανερῶς ἐν ταῖς λοιδορίαις ἐκπίπτων τὸ καθήκοντος διὰ τὴν ἔμφυτον πικρίαν. Quocirca nos quoque ea, quæ a Timæo dicta sunt in Democharem, merito improbare videmur. Ille autem indignus, cui à quoquam ignoscatur, & fides habenda, videri debet: quia aperte in maledictis ab officio historici se deflectit propter insitam acerbitatem. Clemens Alexandrinus (n) represents Timæus and Theopompus as a Brace of Satyrical and Fabulous Historians. Cornelius Nepos (o) sets them both in the same light. Athenæus (p) observes, that Ister writing against Timæus, called him Epitimæus. He was perhaps the first Inventer of this Pun. Aristotle was one of those abused by Timæus (q). We must not omit that he also vented all his Spleen against others, tho' they were not blame-worthy. It is in this manner he exclaim'd against those who mention'd Phalaris's Bull. He loudly call'd them Fabulous Writers; (r) and with the utmost heat maintain'd that there was never any such thing; when indeed he was mistaken, for this Bull was still in being in the time of (s) Diodorus Siculus. It had been transported to Carthage, when Imilcar sacked Agrigentum, and restor'd to the Agrigentines 260 Years after, when Scipio Africanus destroyed Carthage. Diodorus Siculus (t) relates these particulars as a favourable opportunity to censure our Timæus, and to shew the conjunctures wherein one ought to excuse the Errors of Historians or not. One ought to excuse them, when the Facts lie so obscure that even with a great diligence they cannot be discover'd: But one ought never to excuse them, when either Negligence or an Inclination to flatter or calumniate any Person, hath turned them out of the right way. This Author's words in the Original will much better please those who are capable of understanding them; on whose account I have transcribed them: at which the other Readers ought not to be displeased, they may pass them by, and yet know the general import of the Author's Thought. (u) Περὶ δὲ τούτου φιλοτιμότερον εἰπεῖν προήχθην, διότι Τίμαιος ὁ τῶν πρὸ ἑαυτοῦ συγγραφέων πικρότατα κατηγορήσας, καὶ συγγνώμην οὐδεμίαν τοῖς ἱστοριογράφοις ἀπολιπὼν, αὐτὸς εὑρίσκεται σχεδιάζων, ἐν οἷς μάλιστα ἑαυτὸν ἀποπίφασκεν ἀκριβολογούμενον. Δεῖ γὰρ, οἶμαι, τοὺς συγγραφεῖς ἐν μὲν τοῖς ἀγνοήμασι τυγχάνειν συγγνώμης, ὡς ἂν ἀνθρώπους ὄντας, καὶ τῆς ἐν τοῖς παρῳχημένοις χρόνοις ἀληθείας οὔσης δυσευρέτου. τοὺς μέντοι γε κατὰ προαίρεσιν ἐ τυγχάνοντας τῆς ἀκριβείας προσηκόντως κατηγορίας τυγχάνειν, ὅταν κολακεύοντες τινὰς ἢ δι' ἔχθραν πικρότερον προσβάλλοντες, ἀποσφάλλωνται τῆς ἀληθείας. Qua de re studiosius disserere mihi libuit; quia Timæus, cum magnâ acerbitate scriptores ætatem suam antecedentes reprehendat, nullumque historicis veniæ locum relinquat; ipse tamen, ubi diligentissimum veritatis studium profitetur, nugari & allucinari deprehenditur. Scriptoribus enim in iis, quæ non assequuntur, veniam (meo quidem judicio) tribui æquum est, quippe, cùm homines sint, & temporum prætèrlapsorum veritas difficulter è caligine eruatur. Contra verò, qui datâ operâ exactiam inquisitionem negligunt, hos meritò accusandos arbitror, & quando nimirum nonnullis adulando, vel per odium virulentiùs alios impugnando, à regiâ veritatis viâ exorbitant & aberrant.

(h) Athen. lib. 11. c. 6. p. 471.
(i) Diogen. Laert. in Empedocle. lib. 8. n. 60.
(k) Diodorus Siculus lib. 5. circa init.
(l) Strabo lib. 14. pag. 440.

(D) His veracity was very much doubted of.] See the passage of Polybius cited in the precedent Remark, and that hereafter (x) quoted. Read, in one word, the remainder of the 12th Book of Polybius.

(E) To do Agathocles so little justice——Spirit of revenge.] Agathocles had forced him to fly out of Sicily: this indeed cost him nothing during his life, but after his death he severely paid for it. Agathocles, when living, was out of the reach of Timæus's Resentment, which he was then obliged to conceal, and defer his Vengeance 'till Agathocles was in his Grave. Then he discharged all the impetuous Torrents biassed by a Spirit of Revenge on this occasion. Several other Faults were also discover'd in his (F) History; but very able Judges allow him to have been very learned, (G) and very eloquent. He was not less exorbitant in his Praises than in his Invectives, which appears by the Elogies he bestowed on (H) Timoleon. He lived † 96 Years. His Fortune seems to have been but moderate. He * lived very quietly in the place of his || Exile. He utterly renounced all active ways of Living, Travelling, War, and the Offices of the Robe. On which account some were surprized rents of his rage against him. The Tyrant was not only defamed by a Description of his Crimes and ill Qualities, but also by fabulous Calumnies. He robb'd him of all the glory of his good Success, and laid to his charge all the Misfortunes which befel him, not excepting the most fortuitous: He represented him as a Poltroon, tho' by a thousand clear Proofs, he had convinc'd the World, that he was a brave Commander. Unless he had been so, was it possible for him, but a Potter's Son (as he was) to have subdu'd all Sicily, and a great part of Italy and Libya? Doth not Timæus contradict himself? In (a) all the rest of his Book he exalts the Valour of the Syracusians to the Clouds, and yet he pretends that Agathocles, who subdued them, was the most worthless Wretch alive. He too evidently betrays his Passion and Hatred. The five last Books of this History, which treat of the Actions of Agathocles, don't indeed deserve any praise. Suidas (b) to whom I am oblig'd for all this, allows that in all the other parts of his History, he took extraordinary care of the truth of his Relations. (c) Οὗτος ὁ Τίμαιος τῆς ἀκριβείας τῶν περὶ ἑαυτῷ συγγραφέων πικρότατα ἐξελέγξας, κατὰ μὲν ἄλλα μέρη τῆς γραφῆς πλείστην πεποίηται πρόνοιαν τῆς ἀληθείας. ἐν δὲ ταῖς Ἀγαθοκλέους πράξεσι τὰ πολλὰ κατέψευσται τοῦ δυνάστου, διὰ τὴν πρὸς αὐτὸν ἔχθραν. Timæus iste qui veterum historicorum peccata gravissime redarguit, in aliis quidem scripti partibus maximam veritatis curam provide gessit. In Agathoclis vero rebus pleraque ementitus est in principem illum propter odium quo prosequebatur eum.

We find in Polybius some of the odious Calumnies which Timæus disgorged against Agathocles. He represented him in his younger days, as the most abandon'd Prostitute to the Lust of every Comer, and that in whatever way his extravagant Bestiality could prompt him to desire: Γεγονέναι τὸν Ἀγαθοκλέα κατὰ τὴν πρώτην ἡλικίαν κοινὸν πόρνον, ἕτοιμον τοῖς ἀκρατεστάτοις, κολοιὸν, τριόρχην, πάντων τῶν βουλομένων τοῖς ὄπισθεν ἔμπροσθεν γεγονότα: Agathoclem in prima ætate publicum fuisse prostibulum, passim omnium incontinentissimorum libidini expositum, graculum, triorchem sive buteonem qui aversus & adversus impudicus omnibus quibusque pateret (d). And he related that the Wife of this Prince breathed out the following Exclamation on the sight of his Corps; Which way have I not enjoy'd thee, and which way hast thou not enjoy'd me! Words which Polybius charges with the utmost Infamy. Ὅτ᾽ ἀπέθανε τὴν γυναῖκά φησι κατακλαιομένην αὐτὸν, οὕτω θρηνεῖν· τί δ᾽ οὐκ ἐγὼ σέ; τί δ᾽ οὐκ ἐμὲ σύ; Ubi fato functus esset, ejus uxorem mortuum maritum lamentantem hujusmodi plangorem edidisse, quid non ego tibi? quid non tu mihi (e)? Polybius doth not deny that Agathocles was (f) the most impious of all Men; but he is of Opinion that this cannot excuse the scurrilous malignity of Timæus, and that it refutes it self: For it is evident, by the relation of that Author, that this Tyrant, without the Advantages of Birth or Estate, arrived to such an accumulated pitch of Authority, that he subdued all Sicily, endangered Carthage, maintain'd his Tyrannick Acquisitions in his Old age, and died a King. This shews the great Endowments Nature had liberally bestow'd on him. The Historians ought therefore not only to have represented him by his ill actions, but also by those which deserved to be praised; and consequently Timæus is inexcusable, since he has with the utmost Malice and Ill nature been hyperbolical in the relation of whatever was to be blamed in him, and intirely suppressed whatever would admit of Praise. (g) Ὁ δὲ παρεσκοτισμένος ὑπὸ τῆς ἰδίας πικρίας τὰ μὲν ἐλαττώματα δυσμενικῶς καὶ μετ᾽ αὐξήσεως ἡμῖν ἐξήγγελκε, τὰ δὲ κατορθώματα συλλήβδην παραλέλοιπε. Egregius hic Scriptor maledicendi studio occæcatus minus recte facta cum quadam animi malignitate solitus narrare, & simul omnia in majus extollere, præclara simul cuncta prætermisit. Nothing can be more judicious than this whole Discourse of Polybius.

(F) Other Faults in his History.] Suidas (h) informs us that Timæus was called a doating Rhapsodist, γραοσυλλέκτρια, because whatever occurred, he indistinguishably inserted in his History. This is much the same thing as if they had called him a Compiler of Tales. (i) Polybius accuses him of speaking very ignorantly of Italy; and that in his Description of Africa, besides being guilty of the same fault, he betray'd a trifling Genius, a want of Judgment, and a great deal of Credulity with regard to obsolete Traditions. Τὸν δὲ Τίμαιόν φησι πρὸς τῷ μὴ μόνον ἀπείρως γεγονέναι περὶ τὴν κατὰ τὴν Λιβύην, ἀλλὰ καὶ παιδαριώδη καὶ τελέως ἀσυλλόγιστον, καὶ ταῖς ἀρχαίαις φήμαις ἀκμὴν ἐνδεδεμένον: Timæum præterea arguit aliquis non solum imperitum rerum Africæ, sed etiam puerili ingenio virum, ac prorsus infirmo judicio & qui antiquitus traditis opinionibus supra modum fuerit deditus (k). He blames him for writing on the credit of the Reports he had heard, and reproaches his want of discernment (l). Whence doubtless proceeded the Contradictions charged on him (m). To these may be added the passage of Longinus, which I shall hereafter cite in the Remark I. and those of Plutarch also quoted hereafter: and observe by the way that he was not so bigotted a Follower of the Ancient Traditions, as not to refute some of them; but he was not very happy in his choice, Instances of which are his attempts to overthrow the Tradition (n) of Phalaris's Bull, and that of the (o) Colony of the Locri; nor did he go upon a better Foundation, when he (p) denyed that Zaleucus gave Laws to that People. Nay, he denied that there was (q) such a Person as Zaleucus.

(G) Allow him to be very Learned and very Eloquent.] The passage of Diodorus Siculus above cited, may serve as a Commentary on this Text; but the following words of Cicero are much more to my purpose: (r) Minimus natu horum omnium Timæus, quantum autem judicare possum longe eruditissimus, & rerum copia ac sententiarum varietate abundantissimus, & ipsa compositione verborum non impolitus magnam eloquentiam ad scribendum attulit, sed nullum usum forensem. He had named Herodotus, Thucydides, Philistus, Theopompus, Ephorus, Xenophon and Callisthenes. All which I mention only to shew what place Timæus possessed in Cicero's esteem. His Opinion was, that all the great Historians were inferior to him in Knowlege as well as fertility of Subject and Thought. He praised him for his Eloquence: Of which the subsequent words will give you a further light: (s) Genera Asiaticæ dictionis duo sunt, unum sententiosum & argutum, sententiis non tam gravibus & severis quam concinnis & venustis qualis in historia Timæus. But that the Reader may see that the best Judges of the Works of the Learned did not anciently agree better than in our Days, I shall cite an excellent passage of Plutarch. (t) Timæus the Historian, aiming to exceed Thucydides in Vivacity of Eloquence, and to disgrace Philistus as ignorant, disagreeable, and impertinent in his History, attempts the Description of Sea and Land Fights, and the eloquent Speeches made by them, where indeed he approaches them no more than a Foot-man doth a Lydian Chariot, as Pindar hath it, and discovers himself to be an Author of an aukward grace, and very little judgment, or as Diphil. says, Fat, and stuffed with Sicilian Grease.

Cicero citing one of Timæus's Thoughts as a witty Saying, (u) says, there are several of the same nature in this Historian. But Plutarch, who attributes it to another Author, charges it with being flat and childish.

(H) By the Elogies he bestow'd on Timoleon.] He placed him above the greatest Gods, (x) if we may believe Suidas, who superadds, that this flattery deserv'd a greater punishment than that of Callisthenes; For he only design'd the deifying of Alexander, a Prince infinitely more illustrious than Timoleon; but Timæus not contented with that, exalts his Hero to a superiority above the highest Divinities. Suidas's Reasoning turns upon a very just Parallel; there is on the one side more merit in the Person honoured, and less excess in the Honours conferred; and on the other, the Honours are greater, and the Merit less: Wherefore Suidas very reasonably concludes that if Callisthenes was most justly punish'd with Death for his flattery, Timæus deserv'd it more than he.

---

† Lucian. in Macrob. p. 6[illegible] tom. 2.

* Polybius lib. 12. p. 6[illegible]

|| That is at Athens, if we believe Corradus in Brutum Ciceronis pag. 115.

Mr. Grævius lib 22. init. & Suidas in τριόρχης. (f) Πάντων ἀνοσιώτατος. Fuit ille sane omnium maxime impi-

Id. ibid. (g) Id. ibid. pag. 660. (h) Suidas ibid.

(i) Polybius lib. 12. pag. 655.

(k) Id. lib. 12. init. pag. 655.

(l) Περὶ τὰς ἀνακρίσεις ῥαθύμως ἀνεστράφη. In dijudicandis iis quæ sibi narrarentur negligens fuit. Id. ibid. pag. 668.

(m) Athenæus l. 6. pag. 272.

(n) See the Remark C.

(o) Polyb. lib. 12. pag. 656.

(p) Cicero epist. 1. lib. 6. ad Atticum p. m. 589.

(q) Id. lib. 2. de legib. fol. 333. C.

(r) Cicero de Oratore lib. 2. fol. 73. D.

(s) Id. in Bruto circa fin. pag. m. 451.

(t) Plutarch. in Nicia initio, p. 523.

(u) You'll find this in the Remark C of the Article Fontarabia.

(x) Μείζω ποιῶν Τιμολέοντα τῶν ἐπιφανεστάτων Θεῶν. Timoleontem illustrissimis Diis majorem facere. Suidas ubi supra pag. 910.

ſurpriz'd, that he ſhould ever acquire the Reputation * of an able Hiſtorian. Longinus criticiſes on him for what (I) doth not deſerve a Cenſure. But Plutarch condemn'd him juſtly on account of his Puerility with relation to a Favourite Common-place, very much encourag'd in Ancient Hiſtory: That is, the compiling

* Id. Polyb. ib.

he. I am ſurpriſed to find this Relation of Calliſthenes in Suidas; for ſeveral Authors believe that he rendred himſelf odious to Alexander, by ſpeaking too freely of him, in a manner contrary to flattering or deifying him. We may obſerve that Suidas (g) charges Timæus with two great Faults; the condemning too ſeverely the Vices he was himſelf addicted to; and ſuffering his judgment to be tainted with thoſe Maxims which he lays down, and with the Opinions which he would inſinuate into his Readers.

(g) Suidas ubi ſupra.

(I) Longinus Criticiſes on him for what doeſnot deſerve Cenſure.] (h) "As for the affected and Puerile Style, "Timæus abounds with it. This Author, who, on "other accounts, ſhews himſelf a learned Man, ſome-"times does not come ſhort of the lofty and ſub-"lime Style: He hath a great ſhare of Knowledge, "and expreſſes himſelf very judiciouſly; if he were "not naturally addicted to reprehend the Vices of "others, whilſt he is blind to his own Faults; and "beſides, ſo ſollicitous to diſplay new Thoughts, "that he frequently falls to the moſt deſpicable "degree of Puerility. I ſhall content my ſelf with "one or two Examples only; becauſe Cecilius has "cited a vaſt number. When he is praiſing Alex-"ander the Great, he tells us that he Conquer'd all "Aſia in leſs time than Iſocrates employ'd in the com-"poſure of his Panegyrick. The comparing Alex-"ander the Great to a Rhetorician, is indeed an "admirable Compariſon. By a parity of Reaſon, it "muſt neceſſarily follow, that the Lacedemonians "would be oblig'd to give place to Iſocrates, ſince "they were Thirty Years in taking Meſſenia, and he "wrote his Panegyrick in Ten. That Reflection is "unworthy of Longinus, and I don't know what had "debauched his Taſte when he wrote theſe Lines. One of our Modern learned Wits judges of him in the following manner. (c) Longinus, ſaith he, is a Caviller, and a falſe pretender to Subtilty. Timæus ſaid, That Alexander ſpent leſs time in the Conqueſt of all Aſia, than Iſocrates in finiſhing his Panegyrick. Longinus cenſures him for comparing a great Prince to a Sophiſt; and maintains that by the ſame Reaſon, we might be induc'd to believe, that the Lacedemonians were leſs Valiant than (d) Iſocrates, who requir'd but Ten Years to compoſe his Panegyrick, when they ſpent Thirty in the Conqueſt of Meſſenia. What? did Timæus ſpeak of the Valour of Iſocrates? Is it properly to compare an Orator with a Conqueror; to compare the time ſpent in the compoſure of the one, with that employ'd in the Conqueſt of the other? Tho' there is no proportion betwixt Actions intirely different, doth it follow that there is none betwixt the long and ſhort ſpace of their duration? May we not ſay, That the great Guſtavus Adolphus rendred himſelf Maſter of part of Germany, in leſs time than Mr. Vaugelas ſpent to tranſlate Quintus Curtius; or Father Strada to finiſh his Hiſtory, or (1) Scriverius to Publiſh his Martial?

(h) Longinus, de Sublimi dicendi genere cap. 3.

(c) Coſtar Apolog. p. 88, 89.

(d) So it ought to be tranſlated; for there is in the Greek κατ' ἀνδρείαν quoad fortitudinem. Mr. Depreaux has ſkipp'd this in his Tranſlation of Longinus, and perhaps he did it the better to hide the falſe thought of the Author.

(1) Scaliger calls him ſomewhere in his Epiſtles, Lentulum Martialis editorem.

Mr. Coſtar hath not obſerved all the Faults of this place of Longinus: He might have added that there are ſome things which we cannot exceed or equal, without an extraordinary Merit, to which we may yet be Inferior, without being contemptible. If a Prince ſhould ſubdue three Kingdoms in as little time as is requiſite for a Geographer to draw three Maps, he would doubtleſs do a great Action; but if he ſhould Conquer but one Province whilſt a Geographer is drawing Ten Maps of the World, we cannot be allow'd to infer from hence, that in expedition and addreſs, he is inferior to the Geographer. I urge this to make it appear, that Longinus had no reaſon to conclude, That Timæus's Compariſon could beſtow more honour on Iſocrates than on the Lacedemonians; for Ten Years ſpent in the compoſure of a Harangue, may imply a leſs Expedition than Thirty, ſpent by a ſmall Nation in the Conquering of a Neighbouring State.

A REMARK on the Deſign of Compariſons.

This Cenſurer of Timæus hath not in the leaſt conſider'd the Deſign of Compariſons. They are intended to render the greatneſs or ſmallneſs of Objects the more ſenſible. Nothing is therefore more proper to be compared to certain things, than what moſt apparently inlarges the Idea of them. So to render the rapidity of Alexander's Victories the more conſpicuous, they may be very well oppoſed to the ſlowneſs of a Panegyriſt. Conſider on one hand the Obſtacles of War, the great number of Enemies which Alexander engaged, and the vaſt extent of Land which he ſubdu'd; Conſider on the other; the facility of writing a Diſcourſe which may be recited in an Hour: and it is impoſſible but that you muſt be ſtruck with the incredible ſwiftneſs of this Conqueror, if you imagine that he ſpent no more Years in his Conqueſt than the Rhetorician in compoſing an Oration. Another Conqueror who had not ſubdued ſo many Provinces in 30 Years as Alexander in Ten, would not have done ſo well in this Compariſon as Iſocrates; for we are naturally inclin'd to imagin almoſt an infinite diſproportion betwixt the labour of a Rhetorician, and that of a Conqueror. We think it infinitely more eaſie to range Words, than ſubdue Kingdoms. For which Reaſon let us allow Timæus to be very happy in his choice. He took what would moſt pathetically ſtrike the Imagination of his Readers. I find in a Modern Author, (e) that the Duke of Candale, and Cardinal de la Valette, Generals of the French Army, in the Year 1637, took Landrecies almoſt in fewer days than Charles V. formerly employ'd Months in vain, being conſtrain'd, after ſix Months time, ignominiouſly to raiſe the Siege. This was certainly a beautiful, lofty, and noble Idea; but I am ſure that we ſhould be more ſenſibly touched with the expedition of a Conqueſt, if it ſhould be ſaid, A famous Engineer formerly ſpent as much time in drawing a Plan of this place, as they did in taking it. The Precedents of the greateſt Orators declare as ſtrongly in favour of Timæus as the Reaſons already urged. The greateſt Roman Orator ſaid, that Pompey had finiſhed more Wars than others had read, and that Travellers never went through ſo many Countries in ſo little time as he ſubdued them by his Victories. (f) Qui ſæpius cum hoſte conflixit quam quiſquam cum inimico concertavit: plura bella geſſit quam cæteri legerunt: plures provincias confecit quam alii concupiverunt—— (g) Quis unquam aut obeundi negocii aut conſequendi quæſtus ſtudio tam brevi tempore tot loca adire, tantos curſus conficere potuit quam celeriter Cn. Pompeio duce belli impetus navigavit? Is not this to compare Pompey with an ordinary Man that can read, and with a Merchant (h) whoſe Avarice tranſports him from place to place? If the Parallel betwixt Alexander and a Rhetorician ſo much blamed by Longinus is not good; ought we not to condemn this, which notwithſtanding is really admirable, and the moſt proper thing in the World to excite thoſe Idea's in the Mind, which the intereſt of the Orator required? But to come to the Moderns.

Not to alledge what was ſaid of Charles VIII. that he run through Italy ſwifter than a Quarter Maſter with Chalk in hand, and without ſtopping; I ſhall come directly to Mr. Deſpreaux, one of the greateſt Maſters of this Art. He alledges two reaſons in excuſe for not ſinging the Victories of 1672. Firſt, that the Names of the Towns which the King Conquer'd in Holland, are ( ) harſh and Barbarous, affording only odd Syllables in all parts of them: The ſecond reaſon was that the Conqueror marched too faſt for the Muſes to keep pace with him.

Encor (k) ſi tes exploits moins grands & moins rapides
Laiſſoient prendre courage a nos Muſes timides;
Peut-être avec le temps, à force d'y rêver,
Par quelque coup de l'art nous pourrions nous ſauver.
Mais dès qu'on veut tenter cette vaſte carriere,
Pegaſe s'effarouche & recule en arriere;
Mon Apollon s'étonne, & Nimegue eſt à toy,
Que ma Muſe eſt encore au camp devant Orſoy.

Mr. Peliſſon made uſe of this Thought in his invocation of Pegaſus, a piece of Poetry which is extraordinarily admir'd; the whole deſign of which is to expreſs that the King's Conqueſts were ſo incredibly ſwift, that the Poets could not follow the rapid Torrent. Since Mr. Peliſſon choſe this Image, ſo many Authors have uſed it that it is become a Common place. I remember it in the Paris Gazette, when, if I am not deceiv'd, Mr. de Guilleragues had the direction of that Paper. He declares that he is forced to take advantage, that is, to anticipate his Majeſty's Victories, that he may in ſome meaſure keep pace with his rapid Expeditions. Mr. Pavillon who is very well acquainted with the clean management of a Subject, hath very agreeably turned this Thought in his Ode on the taking of Namure in the Year 1693. Note that this manner of praiſing the King, is very well approv'd by an extraordinary good Judge of the Juſtneſs and Delicacy of Thoughts. Perhaps you have not heard, ſays he, (l) of another Madrigal with which I am Infinitely pleaſed.

LOUIS

compiling (K) of good or ill Preſages. From his Character it is eaſy to conclude him very unfit for an Hiſtorian; and (L) that he ought eſpecially to have avoided exerciſing his Pen on the Actions of Agathocles.

Louis plus digne du troſne
Qu'aucun Roy que l'on ait vû,
Enſeigne l'art à Bellone
De faire les impromptu.
